"After two months employed in meaſurements and geological reſearches, and after having examined the thermal waters of Comagillas, the temperature of which is 11 deg. of Reaumur higher than thoſe of the Philippine Iſlands which Sonnerat conſiders as the hotteſt in the world, our travellers proceeded through the valley of St. Jago, where they thought they ſaw in ſeveral lakes at the ſummit of the baſaltic mountains, ſo many craters of burnt out volcanoes, to Valladolid, the capital of the ancient kingdom of Michoacan. They thence deſcended, notwithſtanding the continual ſubterranal rains, by Patzquaro, ſituated on the margin of a very extenſive lake, towards the coaſt of the Pacific Ocean, to the plains of Jorullo, where, in the courſe of one night, in 1759, during one of the greateſt convulſions which the globe ever experienced, there iſſued from the earth a volcano, 1,490 feet in height, ſurrounded by more than 2000 mouths, ſtill emitting ſmoke. They deſcended into the burning crater of the great volcano, to the perpendicular depth of 358 feet, jumping over fiſſures, which exhaled flaming ſulphurated hydrogen gas. After great danger, ariſing from the brittleneſs of the baſaltic and ſelenitic lava, they reached nearly the bottom of the crater, and analyſed the air in it, which was found to be ſurcharged in an extraordinary manner with carbonic acid.

"From the kingdom of Nichoan, one of the moſt agreeable and moſt fertile countries in the Indies, they returned to Mexico by the high table land of Tolucca, in which they meaſured the ſnowy mountains of the ſame name, aſcending to its higheſt ſummit the peak of Fraide, which raiſes 2364 toiſes above the level of the ſea. They viſited alſo at Tolucca the famous hand tree, the cheiranthi-flormon of M. Gouvantes, a genus which preſents a phenomenon almoſt unique; that of there being only one individual of it, which has exiſted ſince the remoteſt antiquity.

"In January 1804, our travellers left Mexico to explore the eaſtern declivity of the Cordillera of New Spain; they meaſured geometrically the two volcanoes of Puebla, Popocatepee, and Itzaccihuati. According to a fabulous tradition Diego Ordaz entered the inacceſſible crater of the former, ſuſpended by ropes, in order to collect ſulphur, which may be found every where in the plains.

"M. Homboldt diſcovered, that the volcano of Popocatepee, on which M. Sonnenihmidt, a zealous mineralogiſt, had the courage to aſcend 2557 toiſes, is higher than the peak of Orizaquo, which has hitherto been conſidered the higheſt coloſſus of the country of Anahuac. He meaſured alſo the great pyramid of Cholula, a myſterious work, conſtructed of unbaked brick, by the Tultequas, and from the ſummit of which there is a moſt beautiful view over the ſnowy ſummits and ſmiling plains of Tlaxcala."

FROM THE TOY SHOP OF MESSRS. VERBAL AND TROCHEE.

In the 4th act of Shakeſpear's King Lear, Edgar, as a peaſant in the country ſcene at Dover cliffs, calls to Gloſter:

"Come on, ſir, here's the place—ſtand ſtill.
How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to caſt one's eyes ſo low!
The crows and choughs, that wing the midway air,
Show ſcarce ſo groſs as beetles. Half way down
Hangs one that gathers ſamphire; dreadful trade!
Methinks he ſeems no bigger than his head."

Looking into the London Review for 1799, we find in the annunciation of "Warner's ſecond walk through Wales," the following conciſe deſcription of the dreadful trade above mentioned. The ſecond quoted paragraph contains an anecdote, which, although not decorated with the fictitious horrors of modern noveliſts, will ſeemingly tranſport the reader in anxious and fearful dizzineſs to the precipice, and more than once remind him of toppling down headlong.

"Though the cliff does not preſent to the eye ſo formidable a deſcent as the famous one at Dover, in the animated deſcription of our great dramatiſt bard; yet it is ſufficiently deep to excite our wonder at the hazardous practice, which is very common among the inhabitants of the neighboring villages, at the proper ſeaſon of the year.—I mean the practice of gathering the crithmum maritimum, or rock ſamphire, which grows in great plenty along the ledges and down the perpendicular ſides of the cliff. Shakeſpear, you may recollect, alludes to this mode of livelihood, and calls it, as he well might, "a dreadful trade"—for few occaſions are attended with ſo much danger.—The method is ſimply this: The ſamphire gatherer takes with him a ſtout rope, and an iron crow bar, and proceeds to the cliff. Fixing the latter firmly into the earth at the brow of the rock, and faſtening the former with equal ſecurity to the bar, he takes the rope in his hand, and boldly drops over the head of the rock, lowering himſelf gradually till he reaches the crevices in which the ſamphire is found. Here he loads his baſket or bag with the vegitable, and then aſcends again to the top of the cliff by means of the rope. Catelleneſs or calulty, in a calling ſo perilous as this, will ſometimes produce terrible accidents—I——a related one to us, which, though not terminating fatally, was ſo full of horror, that, to uſe a vulgar, though very expreſſive phraſe, it made our blood run cold.

"A few years ſince one of theſe adventurers went alone to the ſpot we are ſpeaking of, to follow his accuſtomed trade. He fixed his crow bar, attached the cord to it, and deſcended the face of the rock. In the courſe of a few minutes he reached a ledge, which gradually ſetting inwards, ſtood ſome feet within the perpendicular, and over which the brow of the cliff beetled conſequently in the ſame proportion. Buſily employed in gathering ſamphire, and attentive only on the object of profit, the rope ſuddenly dropped from his hand, and after a few oſcillations, but all without his reach, became ſtationary at the diſtance of four or five feet from him. Nothing could exceed the horror of his ſituation—above was a wall of ſixty or ſeventy feet in height whoſe projecting brow would defy every attempt of his to aſcend it, and preſent every effort of others to render him aſſiſtance.—Below was a perpendicular deſcent of one hundred feet, terminated by ragged rocks, over which the ſurge was breaking with dreadful violence. Before him was the rope, an only hope of ſafety his only means of return; but hanging at ſuch a tantalizing diſtance as baffled all expectation of his reaching it! Our adventurer was, fortunately, young, active, reſolute—He therefore quickly determined what plan to adopt. Collecting all his powers into one effort, and ſpringing boldly from the ledge, he threw himſelf into the dreadful vacuum, and daſhed at the ſuſpended rope! The deſperate exertion was ſucceſsful; he caught the cord, and in a ſhort time was once more at the top of the rock."—Troy Gazette.

A letter from Fort Stoddert, to a reſpectable merchant in Savannah, dated Oct. 28, ſtates, that the inhabitants of that place are waiting with impatience to hear of war being declared by the United ſtates againſt Spain—that every day brings freſh news of injuries done our citizens by the Spaniards.—In concluding, the writer ſays—"Our ſituation is a peculiar one—Surrounded by Indians and Spaniards on all ſides, and ſeparated in a great meaſure, from our ſiſter ſtates. But let our government give the word and woe to theſe wretches who have been ſo long adding inſults to injuries."

[Albany Centinel.]

A man of the name of Lemaitre, born in Switzerland, at preſent about eighty years old, reſides at Chateaudun, in the department of Eure and Loire, of whom the following almoſt incredible inſtances of corporeal ſtrength are narrated:—

This ſecond Milo carried on his ſhoulders, in the market place of Chartres, a horſe belonging to the heavy cavalry, to a conſiderable diſtance. Like his rival of Cretona, he checked in its career a carriage drawn by two horſes, advancing at a ſmart trot; he drew after him, with one finger, twelve grenadiers, one holding the other by a handkerchief, and remained immovable, notwithſtanding their united efforts to throw him down. As active as he is ſtrong and valiant, having been once called on to aſſiſt as one of the city guards, in the ſuppreſſion of a riot at Verſailles, he purſued one of the French guards, who was reputed the moſt active man in the regiment, and having overtaken him, he killed him, by merely laying his iron hand on him, for the purpoſe of ſtopping him. It was this event which eſtabliſhed him at Chateaudun, as he was obliged to carry the taper of St. Lazarus to Vendome, before he could obtain his pardon. During the revolution he was thrown into priſon, when this modern Sampſon obtained his liberty by carrying the doors of the priſon to the revolutionary committee; ardent and generous in his friendſhip, he ſolicited the freedom of his companions in misfortune. Bentabole at that time traverſed the department of Eure and Loire, inveſted with unlimited power, Lemaitre informed of it, followed him poſt haſte, and overtook him on the road, his carriage being ſtuck faſt in a ſlough up to the axeltree; he creeps under it, raiſes up, frees it from the ſlough, and as a reward for his ſervices, obtains the liberty of his fellow priſoners. A fire took place at Chateaudun; horſes harneſſed to grapplings, tugged in every direction, but in vain; he unharneſſes them, ſeized the ropes himſelf, and immediately the walls give way and the fire is ſtopped. In an inſurrection, on account of the high price of corn, the rioters attempted to ſeize the municipality, of which body he was a member; he coolly ſtepped forward, and ſwimming thro' the tumultuous waves, he brought down dozens of them to the ground. He was inſulted at his own door by ſome national guards, who drew their ſabres againſt him; he laid hold of one of the moſt impertinent among them, and wielding him as he would a club, he ſoon brought the whole party to their ſenſes. About eight years ago he ſupported three men on the calf of one his legs, which was bent; and at arms length lifted up a grenadier by the waiſt. We ſhould never end were we to recount all the inſtances of his ſtrength; his athletic form beſpeaks his extraordinary vigour; and when nature ſhall determine to break one of the nobleſt of her works, ſcience may poſſibly claim poſſeſſion of ſo fine a ſubject as a chef d'œuvre for the ſtudy of anatomy.

LIMA, the capital of Peru, in South America, is a place of immenſe riches. "One remarkable fact is ſufficient to demonſtrate the wealth of this city. When the viceroy, the Duke de la Palada, made his entry into Lima, in 1682, the inhabitants, to do him honor, cauſed the ſtreets to be paved with ingots of ſilver, amounting to ſeventeen millions ſterling.

"All travellers ſpeak with amazement of the decorations of the churches, with gold, ſilver and precious ſtones, which load and even ornament the walls."

It is declared, in a European Magazine, that the dreſs even of a private citizen's lady, at Lima, ſometimes coſt more than forty thouſand dollars. The ladies there are dreſſed entirely in laces, inſtead of linen, and ſparkle with rich diamonds.—What a paradiſe for women.

HISTORY.

The Ariſtides of Portugal.

"The huſband of Inez de Caſto of Portugal was called, when king, Pedro the Juſt. The following anecdote will ſhew the claim he had to this title. A prieſt having killed a maſon, the king diſſembled his knowledge of the crime, and left the iſſue to the eccleſiaſtical court, where the prieſt was puniſhed by one year's ſuſpenſion from ſaying maſs. Pedro, upon this, privately ordered the maſon's ſon to revenge the death of his father. The young man obeyed, was apprehended condemned to death. When his ſentence was to be confirmed by the king, he enquired what was the young man's trade? He was told he followed his father's. Well, then, ſaid the monarch, I ſhall commute his puniſhment and interdict him from meddling with ſtone or mortar for one year. This fully eſtabliſhed the authority of the king's over the clergy, who were puniſhed with death, when their crimes were capital." Vide La Clede, Mariana, Faria. Could Ariſtides have done more? The artifice to effect retaliation of crime is highly reprehenſible; but when once the crime was committed, retaliation in judgment was wiſe policy and ſplendid juſtice.

"HAVE a good heart," ſaid a phyſician to a ſick countryman, who had been long attended and crammed with drugs by an ignorant apothecary, "what is your diſorder?"—"Phyſ." "What do you chiefly complain of?"—"The Doctor."—"Does your head ache?—"Yes with impertinence."—"Have you a pain in your back?"—"Yes, where the blifter lies."—"Are you ſick at ſtomach?"—"Yes with his ſtories."—"Do you feel any ſhiverings?"—"Always at the ſight of the apothecary."—"Do you perceive any load on your bowels?"—"I with the apothecary's conſcience was as clear."—"Are you thirſty?"—"Not thirſty enough to drink barley water."—"Well my honeſt friend, ſince you have already undergone the proper purgatory in due form, and ſay you have no other diſeaſe than the Doctor, we will ſet you on your legs again without further queſtion. Here nurſe open that window, and throw theſe vials into the ſtreet; now lower the curtain without ſhutting the caſement, that the man may not be ſtifled. In the next place take off two thirds of theſe coals, and one third of theſe blankets. How do you feel now?"—"I ſhould feel my heart whole, if ſo be you would throw the nurſe after the bottles, and the apothecary after the nurſe, and order me a pound of chops for my dinner, for I be ſo hungry, I could eat a horſe."

CURE FOR THE DROPSY.

Sir,

In your paper a few weeks ſince I obſerved that Bohea Tea, and the leaves to be eaten, was recommended as a cure for the above fatal diſorder; and I had a pauper in the houſe at that time, who was given over by the viſiting ſurgeon, I ventured the experiment and to my aſtoniſhment found an almoſt inſtant relief—I repeated the doſe but once, and the woman in the courſe of a week was able to go out to hay making, and will begin reaping but one on Monday next if the weather continues fine. The woman's name is Elizabeth Aukin; her age 72.

The recipe alluded to in the above letter was as follows: "Eating the leaves of Bohea Tea is ſtated to have effected ſeveral cures in caſe of Dropſy in the courſe of a few days. About two large tea cups full of the tea are infuſed in a quart of water, and during the day the deception is to be drunk and the leaves eaten at ſhort intervals."

A CURE FOR THE GRAVEL.

Mr. Urban,

Being a conſtant reader of your Magazine, I am deſirous through your channel, to offer to the publick (for the benefit of all thoſe who are afflicted with that dreadful diſeaſe, the ſtone and gravel) the following remedy, which was communicated to me by a gentleman of America.

My caſe was bad. I was ſcarce able to walk across my room, and when I turned in my bed could feel the ſtone fall round my bladder, which cauſed exquiſite pain; I was ſo much dipirited as to have given up all hopes of cure, (for I had tried the ſoap and many other remedies) till I was directed by the gentleman juſt mentioned, to drink a glass of cold spring water, (about a quarter of a pint) the moment I rose in the morning, and the same the last thing before I went to bed at night. I followed this advice, and after a little trial found myself better, and by a continuance am so entirely free from that disorder that I can ride over the stones from one end of the town to the other, or use any sort of exercise without the least pain or obstruction. What is become of the stone I so long felt in my bladder I know not, but suppose it dissolved and come away by the great quantity of sand voided at sundry times for it is certain I have none there now: as I am often troubled with the gout I abstain from drinking the water while that is upon me, after which I find a return of the gravel: but upon drinking the water again, am presently relieved. therefore I am determined to continue the use of it during my life.

As I am affured of your readiness to contribute to the good of all mankind, and as that is my only intent in this communication, I need make no apology for this trouble.

I am, Sir, &c.

THE ORACLE.

YORK:—SATURDAY, February 15, 1806.

We understand that a boat some time in December last, going from Oswego to Sandy Creek, was lost near the mouth of Salmon River, and four persons drowned; one of the bodies, with the articles contained in the boat, were driven on shore, the remainder, it is supposed, were buried in the Sand.—The persons who perished were, John M'Bride, (found) John Kendrick, of this place; Alexander Miller, and Jeffamin Montgomery.

Lines to the memory of the late DAVID BURNS, Esq.

HAIL gentle Shade! where e'er thy airial tread
So honor'd living, and lamented dead.
Mayhap that now, conceal'd from mortal view,
The Mofes' trace thou friendly doft purfue;
Or leaving Earth, on wings of ethial mount,
To join thy Efence to the parent fount.
In brighter flores might fhune thy feeting fun,
But Heaven's high will, and not my will be done.

Say power of Truth, fo great fo unconfin'd,
And folve the doubt, which fo diftracts my mind,
Why Strength to Weaknefs, in fo near allied,
Perhaps 'tis given to humble human pride.
At times perchance, frail Nature held the fway,
Yet dimm'd not it the intellectual ray:
Reafon and Truth triumphant held their courfe,
And ift'ning hearers felt conviction's force,
No Precept mongrel, text mifunderftood
He thought and acted but for public good;
His reafoning pure, his mind all manly light,
Made Day of thats, which 'erft appear'd as Night.
To him Inftruction, aim'd at that great end,
Our fates to totten and our lives amend.
Yet he was Man, and man's the Choic of Woe,
Who ferks Perfection, feeks not here below.
And Him, whofe fame defies the Cynic's bane,
Indeed muft be, or more or lefs than man.

Hail gentle Shade! nor from the friendly Mufe

Ah! this fmall tribute to the true he fhed,
Who, ne'e Thee living, and laments Thee dead.

The following (fays the Fort Faine) is one of Dibdin's neweft fongs:—

I was faying to Jack as we talk'd t'other day
Of our fhipmates and fnivelling elves,
That people in life did not ftear the right way
To tell how to thank but themfelves!

Now when a man's caught by thefe mermaids the girls
With their flattering palaver and fmiles,
He runs, whin inftead to their fal-la-las Jump afhore on the bonny Ifles.
Then to fteering in life as in ftearing with us
To our courfe in your comfort refort
In foul winds leaving laft and no near, keep her thus
In honor's line ready.
When fair keep her fteady,

And neither to ftarboard incline nor to port.
If he's true in his dealings, nor's wont to defy,
And the lafs has a man and eight fcopes,
Nor laffing, but keeping the fhip hell and by
He may weather the Cape of Good Hope:
But if he fteers wide in Temptation's high fea,
And to plaufure grog-ma much head ways,
Have a port goes the beam the fhip's brought by the lee
And the founders in Bounty Bay.
In wedlock fo many wrong courfes are made
They part convoy fo out and fo laft,
Tis fo rare they are grown of that fame Guinea trade,
Cape Farewell is their anchorage, at laft:
Some men I muft own to be fcuthed may be born,
But thus for the wives I will fay,
They feorn to ar ever bear down for Cape Horn
Till the bulkheads have ftowed them the way.
As to mutinous fpirits that ftow the world roll,
If we had them aboard Jack with me,
They fhould make no man's land nor ftruck through hobber's hole
And at laft be laid in the Red Sea.
But fine honeft fellows, to honor indeed,
Shall in this world by nothing perplex'd
Or Faith fhy get to windward bring up in Cape Clear,
And befpeak a long birth in the next.

REMARKS on the Culture and Preparation of HEMP in CANADA: Communicated at the defire of the LORDS of His Majefty's Privy COUNCIL for Trade and Foreign Plantations.

BY CHARLES TAYLOR, M. D. &c. &c. &c.

ON THE CHOICE OF SEED.

HEMP is produced from an Annual Plant called the Cannabis Sativa by Linneus. It rifes in height from Four to Eight Feet: It flourifhes in Soil which is good, light, and moderately humid. Warm weather agrees with it, but not great heats.

In the culture of Hemp, the choice of Seed is an important object, it fhould, if poffible, be of the preceding year's growth; but on no account more than that of two years, as Hemp Seed has a fingular tendency to grow rancid. To judge of its quality, take fome of the Seed promifcuoufly from the Heap, and with the fore Teeth crufh the outward Shells and feparate them from the Kernel. If the Seed is good, the Kernel fhould then be mild to the tafte, and in flavour refemble the Hazel Nut.

THE Husk or Shell contains an eſſential Oil which communicates its tafte to the Kernel, if eaten along with it. If the Kernel tafles rancid the Seed will not vegetate.

ALL the Seed, of which the fhell is a pale white or pale green colour, is bad, and the Kernel not well grown. If the fhell fhines and is of a brown colour, it is a fign the the Kernel is well formed, and proper Seed to fow. If, in rubbing it betwixt the palms of the hands, the Hemp Seed does not break, but, on the contrary, the fhell becomes more clear and bright, it is a good fign. If it becomes dufty by rubbing, it is unfit for growth.

HEMP Seed is apt to ferment and heat, if packed in large quantities together on fhip-board. It will anfwer to pack it in old American Flour Cafks, or other packages not containing more than three hundred weight in each; but it will be fafer if only half that weight is packed together.

I have been more particular in giving minute inftructions in the choice of proper Seed, as it is an important point in the commencement of the undertaking; and without proper attention thereto, the attempt to grow Hemp is labor loft. Much of the Hemp we sold in England is kiln-dried, which prevents its future vegetation.

ON THE CULTURE OF THE HEMP PLANT.

THE natural Soil on the Banks of the Creeks and Rivers in Canada is suitable for the growth of Hemp. The land should be previously ploughed in the preceding Autumn, and twice in the following Spring, as soon as the frosts will permit, it should then be harrowed excessively fine with iron toothed harrows, in order to leave the earth as well pulverized as possible. It should then be levelled with a light bush harrow, and sown broad cast, at the rate of two and a half bushels of Seed per Arpent (about four fifths of an English statute Acre.) The Seed should be harrowed in immediately after being sown, by a Harrow with small iron teeth set pretty close. In sowing the Land, the Seed should not be covered deep, otherwise it will not grow, but perish. Great care should be taken to prevent the Land being injured, by being trespassed upon, or the Seed being destroyed by Birds before it is firmly rooted in the ground.

On the early trials of cultivating Hemp in Canada, it will be proper to sow some by every Farmer, in small inclosures near the House, either in beds or in ridges of about four feet wide, with intervals of two feet between, to allow room to weed or pull the Hemp, when ripe, and to make the Farmers gradually acquainted with the properties of the Plant.

HEMP SEED should be sown in Canada as early in the month of May as the weather will permit; but if the weather is bad, the sowing may be postponed till any time before the second week in June. It has been supposed advantageous to allow the Hemp Seed to be laid upon a close boarded Cellar Floor, for two or three weeks previous to its being sown, in order to prepare it to germinate sooner. After the young Plants are just risen above ground, they should be carefully weeded; they will afterwards be sufficiently luxuriant to prevent the growth of weeds.

THE Hemp Plants are of two kinds, Male and Female, which rise promiscuously. The Male yields a Farina or Powdery matter; the Female bears the Seed: the production of good Seed depends upon this Farina being diffused by the air upon the Female Plants; its effects may be promoted by Artificial agitation, at the time when the Male Plants are plucked or drawn from the others, as hereafter mentioned.

THE Male Hemp Plants will be ready to pull about the second week in August; their ripeness may be known from the dusty or powdery matter (Farina) they yield when shaken by the wind, or agitated with a stick, also from their leaves turning yellow, and their stems a whitish colour.

As the raising of a considerable quantity of Hemp Seed is at present of consequence, I recommend the following plan to be adopted now for that purpose. It may be deviated from at a future period, when Seed becomes more plentiful there.

WHEN the Male Hemp is well ripened, let the persons who pull the Hemp, clear passages or alleys through the field of about two feet wide, and six feet distant from each other, by pulling up promiscuously the Male and Female Hemp Plants, which grow within the said spaces; and let the Hemp thus plucked, be removed to other ground in the neighbourhood, and laid thereon straight, about an inch thick. After it has been thus placed for two or three days exposed to the Sun and Air, turn it, and let it lie a day or two more, then make it up in Bundles about the thickness of your thigh, by two legatures with some of the Hemp stalks; one of which should be near the root ends, & the other at two thirds of the length of the bundle. In this state you may either proceed to Water Steep it, as hereafter directed, or house it from rain, till a more convenient opportunity offers for the purpose.

I have before observed, that beds of the Hemp about six feet wide should be left growing until an intermediate space of two feet wide had been cleared, and the Hemp which grew thereon carried away, you must then proceed to pull up the male Hemp which was left growing amongst the Female Hemp on those beds, taking care not to damage the female Hemp; but, on the contrary, leaving it to grow with as little injury as possible, until the Seed is ripe. The Male Hemp which was plucked out may be dried in the intermediate alleys above mentioned, and made up in bundles, as the former.

METHOD OF COLLECTING HEMP SEED.

THE Female Hemp should remain growing upon the Land till the Seed is fully ripe; the signs of which are the opening of the Pods wherein the seeds are lodged, so much that you may just perceive the seeds therein, they will have a brownish appearance. It may probably be the first or second week in October before the female Hemp should be pulled; it should then be carefully drawn to avoid shedding the seed, and should be laid on cloths in carrying, to prevent the seed being lost in moving; it should be bound up in small bundles, and set to dry, with the root end downwards, in bunches made of three small sheaves, placed in a triangular form with the heads together, so as to support each other.

BE careful not to loose the Seed, and when the bundles are dry, you should have a wooden stool with a sheet or blanket under it; by striking the Hemp against the stool, you will beat out the best of the Seed into the sheet or blanket, breaking your Hemp as little as possible. After you have separated the seed from the Hemp, either by beating it as above or by threshing it but sequently, the seed should be winnowed, and laid on a dry floor where there is a free current of air, turning it over repeatedly with a shovel to dry it, and to prevent fermentation.

I have been very minute in giving directions about preserving the Seed, in order that it may be procured in Canada, without the necessity of supplies from England, and to avoid the risk of bad Seed being sent. I shall now return to the Relation of the method of preparing the Hemp, which had been previously plucked, and was ready for the water steep.

ON WATER STEEPING OR BOUISSAGE OF HEMP.

THE French recommend to cut off the roots and tops of the Hemp plants previous to this operation, which they say improves the quality of the remainder. For the water steep, the Hemp which had been previously dried and made up in bundles, as above directed, should be laid in a pond containing about five or six feet deep of water, and free from mud; the bundles of Hemp should be laid therein across each other, and close together, part of the heads one way and part the other, the whole covered with water and kept underneath it by stones, weights or levers, till properly steeped, which may be known by taking out a bundle and washing it; if the leaves come off freely, the fibres open and easily separate from the rind or stalk, it is in good order, if not, it must lie longer under careful observation, till ready.

IT will take a longer or shorter time in steeping according to the heat of the weather, for instance, six or seven days at the latter end of August; in September eight or ten, and in October or the beginning of November from twelve to twenty days, sooner or later, as the weather is naturally warm or cold.

IF convenience would admit that the pond of water in which the Hemp is steeped could be filled with water, or emptied at pleasure, it would be best to ple the Hemp therein dry; then to let the water upon it, to continue till it is properly steeped, afterwards to draw off the water, and when the Hemp is well drained take it out.

WHEN there is no convenience of a pond of water for steeping the Hemp, it may be managed in a brook or river, but there is danger in such case of its being carried away by the stream or damaged by the sand and mud.

THE Female Hemp, after feeding, requires a few days longer steeping than the other, owing to the thickness of the Rind, and the glutinous Substance being more adherent from its longer standing.

THE intent of the Process of water steeping, is by a gentle fermentation to separate the gummy and Mucilagious matters from the fibres of the Hemp with which they are intermixed, and to occasion the Bark or Rind on the outside of the fibres to be afterwards more easily detached by the Break.

WHEN the Hemp is found to be sufficiently steeped, the Bundles must be taken out one by one, and washed to separate the Filth and loose particles; it should then be set on the root ends to drain, the bands be untied, and the Hemp placed against a fence exposed to the sun and air, that it may be thoroughly dried.

ANOTHER mode of preparing Hemp after steeping, is to take it after washing, to a dry piece of ground, to open the bundles carefully, and spread the Hemp about two inches thick it should remain about a week in this state, then be laid with care the other side uppermost, and in about eight days tied up in straight bundles and removed under cover till there is leisure time to break and swingle it.

IN Russia, Sweden and Livonia, where there is much snow, they ferment or steep the Hemp in winter in the snow, by spreading the Hemp (which had been previously dried) upon the first snow that falls, and leaving it there to be covered with other Falls of snow, until spring, when it is usually found to be sufficiently fermented, it is then collected in to small Bundles ready for the Break. It appears to me that this mode would answer well in Canada, for the Female Hemp which has borne Seed, and save considerable trouble at that time of the year.

OF THE MANAGEMENT OF HEMP BY THE BREAK.

AFTER the Hemp has been washed and well dried from the water steep, it is fit for the break; if it has not been sufficiently dried in the open air, it may be done, by laying it carefully upon sticks placed across about four feet above a gentle fire; the Hemp may be laid thereon about six inches deep, and turned from time to time to be equally dried. In those countries where Hemp is grown in large quantities, wind and water Mills with particular machinery for the purpose are contrived, to break and prepare the Hemp in a more cheap and expeditious manner; but in a country where the preparation of Hemp is in its infancy, the most plain and simple methods must be first practised, and such machinery used as the Farmer can make in his own house. I have therefore added drawings and descriptions of such Implements as will answer the purpose in Canada, and at the least expence. In using the Hand Break, Fig. 1, the person employed takes in the left hand a handful of Hemp and in the other the upper jaw of the Break; the Hemp is laid across at B, between the two jaws, and by pulling and pressing down the upper jaw several times with great force upon the Hemp, it breaks the dry stems and rind, which contain the fibres of the Hemp. By this means the gummy matter and rind are made to quit the fibres, and the operation is continued 'till the whole handful be perfectly crushed by the machine; the Hemp is then stretched out on the ground or table, and when about two pound weight is thus prepared, it is made into a parcel by doubling and twisting it slightly, and is then called a Head of Hemp, or undressed stuff. A woman may break from twenty to forty pounds weight of Hemp in this manner in one day.

ON SCUTCHING HEMP.

AFTER the Hemp has passed the Break, it must be Scutched in the following manner. As much Hemp must be taken in the left hand as can conveniently be held, and with the right hand having broken the straw of the Hemp, lay it over the edge of the Scutching Board, Fig. 5, with the root ends foremost; it must be beaten downwards with the Scutcher, Fig. 4, or Fig. 3, and the Hemp turned or winded with the left hand, as it is Scutched, 'till most of the straw and dust is beat out. When that end is done, the other must be turned and Scutched in a similar manner; then that handful is laid aside and another proceeded with, 'till the whole is finished; the Hemp is then tied up in Bunches and laid in a place moderately dry until there is occasion to use it. The intent of this operation is to beat out and detach the Rind and dirt previously loosened by the Break.

METHOD OF HECKLING OR HACKLING HEMP.

WHEN Hemp is intended for coarse yarn, it need only be heckled with a large tooth'd Heckle; but if for finer uses, it must be begun with a coarse Heckle, and afterwards passed through one or more finer ones, as occasion may require.

THE business of the Heckler consists in separating throughout the whole length the fibres of the Hemp which the Break and Scutcher have divided only in part. The teeth of the Heckles, see F g. 6 and 7, are of iron with sharp points. The common coarse Heckle is about twenty-one inches by seven, the teeth in the rows are about one and three-fourths of an inch asunder, and extending in height above nine and a half inches from the board in which they are fixed; they are placed in a quincunx order, so that the teeth of the second row are in the centre of the space of the first row. By drawing the Hemp through the Heckle, the teeth carry off a part of the gummy matter contained amongst the fibres of the Hemp in the form of dust, and by dividing the filaments separate entirely the heterogeneous matter contained amongst them. To effect this purpose, the Heckle being firmly screwed upon a plank or solid piece of timber, one side of which inclines from the workman, he takes a handful of the Hemp, see H. Fig. 6, which grasping in his right hand he draws through the Heckle, holding the other part of the Hemp in his left hand to prevent its being entangled. After one end of the Hemp is sufficiently Heckled, the handful is reserved, and the same operation performed on the other.

REFERENCE TO THE ANNEXED ENGRAVING OF THE IMPLEMENTS USED IN THE PREPARATION OF HEMP.

FIG. 1 represents the Hand Break for Hemp with a portion of the Hemp Plant placed at B, supposed to be held by the left hand across the three under teeth or lower jaw of the Break, the two upper teeth and handle which are moveable on the hinges A A, are with the right hand quickly and often raised up and forced down upon the Hemp placed at B, which Hemp is frequently shifted and turned with the left hand; its rind is by this operation broken, and part thereof detached from the filaments.

Fig. 2 is a cross section of the two heads and jaws of the Break; C is the handle; D the two upper teeth; E the three lower teeth.

Fig. 3 and 4, represent two different kinds of Scutchers or implements for further clearing the Hemp from its dirt and rinds after it has passed the Breaker, the person who scutches the Hemp, holds the Hemp in the left hand, and lays part of it over the flock, or upright plank Fig. 5, fixed firm in the floor, and with the right hand strikes or scutches the Hemp with one of the Scutchers, either of which may be used for this purpose, but that of Fig. 3 gives a more regular and firm stroke; the wing F fixed upon the back of it equalizes the motion, prevents the Hemp from entangling on the Scutcher, and the space betwixt the hooked wing F. and Scutcher G, is useful in straightening the Hemp by drawing the bunch occasionally through it.

Fig. 6 and 7 are two Heckles fixed firmly on a Bench before the workman, who strikes the Hemp H upon the iron teeth of the Heckle, and draws it through them to open the filaments.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

FROM accounts lately received from good authority in Canada, it appears that an Acre of good Land in Corn will not yield half the profit to the Planter that the same Land will yield there in Hemp, and that Hemp may be grown successively on the same Land many years to advantage, when Corn will not. An Acre or two of Land it is agreed may be planted with Hemp on each Farm there, without interfering with other business. With respect to the quantity of Hemp raised on an Acre of Ground, it varies from six to twelve hundred weight, much depending on the quality of the Soil, and the manner of preparing it. A great part of the business is done at leisure, and when the time can best be spared. The consumpt on is certain, the present demand in Great Britain being upwards of three thousand Tons per annum. His Majesty's Ministers are endeavouring to remove the necessary facilities to the cultivation of Canada, by furnishing Hemp Seed, employing Agents to purchase, with ready Money, the Hemp when prepared for Sale, for that the necessary means are already taken to ensure success, in an Object of consequence to the Prosperity of Canada, and of immense importance to the United Empire.

The late doctor Fowler bishop of Gloucester, and justice Powell, had frequent altercations on the subject of ghosts. The bishop was a zealous defender of their reality—the justice somewhat sceptical. The bishop one day met his friend and the justice told him, that since their last conference on the subject, he had an ocular demonstration which convinced him of the existence of ghosts. I rejoice at your conversion, replied the bishop, give me the circumstances that produced it with all the particulars;—ocular demonstration you say—Yes my lord. As I lay last night in my bed about the 12th hour, I was awakened by an uncommon noise, and heard something coming up stairs—go on—alarmed at the noise I drew my curtain—proceed—and saw a faint glimmering light enter my chamber—of a blue color was it not?—of a pale pline; the light was followed by a tall meagre stern figure who appeared an old man of seventy years of age, arrayed in a long light colored rug gown, bound round with a feathern girdle, his beard thick and grisly his hair scant and straight, his face of a dark sable hue, on his head a large fur cap, and in his hand a long staff—terror seized my whole frame—I trembled till the bed almost shook, and cold drops hung on every limb; the figure with a slow and solemn step stalked nearer and nearer. Did you speak to it, there was money hid, a murder committed without doubt?—My lord I did speak to it, I adjured it by all that was holy, to tell whence and why it thus appeared—and in Heaven's name what was the reply?—it was accompanied with three strokes of his staff on the floor so loud that they made the room ring again, when holding up his lanthorn and waving it close to my eyes, he told me he was the WATCHMAN, and came to give me notice that my street door was wide open, and unless I arose and shut it, I might chance to be robbed before morning. The judge had no sooner concluded, than the bishop disappeared.

Anecdotes of Frederick the Great, Extracted from Zimmerman's "Select Pieces."

On the first visit of King Frederick the Second to Prussia, to receive the homage of his subjects, Kaiserling, whom the King called Cæsarion, and Augustus, were with him in the same carriage. In order to take possession of the prerogatives of a favourite, Kaiserling overburthened the King with petitions, recommendations, and interventions of every kind and description. The King reminded him more than once, that this would not do, and did not agree with his plan of government.—Kaiserling did not take the hint, and Frederick would not have him any longer in his carriage. But, as afterwards, at Rossbergh, the king was overwhelmed with congratulations in prose, and verses, he gave them all to Cæsarion, saying, "I know that you like to trouble yourself with other people's papers; I wish you would do me the favour to answer all this stuff."

One of Frederick's friends, when prince royal, was Abbe Sulzbac. His attachment to the King was uncommon, and sometimes rather singular; for he would oft entreat him, for God's sake, not to have any thing to do with free-masonry. The prince listened to these entreaties with much good-nature, laughed at them heartily, and went to the lodge. As the King was on his well-known journey to Strasbourgh, between this place and Landau, he met a carriage. He had them ask who was in it? "Abbe Sulzbac." The King turned directly. "How is it possible," cried the Abbe, "that I find your Majesty here?" "My dear Abbe," quoth the King, "I am gone hither only for the purpose of making you a free-mason; all the necessary implements I have with me, and we'll perform the ceremony here in open field." The good Abbe, seemed to be very much surprised by that event, but soon perceived the joke.

Frederick, extremely fond of solitude and quiet, would not, especially in his latter years, permit any one whom he had not ordered to come near the terrace of Little Sans-souci. Before the bridge, near the water pieces and terrace of Little Sans-souci, he placed on a pedestal of porphyre, six feet high, the bust of the duke of Abbe, a most shocking face, "that" as once he jestingly said to the Marquis Luchesini, "Strangers who have a mind to entrude into my Circle, by the face of the Duke of Alva, may be frightened away."

The King was very fond of joking with Rustani, and took in good part his jests, though sometimes they bordered on sarcasm. Before Baron Horn, the cook once said to him:—"When you are in Heaven, my dear abbot, and I come, and Peter should turn me off, as an heretick, would you then not be so kind as to smuggle me in under your mantle?" "Wah, sir, my heart," replied Rustani, "if there they should not look as sharp after contraband goods, as in this country."

Frederick was so careful of his secrets that he would often say, "Did my shirt know what I do, I would burn it directly."

REMARKS on the Culture and Preparation of HEMP in CANADA;

Communicated at the desire of the LORDS of His Majesty's PRIVY COUNCIL for Trade and Foreign Plantations.

BY CHARLES TAYLOR, M. D. &c. &c. &c.

ON THE CHOICE OF SEED.

HEMP is produced from an Annual Plant called the Cannabis Sativa by Linneus. It rises in height from Four to Eight Feet: It flourishes in Soil which is good, light, and moderately humid. Warm weather agrees with it, but not great heats.

In the culture of Hemp the choice of Seed is an important object, it should, if possible, be of the preceding year's growth; but on no account more than that of two years, as Hemp Seed has a singular tendency to grow rancid. To judge of its quality, take some of the Seed promiscuously from the Heap, and with the fore Teeth crush the outward Shells and separate them from the Kernel. If the Seed is good, the Kernel should then be mild to the taste, and its flavour resemble the Hazel Nut.

THE Husk or Shell contains an essential Oil which communicates its taste to the Kernel, if eaten along with it. If the Kernel tastes rancid the Seed will not vegetate.

ALL the Seed, of which the shell is a pale white or pale green colour, is bad, and the Kernel not well grown. If the shell shines and is of a brown colour, it is a sign that the Kernel is well formed, and proper Seed to sow. If, in rubbing it betwixt the palms of the hands, the Hemp Seed does not break, but, on the contrary, the shell becomes more clear and bright, it is a good sign. If it becomes dully by rubbing, it is unfit for growth.

HEMP Seed is apt to ferment and heat, if packed in large quantities together on ship board. It will answer to pack it in old American Flour Casks, or other packages not containing more than three hundred weight in each, but it will be safer if only half that weight is packed together.

I have been more particular in giving minute instructions in the choice of proper Seed, as it is an important point in the commencement of the undertaking; and without proper attention thereto, the attempt to grow Hemp is labor loft. Much of the Hemp Seed, sold in England is kiln-dried, which prevents its future vegetation.

ON THE CULTURE OF THE HEMP PLANT.

THE natural Soil on the Banks of the Creeks and Rivers in Canada is suitable for the growth of Hemp. The land should be previously ploughed in the preceding Autumn, and twice in the following Spring, as soon as the frosts will permit, it should then be harrowed extremely fine with iron toothed harrows, in order to leave the earth as well pulverized as possible. It should then be levelled with a light bush harrow, and sown broad cast, at the rate of two and a half bushels of Seed per Arpent (about four fifths of an English statute Acre.) The Seed should be harrowed in immediately after being sown, by a Harrow with small iron teeth set pretty close. In sowing the Land, the Seed should not be covered deep, otherwise it will not grow, but perish. Great care should be taken to prevent the Land being injured, by being trespassed upon, or the Seed being destroyed by Birds before it is firmly rooted in the ground.

On the early trials of cultivating Hemp in Canada, it will be proper to sow some by every Farmer, in small inclosures near the House, either in beds or in ridges of about four feet wide, with intervals of two feet between, to allow room to weed or pull the Hemp, when ripe, and to make the Farmers gradually acquainted with the properties of the Plant.

HEMP SEED should be sown in Canada as early in the month of May as the weather will permit; but if the weather is bad, the Sowing may be postponed 'till any time before the second week in June. It has been supposed advantageous to allow the Hemp Seed to be laid upon a close boarded Cellar Floor, for two or three weeks previous to its being sown, in order to prepare it to germinate sooner. After the young Plants are just risen above ground, they should be carefully weeded; they will afterwards be sufficiently luxuriant to prevent the growth of weeds.

THE Hemp Plants are of two kinds, Male and Female, which rise promiscuously. The Male yields a Farina or Powdery matter; the Female bears the Seed: the production of good Seed depends upon this Farina being diffused by the air upon the Female Plants; its effects may be promoted by Artificial agitation, at the time when the Male Plants are plucked or drawn from the others, as hereafter mentioned.

THE Male Hemp Plants will be ready to pull about the second week in August; their ripeness may be known from the dusty or powdery matter (Farina) they yield when shaken by the wind, or agitated with a stick, also from their leaves turning yellow, and their stems a whitish colour.

As the raising of a considerable quantity of Hemp Seed is at present of consequence, I recommend the following plan to be adopted now for that purpose. It may be deviated from at a future period, when Seed becomes more plentiful there.

WHEN the Male Hemp is well ripened, let the persons who pull the Hemp, clear passages or alleys through the field of about two feet wide, and six feet distant from each other, by pulling up promiscuously the Male and Female Hemp Plants, which grow within the said spaces; and let the Hemp thus plucked, be removed to other ground in the neighbourhood, and laid thereon straight, about an inch thick. After it has been thus placed for two or three days exposed to the Sun and Air, turn it, and let it lie a day or two more, then make it up in Bundles about the thickness of your thigh, by two legatures with some of the Hemp stalks; one of which should be near the root ends, & the other at two thirds of the length of the bundle. In this state you may either proceed to Water Steep it, as hereafter directed, or house it from rain, 'till a more convenient opportunity offers for the purpose.

I have before observed, that beds of the Hemp about six feet wide should be left growing until an intermediate space of two feet wide had been cleared, and the Hemp which grew thereon carried away, you must then proceed to pull up the male Hemp which was left growing amongst the Female Hemp on those beds, taking care not to damage the female Hemp; but, on the contrary, leaving it to grow with as little injury as possible, until the Seed is ripe. The Male Hemp which was plucked out may be dried in the intermediate alleys above mentioned, and made up in bundles, as the former.

METHOD OF COLLECTING HEMP SEED.

THE Female Hemp should remain growing upon the Land 'till the Seed is fully ripe; the signs of which are the opening of the Pods wherein the seeds are lodged, so much that you may just perceive the seeds therein, they will have a brownish appearance. It may probably be the first or second week in October before the female Hemp should be pulled; it should then be carefully drawn to avoid shedding the seed, and should be laid on cloths in carrying, to prevent the seed being lost in moving; it should be bound up in small bundles, and set to dry, with the root end downwards, in bunches made of three small sheaves, placed in a triangular form with the heads together, so as to support each other.

BE careful not to loose the Seed, and when the bundles are dry, you should have a wooden stool with a sheet or blanket under it; by striking the Hemp against the stool, you will beat out the best of the Seed into the sheet or blanket, breaking your Hemp as little as possible. After you have separated the seed from the Hemp, either by beating it as above or by threshing it substantially, the seed should be winnowed, and laid on a dry floor where there is a free current of air, turning it over repeatedly with a shovel to dry it, and to prevent fermentation.

I have been very minute in giving directions about preserving the Seed, in order that it may be procured in Canada, without the necessity of supplies from England, and to avoid the risk of bad Seed being sent. I shall now return to the Relation of the method of preparing the Hemp, which had been previously plucked, and was ready for the water steep.

ON WATER STEEPING OR BOUISSAGE OF HEMP.

THE French recommend to cut off the roots and tops of the Hemp plants previous to this operation, which they say improves the quality of the remainder. For the water steep, the Hemp which had been previously dried and made up in bundles, as above directed, should be laid in a pond containing about five or six feet deep of water, and free from mud; the bundles of Hemp should be laid therein across each other, and close together, part of the heads one way and part the other, the whole covered with water and kept underneath it by stones, weights or levers, till properly steeped, which may be known by taking out a bundle and writhing it; if the leaves come off freely, the fibres open and easily separate from the rind or stalk, it is in good order, if not, it must lie longer under careful observation, till ready.

IT will take a longer or shorter time in steeping according to the heat of the weather, for instance, six or seven days at the latter end of August; in September eight or ten, and in October or the beginning of November from twelve to twenty days, sooner or later, as the weather is naturally warm or cold.

IF convenience would admit that the pond of water in which the Hemp is steeped could be filled with water, or emptied at pleasure, it would be best to pile the Hemp therein dry; then to let the water upon it, to continue till it is properly steeped, afterwards to draw off the water, and when the Hemp is well drained take it out.

WHEN there is no convenience of a pond of water for steeping the Hemp, it may be managed in a brook or river, but there is danger in such case of its being carried away by the stream or damaged by the sand and mud.

THE Female Hemp, after seeding, requires a few days longer steeping than the other, owing to the thickness of the Rind, and the glutinous Substance being more adherent from its longer standing.

THE intent of the Process of water steeping, is by a gentle fermentation to separate the gummy and Mucilaginous matters from the fibres of the Hemp with which they are intermixed, and to occasion the Bark or Rind on the outside of the fibres to be afterwards more easily detached by the Break.

WHEN the Hemp is found to be sufficiently steeped, the Bundles must be taken out one by one, and washed to separate the Filth and loose particles; it should then be set on the root ends to drain, the bands be untied, and the Hemp placed against a fence exposed to the sun and air, that it may be thoroughly dried.

ANOTHER mode of preparing Hemp after steeping, is to take it after washing, to a dry piece of ground, to open the bundles carefully, and spread the Hemp about two inches thick, it should remain about a week in this state, then be laid with care the other side uppermost, and in about eight days tied up in straight bundles and removed under cover till there is leisure time to break and swingle it.

IN Russia, Sweden and Livonia, where there is much snow, they ferment or steep the Hemp in winter in the snow, by spreading the Hemp (which had been previously dried) upon the first snow that falls, and leaving it there to be covered with other Falls of snow, until spring, when it is usually found to be sufficiently fermented, it is then collected in to small Bundles ready for the Break. It appears to me that this mode would answer well in Canada, for the Female Hemp which has borne Seed, and save considerable trouble at that time of the year.

OF THE MANAGEMENT OF HEMP BY THE BREAK.

AFTER the Hemp has been washed and well dried from the water steep, it is fit for the break; if it has not been sufficiently dried in the open air, it may be done, by laying it carefully upon sticks placed across about four feet above a gentle fire; the Hemp may be laid thereon about six inches deep, and turned from time to time to be equally dried. In those countries where Hemp is grown in large quantities, wind and water Mills with particular machinery for the purpose are contrived, to break and prepare the Hemp in a more cheap and expeditious manner; but in a country where the preparation of Hemp is in its infancy, the most plain and simple methods must be first practised, and such machinery used as the Farmer can make in his own house. I have therefore added drawings and descriptions of such Implements as will answer the purpose in Canada, and at the least expence. In using the Hand Break, Fig. 1, the person employed takes in the left hand a handful of Hemp and in the other the upper jaw of the Break; the Hemp is laid across at B. between the two jaws, and by raising and pressing down the upper jaw several times with great force upon the Hemp, it breaks the dry stems and rind, which contain the fibres of the Hemp. By this means the gummy matter and rind are made to quit the fibres, and the operation is continued 'till the whole handful be perfectly crushed by the machine; the Hemp is then stretched out on the ground or stable, and when about two pound weight is thus prepared, it is made into a parcel by doubling and twisting it slightly, and is then called a Head of Hemp, or undressed stuff. A woman may break from twenty to forty pounds weight of Hemp in this manner in one day.

ON SCUTCHING HEMP.

AFTER the Hemp has passed the Break, it must be Scutched in the following manner. As much Hemp must be taken in the left hand as can conveniently be held, and with the right hand having broken the straw of the Hemp, lay it over the edge of the Scutching Board, Fig. 5, with the root ends foremost; it must be beaten downwards with the Scutcher, Fig. 4. or Fig. 3, and the Hemp turned or winded with the left hand, as it is Scutched, 'till most of the straw and dirt is beat out. When that end is done, the other must be turned and Scutched in a similar manner; then that handful is laid aside and another proceeded with, 'till the whole is finished; the Hemp is then tied up in Bunches and laid in a place moderately dry until there is occasion to use it. The intent of this operation is to beat out and detach the Rind and dirt previously loosened by the Break.

METHOD OF HECKLING OR HACKLING HEMP.

WHEN Hemp is intended for coarse yarn, it need only be heckled with a large tooth'd Heckle; but if for finer files, it must be begun with a coarse Heckle, and afterwards pulled through one or more finer ones, as occasion may require.

THE business of the Heckler consists in separating throughout the whole length the fibres of the Hemp which the Break and Scutcher have divided only in part. The teeth of the Heckles, see Fig. 6 and 7, are of iron with sharp points. The common coarse Heckle is about twenty-one inches by seven, the teeth in the rows are about one and three-fourths of an inch asunder, and extending in height above nine and a half inches from the board in which they are fixed; they are placed in a quincunx order, so that the teeth of the second row are in the centre of the space of the first row. By drawing the Hemp through the Heckle, the teeth carry off a part of the gummy matter contained amongst the fibres of the Hemp in the form of dust, and by dividing the filaments separate entirely the heterogeneous matter contained amongst them. To effect this purpose, the Heckle being firmly screwed upon a plank or solid piece of timber, one side of which inclines from the workman, he takes a handful of the Hemp, see H. Fig. 6, which grasping in his right hand he draws through the Heckle, holding the other part of the Hemp in his left hand to prevent its being entangled. After one end of the Hemp is sufficiently Heckled, the handful is reserved, and the same operation performed on the others.

REFERENCE TO THE ANNEXED ENGRAVING OF THE IMPLEMENTS USED IN THE PREPARATION OF HEMP.

FIG. 1 represents the Hand Break for Hemp with a portion of the Hemp Plant placed at B, supposed to be held by the left hand across the three under teeth or lower jaw of the Break, the two upper teeth and handle which are moveable on the hinges A A, are with the right hand quickly and often raised up and forced down upon the Hemp placed at B, which Hemp is frequently shifted and turned with the left hand; its rind is by this operation broken, and part thereof detached from the filaments.

Fig. 2 is a cross section of the two heads and jaws of the Break; C is the handle; D the two upper teeth; E the three lower teeth.

Fig. 3 and 4 represent two different kinds of Scutchers or implements for further clearing the Hemp from its dirt and rinds after it has passed the Breaker. the person who scutches the Hemp, holds the Hemp in the left hand, and lays part of it over the flock, or upright plank Fig. 5, fixed firm in the floor, and with the right hand strikes or scutches the Hemp with one of the Scutchers, either of which may be used for this purpose, but that of Fig. 3 gives a more regular and firm stroke; the wing F fixed upon the back of it equalizes the motion, prevents the Hemp from entangling on the Scutcher, and the space betwixt the hooked wing F. and Scutcher G, is useful in straightening the Hemp by drawing the bunch occasionally through it.

Fig. 6 and 7 are two Heckles fixed firmly on a Bench before the workman, who strikes the Hemp H upon the iron teeth of the Heckle, and draws it through them to open the filaments.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

FROM accounts lately received from good authority in Canada, it appears that an Acre of good Land in Corn will not yield half the profit to the Planter that the same Land will yield there in Hemp, and that Hemp may be grown successively on the same Land many years to advantage, when Corn will not. An Acre or two of Land it is agreed may be planted with Hemp on each Farm there, without interfering with other business. With respect to the quantity of Hemp raised on an Acre of Ground, it varies from six to twelve hundred weight, much depending on the quality of the Soil, and the manner of preparing it. A great part of the business is done at leisure, and when the time can best be spared. The consumption is certain, the present demand of Hemp for England being upwards of thirty thousand Tons per annum. His Maj-ty's Ministers are endeavouring to render the necessary facilities to the inhabitants of Canada, by furnishing Hemp Seed, employing Agents to purchase, with ready Money, the Hemp when prepared for Sale, to that the necessary means are already taken to ensure success, in an Object of consequence to the Prosperity of Canada, and of immense importance to the United Empire.

THE ARTS.

The following article will be read with intereſt, by every man of taſte, talents, learning and benevolence.

Letter from Alderman Boydell, to Sir John Anderſon, upon which the latter preſented on Wedneſday, a Petition to the Houſe of Commons, praying for leave to bring in a Bill to enable Meſſrs. Boydel to diſpoſe of their magnificent Collection by way of Lottery.

" Cheapſide, Feb. 4. 1804.

" DEAR SIR,

" The kindneſs with which you have undertaken to repreſent my caſe, calls upon me to lay open to you, with the utmoſt candour, the circumſtances attending it, which I will now endeavor to do as briefly as poſſible.

" It is above 60 years ſince I began to ſtudy the Art of Engraving, in the courſe of which time, beſides employing that long period of life in my profeſſion, with an induſtry and aſſiduity that would be improper in me to deſcribe, I have laid out with my brethren, in promoting the commerce of the Fine Arts, in this country, 250,000l.

" When I firſt began buſineſs, the whole commerce of prints, in this country, conſiſted in importing foreign prints, principally from France, to ſupply the cabinets of the curious in this kingdom. Impreſſed with the idea that the genius of our own countrymen, if properly encouraged, was equal to that of foreigners, I ſet about eſtabliſhing a School of Engraving in England, with what ſucceſs the public are well acquainted. It is, perhaps, at preſent, ſufficient, to ſay, that the whole courſe of that commerce is changed ; very few prints being now imported into this country, while the foreign market is principally ſupplied with prints from England.

" In effecting this favourite plan, I have not only ſpent a long life, but have employed nearly 40 years of the labour of my nephew, J. Ifish Boydell, who has been bred to the buſineſs, and whoſe aſſiſtance, during that period, has been greatly inſtrumental in promoting a School of Engraving in this country.

" By the bleſſing of Providence, theſe exertions have been very ſucceſsful, not only in that reſpect, but in a commercial point of view ; for the large ſums I regularly received from the continent, previous to the French Revolution, for impreſſions taken from the numerous plates engraved in England, encouraged me to attempt, alſo, an Engliſh School of Hiſtorical Painting.

" I had obſerved with indignation, that the want of ſuch a ſchool had been long made a favourite topic of oppoſition againſt this country, among foreign writers on National Taſte.—No ſubject, therefore, could be more appropriate for ſuch a national attempt, than England's inſpired poet, and great painter of nature, Shakſpeare ; and I flatter myſelf, that the moſt prejudiced foreigner muſt allow, that the Shakſpeare Gallery will convince the world, that Engliſhmen want nothing but the foſtering hand of encouragement, to bring forth their genius in this line of art. I might go further, and defy any of the Italian, Flemiſh, or French ſchools to ſhew, in ſo ſhort a ſpace of time, ſuch an exertion as the Shakſpeare Gallery ; and if they could have made ſuch an exertion, the pictures would have been marked with all that monotonous ſameneſs which diſtinguiſh thoſe different ſchools. Whereas, in the Shakſpeare Gallery, every artiſt partaking of the freedom of his country, and endowed with that originality of thinking, ſo peculiar to its natives, has choſen his own road to what he conceived to be excellence, unattacked by the ſtrift imitation and uniformity that pervade all the foreign ſchools.

" This Gallery I once flattered myſelf with being able to have left to that generous public, who have for ſo long a period encouraged my undertakings ; but, unfortunately for thoſe connected with the Fine Arts, a Vandalick revolution has ariſen, which, in convulſing all Europe, has entirely extinguiſhed, except in this happy iſland, all thoſe who had the taſte or the power to promote thoſe arts. While the tyrant that at preſent governs France, teſts that believing and befotted nation, that, in the midſt of all his robbery and rapine, he is a great patron and promoter of the Fine Arts ; juſt as if thoſe Arts, that humaniſe and poliſh mankind, could be promoted by ſuch means and by ſuch a man.

" You will excuſe, my dear Sir, I am ſure, ſome warmth in an old man on this ſubject, when I inform you, that this unhappy revolution has cut up by the roots that revenue from the continent, which enabled me to undertake ſuch conſiderable works in this country. At the ſame time, as I am laying my caſe fairly before you, it ſhould not be diſguiſed, that my mutual enthuſiaſm for promoting the Fine Arts, perhaps buoyed up by ſucceſs, made me improvident.—For had I but laid by but ten pounds out of every hundred pounds my plates produced, I ſhould not now have had occaſion to trouble my friends, or appeal to the public ; but, on the contrary, I new with impatience to employ ſome new artiſt, with the whole genius of my former undertakings. I feel too late my error ; for I have thereby decreaſed my ready money, and increaſed my ſtock of Copper plates, to ſuch a ſize, that all the Printſellers in Europe could not purchaſe it, eſpecially at theſe times, ſo unfavourable to the Arts.

" Having thus candidly owned my error, I have but one word to ſay in extenuation. My receipts from them had been ſo large, and continued ſo regular, that I at all times found them fully adequate to ſupport my unfortunings at home. I could not calculate on the preſent criſis, which has totally annihilated them. I certainly calculated on ſome diſtalcation of thoſe receipts by a French or Spaniſh war, or both. But with France or Spain I carried on but little commerce. Flanders, Holland and Germany ; which no doubt ſupplies the reſt of Europe, were the great marts. But, alas ! they are now no more. The convulſion that has diſjointed and ruined the whole continent I did not foreſee—I know no man that did. On that head, therefore, tho' it has nearly ruined me and mine, I can take but little blame to myſelf.

" In this ſtate of things, I throw myſelf with confidence upon that Public, who have always been but too partial to my poor endeavours, for the diſpoſal of that, which, in happier days I flattered myſelf to have preſented to them. I know of no means by which that can be effected, juſt now, but by a Lottery ; and if the Legiſlature will have the goodneſs to grant a permiſſion for that purpoſe, they will at leaſt have the aſſurance of the even tenour, of a long life, that it will be fairly and honourably conducted.—The objects of it are my Pictures, Galleries, Drawings, &c. &c., which, unconnected with my Copper plates, and Trade, are much more than ſufficient to pay, if properly diſpoſed of, all I owe in the world.

" I hope you, my dear Sir, and every honeſt man, at any age, will feel for my anxiety to diſcharge my debts, rent, &c. but at my advanced age of 89, I feel it becomes doubly deſirable.

I am, dear, Sir, with great regard,
your obedient and obliged ſervant,
JOHN BOYDELL."

Admiralty-Office, Nov. 10, 1805.

Copy of a letter from the Right Hon. Lord Collingwood, Vice Admiral of the Red, &c. to William Marſden, Eſq. dated on board the Euryalus, off Cadiz, Oct. 28.

SIR,—Since my letter to you of the 24th, ſtating the proceedings of his Majeſty's ſquadron, our ſituation has been the moſt critical, our employment the moſt arduous that ever a fleet was engaged in. On the 24th and 25th it blew a moſt violent gale of wind, which completely diſperſed the ſhips, and drove the captured hulls in all directions.

I have ſince been employed in collecting and deſtroying them, where they are at anchor upon the coaſt between Cadiz and ſix leagues Weſtward of San Lucar, without the proſpect of ſaving one to bring into port.

I mentioned in my former letter the joining of the Donegal and Melpomene, after the action ; I cannot ſufficiently praiſe the activity of their commanders in giving aſſiſtance to the ſquadron in deſtroying the enemy's ſhips.

The Defiance, after having ſtuck to the Aigle as long as it was poſſible, in hope of ſaving her from wreck, which ſeparated her for ſome time from the ſquadron, was obliged to abandon her to her fate, and ſhe went on ſhore.

Capt. Durham's exertions have been very great.

I hope I ſhall get them all deſtroyed by to-morrow, if the weather keeps moderate.

In the gale the Royal Sovereign and Mars loſt their fore-maſts, and are now rigging anew, where the body of the ſquadron is at anchor to the N. W. of San Lucar.

I ſend on the return of Gravina to Cadiz, he was immediately ordered to ſea again, and came out, which made it neceſſary for me to form a line, to cover the diſabled hulls—that night it blew hard, and his ſhip, the Prince of Aſturias, was diſmaſted, and returned again into port ; the Rago was alſo diſmaſted and fell into our hands ; Don Eutrigue M. Douel, had his broad pendant in the Rago, and from him I find the Santa Ana was driven near Cadiz, and towed in by a frigate.

I am, Sir, &c.

[The Gazette likewiſe contains an account of ſeveral unimportant captures of chiefly gun boats and diminutive privateers.]

Admiralty Office, Nov. 9, 1805.

His Majeſty has been pleaſed to order the rank of Admiral of the Red to be reſtored in his Majeſty's navy.

The Red Flag has been diſcontinued until this time, ever ſince the famous achievements of the Dutch in the Medway, in the reign of Charles the Second. But the diſgrace of that incident has been a thouſand times effaced by the naval glories of the preſent reign, eſpecially by the unprecedented victory off Trafalgar.

The undermentioned Captains are appointed Rear Admirals of the Blue, viz. John M'Dougal, James Aims, Elias Harvey, John Peyton, Sir Edmund Nagle, Knt. John Wells, Richard Grindall, George Martin, Sir Alexander Ball, Bart. Sir Richard John Strachan, Sir William Sidney Smith, Thomas Sotheby, Edward O'Bryan, Nathan Brunton, William Hancock Kelly, John Schank, Hon. Michael De Courcy, William Bentinck, Paul Minchin, and Philip D'Auvergne, Prince of Buſſion.—20.

Captains Keats, Buller, and Stopford, are appointed Colonels of Marines, in room of Captains Martin, Strachan and Smith, appointed flag officers of his Majeſty's fleet.

WHITEHALL, Nov. 9, 1805.

His Majeſty has been pleaſed to grant the dignity of Baron of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to Cuthbert Collingwood, Eſq. Vice Admiral of the Blue Squadron of his Majeſty's fleet, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by the name, ſtile and title of Baron Collingwood of Caldburne and Hethpoole, in the county of Northumberland.

LAND OFFICERS.

The following officers, it is ſaid, will compoſe the General Britiſh Staff on the Continent:—The Duke of York, Commander in Chief. Lt. Gen. Floyd, and Lt. Gen. Lord Pembroke, of the Cavalry. Five Lt. Generals, viz. the Duke of Cumberland, (to command the German legion) Lord Hutchinſon, Ludlow, H. Burrard, Dun, and Major General Moore, to command the infantry.

LONDON, Nov. 11.

Further particulars of Rear Admiral Strachan's Victory.

An officer of rank on board Commodore Strachan's ſquadron, in a letter dated at ſea, Nov. 5, gives the ſubſequent particulars of the laſt victory. He ſays they had been ſearching a long time after the Rochefort ſquadron, and that they frequently heard of them, from neutrals, they had begun to deſpair ſeeing them. On the 2d Nov. they had the pleaſure of ſeeing the Phoenix full of ſignals, one of which deſignated that a French ſquadron of four ſail, with an Admiral's flag, was in ſight. That they ſoon ſaw and chaſed them, having formed the line, with three ſhips of the line; and were ſoon after joined by a fourth. At noon, the 4th the battle began, when ſoon after Le Scipion, French 74, tacking by accident, the reſt had to follow, to ſupport their friend; which brought the Namur into the action; and cloſe battle. After about 3 hours battling, the Formidable of 80 guns, the French flag ſhip, ſtruck; and in about 20 minutes more the other three 74's hawled down their colours.—"Inſtead of the Rochefort ſquadron, we found theſe four to be part of Gravina's thirteen ſail which eſcaped from off Cape Trafalgar.—Theſe ſhips were perfectly unhurt before we engaged them. Our loſs, thank God, is trifling."

Nov. 12.

Another expedition is preparing in the Downs.

The Prince of Wales has ſubſcribed five hundred guineas to a naval column to be erected to the memory of his friend, Lord Nelſon.

The man who killed Lord Nelſon, was obſerved in the act of firing by a midſhipman on the poop of the Victory, who fired at, and killed or wounded him, as he immediately fell down on the quarter deck of the Santiſſima Trinidada. He had previouſly ſhot Captain Adair, of the marines, and wounded the ſignal Lieutenant Paſco.

The African frigate, and 22 of the Leeward Iſland fleet have arrived at Cork.

We hear a medal is to be preſented to every individual preſent in the late glorious action of the 21ſt October;—to bear on one ſide Lord Nelſon's head, on the other the man's name and rank, with the motto, "Palmam, qui meruit, ferat."

When the French ſhip Le Achille blew up in the action, the Pickle ſchooner picked up 160 of her crew; who to evince their gratitude, concerted a plan to riſe on the ſchooner and carry her into port.

The killed and wounded on board the Britiſh ſhips is calculated at about 1200. The loſs fell moſtly on the leading ſhips.

Not a ſingle ſhip of the Britiſh fleet is miſſing, notwithſtanding the fury of the ſtorm which ſucceeded the battle.

The enemy loſt by this battle twenty ſhips of the line, four of which were flag ſhips; together with ſeveral Admirals, and upwards of 20,000 ſeamen and ſoldiers, killed, drowned, or taken priſoners.

Further Memoranda of the late action off Cape Trafalgar, taken on board the Victory, while at Gibraltar.

While bearing down on the enemy, Lord Nelſon repeatedly ſaid, "This is the happeſt day of my life.—From the plan of attack which is laid down, I expect we ſhall be in poſſeſſion of twenty of the enemy's ſhips before night." Before night nineteen had ſtruck their colours, and one, L'Achille, of 74 guns, blown up!

So cloſe was the action, that the Victory and Temeraire, Engliſh ſhips, and the Santiſſima Trinidada, Spaniſh, and Le Redoubtable, French ſhip, were jumbed into a maſs; and the fluſh of almoſt every gun of the Victory ſet fire to the Redoubtable; whilſt the Engliſh ſeamen, with the greateſt coolneſs, were at intervals, employed in the midſt of the hoteſt fire, in throwing buckets of water to extinguiſh the flames on board the enemy's ſhip, leſt, by their ſpreading, they might involve both ſhips in deſtruction. Such coolneſs and valor are unparalleled.

Lord Nelſon was not killed by a ſhot from the Santiſſima Trinidada, but from the mizen top of the Redoubtable. A marine was ſeen in the in the interval of a diſperſion of the ſmoke, to take aim at the Admiral; and the inſtant he fired his Lordſhip fell;—and ſaid, with a ſmile on his face, to Capt. Hardy, with whom he had juſt ſpoke, "They have done for me at laſt." As they were conducting him to the ſurgeons, he remarked the tiller rope was too ſlack, and deſired the perſons with him to acquaint Capt. Hardy therewith! After his lower extremities were lifeleſs, his eyes ſeemed to brighten, and his ſpirits revive every time the crew of the Victory cheered; which they did as often as the enemy's ſhips ſurrendered. About five o'clock, when the Victory was completely decided, Capt. Hardy left the deck, and attended the dying hero.—His Lordſhip eagerly inquired, How many ſhips have ſtruck?—Capt. Hardy told him he was certain of twelve, which he could ſee, and probably more, "what," ſaid his Lordſhip, only twelve? there ſhould be at leaſt fifteen or ſixteen by my calculation. However (after a pauſe he added) twelve is pretty well." He then ſaid, "I feel death faſt approaching; and have but a few minutes to live. I could have wiſhed to have ſurvived a little longer, to have ſeen the fleet in ſafety; but as that is impoſſible, I have to thank God that I have outlived the battle; and have been enabled to do my duty to my country." Another ſhout from the crew of the Victory rouſed him once more, when expreſſing his ſatisfaction on learning the cauſe, he expired without a groan.

The marine who ſhot Lord Nelſon, was ſoon afterwards ſhot by Mr. Pollard, a midſhipman of the Victory, who had ſeen him fire at his Lordſhip, and who ſaw him fall out of the mizen top of the Redoubtable.—The ſhip was ſo dreadfully ſhattered, that ſoon after ſhe ſtruck her colours, ſhe went to the bottom with the moſt of her crew.—Thus was the death of Lord Nelſon greatly avenged!

Nov. 16.

A Peterſburgh article of Oct. 27, mentions, that 37 ſail of tranſports, which failed from Ruſſia with troops, had been wrecked on the coaſt of Courland, and that nearly 1200 troops had been loſt, among whom were two Ruſſian Generals.

November 21.

The laſt diſpatches received by Government from the Continent are ſaid to have brought the moſt poſitive aſſurances, on the part of the Cabinet of Vienna, that his Imperial Majeſty of Auſtria will on no conditions agree to a ſeparate peace with Bonaparte.

November 22.

It is reported very currently that orders have been iſſued from the War Office, to prepare camp equipage for forty thouſand infantry, and 10,000 cavalry, deſtined for ſervice on the continent. This may, perhaps, be correct, but it is at the ſame time as confidently reported that a number of merchant veſſels, hired for the tranſport ſervice, have been, for the preſent, laid aſide.

No farther accounts have been received from the Continent. It is underſtood, however, that by the laſt arrival, government received intelligence of the Ruſſians and Swedes having paſſed the Elbe on the 10th, 11th and 12th, and that they now cordially co-operate with the Prutſians in Hanover. Accounts have, it is ſaid, been alſo received of a large body of Ruſſian troops having landed at Venice from Corfu, and having ſince joined the Archduke Charles on the Brenta.

It is confidently reported that a Dutch paper of the 16th has been received in town by a private channel, which mentions a great battle having been fought on or about the 6th, the particulars of which had not been ſuffered to tranſpire. We have not been able to obtain a ſight of the paper.

A gentleman who came by the laſt packet from the continent ſtates, that the loſs ſuſtained by the French in the actions which preceded the capture of Ulm, amounted to upwards of 30,000 men! What a difference between this and the number ſtated in the Moniteur, viz. 1500. A few ſuch victories would ruin Bonaparte's army.

The ſame gentleman ſtates, that it was currently reported that Bonaparte had reſolved to erect the Electorate of Bavaria into an independent kingdom, by adding thereto the territory taken from the Emperor of Germany in the preſent campaign, and thereby to limit the Auſtrian territories.

Diſpatches were yeſterday received at the Admiralty from our fleet off Breſt. The enemy had not for ſome time made any movement which called for increaſed activity on the part of Admiral Cornwallis.

There were ſeveral letters from Rotterdam, of the 14th, ſhewn publicly on the Exchange, that ſuch was the univerſal diſtreſs in Paris for money, that no fewer than twenty-four Bankers had ſtopt payment, and that the bank paper bore a diſcount of 12 per cent.

November 24.

We are ſtill without any farther accounts from the Continent. A week's French journals are now due, which may be hourly expected to arrive. They are anxiouſly looked for.

The projected attack upon Boulogne has not been carried into effect, owing to an unexpected ſquall at the very moment when every thing was ready for the attempt. The fleet has, in conſequence, returned to the Downs.

Bonaparte, anxious to draw all his troops from the ſouth of Italy, has acknowledged the neutrality of Etruria, as well as of Naples.—Some Engliſh veſſels had, in conſequence, ſailed from Malta for Leghorn.

A new levy of 12,000 men has been ordered in the Auſtrian States; and the roads from Vienna to the army are crowded with reinforcements from Hungary and Bohemia.

Government has determined to ſend to the Continent the greateſt Britiſh force that has ever been employed in Germany. The expedition under the command of Gen. Dun will be followed by at leaſt 80,000 troops, of which one fifth will be cavalry.

The Duke of York has been actually appointed Commander in Chief of all our forces on the Continent, and the Duke of Cambridge is to have the chief command of the cavalry—under the Duke of York of courſe.

Nine hundred troops were expected in the Downs from Scotland, to be joined by others from Ireland.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Liverpool, held in the Tower Hall, on Friday laſt, it was reſolved that a naval monument to the memory of Lord Nelſon, be erected in the centre of the area of the new Exchange buildings; and that the memorable words of Lord Nelſon, in his laſt orders to his conquering countrymen, be inſcribed on ſuch monument, "England expects that every man will do his duty." A ſum, amounting to upwards of 5000l. has been already ſubſcribed, and is every hour increaſing.

LONDON, Nov. 25.

Government has at length received diſpatches, announcing the diſembarkation at Cuxhaven of the troops ſent out under the command of Gen. Dun. They were brought by the Leopard, of 50 guns, which, after conveying the tranſports to the Elbe, returned to the Downs on Friday. The fleet, conſiſting of nearly 90 ſail, arrived in the Elbe on Friday ſe'nnight, and the troops and horſes were landed with all poſſible diſpatch. Although the expedition experienced ſome heavy gales, the men were diſembarked in excellent health & ſpirits. The moſt ſanguine hopes are entertained that the force ſent out will be augmented by a numerous body of Hanoverians, for the levy of which large bounties were to be given, and a ſupply of arms and cloathing was ſent by the expedition.

The ſecond expedition deſtined for the Continent is expected to ſail in the courſe of a fortnight.

We are aſſured by a perſon connected with the Pruſſian legation, that the Pruſſian troops in readineſs for ſervice, who are aſſembled at different points, amount to nearly 250,000 men.—It is added, that Count Haugwitz, in the event of Bonaparte being willing to entertain the terms propoſed to him by the Cabinet of Berlin, for the reſtoration of peace, is to demand a general ſuſpenſion of arms.

We hear, on the authority of a letter from Munich, dated the 2d inſtant, that a ſtrong Gallo Bavarian corps had by a circuitous march, turned the important paſs of Scharnitz in the Tyrol. It is alſo mentioned, that a body of Auſtrian troops carried into Boheimia by the Archduke Ferdinand, had made a ſucceſsful incurſion into the neighbourhood of Hertchaw, and made 400 priſoners.

GIBRALTAR, Nov. 2, 1805.

The Spaniſh camp before Gibraltar is breaking up.

Ad. LOUIS's ſquadron paſſed the Gut the 29th October.

From Malta, we have advices to the 12th Oct. when tranſports had failed for Corfu, to bring 12,000 Ruſſians, who were to join Gen CRAIG's army—10,000 were to come in the Ruſſian ſquadron.

Three of Lord NELSON's prizes have arrived here, viz. Le Swiftſure 74. San Idefonſo 74. and San Juan Nepomuceno 74.

La Redoubtable 74, was ſo dreadfully ſhattered in the battle of the 21ſt inſt. that ſoon after the ſtruck to the Victory ſhe went down with moſt of her crew.

The loſs of the Victory was 34 killed, and 78 wounded.—Among the killed, the great NELSON, Mr. SCOTT, his Secretary, Capt. ADAIR of the marines, and a Lieutenant. The loſs was chiefly ſuſtained whilſt going into the action as the leading ſhip of the diviſion; before ſhe mounted a gun.—She alſo ſuffered loſs from the muſketry of the enemy, but ſo tremendous was her fire, that ſhe fileneed every ſhip ſhe got her guns to bear upon after a few broadſides. The Bucentaure had 30 of her guns diſmounted; and for a conſiderable time before the ſtruck did not return a ſhot.

Three of the French ſhips in the van, who had no part in the action, and one of which carried a Rear Admiral's flag, had the inhumanity and cowardice, as they were making their eſcape, to fire for a conſiderable time upon the Santiſima Trinidada; and ſeveral other of the ſtripped Spaniſh priſes, after they had ſurrendered to us, which, from their ſituation, were incapable either of oppoſition or flight; and an immenſe number of the Spaniards were killed and wounded, from this unprincipled and bloody deed of theirs; good and faithful allies.—We ſolemnly pledge ourſelves for the truth of the above and many facts, not mentioned in this account, which we have received from every officer on board our victorious ſquadron now in the bay cauſeway waterſide. Indeed ſuch was the unanimous teſtimony expreſſed by the Spaniards, at the concluſion of the action, that when two days after the action, ſeven of the enemy's ſhips came out of Cadiz, in hopes of retaking some of the ſtibbled prizes, the crew of the Argonaut, in a body, offered their ſervices to the Britiſh officer who had charge of the prize, to man the guns againſt any of the French ſhips; and they were actually stationed at the lower deck guns for that purpoſe, whilſt the Engliſh ſeamen manned thoſe of the upper deck.

The Engliſh officer on board remained all the Spaniſh officers their arms, and placed the moſt implicit confidence in the honor of the Spaniards, which he had no reaſon to repent; as though their numbers were ſo ſuperior as eaſily to have enabled them to retake the ſhip, yet they, on every occaſion, ſhowed the utmoſt fidelity and good conduct, and declared that if a Spaniſh ſhip came along ſide of them, they would quickly go below and leave the Engliſh to act for themſelves.

The Britiſh fleet in this glorious victory, is not ſuppoſed to have had twelve hundred men killed and wounded, the loſs having chiefly fallen upon a few of the leading ſhips, and not a ſingle ſhip on our part is miſſing. The enemy, on the contrary, have twenty ſhips of the line taken or deſtroyed, four of which, viz. the St. Anne, the Saviglissa Trinidada, the Berenteaver and Algesiras, were flag ſhips; whilſt ſeven of their Admirals, and upwards of twenty thouſand of their ſeamen and ſoldiers, have been killed, wounded or taken priſoners, in this memorable victory.

Lord NELSON, before his death, expreſſed his deſire, that he ſhould be buried near his late venerable father, unleſs his country ſhould with to diſpoſe of his body otherwiſe.

BOSTON, January 15.

By the politeneſs of a gentleman who has often obliged us, we have juſt received a New-York paper of Saturday laſt—from which we copy the following intereſting particulars.

"By the ſhip Cato, arrived this morning from Liverpool, we have papers of the 17th—London to the 16th—nine days later than by any former arrival. The troops ſent from England had been landed at Cuxhaven, in good health and ſpirits, and were to be joined by the Hanoverians. A ſecond expedition was on the eve of ſailing for the continent.—The Britiſh fleet was ſtill in port, under the command of Ad. CORNWALLIS.—250,000 Pruſſians were aſſembled and ready to march.—The Court of Berlin had offered terms of peace to Bonaparte, in caſe of acceptance, a general ſuſpenſion of arms was to take place. Bonaparte has acknowledged the neutrality of Etruria and Naples.—A new army of 50,000 Auſtrians has been made.—The Duke of York is appointed commander in chief of all the forces on the Continent, and the Duke of Cambridge is to command the cavalry, and were to embark in a few days.—9000 troops were expected in the Downs from Scotland, to be joined by others from Ireland. The Britiſh Admiralty were about to ſend out frigates and ſmaller veſſels to intercept the prizes ſent into Guadaloupe.—[This ſummary ſhall be ſucceeded by details in our next:—but there appears to have been no recent battles either in Germany or Italy.]

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, March 8, 1806

On Monday laſt at 12-o'clock, his Honor the Preſident came in ſtate to the Upper Houſe of Legiſlature, to prorogue the two Houſes of Parliament, and being ſeated on the Throne, he commanded, by meſſage through the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, the attendance of the Houſe of Aſſembly, in the Legiſlative Council Chamber, and the Houſe of Aſſembly having attended accordingly, his Honor was pleaſed to give the Royal Aſſent to the following Bills:—

An Act to make proviſion for certain Sheriffs in this Province.

An Act to repeal an Act paſſed in the thirty-fifth year of his Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act to regulate the Practice of Phyſic and Surgery."

An Act to procure certain apparatus for the promotion of Science.

An Act to repeal an Act paſſed in the forty fourth year of his Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act for granting to his Majeſty a certain ſum of money out of the funds applicable to the uſes of this Province, to defray the expences of amending and repairing the public Highways and Roads, and laying out and opening new Roads and building Bridges in the ſeveral Diſtricts thereof, and to make further proviſion for the opening and amending the ſaid Roads.

An Act to alter and amend an Act paſſed in the thirty-third year of his preſent Majeſty's reign, intituled "An Act to provide for the nomination and appointment of Pariſh and Town Officers, and alſo to repeal certain parts of an Act paſſed in the thirty third year of his preſent Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act to authorize and direct the laying and collecting of Aſſeſſments and Rates in every Diſtrict in this Province, and to provide for the payment of Wages to Members of the Houſe of Aſſembly."

An Act to continue an Act paſſed in the forty-third year of his Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the better ſecuring to his Majeſty, his heirs and ſucceſſors, the due collection and receipt of certain Duties therein mentioned."

An Act for applying a certain ſum of Money therein mentioned, to make good certain Monies iſſued and advanced by his Majeſty through the Lieutenant Governor, in purſuance of ſeveral Addreſſes.

The ſeven foregoing Acts received the Royal Aſſent on the 3d March, 1806.

An Act to authorize the Sheriff to levy all neceſſary Coſts incurred in any ſuit brought in any of his Majeſty's Courts of Law in this Province, was reſerved for the ſignification of his Majeſty's pleaſure thereon.

After which his Honor was pleaſed to make the following SPEECH to both Houſes of Parliament:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council,
And Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

HAVING dedicated a conſiderable portion of your time to the ſervice of the Public, I think it proper to cloſe this Seſſion of the Legiſlature.

The Bills to which I have now given the Royal Aſſent, contain, ſome of them, objects of the higheſt importance to the Public.

By the opening of Roads and conſtructing of Bridges, while the ſafety and comfort of the individual will be promoted, the Commerce and the Riches of this Province will neceſſarily be extended and increaſed.

The encouragement which you have given, for procuring of the means neceſſary for communicating of uſeful and ornamental Knowledge to the riſing Generation, meets with my approbation; and I have no doubt, will produce the moſt ſalutary effects.

The other Bills which have now paſſed, will, I truſt, effectuate the beneficial purpoſes for which they are intended.

I diſmiſs you, with the pleaſing hope, that the Laws enacted for the good of this Province, will derive additional ſtrength and energy from your exertions, influence and example.

UTICA, February 17.

The following ſketches of important intelligence, are taken from the N. Y. Evening Poſt of the 8th and 9th inſt. Almoſt all the accounts of the ſucceſs of the grand army in Germany, have come thro' French channels; their partiality may of courſe be preſumed—From the articles below it ſhould appear, that the victories of the French have not been quite ſo bloodleſs, nor their ſucceſs quite ſo great, as have been ſtated in their official bulletins.

IMPORTANT.

By the brig William, from Liverpool, arrived this morning in 52 days a Liverpool paper containing London dates to the 14th December inclusive, has been received by us.—From other papers of previous dates haſtily looked at, it turns out, that the news of French ſucceſs and the diſaſter of the allies, as given in Thurſday's paper, is ſo far from being true—the reverſe would be nearer ſo.

The Ruſſians have gained a ſecond victory under General Kutuſow, over the French, accompanied with great ſlaughter.

The Arch Duke Charles has gained a victory over Maſſena in Italy—10,000 left dead on the field.

As to a peace between the Emperor of Germany and Bonaparte, neither is that true. As ſoon as the Emperor glanced his eye over the terms propoſed, he rejected them with the utmoſt indignation, declaring he would not do any thing that would caſt a ſtain on his own fame and that of his poſterity.

Great complaints are made of the exaggeration & falſity of the French bulletins. The victories there ſo pompouſly detailed are ſaid never to have exiſted to ſuch extent but on paper.

Talleyrand is at Vienna. It appears the warrior cannot do a moment without the politician.

The Engliſh papers expreſs the expectation that Bonaparte will never be able to regain Paris.

A gentleman, paſſenger in the Hannah, Capt. Connell, arrived at this port from Liverpool in 50 days, informs us that previous to his leaving England, private accounts had arrived from the Continent, of the moſt important nature.

The official diſpatches of this all-intereſting news had been ſent to England by expreſs. But Donaldſon, the bearer, had been wrecked on the coaſt of Holland, and the diſpatches loſt.—An Engliſh paper to the 18th inclusive, however, contains the ſubſtance of which the following is a ſummary.

On the 2d of December, the Emperor Bonaparte put himſelf at the head of his troops between Brune and Olmutz in Moravia; he was met by the Emperor Alexander in perſon at the head of the Ruſſian army—a junction having firſt been formed with the Auſtrians.

At the beginning of the battle the French made a very ſerious impreſſion on the centre of the enemy, and the Ruſſians gave way. The French purſued the advantage with ardor, took all the Ruſſian artillery, and almoſt effected a total rout. While this was going on, however, in the centre, a vaſtly different ſcene was acting on one wing. On their left the French were at length obliged entirely to give way. Night put an end to the combat. On the next morning the battle was renewed with increaſed ardor on both ſides. The defeated Ruſſians in the centre, advanced, they crawled on their hands and knees up under the mouths of their own cannon which had been turned againſt them, and retook them. This, however, was balanced by a different fate on the wing; the ſlaughter was immenſe, but neither gained any deciſive advantage that night.

On the 4th, the battle was renewed, and continued through the day.—But on the evening of the 5th, the French began to retreat, and retired back of the Schwatz.

The Ruſſians depended chiefly on the bayonet, and neither gave nor received quarter.

The loſs on each ſide is not ſtated, but the loss on both ſides in killed and wounded, is ſuppoſed to be fifty thouſand men. Bonaparte ſurrounded by his Garde de Corps—Alexander at the head of his Guards, were perſonly oppoſed to each other.

The Emperor Alexander evinced the moſt invincible bravery, combined with the moſt entire ſelf poſſeſſion.—For ſix hours he was miſſing.

The Emperor Bonaparte was wounded in the action, and would have been taken priſoner, but for the deſperate efforts of his Garde de Corps, who ſaved him at the ſacrifice of moſt of their lives.

Previous to the battle, Bonaparte in a letter addreſſed to the Emperor Alexander, had ſtiled him "Sire and Brother;" the anſwer was addreſſed ſimply "To the Chief of the French Army."

In addition to the above, the Archduke Charles, after a moſt maſterly retreat from Italy, was advancing by rapid and forced marches to the relief of Vienna with an army, including the Hungarian levy, of 90,000 men. Expectation was alſo confidently entertained that the King of Pruſſia and King of Sweden, at the head of an army conſiſting of Pruſſians, Ruſſians, Swedes, Saxons, Heſſians and Engliſh amounting on the whole to 250,000 men, were already in the field, and acting againſt the French.

The ſtaff of the Swediſh monarch had left Straſlund, and the camp equipage of the King of Pruſſia had been ſent from Berlin, the 3d, on its rout towards Franconia. Twelve days afterwards his Pruſſian Majeſty was to follow.

Sanguine hopes are entertained that Bonaparte has at length arrived at the termination of his career.

Such is the immenſely important ſummary made juſt as our paper was ready to go the preſs.

FROM A LATE ENGLISH PAPER, RECEIVED AT THIS OFFICE.

LORD NELSON.

In the year 1770, his Lordſhip entered on board the Raiſonable, of 64 guns, commanded by his maternal uncle Captain Suckling, and from him he received the rudiments of naval tactics. We cannot follow him through the brilliant career of his ſervices in every quarter of the globe—firſt in the Weſt-Indies: afterwards with Lord Mulgrave to the North Pole, where as our readers know, the two ſhips were long inveſted in ice, and where the labor of the crews could hardly move them aſſiſt the floats. At this early period the eager character of his mind diſplayed itſelf. He procured a ſort of boat to move, either on or off the ice, to explore channels. And a pleaſing anecdote is told of the youth at this time. He was one night miſſing from the ſhip; ſearch was made for him in all directions—it was imagined he was loſt. As day broke he was diſcovered at a diſtance on the ice, with a muſket, in purſuit of an immenſe bear, which he had followed the whole night in hopes of killing.—On his return, Captain Lutwidge demanded what motive could have induced him to quit the ſhip at ſuch an hour, and in ſuch a ſeaſon? The young hero, with great ſimplicity, replied—"I wiſhed to get the ſkin for my father." He then went to the Weſt-Indies; and, on his return, was made a Lieutenant in 1777. He then went to Jamaica, in the Loweſtoffe, as Second Lieutenant. In a ſtrong gale of wind they captured an American letter of marque. The firſt Lieutenant was ordered to board her; but after attempting it, he returned on account of the ſea running ſo high. The Captain exclaimed, "I have I then no officer who can board the prize?" The maſter ran to the gangway—"No," exclaimed Nelſon, "it is my turn now—if I come back it will be your's." He was made poſt in June 1779, and his firſt ſhip was the Hinchinbrooke. From this time his ſervices became ſo conſpicuous as to be generally known, and we need not enumerate the brilliant ſeries, as it is indelibly imprinted on every heart.

We cannot, however, refrain from inſerting here the narrative of Lord Nelſon's firſt encounter with the Santiſſima Trinadada, in 1797, as moſt admirably drawn up by Colonel Drinkwater:

"When Sir John Jervis (now Lord St. Vincent) on the 14th of February, 1797, had accompliſhed his bold intention of breaking the enemy's line, the Spaniſh Admiral, who had been ſeparated to windward with his main body, conſiſting of 18 ſhips of the line, from nine ſhips that were cut off to leeward, appeared to make a movement, as if with a view to join the latter. This deſign was completely fruſtrated by the timely oppoſition of Commodore Nelſon, whoſe diſtation in the rear of the Britiſh line admiral him an opportunity of observing this manœuvre ; his ship, the Captain, had no sooner pass'd the rear of the enemy's ships that were to windward, than he ordered her to wear, and stood on the other tack towards the enemy In executing this bold and decisive manœuvre, the Commodore reached the six ships from the enemy's rear who bore the Spanish Admiral's flag, the Santissima Trinidada, of 136 guns ; a ship of four decks, reported to be the largest in the world. Notwithstanding the inequality of force, the Commodore instantly engaged the colossal opponent, and for a considerable time had to contend not only with her, but with her seconds a-head and a-stern, each of three decks. While he maintained this unequal combat, which was viewed with admiration, mixed with anxiety, his friends were flying to his support : the enemy's intention was soon directed to the Culloden, Captain Troubridge, and in a short time after to the Blenheim, of 90 guns, capt. Frederick, who opportunately came to his assistance. The intrepid conduct of the Commodore staggered the Spanish Admiral, who already appeared to waver in portaing his intention of joining the ships cut off by the British fleet ; when the Culloden's timely arrival, and Capt Troubridge's spirited support of the Commodore, together with the approach of the Blenheim, followed by Rear Admiral Parker, with the Prince George, Orion, Irresistible, and Diadem, not far distant, determined the Spanish Admiral to change his design altogether, and threw out the signal for the ships of the main body to haul their wind, and make sail on the larboard tack. Not a moment was loft in improving the advantage now apparent in favour of the British squadron : as the Rear Admiral Parker's division approached the enemy's ships in support of the Captain (Commodore Nelson's ship) and her gallant seconds, the Blenheim and Culloden, the commander became more animated and impressive. In this manner did Commodore Nelson engage a Spanish three-decker, until he had nearly expended all his ammunition in his ship ; which had battered the hulk of her lone top-mast, and received such considerable damage in her sails and rigging, that she was almost rendered here de combat. At this critical period, the Spanish three decker having lost her main-mast, fell on board a Spanish two-decker, of 84 guns, that was her second : this latter ship consequently now became the Commodore's opponent, and a most vigorous fire was kept up for some time, by both ships, within pistol-shot. It was now that the Commodore's ship lost many men, and that the damage already sustained, through the long and arduous conflict which he had maintained, appeared to render a continuance of the contest in the usual way precarious, or perhaps impossible. At this critical moment, the Commodore, from a sudden impulse, instantly enjoined on a bold and decisive measure ; and determined, whatever might be the event, to attempt his important sword in hand—the boarders were summoned, and orders given to lay his ship on board the enemy. Fortune favors the brave ! Nor on this occasion did the unmindful of her favorite.—Ralph Willet Miller, the Commodore's Captain, to judiciously directed the course of his ship, that he laid her aboard the starboard quarter of the Spanish eighty-four—her spritsail-yard pulled over the enemy's poop, and hooking in her mizen shrouds ; when the word to board being given, the officers and seamen, destined for this perilous duty, headed by Lieutenant Berry, together with the detachment of the forty-ninth regiment, commanded by Lieutenant Pearson, then doing duty as marines on board the captain, pulled with rapidity on board the enemy's ship ; and in a short time the San Nicolas was in the possession of her intrepid assailants. The Commodore's ardour would not permit him to remain an inactive spectator of this feene. He was aware the attempt was hazardous ; and he thought his presence might animate his brave companions, and contribute to the success of this bold enterprife ; he therefore, as if by magic impulse, accompanied the party in this attack ; pafling from the fore-chains of his own ship into the enemy's quarter gallery, and thence through the cabin to the quarter-deck, where he arrived in time to receive the sword of the dying Commander, who had been mortally wounded by the boarders. He had not been long employed in taking the neceflary measures to secure this hard earned conquest, when he found himself engaged in a more arduous talk. The fleru of the three-decker, his former opponent, was placed directly athwart of the weather beam of the prize San Nicolas : and from her poop and galleries the enemy sorely annoyed with musketry, the British, who had boarded the San Nicolas. The Commodore was not long in refolving on the conduct to be adopted upon this momentous occafion ; the two alternatives that presented themselves to his unshaken mind, were to quit the prize, or instantly board the three-decker. Confident in the bravery of his seamen, he determined on the latter. Directing, therefore, an additional number of men to be sent from the Captain on board the San Nicolas, the undaunted Commodore, whom no danger ever appalled, headed himfelf the afsailants in this new attack, against one—Westminster Abbey, or glorious Victory ! Success in a few minutes, and with little loss, crowned the enterprise. Such indeed was the panic occasioned by his preceding conduct, that the British no sooner appeared on the quarter-deck of their new opponent, than the Commandant advanced ;—and afked for the British Commanding Officer, dropped on the knee, and prefented his sword, apologizing at the same time for the Spanish Admiral's not appearing, as he was dangerously wounded. For a moment Commodore Nelson could fcarcely perfuade himfelf of this fecond influence of good fortune ; he therefore ordered the Spanish Commandant, who had the rank of a Brigadier, to afsemble the officers on the quarter-deck, and direct means to be taken forthwith for communicating to the crew the furrender of the ship. All the officers appeared :—and the Commodore had the furrender of the San Jofef duly confirmed, by each of them delivering his sword. The Coxswain of the Commodore's barge (John Sykes, since dead) had stretched cloth to his fide throughout this perilous attempt. To him the Commodore gave in charge, the swords of the Spanish officers as he received them ; and the undaunted tar, aathes were delivered to him, tucked them honorable under his under his arm, with all the coolnefs imaginable. It was at this moment alfo, that a British failor, who had long fought under the Commodore, came up to the fcene of his brave, and exacting the liberty he was taking, shook him by the hand, to congratulate him upon seeing him fafe upon the quarter-deck of a Spanish three decker.—The ship entirely had formerly fubmitted, and the Commodore returned on board the San Nicolas where the latter ship was difcovered to be on fire in two places. At the first moment appearances were alarming ; but the presence of mind, and resources of the Commodore and his officers in this emergency, foon got the fire under. A signal was immediately made by the Captain for boats to afsift in difentangling her from the two prizes ; and as she was incapable of her her fervices until refitted, the Commodore again hoisted his pendant for the moment, on board La Minerva frigate ; and in the evening hoisted his pendant on board the latter ship.—For fuch diftinguished gallantry on the 14th February, he received the infignia of the Bath, and the gold medal from his Sovereign, and was alfo prefented with the freedom of London in a gold box."

It is moft remarkable that Lord Nelfon fhould have furvived the many fevere wounds, and ftill more exhauling fatigues, which he fuffered before he was ftruck by the fatal fhot. But that firft great endowment of nature—an invincible gallantry fpurs him through all his fufferings ; and no experience of danger had ferved to chect his ardour.

He was engaged in upwards of one hundred and twenty-four actions with the enemy, in all of which his bravery was ftill more confpicuous. He loft one eye at Calvi, and one arm at Teneriffe, and in all actions proved that he thought his body as well as his mind were the property of his country. His humanity was as confpicuous as his courage and his judgment. In the memorable battle of the Nile, which will be recorded in the annals of mankind till the human race fhall be wholly extinct, knowing that the wounded of his own fhips would be taken care of, he beat his fhot among the crowds of the enemy. He eftablifhed a truce with the Commandant at Aboukir, and through him made a communication to the commandant of Alexandria, that it was his intention to allow all the wounded Frenchmen to be taken where to proper hofpitals, with their own furgeons to attend them, a proposal which was affented to by the French and carried into execution the following day. Thus amidft all the glow of patriotifm and the exultation of victory, the Hero did not lofe ftght of humanity and a feeling of compaffion for his fellow creatures.

Such were the fplendid talents, and the unparalleled fervices of this diftinguifhed man.

We need not ftate to our readers the various titles and honors which were beftowed on him, not only by his own Sovereign, but by all the Potentates and Kings of the World, our Allies, on Lord Nelfon. Having no children by his late wife whom he married in 1787, Frances Woolward Nefbitt, the widow of Dr. Nefbitt, of Nevis, he procured the title of Baron and Vifcount Nelfon of the Nile, to defcend to the collateral branches of his family. His eftate is bequeathed in his will by the Rev Dr. William Nelfon, Vice Dean of Canterbury, now Lord Vifcount Nelfon, whole fon, Horatio, a moft promifing youth is at Eaton, and the daughter, the Hon Charlotte Mary Nelfon, a beautiful and accomplifhed young lady, is at Merton Place. He has two fifters, both married, Mrs Bolton and Mrs. Matham, and who have numerous families. They made a ware a part of his happy family at Merton, and they with every other friend will be inconfolable at his lofs.

From a London Paper.

LORD NELSON.

IT is a painful talk to defcribe a life of glory at the moment of its clofe ; but on no occafion like the prefent, we feel it to be our duty to call to the recollection of our readers the principal events which have diftinguifhed the brilliant naval career of Lord Nelfon. It is true that we can only briefly retrace thofe events, for were we, in other refpects, capable of doing juftice to all his fplendid achievements, neither our time nor the limits of this paper would enable us to beftow on them that eulogy which is their due.

HORATIO NELSON was the fourth fon of the Rev. Mr. Edward Nelfon, rector of Burnham Thorpe, in the county of Norfolk. He entered into the naval fervice at the early age of twelve. In the year 1770, when there was the probability of a war between this country and Spain relative to the Falkland iflands, he left his fchool at Norham, and went on board the Raifonable, 64, guns, commanded by his maternal uncle, Capt Suckling. We are, however, under the neceflity of paffing rapidly over the earlieft part of his meritorious life. After paffing in active fervice through the various gradations of naval rank, he was, on the 11th of June, 1779, made poft captain, and in July, 1780, commanded the naval part of the expedition by which Fort Juan, in the gulph of Mexico, was deftroyed. While commanding the Boreas, on the Weft-India ftation, Capt. Nelfon became acquainted with lady Nelfon, who was then Mrs. Nefbit, of Nevis, the widow of Dr. Nefbit, of that iland. After the American war, the Boreas was paid off, and he retired, with Mrs. Nelfon, to the parfonage houfe at Burnham Thorpe. The war of the French revolution fummoned the hero again to the fervice of his country. In January 1793, he was appointed to the command of the Agamemnon, 64, and placed under the orders of Lord Hood, in the Mediterranean. On that ftation he had frequent opportunities of difplaying his enterprife and fkill. At the fiege of Calvi, where he behaved with the greateft intrepidity, he received an unfortunate wound in the face, which deprived him of the fight of his right eye. In the glorious action in which Ld. St. Vincent defeated the Spanish fleet on the 14th February, 1797, the gallant Nelfon bore a diftinguifhed part. In confequence of his eminent fervices in this action, he was created Knight of the Bath, and Rear-Admiral of the Blue. At the attack on Santa Cruz he loft his right arm.

But great as had been the previous fervices of Lord Nelfon, the victory of the Nile furpaffed them all. This great achievement which ftruftrated the ambitious plans of France, and his Lordfhip's fplendid triumph at Copenhagen, which fecured the rights of the Britifh flag, are ftill freth in the recollection of his grateful country.

In the fummer of the year 1801, Lord Nelfon attacked the enemy's gun boats in Boulogne, and did confiderable damage to the flotilla, intended for the invafion of this country. Soon after the preliminaries, of peace were figned, and a period formed to have arrived, when his Lordfhip might at laft expect to retire from his glorious labors, and enjoy his merited honours in tranquility. But the aggreffions of the French government produced a new war, and Lord Nelfon was eager to vindicate the honor, and protect the interefts, of his country. He refumed his old ftation in the Mediterranean, where the terror of his name long confined the enemy to their ports. When they at laft efcaped, he purfued them with an unexampled promptitude. Our readers are well acquainted with all the details of his extraordinary chace of the combined fleets to the Weft-Indies, and its return to Europe. That fleet feemed at laft to have completely efcaped, but it only for a fhort time avoided his vengeance. Its conqueft was deftined to become the laft and moft fplendid of his exploits. On the 21ft of October, that fleet was deftroyed, and Nelfon fell. His country will long mourn his lofs.

Lord Nelfon was born on the 26 h of September, 1758. The melancholy fenfations which his death has occafioned, have checked thofe demonftrations of joy which the great importance of his laft victory would otherwife have produced.—When Wolfe fell, the inhabitants of his native village refrained from illuminating for the capture of Quebec, left it fhould offend the grief of his mother. A fimilar feeling feemed laft night to pervade this great metropolis, where every one grieves for Nelfon.

DOVER, November 22.

The fcene of action is faft approaching.—The Diligence floop of war goes out of the harbour this afternoon. In confequence of the great length of time which has neceffarily elapfed in making the different preparations, the original mode of attack is intended to be altered. A CATAMARAN, "coup de main," was at firft propofed. From its being generally imagined that the enemy, ere this muft be apprifed of our movements and operations, the attempt, it is now tho't will be boldly made in the face of day. Several fire-fhips, filled with cumbuftibles of all kinds, are to be fent in amidft the flotilla. Thefe veffels are loaded fo with ftrata of powder and fhot, being heavily charged with alternate layers of each, the explofion it is fuppofed will be dreadfully tremendous. Even adamant itfelf would be unable to refift the concuffion. It is intended that the immenfe chain across the bar fhould be broken by the explofion of one of thefe dreadful machines, when a paffage will be forced into the harbor, and the whole of the gun boats blown to atoms. A Pyrotechnic invention of rockets and arrows is likewife to be made ufe of as a collaterial and auxilary inftrument of deftruction, in the event of a partial failure. Thefe engines are fo conftructed as to ftick in the hull & catch in the rigging of the veffel they may be directed againft, for the purpofe of communicating their flames. It is computed that upwards of a thoufand of them can be thrown the diftance of a mile and a half, in a pointblank direction, within the fhort fpace of a fingle minute. Nothing can withftand the general conflagration that muft inevitably enfue from the rapid difcharge of fuch volleys of fire-brands. Thefe are a part of the means deftined for the annihilation of the Boulogne flotilla. From the enterprifing genius, from the fpirited exertions, and the fkilful management of Sir Sidney Smith, what may not be expected ! That the country may have to glory in the complete fuccefs of the undertaking, muft be the fincere wifh and the ardent prayer of every admirer of Britifh valor, and of Britifh patriotifm ! ! !

Murder.—On the 17th ult. Ruffell Freeman, Efquire, and Captain Jofeph Starkweather, were murdered in the goal of Haverhill, N. H. by Jofiah Burnham, who deliberately ftabbed and cut them to pieces one after the other, with a large two-edged knife, while fe veral perfons outfide of the room were fpectators of the horrid fcene, through the hole in the door, the gaoler being abfent with his keys.—The murderer attempted to kill himfelf, but was taken before he fucceeded. He fays his God and Chrift will juftify his conduct.

The fortunate dinner.—A poor unbeneficed Clergyman, being in want of a dinner, bethought himfelf of paying a vifit to Lambeth Palace, where it was in the days of the beer drinking Britons a cuftom from time immemorial to keep an open table for cafual viftants. After he had dined, being rather diffatisfied becaufe the fervant who fupplied him with victuals had entirely forgotten his drink, he defired the favor of pen, ink, and paper, when he wrote the following lines for his Grace's perufal :

Pocis in difco
Mihi datur,
Ab Archiepifco-
Po fed non potatur,
Quia non mihi liquore datur.

The Prelate, after reading the paper, fent for the writer, and fatisfied a tranfitation, which was immediately given :

They fent me fifh

Becaufe there was no beer.

With this conceit his Grace was fo well pleafed, that he beftowed a good living upon its author.

Singular Occurrence.—A few weeks ago, as a Gentleman was fitting on the rocks at the end of Cullorcoat Sands, near Teignmouth, dreffing himfelf after bathing, he perceived a hawk in the air in clofe purfuit, and nearly within reach of a lark. To fave the little fugitive, he fhouted and clapped his hands, when the lark immediately defcended and alighted on his knee, nor did it offer to leave him when taken into the hand, but feemed confident of the protection which it found.

If names were any thing, we fhould recommend to the Emperor of Ruffia to put his troops under the command of Count Strongonoff.

An Irifh Dentift being lately in a room with a gentleman who had loft feveral of his front teeth, obferved to him —" I think, Sir, you ftand in need of my affiftance, for I fee you want a few chairs in your dining room."

AN ANECDOTE.

An Englifh lady of fafhion, equally beautiful and fuperftitious, had the weakneſs, when in Italy, to conſult one of thofe wandering Soothſayers who are to be found throughout Europe, and whom the French call Bohemians, and we, Gypſies. The old prophetefs told her—' You will have a black man fall in love with you ; he will prefent you with a ring, and you will ſoon after die.'—This prediction produced on the lady an impreſſion which neither the ridicule nor the rational advice of her friends, could remove. On her arrival at Naples, ſhe received a viſit from the prince de Collbbrano, one of the moſt amiable men in the city, but of an extremely ſwarthy complexion. She was not a little alarmed, yet ſhe received favorably his declarations of love, and in a ſhort time they ſeemed to be inſeparable.—But one day the prince abruptly putting on her finger an elegant and valuable ring, which he had purchaſed of a French jeweller, to preſent her with, as a proof of his eſteem and affection. the ſuperſtitious lady violently exclaimed —' I am a dead woman !' and, from the agitation of her mind, occaſioned by her fears, was almoſt immediately taken extremely ill, and in a few days expired.

Anecdote of the late King of Pruſſia.

It has often been juſtly obſerved, that great events ſometimes ſpring from trifling cauſes. This is exemplified in a circumſtance that occurred at the commencement of the late war. The King of Pruſſia, the Duke of Brunſwick, and General Clairfayt, had concerted an attack on the French. It was made at the appointed time, but the French were prepared, and the allies retreated without ſucceſs. The three Chiefs again met, and the King of Pruſſia opened the converſation by obſerving—" Well, this attack has failed, and it now only remains to conſult what farther is to be done." General Clairfayt anſwered, with ſome aſperity, " Conſultation will be of—leſs ; for there are only three of us here, and one of us is a traitor ; it was utterly impoſſible that the French could have known of the attack itſelf, the point where it was made, and have prepared themſelves as they did, unleſs our ſecret had been betrayed ; and I therefore repeat that one of us is a traitor." The King immediately replied —Upon my word, General, this is extraordinary language : I am a Sovereign, and accountable to nobody for my actions ; but, however, to ſhew that your charge does not apply to me, I here declare, upon my honor, that I never mentioned the circumſtance to a ſingle creature alive—except to the Counteſs de Lufignan."—This lady was his Majeſty's miſtreſs, and no doubt knew the value of the ſecret too well not to tell it for a handſome bribe. She was baniſhed from the capital after the King's death.

To remove Iron moulds and Ink Spots from Linen.—After the linen has been waſhed, lay a quantity of cream of tartar on the ſtained ſpot, and twiſt or tie that part of the linen to keep the application in its place, and then put it into the copper to be boiled. No further trouble is required, as the ſtain completely vaniſhes in the boiling.

Caution to families.—To prevent bowel complaints now ſo prevalent, an eminent phyſician recommends a few pepper-corns to be put into the water in which vegetables are boiled.

MISCELLANEOUS PARAGRAPHS.

FROM THE POST FOLIO.

THE following is a modeſt remark of a London traveller :

We are ſometimes urged by enthuſiaſm, to fall down and worſhip the golden image of commerce, but reflection bids us pauſe, and conſider whether this mighty engine may not be overworked. Commerce is a great inſtrument, in the hand of reaſon, to conneft and intermarry the wide ſpread families of mankind ; but let us not truſt to reaſon alone. Let us not wholly ſubmit our feelings to our paſſes and counters, and ledgers. Let us never forget that, though the bulkneſs of the head is calculation, the fulneſs of the heart is enjoyment. We may be very rich in products, and manufactures, and population, and very poor in the ſpirits and minds of men.

London is, of all places, the moſt convenient and reſpect, for a man of ſmall fortune. There, every ſort of neceſſary is to be had in the ſmalleſt quantities ; and, provided a man has a clean ſhirt, and three pence in his pocket, may talk as loud in the coffee-houſe as the ſquire of 10,000 a year. No one aſks how he lives, or where he dines. It is not ſo in the country.

SCRAPS FROM LONDON PAPERS.

Lord Nelſon's Coffin.—The coffin in which Lord Vifcount Nelſon's body is to be depoſited, now lies at Mr. Peddiſon's, in Brewer-ſtreet. It is made entirely of planks of fir not more than half an inch thick, which were cut out of the maſt of the French Admiral's ſhip l'Orient, that blew up in the glorious battle of Aboukir. The lid is the only part at preſent uncovered, and the workmen were obliged to piece it at the ſides and end. The outſide is covered with fine black cloth, and the inſide lined with white ſilk, ſtuffed with cotton, and trimmed round the top with a quilting of mitered ſilk. The coffin is ſix feet long, but narrow.—When the body is depoſited in this, it is to be placed in a leaden coffin, lined with thick planks of oak, which alſo lie ready at the ſame houſe. The outſide coffin is not finiſhed, it is to be covered with black velvet, and richly mounted.

LONDON. Dec. 19.

Two o'clock.—At this moment we have received a copy of the following Bulletin, circulated by the public offices :—

" A general skirmishing took place on the 29th Nov. between Brunn and Olmutz, and continued to the 2d Dec. when a general action took place near Vienna.—The Ruſſians attacked the enemy for 12 hours, and without firing a muſket, killed 27,000 with the bayonet, and took the whole of their artillery. Bonaparte was ſeverely wounded and requeſted an armiſtice, which was refuſed him. The remains of his army were at Vienna, and the Emperor of Ruſſia advancing in his rear with 140,000 men.

" There has alſo been an action between the Arch Duke Charles and Maſſena, in which the latter was defeated with the loſs of 7000 killed and 10,000 wounded."

Brilliant Victory over the French.

The Hamburgh mail due yeſterday arrived this morning, and has brought us what was to be expected, intelligence of the utmoſt importance.

We congratulate the country upon the confirmation of the account of the defeat of the French on the ſecond ; and we have the further ſatisfaction to announce, that they have experienced another, and more—much more deciſive defeat.

The allies, who have been ſucceſsful on the right wing on the 2d December, and had not been driven further than from the field of battle, in the centre, having, as we have heard, recovered the effects of a miſtake of a very good General, now again advanced upon the enemy. This was the beſt proof that, though the events of the preceding day had been againſt them, they did not feel themſelves to be deciſively defeated.

They advanced on the morning of the 3d againſt the enemy, without artillery ! Hence the battle ſoon became a conteſt of the bayonet alone !—As the allies advanced, the Emperor Alexander, the braveſt of heroes, rode thro' the ranks of Ruſſians, though expoſed to a heavy fire from the French, encouraging them in the moſt gallant and enthuſiaſtic manner, calling out conſtantly that it muſt be victory or death ! as he was determined not to quit the field vanquiſhed, and to die on the ſpot rather than yield.—This conduct raiſed the enthuſiaſm of his men to the higheſt pitch, to deſperation even ; they advanced upon the French under a heavy and a galling fire, they themſelves ſcarcely diſcharging a muſket. They ſoon brought the enemy to cloſe quarters with the bayonet ; the bayonet and ſabre were now alone uſed—and Mr. Kaye, the Meſſenger, appeared to have ſpoken with perfect truth when he ſaid he went on the morning of the 3d near the field of battle to try if he could ſee what was going forward ; that he heard ſhouting and huzzaing, but ſcarcely a muſket fired ; that it was but now and then he heard the report of any piece.

In this way, the bayonet and ſabre alone uſed, the battle laſted the morning of the 3d :—moſt deadly was the ſtruggle.—The Ruſſians might fall but not a man of them gave way. At this mode of fighting they are not only more expert than the French, but they are better fitted for it by that enthuſiaſm and devotion, when inſpired by a great leader, which makes them rather yield their lives to the laſt man than give way. The ſtruggle with the bayonet laſted in the moſt murderous manner till noon, when the French gave way, and their main body was totally routed. Victory now declared for the allies ; but ſtill the French contefted the ground. The battle continued during the remainder of the 3d ; it was renewed on the 4th ; and it was not finiſhed until the 5th, when the French were ultimately defeated in all quarters, the allies recovered all their artillery, made conſiderable captures from the enemy, and finally drove the whole of the French troops beyond the river Schwartzach, behind which they were forced to fly for protection. Bonaparte renewed, and renewed the battle in vain ; every ſtratagem, every excitement he employed to no effect ; he has, for the firſt time in Europe, met with a grand and decided defeat in a general battle.

The official accounts of theſe glorious and important events had reached Berlin and Hamburgh. Lord Harrowby at the one town, and Mr. Thornton at the other, together with many other perſons, have ſent over the news. Sir Arthur Paget's diſpatches were, it is ſuppoſed forwarded by Lord Harrowby by the hands of Mr. Donaldſon the meſſenger, who, having been ſhipwrecked, has not yet brought his diſpatches to town. But it is known that Mr. Donaldſon is arrived at Dover, and he is expected in London every minute. In the mean time we can confidently affirm the accounts we have given are correct. Even the Hamburgh papers ſtate the news, and that the allies were at Auſterlitz, far in advance of Wilchau, and conſequently maſters not only of the field of battle, but of all the country eaſt of the river Swartzach.

The firſt column of the Pruſſian troops has arrived in the environs of Nuremburg ; the other columns are following with the utmoſt rapidity. A few days more will bring them to the ſeat of war. Angereau is to command the army deſtined to protect Bonaparte's rear, and act againſt the Pruſſians. He is now at Ulm, and his force, it is ſaid, is to be increaſed to 60,000 men. But long before his reinforcements arrived the Pruſſians will be able to ſtrike a deciſive blow. The account of the Archduke Charles having reached Hungary, is confirmed. Malleus is at Layback.

LONDON, Nov. 27.

Diſpatches from Lord Collingwood.

The long expected diſpatches from Lord Collingwood are at length arrived, and it is with the greateſt pleaſure we announce to our readers, that, contrary to the general expectation, his Lordſhip has not been under the neceſſity of deſtroying the whole of the prizes, four have been ſaved, three Spaniſh and one French, and carried into Gibraltar—fifteen have been deſtroyed, after the crews had been taken out and brought on board our ſhips. To complete our ſatisfaction, not one of our ſhips has been loſt, nor as any accident happened to any of the fleet ſince the glorious victory.

The diſpatches were brought to the Admiralty laſt night by the hon. capt. Blackwood, of the Euryalus, on board of which are the French Admiral Villeneuve, and his firſt captain.

Immediately after the arrival of the diſpatches, the Admiralty, with that feeling which has always induced them to loſe no time in communicating intelligence of importance to the public, ſent the following bulletin to the Lord Mayor, who immediately ſent a copy of it to Lloyd's :

" Admiralty-Office, Nov. 26, 1805.

" The hon. capt. Blackwood, of his Majeſty's ſhip Euryalus, arrived this evening with diſpatches from Vice-Admiral Collingwood, dated off Cadiz, the 6th inſt. by which it appears that no accident has happened to any of his Majesty's ships in the pale of wind that followed the action of the 21st ult.

"Of the prizes three Spanish and one French have been saved and carried to Gibraltar, and the total number lost to the enemy is, ten Spanish and nine French ships of the line. His Majesty's ship Victory, with the remains of the late Lord Nelson on board, and the Belleisle, left the fleet on the 5th inst. on their way to England.

"Admiral Villeneuve and his staff captain are on board the Euryalus."

In this Bulletin, we apprehend there is one mistake; it states a total loss to the enemy of 19 sail of the line;—but does this statement include the subsequent loss to the enemy of the Rayo of 100 guns, after the action of the 21st? We suppose not. Indeed the following account, which may be considered as official, would not otherwise be correct:

State of the Combined Fleets after the action of October 21.

Captured and carried to Gibraltar	4
Destroyed in and about the scene of action, including those sunk, burnt, and blown up	16
Taken by Sir Richard Strachan	4
	24
Escaped into Cadiz.
In a perfect state	3
More wrecks	6—9
Total	33

"We shall take or destroy twenty of them, I trust." were the words of our lamented hero just before the battle. His wishes were accomplished, and twenty of them had been taken or destroyed. The four, captured afterwards by Sir R. Strachan, and the four that fled and carried into Gibraltar, give us eight more ships of the line and the 16 destroyed, with the eight saved and added to the navy of this country, have deprived the enemy of 24 sail of the line. Of the nine that have escaped, six will be a long while unfit for service.

The dispatches from Lord Collingwood have brought a complete return of the killed and wounded; the number, we rejoice to hear, is much smaller than could have been expected in a battle so bravely and closely fought.

Their names together with the total return from each ship, have been ordered by the Admiralty, with a commendable regard for the feelings of the relatives and friends of those engaged in the action, to be published in an extraordinary Gazette this afternoon. The following is the general statement:

Number of Killed and wounded in the Action off Trafalgar.

KILLED.
Officers	21
Petty-Officers	75
Seamen	238
Marines	104
	378
WOUNDED.
Officers	41
Petty-Officers	57
Seamen	870
Marines	196
	1167
Grand Total	1442

After the action Lord Collingwood sent to the Spanish Governor at Cadiz, stating that the wounded prisoners should be taken the greatest care of, but that the accomodations on board crowded ships not being equal to his wishes, he would send them all on shore upon their numbers being acknowledged. To this offer the Marquis de Solano, the Governor, sent an answer to Lord Collingwood, offering the Spanish hospitals for the British sailors wounded, and pledging, in the most solemn manner, the honor of Spain, that they should be treated with the utmost humanity and attention.—What a contrast does this noble trait of humanity afford to the cold blooded savageness of Bonaparte, who, when required to send to England our wounded and disabled prisoners in return for the wounded and disabled French whom we have already sent back to France, tells us that he has no resource for humanity.

The names of all the enemy's ships taken and destroyed, will appear in the Gazette of this evening, which will not be published till seven o'clock.—It is very long.

From the London Gazette, Nov. 30.

ADMIRALTY OFFICE, Nov. 30.

Copy of a letter from the hon. Capt. Blackwood, of his Majesty's ship the Euryalus, to Wm. Marsden Esq. dated this day at the Admiralty.

SIR—Observing in the Gazette Extraordinary of the 29th inst. that the number of the enemy's ships taken and destroyed, in consequence of the action of the 21st of October, is stated at 20 sail of the line; I take the liberty of mentioning to you for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that as this must be intended to include the French ship Argonaute, of 74 guns, which ship I had an opportunity of knowing was safe in the port of Cadiz—It will be proper to state the actual number taken and destroyed at 19 sail of the line. This apparent inaccuracy was occasioned by the Dispatch of the Commander in Chief, dated the 4th, having made up before my last return with a flag of truce from that port.

I am, &c. H. BLACKWOOD.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 10.

The captain of the Foretop's wife of the Achille, which blew up after the Trafalgar action, got out of the gun room port, while she was on fire, upon the rudder chains, where the fat fell some boiling lead falling from the deck upon her, obliged her to pull her cloaths off, and swim to a boat belonging to the Pickle schooner, which was going to her relief. She providentially reached the boat, and our brave tars were not at all displeased with the Mermaid, as they called her. She was afterwards put on board the Revenge, capt. Moorsom, with 50 Frenchmen, who were also saved from the wreck, and sent to Algeziras, on the arrival of the Revenge at Gibraltar.

PLYMOUTH, Dec. 12.

Yesterday and this forenoon, 950 French prisoners were landed at Mill Bay (and conducted to the new American prison, higher barracks) from the Royal Sovereign 110; Bellisle 84; Leviathan, 74, from off Trafalgar. So great is the animosity between the French and Spaniards, that if either of these cordial allies were to catch any stray prisoners of the other nation in their own prison barrack yard, great risk would be run of an assassination taking place.

NEW-YORK, February 22.

NEWS.

[Anticipated—from our correspondent.]

Extracted from a Postscript to the Kingston Royal Gazette of the 25th ult.

Under the regulations adopted for the two Cork fleets, each vessel had her number painted in large white figures under her main-chains; they were directed to proceed in three columns, agreeably to the numbers they bore, at the distance of two cables length from each other, and the space of a mile and a half to be preserved between the respective columns.

In consequence of the intelligence brought by the Sea-Horse, the Veteran and Malabar men of war have been anchored at the entrance of Port-Royal harbour, and the following circular letter was yesterday issued by his honor the lieutenant-Governor to the custodes of the different parishes:

[CIRCULAR.]

King's House, Jan. 24.

SIR—The Lieutenant-Governor having received intelligence by his Majesty's ship Sea Horse, Captain Corbet, that 18 sail of French line of battle ships had been seen on the 16th of December, in lat. 46, long. 13, steering a course supposed for the West Indies, his Honor thinks it necessary, as a measure of precaution, to acquaint you therewith, for the information of the parish of which you are chief Magistrate. The commander in chief directs me to add that he has caused circular letters to be written to the colonels and commanding officers of the militia regiments and troops of horse, throughout the island, to have a general muster of their respective corps immediately, and to report for his excellency's satisfaction the state of their several commands, as it may be necessary to call them into action, suddenly, at no distant period.

I have the th be, Sir, Your most obedient and humble servant.

S. TYRRELL, Sec'ry.

Custos, or Chief Magistrate of ——.

Captain Peile of the Revolution, of Liverpool, which vessel arrived on Wednesday at Port-Morant, has favoured us with the following extract from his log-book, from which we have every reason to hope, that a British squadron of equal force is closely treading on the heels of the enemy:

"On the 30th December, in lat. 35 30, long. 11, at day-light, perceived a French fleet, in two divisions, one in the S. E. quarter, and the other in the W. about eight A. M. the Commodore (the Aretusa) made a signal for the fleet to heave to, which was immediately obeyed. At half past eight the Commodore stood into the fleet with the signal to disperse, and for an enemy to fight. He then stood to the N. N. W. with about ten sail accompanied by the Bonducca frigate and the Wasp sloop. At ten the whole of the enemy's squadron, consisting of 14 line of battle ships, a frigate, a sloop of war, and a brig pursued the Commodore. At eleven stood to the S. E. crossing the haule of the enemy's leading ships almost within gun shot to the leeward, when, the Admiral making a signal, two of the enemy's two deckers stood after us, and chased us; at three P. M. only the three most ships of their fleet being in sight to the N. W. the two ships then tacked, and joined their fleet; we steered a S. S. E. course till dark, and due W. all night. At day light on the 17th, saw 14 or 15 sail of very large ships astern, some lying to and others steering different ways, apparently as if they had lost sight of their pursuit, which we conceived to be the English fleet."

The Ellen is 35 days from Anagola, and 8 from Dominica. She has 269 slaves on board, and was bound to New-Providence, but has put in there in distress. At Dominica she learnt, that in consequence of information of 14 sail of the line having escaped from Brest, martial law had been proclaimed, but on the day of the Ellen's departure it was taken off, two frigates having arrived (a Prince Rupert's, with an account of the arrival of Sir John T. Duckworth at Barbadoes with five sail of the line and several frigates.

Vice-Admiral Lord Collingwood on the 28th ult. was off Carthagena, blockading the Spanish squadron in that port with the following ships, viz.

Britannia, 100 guns, Rear-Admiral W. Earl of Northesk, Capt. C. Bullen; Queen 98, Vice Admiral lord Collingwood, Capt. F. Pender; Dreadnought 98, capt. J. Conn; Prince 98. R. Grindall; Minotaur 74. C. J. M. Mansfield, Thunderer 74, lieutenant J. Stockham, (2d.) another 74, name unknown; 2 frigates, and 2 sloops of war.

It is supposed that the ships that were off Cadiz would proceed to join Lord Collingwood off Carthagena.

In consequence of information received from Capt. Langford, of the Lake sloop of War, of the capture by the Rochefort squadron of the vessels for Africa under his convoy, Sir J. T. Duckworth had sailed in quest of them with the following ships of the line, viz.

Canopus 80 guns, Rear-Admiral T. Louis, captain F. W. Austen; Donnegal 80, P. Malcolm; Tigre 80, B. Hallowell; Powerful 74, R. Plampin; Spencer 74, honorable R. Stopford; Agamemnon 64, Sir E. Berry, Knt. and another 74 supposed to be the Ajax, lieut. J. Pilford, (acting.)

This is the same squadron that called at Madeira for information prior to the sailing of the Defiance, which arrived here last week.

The Zealous 74, Capt. John Oaks Hardy, was at Gibraltar, on the 9th ult: Capt. Hardy, we are happy to state, was in good health on the 9th, though stated in the London papers to have been dead.

The Fithgard frigate, of 38 guns, captain Bolton, arrived the same day, with the vessels from Cork under her convoy. Lieut, Gen. Sir Eyre Coote, K. B. his lady and two daughters; brigadier general Drummond, lieutenant-Colonel Welsh, and Captains Foster, Wiley and Windham, came passengers in her. Sir Eyre Coote, immediately after his arrival, landed at Port-Henderson, and proceeded to Spanish-Town. The usual salute was fired.

From Copenhagen, (Denmark) Dec. 7.

The Royal family, the capital and the whole kingdom, are plunged into the most profound grief. It has pleased Providence to take from us this day his Royal Highness, the hereditary prince.—This melancholy event was announced by the tolling of all the bells in this city.—All the public spectacles and amusements in this city are for the present suspended.

Extract of a letter from an American gentleman in Cadiz, to his friend in Philadelphia.

"The French and Spaniards, wounded in the battle off Trafalgar, amounting to 5000, have been exchanged.—Their total loss in killed and wounded, is not short of 15,000.

"There were few ships that had less than 300 killed and wounded.—The Trinidada had 500.

"Out of ten ships saved there are not three worth repairing."

THE BRITISH NAVY.—The total number of ships of war now in commission amount to 733. Of these 129 are of the line; 19 are from 50 to 44 guns; frigates 150; sloops and lesser vessels 437. There are in port and sitting 134; in the English and Irish Channels 135; in the Downs and North Sea 164; in the West-Indies 45; Jamaica station 33; at Gibraltar and on the Cadiz and Mediterranean station, 42 sail of the line, and a great number of frigates. There are 18 sail of the line preparing for service, 31 building, 22 in ordinary, and 6 employed as receiving ships.

Rochefort Squadron Captured.—A letter from a gentleman at St. Croix, dated Jan. 10, 1806, to a gentleman in this city, says—I have just this moment learnt, that the Rochefort squadron, with the Cork fleet in their possession, have been fallen in with by Admiral Sterling, and the whole of them captured. 15 of the Cork fleet have already arrived at Barbadoes.

We give the above as we received it— [Eve. Post.]

New Doctrine on Sculls.

An article from Berlin says, the famous Dr. Gall devotes a great part of his time to lecturing on sculls. He has departed from Hall, and has left behind him the most profound diminution of his doctrine. Six sculls were sent from Jena to the Judge, Loder, with the biography of the persons to whom they belonged. These authentic documents were sealed up, and these mysterious packets were not to be opened until the oracle had pronounced, that is to say, until after the decision of Dr. Gall. Without doubt no communication could be sent to him by post, or otherwise.—Be it as it may, the Dr. gravely examined the six sculls, and has found the organ of thievery more or less developed in each of them; he said that one of the six belonged to the most stupid of mortals, the dullness of whom was fully evinced by the formation of the scull. In short, this was the most stupid scull which he had ever examined. The documents were then opened with all requisite solemnity, and it appeared from them, that he had just pronounced judgment on the head of Schinderhannes, and those of five of the companions of that robber; and that the stupid scull belonged to one of the five latter.—But one of the greatest triumphs of Dr. Gall is, the conviction of Professor Schutz, the most obstinate of the incredulous, who had disbelieved the doctrine of craniology. The Professor thought to lay a snare for the Dr. in presenting him with the scull of a person, of whom the friends of the Professor knew perfectly well the life and character. M. Gall decided, that it belonged to a person who had some inclination to thievery, an excess of giddiness, and a particular faculty of imitating and mimicking all kinds of fantastical characters, and also of acting from nature. The astonishment of the Professor was beyond conception; he was struck with veneration for the Dr. and his system of craniology. The scull was that of a pupil of M. Schutz, a most hair-brained young girl, who was foolish enough to go on the stage, and used to play constantly at Jena, and who being often suspected had at length drowned herself, to avoid the consequences of a charge of pilfering. The auditors of M. Gall, to the number of 436 persons, were composed of physicians, surgeons, their pupils, and some military men. The Judge Riel, and the Judge Loder, have not as yet published their opinions, and intend to collect a great number of observations before they pronounce for or against so extraordinary a system.

PRIVATE LIFE.

FROM HOOKE.

SMILE not, angels! when to learn ye flock,
The serious follies of your mimic man;
Has bustled reason, dupe to every luft?
His high ambition, spurring in the dark;
A fool, with knowledge and with foresight, blind,
Perplex'd between his misery and his mind;
Where great and mean, where mortal and divine,
Heaven, earth, brute, angels, in confusion join—
Like strong atoms, in one chaos hurl'd,
Which, well arrang'd, would form a beautiful world.
Ye fools! to flee the puny pothead rave;
Great Lord of earth, his meanest pallion's slave!
Drunk on the banquet, glorious on the throne,
And now an Antonin's, now a Philip's son!
Nor ye, the great, like roving mortals, trace
Ambition's madness, or the fruits of fame;
Nor shake court-pageants, flatt'ry and title things,
The gilded trash of quinsbeers and kings:
Nor thistle, the wolves and harpies of their race,
Who rife by wicked arts to pow'r and place.
But mark, where poor, unmerit'd, and unknown,
Neglected virtue smiles at fortune's frown!
Or, bleft by fortune in a private flate,
By worth ennobled, and by goodness great!
Is right to whole gen'rous breast those splendors give,
Of facts honor, kings could ne'er believe!
The friend of man! who can in life confess
No joy worth living, but the joy to bless.

MONODY

ON THE DEATH OF LORD NELSON.

Far from the joys which conquests ever beat,
Amidst an Triumph turn sides and weep!
Let Victory's eye pour forth the tend'rest tear
To mourn the Chief who rul'd the boundless deep.

Though Britain still will view the azure main,
And fwelling Ocean's utmost Bound her own,
Though Heroes live that will extend her reign,
Yet ah! will the her Nelson's loss bemoan.

Affrighted France his wand'rous pow'r oft knew,
And distant Egypt dwells his well-earn'd fame;
Long shall Britannia's sons his ardor rue,
And nations tremble at an Nelson's name.

Soon as the Hero views, in ...ant views,
Both France and Spain combin'd to crush our powers,
Quick through the feat their navy he purfues,
And Britain's vengeance o'er her foes he shows.

Hourse from the cannon's awful mouths now roar,
His deathful thunders through the distant main,
The din of battle sound along the shore,
And Death and hoast hold their gloomy reign.

But ah! the Chief, with conquest's laurel crown'd
Fell glorious, fell with bold undaunted mein!
Weep, Britons, weep, let grief awhile abound,
Nor joy alone on Triumph's seas be seen.

VICTORY.

Though foes against our peace engage,
And war rides on with deadly brows,
In vain they plot, in vain they rage,
For GOD defends the British Crown.
The eye that all their wiles withstood
Shall still this royal throne advance,
And guide to high shores the flood
Which strong rebellion blows from France.
Denouncing fate, not fiercely grim,
The dragon chief of Gallia flows!
Proud terrors o'er his pinnage gleam,
And tempeft sweep the troubled wave.
Red fiery clouds uncover his path
In defolation's fatal reign;
Yet here his interdicted wrath,
And impious menace roll in vain.
Yes—though the fate tempeft thunder round;
The British rock's superior brow
Repels the rage and fcorns the found.
Though France invoke her naval towers
With many an antique deem'd divine,
Though papal pomp, and pagan powers
In blended profanation join:
The High Immutable alone
Attach his own supremacy,
And over each apoftate throne,
He fends decisive Victory.
Lo, Neffon feeks th' embattled line!
Britons! his High Conductor fee!
The God of armies gives the sign,
And, lo! was universal victory.
But, ah!—a solemn shade succeeds,
While Glory's cradiant Seraph sighs!
The great, the godlike Hero bleeds,
And for his King and Country dies.
'Tis for the King he conquers thine,
For Royal Britain ever free,
For every grace of social life,
The blest dies in victory.
But ever in thy country's fod
Live, live O Conqueror! the fee
To everlasting years enroll
The great, th' immortal victory!

THE DEXTEROUS WAITER.

The doctor was just on the very last stair,
Tow'rds the room of his host, whom of dumbness a pair,
Ellop'd by the opposite door:
Whilst the youth had just time to lay hold of a book,
And sit it (assuming a foolish a look;)
He began most morosely to pore.
Where the doctor he held him, cri'd he, overjoy'd,
"To see you, dear Richard, so widely employ'd,
Your Auditor our father much pleases:
But what were you reading—your Blackstone?"
—"Why, no, Sir—
I was only beguiling an hour, or so, for,"
"But, what what?"—Why, some fugitive pieces."

CONSTANCY.

I gave my fair a blushing Rose,
And told her, beauty, like the flower,
Tho fraudulent empire owns,
Dependent on Youth's smiling hour:
I told her that delays were wrong,
"O name the happy morn," I cried,
She own'd the moral of my song,
And limit'd, ne'xt morn—my rival's bride.

FROM THE PROVIDENCE GAZETTE.

BRITANNIA'S CONSOLATION

FOR THE LOSS OF HER

IMMORTAL NELSON.

O ALBION! thy cliffs heard Britannia lament,
As forgot'n on the billows below;
Her bosom foreboded some dreadful event;
She trembled the tidings to know.

Where the blue heading firmament greets the blue stream
Arose a form lovely and fair;
On his forehead a star newly wash'd, threw a beam
No eye but Britannia's could bear.

He hasten'd (his village was tinsther'd by grief)
At thy feet, O Britannia! he threw
A LAUREL;—for blood was its blossom and leaf,
It shaded the Urn where it grew.

"Twas VICT'RY—and known to Britannia full well,
She-fix'd it on a prelent so fair;
Discov'ring the lofing—her countenance fell,
The name of her NELSON was there.

Ah me! the exclaim'd, tho' the fragrance is sweet,
How soon does the bloom disappear!
The NAME of the URN have I reason to meet!
This LAUREL was parchas'd too dear!

Forbear, O Britannia! cry'd VICT'RY—be still,
Nor suffer such terrors to daunt;
For, believe me, fair goddess, from no other dust
Could spring forth in lovely a plant.

But this (O cease my dear Mistress, to weep,
And chase from thy forehead its gloom)
Shall preserve, and to latest posterity keep,
Valmpair'd, all its fragrance and bloom.

Then dry'd all the gas'd—from her eyes fell a shower,
And fell on the plant drops the dew;
It caught the dear treasure, expanded its flower
Still broader and broader to view.

Now no shade of sorrow her countenance mars,
For scarcely her eyes can the turn;
While for gas'd, the Name broke into bright blazing stars.
And spangled with Glory the URN!

A Burlesque imitation of Enchanted Pastoral.

'TWAS morning, and Mary arose,
Her flockings and garters put on;
Instinctively follow'd her nose,
And walk'd with her back to the sun.
She smil'd, and the woods were illum'd;
She sigh'd, and the valies were depress'd;
She breath'd, and the air was perfum'd;
She frown'd, and law nature distress'd.
She nodded, the trees nodded too;
She murmur'd and so did the rill;
She wept, and the evening dew
Fell in tears on the neighboring hill.
She slept, and fair flowers sprung up;
She bluth'd, and the rose took'd more red;
She was hungry, the want home and sup't;
She was tir'd and so—went to bed.

A COMPLIMENT.

AS a Welt-country mayor, with formal address—
Was making his speech to the haughty Queen Bess;
"The Spaniards," quoth he, "with reverence speen,
"Has presum'd to attack you, a poor virgin Queen:
"But your Majesty's courage has made it appear,
"That the Don has ta'en the wrong,'nd by the ear."

LONDON, Nov. 24.

City Address.—On Tuesday the corporation of London presented their address of congratulation, on the late victory obtained over the combined fleets of France and Spain, to his Majesty, at St. James's, which was read as follows:

"To the King's most excellent Majesty.

"The humble, loyal, and dutiful address of the lord mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London, in common council assembled.

"Most gracious Sovereign,

"We, the lord mayor, aldermen, and commons, of the city of London, in common council assembled, impressed with the most solemn sense of gratitude to the Almighty Dispofer of events, for his late transcendent goodness to this highly favored nation, approach the throne to offer our warmest congratulations to your majesty, on the recent most glorious and decisive victory obtained over the combined naval force of France and Spain, off Cape Trafalgar, by your Majesty's fleet under the command of the illustrious and ever to be lamented hero, lord viscount Nelson, a victory which, while it adds to the British archives, in immortal characters, the proudest conflict that ever graced them, mournfully records the fall of the chief, who had in that moment attained the summit of splendid achievements. Far be it, however, from the minds of your majesty's graceful subjects to repine at the levete blow which Providence has inflicted, or while they deplore the loss of distinguished worth, offend the spirit and character of the British name, by forgetting the many obligations they owe to the forviving brave men, whose valor and public spirit will lead them successfully, to emulate such heroic deeds, inspired by their loyalty to their beloved king, and their attachment to their native country."

Signed by order of the Court.

HENRY WOODTHORPE.

To which his Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious answer:

I receive, with peculiar satisfaction, the congratulations of my loyal city of London, on the late glorious and decisive victory, obtained under the blessing of God, by my fleet, commanded by the late lord viscount Nelson, over the combined force of France and Spain. The skill and intrepidity of my officers and seamen were never more conspicuous than on this important occasion. The loss of the distinguished commander, under whom this great victory has been atchieved, I most sincerely and deeply lament. His transcendant and heroic services will, I am persuaded, exist for ever in the recollection of my people; and whilst they tend to stimulate those who come after him to similar exertions, they will prove a lasting source of strength, security and glory to my dominions.

December, 5.

Great discontent prevails at Paris.—The distrust of paper money, in consequence of the failure of so many bankers, one of whom, Recamier's house, is for no less a sum than four millions sterling, and the consequent distrust are universal.—Fouche, the Minister of Police, found the discontent to be so rapidly increasing amongst the crouds that flocked about the doors of the bank for payment of bank notes, that he feared some disturbance, and issued a proclamation, in which he prohibits those assemblages; in other words, forbids the people under pain of incurring vengeance of the police, to go and demand payment for the bank notes in their possession.—But a partial payment is to be made to peaceable citizens.—But in what manner? Individuals are to go before the mayors of the respective districts, and to make known their wants; they are then to receive, if the mayor and Fouche, choose, a ticket, which they may carry to the bank, authorising the bank, upon that ticket being prefented to it, to give cash for the notes the ticket holder has in his poffeffion. We have inferted this curious proclamation. Thofe who refufe to difclofe their neceffities, and to give an account of the manner in which they came by the notes in their poffeffion, or of the manner in which they mean to employ the money which they foliclt to be permitted to receive for them, will of courfe be fufpected, and no tickets will be granted them. Of this we may be fure, that none but bank notes for fmall fums will be allowed to be paid in cafh;—the large ones will be refufed, as belonging to avaricious men and ftock jobbers. Amongft this univerfal diftrefs and depreciation of paper money in France, it is curious to read the differtations in the accounts from the French army of the great difcount upon the bills of the bank of Vienna, circulated in Swabia and Bavaria. We know that this difcount has been enormoufly exaggerated; but what is the conduct of the French in Germany? The Auftrians pay for provifions and other neceffaries in bills which may be at a difcount but the French pay nothing at all for what they take.

In fuch a ftate of affairs, the people of Paris feem to conſolidate the ſucceſſes of Bonaparte; and though the bulletins are cut up in every part of Paris, they are read with ſilent indifference. Fouche's ſpies ſwarm in every public place, coffee-houſe, and ſtreet, to furniſh a regiſter of any offenſive ſpeeches, of any ſarcaſtic looks, or even of any ſignificant ſhrugs. The priſons were never known to be ſo full.

The following is an Extract of a Letter from Vice-Admiral Lord Collingwood, to a near relation in Newcaſtle, received on Thurſday laſt, dated on board the Queen, Nov. 2.—"To alleviate the miſeries of the wounded as much as in my power, I ſent a flag to the Marquis Solano (Governor of Cadiz) to offer him his wounded. Nothing can exceed the gratitude expreſſed by him for this act of humanity. All this part of Spain is in an uproar of praiſe and thankſgiving to the Engliſh. Solano ſent me a preſent of wine; and we have free intercourſe with the ſhore. Judge of the footing we are on, when I tell you he offered me his hoſpitals, and pledged the Spaniſh honor for the care and cure of our wounded men. Our Officers and men who were wrecked in ſome of the priſe ſhips were received like divinities, all the country on the beach to receive them; the Prieſts and women diſtributing wine & bread and fruit amongſt them. The ſoldiers turned out of their barracks to make room for them; whilſt their allies the French were left to ſhift for themſelves, with a guard over them to prevent their doing miſchief. Don Auguſtus, who was formerly Capt. of the St. Iſidro (taken the 14th Feb. 1797), commanded the Monarca, one of our captures. He ſent to inform me he was in the Leviathan, and I immediately ordered, for our old acquaintance ſake, his liberty on parole. All the Spaniards ſpeak of us in terms of adoration."

A letter from Paris, dated the 14th of November received yeſterday, ſays —"I ſay nothing to you of Politics a ſubject we muſt avoid, if we with our letters to go ſafe. As to money matters they are in a ſituation I never expected to be a witneſs to in Europe; an idea has gone abroad, improperly, I hope, that the funds of the bank has been diverted to other purpoſes. A run has taken place, which the Police has put a ſtop to, and the notes in circulation will be exchanged in the different Sections, according to the wants of individuals; but the immediate effects are bankruptcies, a rapid depreciation, and the total abſence of gold and ſilver, except as articles of commerce in exchange for paper."

It is underſtood, that, whenever Pruſſia declares againſt France, the army commanded by the Duke of Brunſwick will advance towards the Rhine.

LONDON, Dec. 14.

In a ſecond addition of our paper of yeſterday, we ſtated that diſpatches had been received by government from Embden, dated the firſt inſtant, announcing that his Pruſſian Majeſty had given orders for the Britiſh troops to be received into that city, and to be furniſhed with every accommodation. This intelligence is of conſiderable importance in two points of view—firſt, the voyage to Embden can be accompliſhed in a ſhorter time than to the Elbe or the Weſer. Secondly, it ſhews the concurrence of Pruſſia to the deſigns and objects for which the Britiſh troops were ſent to the Continent—deſigns and objects, which, we may be ſure, are not confined to the mere preſervation of Hanover from falling again into the hands of the French. The return of Count Haugwitz from Vienna, will, we ſhould ſuppoſe, be the ſignal for this mark of Britiſh, Hanoverians, Ruſſians, Swedes, and Pruſſians to act.—Courier.

The Channel fleet ſailed from Torbay on Thurſday, to reſume its ſtation off Breſt.

Admiral Sir J. B. Warren is to hoiſt his flag on board the Foudroyant, and will ſail immediately with a ſquadron of five ſhips of the line, on a particular ſervice.

A variety of contradictory reports have been circulated reſpecting the funeral of Lord Nelſon—we are now enabled to ſtate, upon the beſt authority, that his Lordſhip's remains will in the firſt inſtance lie in ſtate at Greenwich, they will afterwards be conveyed in one of the Admiralty barges, to Whitehall Stairs: they will be landed and conveyed to the Admiralty, where they will lie in ſtate one day, and the next the funeral will take place in St. Paul's. The pall will of courſe be ſupported by Admirals, and either the Admiral of the fleet or the firſt Lord of the Admiralty, will attend as chief mourner. The day of the funeral is not yet fixed.

Euryalus, off Cadiz, Oct. 30.

SIR,

It is with great pleaſure that I have heard the wound you have received in the action is in a hopeful way of recovery, and that your country may ſtill have the benefit of your future ſervice.

But, Sir, you ſurrendered yourſelf to me, and it was in conſideration only of the ſtate of your wound that you were not removed into my ſhip. I could not diſturb the repoſe of a man ſuppoſed to be in the laſt moments; but your ſword, the emblem of your ſervice, was delivered to me by your Captain, and I expect that you conſider yourſelf a priſoner of war, until you ſhall be regularly exchanged by cartel.

I have the honor to be, &c.

C. COLLINGWOOD.

To Vice Admiral Don Ignacio Maria d'Alava, ſent under cover to Admiral Gravina.

The Prince of Peace, has replied to Admiral Don A. Eſcano, under date of the 7th October, in the following terms:

"I have juſt received from your Excellency three letters, one of the 22d, and two of the 23d inſt. acquainting me, for the information of his Majeſty, of the action between the Combined Squadron, and that of the enemy, commanded by Lord Nelſon, off Cadiz, in the evening and night of the 21ſt inſt. which intelligence your excellency has not omitted to give, notwithſtanding you are conſiderably inconvenienced by a wound in the left leg, on account of his excellency, Admiral Gravina, not being able to do it, from the wounds he received in the action. All the 3 letters of your Excellency breathe a ſpirit of truth, animation conſtancy, valour and loyalty to the King. His Majeſty is penetrated with the event, and is deſirous (with me) of information of the ſituation of your Excellency, and that of Admiral Gravina: expecting at the ſame time to be informed of the death, and the concluſion of this glorious but unfortunate action, in order to reward merit, dry up the tears of the afflicted families, and to aſſiſt the neceſſitous.

The diſpoſition of the King, his noble and generous heart, will not be ſatisfied till he ſees theſe cares of his paternal affection accomplihed; neither ſhall I, for my own part enjoy eaſe, while the leaſt thing remains to be done.

I acknowledge my obligations to your Excellency for your intelligence, and requeſt you to participate the ſame to Admiral Gravina.

The Madrid Gazette of the 12th November contains a letter from the Prince of Peace to Admiral Escano, ſtating that the King has been pleaſed to promote, in conſequence of their bravery and good conduct, the ſeveral officers of the fleet as follows:

Don Frederick Gravina to be Captain General in Chief of the fleet.

Alava—Grand Croſs of the Order of Charles III.

Escano—Lieutenant General.

NEW YORK, March 5.

The following is given, by a gentleman who arrived yeſterday in 18 days from St Kitts, as a ſummary of intelligence which he himſelf read (before he left St. Kitts) in a London paper of the 23d December. It differs very little from an article publiſhed in the Commercial Advertiſer of Thurſday, under the Baſſeterre head of Feb. 4th, Conc. Ed.

"General Craig from Malta, with about 6000 Britiſh troops and 30,000 Ruſſians from Corfu, landed on the Venetian territory, and turned the right wing of Maſſena's army, who was purſuing the Archduke Charles; a bloody battle enſued, the French were defeated, and Maſſena killed. Two Ruſſian armies, amounting to 160,000 men, joined the Emperor of Germany near Olmutz.—Bonaparte, whoſe army were in great want of ſupplies, was retreating in the greateſt confuſion.—The king of Pruſſia has attached a large army into Franconia.—And, a conſiderable Pruſſian force had joined the Britiſh army in the Electorate of Hanover."

From a London Paper.—Dec. 7.

DRURY-LANE.

A new grand Legendary Melo-Drama, entitled, The Sleeping Beauty, was produced at this Theatre laſt night. It is the production of Mr. Skeffington, and much as may have been hoped from the taſte and genius of that gentleman, the reality has far exceeded the moſt ſanguine expectation. The ſcene is laid in England, in the remote age of chivalry, the happieſt, perhaps, that an Author could chuſe, who wiſhed to combine all the beauties of ſpectacle, with the faſcinations of Romance. The piece commences with a moſt beautiful view of the country, and a party of Huntſmen enter.—Two Knights Errant, Aldibert and Oſwin, upon hearing from Old Ellen, who is 119 years old, that Ethelinda, and all her attendants, have been aſleep 100 years in the enchanted wood, determine, accompanied by their Squire, Launcelot, to reſcue them, by breaking the charm; in which Aldibert is aſſiſted by Melzorina, the good fairy, who deſcends with the clouds on the ſtage. This is effected in a manner the moſt novel and beautiful that can be conceived. The adventurous knights proceed through the palace, and arrive at the grand ſaloon, where they find all the enchanted company faſt aſleep, in full youth and beauty, in the exact ſtate in which they were 100 years before. In the boſom of Edward, the favourite page, they find ſome verſes, which are ſung by the ſleeping page. The folding doors that conceale the Sleeping Beauty are forced, and diſcloſe the moſt magnificent ſcene ever produced upon a Theatre. The charm is now broken, and the various characters awake, juſt as they were when they fell aſleep a century before. Several beautiful dances ſucceed. The Knights then ſwear to proteſt their fair miſtreſſes from the uſurper, whoſe power they dread. Edward, the Page, ſeeks his beloved Ellen, and finds her a poor decrepid old woman. Perceiving his diſappointment, ſhe releaſes him from his promiſe; but he nobly declares his affection unaltered; and his conſtancy is rewarded by her tranſormation into a beautiful young lady. The moral is pretty, and worthy the refined taſte of the author. The Uſurper, Ethelred, and his guards, obtain entrance into the caſtle, by a ſubterranious paſſage, when Aldibert challenged him to ſingle combat. Ethelred is killed. The hands of the Knights and the enchanted damſels are joined by the Good Fairy, and the whole concludes with a moſt magnificent ſcene of tranſparent pillars, and other ornaments. The overture was beautiful, and was loudly applauded. The ſongs poſſeſs ſweetneſs, taſte and ſcience. The accompaniments to the Melo-Drama, are grand and appropriate. The ſketch of the fable announces this a piece out of the ordinary line. There is nothing common nor hacknied about it. The foundation may reſt, indeed, upon an old ſtory; but the ſuperſtructure and the order are all new, ſtriking and eccentric. They furniſh proofs of original genius, finiſhed taſte, and fruitful fancy. Such is the piece with which Mr. Skeffington has enriched the ſtage. It is, perhaps, the moſt elegant ſcenic exhibition ever preſented to a Britiſh audience. Upon many previous occaſions, the liberality of the Managers has been carried to excels. To this freedom failed to produce grandeur and brilliancy.—The ſcenery and machinery, in the preſent inſtance, have proceeded ſtill more ſucceſsful. The moſt pleaſing taſte ſhines through every ſcene, and ſplendour every where preſents itſelf, adorned with that exquiſite delicacy, which the eye ſeeks in the works of the moſt finiſhed artiſts.

MORALITY.

Freckles my blood to hear the Weſt Supreme!
Rouſe appeal'd to on each trifling theme!
Maintain your rank; vulgarity deſpiſe.
To Tweed in other Wears, poliſh, and wife!
You would not ſwear upon the hilt of death;
Reſpect your Maker now could ſtop your breath.

THE excellent Mr. Howe, being at dinner with ſome perſons of faſhion, a gentleman expatiated largely in praiſe of king Charles I. introducing ſome harſh reflections upon others. Mr. H. obſerved that he mixed many horrid oaths with his diſcourſe, told him this, in his humble opinion, he had omitted a ſingular excellence in the character of that prince. The gentleman eagerly deſired him to mention it, and ſeemed all impatience to know what it was. "It was this, ſir," ſaid Mr. Howe; "he was never heard to ſwear an oath in common converſation." The hint was as politely received as given; and the gentleman promiſed to break off the practice.

The ſame Mr. Howe, once converſing with a nobleman in St. James's Park who ſwore profanely in his converſation, expreſſed great ſatisfaction in the thought that there is a God who governs the world, who will finally make a retribution to all according to their works; and who, my lord, added he, will make a difference between him that ſweareth and him that feareth an oath. His Lordſhip immediately anſwered, "I thank you, ſir, for your freedom, I take your meaning, and ſhall endeavour to make good uſe of it." Mr. H. replied, "I have reaſon to thank your lordſhip for ſaving me the moſt difficult part of diſcourſe, which is the application.

Another time, paſſing two perſons of quality, who were talking with great eagerneſs, and damned each other, Mr. H. ſaid to them, taking off his hat in a very reſpectful manner, "I pray God ſave you both"—for which handſome reproof they immediately returned thanks.

The truly honorable Mr. Boyle, as eminent for philoſophy as for morality, was ſo careful to avoid this profane cuſtom, that he never mentioned the name of God in his converſation without making an obſervable pauſe before it, ſo that he might both feel and diffuſe among the company the veneration due to the ſacred Majeſty of the univerſe.

The brave colonel Gardner took pains to prevent ſwearing in his regiment, at the head of which he would publicly declare his abhorrence of it, urging all his officers to avoid giving, by their example, any ſanction to a crime which it was their duty to puniſh. A number of military gentlemen once dined with him at his own houſe, when he addreſſed them reſpectfully, and begged leave to remind them, that he was a juſtice of the peace in that diſtrict he was bound by oath to put the laws againſt ſwearing into execution, and therefore entreated them to be on their guard. Only one of the gentlemen offended on that day, who immediately paid the penalty, which was given to the poor, with the univerſal approbation of the company.

A moment's calm conſideration will convince any rational perſon of the impropriety of this custom, which is unreasonable, irrational, vulgar and profane.

It is irreputable These is less temptation to this vice than to any other. Some vices are excused by calling them constitutional; but, as archbishop Tillotson observes, "no man is born with a swearing constitution." It cannot procure credit to an assertion, because it is often used to confirm a truth or doubtful saying than a plain truth. The man who swears seems to doubt his own veracity—and well may others suspect it; for how can we believe he will be true to man who is false to God? Besides, the custom of swearing to truths may insensibly lead a man to swear to falsehoods. Persons addicted to this practice scarcely know when they swear: and some, when reproved for it, have sworn that they did not swear.

It is irrational. What greater proof of stupid ignorance can be given than to use words without meaning? You call upon God (shocking to repeat) to damn your eyes—your blood—your souls. But have you considered what damnation is? It is a word of dreadful meaning. It is to be pronounced accursed of God in the day of judgement. But surely you do not mean this.

It is vulgar. That some gentlemen swear is too true—but it never can be deemed the mark of a gentleman, for it is a vice common to the vilest characters in the lowest of society. It produces the most disgraceful equality; it puts the honorable, the learned, the polished and the delicate, upon a level with the most ignorant and depraved.

It is profane, Do you believe there is a God? Have you heard that he is the high and lofty that inhabiteth eternity, before whom angels veil their faces—whose existence and terrible majesty even the devils believe, trembling? Go, profane sinner, hide thyself in the dust whence thou wast originally taken. Who art thou, impiously daring to set thy mouth against the heavens? You would not swear in the presence of an earthly king—and will you treat the King of Kings, the God of the whole earth, with less respect? You would, perhaps, refrain from swearing many hours together, if it were to except you from some temporal loss, or to procure some temporal gain; and do you treat the commands, the promises, and the threatenings of the Most High as if they were unworthy of your notice? The sovereign command of the governor of the universe is, swear not at all. He who hath said, "Thou shalt do no murder," hath also said, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain;" and the awful sanction of this command is, "for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain." That is, He will punish him with signal vengeance; He will make him feel the thunder of His power.

Hitherto thy tongue has been thy shame—but from this time let it become thy glory.

BRIEF SKETCH OF LONDON.

There are in London about 502 places for worship, one cathedral, one abbey, 114 churches, 132 chapels, 207 meetings and chapels of differsters, 38 chapels for foreigners, and 6 synagogues. About 4050 public and private schools, including inns of court, colleges, &c. and societies for morals; 10 Societies for learning and arts, 122 asylums for the indigent, 17 asylums for sick and lame, 13 dispensaries, and 7-4 friendly societies. Charity distributed 750,000l. per annum. This is a pleasing account: but the following cannot be read without feeling emotions of sorrow and pity. There are about 2500 persons committed for trial in one year—Annual depredations amounting to 2,100,000l. 18 prisons, 5204 alehouses within the bills of mortality. Amount of coins counterfeited, 200,000l. per annum. About 3000 receivers of stolen goods. About 10,000 servants at all times out of places; and 20,000 persons rise every morning without knowing how they shall subsist through the day.

ALBANY, March 13, 1806.

From Baltimore, March 6.

Naval Engagement in the West Indies,

DESTRUCTION of the FRENCH Fleet.

By the Brig American arrived yesterday from the City of St. Domingo, the following Important Intelligence has been received:

On the 21st January, a French fleet under the command of Admiral Seigle, from Brest, arrived at the City of St. Domingo, and landed 600 troops. They consisted of

L'Imperial,	134 guns,
Jupiter,	74
Diomed,	74
Comet,	36
Corvette Diligence,	22

And on the 29th arrived (in addition)

LeBrave,	84
L'Alexandre,	74
Felicite,	44

They remained at anchor till the 6th of February, when an English fleet of 11 sail hove in sight, 9 of which were of the line, reported to be under the command of Admiral Cochrane.* The British fleet immediately attacked the French, who, finding themselves so situated as rendered all attempts to escape fruitless, being completely hemmed in, made a desperate and valliant resistance—out, owing to the superior force of the British, the engagement ended with the capture of three, and the total destruction of two of the largest

* This must be a mistake, as Cochrane had no fleet under his command, according to the latest accounts—We presume it was Admiral Duckworth, who has been reported to have pulled St. Thomas with 11 sail, it was his misfortune to fall in with a French squadron of the French, who were then at Santo Domingo.

of the French ships—amongſt the latter of which was the Admiral's ſhip, which was driven aſhore and loſt.

On the 8th February another Britiſh fleet of 13 ſail appeared off Santo Domingo, and remained there two days.

The report currently circulated laſt evening, that the Britiſh fleet had burnt the City of St. Domingo, is without foundation.

Capture of the Brest Squadron.—The following letter from Capt. Pemberton, of the brig Mars, to Mr. Samuel Burling of this city, dated at the City of St. Domingo, February 9, contains an account of the deſtruction of the Breſt ſquadron at that place, by Admiral Duckworth. The letter was received this morning, via Baltimore.—Eve. Poſt.

St. Domingo, February 9.

"The following is a ſtatement of the Engagement before St. Domingo on Thurſday the 6th. At day light the Engliſh fleet hove in ſight to the S. E. As great numbers of the French ſeamen were on ſhore, wooding and watering, it was not until 7 o'clock that the French ſhips got under way. The Imperial 134 guns, Le Brave and Alexander 84 each, Le Jupiter and Diomede 74 each, two frigates 40 each, and a corvette 28 guns. At 9 o'clock the French formed their line; their frigates and corvettes keeping within ſhore of them—at 10 the Engliſh headmoſt ſhip commenced her fire upon the French line, and proceeded entirely alone to break the line, and was ſucceſsful; the whole of the French line firing upon her for at leaſt 20 minutes, before the others could come up; ſhe was entirely diſmaſted. The reſt of the Engliſh by this time came up, conſiſting of ſix heavy ſhips, beſides the one diſmaſted, among which was the Dragon, Admiral Duckworth. The French Admiral in the ſmoke, miſtaking the Alexander for an Engliſh ſhip, fell upon him, and immediately cut away his maſts by the board, and rendered him entirely uſeleſs.—By this time a Engliſh 84's came alongſide the French Admiral, and knocked the poſt of his middle and upper decks, into one in ſuch a manner, that the decks, with the weight of metal, from the main hatchway forward fell down upon the lower decks, and cruſhed many poor fellows to pieces. The French Admiral being wounded, and finding it impoſſible to eſcape, ran his ſhip, the Imperial, on the rocks to leeward of the city, the Diomed followed his example and the others all ſtruck their colours, and were taken poſſeſſion of by the Engliſh. The French ſhips fought bravely, except Le Brave, and ſhe ſtruck the 3d round. It is reported that they cannot find more than 320 of the crew belonging to the Imperial, which conſiſted of 1350, including 200 ſoldiers. The Diomed had 260 killed before ſhe went on ſhore, and many drowned and killed in attempting to climb the rocks on ſhore which from the ſurf made it very dangerous. Some of the Engliſh ſhips ſuffered very much both in their hulls and rigging, and although they have taken the ſhips they have not much to brag of. I believe I ſaw the whole of the engagement from the top of the houſe. It is a lucky thing, however, for the St. Domingo traders, for the fleet was going down the coaſt to plunder and burn the Brigand ports, ſo that had not this happened, many of our American veſſels muſt have been taken, and of courſe condemned. The people are in ſome conſternation about this Engliſh fleet now off; they ſeem to have had another engagement to windward, as there is a French line of battle ſhip off the harbour diſmaſted, and an Engliſh fleet came this day in ſight, one of the 74's has loſt her main-maſt, they cannot be any of the fleet that engaged the day before yeſterday—however, the account of the Engliſh will come from Jamaica no doubt ſoon, but this ſtatement may be relied upon as authentic.

We learn from a reſpectable gentleman that the upper decks of L'Imperial blew up when the ſunk, about ſeven miles from the city, and that 700 ſouls periſhed on board. She is juſt off the flocks, and was thought to be the fineſt ſhip in the French Navy.

QUEBEC, January 20.

Extract of a letter from Montreal, dated 13th Jan. 1806.

"On Wedneſday ſix of Capt. Grants hired ſervants, four men and two women, on returning to St. Helen in a canoe, the weather very cold, with the wind from the North, much anchor ice in the river, they miſſed the iſland, and were in a perilous ſituation. One of the men finding the canoe unmanageable, ſtepped on to the floating ice, where the canoe left him. Fortunately he had an oar in his hands, with the aſſiſtance of which, and crawling on his belly, he, at length, after floating a conſiderable diſtance, reached ſome ſolid ice and landed at Longueuil. The remaining five gave themſelves up for loſt, and lay on each other in the canoe to prevent their freezing to death. The next morning at 7 o'clock, they found themſelves below the church of Varennes. One of the women had her leg and arm frozen badly, the other, a ſmart young girl, of about 18 years of age, ſays ſhe found herſelf ſo warm under the men, that ſhe concluded the night have lived two days after the deceaſe of the men.—The people on this ſhare heard their cries and ſaw their dreadful ſituation, but night coming on, and much floating ice in the river, no aſſiſtance could be given. It was but yeſterday we could learn any certain accounts of them. The whole town in mournful ſympathy lamented their fate; they are however now on the iſland, and are doing well."

MONTREAL, Dec. 30.

Laſt Monday, preceded by a ſhort confinement, died Francis Maſſon, Eſq. Batiſte to his Majeſty, and the interment, reſpectably attended, took place on Wedneſday. He arrived in this Province in 1798, ſince when his time was employed (and we believe not unſucceſsfully) by ſcientific reſearches in Upper and Lower Canada, from Lake Superior to the Gulph of St. Laurence.

MARIANNE DES HAYES.

The following affecting ſtory is extracted from the "Female Revolutionary Plutarch," a work which gives many ſtriking portraits of the victims and agents of that dreadful ſubverſion of monarchy and morals in France, the conſequences of which will long be a ſource of trouble and miſery to every part of Europe.

"Among the many other perſons whoſe aſhes repoſed in its vicinity were thoſe of Marianne Des Hayes. She had particularly manifeſted a determined reſolution not to ſurvive thoſe dreadful times and the loſs of every thing that made life ſupportable. On account of her youth, her beauty, her accompliſhments, her miſfortunes, and her fortitude, ſhe had excited uncommon intereſt, univerſal ſympathy, and a well merited admiration.

"The French Revolutionary aſſaſſins, calling themſelves republicans, had murdered in one day her grand father and grand-mother, two aunts, her father, her mother, two brothers, and a ſiſter, with her huſband. She had been driven out of her paternal dwelling, which the aſſaſſins of her family ſeized and occupied without moleſtation. All theſe terrible diſaſters overtook her before ſhe was fourteen. In vain did ſhe look for conſolation from religion, for the ſupport of friends, or the pity of the public. The churches were all ſhut, the prieſts all baniſhed or murdered. All who eſteemed her, or only knew her parents and relatives had ſhared their fate; and the calamities which oppreſſed every claſs of ſociety, hardened the hearts of even the moſt tender. Selfiſhneſs, fear, or apathy, eluded all other feelings. Thoſe who were encompaſſed with gibbets & executioners, with robbers and aſſaſſins, with famine, death and deſolation, cared but little for any other individuals than themſelves, or rather, were indifferent to every thing, even to their own exiſtence. They all numbered their days like reſpited criminals, over whoſe head the ſword of the law was ſuſpended by a hair, and whom it threatened to ſtrike every moment.

"Thus ſituated, poor Marianne preſented herſelf before the ſanguinary judges by whoſe ferocity ſhe had become a lonely, hopeleſs, deſtitute, and almoſt ſtarving outcaſt of ſociety. Theſe barbarians had, after a ſitting of three hours, juſt ſentenced thirty individuals to be guillotined, and 132 to be ſhot. They were going to diſmiſs with their accomplices, tools, and proſtitutes, when Marianne called out to them, "Citizens, for charity's ſake, accept one more victim! You have already diſpatched my grand parents, my parents, my brothers, my ſiſters, and relatives.—Of three generations of my family I am one only ſurvivor! What can I do alone in the world? I deteſt myſelf and the univerſe. Put a period to my wretchedneſs. For humanity's ſake condemn me to death!" It was on her knees, and bathed with her tears that ſhe thus addreſſed them. Courchand, one of the judges, and the moſt humane of thoſe monſters, obſerved that ſhe was too young for their tribunal. "O," ſaid ſhe, "you have executed many much younger, why ſhould you ſpare me? only tell me by what art I can merit death, I ſhall perpetrate it inſtantly?" Well, anſwered the Preſident Patrein, ironically, "if you call out Vive le Roi, your buſineſs ſhall be done at once, and you ſhall ſoon be diſpatched." The hall immediately reſounded with her voice, crying out, Vive le Roi, Vive le Roi. Vive le Roi!—"Carry her to the guillotine with the other rebels and fanatics," ſaid Patrein to the gens d'armes. "O, how happy you make me," retorted Marianne. "God be praiſed! I ſhall no longer ſee or ſuffer from theſe enormities." She flew towards the ſcaffold, embraced the executioner, and aſked him eagerly to let her die firſt. "I am," ſaid ſhe, "the moſt miſerable being on earth, and ſhall be the moſt happy in Heaven!" In half a minute her head was ſeparated from her body and ſhe was a corpſe.

"Before ſhe went to the tribunal, ſhe had diſtributed among other diſtreſſed orphans every thing ſhe had, even part of her wearing apparel, preſerved only enough to cover herſelf decently. According to a whole length portrait of her, exhibited at Lyons, in 1795, ſhe was rather tall and grown for her age, with blue eyes, a Roman noſe, fair hair, and an elegant ſhape. Her face, if not flattered by the artiſt, was one of the moſt handſome of her ſex, expreſſive of melancholy, but alſo of reſignation."

[London paper.

GENERAL MIRANDA,

Was born in Mexico, for his colleague Dumourier, commits an error, when he terms him a Peruvian. Notwithſtanding the jealouſy with which the Spaniards were accuſtomed to treat the native Americans, this gentleman found means to obtain a colonel's commiſſion, and was employed by the Governor of Gautimala in ſeveral confidential ſituations. He is thought very early in life to have entertained the generous reſolution of emancipating his countrymen from thraldom; and to this is attributed his precipitate retreat from New Spain.

Since that time he has been almoſt literally a wanderer. In the courſe of his travels, he has viſited every part of Europe, and reſided more than once in England. Being poſſeſſed of taſte, learning, and a claſſical ſtyle, he was enabled to collect and relate a variety of anecdotes, and obſervations relative to the manners, policy, laws, learning, and above all, the military eſtabliſhments of every nation.

No ſooner had the French revolution taken place, and a foreign war become inevitable, than he repaired to Paris from St. Peterſburgh, where he was in great favor with the Empreſs,* who endeavored, but in vain, to attach him to her perſon and ſervice. By means of Petion, he obtained the rank of major general, and very ably and effectually ſeconded the efforts of Dumourier at Belgium. Being an excellent engineer, he diſplayed great military ſcience in the art of attack; in ſhort, he ſoon became reſpected in the army, and popular in the capital.

When the hero of Jemappe penetrated into Holland, he was oppointed to the command of the troops deſtined to attack Maeſtrich: the attempt proved abortive; but, as this evidently proceeded from the negligence of the general at the head of the covering army, his laurels were not blighted by the event.

The conduct of Dumourier, as ſoon as he began to experience a reverſe of fortune, became ſuſpicious; and his frequent conferences with the Auſtrian General, which ended at length in his entire defection, rendered all the patriots in the army jealous of him. Miranda inſtantly communicated his fears to his friend Petion, at that time a member of the committee of the Public Safety, and orders were ſoon after iſſued to arreſt the Commander in Chief. This circumſtance ſaved the life of † Miranda; for Dumourier had attributed the loſs of the battle of Netwinden to him, and ſtill blames him in his hiſtory. To this the other has made a reply, equally able and animated.

No ſooner had the party of the Girondе been overwhelmed by the energies of the Mountain, than Miranda was impriſoned. He was liberated at the general goal delivery on the execution of Robeſpierre; took an active part againſt the ſections of Paris, during the laſt inſurrection, and was once more put under arreſt by order of the Directory.

Since that period he has been enjoined to quit France under pretence of being a foreigner. This ungrateful return for his ſervices, was perhaps ſuggeſted at the inſtance of the Court of Madrid, which has long viewed him with a jealous eye. If ſo, it was baffled in the firſt inſtance; for Miranda refuſed to obey the order; and, claiming the right of French citizenſhip, appealed to the legiſlature, in conſequence of which, the executive was obliged to deſiſt for a time. Its power, rather than its juſtice, however, prevailed at length, and he was driven into exile.

General Miranda at preſent reſides in this country; but, like the other emigrants, (Pichegru, De Puiſaye, and a few more excepted) he receives no countenance from government, being tolerated rather than cheriſhed.

[London paper.

* Miranda was introduced at Cherſon, to the late Empreſs, by Prince Potemkin, who preſented him at the ſame time to the Emperor Joſeph, and he was moſt graciouſly received by both.

The Court of Spain afterwards claimed him as a ſubject, but he was protected by Catharine, who refuſed to deliver him up.

Her Imperial Majeſty, indeed, always treated him with great reſpect, and offered to confer many favors on him; however, at the commencement of the French revolution, he left St. Peterſburgh, with a decided intention to ſerve in the French armies, a circumſtance that gave great offence to the haughty ſovereign whom he had abandoned.

† He was fortunate enough to be acquitted, after a trial of five days, before the revolutionary tribunal at Paris.

A curious proceeding uniformly takes place on the firſt day of the Seſſion of Parliament.—A Committee of both Houſes, headed by the Great Chamberlain, ſearch and explore the vaults and cellars under the houſes, previous to the coming of his Majeſty, in order to be certain they do not contain any inflammable or combuſtible matter. It is called Guy Faux's Committee, and the hiſtorical circumſtance which gave riſe to the proceeding is well known; but, with an unaccountable degree of inconſiſtency, a ſimilar ſearch is not made on the laſt day of the Seſſion. Surely the danger exiſts full as much on the latter, as on the former.

[London Paper.]

His Majeſty aſſembled all the Princes of his Family on the occaſion of a great political queſtion which has been recently diſcuſſed, & made a moſt animated appeal to them on the lively intereſt which their illuſtrious Houſe had in ſteadfaſtly and uniformly oppoſing it as often as it ſhould be brought forward.

His Majeſty is at once the moſt regular and active man in his dominions.—He riſes every morning at ſix, dines at two, and retires to bed at ten.—It was expected that he would relax after the fatigues of the Inſtallation, but his aſſiduity to buſineſs is more than ever.—On Thurſday, after tranſacting a great deal of State affairs, early in the morning, he reviewed ſome Volunteer corps in Hyde Park: the next day, he reviewed the Artillery at Woolwich, dined with the Princeſs of Wales, and returned the ſame evening to Windſor. Yeſterday he was again employed in very early buſineſs, reſpecting his agriculture, building, and improving purſuits at Windſor and Kew.—Sunday paſſes in the duties of Religion till the evening; when he ſhews himſelf to his ſubjects on the terrace, and winds up the evening with a concert of ſacred muſic.—and to-morrow he will be again buſied with the fete at Frogmore.—Such is the perpetual recurrence of buſineſs ſoftened into amuſement, & amuſement with all the laborioouſneſs of buſineſs, which vary the life of our Auguſt Sovereign.—The ſtate of his health was never better, and his ſatisfaction at a late political event has kindled a new ardour in his ſpirits.

No diſcoveries are of more importance than thoſe which are connected with the improvements of agriculture. Every one who has attended to this ſubject is acquainted with the ſweeping deſtruction which has been occaſioned by the genus of the Eruca, or Caterpillar. Many counties of this kingdom, eſpecially in the weſtern diſtricts, depend, in a great degree, on the annual produce of the orchard; and in theſe diſtricts, at leaſt, it will be of great utility to circulate the intelligence of an experiment for the protection of fruit trees from the Caterpillar, which has been attended with complete ſucceſs. A clod of earth is moulded round the top of the trunk of the tree; and this is the whole proceſs.—From the hour that this operation is performed, the inſect, even in the moſt remote ramifications, will begin to fall, and the tree will in a ſhort time, be wholly freed from this deſtructive incumberance. It is true that the animal will afterwards attempt to renew his depredations; but as ſoon as he arrives at the ring of earth, which ſhould be permitted to remain, he will haſten down the trunk with much more rapidity than he attempted the aſcent. We ſtate this laſt with confidence, but we leave the learned Zoologiſt the explanation of the myſtery.—Lon. Paper.

THE ORACLE.

YORK:—SATURDAY, April 5, 1806

On Thursday the 27th ult. the following Address from the Petit Jury of the Home District, was presented to the Honorable Mr. Justice Thorpe:

TO THE HONORABLE
MR. JUSTICE THORPE.

HONORED SIR,

DEEPLY impressed with the paternal and salutary admonitions, contained in your benevolent and instructive Charge to that part of his Majesty's subjects, convened as Jurors at this present Court, We cannot suppress the testimony, pleasure and gratitude we feel at your appointment as one of his Majesty's Justices in this Province. Convinced as we are, of the high pre-eminence of the British Judicial Code, We beg leave to assure your Honor, that We want nothing but clear expositions of our duty, to direct us in the entire and perfect dispensation of Justice, so far as facts, and our powers as Jurors, may enable us.

Permit us, Honorable Sir, whilst paying this tribute to yourself, to say——that we have the most lively sense of the general and particular protection of person, property and individual right, which the British Government affords to all its Subjects; and that our feelings, loyalty and our attachments are in unison.

While we have the honor to subscribe ourselves, &c. &c. &c.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE PETIT JURY.

GENTLEMEN,

I Delight in the sentiments of your address; they are truly gratifying to me, they are highly honorable to you; they have driven Calumny to shame, and established the purest principles, with the most upright conduct for universal imitation throughout the Province.

These are the paths to publick prosperity, these are the ways to preserve liberty and property and secure them undiminished to your selves and posterity.

Our only contention shall be, who will make the greatest exertion to maintain the connection, the Law, and the Constitution of Great Britain, and render to the Province, and People the most valuable service. —Be assured Gentlemen, I am most truly your friend,

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twelfth day of April, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the third day of March last, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twelfth day of this present month of April, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the safe and convenience of our loving subjects have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twentieth day of May next coming, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved ALEXANDER GRANT Esquire, our President Administering the Government of our said Province of Upper Canada at York, this EIGHTH day of APRIL, in the Year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and six, and forty sixth year of our reign.

Proclamation.

ALEXANDER GRANT, Esquire,
PRESIDENT.

Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. Greeting.

WHEREAS a most daring Assault and Burglary were committed on the Person and in the dwelling House of ISAAC SWAYZE Esquire, in the Township and District of Niagara, by certain persons in disguise and unknown, on the night of the twenty-eighth day of January last past, by violently assaulting, wounding and bruising the said Isaac Swayze, and by breaking open and feloniously taking and carrying away large sums of Money from his said dwelling House. NOW KNOW YE, to the intent that such heinous Crimes may not go unpunished, and that the Persons and Property of his Majesty's Subjects in this part of his Dominions may be secure under the protection of the Law: I, ALEXANDER GRANT Esquire, President, administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada as aforesaid, Do, by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, hereby offer a Reward of SIX HUNDRED DOLLARS to any person or persons who shall make such discovery and give such information, so that the perpetrator or perpetrators of the said crime or crimes shall be convicted of the same. And I do hereby further, offer his Majesty's most gracious Pardon to such person or persons as may be accessary or accessaries to the commission of the said crime or crimes, who shall honestly and without fraud, discover the principal or principals who hath or have committed the same.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this eighteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty sixth year of his Majesty's Reign.

ALEXANDER GRANT, President.

By his Honor's Command,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

PROCLAMATION.

ALEXANDER GRANT Esq.
PRESIDENT.

Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN; GREETING:

WHEREAS by the death of His Excellency PETER HUNTER Esquire, late Lieutenant Governor of the said Province of Upper Canada; the Administration of the Government of that Province hath devolved on me: AND WHEREAS it is necessary for the Peace and Good Government of the said Province, that all His Majesty's Officers within the same, should continue in their several Offices and Employments; I have thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Executive Council therein, to issue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the said Officers to continue in their said Offices and Employments, of which all Persons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Seventeenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five, and forty-fifth year of His Majesty's Reign.

ALEXR. GRANT President.

By Command of His Honor,
WM. JARVIS, Secty.

Lateſt Intelligence.

IMPORTANT

View of European Affairs.

By late arrivals at Boſton, from England and the Continent.

Boſton March 19..

Since Saturday we have received a flood of highly intereſting intelligence, by arrivals from various parts of Europe. The quantity is ſo great, we have found it difficult to make a ſatisfactory ſelection.

At the laſt date war had ceaſed on the European Continent, except in Italy; againſt which a powerful French army was in march, with orders to annihilate the Napolitan monarchy. The Ruſſian forces were on their return home both from Moravia and Hanover; and the Emperor Alexander had arrived at Peterſburgh. He had not entered into any treaty with Bonaparte; and his political connexion with England had not altered.

A Definitive Treaty of Peace between Auſtria and France had been concluded and ratified.—We ſhall only remark on this inſtrument, that it has created two new kings, out of the electors of Bavaria and Wirtemberg; and that Auſtria has been compelled to cede about twenty principalities, counties and cities, which have been divided among the new kings of Italy, Bavaria and Wirtemberg; and the electorate of Baden. The French papers ſtate, that for the ſacrifices Auſtria had made to the ſatellites of the Napoleon planet, ſhe was to receive an indemnity in European Turkey.—This is doubtful.

Pruſſia inſtead of uniting her arms with the allies againſt France, has been found to have negociated a treaty with her; and had ſeized upon, and poſſeſſed herſelf of Honover. How the made her peace with France is not known.

Mr. Pitt, the Prime Miniſter of Great Britain, died the 22d January; and an entire change in the Britiſh Miniſtry has been the conſequence of this unexpected event. All the friends of this eminent ſtateſman had been diſplaced; and a new Miniſtry formed from the talents of the Old Oppoſition, the new Oppoſition, & the Third Party. This broad bottomed Miniſtry, it was ſaid would "unite the roſes red and white together;" and combine many able and enlightened ſtateſmen.—Lord Grenville is Prime Miniſter; Mr. Fox. and Mr. Windham, Secretaries of State; and Mr. Grey and Mr. Sheridan, in the Admiralty Department. Theſe men may make peace; but it will not be a humiliating one. What effect th s great change is likely to have on the unbounded projects of BONAPARTE, time ſufficient has not elapſed to diſcover. That thoſe projects aim at little ſhort of univerſal ſway, may be gathered from his ate meaſures, as well as from an obſervation in the ſenate; in which he ſpeaks of the "Defenſive State" of which the French Empire mould be compoſed:—And we ſhould not be ſurpriſed ſhould thoſe States, in the courſe of a few ſhort months, include not only his new created kingdom in Germany, but Holland, Switzerland, Rome, Italy, Portugal, and even Spain!

None of the official meſſages of Bonaparte make any mention of a renewed invaſion of England; though the French troops were evacuating Germany by eaſy marches.—Boſton Centinel.

INVASION OF NAPLES.

Paris, Feb. 1, 1806.

Forty thouſand Ruſſians, Engliſh, &c. have landed in Naples; and which are to be joined by 40,000 Napolitan troops, the whole to be commanded by the Ruſſian General Lafey. The Queen has received theſe troops with tranſport: But Gen. St. Cyr is advancing into Naples to puniſh the treaſon of this culpable woman, who has violated in ſo ſhameleſs a manner all this is held ſacred by men. The Emperor has declared ſhe ſhall ceaſe to reign.

It is ſaid the Emperor of Ruſſia, on learning that a treaty of peace had been concluded between France and Auſtria, iſſued orders for the immediate re embarkation of his troops at Naples, and that they have Proceeded to Curlu. But the Emperor's decree has gone forth; and the Napolitan Dynaſty muſt be no more.

London, Feb. 10

His Sicilian Majeſty ſeems determined not to give up his territories without a ſtruggle. Would we could entertain an expectation that his reſiſtance would be effectual. He has ſummoned all his Barons to bring as many men into the field as poſſible. The Engliſh troops have declared their determination to defend his ſeveral fortreſſes to the laſt.

KING's SPEECH.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE of LORDS, January 21, 1806.

The Parliament was, this day, in the abſence of his Majeſty, opened with uſual formalities, by commiſſion.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In purſuance to the authority given to us by his Majeſty's commiſſion, under the great ſeal, amongſt other things, to declare the cauſe of his holding this Parliament, his Majeſty has directed us particularly to call your attention to the moſt deciſive ſucceſs with which Providence has vouchſafed to bleſs his Majeſty's arms at ſea, ſince you were laſt aſſembled in Parliament.

"The activity and perſeverance of his Majeſty's fleets have been conſpicuously diſplayed in the purſuit and attack of the different ſquadrons of the enemy, and every rencounter has terminated to the honor of the Britiſh Flag, and the diminution of the naval force of the powers with whom his Majeſty is at war; but the victory obtained over the the combined fleet of France and Spain, off cape Trafalgar, has manifeſted, beyond any exploit recorded even in the annals of the Britiſh navy, the ſkill & enterprize of his Majeſty's officers and ſeamen; and the deſtruction of ſo large a portion of the naval ſtrength of the enemy, has not only confirmed in the moſt ſignal manner, the maritime ſuperiority of this country, but has eſſentially contributed to the ſecurity of his Majeſty's dominions.

"His Majeſty moſt deeply regrets that the day of that memorable triumph ſhould have been unhappily clouded with the fall of the heroic commander under whom it was atchieved; and he is perſuaded that you will feel that this lamented, but glorious termination of a ſeries of tranſcendant exploits, claims a diſtinguiſhed expreſſion of the laſting gratitude of the country, and that you therefore cheerfully concur in enabling his Majeſty to annex to thoſe honors which he has conferred on the family of the late Lord Viſcount Nelſon, ſuch a mark of munificence, as may preſerve to the lateſt poſterity, the memory of his name and ſervices, and the benefit of his great example. His Majeſty has commanded us further to inform you, that whilſt the ſuperiority of his arms at ſea has been thus uniformly aſſerted and maintained, he has not been wanting in his endeavours to apply the means, which were ſo liberally placed at his diſpoſal, in aid of ſuch of the powers of the continent as evinced a determination to reſiſt the formidable and growing encroachments of France. He has directed the ſeveral treaties entered into for this purpoſe, to be laid before you; and though he cannot but deeply lament that the events of the war in Germany have diſappointed his hopes, and led to an unfavorable iſſue, yet his Majeſty feels confident that, upon a review of the ſteps which he has taken, you will be of opinion that he has left nothing undone, on his part, to ſuſtain the efforts of his allies, and that he had acted in ſtrict conformity to the principles declared by him, and recognized by Parliament, as eſſential to the intereſts and ſecurity of his own dominions, as well as to the general ſafety of the Continent.

"It is a great conſolation to his Majeſty, and one in which he is perſuaded you will participate, that although the Emperor of Germany has felt himſelf compelled to withdraw from the conteſt, his Majeſty continues to receive from his auguſt Ally, he Emperor of Ruſſia, the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of unſhaken adherence to that generous and enlightened policy by which he has hitherto been actuated; and his Majeſty has no doubt that you will be fully ſenſible of the important advantage to be derived from preſerving at all times the cloſeſt and moſt intimate connexion with that Sovereign.

"Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"His Majeſty has directed the eſtimates for the year to be laid before you, and he has commanded us to aſſure you, that they are framed upon the ſcale of exertion, which the preſent ſituation of the country renders indiſpenſable. His Majeſty fully relies upon your granting him ſuch ſupplies, as upon due deliberation, the public exigencies may appear to require.

"It is his earneſt wiſh to contribute by every means in his power, to alleviate the additional burthen which muſt neceſſarily be impoſed upon his people, and with this view he has directed the ſum of one million ſterling, part of the proceeds ariſing from the ſale of ſuch prizes made on the powers with which he is at war, as are by law veſted in the crown to be applied to the public ſervices of the year.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majeſty is moſt fully perſuaded, that whatever pride and confidence you may feel in common with him, in the ſucceſs which has diſtinguiſhed the Britiſh arms in the courſe of the preſent conteſt, you will be ſenſible how much the events of the war on the Continent, by which the predominant power and influence of France have been ſo unhappily extended, require the continuance of all poſſible vigilance and exertion. Under this impreſſion, his Majeſty truſts that your attention will be invariably directed to the improvement of thoſe means which are to be found in the bravery and diſcipline of his forces, the zeal and loyalty of every claſs of his ſubjects, and in the inexhauſted reſources of his dominions, for rendering the Britiſh empire invincible at home, as well as formidable abroad, ſatisfied that by ſuch efforts alone the conteſt can be brought to a concluſion conſiſtent with the ſafety and independence of the country, and with its rank amongſt the nations of the world."

London, January 23, 1806.

DEATH OF MR. PITT.

Yeſterday, died at his houſe in Putney, the Right Honorable WILLIAM PITT, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Firſt Lord of the Admiralty, &c. &c. He had been ill ſeveral weeks. His unwearied attention to buſineſs, and the lively intereſt he took in paſſing events, occaſioned an extreme debility in his ſyſtem, which deprived him of his uſual reſt, and led to a general breaking up of his conſtitution. An hereditary gout, attended by dropſy and fever, prevented his either taking or retaining food or medicine, and finiſhed his exiſtence on earth. About 28 hours before his deceaſe, his phyſician requeſted the Biſhop of Lincoln to inform him of his ſituation; and that his diſeaſe was beyond the power of medicine to ſave. He receivedthe information with perfect reſignation, made his will, declared his firm reliance upon God, and that he died in peace with all mankind.

This event has been received by Parliament with deep regret. The Houſe of Commons have voted (258 to 89) that his funeral ſhall be at the national expence; that a monument ſhall be erected to his memory; and that forty thouſand pounds be appropriated for the payment of his debts. His eulogium has been pronounced by the moſt eminent members. Penſions have been granted by his Majeſty to his relatives.

The Common Council of London have voted to erect a monument to his memory.

CONDUCT OF PRUSSIA.

London. Feb. 8.

The conduct of Pruſſia has been "ſtrange, paſſing ſtrange." After her public declarations; the march of her numerous armies; and the hopes held out to the allies, her operation againſt France could ſcarcely be queſtioned—All at once, her armies are deſired to halt; to march back, and to go into quarters on a peace eſtabliſhment; and it is found ſhe has been in continual negociation with France; and that Count Haugwitz was on his journey to Paris to put a finiſh to the treaty between Pruſſia and France. By this treaty, it ſeems that Pruſſia has ſtipulated for the unmoleſted return of the Ruſſian and Britiſh troops from Hanover. [They have ſince left the electorate; and the greater part of them arrived in England, about the 8th February.]

Feb. 10. The firſt diſpatches which Mr. Fox has received from the continent, announce, that the King of Pruſſia had taken poſſeſſion of Hanover in his own name; had ordered the oath of allegiance to be adminiſtered to the different authorities; had directed the removal of the Britiſh arms from all the public offices; prohibited all correſpondence between the public functionaries and the court of Great Britain, and appointed Count Schulenburgh, Governor of the Electorate. It is alſo added, that arrangements had been made to ſhut out Britiſh Commerce from all the ports of Pruſſia!!

We do not find that Bonaparte has taken any meaſures to reſent the conduct of Pruſſia towards him.

OF THE RUSSIAN ARMIES.

Scheidam, Dec. 28. Immediately after the armiſtice between Auſtria and France was ſigned, the Ruſſian troops ſet out on their return home, through Gallicia.

The Ruſſians and Swedes are evacuating Hanover. The Britiſh are ready to embark for their native iſle, agreeably to the ſtipulations of a treaty between France and Pruſſia.

Munich, Dec. 30, 1805.

The Emperor Napoleon arrived here yeſterday, attended by Prince Murat and General Duroc. To-morrow the Bavarian cannon taken by the Auſtrians 100 years ago, will be brought into the city with great ſolemnity. They are a preſent of Bonaparte to our elector.

NEW BRITISH MINISTRY.

London, February 8, 1806.

The death of Mr. Pitt has occaſioned an entire change of the miniſtry. The following are ſaid to be the new appointments, viz.

Lord Grenville, firſt lord of the treaſury, vice Mr. Pitt, deceaſed.

Lord (late Mr.) Erſkine, lord Chancellor, vice lord Eldon.

Lord Henry Petty (ſon of the Marquis of Lanſdown) chancellor of the exchequer, vice Mr. Pitt, deceaſed.

Rt. Hon. Charles James Fox, ſecretary for foreign affairs, vice ord Mulgrave.

Earl Spencer, ſecretary for the home department, vice lord Hawkſbury.

Mr. Windham, ſecretary for the colonial and war departments, vice earl Campden.

Mr. Gray, firſt lord of the admiralty, vice lord Barham.

Earl Moira, maſter general of the ordnance, vice earl Chatham.

Earl Fitzwilliam, preſident of the council.

Lord Sidmouth (late Mr. Addington) lord privy ſeal.

Lord Ellenborough, lord chief juſtice, has a ſeat in the council.

Theſe miniſters form the cabinet.

OTHER APPOINTMENTS.

The Duke of York, continues commander in chief—but great complaints are made of him; and a council of war has been added to his office. Mr. Sheridan, treaſurer of the navy. General Fitzpatrick, ſecretary of war. Lord Minto, Preſident of the board of controul. Moſt of the other officers are changed, and the friends of lord Grenville, Mr. Fox, or Mr. Addington, (Lord Sidmouth) fill their places.

Mr. T. Grenville, it is ſtated, will go out miniſter to Pruſſia, Mr. Adair to Ruſſia; and Mr. T. Erſkine, jun. to the United States of America.

The Duke of Bedford goes Lord Lieutenant to Ireland. Earl Temple, Hiley Addington, Lord St. John, Lord C. Spencer, Earl of Derby, Mr. Tierney, Mr. George Ponſonby, Mr. Grattan, Mr. Adair, Mr. Pigott, Mr. Romilly, Mr. Vanſittart, Lord A. Hamilton, Mr. Elliot, Mr. Bond. Dr. Laurence, Sir Francis Vincent, Mr. Cheevey, and others, all come in for their ſhare of "the loaves and fiſhes."

The new miniſters have been ſworn into office. On Saturday Mr. Fox gave a levee to the foreign miniſters; and afterwards diſpatched a meſſage to the continent to announce the change.

From the N. Y. E. Poſt of March 6.

The gentleman who ſent us the following will pleaſe to accept of our beſt thanks for this mark of his politeneſs and partiality.

"SIR,

"The incloſed extract of a letter from an officer of H. M. Ship Acaſta, is handed you with an idea that it may not prove unintereſting to your readers."

"H. M. Ship Acaſta, at Sea, Jan. 9, 18 6, Lat. 14. N. Long. 47 W.

"Sir John Duckworth, when off Cadiz, in the Superb, received intelligence of the famous Rochefort ſquadron being off Madeira. He immediately ſailed in queſt of them*—and we followed as ſoon as our diſpatches were delivered to Lord Collingwood, whom we were obliged to ſeek up the Mediterranean. We joined Sir John on Saturday 14th December, and the ſame day looked into Santa Cruz, Teneriffe, but found that the enemy had left it twenty days. Cruiſing between Tengereiffe and Madeira, on the 22d we fell in with the Arethuſa, whoſe convoy had been diſperſed on the 16th by the ſame ſquadron in lat. 46. We were now to look for them to the Northward; but early in the morning of Chriſtmas day, they very unexpectedly made their appearance to windward, coming down, and we muſt ever lament that the early day light prevented their falling right in among our ſquadron. Though poſſeſſed of the ſuperiority of a three decker, they immediately hauled their wind, and, I am ſorry to ſay, in ſpite of all our exertions to the contrary, completely ſucceeded in their endeavors to ſhun the conteſt. There was, all the afternoon, very little wind to us, whereas we had the vexation to ſee them enjoying and profiting by a conſtant, though light breeze, and frequently favored by ſhews which compelled them to take in their royal and top gallant ſtudding ſails, at the ſame time that our ſhips had not ſteerage way. A freſh breeze which had previouſly almoſt taken them out of ſight, reached us about 1 P. M. and the Admiral, ſupported by the Spencer, Agamemnon, and Amethyſt, appeared at leaſt to keep way with the enemy; the reſt of the ſquadron, which are any thing but flyers and this ſhip, once eſteemed for ſailing but now fails moſt execrably, were ſoon out of ſight aſtern; as for us, we ſaw no more of the Frenchmen next day, but the Superb gained on them faſt, and by 2 P. M. of the 26th was within two gun ſhots of the ſternmoſt, but ſeeing no ſupport in ſight, except the ſhips mentioned above, and the neareſt of them 8 miles off, the Admiral was reluctantly compelled to abandon all further purſuit! This was off Palma, and the Frenchmen were left ſteering about S. S. W. The Amethyſt was immediately diſpatched for England, and we went to the Cape Verds, where not finding the enemy. the Powerful was sent away to the East Indies. Thus the Admiral wisely provided against any contingency, and it is to be hoped that Monsr. Allemand will not easily find the shelter of a harbor; if he has come this way, he will soon find more than his match, and surely that extraordinary fortune which has hitherto attended him, is not to last forever.

* Squadron—Superb 74; Sir J. T. Duckworth; Canopus 80, Admiral Louis; Donegal 74, Powerful 74, Spencer 74, Agamemnon 64, and Amethyſt frigate.

"So sanguine were the Admiral's expectations, that on the morning we left in with the enemy, he communicated his sentiments by the telegraph, sending the compliments to the season, and congratulating the squadron on the prospect before them."

Further particulars of the Battle off St. Domingo, from an eye witness.—When the English fleet appeared, the French were busy wooding and watering: their decks were lumbered with water casks, wood, and otherwise in the utmost confusion.—This unprepared state was the more extraordinary, as the French Admiral, from a suspicion of being attacked, had a vessel of war cruizing in the Mona passage, to give early intimation of the approach of an enemy; and at the moment of her appearance with such intelligence, the English fleet also appeared in full chase. Le Brave of 80 guns, had several men at work on her stern—when the English hove in sight, the fastenings of the scaffold on which the workmen were, was cut, and the whole dropt into the sea. She was then six feet by the stern, and continued to be the whole engagement. A great part of the crews of the respective ships were on shore, but as fast as possible, they hurried on board, and the first thing done after slipping cable and getting under way, was to clear decks, of course every thing was hove overboard.

The French Admiral sustained the joint attack of two English 74's for a considerable length of time, at length Le Brave came to her assistance, but very unfortunately for herself as the French Admiral in the confusion that prevailed, and probably owing also to the great smoke, poured in a whole broadside from her lower deck guns into Le Brave, which totally dismasted her; the latter vessel however sustained the fight, after every other French ship were apparently subdued, or driven on shore.—After the French Admiral grounded, she was abandoned by as many of the crew, as were in a condition to leave her; two English frigates took positions to take her, which was done so effectually as to clear the lower decks of every one able to stand, the admiral alone seemed to brave all their fury, and to court death, for after being abandoned by all his crew, he alone stood firm within the railing of the after gallery, which position he kept, 'till it was evident that he must fall into the enemy's hands, when he committed himself to the water, and got safe on the shore. It is probable that some of the French ships of the line endeavoured to escape, as the next day all the English fleet had disappeared except the admiral, who lay three days in sight of the city, refitting, and completing the destruction of the French Admiral's ship.

ARMISTICE,

Concluded between their Imperial Majesties of France and Austria.

His Majesty the Emperor of the French and his Majesty the Emperor of Germany, desirous to reach the period of definitive negociations for putting an end to the war which desolates the two states, have agreed as a preliminary to begin by an armistice, which shall continue until the conclusion of a definitive peace; or until the rupture of negociations; and in this case the armistice shall not cease until fifteen days after that rupture, and the cessation of the armistice shall be notified to the plenipotentiaries of both powers, and at the head quarters of both armies.

The condition of the armistice are,

1. The line of both armies shall be in Moravia, the circle of Iglau, the circle of Znaim, the circle of Brunn, that part of the circle of Olmutz upon the right bank of the small river of Trezeboska opposite to Prerlaitz as far as it empties itself into the March as far as the mouth of that river into the Danube, including however Presburg; but no French or Austrian troops shall be stationed within a circumference of five or six leagues round Holich, on the right bank of the March.

The line of the two armies shall besides comprehend, in the territory to be occupied by the French army, the whole of Upper and Lower Austria, the Tyrol, the state of Venice, Corinthia, Styria, Carniola, the county of Gorlitz and Istria; in short, in Bohemia, the circle of Montabor, and all the country on the east of the road from Tabor to Linitz.

2. The Russian army shall evacuate the Austrian States, as well as Polish Austria, viz. Moravia and Hungary within fifteen days, and Gallicia within a month. The order of its march shall be traced, so that it may be always known where it is, as well as to prevent all misunderstanding.

3. There shall not be made in Hungary any kind of levy on masse, nor insurrections: and in Bohemia no kind of extraordinary levy: no foreign army shall be permitted to enter the territory of the House of Austria.

Negociators on each side shall meet at Nicholsburg, to proceed immediately on the business of negociations, in order to establish promptly peace and harmony between the two Emperors.

Done interchangeably between us the undersigned, the Marshal Berthier, Minister of War, Major General of the grand army, charged with full powers from his Majesty the Emperor of the French and King of Italy, and Prince John de Lichtenstein, Lieutenant General, charged with full powers from his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, &c.

At Austerlitz, the 15th Frimaire, year 14. (6th December, 1805.)

Signed Marshal Berthier.

Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, January 28.

We have the satisfaction to announce to the Public that the result of the interview which Lord Grenville had with his Majesty at the Queen's House yesterday, is most auspicious to the Empire. The King expressed in the most unreserved terms his conviction of the necessity of forming an Administration of experience and vigor. No exceptions were suggested—and to use the common phrase, the King granted to the Noble Lord a carte blanche, desiring him with all convenient speed to lay before his Majesty the arrangement that he and Mr. Fox, with their mutual friends, should agree upon. In the mean time it was settled that the present Ministers should, on account of the urgency of the national affairs, proceed with the usual routine of public business. The interview lasted a bout half an hour. Lord Grenville went immediately to Carleton House, and had a conference with his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and Mr. Fox—and here the basis of the new Administration was laid.

It must give peculiar satisfaction to every honest heart to see that the new Government is thus to be formed on the re-union of all the branches of the Royal Family, by which a noble example will be given of that sentiment throughout the country at large, which is so essential to the great and unprecedented efforts that must be made to place the Empire in an attitude of strength and preparation becoming our dignity as a people, and necessary, perhaps, even to our safety as its principal Power in the scale of nations. His Royal Highness gives his most cordial assistance to the new arrangement, and we trust an opportunity will be given for the display of that energy of character and popular virtues which for the happiness of his country he is known to possess.

We could fill our paper with the vague rumours which were circulated as to the detail of the arrangement likely to be submitted to his Majesty for his gracious approbation; and we have no doubt but that in every other paper pretended lists of the new Ministry will be given. It is not confident, however, with the respect which we have for our Readers, to hazard conjectures on a subject which, from its nature, is so delicate. We, perhaps, might be as shrewd in guessing as our neighbors; but it would be neither decent nor becoming to anticipate even the truth. All that is positively settled is, That

Lord Grenville is to be First Lord of the Treasury;

Mr. Fox, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

And that the new Ministry will embrace in it all those great and distinguished persons to whom the eyes of the Nation looked so eagerly with confidence in their integrity and talents. Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox are to meet this morning on the subject, after having respectively consulted their friends which they did last night.

Thus we are at last enabled to congratulate the Country on the prospect of a vigorous, efficacious and united Administration. Nothing less than such a combination of talents and wisdom would be adequate to the crisis; would be equal to those great efforts of national strength and courage which are necessary to preserve our honor untarnished, and the remains of our power unimpaired. To these the whole attention of the Administration must for a season be directed, and they will require it undivided. Every patriotic mind will concur with them; and we are convinced that all inferior questions and considerations which could disturb the union that is so desirable, or distract those exertions that are so requisite, will be adjourned to other times. At present the Country can only be extricated from its difficulties by oppoling all its mental and physical energies against the dangers with which it is surrounded.

If such a Ministry as that to which we now look forward shall at last be formed, the country may expect every effort that can tend to produce union at home, confidence from neutral or allied states, and respect from our enemies themselves. In the hands of such a Ministry, the nation may be sure that the means it confers will be judiciously employed; that the strength it calls forth will be wisely directed. It is in the hands of such a Ministry that the public honor can be safely entrusted, because ill concerted, ill executed measures, must in the end lead to disgrace; and national degradation can hardly be separated from national misfortune. To support the honor of the country is the prattle of every man in power; but to do it effectually, belongs only to wisdom in council and energy in conduct. With such a Ministry as seems likely to be formed, the public may rest assured, that no exertion will be left unemployed to render our position formidable; and in that they have the best pledge that national interest will never be abandoned, and national honor never compromised.

January 30.

Marquis Cornwallis.—The friends of this country, and the admirers of true worth have another great subject of regret in the death of this most amiable Nobleman. The melancholy tidings arrived yesterday, in dispatches dated the 23d of October, 1805, which were brought by the Medusa frigate from Bengal. G. A. Robinson, Esquire Private Secretary to his Lordship, was the bearer of these dispatches.

The Medusa frigate left Bengal on the 3d of Nov. She brings advices, that previous to the much lamented death of that Nobleman, Scindia had entirely separated himself from the prefence of Holkar, and had delegated a Vakeel with full power to enter into a negotiation for peace with the British Government. The Vakeel had been publicly received in camp by Lord Lake. Sir R. Barlow, on whom the government devolved on the death of Marquis Cornwallis, had passed Benares, on his way to the upper flations, to direct the course of the negociations. Holkar's troops were again in motion, and had advanced towards the country of the Sheiks, from whom, however, it was not apprehended he would derive any affiftance.

LIVERPOOL, January 31.

The appointment of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox to the principle offices in Administration, which all the papers and private letters agree to have taken place, is very generally considered as likely to produce a favorable effect upon our commercial prospects.

From the situation of affairs between this country and France, it is too much to expect that a peace can be very speedily effected; and the preparations for war may for a time be even more vigorous than before. The principles of the individuals who will compose the new Ministry are, however, so well known to have been opposed to the war, that the confident expectation of their having peace for their object, will give a spirit to our trade, of which, since the late events on the continent, it has been wholly deprived.

London, January 26.

The last letters from Bombay mention, that Scindia and the Berer Rajah had appointed an interview with the Peishwa, at Poonah, to which the latter had consented, on the express condition that the British President should be present.

Marquis Cornwallis has, by various concessions, in a great degree restored tranquility in the Rajahmundry; he has, however, found it necessary to keep up the establishment of Police Peons, which it had been his intention to abolish.

The war against the insurgent Polygars continues almost without intermission against one Chief or other. The following is an extract of a letter from an officer recently employed against the Rajah of Ponaghur;—

"After a march of five days & nights without intermission, and without sleep and nearly without food, we arrived last night in two divisions, each having two brigade of guns, before the Fort of Ponaghur, 20 miles North of Vellore, and at three o'clock this morning commenced our attack. After a heavy cannonade of six hours a breach was discovered in the South bastion; and the storming party, consisting of the flank companies of the 1st battalion of the 4th regiment, and the 1st battalion of the 16th regiment, with four gallopers, and 100 pioneers to clear the jungles, was ordered to advance.—Our gallant fellows marched to the spot with their accustomed bravery, under a shower of shot, and in face of 5000 men, who lined the breach and ramparts. On reaching the breach, having reserved their fire, they discharged a volley, and the forlorn hope rushed forward with the bayonet, with such enthusiasm, that the enemy fled in all directions, abandoning to us the fort, and leaving behind them 2,400 killed and wounded.

"Our loss on this occasion was—1st battalion, 4th regiment, 12 killed, 30 wounded; 2d battalion, 1st regiment, 9 killed, 23 wounded; 1st battalion, 16th regiment, 17 killed, 41 wounded; and pioneers, 5 killed, 11 wounded.—Total, 43 killed, and 105 wounded.—Lieutenant Leith, of the 4th, was the only officer wounded. Captain Phillipson lost part of his jacket, and several buttons from the front of his waistcoat, by a ball that. Notwithstanding the great fatigue which our troops have undergone, the service is so urgent as not to admit of their halting for rest, and we are again under march, in pursuit of the fugitives."

The treasure taken by the Army under general Wellesly, at Anamaghur and Affiy, is said to have proved to be greater than was at first supposed. The specie alone is now said to amount to four hundred thousand lace of rupees; and its conveyance required four hundred tumbrils, each drawn by twelve bullocks. Nine thousand camels, laden with silks and muslins; sixty thousand bullocks laden with rice; and two thousand Elephants, likewise fell into the hands of the victors.

A very large gun, 69 pounder, was taken by Lord Lake, at Agra made wholly of gold and silver, and supposed to be worth one hundred thousand pounds. Gold chains, diamonds, pearls, and other valuables, worth upwards of a million sterling, recompensed the enterprise of our troops on the same occasion.

The detachment from the British army on the Chumbull river, which had been in pursuit of the Rajah of Jebanger, has returned to head-quarters; the enemy having taken refuge in the hills whether it was deemed inexpedient to follow him.

An article in the Hamburg Correspondenten of the 10th inst. states that the King of Prussia has acknowledged the sovereignty of the elector of Wurtemberg and Bavaria. It is generally understood that the elector of Baden will be added to the list of newly made kings.——Venice, January 16.

BONAPARTE'S BULLETINS.

A Curious Fact.—To each column of Bonaparte's armies acting in different countrys, is attached a moveable printing office, of which the directors, compositors, and printers, are chiefly emissaries of Talleyrand's secret agency. In it are published not only all the false and exaggerated bulletins of military movements, but newspapers, pamphlets, ballads and other incendiary writings, serving the political views of Bonaparte. These latter are frequently given as translations from English, German, and even Russian, the better to delude the invaded and invaders; to keep the former in submission and tranquility, and the latter in obedience & spirit. The commander of each column has his instructions how to write, as well as how to march; and his plans of political impositions are as fully delineated as those of his military manœuvres.

The military bulletins Printed at Bonaparte's head-quarters, are usually written first as he dictates by his private secretary, then revised by Berthier, and afterwards approved by Napoleon himself. The same formalities are nearly observed with the political bulletins, which, after a revisal by Talleyrand, obtain his sovereign assent before they are issued in an official form. It happens, however, sometimes, when these ministers are absent, that Bonaparte's crude ideas, and absurd tales, are given to the public; the consequences always are, that in subsequent bulletins, they are obliged to explain away the bombastic and ridiculous exuberance of their master's fancy, caprice, or passion.

In the House of Lords, yesterday, Lord Melville appeared in his place, and delivered in a plea of not guilty to the charges exhibited against him by the Commons. Ordered to be communicated to the Lower House.—Mr. Adam and Mr. Plummer were appointed counsel for his Lordship.

The Russian official account of the battle of Austerlitz has been circulated in Germany, which differs widely from the French statement. It appears from this document, that the Russian army on the 2d ult. consisted only of 50,000 and that the Austrians, chiefly new levies, were not above half that number. The French army is stated to have had from 15,000 to 20,000 more men in consequence of Bernadote having joined the day before the battle. The ridiculous story of several thousand Russians having been drowned appears to have been an utter falsehood.—The total loss of the Russians is estimated at not more than ten thousand men, whilst that of the French is supposed to have been at least as great. The French after the battle of Austerlitz, did not attempt to pursue the retreating army, but on the following day they attacked the Russian rear-guard in the neighbourhood of Uhefchutz; but after a partial action, which lasted till the close of the day, they were obliged to relinquish their object. It is also positively stated, that the Russian Imperial guards did not lose their colors, but, on the contrary, took the standard of one of the French regiments of infantry. There is no doubt that the Emperor Alexander was highly dissatisfied with his Imperial brother of Austria, whose conduct in submitting to French dictation at the very moment when a favorable turn might have been given to his affairs, can never be sufficiently lamented. The Archduke Charles is also stated to have openly expressed his disapprobation of the conduct of his brother, for whom, however, the presence of himself and his army probably obtained better terms than would otherwise have been granted.

December 27.

COURT MARTIAL ON SIR R. CALDER.

FOURTH DAY, December 26.

The Court met this morning at ten o'clock, for the purpose of determining on the sentence, when, after a deliberation of six hours, the doors were opened, and Sir Robert Calder was called in. Silence being ordered, the judge advocate read the sentence nearly in the following words:

"At a Court Martial held on the 23d of October, and continued by adjournment to the present 26th, pursuant to an order from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, dated the 15th of November, directed to the President—[here the names of the court martial were read]—setting forth, that Vice Admiral Sir Robert Calder requested an enquiry into his conduct on the 22d of July, the day after his engagement with the enemy, to explain his reasons why he had not taken them all as well as part of the enemy's ships, and to give his reasons for his conduct on that day, and his subsequent conduct, to the moment that the enemy finally lost sight of his Majesty's fleet. The court proceeded to enquire into that conduct, and also his subsequent conduct, and to try him thereon, and they have heard with attention the evidence in support of his charge, and the defence which had been made to it, as well as the allegations in support thereof. The Court is therefore of opinion, that the charge has been proved, and that the conduct of Vice Admiral Sir Robert Calder has been highly reprehensible; but they are of opinion, that his conduct has arisen from error in judgement, and not from fear or cowardice; and therefore this court doth order and adjudge that the said Vice Admiral Sir Robert Calder be severely reprimanded, and he is hereby reprimanded severely."

Sir Robert during the whole of the trial, manifested an uncommon degree of firmness. In the examination of the witnesses he discovered a considerable degree of acuteness.—He wore an undress uniform. When the sentence of the court was delivered, it seemed to make a very deep impression upon him; and he retired evidently very much affected. He was accompanied by a great number of friends, and on descending from the deck of the Prince of Wales into his barge, fcarcely lifted up his head, which was apparently bowed down by the weight of the sentence.

The Court was uncommonly crowded; and general feeling pervaded the auditory, who sympathized with the Admiral on the event of the trial.

December, 28.

The Plate upon Lord Nelson's coffin is Gold. The dimensions are thirteen inches by nine. It is the same size as the Duke of Gloucester's.—His Majesty's goldsmith prepared it. The following inscription is upon it:

DEPOSITUM.

The most Noble Lord HORATIO NELSON, Viscount and Baron Nelson of the Nile, and of Burnham Thorpe, in the County of Norfolk.

Baron NELSON of the Nile and of Hilborough, in the said County.

Knight of the most Honorable Order of the Bath;

Vice-Admiral of the White Squadron of the Fleet; and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels in the Mediterranean;

Also

Duke of Bronte, in Sicily;

Knight Grand Cross of the Sicilian Order of St. Ferdinand, and of Merit;

Member of the Ottoman Order of the Crescent; and Knight Grand Commander of the Order of St. Joachim.

Born September 29, 1758.

After a series of transcendent and heroic services, this gallant Admiral fell gloriously in the moment of a Brilliant and decisive Victory over the Combined Fleets of France and Spain, off Cape Trafalgar, on the 21st of October, 1805.

A letter from Gibraltar, dated the 21st December, says—"This morning the Sirius frigate, Captain Prowse, passed this place for Admiral Collingwood's fleet, with the intelligence of his having fallen in with the Brest fleet of 16 sail of the line, in the morning of the 15th inst. in lat. 49, long. 9.

"The Sirius had two transports with troops under her convoy, which they are very apprehensive may be taken. The Sirius failed from this place some time ago with the Polyphemus and 15 transports, with the Queen's 13th, and 54th regiments on board for England—for whose fate, also, great fears are entertained. Lieutenant Colonel Kane, who commanded the 13th regiment, and his Lady, were fortunately taken out of one of the transports at sea, by the Sirius, and they were landed here this morning by that vessel, as she passed to the Straits.

"Admiral Collingwood has 13 sail of the line with him off Carthagena, & there are two or three sail of the line off

Cadiz, fo that he will be nearly equal to the enemy if they fhould come this way.

"Two Ruffian line of battle fhips have arrived here from Deal, being part of the fquadron which failed from thence to the Mediterranean, about a month ago. They are bound to Corfu and carry Ruffian troops from there to Naples.

January 14.

On Thurfday laft the remains of the ever to be lamented Lord Viscount Nelfon, were interred in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, with all the folemn fplendour which a mourning and grateful nation could beftow. The proceffion moved from the Admiralty at eleven o'clock, and reached the church at three. It was attended by about 8000 regular troops, and at leaft 20,000 volunteers; as likewife by the Prince of Wales, with four or five of his Royal Brothers, and a vaft number of nobility and gentry. The ceremony of interment was grand and awful beyond conception. The pall was fupported by Admirals, attended by Naval Captains, and a party of the feamen and marines of the Victory, of 100 guns.—Never was a more fublime fcene beheld by an admiring people, nor did ever public regret appear more general. We are forry our limits preclude our entering into a more detailed account of this honorable proof of a nation's gratitude to the greateft of men.

January, 27

MR. PITT—On Sat. goog to Bath Mr. Pitt drank the waters very freely twice a day; faying, that he knew he muft have a fit o' the gout in order to be well; that he came there two years ago, and tried to bring it on there, but could not; and that it attacked him very inconveniently after his return to town, which he would now endeavour to avoid, by haftening the fit. The gout very foon appeared, firft in his right foot, and then had every appearance of going off with a regular fit. He was even well enough after this to go out in his carriage. In about a week's time, however, the left foot was alfo laid up, attended with a good deal of inflamation and exceffive pain. The latter he would never confefs; and even when large drops were tricking down his face from torture, he faid, fmiling—"We who have the gout muft expect to fuffer fomething; but if this be all, I can bear it very well, and much more."

Before the attack came to its height, he went one day in a chair to the pump-room, to take a glafs of water. As he limped across the floor, a good-natured Quaker came up to him, and faid, "Thou feemeft rather lame, Friend—Will thou permit me to affift thee?" With a good-natured fmile, but peculiar energy, Mr. Pitt replied, "No, thank you, Sir, I can ftand alone upon my legs yet."

In a few days, however, his appetite totally left him, for the firft time under any circumftance in his life; and he fhewed evident marks of extreme debility and weaknefs.—This alarmed his moft anxious friends, and unknown to him, an expreis was fent to Sir Walter Farquhar, who came down inftantly. Sir Walter declared that the Bath waters had produced a greater tendency to gout than his conftitution had ftrength enough to bear, but would undertake the refponfibility of removing him from Bath without the leaft ill effect from other phyficians. Drs. Haygarth and Parry were accordingly called in, and they concurred in the neceffity of change of air, to try if it would reftore his appetite, more particularly as the houfe, which had been chofen for him in Bath was in every low, damp, and expofed fituation, from which he fuffered material injury.

The removal of the gout had now partly left him, and nothing appeared to remain but extreme debility. On Sir Walter Farquhar's thinking hat it he perfevered ftaying in Bath, it might be got more citeated than Johnfon-ftreet, and that he had no doubt but arrangements might be made for poftponing an hofpital vifit to Mr. Pitt reprefented, "No—I will not confent to a moment's delay, where my eftimed is in queftion, but will go to the Houfe, though I know he cannot there be accommodated from the ftrength of my own nature, that I muft be wet enough for that."

NEW-YORK, March 21.

Spanish War.—From the following article, copied from the Aurora of yeftereay, it appears that hoftilities have actually commenced between the troops of the United States and the Spaniards.

"The report, fays the United States Gazette, whether correct or not, has excited confiderable fenfation, and will undoubtedly have the effect of either entirely ftopping all fupplies either to St. Juafh ports, or at leaft of effentially enhancing the premiums. It is ally enhancing the premiums. It is certainly a moft cruel and unjuftifiable thing on the part of the government that the country fhould thus be continually harraffed with apprehenfions of a Spanifh war, and yet left wholly to blind conjectures as to the real ground of thefe apprehenfions. The affair of the Leander remains ftill involved in myftery; and while it is impoffible to decide whether government have participated in that expedition, upon the back of it comes a report of hoftilities having been actually commenced upon our own territories. Thefe things are of very ferious import as refpects the commerce of the country. Yet government feems to be as indifferent to them as though all were perfectly fmooth and tranquil."

Extract of a letter from an old revolutionary officer, dated at Washington in the Miffiffippi territory, Feb. 18th, 1805.

"Lieutenant Burke, paymaffer of our regular troops in this country, recently returned from Natchidafh, and arrived here laft evening from Fort Adams, informs us that the Spanifh commandant at Nathidafh came on to Nofhidafh with the Marquis de Cafa Calvo, when captain Porter ordered them both out of the territory ceded to the United States, which the commandant refufed to comply with—whereupon captain Porter proceeded with a ftrong party againft the Spanifh ports and drove them over the Sabine River. That after this news arrived, a fecond perfon brought intelligence, that a party of five hundred Spanifh horfe had arrived to reinforce thofe poft.—That a fevere engagement took place between them and the force under captain Potter, in which the Spaniards were completely routed.

"If this news be true, and there is no reafon to doubt it, as Capt. Potter had determined when he was attacked to force them over the Sabine at leaft, the force of national fpirit fpreads like electricity, and if we are forced to go on, a hurricane cannot be more deftructive, if they do not ftop by furrendering to us the ceded territory."

British Captures.—From the 23d of July, to the 5th of Nov. 1805, the Britifh took 30 French and Spanifh men of war, carrying 2230 guns, and 13,220 men.—Twenty-fix of the veffels were fhips of the line. Since which, in the Weft-Indies they have taken 3 French fhips of the line, and deftroyed 2.

LEGISLATURE OF UPPER CANADA.

An ACT to make Provision for certain sheriffs in this Province.

[Passed 3d March, 1806.]

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WHEREAS it is necessary to make some provision for such Sheriffs in this Province, who have no Salaries established by Law; may it please your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That from and out of the Rates and Duties already raised, levied and collected, or hereafter to be raised, levied and collected, to and for the uses of this Province, there shall be granted annually to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, the sum of three hundred pounds Currency, out of the Provincial Treasury, from such monies now remaining, or which may hereafter come into the Receiver General's hands unappropriated, which said sum of three hundred pounds shall be appropriated and applied for the payment of Salaries, to the persons hereafter mentioned, in manner following, (That is to say) to the Sheriffs of the Eastern and Western Districts, and the Sheriffs of the Districts of London, Niagara, Newcastle, and Johnstown, for the time being, the sum of fifty pounds respectively.

II. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Sheriff of each and every District in this Province, shall give a Bond jointly & severally with two sufficient Sureties, to his Majesty, his heirs or successors, in the sum of 1000*l.* with a condition, that the same shall be void if the said Sheriff shall pay over all money which he may collect, either to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, or to any person who may be entitled to the same. Provided however, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to debar any person or persons from having his, her, or their remedy against such Sheriff or Sheriffs, for any breach of duty, in such manner as is or may be provided by any law or usage now in force.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the monies hereby granted to his Majesty, shall be paid by the Receiver General in discharge of such Warrant, or Warrants as shall for the purposes aforesaid, be from time to time issued by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person Administering the Government; and the said Receiver General shall account to his Majesty for the same, through the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being, in such manner and form as his Majesty shall direct.

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That this Act shall be, and continue in force eight years, from and after the passing of the same, and from thence to the end of the then next ensuing Session of the Provincial Parliament, and no longer.

An ACT to repeal an Act passed in the thirty fifth year of his Majesty's Reign, intituled, "An Act to regulate the practice of Physic and Surgery.

[Passed 3d March, 1806.

WHEREAS the provisions of an Act passed in the thirty-fifth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to regulate the practice of Physic and Surgery," are inexpedient in the present state of the Province; For remedy whereof, Be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That the said Act, intituled, "An Act to regulate the practice of Physic and Surgery," be, and the same is hereby repealed

An ACT to procure certain Apparatus for the promotion of Science.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

MAY it please your Majesty, whereas it is of importance to the welfare of this Province, that the rising Generation may be furnished with the means of such instruction as may render them useful members of the Community, We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of this Province in Parliament assembled, do most humbly beseech your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That from and out of the Rates and Duties already raised and collected, or hereafter to be raised and collected, to and for the uses of this Province, there be granted to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, the sum of four hundred pounds out of the Provincial Treasury, from such monies now remaining, or which hereafter may come into the Receiver General's hands unappropriated; which said sum of four hundred pounds shall be appropriated and applied in purchasing a collection of Instruments suitable and proper for illustrating the principles of Natural Philosophy, Geography, Astronomy and the Mathematics, for the use of this Province, in such manner as the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person Administering the Government of this Province shall think proper to direct.

II. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person Administering the Government of this Province, is hereby authorized and empowered to deposit the said Instruments (under such conditions as he shall deem proper and expedient) in the hands of some person employed in the Education of Youth in this Province, in order that they may be as useful as the state of the Province will permit.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Receiver General shall account to his Majesty for the said sum of four hundred pounds, through the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, for the time being, in such manner as his Majesty shall direct.

An ACT to repeal an Act passed in the Forty-fourth year of his Majesty's Reign, intituled "An Act for granting to His Majesty a certain Sum of Money out of the Funds applicable to the uses of this Province, to defray the expences of amending and repairing the Public Highways and Roads, laying out and opening new Roads and building Bridges in the several Districts thereof;" and to make further provision for the opening and amending the said Roads.

[Passed 3d March, 1806.]

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WHEREAS it would very much advance the general prosperity of this Province, if the public Highways and Roads already laid out in the several districts thereof were amended and repaired, and new and additional Roads were laid out and opened in certain parts of the Province, to which at present there is very difficult access, and certain Bridges are also become indispensibly necessary, the want of which at present much endangers the lives of the King's Subjects; and whereas the rates heretofore imposed, and the duty by Law required to be performed, on the said public Highways and Roads are altogether inadequate to the several purposes aforesaid, and the imposing additional burthens by levying District Rates sufficient for the several purposes aforesaid, would, in the present circumstances of the Province, be found inconvenient, and the necessary provision can only be made out of the surplus of certain duties and taxes as yet unappropriated: Be it Enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "an Act to repeal certain parts of an Act, passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "an Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America, and to make further provision for the government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That an Act passed in the forty-fourth year of the reign of his Majesty, intituled, "an Act for granting to his Majesty a certain sum of money out of the funds applicable to the uses of this Province, to defray the expences of amending and repairing the public Highways and Roads, and building Bridges in the several districts thereof," be, and the same is hereby repealed.

II. And be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That from and out of the Rates and duties already raised, levied and collected, or hereafter to be raised, levied and collected, to and for the uses of this Province, there be granted to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, the sum of one thousand six hundred pounds, to be issued out of the Funds now remaining or hereafter to come into the Receiver General's hands unappropriated, and arising from such rates and duties as last aforesaid, which said sum of one thousand six hundred pounds, shall be disposed of and applied in the repairing of Roads, already laid out, and in laying out and opening new Roads, and making Bridges in the several Districts aforesaid, in such manner, and under such regulations, as are hereinafter enacted.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said sum of one thousand six hundred pounds, shall be disposed of in manner following: to the Eastern District the sum of two hundred pounds, to the District of Johnstown the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, to the Midland District the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, to the District of Newcastle the sum of two hundred pounds, to the Home District the sum of two hundred pounds, to the District of Niagara the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, to the District of London the sum of three hundred pounds, and to the Western District the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds.

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Treasurer of each and every District in this Province, shall receive the sum of money apportioned by this Act, and shall pay the same to such person or persons as the Justices of the Peace in General Quarter Sessions assembled, or the majority of them, shall order, which sum of money in each and every District as aforesaid, shall be laid out and applied for the improvement of the Public Highways leading throughout this Province, from the Eastern to the Western District, in such manner as the said Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled, or the majority of them shall limit and appoint.

V. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That each and every Treasurer as aforesaid, shall give Bonds for the due discharge of the trust vested in him by this Act, in the same manner that security is given for the money received from the District rates, and each and every Treasurer as aforesaid, shall and may retain in proportion to three pounds, on every one hundred pounds by him received and paid out as aforesaid, as a compensation for his services.

VI. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Road which shall be deemed the Public Highway throughout this Province, as far as the same extends, through the District of London shall be as follows, namely commencing at the Indian Mill on the Grand River, thence along the Road leading through the Township of Burford to the Delaware Town, on the River Thames, and across the said River, thence down the River to the tract of Land commonly called the Moravian Grant.

VII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the monies hereby granted to his Majesty shall be paid by the Receiver General in discharge of such warrant or warrants, as shall for the purposes herein before set forth, be from time to time issued by the Governor Lieutenant Governor, or person Administering the Government of this Province, and not otherwise, and the said Receiver General shall account to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors for the same, through the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being, in such manner and form as his Majesty his Heirs and Successors shall be graciously pleased to direct.

VIII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That this Act shall continue and be in force for two years from and after the passing of the same, and from thence to the end of the next ensuing Session of Parliament and no longer.

An ACT to alter and amend an Act passed in the thirty third year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to provide for the Nomination and Appointment of Parish and Town Officers," and also to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the thirty third year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to authorize and direct the laying and collecting of Assessments and Rates in every District in this Province, and to provide for the Payment of Wages to Members of the House of Assembly."

[Passed 3d March, 1806.

WHEREAS an Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the thirty-third year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to provide for the nomination and appointment of Parish and Town Officers within this Province," requires to be amended, Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, if any person or persons, who shall be chosen at any Town Meeting as a Town Clerk, Assessor, Overseer of the Highway, Pound Keeper, or Town Warden, shall die within the year for which he shall be chosen, or shall leave the Township or Parish; it shall and may be lawful for the Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled, or the majority of them, to nominate and appoint a fit and proper person to fill the vacancy occasioned by such death or removal.

II. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That when from any neglect, a Town Meeting shall not be holden on the first Monday in March in any Township, or united Townships in this Province, it shall and may be lawful for the Justices of the Peace in Quarter Sessions assembled, for the District in which such Township, or united Townships are situate, or the majority of them, to nominate and appoint the said Parish and Town Officers of such Township, or united Townships until the next Town Meeting.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Clerk of the Peace shall, within eight days after such nomination and appointment, send a written notice to each and every Parish and Town Officer so nominated and appointed as aforesaid, requiring him to appear before some one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace (in the District in which such Quarter Sessions are holden) within eight days after the receipt of such notice, and take the Oath of Office, which Oath, or in the case of the people called Quakers, Menonists, or Tunkers, Affirmation, any Justice of the Peace as aforesaid, shall, and is hereby required to administer in the following form: "You A. B. do "promise and swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you will faithfully, "diligently and justly, serve and perform the office and duties of "for the of for the year ensuing, according to "the best of your abilities. So help you God."

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That it shall be the duty of any Constable, upon the request of the Clerk of the Peace, to serve such notice; and the Constable for such service, shall be entitled to such compensation as the said Justices of the Peace, or the majority of them, in Quarter Sessions assembled, shall think proper.

V. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons who shall be so nominated and appointed by the Justices of the Peace, or the majority of them, in Quarter Sessions assembled, in each and every District of the Province, shall refuse or neglect to repair to a Justice of the Peace in manner aforesaid, and take the said Oath of Office (or affirmation, being a Quaker, Menonist, or Tunker) the said person or persons so neglecting or refusing, shall forfeit and pay the sum of forty shillings, lawful money of this Province, with costs, upon conviction before the Court of Quarter Sessions; and the said Justices of the Peace, or the majority of them, in Quarter Sessions assembled, shall and may, upon such refusal or neglect, appoint other persons, and impose the like fine as often as the case may require.

VI. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That so much of an Act passed in the thirty-third year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to authorize and direct the laying and collecting of Assessments and Rates in every District in this Province, and to provide for the payment of Wages to Members of the House of Assembly," as requires a Collector to give a Bond to the Church or Town Wardens, of one hundred pounds, shall be, and the same is hereby repealed.

VII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That each and every Collector hereafter to be chosen and nominated by any Town Meeting, shall within one month after such appointment (and before he shall collect any money) enter into a Bond, jointly and severally with two sufficient sureties, to the Clerk of the Peace, in the sum of two hundred pounds lawful money of this Province, which Bond shall be in the following form: "Know "all Men by these presents, that we A. VIII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the Peace to draw the said Bond, and he shall be allowed the sum of five shillings for drawing the same, to be paid out of the District Treasury.

IX. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any Collector for any Township, or united Townships, shall neglect or refuse to give such Bond within one month as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the Justices of the Peace at the next General Quarter Sessions, or the majority of them, to appoint a Collector for the said Township or united Townships; and in the event of refusal, to appoint another as often as the case may require; and the said Collector so to be appointed by the Justices as aforesaid, shall give the like Bond that is herein directed to be given by the Collector chosen and nominated at the Town Meeting.

X. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That each and every Collector shall be allowed out of the Treasury of the District, the sum of one shilling for every mile which he shall travel in going to give a Bond to the Clerk of the Peace, as a compensation for the trouble and expence of himself and sureties.

XI. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That an additional sum of three pounds for every hundred pounds now allowed to the Collector, it shall and may be lawful for the Treasurer of each and every District, to pay to each and every Collector the further sum of two pounds on every 100l. which shall be collected and paid by him to the said Treasurer.

XII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if at any time it shall happen, that thro' the neglect or refusal of any person or persons, appointed under the authority of this Act or otherwise, the Assessment or Rate of any Township or united Townships, shall not have been collected within the year for which such Assessment or Rate was made, it shall and may be lawful for the Collector for the year ensuing, and he is hereby authorized and required to levy the Rate and Assessment so in arrear.

XIII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Officer and Officers appointed under and by virtue of this Act, shall be, and they are hereby declared to be vested with the same powers, and liable to the same penalties, as such Officer or Officers now are under by virtue of any other Act or Acts of the Legislature of this Province, except where it is in this Act especially provided for.

XIV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Fines and Forfeitures that shall or may be incurred under and by virtue of this Act, shall be levied, applied and accounted for, in the same manner as the Fines and Forfeitures under the aforesaid Act "To provide for the nomination and appointment of Parish and Town Officers," are directed to be levied, applied and accounted for.

WELSH INDIANS.

[From the Saratoga Advertiser.]

Several months ago I observed in your paper one or two pieces, containing some extraordinary accounts and conjectures concerning a people under the character of Welsh Indians, said or supposed, to exist far up the River Missouri. I did not recollect, at the time, that I had ever read any thing of the kind before; but, looking the other day over some of my old books I found one of the twelve small volumes entitled, "Materials towards a history of the American Baptist"—from which I have extracted, and now send you, the following articles, which greatly corroborate those accounts and conjectures:

"Though it be doubtful whether a nation of ancient Britons (usually called Welsh Indians) do exist in America, yet the grounds of the conjecture are not to be despised. It is no longer than 1767 since some Indians from the back of Lake Superior arrived at Quebec, who stated, "That far westward of them was a tribe of white people who wore beards, and dressed differently from the Spaniards, French and Englith: that they had the use of arms, poffeffed a well improved country, but were very shy of the black Indians, &c." See the account published at London, in the Ledger of Feb. 2, 1768. However our fore fathers thought that there was such a people, as appears by their letters: one of which, addreffed to the British Society, and dated Philadelphia, March 1, 1733-4, is as follows:

"Gentlemen,

"It is not unknown to you that Madac Gwyneda, Prince of Wales, did about 500 years ago, fail to the weftward with feveral fhips and a great number of his fubjects, and was never heard of after, fome reliques of the Welfh tongue being found in old and deferted fettlements about the Miffiffipi, made it probable that he failed up that river; and we, being moved with love to our country men, are meditating to go in fearch of them; but are difcouraged by the diftance of the place, and uncertainty of the courfe we fhould fteer. If you can give us any information and direction, together with fome help to bear the expence, we fhall find men adventurous enough to undertake the expedition, having no other end in view than to carry the gofpel of peace among our ancient brethren; and believing it will be to the enlargement of the British Empire in America, and a proof of prior right to the whole continent, fhould we happily fucceed.

"We remain, Gentlemen, your loving friends, &c.
Nathaniel Jenkins, Benjamin Griffith, Joseph Eaton, John Davie, David Evans, Rynatt Howel."

I muft confefs, that from a variety of circumftances, I am more than half convinced that thefe kind of hints and conjectures will finally lead to the key of the great myftery of the appearances and remains of ancient fortifications and fettlements in our weftern territory. Yours, &c. E. L.

Ballfton, Nov. 7, 1805.

GENEUINE HUMOUR.

A Letter to the Printer of a London Paper.

MR. PRINTER,

Since the prefent military mania has feized the inhabitants of this once peaceable town, I have not had one minute's happinefs: you muft know the infection very foon fpread itfelf into my family, my husband, who was what is called a good fort of a man, and would do whatever I bid him, is now become a very tyrant. If I afk him for a few guineas for a new gown [you know, Mr. Printer, a tradefman's wife ought to go decent.] he makes me no other reply but quick march! if he wants his dinner, he bids me order arms, and his fupper muft be got ready in ordinary time. We had a few friends to dinner with us laft Sunday, and inftead of faying grace decently, as he ufed to do, he called out attention—handle arms; and his grace after dinner is now fhut pans! Yet if I offer to expoftulate with him on account of his extravagance, he tells me, he'll give me fuch a volley as fhall bring my runts to clofe order; but this is nothing to the confufion it makes in the houfe; not a mop, broom or fpit, in fhort any thing that has a handle to it, but goes to rack; he miftakes every thing of the kind for a muflet, and the fervants are all as mad as himfelf. It was but yefterday that I caught him in the back ware houfe teaching them what he calls the manual. The cook was furnifhed with a fpit, the houfemaid had fhouldered my beft hair broom, and John, the porter, was prefenting arms with the fhop fcraper; my fon, Jackey, formed the light infantry at a diftance, trailing arms with the poker, while my good man gave the word of command; indeed they had fecreted themfelves fo effectually that I fhould never have found them but for the noife they made in marching and counter marching; however as I furprifed them before they could recover arms or prime and load, I very foon broke the line, and put the whole regiment to flight.—But this, Mr. Printer, is not the moft misfortune that I expect from this rage for manoeuvring, for between you and I, I am afraid we fhall manoeuvre away all our cuftomers. My husband has laid afide all his former modefty, and talks in the true military ftyle of importance. I heard him call the other day to the great man at the other end of the town, whom he fcarce before dared to look at, how it't comrade? and when Squire Goukey called to let us know he had not forgot the bill he owed us of about two years ftanding, inftead of thanking the gentleman, as tradefmen, you know, ought to do, he fhut too the door and bid the coachman to the right wheel. This very morning I was obliged to fend fuch a Bubble's houfe-keeper fa very pr[illegible]nd of a woman away becaufe nobody could be found to ferve her, my husband was gone to drill in the town hall, my fon was wheeling to the right by ranges, and forming platoons; the fhop-man was exercying meaf, in a neighbour's garden a few doors off, and the porter was priming and loading in the pantry. The only comfort I feel is, that my husband is not the only one that is thus altered. I fhall therefore, only add that I fhall, like my husband, but in a different fenfe, fupport arms, in the hope that this will be a fhort inconvenience; that our enemies will be convinced by this univerfal difplay of patriotic fpirit, that Englifhmen have but one hand and one heart in repelling from their coaft the ravagers of Europe, the deftroyers of order and fecurity, and the fcourge of human nature.

FROM A LONDON PAPER.

ROYAL FRACAS.

Fracas between the agents of Louis XVIII, and the Emigrant Noblefe in England.

A curious and intereffing correfpondence has taken place between one of the agents of Louis XVIII, and the party of Emigrants in this country. Much valuable matter has been difclofed to our Miniflers by this feafonable fracas and thereby our Government, at the commencement of this new war, will fee how the funds of England have been fquandered, and how its precious machinations againft the power of Bonaparte have been conducted by the click whom they kept in pay. The indifcretion of one of the moft polifhed courtiers of ancient France has given rife to the explofion. The Comte de Voudreuil happened, at the table of an Englifh gentleman, to accufe the Abbe de la Marre, "of being a very dangerous perfon—an agent of Bonaparte near the King—a vile debaucher, who, in all his miffions through Germany, was accompanied by his proftitute—and who, in fhort, was a man totally loft in reputation." This charge was faithfully reported to the Abbe, and it has drawn from him a moft maflerly detail of the whole conduct of the Emigrant party in England, the authors, advifers, and executors of thofe plots, which have coft the Britifh Government fuch a wafte of reputation, as well as money.

"Yes," fays the Abbe de la Marre, "I own, that, to this party, I am a dangerous perfon, for I am acquainted with every one of their practices, I know all their perfidies—all their intrigues; and am even acquainted with the terms of their fchemes, and the diftribution of their booty. At every journey which I made into England on the fervice of my Royal maflter, I witneffed the agitation which my prefence occafioned them, as if they apprehended that the fountain of gold was to be fhut againft them. "Yes—I am to them a dangerous man, becaufe, if I were admitted to the prefence of a Britifh Miniflter, I fhould be able to fay, that the King has been obliged to fpare, out of his own very fmall income, wherewith to pay his agents and correfpondents; and that he has never known either the amount of the fuccours which Great Britain has given to his caufe, or the manner in which they have been employed. I fhould be obliged to fay, that the difpenfers of thofe funds have conftantly faid to the agents of Government, "we are obliged, to conceal from the King all knowledge of projects, the moft ufeful, becaufe he has no confidence in the Britifh Miniflter."—The wretches!—while they wrote to the King, "That the Miniflry here were jealous of his agents, and would not permit them to communicate to him their defigns." I would prove, that, in only two inftances, in one week, I faw the Government robbed of 7,500l. fterling.

"If ever I fhall be called on to fpeak to the public, I fhall prove that the King, always a Frenchman, conftantly difapproved of the plan of defolation, invented by the avarice of thefe intrigues; and I fhall add, that in the autumn of 1803. His Majefty, without effect, iffued his orders for the return of his unhappy Georges from France! "becaufe, faid he, "Il n'y a plus rien a remuer dans fon pays que des cendres—There was nothing now left in his country to ftir but its afhes. If the time were come, I fhould publifh feven political letters which I addreffed in 1803, to the Comte d'Escars; and it will be feen, that the virulence of the party of the French Nobleffe in England againft me, takes its date precifely from the epoch when I difcovered the brigandage of the men who fo fcandaloufly made a traffic of the confidence of their Princes; and, when I in vain endeavoured to recommend an honorable and ufeful plan, in the room of projects, bafe, humiliating and difafterous." The Abbe goes on to fay, that thefe wretched projects have had the effect which he anticipated, of rallying round the new government of France, all the intereft, all the Amourpropre, the ambition of the French people: and becaufe he predicted all this, they call him the agent of Bonaparte. This hiftory of his political fervices will give the lie to the charge. He dares the whole click to fhew, that a fingle fervant or agent of the choice of his Majefty has been faithlefs—but he pledges himfelf to name ten traitors who have furprized, and actually betrayed, the confidence of Monfieur, "without prejudice, to thofe who may yet be in fervice." The Abbe gives a moft ftriking picture of the perfons who compofe the party, both as to their intellectual and moral features; and particularly defcribes the character of the agents whom they entrufted abroad, on their redoubtable miffion. The Danans of glorious memory—the famous Bayard—the very dear and faithful Abbe le Moine, &c.! And he dates the whole world to fay, that, in any one of his journies in Auftria, in Pruffia, in Ruffia, in England, he was ever feen accompanied by any woman, honeft or difhoneft, his journies were always made with extreme expedition; and feveral times, at the moft rigorous feafon, he went from Uberlingen, or Auflburgh to Mitteau, without twice going to bed. A man muft have had ftrange cruelty to drag a woman along with him! And where, he demands, could he have found money for fuch fcandal? His expences were fettled at a Committee of Agency, held at Coburgh, on the 9th of May, 1801, the ftatement was fent to the King, and he then received a declaration. "That no part of the funds granted by England, from the 1ft of February 1798, to the 9th of May 1801 had been paid to him; he then gave in his refignation. "Which of you all, Meffieurs" fays he, "can produce fuch a certificate!" The Abbe concludes with a declaration, that if juftice is not done to his injured character, he will forthwith puniih all the details of the infamous manner in which the money iffued for the caufe of the French K g, has been intercepted, diftributed, and mifapplied.

FROM A LONDON PAPER—Sept. 1805.

LAW REPORT EXTRAORDINARY.

COURT OF PIED POUDRE.

"At this Court of Fied-poudre, held by Statute, in and for the fair of Edmonon, and the precincts thereof, in the county of Middlelex on Saturday the 14th of September, in the year of our Lord, 1805. and in the 46th year of the reign of King George III. and continued by adjournment, till the 17th day of the fame month the Homage, upon their oaths, prefent, that one Ann Scarfeale, late of the parifh of St. Ann, Soho, widow, not having the fear of God before her eyes, but being moved and infligated by the Devil, did, on the 16th of the faid month of September, in defiance of the laws of religion and morality, and in breach of the expreis provifions of this Statute or fair, appear in the ufual place appointed for the hiring of female fervants, and there and there, falfely pretending that fhe was in want of a fervant for her lawful houfehold occafions, did attempt to hire one Elizabeth Beazley, of the age of 16 years, and did accordingly profefs to hire her as fuch fervant, as aforefaid, at the rate of eight guineas by the year, paying her, as earneft for fuch fervice, the fum of half a guinea and the Homage further prefent, that, by certain information, it appears to them, the faid Ann Scarfeale is the keeper of a houfe of ill fame, in or near a certain ftreet, called Liffe ftreet, Leicefter fields, or elfewhere, in that neighborhood; and, that in hiring the faid Elizabeth Beazley, as her pretended fervant, fhe had no intention of engaging her in a lawful and induftrious fervice; but, on the contrary, meant to decoy her, for the purpofe of deftroying her innocence, and for the take of her own private lucre, to inveigle her into a finful courfe of life, and to bring her to fhame and ruin, to the great difpleafure of Heaven to the fcandal of the Fair, and the laws thereof, to the evil example of others, and in contempt of the regulations of the ftatute; and againft the peace of our Lord the King, his crown and dignity. Upon this prefentment Mrs. Scarfeal was thrice fummoned to appear, but did not come forward. A Conftable was fent in fearch of her—he brought her in the courfe of five minutes, and Elizabeth Beazley with her. The prefentment was again read in her prefence, and fhe was put to plead to it. She admitted fhe had hired the girl, and faid, fhe meant to take her home as her ordinary fervant; but fhe wholly denied that her character and occupation were as fet forth in the prefentment. A young Baronet, whofe name it would be highly improper to expofe, as he acted fo honorable a part appeared, and depofed in the prefence of the Court, that Mrs. Scarfeale was of the defcription alledged in the prefentment. He confeffed, with regret, he had been frequently at her houfe, but he rejoiced, that his errors had been, in this inftance, the means of faving an inexperienced and virtuous girl from the fate which fo many others had met with. The fact appeared quite clear, and the Delinquent was convicted. She was fentenced to be drawn through the fair in a cart, with an infcription over her, defcribing her offence; after which fhe was ordered to be ducked, and then conveyed the diftance of one mile out of the town, by the proper Peace Officers. This fentence was carried into immediate execution, to the great delight of every one who witneffed fo fingular an act of juftice.

A QUALIFICATION FOR A KINSMAN.

Sir Nicholas Bacon being once in his capacity of Judge was on the point of paffing fentence upon a fellow juft found guilty of a robbery, the culprit greatly importuned him to fave his life; and among other things alledged he had the honour of being one of his lordfhip's relations. "How do you prove that?" faid Sir Nicholas, "My lord," replied the man, "your name is Bacon, and my name is Hog, and hog and bacon have in all ages been reckoned akin." "That is true," anfwered the judge, "but hog is never bacon till it has been hanged, and therefore, until you are hanged, you can be no relation of mine."

In the fummer of 1792, a gentleman went to Portfmouth for the benefit of fea-bathing. He was conducted in one of the machines into the water, but being unacquainted with the Peepnels of the fhore, and no fwimmer, he found himfelf, the inftant he quitted the machine, nearly out of his depth. The ftate of alarm into which he was thrown, increafed his danger; and unnoticed by the perfon who attended the machine, he would unavoidably have been drowned, had not a large newfoundland dog, which by accident was ftanding on the fhore and obferved his diftrefs, plunged into his aflifance. The dog feized him by the hair, and conducted him fafely to the fhore; but it was fometime before he recovered. The gentleman afterwards purchafed the dog at a high price, and preferved him as a treafure of equal value with his whole fortune.

An unfortunate Taylor who had committed fome Law buiinefs to the hands of an attorney, well practifed in his profeffion, had a bill delivered to him containing fuch a variety of unexpected charges, that he thought himfelf fleeced moft unmercifully. The only fatisfaction which occurred to him was to prevailed on the conficientious attorney to have a fuit of cloaths made, for which he, in his turn, gave us fomething like the following Bill:

By this bill he contrived to have a fufficient fet-off againft the attorney.

The wonderful fhower of Peas in Germany, is not without its parallel in England; for in the library of the Royal inftitution, in a fmall book with the following title:—"A wonderful and ftrange newes, which happened in the Countys of Suffolke, and Eſſex, the firſt of February, being Friday, 1583. where it rayned wheat, the ſpace of ſix or ſeven miles compaſs: written by William Averell, Student in Divinitie. Imprinted at London, for Edward White, dwelling at the little North doore of Paules church, at the ſigne of the Gunne, 1583."

MONEY.

Petrarch, in a letter to his friend Settimo, gives us his opinion of the origin and uſe of gold, which, though it may offend the worldling, will accord with the feelings of the philoſopher and moraliſt. "It is made,' ſays he, to ſolace the wants, and not to nourish the paſſions of men. In this view it was originally fought from the mines, purified, ſtruck, and ſtamped. He who expends it properly, is its maſter; he who lays it up, its keeper; he who loves it, a fool; he who fears it, a ſlave; he who adores it, an idolator: the truly wiſe is he who deſpiſes it.'

Mechanics, the favorites of Fortune.—The following five inſtances of rare good fortune have occured within the ſhort ſpace of two years. In the 2d Literary Lottery, the prize of 25,000 dollars was drawn by a Blackſmith, in the City of New York—in the 3d Lottery, the 25,000 came up the property of a Taylor in Baltimore; and the 20,000 dollars to a Taylor in New-York. A Shoemaker in New-York has the the 20,000 in the Road Lottery now drawing in that City; and a bookbinder in Philadelphia has the 10,000 in the Delaware Bridge Lottery, alſo now drawing.

Eſtates in Scotland.—Sir John Dalrymple has ſent the following communications to a news paper:

"The perſon who told that the rents of my Eſtate in Heriot Mun were raiſed from 200l. to 3000l. a year, told you true; but he has forgotten to tell you, that not one of the tenants is changed, or diſcontented.

"This leads me, to a fact that does great honor to a gentleman of this country.—His tenants offered him five rents to riſe up a farm: the gentleman anſwered, that he would take four, not five, becauſe he wiſhed to ſee his tenants thrive."

HEMP COMMITTEE.

Quebec, 31ſt March, 1806.

RESOLVED, That the encouragement offered by the reſolution of the 9th December, 1802, to ſuch as will undertake the culture of Hemp, be further continued during the preſent year 1806, under the conditions herein after mentioned, viz.

1ſt. That the Farmer, to whom Hemp ſeed ſhall be delivered by the Secretary, ſhall be held to return the ſame quantity of ſeed he ſhall have received out of the Produce of the enſuing crop, without being intitled to any demands for the ſame.

2d. That he ſhall bind himſelf to ſow the ſaid ſeed on a ſoil prepared for the purpoſe, to nurſe the plant, and to pull the male and female Hemp, each in its proper ſeaſon, and not break and ſcutch the ſame conformably to the printed inſtructions, which have been already or ſhall be hereafter diſtributed by the Secretary.

3d. That every farmer, before he can claim any recompenſe from the Committee, ſhall be obliged to produce an affidavit taken before a Magiſtrate, of his having bona fide fulfilled all the conditions herein before mentioned.

RESOLVED, That the Secretary be authoriſed to deliver Hemp ſeed to ſuch Farmers as ſhall apply for the ſame, under the aforeſaid reſtrictions.

Our troops are arrived from the continent. Forty ſail of tranſports with the troops arrived on Saturday in Yarmouth roads—they were to have proceeded to the Downs direct, but the wind prevented them. It is ſuppoſed they will be landed at Yarmouth.

We underſtand Mr. Fox has already ſent diſpatches to all our Miniſters at Foreign Courts, announcing the change in our Miniſtry, adding that his wiſh is to reſtore peace to all Europe. If report be true, it is Mr. Fox's intention to make peace with France, leaving the Boulogne flotilla, as it now is; and he propoſes to guard againſt the danger of its exiſtence by compelling every man in this country capable of bearing arms to learn the uſe of them. The whole of our male population of this deſcription is to be enrolled, called out occaſionally in diviſions, and ready on any ſudden emergency to take the field.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Speaker on taking the chair, ſtated that the Houſe having purſuant to order, waited on his Majeſty with their Addreſs on the ſubject of his gracious Speech, his Majeſty was pleaſed to return the following Anſwer:

GENTLEMEN,

I thank you for this dutiful and loyal Addreſs. Your condolence on the loſs of my late brother, the Duke of Glouceſter, affords a new proof of your attachment to my perſon and family. Your cordial concurrence in my diſpoſition to cultivate at all times an intimate connection with the Emperor of Ruſſia, gives me the greateſt ſatisfaction; and the aſſurance of your unabated vigilance and exertion in the preſent poſture of affairs, enables me to look forward with increaſed confidence to ſuch a termination of the conteſt as may be conſiſtent with the ſafety and permanent intereſts of my dominions.

Letters of recall have been ſent off by King's Meſſengers to nearly all our Ambaſſadors at Foreign Courts.

Weſtminſter Election.—As ſoon as Mr. Fox was re elected yeſterday, for Weſtminſter, he got into the chair, prepared for him, which was crimſon damaſk, richly gilt and covered with laurels.—He was chaired round Covent Garden, amidſt the loud acclamations of the populace. When he quitted the chair, he went into Hudſon's hotel, Covent Garden; the inſtant he got out of the chair the populace tore the laurels off, and carried it in triumph.

Mr. Fox was dreſſed in his uſual coſtume of blue and buff. Among the company who appeared on the huſtings before thoſe already mentioned, were Dr. Lawrence, Sir Francis Burdett, (whoſe appearance ſtrongly marked the remains of his late illneſs) &c. &c.—Mr. Tierney was alſo preſent.

In the afternoon the friends of Mr. Fox dined at the Crown and Anchor Tavern. Mr. Fox in the Chair. Mr. Sheridan ſat on his right hand, and Lord R. Spencer on his left. The dinner was ſerved up about ſix o'clock.—After dinner, the firſt toaſt propoſed by Mr. Fox, was—

"The King, with three times three."

The next toaſt was:

"The Electors of the City of Westminster."

After which, Mr. Sheridan rose and said, he would not detain the company by one word of preface, from drinking a health which he was sure was dear to them; that was the health of Mr. Fox. —(Rapturous applause.)

"The Prince of Wales," was next given by Mr. Fox, and received with enthusiastic applause. Mr. Fox then gave

"Earl St. Vincent, and success to his command."

"The Duke of Bedford, and success to the Government of Ireland."

Mr. Fox, after observing, that he had not intended to propose the healths of any part of that administration of which he had the honor to form a part, said, that he meant, notwithstanding, to make one exception, and that was,

"The Lord High Chancellor of England and the Trial by Jury."

Mr. Fox then observed, that as he not only labored under some degree of indisposition, as must have been observed on the hustings that day, but also had some business to transact, he would beg leave to retire, after giving a toast which he had long been in the habit of proposing —

"The cause of Liberty all over the world."

CITY ADDRESS.

Yesterday the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs and Common Council of the city of London, waited upon his Majesty at St. James's, (being introduced by the Lord in waiting) with the following address, which was read by John Sylvester, Esq. the Recorder:

To the KING's most excellent Majesty.

The humble, loyal and dutiful Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the city of London in common council assembled.

Most gracious Sovereign,

We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the city of London, in common council assembled, most humbly approach your Majesty, with the warmest sentiments of loyalty and attachment to your Majesty's sacred person and family.

We beg to assure your Majesty, that while we contemplate with the deepest concern and disappointment, the late disastrous events which have led in so rapid and extraordinary a manner, to the defeat and humiliation of the Austrian power, we cannot refrain from offering to your Majesty, our sincere thanks and congratulations, on the formation of an administration, combining men of the highest confideration and talents, affording amidst these adverse events, the cheering prospect, that by such a union of wisdom and energy in your Majesty's councils, a system of vigor, vigilance and oeconomy will be adopted, which may support our public affairs, preserve and strengthen our national security, and prove most conducive to the honor and dignity of your Majesty's crown, and the happiness and liberties of your people.

Viewing the high and distinguished characters composing your Majesty's present government, we have perfect confidence, that under your Majesty's direction, the national strength will be augmented, its resources improved and preserved, and the utmost energies of a free, loyal and united people will be called into action, so that, with the blessing of Divine Providence, this country may keep safe its liberties and independence, and may maintain its due rank among the nations of Europe.

Permit us to assure your Majesty of our firm co-operation in every measure which may be deemed essential towards resisting any unreasonable pretensions on the part of your Majesty's enemies, and for enabling your Majesty to restore to your people the blessings of peace, on such terms as may be consistent with the honor, dignity and safety of these realms.

Signed, by order of the Court,

HENRY WOODTHORPE.

To which address his Majesty was pleased to return the following most gracious answer:

I thank you for this loyal and dutiful address. I receive with the highest satisfaction, your assurances of loyalty and attachment to my person and family; and you may rest assured that I can have no other object in view, in the measures adopted for the administration of my government, than to maintain the honor and dignity of my crown, and the union, the happiness, and the essential interests of my people.

They were all very graciously received and had the honor to kiss his Majesty's hand.

Feb. 21.

A council of the cabinet ministers was yesterday held at Mr. Secretary Fox's office in Downing street. Rumor stated, that the deliberations related to the subject of peace; but we could not trace this rumor to any authentic source

A private letter from Bremin of the 11th inst. contains the following article relative to the sentences passed on the officers whose conduct produced the recent misfortunes to the house of Austria:—

"You have of course heard, that the Archduke Charles has caused a thorough investigation into the causes of the misfortunes of the Imperial arms in Germany; and, astonishing to think, the undermentioned persons, so high in the confidence of his Majesty, are said to have had the following sentences passed upon them, for the criminal part they have acted in the late transactions:

Prince Auersberg, to be deprived of his nobility, his estates confiscated, and imprisoned ten years in the fortress of Spielberg.

Prince Lamberti, imprisoned for life in the said fortress.

General Jell, sentenced to be shot.

Privy Counsellor Callenbach, ordered to quit the Imperial states.

Counsellor Fasbender, to be dismissed from his office.

Field marshal Kaunitz, and field marshal Ausenberg, have committed suicide while under arrest.

All the staff officers of the regiments of Kaunitz and Spork, reduced and discharged.

Count Cobentzel, ordered to quit the country.

General Mack's plans to be submitted to a board of general officers.

Thirty generals dismissed, and many more under examination.

The trimming policy of the cabinet of Berlin is universally reprobated in the North of Germany. It has formally acknowledged the mock sovereigns of Bavaria and Wirtemberg.

We understand that a close blockade of all the enemy's ports is one of the measures determined upon by the new board of admiralty.

Articles of Capitulation proposed by the Lieutenant Colonel Hieronimus Caftmicus von Prophalow, Commandant of the Town, Caftle, &c. circumjacent Fortifications of the Cape of Good Hope.

To the Major General, in the service of his Britannic Majesty, Sir David Baird, K. B. and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's forces, and Commodore Sir Home Popham K. B. Commander in Chief of his Britannic Majesty's Naval forces in Table Bay.

Art. I.—The capitulation being signed, the Cape Town, Caftle, and circumjacent Fortifications shall be immediately surrendered to the troops of his Britannic Majesty. The Fortifications of the King's Block house, Craig's Tower, and all the Batteries within that circuit, on the other side of Camp's Bay.

Art. II.—The garrison shall, at the surrender, march out with all the honors of war—and shall then lay down their arms and become prisoners of war; but such officers as are natives of the colony, or married with natives, or in possession of sufficient landed property to become regularly, and—bona fide domiciliated, shall be at liberty to continue here so long as they behave themselves as becometh good subjects and citizens; or proceed to Great Britain with regular passports, having previously paffed their parole not to serve until regularly exchanged.

Art. III.—All officers, who, according to the previous article must go to Europe, shall be provided with passages at the expence of his Britannic Majesty, and shall have leave to realize their property previous to their departure, and receive the same pay as they did in their own service, till the day of their embarkation.

Art. IV.—The French subjects, who, belonging to the stranded frigate Atalante, and the stranded privateer le Napoleon, were casually here, and comprehended in the capitulation, shall be treated on the same footing as the garrison, but they must all be embarked for Europe, as well as every other French subject in the colony.

Art. V.—The inhabitants of the town, who have borne arms, to be confidered as belonging to the town, and their immediate return to their former occupations. But the distinction between the Burghers and other inhabitants to remain the same, and subject to the same restrictions as under the Dutch laws.

Art. VI.—All bona fide private property, whether belonging to the civil or military servants of the government, to the Burghers and inhabitants, to churches, orphans, and other public institutions of that kind, shall remain free and untouched.

Art. VII.—Public property of every description, whether consisting of treasure, or naval, or military stores, buildings, estates or merchandizes belonging to the Batavian Republic or the government of France, shall be delivered up, and proper inventories given of them as soon as possible.

Art. VIII.—The Burghers and inhabitants shall preserve all their rights and priveleges which they have enjoyed hitherto public worship as at present in use, shall also be maintained without alteration.

Art. IX.—The paper money, actually in circulation shall continue current as heretofore, until the pleasure of his Britannic Majesty is known.

Art. X.—The lands and houses, the property of the Batavian Republic, which must be delivered in consequence of the present capitulation, shall remain as security for that part of the Paper money which is not already secured by mortgages upon the estates of individuals, by its having been put to them.—This is however to be without prejudice to the free use to be made of the said lands and houses for public purposes.

Art. XI.—Prisoners of war, comprehended in the present capitulation, shall not be pressed into his Britannic Majesty's service, or engaged against their own free will and content. With respect to other persons, they are provided for in article V. of this Capitulation.

Art. XII.—The inhabitants of Cape Town shall be exempted from having troops quartered on them.

Art. XIII.—Two ships having been sunk in Table Bay, to the great detriment of the Roadstead—either after the Batavian Republic had sent out a flag of truce, or whilst it was in contemplation to do so, they are to be raised again and delivered over in an entire state of repair; this having been done without the sanction of the commandant, raising of the said ships, shall be incumbent on those who sunk them.

Art. XIV.—The Capitulation shall be signed at Fom Ditto this afternoon, when the Caftle of the Cape Town, and all the adjacent forts, previously mentioned, shall be surrendered to his Britannic Majesty's troops.

Given under our Hands and Seals, this thirtieth day of January, in the year of our Lord 1806, at Papendorp near Fort Knocke.

LONDON, February 25.

The Electors of Bavaria and Wirtemberg were proclaimed kings on the first day of this month, at which time Napoleon was at Munich. A report had prevailed a visit on the continent, that he intended making to Berlin, where, it appears, the Emperor Alexander is again expected.

February 26.

It is the general opinion in Spain, that they will be compelled by the French, to march an army against Portugal in the approaching spring. We recollect an article to this effect, in the Monitour, some days ago, given as intelligence received from Madrid, but which, in all probability, came direct from the French government.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 1.

There were lately apprehended in the town and neighborhood of Stockport, no less than twenty-two boys, twelve of whom were last week committed to Chester Caftle, to take their trials at the ensuing assize; the oldest of this number, we lament to say, is only sixteen, and the youngest eleven! Such a numerous gang of depredators of such an early age, we believe is without a parallel, and the crimes alledged against them are of considerable magnitude, such a pocket-picking, shop-lifting, &c.

Singular Bet.—On Monday week (Plough Day) a bet of 5s. was decided in the Caftle yard, York, between John Hodgson and Samuel Whitehead, both debtors: it was, which of them was to appear in the most singular and original character. The former was decorated with a ten guinea bank note on his waistcoat breast, a number of five guinea notes down the lame, and on both sides of his coat breast, with guinea notes on his shoulders and sleeves of his coat; round his hat band were a great number of five guinea notes, and near the top of the hat crown was fixed a purse of gold, which went round the lame. On his back a paper with the words "John Bull."—Whitehead appeared in a woman's dress on one side, with a silk stocking, a neat slipper and that side of his face painted. The other side of his face and body resembled a negro, with a man's dress, and a new boot and spur. The wager was given in favor of Hodgson, whole bills amounted to 375 guineas, independent of the gold.

Monument to Lord Nelson.—The first monument to the memory of Lord Nelson, has been raised near Caftle Townsend, in the County of Cork, by Captain Watson, of the Royal Navy, on the Sunday next after the arrival of the accounts of the late signal naval victory, and of the glorious price at which it was purchased—This gallant young officer collected the Sea-Fencibles of his extensive district, amounting to near one thousand men, and having led them to the summit of the highest hill in that mountainous country, he informed them, in a most animated speech, that he had brought them there, that they might dedicate that day, he hoped not unworthily, to the erecting on that spot visible from all the surrounding land and sea "A Memorial of the fall of the greatest of Heroes, in the acquisition of the most splendid of victories." Captain Watson, as might have been expected, succeeded in inspiring his large body of volunteer architects, with his own enthusiasm, and within six hours, a lofty and solid arch, (previously designed by him) was completed. It is 20 feet in clear height above its base—the walls are every where 12 feet in thickness, and are composed of large masses of granite, with which the mountain abounds. It fronts the sea, and is distinguishable from all the coast, between Cape Clear and Kinsale.—Lon. Pap.

Massacre.—Particular account of the massacre of the officers and crew of the ship Atahualpa, captain Porter. (Communicated by captain Isaacs, of the Montezuma:)

"The ship Atahualpa, had been lying at anchor, in Sturgis Cove, up Mill Bank Sound, three days; the natives had during that time, been remarkably civil; June 12th, they came off in several canoes, and desired captain Porter, to purchase their skins, and about 10 o'clock A. M. Caleie, the chief of one of the tribes, desired captain Porter to look over the side, to see the large number of skins, lying spread on his canoe. Captain Porter was complying, but was obliged to bend over the rail, when the chief threw his coat over his head, stabbed him twice between his shoulders, and threw him overboard; and gave the signal for a general attack. Mr. John Hill, chief mate, was shot through the body, but ran below, got his musket, returned on deck, and shot the chief, and gave him (as we have heard since) his mortal wound—John W. Goodwin, 2d mate, shot dead, John G. Rackstraw daggered, and died immediately, Lyman Plummer, daggered, and lived until the ship was got out, when he requested the surviving crew to take care of the ship and find Capt. Brown, Isaac Summers, cooper, Luther and Samuel Lapham, Peter Spooner, seaman, and John Williams, cook, were all killed. The cook defended himself bravely, so long as his hot water lasted; but when that was expended, they killed him with the axe. Three seamen, one Sandwich Islander, and a Kanaka Indian, were dangerously wounded, but have since recovered. Five more of the crew were slightly wounded, and three men and a Sandwich Islander, were all that went clear. The four that were not wounded, and two or three were slightly, rushed through through the crowd of Indians, got below and found a few muskets loaded, fired them through the loop holes in the break of the forecastle, which terrified the natives, and many jumped overboard, when the people came on deck, and after fighting a few Indians that seemed determined to hold their prize, killed and drove all overboard. One canoe was seen under the bows, endeavouring to cut the cable; a swivel was taken from the after part of the ship forward, discharged at them, six were killed by the swivel, and one afterwards by a musket, so only one was left alive in the canoe. The crew lost their jacket-knives; by stabbing the Indians through their skulls and were unable to draw them out. After the decks were cleared the topsails were loosed; when the ship swung her head off shore, the cable was cut, and after sometime beating, was able to get out of the sound. Two days after, were off Newetts, the wind coming ahead, shaped a course towards the Northward. June 17, depositied the bodies of our deceased ship-mates in the deep.

DARHAM, April 8.

Sweep-Stakes.—Last Tuesday was performed the most cruel experiment with horses, that perhaps ever was witnessed in this, or either of the states. Two horses, one belonging to a Dr. Mason, the other to a Mr. Cabot, were to run from Providence to Boston, and back again, on an original bet of £250. This bet, we understand, together with others on the road, was augmented to upwards of £500. The horses arrived in this town about eleven o'clock, Saturday A. M. in two hours and about ten minutes. They turned together in Boston, and returned here in about one hour and fifteen minutes; the latter distance ten miles. One of the horses dropped down in Roxborough, about a mile beyond the half-way tavern, and soon died. The other held out to within three miles, or something less, of Providence; when with his rider, he failed, and both, we understand were carried into town. The last horse, it is said lived till the next morning.

THE FORCE OF NATURE: or THE SAD EFFECTS OF GAMING.

AN elderly French Lady, retired to her country seat, had only one child, a son, who was a handsome young man very much addicted to Gaming, and had loft, at one sitting no less than £40,000. Destitute, at length, of other means to live, he associated with a company of strolling comedians, who as it happened, paffed a short time at Worcester, near which town was the old lady's residence. After sustaining a few characters, the young actor was discovered, and the circumstance imparted to the mother. Though highly displeased with her son, she could not resist a wish to see him, and for this purpose went incog. to the theatre. The Gamester was the play, and the young man supported the principal character. During the recital of those passages which bore a resemblance to her son's bad conduct, the picture worked so forcibly on her feelings, that she exclaimed aloud "Aye, there he is!—the beggar!—the scoundrel!—Always the same!—No changeling!" The delusion grew so strong in the fifth act, where Beverley lifts up his hand to kill the child, that the old lady, in a tone of voice the most distressing, cried out "Wretch! that thus art, don't kill the child!—I will take it home with me!"

From the Washington Federalist, of March, 29.

On Wednesday last the bill prohibiting the importation of certain articles from Great Britain and Ireland, passed the house of representatives.—Ayes 98—Noes 32.—The bill is to go into operation the 15th of November next.

If any man knows of any thing more childish than the passage of this bill, he should be very glad to hear of it, that this may not stand alone in the annals of legislative nonsense.—To go into operation, after the importation of our fall goods, the 15th of November, a fortnight after the next meeting of congress, if they meet the first Monday in November, as they probably will. It is shewing the teeth, and at the same time declaring they are afraid to bite.

Mr. Randolph said but a few words—He declared it a milk and water bill; a dose of chicken broth to be administered eight months hence; a bill all most too contemptible for the discussion of men of sound minds. If, said he, you would throw the disgrace of it from your shoulders, throw the bill under the clerk's table: It is nothing more nor less than granting a bounty for perjury; for no part of it is worth a farthing, except that relating to custom-house oaths are: It cannot be carried into execution; you know it cannot; nor do you wish it should be; it is intended only for a show, a bugbear.—The times require something very different.—The administration wants energy. Is the house to be whipped into this measure by the underlings of government? Why will not gentlemen attend to the changes and present situation of Europe? Will they continue to go on the same unvaried round in their political go-cart, heedless of the changes by which we ought to be governed? Is not a negociation now pending? I call, Mr. Speaker, for the reading of the dispatches lately received.

Speaker. What dispatches.

Mr. Randolph. Those from Mr. Munroe.

Speaker. They are confidential.

Mr. Randolph. I hope they will be read.

Speaker. They are not in the possession of the house.

Mr. Randolph. I hope they will be sent for then.

Speaker. I have stated to the gentleman that they are not before the house, and if here they would not be read.

There was here a loud call for the question, and Mr. Randolph forbore rising again.

Messrs. Clopton and Newton spoke in favor of the bill.

Mr. Lyon moved to recommit the bill for the purpose of granting leave to the president by proclamation to declare it null, provided our differences with Great Britain should be adjusted.

There were about a dozen in favor of the motion.

As it now stands, importation must be stopped, though all disputes should be arranged at this moment. Something terrible in this to be sure. But the fact is, that they mean to meet the first of November to repeal it, they have inveigled a great number by urging the necessity of unanimity, and promising that particular care should be taken that the bill should never be executed. This is apparent. Well—it answers for a show! What a spirited and energetic congress we have! Buy lands twice of Spain, through fear of offending France; and pass a bill against England, the very face of which declares it cannot, and was never intended to be executed.

Mr. Randolph's resolutions to debar contractors and agents under government, of a seat in congress, and prevent the union of two offices, civil and military, in one person, after having been agreed to in committee of the whole, were rejected in the house by a large majority.

FUNERAL OF LORD NELSON.

LYING IN STATE AT GREENWICH.

BURIAL SERVICE AT ST. PAUL'S.

When the procession reached St. Paul's, the Lord Mayor, on a cparisonee horse, rode through the gates to the great steps, preceded by the mace, &c. six footmen uncovered, himself carrying the city gilt sword. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, preceded by two other of his Royal carriages, alighted from his state coach-and-six, accompanied by the Dukes of Clarence and Kent, and walked about the front yard, conversing with several Peers, &c. till the funeral car arrived. His Royal Highness was dreffed in full regimentals, with a sash on his arm, and wore the collar and other insignia of the Order of the Garter. All the way he had excited the most marked attention and regard; but here, in the centre of so many surrounding thousands, he became the object of general admiration. Although the nature of the solemnity, and the occasion, did not allow of tumultuous repetitions of faint-hearted acclaiming sinistrous perfiluage in the procession, yet there were the most evident demonstrations of the high value which all ranks appeared to set on this gracious tribute of affection and respect, so congenial with his own feeling, and so grateful to the public: from Temple Bar to St. Paul's, there was great clapping of hands, and hurraing scarcely refrained. The known disintegrated sentiment, "I and Lucre know the end and number of my days." During the performance of the choir service, the body of the church was illuminated by tapers throughout, but in a most brilliant and beautiful manner, by a large cornice hung with black, and on which were placed in black frames nearly 500 lamps, the whole forming an immense octangular chandelier, which beautifully pended by a rope from the centre and summit of the cupola, over hanging the spacious amphitheatre (covered also with black) as the place of interment. Nothing could have been more happily defigned to gratify the anxious curiosity of the spectators, while it to effectually heightened the splendid solemnity of the scene!

The choir service ended, the procession returned in the same order to the place of interment: Dr. Croft's "Man that is born" was sung from a gallery, erected on the back of the organ loft; and, after Handel's divine anthem, "His body is buried in peace!" the Bishop of Lincoln having read the service, except the last prayer, the body was placed on a platform, and solemnly deposited by a business-weight, low into the vault beneath. The last prayer ended, a grand solemn dirge was sung, composed for the occasion by Mr. Attwood; after which the style, titles and dignities of the deceased Peer, were proclaimed by Earl Marshal Deputy, when the wands of office were broken, and the awful ceremonial closed by the colours of the Victory being depositied with the chieftain who so gloriously fell under them!

The interment was concluded a little before 6, but the church was not evacuated by nine o'clock. It was estimated that not less than from 10 to 12,000 were present on this highly interesting, this powerfully impressive occasion. In the procession there were according to the calculations we were enabled to form of it as it passed on, of Gentlemen and Esquires, about 300, of members of the House of commons, about 60, of Peers, about 40. Of these there were seven of the Royal Family, and five of the Ministry, only one of whom however, took any place in the procession. The number of Naval Officers exceeded a hundred: the Military were about 50: and there was nearly an equal number of clergymen.

The most interesting part of the cavalcade; that which was certainly best calculated to make a strong impression upon the minds of the Spectators, was the exhibition made by a part of the crew of the Victory. Of that gallant body about 60 were in the church, and they bore two union jacks and the St. George's ensign belonging to the Victory. Their colours were perforated in various places by the shot of the enemy: several parts of the ensign were, in fact, literally shattered. These parts the seamen particularly expelled to view, and the effect of such exhibition may be eafily imagined. An hero, indeed, as the seamen and their colours come in fight, they become the principal object of attention. This was naturally to be expected. That man's mind muft be irregularly conftructed; it muft be infenfible to merit; it muft be unfufceptible of glory; it muft be indifferent to patriotifm, if motives do not exert more to his thoughts of fufficient ftrength to induce him to look with peculiar reverence to fuch men, particularly under the circumftances of the occafion. Upon the countenances of thefe gallant fellows there was an eloquent expreffion of ftedfaft forrow. Features which could never be taught or formed to expreft fear or unmanly feeling, feemed to be confiderably faftened by the influence of long fettled melancholy. Thefe men, whom no dangers could daunt, whofe nerves would ftand unbaken before the moft menacing terrors of death, ftemed deeply depreffed by the lofs of their commander. Their affection was fo apparent as to excite the moft lively ſympathy on the hearts of the ſpectators. It is our opinion, indeed, and we rather think no obſervant perſon will hefitate to concur with us, that the utmoft ingenuity of the dramatic art, aided by the power of the moft exquiſite performers, would fail to produce an effect upon the feelings by any means equal to that which proceeded from the ſimple, unaffected expreſſion of woe, which was evident in the countenances of thefe brave tars

The ſpeech of Sir Iſaac Heard, Garter King at Arms, in announcing the ſtile and titles of the deceaſed, had an impreſſive effect, from the very articulate and pathetic manner in which it was pronounced. The words are nearly as follows:

"Thus it has pleaſed Almighty God to take out of this tranſitory life, unto his divine mercy, the moſt Noble Lord Horatio Nelſon, Viſcount and Baron Nelſon of the Nile, and of Burnham Thorne, in the county of Norfolk, Baron Nelſon of the Nile, and of Hilborough in the ſame county; Knight of the moſt Honorable Order of the Bath, Vice Admiral of the White Squadron of the Fleet, and Commander in Chief of his Majeſty's ſhips and veſſels in the Mediterranean; alſo Duke of Bronte in Sicily; Knight Grand Croſs of the Sicilian Order of St. Ferdinand and of Merit; Member of the Ottoman Order of the Creſcent; Knight Grand Commander of the Order of St. Joachim; and the Hero who, in the moment of victory, fell covered with immortal glory! Let us humbly truſt that he is now raiſed to bliſs ineffable, and to a glorious immortality!"

Report ſtates, that the funeral will coſt 30,000l. independently of the monument.

There is no truth in the various reports of the perſon of Lord Nelſon being much changed when it was taken out of the ſpirits at the Nore: the body had been previouſly embalmed at Gibraltar: on being removed into the ſhell made of the L'Orient, no other variance appeared but in a little diſcoloring of the lips and the ancles: previouſly to being laid in the ſhell, a ſhirt, a pair of ſilk ſtockings, and his Lordſhip's uniform breeches, were put on the body, and a white cambric handkerchief tied round his neck, and another round the forehead to the back part of the head; it was then placed in an elm coffin caled with lead, and on its arrival, this was alſo received into the magnificent coffin in which the body now lies.

FROM THE BOSTON MAGAZINE.

"GODFREY GUMBAND'S inſtructions to groom horſes &c. contain a fund of humor: the following extracts from his work will give ſome idea of his manner

"It is a melancholy truth that our breed of horſes is terribly degenerated; but indeed the rational race is fallen off proportionably: nothing now is seen but bred horſes; every apprentice muſt beſtride a bit of blood. A bit of blood! and well may it be termed ſo, for neither flesh nor bone have they to boaſt of."

"Our author then ſets forth the advantage of a Dray horſe over every other.

"The pitiful ſpider-legged things of this age fly into a ditch with you, at the ſight of a pocket handkerchief, or the ſhowing of your note; whereas mount one of theſe and the world cannot alter your route. Meet a higler's cart, his oſs ſhy'd; either with his own head or your leg; fall in with a hackney coach and he will carry you flap dash againſt it."

The following gets laughing and never a beauties the confident aſſertion for a "fiery ſteed."

"The height of a horſe is perfectly immaterial, provided he is higher behind than before. Nothing is more pleaſing than the ſenſation at continually getting or going forward; whereas the rising a horſe at concuſſory muſe is like ſwarming the banniſters of a flair caſe, when though perhaps you really advance, you feel as if you were going backwards."

"Let him carry his head low, that he may have an eye to the ground and ſee the better where he ſteps.

"The left he lifts his fore legs the other he will move for his rider, and he will likewiſe break all the ſtones out of his way, which might otherwiſe throw him down. If he turns on his toes as well as his thumbs do, he will often diſpoſe them to the right and left, and not have the trouble of kicking the ſtone from a ſecond time."

"A bald face, well eyes, and white legs (if your horſe be not a grey one) is to be preferred; as no one will ſay although you may ride againſt what you pleaſe, that you will ride againſt you."

"I give myſelf very little trouble about the eyes of a horſe. If a rider is in full poſſeſſion of his own, what his horſe ſees is perfectly immaterial; having probably a bridle in his mouth to direct him where to go, and to ſtop him by reſiſt, if he ſhould be down. Let no man tell me that a blind horſe is not a match for one with the beſt eyes; when it is ſo ſtuck thathe cannot ſee; and when he can, it is ſuppoſed the gentleman on his back can, as well as he; and then it be eyes with a bridle, what has he to ſee?"

Theſe and other matter having been detailed, friend Geoffery undertakes to inſtruct the rider.

"Touching the apparel then, I will begin at top. Wear a wig, if poſſible, the larger and whiter it is the fafer for you; for ſhould your horſe prove what is properly termed, too many for you, and make off, nothing but the ſingularity of your appearance can reſtore you to your diſcomfitures tamely. The hallooing and hooting of the boys that this will occaſion, will enable your friends to trace you through moſt of the villages you may have paſt; and as their wit is, to know in what part of the country to have you cried.

"I never admired a round hat, but with a large wig it is inſupportable. A cocked hat brakes that advantage over its competitor, the dignity it gives to the moſt unhappy countenance, has to many others that it is wonderful it is not in univerſal wear. If in windy weather you are hinded, in rainy you are deluded by a round hat; whereas one properly cocked, will retain its wear until you arrive at your haiting place, and keep your head, apt to be haated by riding, agreeably cool; having much the ſame effect on it that a pan of water has upon a flower pot

"Let your boot be ſomewhat ſhort, and the knees of your breeches but juſt reach the joint, ſo that the flap of the ſaddle may be continually curling up, and cha ing you between the cushion of the boot and breeches, it will ſcarcely you that your leg is in a proper poſition.

"When mounted there is a grace to be obſerved. Lean the body pretty well forward over the pommel of the ſaddle, there is an appearance of ardents in it that enobliſhes the figure of a rider very much indeed; particularly if he be mounted on a long backed horſe who throws his ſaddle forward, and is unincumbered with acroupier: here he exhibits an elegant poſture of careleſs indifference, and ſeems contemptuouſly to leave the world behind him.

"The being able to guide a horſe is a matter of ſome moment on the road, though it may not be ſo any where elſe. Ride with a ſtiff whip; it diſcarries ſportſman. If your horſe bears too much to the right of courſe you drop the rein entirely on that ſide, and pull them up ſharp with both hands on the other; but if that does not anſwer you muſt refer to your whip, as a good ſmart cut over the right cheek and eye, will ſoon let him ſtraight again.

"The next enquiry is how to let off. Before ever your horſe gets into motion, ſlip both your feet into him pretty ſharp; this will let him a going for the whole day and then if him that you have got ſpurs on, which if he did not know he might incline to be idle. Thus then you go off with eclat, provided nothing is in your horſe's way, and if there is you have put him to on his mettle, he will probably leap over it. Indeed it is far from improbable he may run away with you but if he does you will make a moſt ſprited appearance.

"When a man is once run away with, the firſt thing that occurs to him is how to ſtop his horſe. A French Count tried ſeveral experiments one of which only anſwered, which was by running at the reaſing horſe; daſhing at him with true French ſpirit, he produced the deſired effect; his horſe not being able to proceed ſtopped and that is ſaid to be the way that the Earl of Pembroke would have been killed, and old Newcaſtle eſcaped infection which his mother earth. The Count it is true came off, but to ſay the leaſt well; the horſe broke his own head and the Count's likewiſe, ſo that according to the ancient opinion of two negatives making an affirmative, little or no harm was done.

"Having ſaid thus much on the ſubject of being run away with, it neceſſarily I muſt decline for the benefit of my readers on the means I muſt approve of, for putting a ſtop to ſuch doings: and I am clearly for the Rider doing it if eſſential or poſſeſſed, you ſhould be afraid of your life, ſpread out your legs fufficiently, and your horſe will go in without you."

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 21.

CAPTURE OF MEDINA.

Laſt night a packet arrived at the India Houſe from Mr. Barker, the company's reſident at Bagdat, containing an account of the capture of Medina by the Wahabees, whoſe army having been reinforced from the deſert, has overwhelmed the adjacent country and taken the city by aſſault, with infinite blood-ſhed and deveſtation. They ſet fire to Medina in various places, deſtroyed the moſques after having ranſacked them of their valuable things and treaſures, and completely demoliſhed the tomb of the Phrophet.

Some thoulands of females of the firſt rank were carried off by the beſiegers into the deſert, with a number of the principal male inhabitants. A troop of camels were alſo ſent away with jewels and other treaſures to an immenſe amount.

February 24.

The American ſhip Riſing Sun, captain Nantes, arrived at Dover, from Amſterdam, brings the important intelligence, that on Tueſday laſt, when that ſhip left Holland, there were ſeven ſail of the line, of Dutch men of war in the Nieu Diep, ready for ſea, in a moment's warning. The tranſports which were lately laid up, are alſo refitting at Amſterdam, with all poſſible expedition, and they are ordered to proceed to the Helder, to take on board troops; the deſtination of this armament is kept a profound ſecret at preſent.

We underſtand that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has written a letter to the Governor of the Bank, deſiring the opinion of that body what would be the probable effect of raiſing the property tax from ſeven to ten per cent; and alſo, what would be the probable effect of applying ſome part of the ſinking fund to the payment of the intereſt of a new loan. It is proper to add, however, that government have not reſolved on either of theſe meaſures; and the Chancellor of the Exchequer's letter ſtates, that they will not be adopted without very mature conſideration.

Government have received advice that the French Emperor has ſigned an inſtrument, under his ſign manuel, dated from his Palace at St. Cloud, by which he formally depoſed the King of Naples, in nearly the following terms:

"We, Napoleon, by the Grace of God, Emperor of the French and King of Italy, &c. &c. for divers weighty and ſufficient cauſes, ourſelves thereunto ſpecially moving do hereby and henceforth, ſolemnly depoſe from the throne and other ſovereign authorities of his anceſtors, Ferdinand the King of the Two Sicilies, and from all of which princely titles and dignities, he is by virtue of this inſtrument and our imperial will and mandate, and pleaſure, forever removed and depoſed accordingly. Given under out hand and imperial Signet, &c."

The Hamburgh mail which was due yeſterday arrived this morning. The courts of St. Peterſburgh and Conſtantinople have not been flow in ſeeing the danger with which they were threatened by the engagement of Napoleon to furniſh to the Emperor of Auſtria an indemnity in the Eaſt, for the poſſeſſions of which he has deprived him in Germany. They have renewed, for nine years to come, the treaty between them, which was on the point of expiring.

If we may judge from the precautions adopted by Alexander, he ſeems apprehenſive that an attack may be made even upon his own territories. Redoubts are caſting up at Watſaw, and other arrangements, ordered to guard againſt any attempt of this kind.

The French and Bavarian army in the neighbourhood of Frankfort has been conſiderably augmented, to enforce the payment of the contribution laid on the city. The inhabitants have a faint hope held out to them, that if they ſperdily pay one half the ſum demanded, the other will be remitted.

The French ſtill continue in force in Germany—and will 'till more of the ſchemes in the contemplation of Bonaparte are executed.

Prince Joſeph Bonaparte arrived at Rome on the 23d ult.—Maſſena's army is in full march againſt the Kingdom of Naples. His progreſs will receive no oppoſition.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 11.

The Electoral Prince of Baden has arrived here, and will ſet out immediately for Paris, whether he is going to marry Mademoiſelle de Beauharnois whom the Emperor Napoleon means to adopt and raiſe to the dignity of Royal Highneſs. The Prince will afterwards reſide at Manheim, and his mother at Bruchſal, where ſhe will enjoy a dower of 120,000 florins.

MONTEGO BAY, March 8.

The following intereſting particulars we have received from a Military Officer of great reſpectability, who arrived at Savanna la Mar laſt Wedneſday in his Majeſty's ſchr. Redbridge, Lieut. Burt, which left Port Royal on Monday morning:

"That, on Sunday, the Acaſta frigate returned expreſs from Sir John T. Duckworth, with information to the Commanding officer at Port Royal of having a few days previous fallen in with ſix French line of battle ſhips and ſome frigates, conjectured to be thoſe of the Breſt Fleet which had ſeparated from the five recently accounted for. It was further underſtood, the enemy's ſquadron had been ſeen going into a Spaniſh port on the Main, ſaid to be Porto Cabello, where one or two of our cruizers were ſtationed to watch their motions."

The above gentleman ſtates alſo, "in getting under way on Monday, from Port Royal, the Superb, with Sir John T. Duckworth's flag, was coming down to expedite the ſailing of what ſhips could be got in readineſs; and it was ſuppoſed every line of battle ſhip in port would be prepared to ſail in queſt of the enemy on Wedneſday morning."

Advice is received at the Iſland of Cuba, by a Packet from Old Spain, that Montevideo on the river La Plate, is taken poſſeſſion of by the Britiſh, and that their force amounted to eighteen thouſand troops—the commanding officer on this expedition was not named at Cuba, when our informant received this intelligence.—*D. DIED,

At Bermuda, on the 29th Feb. Vice Admiral SIR ANDREW MICHELL Bart.

FROM A LATE JAMAICA PAPER.

To the Editors of the Royal Gazette.

GENTLEMEN.—I requeſt you will have goodneſs to infer the following extraordinary occurrence in the Royal Gazette; it may poſſibly lead to ſome important diſcovery.—With great reſpect I remain gentlemen, your obedient ſervant. W. W.

Greenwich Park, St. ——n, Jan. 22.

"A few days ago it was mentioned to me, in the ſhape of complaint, that there was a wild white man reſident in the woods of this property, who had interrupted the negroes in working their proviſion grounds, &c. Upon inquiry I found his reſidence in the woods had not been a ſecret; but ſome outrages he had committed prompted the ſufferers to complain.—It appeared that he occaſionally moleſted the women, but always ran from the men. Upon this information I ſent out a party with a guard who knew his haunts. The party divided, with a view of ſurrounding his hut; and, in the deepeſt receſs of the woods, they ſaw him ſitting on the point of a rock: he fled, but after a ſhort purſuit was overtaken, and brough hither. He was naked, ſave the ſcanty remains of a doublet; his beard had attained the utmoſt point of its growth; his feet and hands were callous as leather; his ſkin was diſcolored with filth; and altogether he exhibited the moſt humiliated object that monkiſh debaſement could furniſh. When firſt taken he affected dumbneſs, but afterwards I obtained from him the following particulars: His name is Charles Martin, is an Italian; born at Florence, thinks he has been two or three years in the woods; he entered them at Port Maria, thirty miles diſtant from this place; in that place never ſaw a white man or human habitation; had enjoyed perfect health. When he was aſked why he abandoned ſociety, he ſhrugged his ſhoulders and lifted up his hands as if in the act of adoration. When a cordial was given to him he was cautioned not to drink much, as exceſs would kill him: He replied, "Death to me is welcome!" He was cloathed, fed, and encouraged; and the writer retired to recommend him as a fit ſubject for the hoſpital. In a minute afterwards he was told that the wild man had eſcaped. It ſeems he had watched for an opportunity of being unobſerved, when he ſeized his victuals, and ran with amazing celerity towards the woods. The dogs were alarmed and purſued him; as they approached he threw down pieces of meat to ſtay them; when he found his efforts to eſcape unavailing, he ſtopped ſuddenly and ran to his purſuers. When he was expoſtulated with on his want of confidence, after the kind treatment he had met with, he ſhook his head, ſighed deeply, and ſaid, "Man is my enemy; I am afraid!" His intellects appear to be ſound, although he ſpeaks with great reluctance: He is well made, has blue eyes, is in ſtature about five feet eight inches. His hut is faſhioned much like an Indian wigwam, and he has contrived a ſubterraneous kitchen with great ingenuity: His habitation was ſurrounded by ſprings to catch birds, one of which he had prepared for his breakfaſt. He had diſplayed talent in fabricating divers ſorts of baſkets; and, what is ſtrange, no iron, not even a knife, was found in his poſſeſſion."

FROM THE SAME.

Gentlemen.—Perhaps the following additional particular, of Charles Martin (the wild white man mentioned in your paper of the 18 inſt.) may be intereſting to ſome of your readers.

When taken, as ſtated in the former communication, he was ſent to the hoſpital, where he occupied a room was kindly treated and indulged with an extra allowance of food;—but his habits are incorrigibly ſavage; that which civilized men conſiders comfort is to him intolerable inſipidity. On the night of the 2d inſt. he made his eſcape through a ſmall aperture in the wall of the room in which he was confined; he left not a veſtige by which to trace his flight. A fortnight afterwards he was found by accident, in the centre of a cane piece about half a mile from the hoſpital, ſurrounded with cane trafh, the refuſe of his ſubſiſtence; he had diveſted himſelf of the incumbrance of dreſs, and had, for fourteen days, been expoſed to the inclemency of the weather, which is here peculiarly ſevere at this ſeaſon of the year; his appearance was ſqualid and extenuated, and, although a nudity, he appeared before numbers of people unabaſhed and with an unblufhing compoſure of countenance, which evinces that the ſenſe of ſhame in him is entirely abolliſhed. He was reconducted to his old quarters, and aſked in what manner he lived. He anſwered, that he had never moved more than a few yards from the ſpot he firſt occupied; that he ate two canes daily; that he had ſlept well (although unſheltered, and nightly expoſed to the pitileſs ſtorm); and that he felt himſelf happy, becauſe he was ſafe. The writer of the account aſked him, were he permitted his liberty, whether he would abide in the court of the hoſpital. He laid he would make no promiſe.—When he was queſtioned why he had deſerted the comforts of ſociety, to ſubmit to the privations of a ſavage ſolitary life? He tagerly repiſed, that the very ſight of mankind gave him pain. He perſiſted that his name is Charles Martin; that he was born at Nice, in Piedmont (not at Florence, as before ſtated); that he was educated at Caen, in Normandy; that of the former place his father is a wine merchant, and that himſelf kept a ſhop at Port au Prince, in St. Domingo ſome years ago. He writes a legible hand, and ſpeaks Norman French with great fluency. His underſtanding, on general ſubjects, is unimpaired; but he is poſſeſſed of a notion that he is reſerved for ſome ignominious death, and neither the encouragement nor the kindneſs he has received has been able to eradicate that impreſſion, which ſeems to be indeliable.

I underſtand the former account of this miſerable ſelf-devoted outcaſt was treated by ſome as fabulous; if there be ſtill ſceptics they may have their doubts removed by application to gentlemen, your humble ſervant.

A HUMBUG.

AT a late aſſize in Ireland, a witneſs was aſked whether on a former occaſion he had not given a different account of the tranſaction? He admitted the fact, but ſaid that he was then humbugged in the buſineſs—"Humbugged!" (replied the Counſel immediately) I do not underſtand the phraſe."—"I thought, replied the witneſs every perſon underſtood it; but to explain it by a familiar inſtance—If I were to tell the noble Lord on the Bench, or the gentlemen who are ſworn to try this cauſe, that you were an able Counſel, that would be to humbug both Judge and Jury!"

In consequence of a dispute between the Prince of Peace and the Spanish nobility, the former has invited the interference of the French government, and a body of French troops are actually marching towards Spain.

The affairs of the continent are now only interrupted by the expeditions against Spain and Naples, and the quarrels between the new made Kings about their newly acquired possessions. The fate of Naples may be considered definitively fixed.

The following paragraphs, are taken from the N. Orleans Gazette of the 15th ult.

It is reported and believed, that a vessel, bound to Fort Stoddart, with provisions for our troops, has been brought too at the town of Mobile, and is not permitted to proceed on her voyage. If conduct like this be persisted in, it is hoped that some efficient means will be adopted to obtain a free navigation of the waters of the Mobile. Such navigation is essential to the welfare of our settlements on the Tombigbey, and it is presumed, that a suspension of it will not be submitted to by the American government.

Just as our paper was going to press, we received information that one of the carriers of the mail of the United States had returned to this city, and that he reports, that he was not permitted to pass the town of Mobile with the mail. He further states, that governor Folck informed him, that for the future the mail of the United States would not be permitted to pass either by land or water, through the dominions of the king of Spain.

From the Charleston Courier.

We have before mentioned that Lord Nelson saw his Secretary and friend, Mr. Scott, thrown overboard; and uncertain, from the disfigurement of the wound, and the confusion of the fight whether it was him or not, he enquired with affectionate ardour, "Was that poor Scott,"—Our readers have already this pathetic anecdote; and it seems to have made impression on his Lordship; for, as the men were carrying him down to the cock pit, he said, "Don't let me be thrown overboard, tell Hardy to carry me home."

It is affirmed that the Victory (Lord Nelson's ship) fired in the action no less than 126 barrels of gun powder.

A man was so completely cut in two by a double headed shot, that the whole of his body, with the exception of his legs up to the knees, was blown some yards into the water; but, strange to tell, his legs were left standing upon the deck, with all the firmness and animation of life!

A Midshipman, of the name of Price, was brought into the cock pit with his leg cut off up to the calf. He was an heroic youth, only 17. The Surgeons could not attend him on the moment; he drew out a knife an cut off a piece of flesh and the splinter of a bone with great composure—"I can't stay, (said he) let me dottor myself."

When the Surgeon attended him, it was found necessary to amputate above the knee. He submitted to the operation without a groan, "It is nothing at all, (said he) I thought it had been ten times worse. I wish my poor Lord was alive; he would have given me a few for this; and that would have got me a recommendation to the Admiralty, and they would have made me a lieutenant."

What would my Uncle Toby have said to this? Heaven prosper thee noble youth! and may thy country, whose safety has been sealed by thy courage, and that of others, be as liberal in her gratitude as thou hast been of thy blood in her service. The Admiralty make a Lieutenant of thee! let them get a dozen souls like thine, and the will not want a future Nelson among them.

This boy is now hopping about the streets of Portsmouth; and all his anxiety is lest he should not be well enough to attend the funeral of his beloved Commander.

ALBANY, May 1.

Mr. Quincy, to his speech in Congress on the subject of fortifying our ports and harbours—in pointing to one fact, which shews, in the strongest colours the indispensible necessity of the measure—estimates the "annual deposit within the city of New York, alone, one hundred millions of the active capital of this nation." "This great mass of the national wealth, (says Mr. Q.) thus concentrated on the bank of one of the most exposed harbors in the world, is liable to the infult and depredation of the most despicable force. Two seventy four gun ships may, at this moment, lay that city under contribution, or in ashes altogether, with impunity."

Philadelphia, April 23.

A gentleman passenger in the ship Anthony Mangin, has favored us with a file of English papers two days later than those we received by the Alexander, arrived at New York. From these though not so late as the advices by the arrival at Baltimore, we make the following extract:—

London, Feb. 27.

The New York papers which arrived yesterday down to the 28th ult. contain intelligence of a very important nature. It is with the utmost regret we find that the party in America, whose hostility to Great Britain is avowed, have not only succeeded in exciting a general clamour throughout the United States against the conduct of the British cruizers, but have actually proposed to the Legislature a Bill of such an extraordinary nature, and containing such unprecedented provisions, that if it should pass, and be acted upon, it must produce the most fatal consequences—[alluding to Senator Wright's famous Bill.] The Bill does not define what constitutes a man a citizen of the United States; it does not state what document shall be considered as a sufficient claim to that character, nor does it inflict any punishment upon those who shall grant to Aliens false certificates of their being American Subjects. It would be an insult to the understanding of our readers to offer any more comments upon this extraordinary measure; we have however, too high an opinion of the good sense of the American Legislature, to suppose that they can, however inflamed by prejudice, or misled by representation, finally give their assent to it.

New York, April 26.

The frigate Cambrian, now off the mouth of our harbor, is from Halifax, and the Driver sloop of war from a cruize. The Leander, we understand, will sail for Halifax on Sunday next.

Capt. Kennedy, from Teneriffe, informs us, that at the time of his departure, a British squadron was cruizing between St. Vincent's and Madeira; and another between Madeira and Teneriffe; an a third, consisting of six sail of the line, six frigates, and two brigs, off Palermo. A French brig of 18 guns had just arrived in 8 days from Cadiz, which on her passage fell in with a British corvette, and in an unsuccessful attempt to board her lost a lieutenant and five men, who were detained on board the corvette.

Miscellaneous.

INSTANCE OF INGRATITUDE.

In the year 1769, one Rossiter, a young Irishman, came to Leghorn in search of adventures, with no other recommendation than the deportment of a gentleman, added to a fine figure and countenance.

Soon after his arrival, a lady, whose personal property was considerable, saw, and became violently enamoured of him; which was soon succeeded by a direct proposal on her part (no uncommon thing in Italy) to live with her.

As he had been previously informed of her circumstances, and was pleased with her person, he immediately closed with the offer; and they in consequence, resided together in all the warmth of love, and intimacy of marriage.

Her passion for him had, at first, prompted her to disregard the common law of modesty; after cohabiting it grew to such excess, as to trample on all prudence; for not satisfied with having purchased a lieutenancy for him in the Tuscan army, she anticipated his every wish, more than supported his profusion, and on being obliged to visit her relations in a distant part of Italy, entrusted him in her absence with her jewels, her money, and, in short, every thing she owned.

Can you suppose that a man so cherished, and so relied on, could betray a confidence of this nature! Should you wonder at it, how much greater will be your surprise, when I tell you, that he not only robbed her of her property, but of her life.

She returned to Leghorn sooner than she had intended, being pregnant by this monster, who received her with every mark of unaltered affection; but that fatal night murdered her in the very bed chamber that had so often been the guilty scene of her weakness and affection; a place that should, of all others, have been inviolable.

The deed was soon discovered, and Rossiter apprehended, judged and condemned to the galleys for life.

Previously to the execution of this sentence, he was led out before the troops in view of the garrison, when his sword was broken over his head, his uniform stripped from him, for the coarse habit of a galley slave; and thus, with a halter about his neck, was he delivered over to his punishment, under every mark of degradation and infamy.

Yet even this wretch, thus stigmatized, could create affection in the female sex, who took every opportunity of supplying him with food; and one, a woman of condition, exerted all her influence to obtain his release, for the purpose (it is said) of marrying him; but the good Leopold rejected the petition with horror, declaring he should look upon that man as a disgrace to his court, who could intercede on so wicked an occasion. How more than brutal was the affection that could attach itself to such a monster as Rossiter!

EXTRAORDINARY WOMAN.

THE Paris papers recount prodigies of a woman in the neighbourhood of Lyons. The circumstances of her case have confounded the philosophers, and have given new credit with men unaccustomed to scientific reasoning. Learned men refuse because it wants principles to explain:—Ignorance decides at once because it knows not the variety of undiscovered principles which exist.

The case of this woman is that of a confusion of all senses—of seeing, smelling, hearing, touching, tasting. The quality of one sense seems transferred to another; there is a kind of organic confusion and substitution; the eyes do duty for the ears, the taste for the eyes, and the touch for the taste.

A very learned physician, a writer in the journal de Sante, gives an account of having visited this woman at Lyons:

"To believe in apparent impossibilities (he says) is often the necessity of men of science; but it is then good fortune likewise to discover that the world contains many more miracles than is first imagined, and that nothing is impossible, as referred to the Omnipotence of the Deity, and that impossibilities are much rarer in the combinations of human life than the vanity of science will acknowledge.

"This woman, whom I visited, and to whom I presented several sorts of medicines, powders, simples, compounds, and many other substances, which I am convinced she never saw before, told me their several tastes, accurately, and with as much precision, as taste could pronounce. She described them indeed, with astonishing exactness and frequently when my own palate was confounded.

Her eyes were next bound with a thick bandage, and I drew from my pocket several sorts of silk ribbons. All these that differed in the original colors, she immediately told me. It was in vain to attempt puzzling her; she passed the ribbons merely through her hand, and immediately decided on its particular color. She could, in fact, discover the quality of any thing by the touch or taste, as accurately as I could do with my eyes.

"The organs of hearing were then closed, as well as the contrivance of stuffing the ears would answer the purpose. I then commenced a conversation with a friend in the apartment, and spoke in an almost inaudible whisper. She repeated with great power of memory, every word of the conversation. In short, I came away a convert; in other words, I believed what I had seen. A Philosopher knows the fallibility of the senses; but he would know likewise that science ought not to reject because it cannot have demonstration. We must admit miracles, and the power of miracles, or we must question almost all the appearances of nature. Ignorance doubts what if it chooses, it may easily understand; science endeavours to comprehend, and when it cannot, it submits to the senses.

"THE Moors," says Mr. Park, in his travels in Africa, "have singular ideas of feminine perfection. The gracefulness of figure and motion, and a countenance enlivened by expression, are by no means essential points in their standard; with them corpulence and beauty appear to be terms nearly synonymous. A woman of even moderate claim to beauty, must be one who cannot walk without a slave under each arm, to support her: and a perfect beauty is a load for a camel. In consequence of this prevalent taste for unwieldiness of bulk, the Moorish ladies take great pains to acquire it early in life; and, for this purpose, many of the young girls are compelled, by their mothers, to devour a great quantity of kouskous, and drink a large bowl of camel's milk every morning. It is of no importance whether the girl has an appetite or not; the kouskous and milk must be swallowed; and obedience is frequently enforced by blows. I have seen a poor girl sit crying, with her bowl at her lips, for more than an hour, and her mother with a stick in her hand, watching her daughter and often using the stick without mercy, whenever she observed that her daughter was not swallowing. This singular practice, instead of producing indigestion and disease, soon covers the young lady with that degree of plumpness, which, in the eye of a Moor, is perfection itself."

Meanness put to the blush.

A Mr. Gubtail, noted for his parsimony and saving grace, but more particular for a habit of skinning every animal that died in or about his house, lost his mother, a very aged woman, the friends and relations of the deceased met, in mournful silence, at Mr. Gubtail's to attend the last solemn act, had viewed the deceased with weeping eyes, and the sexton was going to close the lid of the coffin, when Mr. Gubtail's son, a boy of five years old, who had been an attentive observer of his father's habits, stopped the sexton, and running eagerly up to his father, exclaimed. "Sir, an't you going to skin granny."

Postscript.

LONDON, March 10.

The fleet for the West Indies, consisting of about 150 sail, under convoy of six frigates, sailed from the Cove of Cork on the 3d instant.

There was a report on Saturday evening, that a new propolition had been made to the Transport Board, for the exchange of prisoners. It is obvious that the emperor of the French earnestly desires to obtain the 9,000 seamen, detained in this country. He has no fewer than 27 ships of war, all above fifty guns, on the stocks, which will be launched before midsummer; & it would be a great thing for him to obtain a lumping exchange at the rate of five for two, which is the exact proportion, as we have about 18,000 French prisoners in England, and there are only 7,000 English in France.

Several conferrences have taken place between Mr. Munroe, the American Ambassador, and his Majesty's Ministers, relative to the matters in dispute between Great Britain and the United States; and there is every prospect of a speedy and amicable adjustment of all differences. Twenty-five American seamen were discharged on Friday, at Portsmouth, from la Ville de Milan, Sir R. Lautia, lately returned from the Halifax station. An order, we understand, has been received, to discharge all American subjects from our ships.

March 12.

Paris papers of the 4th give an account of the opening of the Legislative Body, with the speech delivered on that occasion by Bonaparte.

The session was opened with great pomp. The Emperor began his speech by observing, that since their last meeting the greater part of Europe had been united with England; but that his armies had ceased to conquer, until he had ordered them to combat no more. He then alluded to the advantages obtained by his allies—declared that the house of Naples had for ever forfeited the crown of that country—stated, that Russia is indebted for the return of the wreck of her armies to the capitulation which he had granted—boasted of his moderation towards Austria; and, after several passages, which relate chiefly to the internal situation of France, he expressed himself in the following manner, with respect to this country:

"I desire peace with England—Not a moment's delay shall be experienced on my part. I shall be always ready to conclude it, by taking for its foundation the treaty of Amiens."

Bonaparte alludes to the battle off Trafalgar, and says he lost some ships by the storm.

The following communication was yesterday sent from the Admiralty to the Lord Mayor in contradiction of the Dutch fleet having put to sea:—

March 17.

We are sorry to say the Duke of Portland is given over by the faculty.

Admiralty-Office March 11, 1806.

My Lord—Information having been received, from which it was supposed that the Dutch fleet had put to sea, I think it proper to inform your Lordship, that dispatches have been this day received from Vice Admiral Douglas stating, that the Fiora frigate had reconnoitered the Texel and discovered the whole of the Dutch fleet lying in the Nieu Diep, apparently ready for sea. I have the honor to be, &c.

CHARLES GREY.

To the Right Honorable the Lord Mayor of London.

Liverpool, March 19.

This morning between two and three o'clock it blew a dreadful storm, and the wind being northerly, not a vessel in the river escaped its fury. The Woolton Guineaman, and the American ship Intrepid are on shore near the Fort: another is on shore near the Mile-house; many others are driven on shore on both sides of the river, to the number of not less than 12 to 15 sail, whole names we have not learned, beside several that have lost their bowsprits, &c. amongst them the Cotton planter of New York.

Arrival of a Flag of Truce.

Courier Office, Three o'clock.

We stop the press to communicate the following letter, which we have just received by express from Dover:

"DOVER, half past 8, A. M.
Wednesday.

"This morning about 6 o'clock a French boat appeared in sight as a flag of truce.

"There was so little wind that she could not fetch in, and a frigate coming round the Foreland, apparently for the purpose, the galley put off from her with a French naval officer and two other gentlemen; they rowed onboard the frigate, and are gone to the Admiral in the Downs. They are supposed to be bearers of a pacific proposal to our government."

Two Hamburgh mails arrived this morning—those due on Sunday last and this day. They have brought intelligence of very great importance. Y et

the intelligence is contrary; whilſt ſome extracts from the German papers would perſuade us that every thing is arranged between Pruſſia and France, other articles aſſert, that war between the two powers is inevitable.

The French have ſuddenly taken poſſeſſion of Nuremberg.

The Auſtrian Ambaſſador at Peterſburgh has been ordered to declare, that the treaty of Pieſburgh contains no ſecret articles.

The King of Sweden has been formally releaſed by Great Britain and Ruſſia from his engagements to occupy the country of Lauenberg.

An article from Weſel, March 8, ſtates, "According to a plan mentioned in a Pruſſian Journal, printed in Franconia, Sweditſh Pomerania, Brunſwick of Luneburgh, and Hanover, are to be ceded to Pruſſia. As an indemnification to the Duke of Brunſwick, he is to receive a conſiderable part of Weſtphalia; and the remainder is to go to Heſſe Darmſtadt, in exchange for his poſſeſſions on the Main. Two Princes, it is added, and the Prince of Orange Fulda, are to be made ſovereign Electors; and the Elector of Heſſe, in conſideration for eight millions, is to receive a very conſiderable increaſe of territory, and the title of King, &c.

Diſpatches were received this morning from Lord Collingwood and Admiral Thornbotough. They were both well. The Rochefort ſquadron remains in port, but is quite ready for ſea.

New York, May 1.

The King of Great Britain has appointed FRANCIS GORE, Eſq. to be Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada.

May 3. The ſhip Packet, has arrived at Portland in 39 days from Liverpool. This veſſel brings London papers only one day later than before received. Upon the ſubject of Peace, the new adminiſtration are perfectly ſilent; a London paper of March 14, however, obſerves—"Stocks yeſterday fell back a little, when it was found that the mention of peace by Bonaparte was not ſo encouraging as had at firſt been ſuppoſed. It agreed in general, however, the alluſion was free from that tone of irritation and imperiouſneſs which exiſted laſt year."

The Ruſſian official account of the battle of Auſterlitz, gives the lie to the gaſconading ſpeech of Bonaparte. From this account it appears, that "no capitulation had been granted to that army," as ſtated in the ſpeech. Savary, the perſon who was ſent to the Emperor of Ruſſia, was not even admitted to an interview. The whole loſs of the Ruſſians, by ſickneſs, caſualties, and battles, from the commencement to the end of the late campaign, was no more than ſeventeen thouſand men. The engagement of the 2d Decr. was rather the effect of neceſſity than of choice; the allied army was almoſt ſtarving. The account contradicts alſo the French bulletins in another material point. The latter ſtated the amount of the Ruſſians, before the battle of Auſterlitz, at 8[illegible]000 men, the official account declares the number to have been only 52,000.

In conſequence of a diſpute between the Prince of Peace and the Spaniſh nobility, the former has invited the interference of the French government and a body of French troops are actually marching towards Spain.

It is reported at Vienna, that General Mack has been condemned to imprisonment for twelve years.

The French troops are marching to Boulogne, and are to aſſume the name of the grand invading army of England.

India Trade.—The trade of neutrals—particularly that of the United ſtates—with India, has been made a ſubject of debate in the Britiſh Parliament. It has been there ſtated, that three quarters of the commerce with India is carried on under neutral flags:—That, while the merchants of Europe were excluded from the traffic, in 1805, twenty nine American veſſels cleared at Calcutta alone, and the Americans ſupplied the Weſt India colonies with India productions. In this debate, Mr. Secretary Fox ſaid, 'Every body knew that the queſtion of the carrying trade, and the intercourſe between the United States of America, and the eaſt and weſt Indies, was a ſubject of a very delicate nature, and that repreſentations therein had been made from the United States; which were now under the moſt ſerious conſideration of his Majeſty's Government." Lord Caſtlereagh, in the ſame debate hoped his Majeſty's Miniſters would proceed in thoſe important negociations with the United States, with all that temper & forbearance which was due to a country whoſe intereſts had been ſo long connected with ours, and at the ſame time with that firmneſs and deciſion which were due to the rights and intereſts of Great Britain." It was mentioned in this debate, that the Engliſh Eaſt India company's charter had now only ſeven years to run.—Boſton Cent.

May 5. Mr. Beatty, Surgeon of the Victory, has had the ball, which was the inſtrument of death to the late Lord NELSON, ſet in gold and chryſtals. The fringe of the epaulette is yet hanging to it. Two thouſand guineas have been offered him for it, but he refuſed.—Lond. Paper.

Lateft Intelligence.

LONDON, March 10.

The Emperor Alexander has aſſembled a conſiderable part of a Ruſſian army of 186,000 men at Warſaw; and the Porte, taking the alarm, had made extraordinary efforts to reduce the inſurgent provinces to ſubjection.

We find that the French army under General Angereau, has made an irruption into Heſſia, and has likewiſe occupied the Pruſſian towns of Lippſtaut, in Weſtphalia, and Dethmold, in the neighbourhood of Paderborn; and report ſtates, that Heſſia is to be revolutionized, and to aſſume its old title of The Kingdom of the Catti. The army of Lefevre is advancing to cover the movements of Angereau and maintain his communication with the grand French army, which continues along the Back Foreſt.

The Continent is agitated by theſe and ſeveral other military movements, and ſome ſpeculators hence predict a war between France and Pruſſia; but we have inſerted a proclamation of Marſhal Bernadotte, to the people of Anſpach, dated the 24th laſt, announcing a treaty between thoſe two powers, by which Pruſſia is agreed to cede Anſpach to the King of Bavaria; and ſtipulating that the French ſhould take poſſeſſion of that territory, at the ſame time that Pruſſia ſhould occupy Hanover. Other plans of partition, and territorial diſtribution are evidently in their progreſs; and armies muſt be kept on foot for the purpoſe of military occupations, and carrying theſe new arrangements into effect. This may account for the preſent warlike appearances, without the ſuppoſition of meditated hoſtility between France and Pruſſia.

The Archduke Charles, who was already Miniſter at War, and poſſeſſed all the influence and patronage in the military department, is appointed Generaliſſimo of the whole Auſtrian army, a charge confided to no other ſince the death of Prince Eugene.

The report that Pruſſia intended to garriſon Hamburgh, Bremen and Lubec, has been officially contradicted.

The French and German papers contain ſeveral vague reports of a negociation for peace between England and France, to be opened at Berlin; but no credit is attached to them.

Count Woronzow arrived in town yeſterday. He is ſaid to be the bearer of important diſpatches from the Emperor Alexander.

The intelligence from Berlin of the 18th, announces that in the Convention concluded with France, Pruſſia has ceded Neufchatel and Valengin to France, Anſpach to Bavaria, and Cleves to the Archduke Ferdinand.

The Hamburgh Gazette adds, that Weſel is alſo to be ceded to the Archduke. Nor is that all, the Electot of Heſſe Caſſel is to be raiſed to the Kingly dignity, under the title of King of the Catti, and is to receive a large acceſſion of territory. He is to have from Pruſſia the Biſhopric of Paderborn, and from Heſſe Darmſtadt the greateſt part of its poſſeſſions in Weſtphalia, and all its territories in the county of Wittegan; he is to have beſides the county of Iſter, all Waldeck except the county of Pyrmont which is to be given to Pruſſia. The Counties of Saxn. &c. He is to cede the Heſſian part of Schauenberg, Augſberg, &c. to Pruſſia; and to Darmſtadt, Hanau, with the diſtrict of Schwegenfeld. As the Electot of Heſſe Caſſel is very rich, Bonaparte we dare ſay has exacted a pretty large ſum in payment for the Kingly dignity, and theſe large territorial acceſſions.

March 17.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On Tueſday Mr. Dilton rofe for the purpoſe of putting a queſtion to the right honorable gentleman oppoſite, (Mr. Fox) with a view to learn the future intentions of that right hon. gentleman, with reſpect to the claims of a large portion of his Majeſty's ſubjects in Ireland.—Rumours had gone abroad of a very extraordinary change of ſentiments having taken place in certain quarters on the ſubject of the claims of the Roman Catholics of Ireland. It was alſo rumoured, that the great body of the Catholics had acquieſced in the change of opinion. It was of the higheſt importance to the intereſts of themſelves as well as the tranquility of Ireland, that this queſtion ſhould be ſet completely at reſt, ſome way or other.

Mr. Secretary Fox obſerved, that the queſtion of the hon. gentleman was ſo vague and general, as ſcarcely to call for a reply. The hon. gentleman had aſked what his intentions were with reſpect to the Roman Catholics of Ireland, and founded his queſtion on rumours of an alteration of ſentiments with reſpect to the queſtion in certain quarters. As the honourable gentleman had not particularized theſe quarters, it was impoſſible for him to give any anſwer with reference to them. The hon. gentleman had alſo alluded to rumours of the acquieſcence of the Catholic body in the change of ſentiments, which he ſtated to have taken place in certain quarters. Of the determination of that body, he thought it would be more natural to expect information from the hon. gentleman himſelf.—He did not feel himſelf called upon to ſay any thing more on the ſubject on this occaſion.

On Friday a committee was appointed to take into conſideration the preſent ſtate of the woollen manufacture of England. The ſeveral petitions from the counties of Glouceſter, Somerſet, Wilts and York, were referred to the conſideration of the committee. Mr. Windham rofe to give notice [illegible] of hear! hear! from the oppoſite bench] that on Monday next he ſhould move for leave to bring in a bill empowering his Majeſty, for a time to be limited, to make certain rules and orders for regulating the trade between Great Britain and the Cape of Good Hope. He obſerved, he knew very well what the hon. gentlemen oppoſite meant when they cried hear! hear! and he could ſtate that he entertained a hope of being able, on Monday fe'nnight, to lay before the Houſe the details of the military plans of defence which had been under the conſideration of his Majeſty's miniſters for ſome time. Mr. Canning repeated the queſtion he had put to Mr. Windham before, whether the additional force bill made any part of the propoſed plan. To this queſtion no anſwer was returned. The houſe in a committee of ſupply voted a ſum, not exceeding 2,977,1811. 6s. 6d. for the ſervice of the ordnance of Great Britain for 1806.

NEW YORK, May 16.

From the Mercantile Advertiſer.

The London and Liverpool papers with which we have been favored by Captain Carpenter, of the ſhip Projector, tho' extending to the 27th March, contain very little intelligence either of a political or commercial nature worth notice. We have ſelected the following as the moſt prominent articles, and as the only articles poſſeſſing even an ordinary degree of intereſt:

LONDON, March 22.

The new Kings of Bavaria and Wirtemberg, and the Electot of Baden, have independently, at the deſire of France, prohibited the importation of Britiſh articles.

Earl Selkirk (who was in Boſton a few years ſince) is appointed Ambaſſador to the United States, to ſettle the exiſting differences. The King of Pruſſia it is ſaid, is to take the title of Emperor of the North.

The American Miniſter in London, is treated with marked attention; and there is no doubt a good underſtanding will be ſoon reſtored between Great Britain and the United States.

The Duke of Kent is to have the military command in Ireland.

A letter from Liſbon dated the 12th inſt. ſtates, that four French frigates & a brig of war, ſailed from Cadiz Bay on the 7th. The brig was taken; but the frigates unfortunately eſcaped.

March 24.

At two o'clock yeſterday morning Capt. Cochrane arrived at the Admiralty from Portſmouth, where he had landed the preceding evening, at five o'clock. Captain Cochrane came home in the Kingfiſher ſloop of war, from the Weſt Indies, with an account of the total deſtruction of a French ſquadron. He had a paſſage of five weeks and four days. Mr. Grey was called up immediately on Captain Cochrane's arrival; as were alſo the other members of the Board of Admiralty.

The diſpatches were very early forwarded by a meſſenger to his Majeſty at Windſor. Intelligence was likewiſe ſent to Admiral Young at Plymouth; to Lord Keith at Ramſgate, and to Admiral Douglas at Yarmouth, in the courſe of the day. And a Bulletin, ſtating the ſubſtance, was ſent to the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, and by Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, and by him tranſmitted to Lloyd's Coffee-Houſe.

The extraordinary Gazette was publiſhed about two o'clock, and the Park and Tower guns were fired in honor of the event.

Mr. Curran is appointed Maſter of the Rolls in Ireland.

Report ſtates, that Sir John Moore is to ſucceed Lord Lake, as Commander in Chief in India. It is added, that the gallant General is to be accompanied by his regiment (the 52d,) one of the fineſt in the ſervice.

Admiral Thornborough arived off Roſhefort on the 3d inſt. in the Prince of Wales, with the Malo, Achille, Illuſtrious, Conqueror, Pallas and Mediante. The Latona was watching the port; where there is one three-decker, four 74 gun ſhips, four frigates, two corvettes and two brigs, at ſingle anchor, ready for ſea.

Lord Grenville moved the thanks of the Houſe to Admiral Duckworth, the officers, ſeamen and marines, for their gallant behaviour on the ſixteenth February, in taking and deſtroying 5 ſail of the line, being the whole of the French fleet in the Weſt Indies, which was carried nem. dis.

In the Houſe of Commons Mr Grey made a ſimilar motion, which was agreed to in like manner.

The gentlemen who intended to bid for the loan waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer this morning, to aſcertain the amount of the loan and the terms upon which the biddings are to take place on Friday. We underſtand that the amount of the loan is to be 22 millions; 18 for Great Britain and 4 for Ireland.—Of the latter, two millions are to be raiſed in England, and two in Ireland. The contractors are to receive 100l. conſols, and the biddings to be in the reduced. The firſt inſtalment is to be paid on the 15th April.

Government has received diſpatches from General Sir James Craig, which ſtate, that the Ruſſian troops, amounting to 22,000 men, were in perfect readineſs to defend the Iſle of Sicily againſt the attack which the French were meditating againſt it.

War with Algiers.—Advices by the laſt Liſbon packet, ſtate, that Mr. Cartwright, his Majeſty's Agent and Conſul General landed at Gibraltar on the 27th of February from the Niger frigate. Mr. Cartwright, after trying in vain every means in his power to procure ſatisfaction for various demands which he was entitled to make by treaties with our Government and the Regency, & finding it impoſſible to prevent the daily inſults which the Dey, and his Agents offered to the Britiſh Legation & ſuſpects, intimated his intention to depart from Algiers, and demanded his paſſports; they were granted him without difficulty, and he embarked without delay on board the Niger.

YARMOUTH, March 23.

The fleet under command of Admiral Rodſey ſailed again yeſterday, on a cruize off the Texel.

Laſt Moments of Lord Nelſon Authenticated.—The following is the relation of Mr. Beatty, the ſurgeon, & Mr. Bourke the purſer of the Victory:

About the middle of the action with the combined fleets, on the 21ſt of October, Lord Nelſon was upon the quarter deck, where he had reſolved to take his ſtation during the whole of the battle. A few minutes before he was wounded, Mr. Bourke was near him; he looked ſteadfaſtly at him & ſaid, Bourke, I expect every man to be upon his ſtation.—Mr. Bourke took the hint, and went to his proper ſtation in the cockpit.

At this time his lordſhip's ſecretary, Mr. Scott, who was not, as has been repreſented, either receiving directions from him, or ſtanding by him, but was communicating ſome orders to an officer at a diſtant part of the quarter-deck, was cut almoſt in two by a cannon ſhot. He expired on the inſtant, and was thrown overboard.

Lord Nelſon obſerved the act of throwing his ſecretary overboard, and ſaid, as if doubtful, to a midſhipman who was near him, "was that Scott?" The midſhipman replied, "he believed it was. His lordſhip exclaimed, "poor fellow."

He was now walking the quarter-deck, and about three yards from the ſtern, the ſpace he generally walked before he turned back. His lordſhip was in the act of turning on the quarter-deck, with his face towards the enemy, when he was mortally wounded in the left breaſt by a muſket ball, ſuppoſed to have been fired from the mizen-top of the Redoubtable, French ſhip of the line, which the Victory had attacked early in the battle.

He inſtantly fell. He was not, as has been related, picked up by Capt. Hardy. In the hurry of the battle, which was then raging in its greateſt violence, even the fall of their beloved commander did not interrupt the buſineſs of the quarter-deck. Two ſailors, however, who were near his lordſhip, raiſed him in their arms, and carried him to the cockpit. He was immediately laid upon a bed, and the following is the ſubſtance of the converſation which really took place in the cockpit, between his lordſhip, capt. Hardy, Mr. Bourke and Mr. Beatty:

Upon ſeeing him bro't down, Mr. Bourke immediately ran to him. "I fear," he ſaid, "your lordſh p is wounded."—"Mortally, mortally." "I hope not, my dear lord; let Mr. Beatty examine your wound." "It is of no uſe," exclaimed the dying Nelſon; "he had better attend to others."

Mr. Beatty now approached to examine the wound. His lordſhip was raiſed up; and Mr. Beatty, whoſe attention was anxiouſly fixed upon the eyes of his patient, as an indication the moſt certain when a wound is mortal, after a few moments turned his eyes on Bourke, and expreſſed his opinion in his countenance. Lord Nelſon now turned to Bourke, and ſaid, "tell Hardy to come to me." Bourke left the cockpit. Beatty now ſaid, "ſuffer me, my lord, to probe the wound with my finger; I will give you no pain." Lord Nelſon permitted him, and paſſing his left hand round his waiſt, he probed it with the fore finger of his right.

The deſcription of the ſurgeon, however, is ſo accurate and ſcientific, that by his permiſſion, we thankfully give it:

"On his lordſhip being brought below, he complained of acute pain in about the ſixth or ſeventh dorſal vertebrae, of privation of ſenſe and motion of the body and inferior extremities; his reſpiration was ſhort and difficult; his pulſe was weak, ſmall and irregular, he frequently declared his back was ſhot through, that he felt every inſtant a guſh of blood within his breaſt; and that he had ſenſations which indicated to him the approach of death. In the courſe of an hour his pulſe became indiſtinct, and was gradually loſt in the arm; his extremeties and forehead became ſoon afterwards cold. He retained his wonted energy of mind and exercife of his faculties until the lateſt moment of his exiſtence; and when victory, as ſignal as deciſive, was announced to him, he expreſſed his pious acknowledgements thereof, and heartfelt ſatisfaction at the glorious event, in the moſt emphatic language. He then delivered his laſt orders with his uſual preciſion, and in a few minutes expired without a ſtruggle.

Courſe and ſite of the ball aſcertained ſince death.

"The ball ſtruck the fore part of his lordſhip's epaulette, and entered the left ſhoulder immediately before the proceſſus acromium ſcapulae, which it ſlightly fractured; it then deſcended obliquely into the thorax, fractured the ſecond and third ribs; and after penetrating the left lobe of the lungs, and dividing in its paſſage a large branch of the pulmonary artery, it entered the left ſide of the ſpine, between the ſixth and ſeventh dorſel vertebrae, fractured the left tranſverſe proceſs of the ſixth vertebrae, wounded the medulla ſpinalis, and fracturing the right tranſverſe proceſs of the ſeventh vertebrae, it made its way from the right ſide of the ſpine, directing its courſe through the muſcles of the back, and lodged there in about two inches below the inferior angle of the right ſcapula.

"On removing the ball, a portion of the gold lace and pad of the epaulette, together with a ſmall piece of his lordſhip's coat, were found firmly attached to it."

When Bourke returned into the cockpit with captain Hardy, lord Nelſon told the latter to come near him. "Kiſs me Hardy," he exclaimed. Captain Hardy kiſſed his cheek. "I hope your lordſhip," he ſaid, will live to enjoy your triumph." "Never, Hardy," he exclaimed. "I am dying—I am a dead man all over.—Beatty will tell you ſo.—Bring the fleet to an anchor—you have all done your duty—God bleſs you." Captain Hardy now ſaid, "I ſuppoſe Collingwood my dear lord is to command the fleet?" "Never," exclaimed he, "whilſt I live;" meaning, doubtleſs, that ſo long as his gallant ſpirits ſurvived, he would never deſert his duty.

What paſſed after this was merely caſual; his lordſhip's laſt words were to Mr. Beatty, whilſt he was expiring in his arms—"I could have wiſhed to have lived to enjoy this; but God's will be done." "My lord," exclaimed Hardy, "you die in the midſt of triumph." "Do I, Hardy?" He ſmiled faintly; "God be praiſed!" Theſe were his laſt words before he expired.

STATE OF NEW YORK.

Comptroller's Office.

Purſuant to the directions of an act, entitled "An act for granting a compenſation to John M. Crous, for diſcovering and publiſhing a cure for the hydrophobia or canine madneſs," paſſed the 28th February, 1806. I do hereby certify, that the ſaid John M. Crouſe hath this day depoſited in this office a certain writing, purporting to be the remedy uſed by him with perfect ſucceſs, for more than twenty years paſt for the cure of the hydrophobia or canine madneſs—which writing is in the words and figures following, to wit:

Cure for the bite of a Mad Dog.

"The following is an account and prescription of the remedy and cure for the hydrophobia or canine madness—made by JOHN M. CROUS, in conformity to an act of the legislature of the state of New York, passed at their present session, viz.

"1st. Take one ounce of the jaw bone of a dog, burned and pulverized, or pounded to fine dust.

"2dly. Take the false tongue of a newly foaled colt; let that also be dried and pulverized—and

"3dly. Take one scruple of the verdigrease, which is raised on the surface of old copper by laying in moist earth; the coppers of George I. or II. are the purest and best. Mix these ingredients together, and if the patient be an adult or full grown, take one common teaspoonfull a day, and so on in proportion for a child according to its age. In one hour after, take the filings of the one half of a copper of the above kind if to be had; if not, then a small increased quantity of any baser metal of the kind—this to be taken in a small quantity of water.

"The next morning fasting, (or before eating) repeat the same as before. This, if complied with after the biting of the dog and before symptoms of madness, will effectually prevent any appearance of the disorder; but if after the symptoms shall appear, a physician must immediately be applied to, administer the following, viz.

"THREE drams of the verdigrease of the kind before mentioned, mixed with half an ounce of calomel, to be taken at one dose. This quantity the physician need not fear to administer, as the re-action of the venom then diffused through the whole system of the patient, neutralizes confiderably the powerful quality of the medicine—and

"Secondly, if in four hours thereafter the patient is not completely relieved, administer four grains of pure opium, or one hundred and twenty drops of liquid laudanum.

"N. B. The patient must be careful to avoid the use of milk for several days after taking any of the aforegoing medicine.

JOHN M. CROUS.

John M. Crous, being duly sworn, deposeth, that the above account and prescription for the remedy and cure for the hydrophobia or canine madness, is a just and true account and prescription, and the only one used and practised upon by himself for more than twenty years past and which has never failed of perfect success in any instance of the vast number of unfortunate human beings who have been bitten by the mad dog, and who have applied to him, the deponent, for relief.

The following lines contain many handsome sentiments, on

MORAL AND NATURAL BEAUTY.

SWEET is the voice that soothes my care,
The voice of love, the voice of song;
The eye that celebrates the fair,
And animates the warlike throng.

Sweet is the counsel of a friend,
Whose bosom proves a pillow kind,
Who, e'en mild persuasion bring, an end
To all the sorrows of the mind.

Sweet is the breath of balmy Spring,
That lingers in the primrose vale;
The woodlark sweet, when on the wing
His wild notes swell the riding gale.

Sweet is the breeze that curls the lakes,
And early wafts the fragrant dew,
Through hovering clouds the vapour breaks,
And clears the bright ethereal hue.

Sweet is the bean, the blooming pea,
More fragrant than Arabia's gale
That sleeps upon the tranquil sea,
Or gently swells th'extended sail.

Sweet is the walk where daisies spring,
And cowslips scent the verdant mead;
The woodlands haunt where linnets sing,
From every bud surrender feed.

But far more sweet are virtuous deeds;
The hand that kindly brings relief,
The heart that with the widow bleeds,
That shares the drooping orphan's grief.

The PIOUS and HUMANE, here rife
With liberal hands and feeling heart;
And chafe the tears from forrow's eyes,
And bid each anxious woe depart.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, March 19.

Lord Cathcart's conduct in reſiſting the demand made for ſurrender of the recruits raiſed for the German Legion, was very ſpirited. Before they were embarked, ſome movements on the part of the Pruſſians indicated an intention of preventing their embarkation. Lord Cathcart is reported to have declared directly and diſtinctly to Count Shulenburgh, that if any movements were made to detach the newly raiſed levy from him, it muſt be over his and every Britiſh Soldier's body! In this gallant reſolution he was ſupported by the countenance of the Swediſh and Ruſſian force, which formed a ſtrong cordon, together with the Britiſh troops to proteſt the embarkation.

A new plot againſt the Government of Bonaparte has been diſcovered at La Vendee, and ſeveral of the conſpirators have been arreſted and tried at Nantes. —One of them has been executed.

Ruſſian Official Account of the Battle of Auſterlitz.

TROPPAU, Jan. 25.

The iſſue of the Battle of Auſterlitz has been ſo well confirmed by its conſequences, that it is almoſt incredible how France could publiſh ſuch extravagant and untrue relations of that affair. All Europe, and the Ruſſian nation in particular, juſtly expect a relation on our part. The love of truth alone, and the wiſh to adduce none but well authenticated facts, have hitherto prevented the appearance of this relation. In the meanwhile, it is neceſſary to correct ſome of the ſtatements of the French Bulletins, particularly the 30th, and to lay them before the public.

General Savary ſpoke with two perſons only belonging to the Emperor's ſuite; and excepting theſe, he only ſaw ſome Field Adjutants, who had brought diſpatches from theſe Chiefs, or were in waiting to tranſmit orders to them.

The Chief of the French nation might not have derived any pleaſure from the converſation of Prince Dolgorucky; but at the ſame time forgot that the Ruſſians did not belong to thoſe nations who fought his proteſtion.

The number of the Allied Army as ſtated in the Bulletins, was 105,000 men, viz. 80,000 Ruſſians and 25,000 Auſtrians, and the French moch inferior." But why were their numbers not given? Beſides the reſerve, which alone was ſaid to be equal to an army, the enemy's force conſiſted of four large diviſions of 20,000 infantry and 3000 cavalry each, commanded by a Marſhal and two Generals of Diviſion. The Combined Army, on the other hand, conſiſted of 52,000 Ruſſians and 17,000 Auſtrians!!!

But this inferiority in numbers was the leaſt misfortune of the Ruſſian army; the ſcarcity of proviſions was ſo great, that for nearly two days preceding the battle, they had nothing to eat. The horſes were ſamilhed to ſuch a degree, that thoſe belonging to the artillery could no longer draw.—Of courſe, in the battle, the artillery was of little uſe, excepting in thoſe ſtations where it was firſt planted. The total failure of proviſions and forage was alone ſufficient to prevent our maintaining our poſt any longer at Olmutz, or to take another ſtation further in the rear.—Theſe circumſtances urged the neceſſity of the battle, the happy reſult of which could only be expected from the valor of the troops. The Imperial Guard, of which it is ſaid, in the Bulletin, that it loſt all its colours, are ſtill in poſſeſſion of them, and have taken one pair from the enemy. The Combined Army, it is ſaid, loſt 15,000 killed, and 20,000 priſoners. Do they include among theſe the 20,000 ſaid to have been drowned?

After ſo many forced marches, and ſo much fatigue and hunger as had been ſuſtained, with the ſickneſs conſequent thereunto; after the affairs upon the Danube and in Moravia;—of the whole Ruſſian army there is not a deficiency of more than ſeventeen thouſand men. But, were the loſs as conſiderable as the Bulletin has pretended, why was not the Ruſſian army purſued, as the Bulletin falſely aſſerts? On the contrary, the Ruſſian army kept the field till the next morning. The armiſtice was not concluded but with the Emperor of Germany, at whoſe particular deſire the Ruſſians firſt commenced their retreat, and which was alſo effected in good order and without loſs, nor withſtanding the French partly aſſert, that during the negociations with Auſtria, the French army protecuted its victories. To enhance the glory of this day, the French Bulletin ſays, that the French Guard (the Reſerve Corps) took no part in the battle. The ſame Bulletin however afterwards aſſerts, that when one French battalion was broke by the Ruſſian Guard, Bonaparte ordered Marſhal Beſſieres to advance, and that the Imperial Guards on both ſides immediately came to action.

The French Bulletins abound with falſe ſtatements, over which the pretended noiſe and diſtraction, occaſioned by the diſcharge of 200 pieces of cannon, and a conflict between 200,000 men, throw but a ſlimſy covering.—Can it poſſibly ſerve the intereſts of a great General to fanciful ſuch reports? Can he really ſtand in need of ſuch means as theſe to increaſe that military glory which is not denied him?—Poſterity will do juſtice to the truth.

A report was current yeſterday, that the Brazils have been taken by a French fleet, but it was regarded as an unauthenticated rumour.

LIVERPOOL, March 27.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

London, Tueſday night, ſix o'clock. —Mr. Whitbread and others brought up a paper from the Houſe of Commons, the contents of which were, that the commons had taken into conſideration the anſwer of Henry Lord Viſcount Melville, and that he is guilty of the charges laid againſt him, and that the Commons are ready to prove the ſame. Upon the Chancellor's reading it from the Woolſack, Lord Fitzwilliam roſe to make a motion that Henry Lord Viſcount Melville be heard at the Bar of this Houſe, which being agreed to, he further moved that the 29th of April, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon be the time for the trial of Henry Lord Viſcount Melville, at the Bar of this Houſe.

ALBANY, May 16.

News.—We yeſterday ſaw a letter from Barbadoes, dated April 14, 1806, giving information, received via Trinidad, that General Miranda had effected a landing in the Spaniſh American province of Curracas; that he had taken the iſland of Margurita, the town of Cumana, on the ſea board of the province; the town of Barcellona, in the ſame, on the river Neveri; and was in full march for the capital of the country, ſituated about 50 miles from the coaſt. Mr. Fitzwilliam acts as his ſecretary. The expedition ſailed laſt from Curracoa.

The above information is confirmed by Captain Forbrough, who arrived here yeſterday from Martinico. It appears that the American ſhip Leander, was joined by ſome Engliſh cruizers, and that Miranda has proclaimed the independence of the province. The intelligence was brought to Martinico by a Danith veſſel.

A Jamaica paper of the 12th ult. which we received yeſterday, contains the following—"We learn from Curracoa, that the gavernment of that place was aware of Miranda's intention, in conſequence of which a large force of Spaniards and Aborigines had been raiſed to oppoſe him, and the ſea coaſt lined with troops for a great diſtance. His partiſans, however, under a commander named Ferdinand Mendes Pinto, were alſo collecting an immenſe force to windward, and were determined to render him all aſſiſtance, immediately on his appearance on the coaſt."

THE RUSSIANS.

Mr. Carr makes us familiar with the cuſtoms of the common Ruſſians, who are thus nobly and feelingly vindicated from the character which ſome travellers have given them, of unconquerable barbariſm:

"To ſay that nature has irreverſibly doomed the Ruſſian to be a barbarian is an aſſertion as diſgraceful as it is unjuſt, and ſuch as nature herſelf contravened. Amidſt all the oppreſſion that weighs him to the earth, that half aſſociates him with the rugged beaſts of the foreſt, and taught as he is that his condition can never know amelioration, this poor ſlave of the north has diſplayed the moſt heroic ardor in the field, the moſt gentle moderation in ſucceſs, and the mildeſt, unrepining philoſophy in ſuffering, ſuch as would have done honor to a Roman.

"If you aſk whether the ſenſibilities of nature ever ſoftened the Ruſſian breaſt, read what the poor exiles have expreſſed in the deſolate wilds of Siberia, and it will put the feelings of your own heart to their fulleſt proof. In thoſe regions of gloom the poet may catch ſome of the fineſt ſubjects for his muſe.

"Let us not endeavour to convert the law of climates into the ruthleſs decrees of immortal vengeance. Well did the poor African ſay, "Ah maſſa, a good negro is like a chetnut, all white within, and a bad Engliſhman like an apple, thought perfect, when it has many black grains in its heart." No! no! the breaſt of the Ruſſian is not unimpreſſible. The granite of his inclement region is hard and rugged, harder than any other rock; but under its rough ſurface, gems are ſometimes found, and love and toil have proved that it is ſuſceptible of a high polith. No one who has remarked the Ruſſian with candour, who judges from what he has ſeen, and not from what he has heard or read, will heſitate to pronounce him one of the beſt-tempered creatures in the creation. He will bear the curſe and the ſcorn, and frequently the blows of his ſuperior with mildneſs. Revenge almoſt fanctioned by inſults, never maddens his blood; and knowing how hard it is to ſuffer without reſiſting, he is ſcarcely ever ſeen to ſtrike the animal over which he has power.

His horſe is ſeldom compelled by any other influence than a few cheriſhing and cheering ſounds; if this encouragement in creaſe not his pace, he does not, beated with ſavage fury, diſfeature wretched beaſt with the ſcourge, beat out an eye or tear out the tongue; no, his patient driver begins to ſing to him, and the Ruſſians are all famous ſingers, as I ſhall hereafter tell. If the charms of muſic have no influence on his legs he then begins to reaſon with him. "You filly fellow, why don't you go on faſter? come, get on, get on, don't you know that to-morrow is a feaſtinick (a faſt day) that then you will have nothing to do but to eat." By this time, the lucky jade has generally had its whim out, and trots on gaily. His horſe is the object of his pride and comfort. Well obſerving the wiſdom of the Ruſſian proverb, "It is not the horſe but the oats that carry you." As long as the animal will eat he feeds him, and his appearance generally honors, and his grateful ſervices remunerate the humanity of his maſter. A Ruſſian in the exaſſition of paſſion may do a ferocious thing, but never an ill-natured one. No being under heaven ſurpaſſes him in the gaiety of his heart. His little national ſong cheers him wherever he goes. Where a German would ſmoke for comfort, the Ruſſian ſings. There is nothing cold about him but a wintry climate;—whenever he ſpeaks it is with good humour and vivacity, accompanied with the moſt animated geſtures; and although I do not think that the Graces would at firſt ſight pull caps about him, yet, in the dance, for ſpirit and agility, I would match him againſt any one of the moſt agile ſons of careleſſneſs in the Champs Elifees."

GIBRALTAR, Jan. 15.

Extraordinary inſtance of bravery.—In the late glorious action with the combined fleets, his Majeſty's ſhip Defiance commanded by P. C. Durham, had engaged a French 80 gun ſhip within piſtol ſhot. Mr. Spratt, mate of the above ſhip, from his great activity, had been honored with the command of the boarders, and likewiſe promiſed an opportunity to ſignalize himſelf. This brave young officer, in the midſt of the action, aſked his gallant captain permiſſion to board, who immediately ordered the helm aweather, and the boarders to be ready; but this true ſon of Neptune, fearing the ſhip would not cloſe, and unwilling to loſe ſo glorious an opportunity, requeſted of the men that could ſwim to follow him. He plunged into the water, ſwam to the enemy's ſtern, and entered the gun room port alone, by the aſſiſtance of the rudder chains. His men either miſunderſtood or did not hear him, in the clamour of battle, but our hero made his way courageouſly through the different decks, and was ſoon after ſeen on the enemy's poop, with his hat on the point of his cutlaſs, calling the boarders to his aſſiſtance, who were then anxiouſly waiting for the ſhips to cloſe. He attempted to haul down the French colours, but was attacked by ſeveral grenadiers, whom he repulſed with ſucceſs. The ſhips being pretty cloſe, ſeveral of our tars got over, who went their vengeance on an officer. He cried for mercy, and threw himſelf at our hero's feet, who ſaved his life. He had ſcarcely performed this piece of ſervice, when a muſket was levelled at his breaſt, but to cloſe that he fortunately ſtruck it downward, receiving, however, the ſhot thro' his leg, which was ſeverely fractured. He afterwards fought two of the enemy on his knees who were ſoon diſpatched by ſome of the brave tars by whom he was ſo gallantly ſupported. The ſhip ſoon after ſtruck, and proved to be the l'Aigle. This young officer is in the naval hoſpital, and we are happy to hear, in a fair way of doing well.

From the Northumberland, (Pennſylvania) Argus.

MR. BINNS,

The unfortunate circumſtance which happened to Mr. Slater laſt week, bro't to my recollection a tranſaction which was exhibited ſomething more than 20 years ago. A perſon in or near London made known to the public, that he had provided materials for a houſe, all of wood, and that they were proof againſt fire, and that on a day fixed, he would have it on Putney Common, and a ſufficient quantity of combuſtibles to try the experiment. Accordingly a great concourſe of people aſſembled. The houſe was ſet up, and fire ſet to it in ſeveral, places, but it would not burn. The fact is, the wood had been rendered incombuſtible, by its being previouſly boiled or ſoaked in allum water. Boards that are uſed near a ſtove pipe, or in any ſituation near the fire, might be ſoaked with the above, and ſo prevent them from catching fire, and ſave all the calamity which ſo often follows ſuch accidents.

Should this information be attended with any advantage to the public, it will be a gratification to

JOHN WHEATLY.

Northumberland, March 7, 1806.

N. B. Wood boiled in allum water, if even put into the fire, will not blaze.

Method of waſhing white Silk Patent Lace.

Fold up the piece to the length of about a quarter of a yard, ſtitch it up ſlightly together with a needle and thread; anoint the ſurface of the lace with a little ſweet oil upon the end of a feather, and boil it one hour in ſtrong ſoap and water. When taken out it will have a ſhowy whiteneſs ſuperior to its original colour. [Palladium.

ON THE DEATH OF LORD NELSON.

BY THE HON. C. J. FOX, ESQ.

IN Death's terrific icy arms
The brave, illuſtrious NELSON lies;
He's free from cares and war's alarms,
Sees not our tears nor hears our ſighs.

Cold is the heart where glow reign'd,
Mute is the tongue that joy inſpir'd,
Still is the arm that conqueſt gain'd,
And dim the eye that glory fir'd.

Too mean for him a world like this!
He's landed on the happy ſhore
Where all the brave partake of bliſs,
And heroes meet to part no more.

The following Lines were written by a Britiſh Statesman of celebrity, now living:—They breath much morality and ingeniouſneſs.

THE MANSION OF REST.

I talk'd to my flattering heart,
And I chid its wild wandering ways;
I charg'd it from FOLLY to part,
And to faſhion the reſt of its days;
I bade it no longer admire
The meteors that FANCY had dreſt;
I whiſper'd, 'twas time to retire,
And ſeek for a Manſion of Reſt.

A Charmer was ſiſt'ning the while,
Who caught up the tone of my lay:
Oh come then, ſhe cried, with a ſmile,
And I'll ſhew you the place and the way:
I followed the wiſh to her home,
And vow'd to be there her gueſt:
"Never more, I exclaim'd, will I roam,
"In ſearch of the Manſion of Reſt."

But the ſweeteſt of moments will fly;
Nor long was my fancy beguil'd,
Ere from I diſcern'd, with a ſigh,
That the Syren deceiv'd, while ſhe ſmil'd:
Deep deep in the ſhade ſhe repoſes
Of my trufting and innocent breaſt,
And the door of each avenue cloſes,
That led to the Manſion of Reſt.

Then Friendſhip entic'd me to ſtray,
Through the long magic wiles of romance;
But I found that he meant to betray,
And ſhrunk from the Sorcerer's glance:
For Experience has taught me to know,
That the ſoul which feeds on his breath,
Might ſoſs on the billows of woe,
And ne'er find a Manſion of Reſt.

Pleaſure's path I determin'd to try;
But Prudence I met in the way,
Conviction flaſhed light from her eye,
And appear'd to illumine my day:
She cry'd—as ſhe ſhew'd me a grave
With nettles and wild flowers dreſt'd,
O'er which the dark cypreſs did wave—
"Behold there the Manſion of Reſt."

She ſpoke and half vaniſh'd in air,
For the few mild Religion appear,
With a ſmile that would baniſh deſpair,
And dry up the penitent tear:
Doubts and fears from my boſom were driven,
As, preſſing the croſs to her breaſt,
And pointing ſerenely to Heaven,
She ſhew'd the true Manſion of Reſt.

RELIGION.

AN OCCASIONAL HYMN.

THRO' shades and solitudes profound,
The sunning traveller winds his way;
Bewildering meteors glare around,
And tempt his wandering feet astray:

Welcome, thrice welcome, to his eye,
The sudden moon's unerring light,
When forth she sallies thro' the sky,
The guardian Angel of the night!

Thus mortals, blind and weak, below
Pursue the phantom Bliss, in vain;
The world's a wilderness of woe,
And life a pilgrimage of pain!

Till mild RELIGION, from above,
Descends, a sweet engaging form,
The messenger of heavenly love,
The bow of promise in a storm!

Then guilty passions wing their flight,
Sorrow, remorse, affliction cease;
RELIGION'S yoke is soft and light,
And all her paths are paths of peace.

Ambition, pride, revenge, depart,
And fully flies her chastening rod;
She makes the humble contrite heart
A temple of the living GOD.

Beyond the narrow rule of time,
Where bright celestial ages roll,
To scenes eternal, scenes sublime,
She points the way and leads the soul.

At her approach the grave appears
The Gate of Paradise reflored;
Her voice the watching Cherub hears,
And drops his double flaming sword.

Inspired with her renewing fire,
May we the crown of glory gain;
Rise when the Hoft of Heaven expire,
And reign with G-D, forever reign!

London Gazette Extraordinary.

Downing ſtreet, Feb. 28, 1806.

DISPATCHES, of which the following are a copy and extract, addreſſed to Lord Viſcount Caſtlereagh, were received yeſterday evening, at the office of the Rt. Hon. William Windham, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, from Major General Sir David Baird:

Cape Town, January 12, 1806.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to announce to your Lordſhip the capitulation of the town and garriſon of the Cape of Good Hope to his Majeſty's arms.

In my diſpatches of the 24th of November laſt, from St. Salvador, I had the honor to apprize your Lordſhip of the meaſures adopted to refreſh the force under my command; and having, with much difficulty, procured about 60 or 70 horſes for the cavalry, and the ſick being recruited, the expedition ſailed on the 26th of that month; and we had the good fortune to reach Table Bay on the 4th inſt.

I had been intended to diſembark the army immediately, and with a view of covering our deſign, before entering the Bay, the 24th regt. commanded by the Hon. Lieut. Col. M'Donald, was detached, under charge of the Leda frigate, to make a demonſtration of landing in Campo Bay, but the wind having failed, the fleet did not arrive at its anchorage until the day was too far advanced to attempt a landing.

On the morning of the 5th the firſt brigade, under the orders of Brigadier Gen. Beresford, was embarked in boats and proceeded towards the only acceſſible part of the ſhore, in a ſmall bay, 16 miles to the northward of Cape Town, where it appeared practicable to effect a diſembarkation, but the ſurf had increaſed ſo conſiderably that, combined with the local difficulties of the ſpot, it was found neceſſary to abandon the attempt.

The reſt of the day was devoted to a careful examination of the whole ſhore, from Loſpards Bay to within gun-ſhot of the batteries at Cape Town, but it produced only the diſtreſſing concluſion that the chance of effecting a landing depended upon contingencies, very unlikely to be realized but in a perfect calm.

In conſequence of this inference, in order to obviate the diſadvantages of delay in the adoption of a reſolution which I apprehended would at laſt be neceſſarily impoſed on me, I directed Brigadier Gen. Beresford to proceed with the 38th regt. and the 20th light dragoons, efcorted by his Majeſty's ſhip Diomede, to Saldanha Bay, where the diſembarkation could be accomplished with facility, and a proſpect was afforded of procuring horſes and cattle; and I purpoſed following with the main body of the army in the event of the beach being impracticable the enſuing morning.

The ſurf along the ſhore of Loſpards Bay having conſiderably abated the enſuing morning, I determined, with the concurrence of Commodore Sir Home Popham, to make an effort to get the troops on ſhore, and accordingly the Highland Brigade, compoſed of the 71ſt, 72d, and 93d regts. effected that object under the command of Brigadier General Ferguſon.

The ſhore had been previouſly very cloſely inſpected by the Brigadier, and by his ſpirited exertions and example, our efforts were crowned with ſucceſs; although a confined and intricate channel to the ſhore, which had been accurately pointed out by beacons laid down by the diligence and activity of the boats of his Majeſty's ſhip Diadem, and a tremendous ſurf, oppoſed the paſſage of the troops.

The enemy had ſcattered a party of ſharp ſhooters over the contiguous heights, and commanded the landing, but the caſualties of this ſervice aroſe principally from natural difficulties, and it is with the deepeſt concern I have the honor to inform your Lordſhip that we loſt 35 rank and file of the 93d regt. by the overſetting of one of the boats, notwithſtanding every poſſible effort to reſcue thoſe unfortunate men.

The remainder of the troops could only be brought on ſhore on the ſucceeding day, when the extraordinary obſtacles to all intercourſe with the fleet, which nothing but the courage and perſeverance of Britiſh ſeamen could ſurmount, barely enabled us to obtain the indiſpenſable ſupplies of water and proviſions for immediate ſubſiſtence.

On the morning of the 8th the army conſiſting of the 24th, 59th, 71ſt, 72d, 83d and 93d regts. about 4000 ſtrong, was formed into two brigades, with two howitzers and ſix light field pieces, and moved off towards the road which leads to Cape Town; and having aſcended the ſummit of the Blaw Berg, or Blue Mountain, and diſlodged the enemy's light troops, I diſcovered their main body, drawn up in two lines, prepared to receive us, and even in motion to anticipate our approach.

The enemy's force apparently consisted of about 5000 men, the greater proportion of which was cavalry, and 23 pieces of cannon, yoked to horses, the disposition of which, and the nature of the ground occupied by the enemy's troops made it evident that they intended to refuse their right wing, and with their left attempt to turn our right flank; but, to frustrate their design, I formed the army into two columns, the 2d brigade under Brigadier Gen. Ferguson keeping the road, whilst the first struck to the right, and took the defile of the Mountains. Having accomplished my purpose, our line was formed with equal celerity and order; and the left wing, composed of the Highland Brigade, was then moved forward, and advanced with the steadiest step, under a very heavy fire of round shot, grape and musquetry. Nothing could surpass or resist the determined bravery of the troops, headed by their gallant leader, Brigadier Gen. Fergufon, and the number of the enemy, who (armed the plain), ferved only to augment their ardour and confirm their discipline. The enemy received our fire, and maintained his position obstinately, but in the moment of charging, the valor of British troops bore down all opposition, and forced him to a precipitate retreat.

The first Brigade, composed of the 24th, 59th, and 83d regts. and commanded in the absence of Brigadier Genl. Beresford, by Lieut. Col. Baird, was unavoidably precluded, by their situation, from any considerable participation in the triumph of the British arms, though the flank companies of the 24th had however an opportunity of distinguishing themselves in dislodging a number of horse and riflemen from the heights on our right flank. This brilliant achievement however was clouded by the loss of Capt. Foster, of the grenadiers, whose gallantry is best recorded in the bosoms of his brother soldiers, and the universal regret of the army.

It is utterly impossible to convey to your Lordship an adequate idea of the obstacles which oppoled the advance, and retarded the success of our army; but it is my duty to inform your Lordship that the nature of the country—a deep, heavy, and arid land, covered with shrubs, scarcely pervious to light bodies of infantry; and above all, the total privation of water under the effects of a burning sun, had nearly exhausted our gallant fellows in the moment of victory, and with the utmost difficulty were we able to reach the Reit Valley, where we took our position for the night. A considerable portion of the provisions and necessaries with which we started, had been lost during the action, and we occupied our ground under an apprehension that even the great exertions of Sir Home Popham and the navy could not relieve us from starvation.

My Lord, on every occasion where it has been found neceffary to call for the co operation of British Seamen in land enterprizes, their valour has been so conspicuous and their spirit of valour and perseverance so unconquerable, that no tribute of my applause can add a lustre to their character; but I discharge a most agreeable portion of my duty in assuring your Lordship, that on the recent employment of their services, they have maintained their reputation; and in this place it behoves me to inform your Lordship, that the uniform good conduct of those gallant fellows and the zeal of Capt. George Byng who commanded them, together with that of every subordinate Officer, have merited my fullest approbation.

The loss of the enemy in this engagement is reputed to exceed 500 men in killed & wounded; and it is with the most sensible gratification that I commit to it the inclosed return of our casualties. Your Lordship will perceive the name of Lieut. Col. Grant among the wounded, but the heroic spirit of this officer was not subdued by his misfortune, and he continued to lead his men to glory, as long as an enemy was opposed to his Majesty's 93d regiment. I have the cordial satisfaction to add, that his wound, tho' very severe, is not pronounced dangerous; and I indulge the hope and expectation of his early recovery and resumption of command.

On the morning of the 9th, recruited by such supplies as the unwearied diligence and efforts of the navy could throw on shore, the 59th regt. however, being almost completely destitute of food, was protected our march towards Cape Town, and took up a position south of Salt River, which we trusted might preserve a free communication with the squadron; for our battering train, as well as every other necessary, except water, was to pass to us from his Majesty's ships. In this situation a flag of truce was sent to me by the Commandant of the garrison of Cape Town, (the Governor General Janfens, having retired after the action of the 8th into the country, moving by Hottentots Holland Kloof) requesting a suspension of hostilities for 48 hours, in order to negociate a capitulation. In answer to this overture, I dispatched Brigadier Gener al Fergufon, accompanied by Lieutenant Col. Brownrigg, to stipulate, as the condition of my acquiescence, the surrender of the outworks of the town within 6 hours, allowing 36 hours for arranging the articles of capitulation.

My proposition being assented to, the 59th regt. marched into Fort Knokke; and the next day, in conjunction with Sir Home Popham, the terms were agreed upon, and his Majesty's forces were put in possession of the several defences of the town. Of the modified capitulation, as ratified by us, I have the honor to inclose a copy.

The cordial, able and zealous Co-operation of Commodore Sir Home Popham, emulated by all the Officers under his Command, merits my warmest Acknowledgments and Commendation; and I have the satisfaction to add, that no united Service was ever performed with more true Harmony than has uniformly been manifested by both Branches of His Majesty's Forces. Such of his Majesty's ships as could be spared from the service of Lolpards Bay, constantly coasted the Enemy's shore, throwing shot among his Troops and people, and contributing to keep him ignorant of the actual Place of our Disembarkation; and a very spirited Effort was made by the Marines of the Fleet, and a party of Seamen from the Diadem, under the Commodore's immediate Command, to occupy a Position in Reit Valley, and co-operate with the Army.

The Marines and the Honorable Company's Recruits, as well as their Cadets, headed by Lieutenant Colonel Willett, of the Bengal Establishment, have been usefully employed in different Branches of the Service; but I have to regret the Deprivation of the Services of the 20th Dragoons, and 38th Regiment, under a conviction that they could not have failed to discharge their Duty in the same exemplary manner as the rest of his Majesty's Troops engaged in the Action.

Public as well as personal Considerations induce me to lament the Absence of Brigadier-General Beresford, from whose Talents and Experience I should have derived the most essential Assistance in our disputed and difficult Progress from Lolparde Bay.

The Duties of the Quarter Master General's Department were very ably and judiciously discharged by Lieut. Colonel Brownrigg; and although the Army had the greatest Cause to lament the absence, from severe Illness, of Major Tucker, Deputy Adjutant-General, yet the Zeal and Activity manifested by Major Trotter of the 83d Regiment, and the Assistant-Adjutant General Captain Munro, happily precluded all Deficiency in that Department. The Absence of Captain Smyth, of the Royal Engineers, with the Sidmouth Detachment, was also a Matter of great Regret to me, for his Knowledge of the Country would have relieved me from much Embarrassment.

To the several Officers commanding Corps, I am under considerable Obligations for their gallant, spirited, zealous and judicious Conduct and Example, in leading their Men up to the Enemy. British Troops, headed by such Men, must ever, under Providence, command Success; and every Man in this Army has, I trust it will be considered, preserved the Character of the British Soldier, and faithfully discharged his Duty to His King and Country.

This Dispatch will be delivered to your Lordship by Lieutenant Colonel Baird, and to whom I beg leave to refer for any additional information your Lordship may wish to obtain, respecting our proceedings: and I beg Leave to recommend this zealous and meritorious Officer to your Lordship's Protection.

I take the liberty of mentioning to your Lordship, that not having been joined by the Narcissus Frigate Prior to our Disembarkation, and subsequent operations in the Field, I was unfortunately deprived of the services of Captain Sotell, Assistant-Adjutant-General, who was charged with my dispatches from Madeira to Governor Patton, and with the Execution of my wishes to procure intelligence relative to the Strength and condition of this Colony; and from whose extensive local knowledge and professional talents, I expected to derive great Assistance.

Herewith I have the honor to inclose for your Lordship's information, a return of the Ordinance found in the Citadel and other Defences of this Settlement, but it is perhaps inaccurate, for the reason assigned by the Commanding Officer of Artillery.

I have the honor to be, &c.

N. B. There not being sufficient time to send in a return of the whole of the Ordinance, Ammunition, and stores, a correct return will be sent as soon as possible.

Extract of a dispatch from Major Gen. Sir David Baird to Lord Viscount Castlereagh, dated Cape Town, Jan. 13 h 18 6.

GENERAL JANSENS has retired to Hottentots Holland Klooff, and advices this instant received Rate him to have sent his forces over the Klooff, estimating them at twelve hundred men with twenty-eight pieces of Artillery, and two hundred waggons. He has discharged the farmers from the service, and dismissed fifty waggons, which are said to be coming towards the town, and consequently will be soon in my possession.

This account of his force is probably exaggerated, and particularly with regard to his Artillery.

The General himself is still on this side the Klooff, but his intentions seem matter of conjecture, and probably he meditates a movement towards Zwart Kopts River.

His resources with respect to Subsistence, are of a kind not very susceptible of interruption, from the disposition of the farmers, of the means I can immediately oppose to him, unless he should experience a deficiency of Ammunition by our possession of some of his depots. The farmers are by no means likely to assist him heartily for any length of time, for the devastation of their property must be the inevitable consequence of a profecution of the contest in the Interior.

To Augment, or even preserve his actual, and, I trust, but temporary superiority in that Particular, it will be neceffary for General Janfens to move, in a Northerly Direction, into the district of Stellenbosch; but as the measure is of a most desperate tendency, and requires that his head should be steeled to those fenfations which are faid to govern his actions, I indulge a fanguine expectation that consequences so dreadful may be averted.

With this view, and from the posture of our relative affairs, I have deemed it both honorable and expedient for his Majesty's Government to make an overture to General Janfens, a copy of which is included, deprecating the destructive result of his further opposition to his Majesty's arms, and treating him with the generosity and distinction due to his character.

But in order to give weight to the anxious desire I entertain of inviting General Janfens to a pacification, I have at an early hour this day, detached Brigadier General Beresford, with the 59th and 72d Regiments, two Howitzers, and four Six pounders, to poffefs himself of the Village of Stellenbosch, and thence to forward my letter to the General, accompanied by such additional arguments as the Brigadier may consider expedient to submit to him, and with full powers to conclude whatever treaty existing circumstances may exact.

SIR, Cape Town, Jan 11, 1806.

YOU have discharged your duty to your country as became a brave man at the head of a gallant, though feeble, army. I know how to respect the high qualities of such a man; and do not doubt that, that humanity which ever characterizes an intrepid Soldier, will now operate in your breast, to check the fatal consequences of a fruitless conteft.

The Naval and Military forces of his Britannic Majesty, which have poffeffed themselves of the seat of your recent government, are of a magnitude to leave no question respecting the issue of further hostilities; and therefore a temporary and disastrous refistance is all you can possibly oppole to superior numbers.

Under these circumstances, nothing can result, but the devestation of the country you casually occupy; and such a consequence can never be contemplated without anguish by a generous mind; or be gratifying to the man who feels for the prosperity and tranquility of the colony lately subject to his administration. But if unhappily your refolution is formed to oppose an enemy of such superior force, by protracting a conteft which muft entail misery and ruin on the industrious and peaceably disposed settlers of this colony, I shall be exonerated from the reproach of my own conscience by this frank overture; and you muft justify to yourself, and to your countrymen, the further effusion of blood, and the desolation of the country.

You are neceffarily so well acquainted with the extent of the calamities in which the Interior of the country may be involved, that I shall not enlarge upon your power of exciting mischief to be done to all its inhabitants; but, I perfuade myself that confiderations of a more laudable nature will influence your decision on this occasion; and that you will manifest an immediate disposition to promote a general tranquility.

I have the honor to fubfcribe, with sentiments of the highest respect and consideration, Sir, your's &c. &c. &c.

(Signed) D. BAIRD.
Maj. Gen. Commanding in Chief.

To Lieut. General Janfens, &c. &c. &c.

Copy of a Letter received this day, by Captain Drummond, from Sir Home Popham, Knt. Captain of his Majesty's ship the Diadem, to Wilmam Marsden, Esq; dated on board the said ship in Table Bay, the 13th January 1806.

SIR,

WHEN I address you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, on an occasion of such public interest and importance as the Capture of the Cape of Good Hope, which is now in poffeffion of his Majesty's Troops under that renowned General Sir David Baird, I consider it neceffary to trouble their Lordships with a detailed account of the proceedings of the Fleet from St. Salvador, which, however will be conveyed in another dispatch.

On the 3d instant, we made Table Land, and on the 4th, in the evening, we reached our prescribed anchorage to the Westward of Robben Island, though too late to do any thing but take a superficial view of Blue Berg Bay; where it was propoled to land the main body of the army, making however a demonstration off Green Point, with the Leda Frigate, and the transports, containing the 24th Regiment, which was certainly well executed by Captain Hamilton.

On the 5th, at three o'clock in the morning, the troops were put in the boats and assembled alongside of the Espoir, but the surf ran so high, that a landing was deemed totally impracticable, and consequently the troops returned to their ships; and I immediately accompanied the General on board the Espoir for the purpose of making a clofe Examination of the whole coast from Craig's Tower to Lolpard's Bay; on no part of which did it appear pollible to land a single boat without extreme danger.

To the evil consequences of delay in commencing operation on an enemy's coast, was to be added the very alarming poffibility that fome reinforcements might arrive by one of the various Squadrons in motion to and we left Europe; and therefore the General and myself were induced to consider that however difficult the task might be of advancing from Saldahna Bay, yet it was an object of very great moment to accomplish a fafe and speedy landing for the troops; and the instant the decision was made, the Diomede, with the transports of the 24th Regiment, the 20th Light Dragoons and a proportion of Artillery, under the orders of Brigadier-General Beresford, joined for Saldanha, preceded by captain King in the Espoir, having on board captain Smyth of the Engineers (an officer well acquainted with the country) with a view of seizing the Post Master and as many cattle as poffible, antecedent to the arrival of the advanced division of the Fleet.

Soon after the Diomede weighed, the Westerly wind began to abate; and on the 6th in the morning, the officers examining the beach reported that the surf had considerably subsided during the night; which indeed was so evident from the Diadem when the flood in shore, that I requested Sir David Baird to permit General Fergufon, and colonel Brownrigg, the Quarter-Master General, to attend the officer on his second examination, that their feelings might in some measure be balanced against those of profeffional men, and to satisfy the army that no measure, in which its safety was so intimately connected, should be determined on without due and proper deliberation.

In the mean time the Diadem, Leda, and Encounter were placed in a situation to render the most effective assistance; and the 71st and 72d Regiments, with two field pieces and a Howitzer ready mounted, in the boats of the Raisonable and Belliqueux, were ordered alongside the two former ships, manifesting the most ardent desire for the Signal from General Fergufon; at this moment the Protector joined the squadron, and captain Rowley, who was well acquainted with the anchorage, volunteered his services to place her to the Northward, to as to crofs the line of the Encounter, and more effectually cover the landing of the troops.

Capt. Dowman at the same time went in shore with a light transport brig drawing only 6½ feet, to run her on the beach as a break water, if it were found in any degree facilitate the debarkation of the troops.

At half past twelve the Encounter conveyed by Signal Gen. Fergufon's opinion, that a landing might be effected, and the joy that was manifeft in the countenance of every Officer, heightened the characteristic ardour of the troops, and under an anxiety probably to be first on shore, induced them to urge me to attempt to extend their line of beach further than was prudently and acquainted the laft of our boat, with 1 party of the 93d regiment.

I report this event to their Lordfhips with the moft unfeigned regret; and it is doubly painful to me, becaufe from all the efforts of an enemy poffed on an advantageous height, the army had only 2 men wounded in landing. This circumftance muft fully prove how well the covering veffels were placed, and how ably their guns were ferved; and I truft my country will acquit me of having applied every expedient that could be devifed to prevent the occurrence of an accident which I fo fincerely deplore.

The fire increafed conftderably towards the clofe of the evening, and about 8 o'clock the landing of any more troops was ftopped, but recommenced in the morning, when all the men, and prifoners which the General judged neceffary to take, were difembarked without a moment's lofs of time.

Conceiving that a detachment of the fquadron might be of fervice at the head of the bay, I proceeded there with the Leda, Encounter and Protector, and a divifion of tranfports, and I underftand, from bring occafionally that evening over the back towards the Salt Pan, that the enemy was obliged to move from an eligible ftuation which he had before occupied.

On the following morning we difcovered the Britifh army advancing, with an unparalleled rapidity, over a heavy country, defended by a numerous train of well-ferved artillery; and as I conceived a few frefh troops might be applied to advantage, I directed capt. Donnelon to land with the marines of the fquadron, and 4 field pieces, to await the arrival of Sir D. Baird at Rat Valley, whom I very foon after had the pleafure of perfonally congratulating on the victory he had obtained over a General of fuch high military fame as General Janffens.

When the army was in motion to take up its pofition at Craig's Tower, and while I was proceeding up the bay to anchor in the moft convenient place for landing the battering train, a flag of truce was difcovered coming towards the Diadem, by which I received the letter No. 1. from the commandant of the town and caftle; and the next day, in conjunction with Sir David Baird, the capitulation No. 2. was accepted, and at 8 o'clock Salute was fired from the fquadron, on his Majefty's colours being once more hoaked on the caftle.

Although their Lordfhips will perceive by the detailed account of our tranfactions here, and the accompanying plan of the different difpofitions which were made, that no brilliant fervice fell to the lot of the fquadron I have the honor to command, yet it is what I owe to every officer and feaman to ftate, that under the moft laborious duty I ever experienced, their zeal never abated. To Captain Rowley I feel perfonally indebted for his readinefs on every occafion; and I have no doubt but the beft of fatisfaction will be expreffed of the conduct of Captain Byng, who commanded the Marine Battalion, by an authority far exceeding mine; and I fhall, for their Lordfhips information, a copy of the report he made me on the conduct of the officers ferving in that battalion to which, together with thofe belonging to the fquadron, are added captain Hardinge, of the Sea-fencibles, and feveral other officers, now on their paffage to India to join their fhips.

Captain Butterfield and Lieutenant Cochrane of the Tranfports, were, on all occafions, ready to forward the fervice, and we are particularly indebted to captains Cameron, Chriftopher and Maring, of the Honorable company's fhips Dutchefs of Gordon, Sir William Pulteney, and Comet, who particularly exerted themfelves in affifting the troops through the furf.

It is impoffible for me to tranfmit any returns of the fhores taken, by this opportunity, of of the ftate of the Batt of 68 guns, in Seaman's Bay; but it is however, ftrongly reported that the enemy has not completely fucceeded in his attempt to burn her, that 2 have fmit caft. Percy to take poffeffion of her, if poffible, to move her into fafety, as the enemy has totally abandoned her.

Captain Downman of the Diadem, will have the honor of delivering this difpatch to their Lordfhips, and from the intelligent manner in which I am juftified he will explain every movement, and the caufes by which I have been actuated, I truft he will require no further recommendation to their Lordfhip's protection.

I cannot, however, conclude this letter without offering their Lordfhips, that I know no inftance where a greater degree of confidence and unanimity has been exemplified between the two fervices than on the prefent occafion, and I humbly hope this circumftance, coupled with the meritorious and fucceffful ufe of Sir David Baird's Military Difpofitions will recommend this armament to his Majefty's moft gracious favor and protection.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your moft obedient humble Servant,
HOME POPHAM.

His Majefty's fhip belliqueux, Table bay, 11th Jan. 1806.

SIR,

AFTER the public difpatches iffued by General Sir David Baird, I find it unneceffary to trouble you with any further report on the conduct of the Marine regiment than to fend you a copy of it. I never witneffed more zeal and determined fpirit than was univerfally prevalent; and I take the liberty, of annexing the names of all the volunteer officers; * and I return my thanks to them, as well as thofe officers from the Invincible, fo ably led by captain Edmonds, of the William Pitt, to whom I am particularly indebted for his Exertions.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Lateſt Intelligence.

ALBANY, May 23.

By arrivals at New York and Boſton, London papers are received to the 6th of April, from which the following are ſelections.

LONDON March 29.

Laſt night the Chancellor of the Exchequer opened the Budget, and ſubmitted to the Houſe his ſtatement of the Supplies and Ways and Means for the ſervice of the year.

The total of the ſupplies required for Great Britain alone, be eſtimated at	£43,618,472
The whole of the Ways and Means at	43,630,000
Conſiſting of the following items:
Malt and perſonal eſtate duties,	2,750,000
Grants from proceeds of ſhips captured prior to the war,	1,000,000
Lottery,	380,000
Surplus conſolidated Fund to 5th April, 1807.	3,500,000
War Taxes	19,500,000
Deduct, as likely to be outſtanding at 5th April, 1807,	1,500,000	18,000,000
Loan,		18,000,000
		43,630,000

The new taxes are of two deſcriptions —the war taxes and the permanent duties; the laſt of which are to be appropriated to the payment of the intereſt upon the loan.

The war taxes are to conſiſt in an addition of three and three quarters per cent. to the duty upon property, making in the whole ten per cent. and various duties in the cuſtoms and exciſe, affecting principally ſugar and tobacco, the probable produce of all which he eſtimated at 6,000,000l.

The new permanent taxes are to be derived from the four following items, viz

Wine,	£500,000
Unwrought iron,	500,000
Tea,	70,000
Sales by appraiſement,	66,000
Total	£1,136,000

making in the whole ſeven millions one hundred and thirty ſix thouſand pounds in addition to the exiſting public burthens.

The ſtatement of Lord Henry Petty had the merit of being perſpicuous and unembarraſſed, and the principles of the new, as well as the additional taxes appeared to meet with the general approbation of the Houſe. The details will, however, be liable to ſome objections. It does not appear to us that the mode by which it is intended to make re-payments equal to the amount of the exemptions which are to be taken away under the new regulations of the property tax, is very practicable. It is not to be expected that the ſmall annuities, the claſs of perſons to which the principle of exemption generally applies, can in all caſes be prepared to produce the wills or various legal inſtruments under which they derive their incomes. The taxon appraiſements alſo will require much regulation.

The Hamburgh Mail, and French and Dutch papers to the 21ſt and 26th inſt. have arrived.—The French are not yet complete maſters of the kingdom of Naples. The fortreſs of Gaeta holds out, and the Prince Royal, at the head of about 20,000 regulars, and a levy en maſſe, to the amount of 70,000 more, has taken various ſtrong poſitions in Calabria. It is alſo ſtated, from Rome, that the Ruſſians and Engliſh who lately retreated from Naples have relanded in that province. Switzerland, as well as Holland, is to receive a new form of Government. There can be little doubt but that they are both deſtined to be incorporated with the "Grand Empire!" The independence of theſe countries was one of the principal objects of the war, and Bonaparte can give no ſtronger proof that he has triumphed over the confederated powers than the extinction of thoſe ſtates they proteſted to protect.

March 31.

French and Dutch papers, the former to the 23d, the latter to the 27th inſt. reached us on Saturday; but few facts of any intereſt are to be collected from them. It is only in the extremity of Italy that we are at preſent to look for any military events; and the intelligence from that quarter is both ſcanty and contradictory.—The Official Paper is ſilent to the progreſs of the French arms in Calabria; from which it may be concluded, that the reduction of the kingdom of Naples is not yet completely effected. Under the head of intelligence from Naples, the ſurrender of Peſcara, and the evacuation of both the Calabrias, are mentioned; but the ſubſequent part of the article contradicts this information, and affirms, that ſomething "ſtill remains to be done to complete the conqueſt of the kingdom." It does not ſeem that the bleſſing of a French Government has been received by the Neapolitans with the gratitude that it ſhould have been; for Prince Joſeph, notwithſtanding his "natural clemency," has been obliged to banish and incarcerate ſome of the principal inhabitants of the capital. We ſhall be much diſappointed if the Prince Royal, at the head of his twenty thouſand regulars, and the Calabrian levy en maſſe, do not oppoſe a reſiſtance to the invaders, that will, ſucceſsful or not (the former we fear it cannot be) throw the efforts of the other powers of Europe, Ruſſia excepted, far behind.

April 6.

RUPTURE WITH PRUSSIA.

The terror of the French arms which is now omnipotent in the north of Germany, has at length torn aſunder the few faint points of connection which remained between this country and Pruſſia; the latter ſunk into the abject and wretched inſtrument of Bonaparte's deſperate views againſt our commerce, may be conſidered in an actual ſtate of hoſtility to our intereſts and our proſperity. This intelligence was brought by Mr. Jackſon, who arrived on Thurſday morning at the Foreign Office from Berlin. It was ſoon after the ſubject of long and ſerious conſideration at a full meeting of the Cabinet Miniſters; and diſpatches were ſent off, in the courſe of a few hours, to all the out-ports, for laying an embargo, not only on all Pruſſian veſſels, but on thoſe bound to Pruſſian ports, and belonging to the cities and towns of Germany, contiguous to the dominions of his Pruſſian Majeſty, and within the graſp of his power. Hamburgh is at this moment occupied by Pruſſian troops; Luxhaven is not only in their poſſeſſion, but preparations are making to fortify it, and exclude all acceſs to our trade.—Whether the King of Pruſſia, terrified leſt he ſhould no longer exiſt as an independent power, has abſolutely formed a coalition with France to ſeize upon Swediſh Pomerania, and to deprive Denmark of Holſtein, ſhould the refuſe to ſhut up the Sound againſt us, we cannot undertake to ſtate, but that all intercourſe has been cut off with the Elbe, &c. we do not entertain a doubt. The communications brought by Mr. Jackſon would, we underſtand, juſtify much ſtronger meaſures than thoſe adopted by his Majeſty's Government. A complete ſtoppage to the Pruſſian ſhipping, to the ſhipping of the free towns of Germany, and to all veſſels bound to thoſe ports, has by this time taken place in every one of the ports in England, and will be carried into effect in all the ports of Scotland and Ireland, before the end of the week. The Baltic and Tonningen convoys have of courſe been prevented from ſailing.

The diſpatches, ordering the detention of all Pruſſian veſſels of every deſcription in Dover, Ramſgate, the Downs, and in every other port down the coaſt, reached Dover on Friday afternoon, and were inſtantly forwarded to Vice Admiral Holloway, commanding in the Downs, and to Vice Admiral Keith, at Ramſgate. The order was executed with all poſſible diſpatch. Similar diſpatches were received the ſame day by the Port Admiral at Sheerneſs, who inſtantly countermanded, the ſailing of the Northern convoys, and embargoed all veſſels bearing the Pruſſian flag.

The effect of this intelligence upon the commercial world, was felt in almoſt every branch of the trading and monied intereſt. The moſt ſerious apprehenſions are juſtly entertained for the ſafety of great quantities of valuable merchandize at Hamburgh and other ports, while colonial produce, brought up here to a conſiderable amount, will, it is feared, remain upon the hands of our merchants. Omnium, from the opening of the market, experienced a gradual depreſſion; and, after a ſmall fluctuation in its favor, finally ſunk two per cent. in value.—Conſols fell one per cent.

It is not however, ſolely to the nature of the intelligence brought by Mr. Jackſon, that the public ſenſation on this occaſion ſhould be imputed. The ſpeech of Mr. Secretary Fox, in reply to Lord Caſtlereagh, in the Houſe of Commons on Thurſday night, muſt have had a very material effect in producing it. He was, at the moment of vindicating himſelf and his colleagues, in poſſeſſion of the new meaſures purſued by the King of Pruſſia; and when he was complimented by the Noble Lord on the "bed of roſes," which had been bequeathed to him, he felt that he was pricked, galled, and ſtung by "brambles, thorns, and thiſtles."—We think, however, too highly of the patriotic, proud, and independent ſpirit of Mr. Fox, to ſuppoſe him leſs capable of contending with our inveterate enemy, becauſe we are to reckon upon the hoſtility of Pruſſia. If he was rather warm in his defence, it was, we truſt, more from a deſire to expoſe the vanity of the triumph claimed for the late Adminiſtration by his opponent in debate, than from any wiſh to diffuſe deſpondency throughout the country.

A Council was yeſterday held at the Queen's Houſe, which his Majeſty came putpoſely to town to attend. The whole of the Cabinet Miniſters were preſent, except Earl Spencer, who is confined by the gout, when his Majeſty ſigned an order for laying an embargo on all Pruſſian veſſels in the different ports of the kingdom.—Orders were in conſequence forwarded from the Admiralty laſt night to the ſeveral Admirals at the Ports. The orders previouſly diſpatched to the ſame effect, as we have already ſtated, were adopted and ſent off by the diſcretionary powers entruſted to Miniſters, and his Majeſty's ſignature was neceſſary to confer on the meaſure all the formality of State proceeding.

The following is the Order which appeared in laſt night's Gazette on this important ſubject:—

At the Court at the Queen's Palace, the fifth of April, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, preſent, the King's moſt excellent Majeſty in Council.

Whereas his Majeſty has received advice that his Majeſty the King of Pruſſia has taken poſſeſſion of various parts of the Electorate of Hanover, and other dominions belonging to his Majeſty, in a forcible and hoſtile manner; and has alſo notified that all Britiſh ſhips ſhall be excluded from the ports of the Pruſſian dominions, and from certain other ports in the North of Europe, and not ſuffered to enter or trade therewith, in violation of the juſt rights and intereſts of his Majeſty and his dominions, and contrary to the eſtabliſhed law and practice of nations in amity with each other; his Majeſty, with the advice of his Privy Council, is thereupon pleaſed to order, and it is hereby ordered, that no ſhips or veſſels belonging to any of his Majeſty's ſubjects be permitted to enter and clear out for any of the ports of Pruſſia until further orders. And his Majeſty is further pleaſed to order, that a general embargo or ſtop be made of all Pruſſian ſhips and veſſels whatſoever, now within, or which hereafter ſhall come into any of the ports, harbors, or roads within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, together with all perſons and effects on board the ſaid ſhips and veſſels; but that the utmoſt care be taken for the preſervation of all and every part of the cargoes on board any of the ſaid ſhips and veſſels, ſo that no damage or embezzlement whatever be ſuſtained:—And the Right Honorable the Lords Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury, the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, and the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, are to give the neceſſary directions herein, as to them may reſpectively appertain.

STEPH. COTTRELL.

EXPRESS FROM HOLLAND.

Engliſhman-Office, 2 o'clock, A. M.

We ſtop the preſs to announce the arrival of an expreſs with intelligence of the higheſt importance from Holland. By this conveyance we learn that Hamburgh, Lubec, Bremen, Empden, &c. have been all ſhut againſt the trade of Great Britain. Letters received by ſeveral reſpectable perſons in the city confirm in this ſtatement.—We have been favored with a peruſal of ſome from Holland of ſo recent a date as laſt Thurſday. They aſſert that the King of Pruſſia had marched 20,000 men into Hamburgh, and had ſhut its port againſt England; the ſame meaſures had been purſued with reſpect to Bremen and Empden.—Theſe letters alſo ſtate that a Pruſſian army has been marched through Holſtein, for the purpoſe of ſhutting up the Sound againſt our trade.

April 7.

On the 28th of March three French frigates and a national brig came out from L'Orient. The brig was taken. The ſquadron was proviſioned for five months.

The Lord Mayor's annual dinner was given in the uſual ſtyle yeſterday. Several of the Royal Family, the principal nobility, and the Swediſh and American Miniſters were preſent.

April 8.

A flag of truce with diſpatches for government arrived from France yeſterday morning. Conſidering Mr. Fox's late obſervations, and the events of the three or four laſt days, it is difficult to believe the diſpatches reſpect a peace; and yet their arrival tallies conſiderably the prices of ſtocks, which were depreſſed by the late conduct of Pruſſia.

April 9.

The grounds of difference between the Britiſh Government and the United States of America have, we underſtand, engaged the particular attention of Miniſters; and according to report, the Hon. David Erſkine, ſon of the Lord Chancellor, is to be ſent to that country upon a ſpecial Miſſion.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Houſe of Lords, April 21.

WAR WITH PRUSSIA.

Lord Grenville roſe and ſaid, that he had it in command from his Majeſty, to deliver the following Meſſage to the Houſe, reſpecting the preſent ſtate of the relations of this country with Pruſſia:—

"GEORGE R.

"His Majeſty thinks it proper to acquaint the Houſe of Commons, that he has found himſelf under the neceſſity of withdrawing his Miniſter from the Court of Berlin, and of adopting proviſionally meaſures of juſt retaliation againſt the commerce and navigation of Pruſſia. His Majeſty deeply regrets this extenſion and aggravation of calamities already ſo ſeverely felt by the nations of the Continent, whoſe independence and proſperity he has never ceaſed to conſider as intimately connected with thoſe of his own people.—But meaſures of direct hoſtility, deliberately adopted againſt him, have left him no alternative.

"In a moment of confidential intercourſe, without even the pretence of any cauſe of complaint, forcible poſſeſſion has been taken by Pruſſia of his Majeſty's Electoral Dominions. Deeply as this event affected the intereſts of this kingdom, his Majeſty choſe, nevertheleſs, to forbear, on this painful occaſion, all recourſe to the tried and affectionate attachment of his Britiſh ſubjects. He remonſtrated, by amicable negociation, againſt the injury he had ſuſtained, and reſted his claim for reparation on the moderation of his conduct, on the juſtice of his repreſentations, and on the common intereſt which Pruſſia herſelf muſt ultimately feel, to reſiſt a ſyſtem deſtructive of the ſecurity of all legitimate poſſeſſion. But when, inſtead of receiving aſſurances conformable to this juſt expectation, his Majeſty was informed, that the determination had been taken of excluding by force the veſſels and the commodities of this kingdom from ports and countries under the lawful dominion or forcible controul of Pruſſia, his Majeſty could no longer delay to act, without neglecting the firſt duty which he owes to his people. The dignity of his crown and the intereſts of his ſubjects equally forbid his acquieſcing in this open and unprovoked aggreſſion. He has no doubt of the full ſupport of his Parliament in vindicating the honor of the Britiſh flag, and the freedom of the Britiſh navigation, and he will look with anxious expectation to that moment when a more dignified and enlightened policy, on the part of Pruſſia, ſhall remove every impediment to the renewal of peace and friendſhip with a power with whom his Majeſty has no other cauſe of difference than that now created by thoſe hoſtile acts. "G. R."

Copy of a letter from Vice Admiral Thornburgh, to the Earl of St. Vincent, K. S. Admiral and commander in Chief of his Majeſty's fleet employed in the Channel Soundings, &c.

Prince of Wales, off Rochefort, April 9.

My Lord—I have the honor to tranſmit to your Lordſhip a copy of a letter I have this day received from Captain Lord Cochrane, of his Majeſty's ſhip Pallas under my orders. It will not be neceſſary for me, my Lord, to comment upon the intrepidity and good conduct diſplayed by Lord Cochrane, his officers and men in the execution of a very hazardous enterpriſe in the Garonne, a river the moſt difficult, perhaps, in its navigation of any on this coaſt; the complete ſucceſs that attended it, as well as the deſtruction of the veſſels of war mentioned in the ſaid letter, on the coaſt of Arcaſſore, beſpeak their merits more fully than is in my power to do; to which may be fairly added, that nothing can evince more clearly the high ſtate of diſcipline of the crew of the Pallas, than the humanity ſhewn by them to the enemy in the conflict.

I have the honor to be, &c.

SIR,

Having received information which proved correct, of the ſituation of the corvettes in the river of Bordeaux, a little after dark on the evening of the 5th, the Pallas was anchored cloſe to the ſhoal of Cordovan; and it gives me ſatisfaction to relate, that, about three o'clock, the National corvette La Tapageuſe, of 14 long 12 pounders and 95 men, which had the guard, was boarded, carried, and cut out, about twenty miles above the ſhoals, within two heavy batteries, in ſpite of all reſiſtance, by the firſt lieutenant, Mr. Haſwell; Mr. Sutherland, the maſter; Meſſrs. Perkins, Crawford, and Thompſon, together with the Quarter-maſter and ſuch of the ſeamen, the ſerjeant of marines, as were fortunate enough to find a place in the boat. The tide of flood ran ſtrong at day-light; La Tapageuſe made fail; a general alarm was given; a ſloop of war followed, and an action continued, often within hail, till, by the ſame bravery by which the Tapageuſe was carried, the ſloop of war which had been before ſaved by the rapidity of the current alone, after about an hour's firing, was compelled to cheer off, having ſuffered as in the hull as the Tapageuſe in the rigging. The conduct of officers and men will be juſtly appreciated. With confidence I ſhall now beg leave to recommend them to the notice of the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty.

It is neceſſary to add, that the ſame morning, when at anchor waiting for the boats (which, by the bye, did not return till this morning,) three ſhips were obſerved bearing down upon the Pallas, making many ſignals; they were ſoon perceived to be enemies. In a few minutes the anchor was weighed; and with the remainder of the officers and crew, we chaſed, drove on ſhore, and wrecked, one National 24 gun ſhip, one of 22 guns and La Malicieuſe, a beautiful corvette of 18 guns; their maſts went by the board, and they were involved in a ſheet of ſpray.

All in this ſhip ſhewed great zeal for his Majeſty's ſervice. The warrant officers, and Mr. Tattnall, midſhipman, supplied the place of those commissioned. The absence of lieutenant Mappleton is to be regretted; he would have gloried in the expedition of the boats. The assistance rendered by Mr. Drummond, of the Royal marines, was such as might be expected. Subjoined is a list of the wounded, together with the vessels captured and destroyed since the 26th ult.

I am, Sir, &c.

An Expedition.—Is preparing for the continent, to consist of 12,000 men; to be commanded by Lord Cathcart.—It is destined to co-operate with the Swedes.

A numerous Ruffian army is approaching Pruffia. The blockade of the Northern ports ordered by our government, has occasioned the utmoft confternation.

A French fquadron compofed of the Ecle, 74 guns; Majeftic 74; Impetueux 74; Foudroyant 74; Veteran 74; Caftor 74; Voltaciuenes 74, under Admiral Guillaume, and Jerome Bonaparte, was fpoken Feb. 4, in lat. 15, long. 18, to. St. Helena, E 130 leagues.

It is reported, that Gen. Mack has been convicted of treachery, and ordered to be fhot.

NEW-YORK, May 28.

Foreign Intelligence.—In our London papers received yeſterday, we find much intereſting matter. We have ſelected for the entertainment of our readers this evening, a Meſſage from the King to both houſes of Parliament, on the ſubject of the ſeizure of Hanover by the Pruſſian government—the excellent Speech of Mr. Fox, on moving an addreſs to his Majeſty, in anſwer to the Meſſage—the King's Declaration and Proclamation againſt the recent conduct of Pruſſia, and a number of other articles of conſiderable intereſt.

The conduct of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox, ſo far as relates to the miſunderſtanding with Pruſſia, is thus noticed in the London Courier, a paper profeſſedly in oppoſition to the preſent miniſtry—" It would be as difficult to withhold the warmeſt praiſe from his Majeſty's miniſters for the vigor and promptitude, and the deciſion with which they have acted, as it would be impoſſible to add any thing to the admirable ſtatement of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox——ey have placed the conduct of the two governments in the cleareſt point of view: they have thrown the ſtrongeſt and ſtraideſt light upon the tranſaction: they have left nothing doubtful—nothing unexplained. M. Talleyrand, and Count Haugwitz, may ſhuffle and equivocate, and endeavour to ſhelter themſelves under the flimſy veil of ſophiſtry; but the cauſe of this country ſtands on the immutable baſis of truth and juſtice, and cannot be ſhaken."

The wavering puſillanimous and ſelfiſh policy of the Pruſſian Monarch, and this conſequent degradation, will, it could be wiſhed, afford an inſtructive leſſon to the world. So late as December laſt, he had it in his power to protect and ſave his own dominions, to arreſt the deſolating armies of Bonaparte, and to reſcue Europe from devaſtation and oppreſſion. He permitted to exert that power, and thus ſacrificed the independence of his own government, loſt the affections and confidence of his ſubjects, and incurred the contempt of every nation on earth.

By the conduct of Pruſſia [ſays the London Editor] which, as Mr. Fox well ſaid, unites in it all that is contemptible in ſervility with all that is odious in rapacity, ſhe has reduced herſelf to a ſituation in which ſhe can no longer be conſidered as any other than a department of France, the department of Brandenburgh. The power of Bonaparte is as irreſiſtible at Potſdam as it is at Paris; and the petty princes and dukes, that ſpring like muſhrooms from the Bonaparte dunghill, are not leſs independent than the power of Pruſſia. The humiliation of Pruſſia is of a different character and complexion from the humiliation to which other countries have been reduced.—It is a humiliation ſui generis—it ſtands alone.—Switzerland fell, but not without a ſtruggle—her gallant ſons did not yield till they had proved themſelves worthy of their anceſtors, who fought at Sampach and Morgarten.—Auſtria has been humbled too; but ſhe had dared to reſiſt and contend againſt France. But Pruſſia has ſubmitted without a blow or a battle—ſhe has yielded without the ſlighteſt reſiſtance—ſhe has given up her independence without a ſtruggle; and the conqueſt of Pruſſia has been more eaſily effected than the conqueſt of the pettieſt town or territory that was ever invaded by France. Could ſhe have been more effectually humbled had the goon to our cross Bugle with France? Had ſhe fallen at laſt, ſhe would have fallen with honor and with glory—ſhe would have fallen amidſt the ſympathies and eſteem of all nations; but fallen as ſhe has done, ſhe has forfeited all claim to the pity of the good, or the reſpect of the brave—and Frederick the Great has lived in vain.

June 2.

The French frigate Topaze, ſo long cooped up in Liſbon, ventured out on the 15th of April, and was, on that day, taken by a Britiſh frigate, after an action of three hours, 5 leagues from the Rock of Liſbon.

It is mentioned in one of the late London papers, that the Duke of Suſſex (the 6th ſon of George III.) will go out Governor General of Jamaica.

The Hon. George Berkley, Vice Admiral of the White Squadron, is appointed to the chief command on the Halifax ſtation, vice Admiral Mitchell, deceaſed.

FRENCH SQUADRON TAKEN.

It is reported via Norfolk, that an American veſſel fell in with, April 16, lat. 28, long. 33, Admiral Warren's fleet, having in company, as prize, the French ſquadron (13 ſail) late under Admiral Linois, bound from India to France, with the ſpoils of a three years ſucceſsful cruize.

The outward bound Quebec and Newfoundland fleets were at Falmouth the 18th of April.

BOSTON, May 31.

By arrivals in this port, and New-York our London dates are brought down to the 29th April, many days later.

They furniſh nothing of a pacific aſpect. The Britiſh Foreſ-adminiſtration appeared determined to proſecute the war with redoubled vigour and increaſed means. Their language was ſpirited, their meaſures prompt, and unopoſed. The meſſage on the ſubject of Pruſſia, was followed by a very able report; and a high-toned ſpeech from Mr. Fox, in the commons. The addreſs in anſwer to the meſſage was carried unanimouſly.

The proſpect of renewed war between France and Auſtria—and involving Ruſſia—increaſed.

The late meaſure adopted by France, Pruſſia, and England, reſpecting the comm—e with the Northern ports, had given a ſevere check to the trade of neutrals in that quarter. Great numbers of American, and other neutrals, bound to blockaded and other ports, had been detained and ſent into England.

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, June 21, 1806

On Monday night laſt departed this life, aged about 14, Miſs W. Dunham, ſiſter of Mrs. Eſther Ruggles of this place.—Her death was occaſioned by her cloaths accidentally taking fire, by which means ſhe was burnt in ſo ſhocking a manner, as to ſurvive only three weeks in the greateſt agony.

On Monday evening the 16th inſt. the houſe occupied by Mr. Allan M'Dougall, on Niagara, in a tavern, (known by the Yellow Houſe) took fire, and was entirely conſumed, without doing further injury; fortunately the wind blew towards the Lake, or greater damage might have been apprehended.—The fire, it is ſaid, originated by means of a lighted candle, the property contained therein was ſaved.

☞ It is requeſted that no perſon will draw ſand, or paſs with loaded waggons or carts, over the new Bridge, or Float, at the opening of the Don River: as this ſource of communication was intended merely to accomodate the inhabitants of the town in a walk or ride to the Iſland.

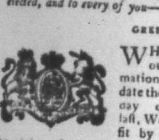
PROCLAMATION.



ALEXANDER GRANT,

PRESIDENT.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty-ſeventh day of June, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the fifteenth day of MAY laſt, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the twenty ſeventh day of this preſent month of June, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conſtrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the Fourth day of AUGUST next enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved ALEXANDER GRANT Elquire, our Preſident Adminiſtering the Government of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada at York, this twentieth day of JUNE, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty ſixth year of our reign.

YORK:—PRINTED BY JOHN BENNETT, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, March 12.

Authentic advice has been received, that the Spaniſh Court has iſſued an Order for all Portugueſe, and other veſſels, to quit the ports of Vigo, Corunna, and Ferrol, and to prohibit for the preſent the entrance of all veſſels of the ſame deſcription into any of theſe ports. This order is ſaid to be for the purpoſe of concealing the object of a formidable expedition now fitting out in thoſe ports of Spain.

Genoa, March 22.

The Chamber of Commerce at Genoa has given notice to the merchants there, that an armament of ſix frigates, with land troops on board, has been fitted out at Tunis, which will probably attempt to land and commit ravages in ſome part of Italy.

Hamburgh, April 8.

"The Copenhagen papers of the 5th, contain an aſſurance that the meaſures adopted by Pruſſia for excluding Engliſh veſſels from the North of Germany, will not extend to Tonningen, Huſum, or any of the ports of Holſtein and Scheliwig. But, notwithſtanding this aſſurance, it is aſſerted, in the beſt informed circles here, that one of the articles of the Convention entered into between France and Pruſſia ſtipulates, that ſhould England reſume the blockade of the Elbe and the Weſer, the contracting parties ſhall, in ſuch caſe, enforce the excluſion of the Engliſh from all the ports of Denmark. Attempts have already been made to ſound the diſpoſition of the Prince Royal with regard to this project; but they have been met with a degree of firmneſs which does him the higheſt honor.

"Prince Louis, the King of Pruſſia's brother, lately went to a levee in his regimentals, with his ſword reverſed. This circumſtance attracting the King's notice, he haſtily aſked his brother what he meant by wearing his ſword ſo unlike a ſoldier? "Pleaſe your Majeſty," ſaid Prince Louis, "you diſpoſe of your territories as if they had never been yours; why may I not equally diſpoſe of my ſword as I pleaſe?" The King flew into a violent paſſion, and ſaid, "do you know, Sir, that I can puniſh you?" "yes rejoined Prince Louis, "you may take away my life, but you cannot alter the ſentiments of my heart." This alteration has made a great noiſe at Berlin, and the ſpirited conduct of Prince Louis has endeared him to the people and the army.

"His Pruſſian Majeſty has, it is ſaid, become extremely dejected, in conſequence of the odium to which he has thus ſubjected himſelf, by liſtening to the counſels of Haugwitz. To complete his mortification, it is poſitively aſſerted that the Duke of Brunſwick has refuſed to ſerve any longer in the Pruſſian army. Finding all his efforts to counteract the influence of the French counſels fruitleſs, he deſicately informed his Majeſty of his determination to retire from the Pruſſian ſervice.

Augburgh, March 31.

A company of French artillerymen has been ordered to break up for Braunau, which fortreſs will not be evacuated till certain differences with the Houſe of Auſtria are completely ſettled.

Leipzig, April 3.

It is ſaid, with ſome confidence, that harmony is likely to be re-eſtabliſhed between Ruſſia and France. Propoſals, it is ſaid, have been made by a third power, which, far from being rejected, have been received with pleaſure.

London, April 15.

It is in Dalmatia that we may expect ſoon to hear of hoſtilities having taken place between the Ruſſians and the French.

April 18.

We have heard this morning that the Calabrians have gained ſome advantage over the French troops, who have been prevented from advancing, and that the Calabrians are to be reinforced by troops from Sicily.

Several regiments are under immediate orders for the Mediterranean.

To the 30,000 troops which the King of Denmark has already ſtationed along the North Bank of the Elbe, he is marching down a ſimilar force, determined to maintain his Neutrality.

We have heard it rumoured that Miniſters will, the beginning of next week, bring down a Meſſage from his Majeſty, recommending it to both Houſes to conſider of making proviſion to enable his Majeſty to furniſh Subſidies to certain Foreign powers.

One fleet of merchantmen ſailed for the Baltic, and an other is preparing. The Sound is yet open.

The American Miniſter was among the nine Ambaſſadors at the Queen's Drawing Room yeſterday. Upwards of 200 perſons of diſtinction with their ladies, were preſent.

A late Madrid article mentions that a formidable conſpiracy has been diſcovered at the Rio de la Plate, 17 of the conſpirators had been executed.

April 21.

An order from Council has been publiſhed in the London Gazette, extending the late embargo upon Pruſſian veſſels to all ſhips, &c. belonging to perſons reſiding in any of the ports and places up the river Elbe, Weſer, and Ems, except ſuch as are navigated under the Danith flag. This fact, and an official notification of Lord Howick, that a convoy is appointed for the Baltic fleet, tend to prove, that a good underſtanding exiſts between the Britiſh and Danith Courts, and that no apprehenſions need be entertained at preſent of the Sound being ſhut againſt us.

April 24.

A conſiderable part of the people of this country is now informed of the treachery and duplicity of Pruſſia; in a few weeks they will be known to all Europe. The ſpeeches of Lord Grenville and Mr. Fox yeſterday in Parliament, and the important declaration delivered on Sunday laſt by his Majeſty, as Elector of Hanover, contain the defence and particulars of that ſyſtem of deliberate fraud, of avarice, and of ſelfiſhneſs, upon which the Cabinet of Berlin, appears to have acted from the firſt moment that there was a proſpect of the renewal of the continental war. Well might Bonaparte, in his thirty-fourth military bulletin, expand himſelf in compliments to Count Haugwitz, and proclaim "that Pruſſia had never a more firm and diſintereſted friend than France!" At the very time that is Pruſſian Majeſty was giving his hand to the Emperor of Ruſſia over the tomb of Frederick the Great, and ſwearing eternal fidelity to him and to the general cauſe, he had perjury and treaſon in contemplation. All his meaſures and propoſals were calculated to lure and betray. It was perhaps fortunate for Alexander that the Pruſſians had not joined him at the battle of Auſterlitz; the event might have been more adverſe than it was. Such was the premeditated treachery of the King of Pruſſia, that we ſhould not be ſurpriſed to hear that in the heat of the battle he had given orders to his troops to go over to the enemy, and turn their arms againſt their ally.

We are happy to find ſuch perfect unanimity prevail in both houſes of Parliament, on the ſubject of the meaſures which have been adopted againſt Pruſſia. It is an omen which promiſes a cordial concurrence in whatever can give vigor and exertion to the conduct of the war.

April 25.

It is no longer a ſecret, that the late intercourſes with France, by flags of truce, reſpecting propoſals for peace on her part. But theſe having been found inadmiſſible, the papers which have paſſed between the two Countries will ſhortly be laid before Parliament.

We already ſtated that an Expedition is now fitting out for the Continent, which is to be commanded by Lord Cathcart. We underſtand it will conſiſt of not leſs than 12,000 men, cavalry and infantry. Lord Cathcart is to have the appointment of his own Staff. The Dragoon Guards and Foot Guards will form a large portion of this army, which is deſtined to co-operate with the gallant King of Sweden.

April 28.

Paris papers to the 19th inſt. and Dutch to the 22d inſt. were received on Friday night. The moſt important articles they contain is, a long detailed commentary in the Moniteur upon the ſtate of Europe. According to this Expoſe, Hanover is only occupied by, but not definitively annexed to Pruſſia. The King of Pruſſia has declared otherwiſe. Which of the two tells the lie? France demands of Auſtria what Auſtria cannot give, poſſeſſion of Dalmatia. In conſequence of the Ruſſians having occupied Cattaro, it is officially declared, "that Brinsu, which commands the frontier of the Inn, has been re-occupied and garriſoned; that the French army has been ordered to refume its poſition, and that the Auſtrian priſoners, who were on their way home have been ſtopped until further orders."

There is a ſcheme in theſe papers for making the Elector of Saxony ſurrender that country to Pruſſia, and take in return the Pruſſian part of Poland.

An article, copied from the Preſburgh Gazette into the Paris papers, ſays a numerous Ruſſian army is approaching Pruſſia."

The intelligence that the Elbe is blockaded was received at Hamburgh on the 21ſt, when, as might be expected, it created general conſternation.—The Prince of Heſſe Philipſthal ſtill continues to defend, in the braveſt manner, the fortreſs of Gaeta. No art is neglected to induce him to ſurrender, but he poſitively refuſes.

By the laſt advices from Vienna, the proceedings againſt general Mack are nearly terminated. He is declared infame.

NEW YORK, May 30.

Patriotic Fund.—The following reſolutions of "the committee for the diſtribution of the Patriotic Fund" in Great Britain, exhibit a method of rewarding merit, and of encouraging patriotiſm, well worth the imitation of other nations. When ſuch is the juſt reward of heroic exertions, it is not ſurpriſing that England ſhould be diſtinguiſhed for its enterprizing and ſkilful officers, and its bold and reſolute ſeamen.

Reſolved, That a vaſe of the value of four hundred pounds, ornamented with emblematical devices, and an appropriate inſcription, be preſented to Vice-Admiral Sir John Thomas Duckworth, K. B.

Reſolved, That a vaſe of the value of three hundred pounds, with an appropriate inſcription, be preſented to Rear Admiral the Hon. Alexander Cochrane.

Reſolved, That a vaſe of the value of three hundred pounds, with an appropriate inſcription, be preſented to Rear Admiral Thomas Louis.

Reſolved, That a ſword of the value of one hundred pounds, or a vaſe of the ſame value (at their option) with an appropriate inſcription, be preſented to each of the Captains and Commanders of his Majeſty's ſhips, who contributed to that brilliant and deciſive victory.

Reſolved, That the ſum of one hundred pounds be preſented to each of the Lieutenants of his Majeſty's navy, Captains of Royal Marines, and other Officers in the ſecond claſs of his Majeſty's proclamation for the diſtribution of prize money, who was ſeverely wounded; and the ſum of fifty pounds to each officer of the ſame rank, who was ſlightly wounded.

Reſolved, That the ſum of 50 pounds be preſented to each of the officers in the third claſs of his Majeſty's proclamation for the diſtribution of prize-money, who was ſeverely wounded; and the ſum of thirty pounds to each officer of the ſame rank, who was ſlightly wounded.

Reſolved, That the ſum of forty pounds be preſented to each of the officers in the fourth claſs of his Majeſty's Proclamation for the diſtribution of prize money, who was ſeverely wounded; and the ſum of twenty-five pounds to each officer of the ſame rank who was ſlightly wounded; and that additional gratuities be hereafter voted to ſuch officers as may be diſabled in conſequence of their wounds.

Reſolved, That the ſum of forty pounds be preſented to every ſeaman or marine whoſe wounds may be attended with diſability or loſs of limb; the ſum of twenty pounds to each ſeaman or marine ſeverely wounded; and the ſum of ten pounds to each ſeaman or marine ſlightly wounded.

Reſolved, That relief be afforded to the widows, orphans, parents and relatives depending for ſupport on the officers, petty officers, ſeamen and marines, who fell in the engagement, as ſoon as their reſpective ſituations ſhall be made known to the committee.

Reſolved, That a letter, ſigned by the Chairman, be written to Vice Admiral Sir John Thomas Duckworth, K. B. requeſting he will communicate the foregoing reſolutions to the different ſhips under his command, who were in the engagement; and furniſh the committee with the names of ſuch ſeamen and marines wounded, and the nature and extent of their wounds, not given in the official returns; together with any particulars that can be collected, reſpecting the widows, orphans, and other relatives who depended for ſupport on the brave men, who ſo gallantly fell in the cauſe of their country.

June 2.

The following apoſtrophe on the late events of Nelſon's brilliant victory were written by a lady of diſtinction in Ireland:

"Never was there, indeed, an event ſo mournfully and ſo triumphantly important to England as the battle off Trafalgar; the ſentiment of lamenting the individual more than rejoicing in the victory, ſhews the humanity and affection of the people of England. But their good ſenſe, upon reflection, will dwell on the conqueſt only, becauſe no death at a future moment could have been more glorious and might have been leſs ſo. The public would never have ſent him on another expedition; his health was not equal to another effort; and he might have yielded to the natural, but leſs impoſing efforts of more worldly honors. Whereas, he now begins a immortal career, having nothing left to achieve upon earth; and bequeathing to the Engliſh fleet a legacy, which they alone are able to improve. Had I been his wife, or his mother, I would rather have wept him dead, than ſeen him languiſh on a leſs ſplendid day.

"In ſuch a DEATH there is no GRIEF.

"In ſuch a CAUSE a everlaſting VICTORY."

June 3.

From Leghorn.—Captain Sawyer, arrived at Briſtol, in 41 days from Leghorn, furniſhes the following information:

"The blockade of Naples by the Engliſh is ſaid to have been declared at Palermo and Meſſina on the 28th March. There were ſome apprehenſions that the blockade of Leghorn would follow. The ſquadron off Sicily and Naples conſiſts of four ſhips of the line, ten frigates and two brigs. The city of Gaeta oppoſed the entrance of the French, and is not yet taken; but beſieged by them, and it is ſuppoſed that it muſt ſoon ſurrender. The Emperor Napoleon is ſoon expected at Rome to be made King of the Romans. The Pope to retire to Verſailles on a penſion. It is ſuppoſed the Emperor will alſo make ſome changes in the Government of Tuſcany. A flight earthquake was experienced at Leghorn on the afternoon of the 16th April.

In the London Times of March 1, the following is given as the genuine Will of the late William Pitt:—

"I owe Sir Walter Farquhar one thouſand guineas, from October, 1805, as a profeſſional debt. W. PITT."

"Twelve thouſand pounds with intereſt, from Oct. 1801, to Mr. Long, Mr. Steele, Lord Curtington, Biſhop of Lincoln, Lord Camden, Mr. Joſeph Smith, and I earneſtly requeſt their acceptance of it. I with if means can be found for it, of paying double the wages to all my ſervants who were with me at my deceaſe. W. PITT."

"I with my brother, with the Biſhop of Lincoln, to look over my papers, and ſettle my affairs. I owe more than I can leave behind me.

"W. PITT."

The decree of the Emperor of Germany, which promoted his Royal Highneſs the Archduke Charles to the dignity of Generaliſſimo of the Imperial Armies, was accompanied by the following letter:

"My dear brother—After the unhappy events which have lately taken place and a peace obtained by ſuch great ſacrifices, there is an indiſpenſible neceſſity for putting the military in a ſituation, adequate to the population of the country and the finances, which ſhall be diſtinguiſhable for its order and preciſion, and ſhall afford the beſt protection for my Hereditary States.—My firſt ſtep to attain this end is to put you at the head of all my armies in the quality of Generaliſſimo.—When the troops ſhall be ſenſible that, in caſe I ſhould be forced into a war, they will be under your command, the idea will recall, to thoſe who have been ſervice, the glory they have acquired in the field of battle upon ſo many occaſions when you commanded them; it will inſpire others with confidence in the talents, the bravery, and foreſight of their General, who led them by the ſureſt paths to victory. With the dignity of Generaliſſimo, I confer upon you the direction of all my military forces during the time of peace, in ſuch a manner that the Aulic Council, and every other military Adminiſtration, ſhall be ſubject to your orders.

"I ſhall, to-day inform you of my pleaſure in a manner more in detail, in a letter written by myſelf, which ſhall define the ſphere of your activity, as well as that of the authorities which are to be ſubject to you. I expect, at the ſame time, from your intelligence and your indefatigable exertions the formation of new plans for ameliorating the preſent ſyſtem, and alſo the moſt efficacious attention to the punctuality and the propriety of their execution.

(Signed) "FRANCIS."

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Preſton Federaliſt.

HINTS on the PLANTING of TREES

OUR anceſtors erred greatly in planting their trees in orchards too cloſe; twenty feet was thought by them to be a proper diſtance; but they ſeemed not to conſider that in a few years the branches of each tree would touch the next, and by thus intertering with each other prevent them from producing bloſſoms and fruit. At that diſtance a plantation of trees muſt in a few years become like a wood, and prevent either graſs or vegetables from being cultivated under them. Nor in ſuch a ſituation will three trees produce as much as one, if at the diſtance of forty or fifty feet.

In planting an orchard, care ſhould always be taken to fix on a ſituation ſheltered as much as poſſible againſt the violent north weſt and north eaſt winds. Plant the largeſt growing trees, ſuch as Preſtly's, on the north ſide, and ſo deſcending towards the ſouth, that there may be a regular gradation of height, and that the tall trees may not overſhadow the ſmaller.

Apples and pears, for an orchard, ought not to be planted at leſs diſtance than in rows at about 40 feet, and each tree in the row at 30 or 35 feet apart. Pears alone may be 30 by 35, as theſe in general, ſpread leſs and grow more erect than apples. Cherries, the larger growing ſorts, at 30 feet by 20.—Peaches, apricots and nectarines, at 15 feet.

Nothing in the various parts of agriculture and gardening is ſo little underſtood, and conſequently neglected, as the planting of trees. The root is generally forced into a ſmall hole, and afterwards left to chance, without the ſlighteſt attention either to pruning or manuring.

The ground deſigned for an orchard ſhould be in tillage one year at leaſt before planting, and if well manured ſo much the better for the trees. The holes ſhould be dug a foot deep, and at leaſt five feet over, and let to lie a few days to receive the influence of the atmoſphere.

☞ If you are to buy the trees, procure them from the neareſt nurſery you can, for the ſooner trees are planted, after being cut of the ground, the better. If the small fibres are not dried, they need not be cut off, but if dried, as they almoft always are in carrying a diftance, they fhould be trimmed off, otherwife they will mould and do certain injury to the tree, and often entirely deftroy it.

Always keep the roots as long as is convenient, which will give them a difpofition to run horizontally, from which the roots, being more under the influence of the fun, the fap is richer, and produces the fweeteft, and fairefl fruit. Nurfery men in taking up trees are, in general, not fufficiently attentive to give them a good fpread of root.

All bruifed and broken roots—all fuch as are irregular and crofs each other, and all downright roots fhould be pruned fmooth off.

As to the top, the fmall branches fhould be pruned clofe to the place where they are produced; as alfo the irregular ones which crofs each other; and all fuch as have by any means been broken or wounded, fhould be cut down to the next good eye; but by no means take off the main leading fhoots, which are neceffary to attract the fap from the roots, and thereby promote the growth of the tree.

☞ Obferve the utmoft care not to place the trees too deep in the ground. More mifchief to a new plantation of trees arifes from this fource, than all the other caufes combined. The beft rule is, to place the tree in the hole, fo that the roots may be about the fame depth as before they were taken up.

Place all the roots in their natural pofition, as nearly as may be, but rather horizontally than otherwife; break the earth fine, and fcatter it in the hole fo that it may fall in between every root, that there may be no hollownefs. Thus fill up the hole, and gently tread down the earth with your foot, but not too hard, which is a great fault, efpecially if the ground be ftrong and wet.

Newly planted trees fhould be well ftaked and defended from cattle. And it is beft to keep the land continually in tillage till the trees have nearly attained their full growth. But great care muft be taken that the roots be not difturbed by ploughing, nor the bark of the trees wounded. The ground near the tree, which the plough leaves, fhould be mellowed with a fpade for two or three years, before the roots have far extended.

"No young planted or newly engrafted tree, (fays Mr. Bucknall, the celebrated orchardift) fhould be fuffered to grow mop-headed, but be cut until each branch has acquired a determined leader, that tree will not progrefs; and a tree, like an animal, if it takes a ftunt it is difficult to throw fuch energy into the fyftem afterwards as will make it free growing."

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, June 28, 1806.

Foreign Intelligence.—We learn from late London Papers that the new Adminiftration has kindled in all defcriptions of people in England a zeal and warmth hitherto unexperienced on any change of Minifters.—Addreffes have been preferred to his Majefty from every part of the United Kingdom, expreffive of the gratitude of the people for his parental attention to the intereft of the Empire in felecting fuch men as now fill the feveral official departments; and giving every affurance of the determination of the country to fupport fuch meafures as they may deem expedient to the preffnt ftate of affairs.—Arming the whole body of the people, was among other things fuggefted. A rule for regulating the army eftablifhment and limiting the time of fervice to ten years, has, it is faid, been laid before the Houfe. This was one of thofe meafures that Mr. Fox has had a long time in contemplation. It is generally expected that his great and ardent mind will be exercifed in giving hidden effect to fuch meafures as may prove highly beneficial in the preffnt crifis, and lay the bafis of a fyftem of permanent fecurity and advantage to the United Kingdom.

News and additional charges of much moment, it is faid, are adduced againft Lord Melville.

Mr. James Footegreed, late prime Serjeant, is Mafter of the Rolls in Ireland.—Sir John Newport, Chancellor of the Exchequer. Doctor Hall, Provoft of Dublin College; and, Mr. George Ponfonby, Chancellor.

In thefe appointments are comprized, unfullied honor, unbroken integrity, and diftinguifhed talents.

☞ It is requefted that no perfon will draw fand, or pafs with loaded waggons or carts, over the new Bridge, or Float, at the opening of the Don River: as this fource of communication was intended merely to accomodate the inhabitants of the town in a walk or ride to the Iſland.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, April 22.

The Hamburgh mail due on Sunday arrived this morning. It ſhould ſeem as if Bonaparte, though he has conſented to let Pruſſia take Hanover, has ſome difficulty in including in the grant Verden and Bremen, which, as our readers know, were purchaſed of the Danes by George the Firſt. When the Pruſſians appeared before Verden and ſummoned the French to give up the place, the latter refuſed, and ſhut the gates—the Pruſſians then ſcaled the walls, and entered the town, which, by convention, is to be poſſeſſed jointly till the two Governments have come to a final arrangement upon the ſubject.

NEW YORK, June 7.

The trial of Lord Viſcount Melville commenced at Weſtminſter Hall, the 29th of April. The London papers ſtate, that the curioſity excited by the trial of Lord Melville was not exceeded by that which prevailed on the firſt day of the trial of Mr. Haſtings. At eight o'clock, many of thoſe who had obtained tickets for this ſplendid ſpectacle, appeared at the entrance into Weſtminſter Hall. By nine, the line of carriages extended from Palace-yard to the Admiralty. Near 11 o'clock, Mr. Whitbread and the other managers appeared, followed by Mr. Fox and the Houſe of Commons. The managers were all in Court dreſſes. After the Speaker had taken his ſeat, the proceſſion from the Houſe of Lords began to enter the hall. At this time Lord Melville entered the Court from the bottom of the hall, and proceeding round the Counſel's box, took his ſeat inſide the bar. All the Peers were habited in the full robes of their reſpective ranks. As ſoon as they were ſeated, ſilence was proclaimed by the Crier, under pain of impriſonment. Proclamation was next made, that Henry Lord Viſcount Melville, was about to take his trial for high crimes and miſdemeanors, & calling upon all thoſe who had any thing to allege againſt him to come forward. The articles of impeachment were then read, with Lord Melville's anſwer; alſo the 10th, or additional charge, and Lord Melville's anſwer and proteſt againſt it. Mr. Whitbread then role, and began to open the charges againſt Lord Melville. By a reſolution of the Houſe of Lords, the Editors of the London newſpapers are prohibited from the publication of any of the proceedings on this trial until it is terminated.

The number of Peers who attended was very great; there were no leſs than 85 barons; all the Princes of the blood, and the box appropriated to foreign miniſters was nearly filled. There were moſt leſs than 7 or 800 ladies preſent.

Maſſacre of Cape Francois.—We learn from Captain Dodge, of the ſchooner Mary Ann, who arrived here yeſterday, in 16 days from Cape Francois, that on the 14th and 15th of May, a general maſſacre of all the remaining white inhabitants of Cape Francois took place, and it was ſaid generally, throughout that part of this ill-fated iſland under the dominion of Deſſalines. The particulars of this tragical event are briefly theſe:

Sometime previous to the 14th of May, the greater part of the white inhabitants (French) of Cape Francois, were ordered under ſome pretence to a fort about 3 leagues from the town, and there confined.—On the night of the 14th the reſidue of theſe unfortunate people amounting to about 450, were ſtrangled in their beds, by order of the Emperor; the blood thirſty villains, not content with this, plunged their bayonets in their bodies—mangling them in a horrid manner.—They then plundered the houſes of theſe unfortunate people, who had thus fallen victims to the avarice and cruelty of the black emperor.—On the 15th it was reported at the Cape, that thoſe of the inhabitants who had been ſent to the fort, had been put to death in the moſt cruel manner, and their dead bodies treated with the greateſt indignity.

From the Lutzerne Federaliſt, (Penn.)

One cold ſtormy day laſt February, a female ſtranger made her appearance in the Beach-woods ſettlement on the Lachamana. She appeared to be about 30, tall and decently formed; but the roſe that once had bloomed on her cheek, was withered by the canker worm of care; and reaſon no longer ſwayed his ſceptre over her mind.—" They drowned my mother. O how the ſcreams! —there! there! the ſinks—help her—help her!" was the burden of her ſong. But ſhe would occaſionally caſt her eyes on the men, and with a wild and fearful look, exclaim, " No! No!—I hate you, you've ruined me—Poor Poll would drown herſelf, but the water's cold." No intreaties could induce her to take ſhelter from the ravages of the ſtorm. But ſhe flew from houſe to houſe a moſt melancholy picture of ſorrow and woe. After having been abſent a day or two, ſhe returned with an infant naked on her boſom. " Poor thing," ſhe would cry when the hoſpitable cottager begged it of her. " Poor thing, I know you'll ſtarve it." Nature remained true to her duty, although reaſon had fled from her ſeat. A tear, the firſt ſhe had ſhed, fell mingled with the ſnow on its neck.—The ſoul of the little ſufferer was juſt winging its way to a kinder parent, when the unfortunate maniac entered a cottage where the woman had but the week before buried a new born infant.—She kindly begged that the child at leaſt might be put in her arms. The mother conſented, and Mrs. Bucklin, (for that is the name of the humane woman) wiped the ſnow from its neck, wrapped it in warm flannel and gave it the breaſt. A gleam of wandering reaſon ſeemed to ſhoot acroſs the mind of the diſtreſſed mother. She was delighted to ſee her offspring on the breaſt of its humane nurſe, and expreſſed no wiſh to take it again, but ſoon wandered off, declaring ſhe had drowned her child. She paſſed the village, and it is not known whence ſhe came or whither ſhe has gone. Mrs. Bucklin ſtill keeps the child, and nurſes it as her own. Colonel Stanton, of Wayne county, has ſent in ſome clothes, and it has been chriſtened by the name of Polly Snow, expreſſive of the place of its birth.

The unhappy maniac mentioned in the above article, has, ſince the laſt Luzerne, been wandering in this county, and principally in this township.—She raves of her mother, and her babes having been drowned, but ſometimes ſays ſhe has left one with a good woman who took it from her when ſhe was going to drown it. We have no doubt ſhe is the woman whoſe ſale is ſo pathetically told by Mr. Minor. Would it not be worthy of the Legiſlature of Pennſylvania to make proviſion for reſtoring to ſociety thoſe afflicted beings whoſe miſfortune has robbed of the proudeſt attribute of humanity?

We cannot cloſe this article without noticing the benevolent kindneſs, the heart cheering goodneſs with which Mr. Gaſkins and family, of this township, have upon all occaſions treated the unfortunate Polly.—" They alſo ſhall have their reward."

The following account of " a chicken with a human countenance," is copied from the London Monthly Magazine.

A ſhort time ſince, a Jew exhibited for money at Poſen, in South Pruſſia, a chicken with a human countenance. This chicken was hatched on an eſtate near Wreſchen (Pol. Wrzenia) in the diſtrict of Poſen; and the Jew had accepted of it as an equivalent for a ſmall taylor's bill due to him by the owner of the eſtate, who aſſerted, that another ſimilar formed chicken had been at the ſame time hatched by the ſame hen, but ſoon died. The chicken which was ſhewn by the Jew ſurvived, and had a very lively appearance, was full grown, and above a year old. The body was covered with variegated feathers, and, as far as the part of the neck where the head begins, in no reſpect diſtinguiſhed by any ſingularity from other chickens. The head did not exceed in ſize that of other chickens; but it was without feathers, and covered with a ſkin of a ſomewhat bluiſh colour. The ſockets of the eyes were ſhaped exactly as in a human countenance, and over them two arches of very fine down formed regular eyebrows. The upper part of the bill was ſo bent and blunted off as to form a well ſhaped noſe, except that it was of a horny ſubſtance. Under the noſe a regular human mouth, with lips, and two rows of cloſely united white pointed teeth, completed this ſingular luſus naturæ.—The tongue was ſounded and ſhaped like a human being on a diminutive ſcale, that, to diſcover it, there was not the leaſt occaſion to call in the aid of the imagination. The above account of this phenomenon was ſigned and puniſhed by M. Schwarz, a gentleman holding a reſpectable office under Pruſſian government at Poſen.

Singular Character.—Died, a ſhort time ago, at Eddiſſone, in Yorkſhire, Edward Norton, aged 56, by trade a tinker, which he followed zealouſly till about ſix weeks before his death. His apartment pourtrayed ſymptoms of the moſt abject poverty, though at his death he was found to be poſſeſſed of property to the amount of between five and ſix thouſand pounds. He had a wife and ſeveral children, which he brought up in the moſt parſimonious manner, often feeding them with grains and the offals of meat which he purchaſed at reduced prices. He was no leſs remarkable in perſon and dreſs, for, in order to ſave the expence of ſhaving, he would encourage the dirt to grow on his face, to hide in ſome meaſure, this defect. He never ſuffered his ſhirt to be waſhed in water.—His coat, which time had tranſformed into a jacket, would have puzzled the wiſeſt philoſopher to have found out its original colour, ſo covered was it with threds and patches of different colours, and thoſe ſo diverſified, as to reſemble the trophies of the different nations of Europe, and ſeemed to vie with Joſeph's " coat of many colours." The intereſt of his money, together with all he could heap from his penurious mode of living, he uſed to depoſit in a bag, which was covered up in a tin pot, and then conveyed to a brick kitchen; one of the bricks was taken up, and a hole juſt made large enough to hold the pot; the brick was then carefully marked, and a tally kept behind the door of the ſum depoſited. One day his wife diſcovered his hoard, and reſolving to profit by the opportunity, took from the pot one out of fifteen guineas that was then placed there. Her huſband ſoon diſcovered the trick, for when he came to count his money, and finding it not agree with the tally behind the door, which his wife did not know of, he taxed her with the theft, and to the day of his death, and even on his death bed, he never ſpoke to her without adding the epithet of thief to every expreſſion.—In his younger days, he uſed, at the death of any of his children, to have a little deal box made to put them in, and without undergoing the ſolemn requiſites of a regular funeral, he would take them upon his ſhoulder to the place appointed for their reception; where, once interred, he ſeemingly coincided with the old adage, " out of ſight, out of mind;" and went home as unconcerned as if nothing had happened. A ſhort time before his death, which he evidently haſtened by the daily uſe of near a quart of ſpirits, he gave ſtrict charge that his coffin ſhould not have a nail in it, which was actually the caſe, the lid being faſtened with hinges made of cord; there was no inſcription on the coffin, but barely the initials E. N. cut out on the lid. His ſhroud was made of a pound of wool; his coffin was covered with a ſheet inſtead of a pall, and was carried by ſix men to each of whom he left half a crown; and, at his particular deſire, not one who followed him to the grave wore mourning; but on the contrary, each of the mourners ſeemed to try whoſe dreſs ſhould be the moſt ſtriking, the undertaker even being habited in a blue coat and ſcarlet waiſtcoat. He died without a will, and his fortune was equally divided among his wife and family.

Duelling. A Captain in the Engliſh army, in anſwer to a perſon from which he had received a challenge, wrote as follows:

" I have two objections to this duel matter. The one is, leſt I ſhould hurt you; and the other is, leſt you ſhould hurt me. I do not ſee any good it would do me to put a bullet through any part of your body. I could make no uſe of you when dead for any culinary purpoſe, as I would a rabbit or a turkey.—I am no cannibal to feed on the fleſh of men. Why then ſhoot down a human creature, of which I can make no uſe? A buffaloe would be better meat. For though your fleſh might be delicate and tender, yet it wants that firmneſs and conſiſtency which takes and retains ſalt. At any rate it would not be fit for long ſea voyages. You might make a good barbecue, it is true, being of the nature of a raccoon or an oppoſſum; but people are not in the habit of barbecuing any thing human now. As to your hide, it is not worth taking off, being little better than that of a year old colt. As to myſelf I do not much like to ſtand in the way of any thing that is harmful.—I am under apprehenſions you might hit me. That being the caſe, I think it moſt adviſable to ſtay at a diſtance. If you want to try your piſtols take ſome object, a tree, or a barn door, about my dimenſions. If you hit that, ſend me word, and I ſhall acknowledge, that if I had been in the ſame place, you might alſo have hit me."

LAURA.——A TALE.

IT was the lot of Laura to be beautiful: Nature had beſtowed upon her her choiceſt gifts. Her form was ſymmetry itſelf; her face was poured laviſhly, ſuffuſed with the animating glow of health; whilſt feature beaſted beauty in its mould. She was Nature's grace arrayed. Her innate endowments were not few; ſhe poſſeſſed the nicelt ſenſibility, with a warm and lively imagination: ever forward to do good, and never known to inflict an injury. She was the delight and admiration of every one; her eyes beamed univerſal pleaſure, and her live ſtep-mirth communicated it to all around her.

Yet, with all theſe gems to charm, and powers to attract, Laura became the child of misfortune. One evil ſurpaſſed the reſt of her breaſt, and wielded its fatal ſceptre over her paſſions; whilſt an humble virtue, baſeleſs in its retentive influence, expelled the number of her guards. Prudence dealt way for vanity.

Laura had loſt her parents. An early independence enabled her to rank high in the circle of her aſſociates, and live in a ſtyle ſuitable to an accompliſhed education. No other pleaſures, no other wiſhes but her own to conſult, ſhe accounted herſelf the moſt bleſt of her ſex, and conceived nothing wanting to make life a paradiſe. Sufficient in herſelf, ſhe ridiculed the fond contonments of love and friendſhip, and thought it only happineſs to be admired. She felt a ſuperiority over her companions, and regarded the adulation lavithed on her as the voice of truth; and the admiration of the world, but a facrifice due to her charms.

Notwithſtanding theſe blemiſhes ſhe was the life of company, and every one rejoiced in her intimacy. She had innumerable ſuitors, whom ſhe treated with equal coldneſs and indifference: the greateſt flatterer was moſt welcome, yet none acquired an intereſt in her affections.

At laſt her ſuſceptibility was aroufed. Amidſt the train of her followers, was a youth of noble perſon, and manly underſtanding. He wooed the lovely Laura, and purſued her with an ardent attention. 'Twas vifible her heart was touched. Hilary would fain believe it, and, with increaſing confidence, approached the object of his paſſion. Immediately he feared himſelf undone. She gave a check to his advances, and received him with a luke-warm ſatisfaction. Hurry did not flutter: this ſtood the only barrier to his victory. He ſhrunk from her with grief, the exceſs of her vanity, yet could not ſtoop to difficulty. His tongue was as faithful as his heart, and could not utter a deſire to ſwerve. To remonſtrate with her fault was dangerous and might exalt a breach forever. That fear predominated: and he reſolved patiently to perſevere with a ſteady, honorable zeal, in hopes by time to gain his object, and effect a change.

In the mean time the gay and gallant Harmin, noted for his conqueſts in the field of virtue, entered the liſt of this fair one's votaries. With all the arts of flattery and deceit, he endeavored to inſinuate himſelf into her graces, and not without the ſemblance of ſucceſs. Wherever Laura was ſmoothing herſelf, Harmin was at the leader of her train. He made himſelf her ſlave. Her beauty and accompliſhments were his conſtant themes; every act of her life was the ſubject of his applauſe, and every error nearly converted into a compliment. He profeſſed her the idol of his adoration, and dexterouſly contrived his praiſes ſhould be repeated in her ears.

Henry was alarmed; he gueſſed the deſigns of his enemy, yet knew not he ſhould proceed. To perſevere his love was his firſt intent ev the riſque of loſs. Of that he felt confident ſuch reſolution: but 'twas a tedious way. The abſence of Harmin, for ſome time ſummoned his utmoſt fortitude and fought an interview to diſclude to her the danger of her ſituation. He depicted to her the character of the ſpecious Harman in its trueſt colors, and with every perſuaſive aid her to fortify her prudence againſt his inſinuating powers. He prayed her pardon, conjured her to be careful, and promiſed, if he met with her diſpleaſure, to banish himſelf forever from her ſight. Generous Henry happy had ſhe embraced thy counſels. But no, her pride was wounded: ſhe diſmiſſed him from her preſence, and expreſſed diſdain at the artifice of his intereſted friendſhip. In vain did Henry plead the candor and ſincerity; he was not permitted to defend himſelf. He departed in anguiſh and deſpair, contemplating the ſcene juſt paſt. She was loſt to him as a lover, and he was denied the conſolation of being a friend. He felt himſelf at the laſt pitch of human agony: he vowed revenge againſt the ſpecious Harman and pledged himſelf in ſecret to be forever the protector of Laura.

Laura continued obſtinate and unrelenting in her anger towards Henry whilſt the gloſſy Harman was ſtill encouraged, and became the firſt in favor and indulgence. His efforts were redoubled; his time now wholly devoted, and he ſeemed reſolved to eſcape which might be rendered ſubſervient to his views. He law with exſtacy the weakneſs of his prey increaſe, and led her gently the more. Harman was now every thing with the deluded fair; without him ſhe was reſtleſs and uneaſy.

The ſequel is ſhort. The ſubtile poiſon was, alas! too ſweet: it had circled itſelf around the ſenſes of Laura; and, in a moment of its giddy influence, the beautiful, accompliſhed, but vain Laura, fell a victim to the deſigns of villainy!

Poor, unhappy Henry! what were thy feelings at the horrid tidings! In the firſt paroxyſm of grief and madneſs, he penned a challenge to the perfidious Harman, and obtained a meeting. The firſt ball was fatal. It ſtruck the noble Henry to the heart, and received him from the dreadful weight of his exiſtence.

The ſeducer fled, whilſt the wretched Laura lingered out a train of tedious days in penitence and deſpondency; then ſunk a victim to crime, and died in miſery.

My beautious readers, beware of this deſtructive paſſion; you may droop like the once lovely Laura. The ſmalleſt ſigure may ſoa ſmallest draw the gaze of the ſpectator, but it is the beauty of the mind muſt make a deep impreſſion. Do not be vain of what your maker has beſtowed but be grateful. The plaineſt form has equal reaſon to be graceful with yourſelves. And let vanity ſo far operate only, as to affix you a proper guide with regard to all your actions. Thus far it will ſhine a virtue, but no farther. Then will you be as happy as I could wiſh you: and not only enjoy the innate gratification of your own conſcience, but ſtill attract the admiration of every beholder and heart mind.

" A Book may be amuſing with numerous errors, or it may be very dull without a ſingle abſurdity." " I was ever of opinion that the houſe of man who married and brought up a large family, did more ſervice than he who conſtructed Engines, and only talked of Proſperity. From this moment, I ſhall leave taken orders a year, before I begin to think ſeriouſly of matrimony, thole my wife as the did her wedding gown, not for a fine gaudy faſhion, but ſuch qualities as would wear well."

From the Farmer's Cabinet.

" Lead gelding is the reverſe of weighty reaſoning

It is the dying groans of good government."

I never knew a ſcolding perſon, that was able to govern a family——What makes people ſcold? Becauſe they cannot govern themſelves. How then can they govern others?——Mark well, as you may—Thoſe who govern well are generally calm. They are prompt and reſolute but ſteady and mild.

REMARK.—If you can live free from want, and have wherewithall to do good, care for no more; the reſt is but vanity.

One of the moſt extraordinary characters in France is M. Menneval, who ſtill in the office of Private Secretary to Bonaparte. He lived formerly with Prince Joſeph, who one day ſent him on a particular miſſion to his brother; the latter ſtunned him on ſeveral ſubjects but Menneval ſtopped, that he was not ſummoned to anſwer his queſtion.—Napoleon then told to go quick him, but in vain. Having then entered the Corſican's cotice, he was ſtruck with admiration at his ſervices, and having ſtood the teſt of various trials he was at length appointed Private Secretary. Exhauſted by unintermitted exertions, Menneval lately requeſted leave of abſence for a fortnight, and obtained for that time, to ſubſtitute in his place a friend, whom he would anſwer as for himſelf. But, " two of us are already too many." ſaid Bonaparte's reply.

THE COQUETTE.

A MORAL TALE

From the

THE whole fortune of Cephelia, at the age of twenty four years, was a pretty perſon and a well cultivated mind. " This is to be rich," ſaid Ariſtus; " with wit and beauty a young girl never fails to extricate herſelf from difficulty; with theſe two treaſures may be purchaſed all the reſt, which are dear to me."

True! But it is with theſe as with all other treaſures, every thing depends on management. The truly rich man is not he, who poſſeſſes the moſt—but he who knows beſt how to employ his riches in knowledge, which neither the miſer nor the prodigal poſſeſſes. We ſhall ſoon ſee whether Cephelia acquired this invaluable ſecret.

Hardly had Cephelia appeared in public, before ſhe was ſurrounded with adorers, but a little information ſoon diſperſed the admiring crowd. " Cephelia was portionleſs—and Cephelia wanted a huſband." In this from age all hearts ſigh for money; and in moſt marriages it is gold, and not the woman that is eſpouſed.

Notwithſtanding this grand deficience, a young man of ſingular amiability, but of ſhallow underſtanding, became enamoured of her perſon and threw his fortune at her feet. But Cephelia diſcovered a ſmall ſpark of wit and rejected his offer. " What folly," ſaid a woman who knew life, " a good natured ſtupid huſband is a precious poſſeſſion."—Cephelia knew not enough of the world to eſtimate duly the value of ſuch a treaſure.

A year after, another lover offered to enlift under her banners. He was not wanting in ſpirit; indeed Cephelia perceived he had too much; and this conſideration alſo diſcarded.

Had Cephelia been left blind to her own defects, ſhe would have diſcovered, that a few freckles had ſcattered themſelves over her complexion and impaired the luſtre of her original beauty; but ſhe had a faithful memory, which taxing the mirror with falſehood, retraced only the image of her firſt charms. She was not a little aſtoniſhed, that five years rolled away without preſenting a ſingle lover. " Be ſure the more wiſe I!" No; and notwithſtanding ſome warning lines were traced on her forehead in promiſe of future wrinkles, ſhe ſtill had no doubt of ſucceſs, when more diſcerning eyes ſhould behold her.

All the young men diſappeared; and though a huſband at laſt offered himſelf, it was becauſe he was forty years old and beſides not very difficult. Cephelia refuſed him.—" A huſband of forty years and a wife of ſix and twenty!" it was murder in her eyes—ſhe could not reſolve on ſuch a ſacrifice.

Nevertheleſs Cephelia counted thirty years and was ſtill unmarried. Chagrin now took poſſeſſion of her mind, and the horrors of celibacy approached. After ſome further time had elapſed, ſhe eſteemed herſelf happy in eſpouſing an old man ſtupid and ugly, who, beſides to increaſe her ill fortune, took it into his head to live to the age of eighty.

SUICIDE.

Among the many instances of Suicide, which we are frequently recording, we have heard of none so extraordinary, and so affecting as the following, which happened in Middletown, in the county, the last week.

A young man by the name of Lemuel Stoddard, of that town, had paid his constant addresses to a young girl, whose parents were neighbours for a considerable time, till at length matrimony was mutually agreed to; contrary as parents was given, and the day was fixed, when the young votaries were to be united in marriage. But here, we must record the untimely fate. The day arrived, when their partners and friends expected to witness a gratifying scene. But a trivial excuse was made for the delay. In the evening, the young man paid his female friend a visit, at her father's house—when and where he retired to her that he had for some time been suspicious that her attachment to him was insincere, that her chastity was not inviolate, and that a friend of his had now convinced him that his judgments were not groundless. He continued to observe, that as nothing could alleviate him from the opinion he had formed, and that if he should marry her he should be miserable, and his attachment to her a fault so hard that he could not live without her. What next—Suicide, he thought was the only alternative! He proposed that the should depart with him, intimating that a far better world would receive them, where their spirits would dwell together in the same bands of affection, which would distinguish them here. The young man then said he had procured laudanum sufficient to effect what he had proposed, and handing the credulous female a vial, and taking one himself, both swallowed the same! —But the girl sickened and a discharge from the stomach saved her from a dreadful end.—The sleep of her unfortunate companion was eternal. He died about one o'clock in the afternoon of the day following.

Mr. Stoddard was about 20 years of age.

The foregoing particulars is as near as possible, the substance of what our informant related, and which, he says was mostly from the mouth of the surviving female, whom, it is thought is innocent as to the charges, which the deceased alledged against her.

CHARACTER OF A TERMAGANT.

"SHE Speaks poignards, and every word stabs. If her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect the north-far. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed. She would have made Hercules have turned spit; yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Should she come this way, will you command me any service to the world's end? I would go on the dightest errand to the antipodes, that you can devise to send me on. I will fetch you a toothpicker from the furthermost inch in Ais. bring you the tough at Prester John's toe; fetch you a hair of the great Cham's beard; do you any emballage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words of conference with the harpy." Shakspeare.

Miscellaneous.

CULTURE OF FLAX.

Cooper's Point, 18 Sept. 1805.

FLAX being the principal article of domestic manufacture, (wool excepted) in the middle and northern states, perhaps a hint respecting its preparation may be acceptable.

"About 18 years past, I purchased a German servant man, who, by his account came from the neighbourhood of Russia. I soon after set him and others to spread my flag, the lot not containing the whole, he requested me to let him rot the remainder his own way, which he said was to half rot it in the water and then on the ground, which he did, and the flax so rotted proved the best, softest, and whitest, I had ever seen, and the method pleased my wife and spinners so well, I have practised it ever since, with some alterations as to time.

"The process we find to answer best, is, after the seed is beaten off, bind it about the size of common rye sheaves, and about the last of September, or first of October, immerse it in water, flagged is preferable to running, it should not be more than two feet deep from the surface, and the flax kept entirely under the water about [illegible] weeks, but the time should be regulated by the weather, as to heat or cold, we then take it out and spread it thin and even, and turn it as often as occasion may require, after being spread every rain, fog, dew, or frost, assists in separating the hull, whitening and softening the flax, and extracting the gum, which is the only cause of flax being coarse and harsh, and it is an established fact with those that have tried, that either thread or cloth made from flax prepared in the above manner, is softer, and will whiten in one third of the time that is requisite for that from flax rotted in the common manner.

"I believe the principal reason, that water rotting flax, is so little practised in North America, is that those who have tried it find the flag hard and brittle, the cause of which, I imagine, is putting it in water in hot weather, when two or three days will rot it sufficiently for dressing, but will not extract the gum.

"A person of my acquaintance from Hibernia, (who is well acquainted with the process of flax preparation) informs me, that it had been the common practice in Ireland, about 20 or 30 years ago, to let flax remain in the water until sufficiently rotted, but the people in general, finding it did not answer their sanguine expectations, have since adopted the above method with success.

"Linen prepared from flax as above directed, with one boil, will be about the colour of Russia sheeting, which induces me to believe that all the hemp and flax in Russia, is rotted in the same way.—And as I am greatly desirous for the improvement of the manufactures of our country, with my fellow-citizens to make a trial, which may be safely done by trying a small part.

MAXIMS AND THOUGHTS.

Among the numerous objects that strongly attach us to this world, it make us look with reluctance towards another perhaps none is more strong, because none more fully abforbent of the mental powers, than the love of Learning.

The love of many other things becomes gradually weakened by the leffening of the powers of enjoyment. The love of money, perhaps, may be as ftrong as that of literature, if not more fo—and as conftant a companion to the grave. But literature, to perfons of fine taſte and judgment, has charms fuperior to almoft every other fubject: and, perhaps, in proportion as activity becomes irkfome to ſtudious perſons, the love of tranquility or ſilent converſation, becomes naturally more grateful.

Neither are we to wonder at the proofs which learned men ſometimes give, of ſtrong reluctance to quitting this world. They may have as ſtrong a belief as the more illiterate, in the doctrine of a future ſtate, and the happineſs of immortality. And they may feel, as powerfully, the mortifications attendant on this ſtate of being. But having been accuſtomed to place their affections on thoſe things, which to them have been the means of wiſdom, and a brilliant ſpecies of entertainment—the perpetual feaſt of ſober reaſon, inſtead of the gratification of diſorderly paſſions; ſuch men are leſs affected by the decay of the body, becauſe the mind remains clear and vigorous.

Add to this, that whatever men have been long accuſtomed to dwell upon with delight, muſt neceſſarily appear a matter of durable importance to them: the improvement of letters a philoſophy, which a regular ſtudent has delighted to conſider as a good, he has generally been accuſtomed to purſue with fondneſs, and progreſſive admiration.

Thoſe improvements become objects of a kind of paternal concern: and ſuch a ſtudent knowing that the ne plus ultra of improvement is yet to be diſcovered, naturally feels a reluctance at the idea of being taken from the objects of his attention, before they have received their complete diſplay of uſefulneſs & of beauty. And it cannot but be in ſome degree mortifying, that the fulneſs of diſcovery, like the entrance of the promiſed land to Moſes, muſt be referred for others, perhaps leſs laborious in the literary travel!

The advantage mainly to be propoſed to ourſelves, in the commencement and purſuit of learning, is, ſimply to deſire to extract ſo much of its eſſence, as may be ſuited to the peculiar ſcope of our faculties and our preſent ſtate; which to enjoy, and be content with, in the limitation of our mortal powers, is equally as rational as our being content with our ſufficient ſhare of meat and drink—the future abundance of which will be as much the natural right, as the temporary comfort of ſucceeding generations!—

And laſtly; to cultivate a perſuaſion that whatever can be valuable in the eſſence of wiſdom, is capable of being more augmented when our ſtate ſhall become changed from temporal imperfection into the unembarraſſed and permanant privileges of eternity.

(Balance.)

From the Cape of Good Hope.

The following intereſting information was communicated to the editor of the Philadelphia True American, by the ſupercargo of the ſhip George, arrived at that place from Batavia, via the Cape.

In the beginning of January laſt, a Britiſh ſquadron conſiſting of three line of battle ſhips, one 50 gun ſhip, two frigates and one gun brig, under the command of commodore Sir Home Popham, arrived off the Cape with 27 tranſport ſhips, containing from 8 to 10,000 troops. On the 6th and 7th the troops began to land, during which time the gun brig was ſailing in and out the Bay to engage the attention of the enemy. The Dutch Governor Janſſen, with a regiment of Waldeckers conſiſting of 500, ſome French troops, and a couple of Dutch regiments, altogether amounting to 1600, oppoſed the landing of the Britiſh troops, which they had commenced on the weſt ſide of the bay; a conſtant firing was kept up on both ſides. In the firſt part of the landing, the Dutch troops having field pieces, played with great havoc upon the invaders, and it was ſaid the Engliſh ſuffered very conſiderably, but their forces momently augmented by the ſwarms of reinforcements landing on the beach, became too potent for the feeble enemy. The Dutch conſequently retreated towards the town—the Britiſh by this time had landed a ſufficient ſupply of cannon and ammunition, which they properly applied to the Dutch whilſt in purſuit of them. Part of the troops took refuge in the Caſtle, and others in the Valleys.

The contending parties on the 9th again met, when a furious engagement enſued, the Dutch governor Janſſen diſplayed the indefatigable courage and bravery of a heroic general, he placed his principal dependance upon the regiment of Waldeckers, they, intimidated by the formidable force that they found themſelves engaged with, gave up all proſpect of ſucceſs and began to give way. The general by this movement, perceiving himſelf with the greateſt part of his army abandoned, was obliged to ſacrifice his intrepid inclinations, and take the moſt prudent ſtep of retreating with all poſſible ſpeed—he flew among the Hottentot mountains, but being purſued by the Britiſh, the remnant of his army were taken priſoners. This battle continued about twenty-five minutes. It is ſaid that the loſs of the Engliſh in killed and wounded was proportionably greater than that of the Dutch, but no authentic account could be obtained. On the 10th the Cape town capitulated to the Britiſh. A regiment of Hottentots that fought in behalf of the Dutch conducted themſelves with diſtinguiſhed bravery throughout the whole engagement, retaining their ground until the laſt moment. Gen. Beresford, ſecond in command of the expedition, with a detachment went in purſuit of the Dutch governor, whom they found among the Hottentots, in the interior of the country, he refuſed to ſurrender either himſelf or the colony, but upon ſuch terms as he ſhould propoſe, which after ſome time the Britiſh in part agreed to. On the 11th they acquieſced to terms of capitulation for the ſurrender of the colony, which is very much in favor of the Dutch, and highly to the honour of Governor Janſſen. It is ſtipulated in one of the articles of capitulation, That in conſideration of the gallant conduct of the Dutch, the troops ſhall be embarked & ſent ſtraight to Holland, at the expence of the Britiſh government and ſhall not be conſidered as priſoners of war.

The commander in chief of the expedition is Sir David Baird, who is at preſent governor of the colony, the ſecond in command are generals Beresford and Ferguſon. The ſquadron conſiſts of the Diadem of 64 guns, (commodore Sir Home Popham) captain Rowley; a third ſhip of the line, name not known; the Narciſſus frigate, capt. Donnelley; the Diademe of fifty guns, Capt. Edmonds; and a gun-brig of 16 guns, commanded by Sir George Keith.

Governor Janſſen with the Dutch troops embarked the 4th, and ſailed the 6th of March for Amſterdam. Immediately after the capitulation of the Cape, an embargo was laid upon all neutral veſſels which continued two months. This ſtep was taken to prevent the intelligence of the capture of the Cape being carried out of the colony, as they were daily in expectation of the arrival of the French captain Leervoce, who, under the impreſſion of the place being in the poſſeſſion of the former owners, had ſent in two Britiſh prizes, that he had captured off the Cape. The ſquadron alternately ſtretched out to ſea, ſending in veſſels of every deſcription that they met with.

In the beginning of March they chaſed in a French frigate the La Volontiere; this cauſed a great conſternation among the inhabitants, and a terrible uneaſineſs with the Engliſh, the batteries and fortifications were all manned, the officers riding to and fro, in their private dreſſes (leſt the Frenchmen ſhould diſcover the brilliancy of their red coats) and effecting every precautionary meaſure againſt the attack of a fleet. The frigate ſhortly came to an anchor in the bay, and inſtantly ſurrendered to the boarding boats. This frigate ſailed from Breſt with 11 line of battle ſhips, they fell in with ſome Engliſh ſhips, captured them and ſent two hundred priſoners in the La Volontiere to the Cape; they were landed in a miſerable ſtate, moſt of them having the ſcurvy. This frigate with five ſhips of the line, parted company with the eleven ſail of the line off Madeira, and were deſtined to the eaſtward of the Cape of Good Hope. The information excited the attention of the Engliſh with no ſmall portion of confuſion, they began to raiſe entrenchments along the ſhore; iſſuing proclamations, prohibiting the farmers, upon pain of death, from ſuffering proviſions, or any other kind of ſupplies, voluntarily or accidentally falling into the hands of the expected enemy. The failing of the tranſports was ſuſpended for two days; uncertain whether it would be more to their advantage for the enemy to be acquainted with the ſituation of the Cape or not. Many American veſſels put into this place for refreſhments, when they perceived themſelves completely enwrapped in an embargo. Petitions for releaſe were handed to the governor repeatedly, but were always replied in vague and indiſtinct terms. The preſent ſtate of affairs induced them to renew their requeſt, when luckily thoſe veſſels bound to the weſtward had liberty to depart, and moſt of them ſailed on the 12th March.

The TORTURE.

WERE we to inſert the following anecdote reſpecting the inhuman practice of the TORTURE, (which ſtill exiſts in ſeveral parts of Germany) without informing our readers, by way of preface, that it is a capital crime in that country to kill a Horſe or Mule, he might incur their diſpleaſure.

"A conſcientious judge, having obſerved the effect of the rack on ſuppoſed criminals, in making them ready to confeſs any thing; to the ſacrificing of their lives, in order to get relieved from the torture, felt in his own mind ſome ſtrong ſenſations on the conviction of accuſed perſons by ſuch methods; inſomuch that, from ſomething which had happened in a particular caſe, his concern was ſo great, as to determine him upon trying an experiment.

In the proſecution of his ſcheme, he took care one night to keep his aſſiſtants all employed, ſo that no one but the groom could go into the ſtable; when all were aſleep, he went into the ſtable himſelf, and cut off the tail of his horſe, in conſequence of which the animal bled to death. Great conſuſion, it muſt be ſuppoſed, followed the diſcovery of the miſchief. In the morning, when the maſter was informed of what had happened, he of courſe appeared greatly incenſed. Strict inquiries were made for the perſon who could have committed an act of ſuch atrocity, but without effect. It was no difficult matter for the ſervants (the groom only excepted) to exculpate themſelves, and he was apprehended and committed to priſon. The poor fellow upon his arraignment, it may be ſuppoſed, pleaded not guilty; but the preſcriptions being very ſtrong againſt him, he was ordered to the rack, where the extreme torture ſoon wrung from him a confeſſion of the crime alledged, he chuſing to ſubmit to death, rather than endure the miſery he was undergoing. Upon this confeſſion, he had ſentence of hanging paſſed upon him, when his maſter went to the tribunal, and there expoſed the fallibility of confeſſions, obtained by ſuch means, by owning the fact himſelf, and diſcloſing his motives for the experiment; ſince which time the practice has been diſcontinued in that court, of applying the torture in any caſe.

La Guayra and Carracas.

The following obſervations and remarks on the ſituation, climate, &c. of the port of La Guayra and the city of Carracas, in Spaniſh South America (furniſhed by a gentleman lately returned from a voyage to that country) cannot fail to intereſt every deſcription of readers. N. Y. paper.

La Guayra, is the principal ſea port of the Province of Carracas, and is ſituated on the foot of an extenſive chain of lofty mountains, running immediately along the coaſt. It lays in 10, 37, lat. and in about 67. W. long. from the meridian of Greenwich. The high mountain that hangs almoſt over the town is called the ſaddle of Carracas, and is 9,230 Spaniſh feet high. It has been ſeen at the diſtance of twenty-five leagues at ſea.

The thermometer is ſeldom as low as 75, and is generally from 80 to 85 throughout the year, and eſpecially in the ſummer months when it is very calm.

The atmoſphere is dry, and notwithſtanding the heat that prevails, its inhabitants are remarkably healthy. Putrid and malignant fevers do not make their appearance here as frequently as in moſt of the Weſt India Iſlands; and it is a circumſtance worthy of particular notice, that that claſs of people who are devoted to the hardeſt labor and greateſt expoſure are wonderfully ſtrong and robuſt. The town and its environs contain about 12,000 inhabitants.

City of Carracas.—This is the capital and ſeat of government of the province of the ſame name, and is perhaps one of the fineſt ſituations in the world. It ſtands in a moſt delightful valley immediately over the high mountain at the foot of which La Guayra is ſituated, and is diſtant from that place probably not more than ten leagues in a direct line South. The road to it over the mountain is 5 leagues, the elevation of this valley about the level of the ſea is near 4000 feet. The climate is very even, mild and temperate, the thermometer ſeldom riſing higher than 78, and never falls below 58 and 60. It is generally about 72 Fahrenheit. The atmoſphere is rather humid: its inhabitants enjoy exceeding good health.

There are ſeveral ſmall rivers in and near the city, where waters are found to be wholeſome and very ſalutary for bathing. Nearly all the European tropical fruits and vegetables are produced here and even Indian corn and wheat might be cultivated in ſufficient quantities to ſupply its inhabitants, or even all the Weſt India Iſlands. One may wear a broadcloth coat all the year round in this delightful valley, without inconvenience, and it very properly is denominated the Montpellier of the new world. The city and its environs contain about 45,000 inhabitants.

The province of Carracas extends from the river Oronoco to the lake of Maracaybo, which is nearly 800 miles of ſea coaſt. Exports from Laguira Puerto Carvello, in 1803, according to Cuſtom Houſe.

52,000 fanegas cocoa: 65,000 quintals coffee: 35,000 bales cotton, of one quintal each: 85,000 hides: 2,000,000 horns: 20,800 ſeroons of indigo, 100 lbs. each: 20,000 lbs. ſarſaparilla: 860 jars balſom capivi: 5,000 quintals canifter tobacco: 800,000 lbs. copper: 200,000 lbs. fuſtic, &c. 10,000 lbs. Jeſuits' Bark, and various other ſmall articles.

The HAWK, or the fatal Effects of Precipitation; an Aſiatic Tale, from AVON-FARM.

I have heard that a King of Perſia had a favourite hawk. Being one day on a hunting party with his hawk upon his hand, a deer started up before him; the King let the hawk fly, and followed it with great eagerness, till at length the deer was taken. The courtiers were all left behind in the chase. The King being thirsty, rode about in quest of water, till having reached the foot of a mountain, he discovered some trickling down in drops from the rock. He took a little cup from his quiver, and held it to catch the water. Just when the cup was filled, and he was going to drink, the hawk shook his pinions, and overset the cup. The King was vexed at the accident, and again applied the cup to the hole in the rock. When the cup was replenished, and he was lifting it to his mouth, the hawk clapped his wings again, and threw it down, at which the King was so enraged, that he threw the bird with such violence against the ground, that he expired.

At this time the table-decker came up, and taking a napkin from his budget, wiped the cup, and was going to give the King water to drink; the king said he had a great inclination to taste the pure water that distilled through the rock, but not having patience to wait for its being collected by drops, he ordered the table-decker to go to the top of the mountain, and fill the cup at the fountain head.

This attendant having reached the top of the mountain, discovered a serpent of a prodigious magnitude lying dead, with its head in the spring; and his poisonous form mixing with the waters, fell in drops through the rock, he then descended, related the fact to the King, and presented him with a cup of water out of his flaggon.

When the King lifted the cup to his lips, the tears of reflection gushed from his eyes. He then related the adventure of the hawk; made many reflections upon the destructive consequence of precipitancy and thoughtlessness, and during the remainder of his life, the arrow of regret were rankling in his breast.

Though this little translation from the Hindoo may not be exactly within the compass of your plan, it will serve as a hint to those hot and inconsiderate sportsmen who sometimes give a loose to immoderate passion, where self interest and good manners claim an attachment to liberality and decency.

ANECDOTES.

The great eclipse of the sun in 1764, occasioned the following very ludicrous circumstance in Ireland:

The Earl of H——(still living) who, like some of our English nobility, was much better skilled in driving four-in-hand, than in astronomy, was met in Dublin by the facetious George Nangle, on the morning of the eclipse.

"Where to (all my lord P" cried George.—"To the college," answered the peer, "to see the eclipse." "Then you will be disappointed," replied George, "for it is absolutely put off till to-morrow!" His lordship immediately turned his phaeton round, and drove home; while George proclaimed the joke throughout the city, to the infinite mirth of the public, at his lordship's expence.

The Dublin Evening Post of last Saturday, did not say the eclipse was put off; but is actually republished it happening a day sooner than in London!

French Bull.

In the account of the proceedings of the National Convention, the was minister having stated, that their ports were completely blockaded, a member immediately moved, "that a variety of articles, (specified) should from that moment be prohibited exportation."—Applauded and decreed.

THE MACKS.

WHEN the first news of the disgraceful surrender of Ulm was received at Dumfries, the Colonel of the Volunteers, of that District spurred the following jeu d'esprit, as a complimentary tribute to his corps, in which the Macks abound.

Vienna's wits their brains may rack,
In penning paltry sonnets on Mack,
Tortures the muse to those him;
But here a noble flame was caught,
Mackbid, Macknish, Mackneil, Macknought,
Who, one and all, deserve him.
Mackie, Mackay, Mackintyre, Macklure,
The very name can scarce endure,
Whate'er they think upon it;
For till that day at Ulm to Mack,
Who met the French o'er turn'd his back,
Or meanly doff'd his bonnet.
Throughout the Globe, now every Mack,
Who bears a Coronet or Pack,
Or pinch of snuff about him,
Macleod, Macknish, Mackintyre, Mackwhan,
All Macks and Mc. Macks, to a man,

PROCLAMATION.

ALEXANDER GRANT,
PRESIDENT.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty-seventh day of June, to be commenced, held, called and dedited, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the fifteenth day of MAY last, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twenty seventh day of this present month of June, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the Fourth day of AUGUST next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved ALEXANDER GRANT Esquire, our President Administering the Government of our said Province of Upper Canada at York, this twentieth day of JUNE, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our reign.

A. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the President in Council, to Military Claimants who were resident in this Province, on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein, since that period, and who as yet have not laid their Claims before the Executive Government for the portion of Lands allowed by his Majesty's instructions to persons of that description, that such Military Claimants shall be admitted to apply for such portion of Lands, under the like privileges as if they had made application previous to the said 28th day of July 1798. PROVIDED that the Military Claimant making such application, shall by his own Affidavit, as well as by the Affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province, that he the said Claimant was resident in this Province on or before the said 28th day of July 1798, and since that period hath continued to reside therein, which said Affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person Administering the Government, in Council for such Lands.

JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the President in Council, that the personal attendance of the Sons of U. E. Loyalists at the Seat of Government for the purpose of applying for the Lands to which they are entitled under His Majesty's instructions, will in future be dispensed with: PROVIDED that the Person making such application shall by his own affidavit, and also by the affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions, make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province that "he, the person making "the said application, is the Son of a "U. E. Loyalist, (specifying the name "and place of abode of his Father) & "that he hath attained the full age of "Twenty-one years," which said affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person administering the Government in Council for such Lands.—It is further hereby notified, that the above dispensation from personal attendance at the seat of Government is not to extend to the sons of U. E. loyalists who reside in the Home District, they not being subject to like inconveniences with persons of that description inhabiting the more distant parts of this Province. JOHN SMALL

Clerk of the Executive Council.

From the Mercantile Advertiſer of June 17.

By the brig William, Capt. Warner, which arrived at this port laſt evening from Liverpool, the Editor of the Mercantile Advertiſer has been favored with London papers to the 3d of May, two days later than any previouſly received; but no event of magnitude having occurred on the European continent in the intermediate ſpace between our former and preſent advices from that quarter, theſe papers are almoſt without intereſt. ANSPACH, Jun. 21.

Petition of the Citizens of Anſpach to the King of Pruſſia.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

"The citizens and inhabitants of Anſpach draw near the exalted throne of your Majeſty, with bleeding hearts, in the name of the country ſo happy under your Majeſty's adminiſtration. We hear on every ſide the report, that the venerable and holy bond, which during a century, has connected the honeſt inhabitants of Anſpach and Bayreuth, with the Sovereign of Brandenburgh, is to be violently broken; that this ancient royal inheritance, this cradle of the Pruſſian Monarchy, is to be torn from the ſtates of its Sovereign, and made ſubject to a foreign ſceptre. The idea of a Magiſtracy conferred by God, and the conſequent ſentiments of loyalty, devotion, and love on the part of the ſubjects, are the ſureſt foundation of every conſtitution. Happily for mankind, theſe ſentiments cannot be changed like a garment, more eſpecially when they have been inherited during ſucceſſive ages from father to ſon, and felt for the ſame race of Sovereigns. Happily for mankind, the upright ſervant, who is not content with eye ſervice, and who is proud of ſubmitting to an honorable Government, cannot feel a more painful and degrading thought, than that of being compelled to exchange a maſter to whoſe ſervice he was born, and whom he loves and venerates.

"Theſe conſiderations, bold in their expreſſion, but founded in the nature of things, will not fail powerfully to impreſs your Majeſty's feeling boſom; may they, and may your noble ſenſe of truth and juſtice decide the fate of this our moſt humble petition, and the felicity of your Franconian territory! Half a million of men, who have inhabited thoſe ſtates, and who have lived joyfully and happily under your Majeſty's government, implore your Majeſty, as children addreſſing their parent, not to abandon them; but to continue as before, with like benignity and juſtice, to watch over the Conſtitution entruſted to you, and graciouſly to turn aſide the evil of an exchange.

"Proud from the conſciouſneſs of belonging to the throne of your Majeſty, though removed at a diſtance from it, and connected with your Majeſty, as well by the ſervice of ages, as by unſhaken fidelity, we are ready (if neceſſary) to ſecure our delivery from this evil, by every ſacrifice, even of our property and lives. We are further animated by the conſolatory conviction, that we belong to a wiſe and juſt King, who not only holds it to be greater and more honorable to ſecure to his ſtates the bleſſings of peace than to acquire ſplendour by the vain acquiſition of conqueſt; but over whoſe exalted and juſt mind, the enticements of mere convenience and rapacious policy, and the advantages of an increaſed population, will avail nothing againſt the intereſts of his ancient and faithful ſubjects, and that our ſovereign, thus wiſe and good, is, for our preſervation, and the felicity of the world, endued by Providence with the power of giving effect to his will, and of maintaining the dignity of his crown, not ſuffering it to be preſcribed to him over what people his ſceptre is to govern.

"With the deepeſt devotion, &c."

LONDON, May 3.

The letters by the Lisbon mail are very contradictory. Some of them expreſs great apprehenſions with reſpect the deſigns of Spain and France, while others ſay that the fears upon this head have greatly ſubſided. The Topaze, French frigate, which had been ſo long in the Tagus, had ſlipped out, and paſſed the Britiſh ſloop of war Star, in ſafety; the latter being prevented from immediately following the frigate by the batteries on ſhore; a circumſtance which is conſidered by ſome as an hoſtile interference on the part of the Portugueſe; but which we cannot view in this light, when we conſider that the neutrality of Portugal binds her to protect alike the ſhips of all nations within her ſeveral ports and harbours.

An order has been iſſued by the Spaniſh Government for removing all reſtraint from American veſſels trading to the ports of South America.

The ſurrender of Cattaro to the Ruſſians continues to be an object of compliment on the part of Bonaparte againſt the Court of Vienna. Though the number of French troops in Iſtria and Dalmatia is repreſented as not leſs than 30,000, and of courſe capable of expelling with eaſe the Ruſſians at Cattaro, who are ſaid to be but a few hundreds, the burthen of this expulſion is thrown on the Auſtrian Government, from whoſe hands alone Bonaparte will receive the poſſeſſion, and who are called upon to expel the Ruſſians by force, a proceeding which has a direct tendency to involve Auſtria in a war with France.

A letter from Deal ſtates, that a very heavy cannonade was diſtinctly heard there about five o'clock on Thurſday morning. As the ſound came in a direction off Boulogne, it is conjectured that Commodore Owen's ſquadron had begun his ſpring plan of annoying the French batteries.

The peace eſtabliſhment of France is eſtimated, by a report on that ſubject, preſented by Gaudin to Bonaparte, to be 600 millions of livres, and the expence for the current year 894 millions.

The great commercial houſe of Bogle, French, Burrows, and Canning, ſtopped payment yeſterday.

Copy of a letter from Sir John Borlaſe Warren, Bart. and K. B. Vice Admiral of the Blue, &c. to William Marſden, Eſq. dated on board his Majeſty's ſhip Foudroyant, at ſea, the 14th of March, 1806.

SIR,—I requeſt you will communicate to their Lordſhips that at half paſt three A. M. on the 13th of March, his Majeſty's ſhip the London, which I had ſtationed to windward of the ſquadron, having wore, and made the ſignal for ſome ſtrange ſails, I directed the ſquadron to wear likewiſe upon the larboard tack, the wind being at W. S. W. and as day light appeared, made the ſignal for a general chace, ſoon afterwards the London was obſerved in action with a large ſhip and a frigate, and continued ſupporting a cunning fire with thoſe ſhips, which were endeavouring to eſcape, until half paſt ſeven, when the Amazon, being the advanced ſhip, purſued alſo and engaged the frigate, which was attempting to beat away. The remainder of the ſquadron approaching faſt upon the enemy (and the action having continued from before day-light until forty-three minutes after nine A. M.) the line of battle ſhip, bearing the flag of a Rear Admiral, ſtruck; and, at forty-three minutes paſt the above hour the frigate alſo followed her example, when an officer came on board the Foudroyant with Admiral Linois's ſword, and informed me that the ſhips which had ſurrendered to his Majeſty's colors were the Marengo of 80 guns, 640 men, and the Belle Poule of 40 guns, eighteen pounders and 320 men, returning to France from the Eaſt Indies; theſe ſhips being the remainder of the French ſquadron which had committed ſo much depredation upon the Britiſh commerce in the Eaſtern world. I have much ſatisfaction in ſtating the meritorious and gallant conduct of Capts. Sir Harry Neale and William Parker, ſupported by the zeal and bravery of the officers and crews of their reſpective ſhips, who claim my warmeſt thanks and acknowledgements; and whoſe exertions, I hope, will recommend them to their Lordſhips particular notice and favour. I cannot, however, avoid regretting that the force of the enemy did not afford to the officers and men of the other ſhips of the ſquadron, who ſhewed the moſt earneſt deſire to have cloſed with the enemy, an opportunity of diſplaying that valour and attachment to their King and country, which I am confident they will be happy to evince upon ſome future and more favorable occaſion. I have incloſed a liſt of the killed and wounded on board his Majeſty's ſhips as well as their defeats; and have likewiſe forwarded a particular ſtatement of the ſhips captured together with an account of the loſs ſuſtained by the enemy, being the moſt correct that could be aſcertained from the roll d'equipage. Rear Admiral Linois is among the wounded, as well as ſeveral other officers.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

There is a reaſon to believe that the differences ſubſiſting between the Dey of Algiers and Mr. Cartwright, the Britiſh Conſul there, have been adjuſted, for it is ſtated in letters from Gibraltar, dated the 2d of April, that Mr. Cartwright had embarked on board the Pompee, Sir Sidney Smith, for the purpoſe of being conveyed back to Algiers. The expulſion of Mr. Cartwright from Algiers was obviouſly the reſult of French intrigue; but with the aſſiſtance of ſo able a negociator as Sir Sydney Smith, there can be no doubt but that the Dey will very ſoon be convinced of his error.

At this awful moment of appearing before the tribunal of the Almighty; and knowing that telling a falſehood, would be eternal perdition to our poor ſouls, we ſolemnly declare, we are perfectly innocent of the crime for which we ſuffer, or of any other murder or robbery; never law, to our knowledge, Marcus Lyon in our lives; and as unaccountable as it may appear, the boy never ſaw one of us looking at him at or near the fence; or any of us neither leading, driving or riding a horſe, and we never went off the high road. We blame no one, we forgive every one; we ſubmit to our fate as being the will of the Almighty; and beg of him to be merciful to us, through the merits of his divine Son, our bleſſed Savior, Jeſus Chriſt.

A DISSERTATION on Good ALE.

To Boaſters of Good Ale of every denomination.

BROTHERS,

BEING in company with ſeveral friends at a public entertainment, one of the party extravagantly commended the goodneſs of a malt liquor called ſmall or table beer, appealing to the judgment of another who accidentally was of opinion that the liquor ſo warmly commended could not be good; for all ale to be good muſt be ſtrong; and this ſeems to have been the belief of all men of underſtanding in the remoteſt ages of antiquity. It is of this ſtrong or good ale I am about to write.

I ſhall not at preſent examine when this liquor called ſtrong ale was invented, or who was the inventor of it, tho' in the ſequel I may hint of that, I have very good authority to prove good ale of Egyptian origin; and that the name it goes by at preſent in that country, is the firſt or moſt ancient name of it, that is to ſay, bowzy, from whence undoubtedly is derived our Engliſh word to bowſe, which properly means to drink heartily of ſtrong, or good ale; for we never ſay of a man who is uſed to drink wine in large quantities, that he is a bowſing fellow, but only of a ſtrong ale or beer drinker. This word bowzy, (I aſſert from Dr. Shaw and the learned Dr. Peacock) is derived from Buſiris, the name of a city in Delta, ſo called from its having the tomb of Oſiris in it, which was erected by Iſis: for Buſiris, in the Egyptian language, ſignifies the tomb of Osiris, and this I think goes to prove good ale to be of great antiquity.

Respecting its good qualities, brother bowsers, there can be no room to doubt, that the great drinkers of wine, brandy, rum, Hollands, and all scalding spirits are the main pillars of the faculty; gout, emaciated bodies, and a speedy decay of nature, are the hourly attendants on thefe, while the bowser of good ale is the picture of health, plenty and good humour; his flamina is improved, he gives a race of beings to the world worth the fun to look on, and the good ale-bowser retains his faculties to the lateft period of human exiftence, when like a full ripe filbert he flips the fhell of life, and drops into the grave, refpected by all good fellows; and this I think is a fufficient argument for its particular recommendation.

If it were neceffary, I would prove how much good ale has been the delight and admiration of all nations upon earth. We learn from Athenæus, that it had been long commended for its excellent qualities; S phocles extols it to the clouds in his Triptolemus: Hecatæus prefers it in his Europæa, Periodus, Ariftophanes, in fhort, a thoufand of the moft learned of antiquity have fung or faid highly of ftrong ale, which certainly goes to prove its great refpectability.

The ancient learned of our own nation have not been behind in their commendations of good ale; to obtain a cup of this and a capon, the lufty father of a convent was never without an excufe for penetrating the abodes of plenty and hofpitality.

With ruffy gills the prieft of yore
Eater'd the farm, on confcience fcore;
The wicker chair he fat him down,
Th' obfequious family around
Attend to his folemn tale.

'Twas not for them his rev'rence came,
The archer took a higher aim;
He knew mine hoft greater'd a wife;
For 'tis confcience keeper kept a fafe;
His errand was for nut-brown ale.

This brings to my recollection fome excellent old rhymes in praife of good ale. I was once fo pleafed with them that I took a tranfcript from a Miffall, the production of the poet laureat Sir John Gower, dated (if I miftake not) 1382; rhymes which I think go to prove what no good fellow will deny, that good ale was a favourite beverage with good Engliih bowlers of antiquity.

Old Rhymes in praife of Good Ale,

BY A BOWSER.

I cannot eat a ftave of meat,
But fure I think that I can drink
With him that wears a hood;
Tho' I go bare, take yeno care,
Nothing am I a cold.
I fhall my fkin fo well with in,
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly go bare, go bare,
Both feet and hand go cold;
But belly, God fend thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

I love no roaft but a nut-brown toaft,
And a crab laid on the fire;
A little bread fhall do me ftead,
Much bread I don't deiire.
No froft or fnow, no wind I trow,
Can hurt me if I wold;
I am fo wraft, and roundly caft,
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly, &c.

And oft my wife, that eafter life,
Lowe well good ale to feek;
Full oft drinks fhe, till ye may fee
The tears run down her cheek:
Then doth fhe bowl, to me fhe bowl,
Even as my wait Warm fhould;
And faith I warrant her, I took my part,
Of this jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly, &c.

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,
Even as good fellows fhould do;
They fhall not mifs, to have the bliffe,
Good ale doth bring man to.

And all poor fouls that have fcowred bowls,
Or them that have lufkily trode;
God fave the fouls of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old.
Back and fides go bare, go bare,
Both feet and hand go cold;
But belly, God fend thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

After this, I think, none but a milkfop will attempt to difpute the excellency of good ale. I fhall take up a little more of your time, brother bowfers, to fhew the nobility of good ale; ftart not at the word, I fay nobility of good ale; for this delectable liquor we have fhewn the world is indebted to an old Egyptian king (for there was a time when kings ftudied arts and fciences and were very ufeful to the nations they governed, by confulting the good of the people more than their own private intereits) his name was, as I have fhewn, Ofiris, who was, after his death, for the great good he did mankind, by the introduction of good ale, worfhipped as a god, and this I think will go to prove, as well the nobility of good ale, as the gratitude of its bowfers.

And now, brother bowfers of every honorable denomination, I fincerely with that you and I may never want a friend, and a pitcher of good ale to give him; and farther, as your phyfician, I recommend, whenever you are overtaken with vapour or hypocondriacal perplexities, to take a good drop of good ale, and it will not only cure your malady, but elevate you to the pleafures of Paradife, as it does your friend and brother,

PROCLAMATION.

ALEXANDER GRANT,
PRESIDENT.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great-Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty-ſeventh day of June, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the fifteenth day of MAY laſt, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the twenty ſeventh day of this preſent month of June, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conſtrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the Fourth day of AUGUST next enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved ALEXANDER GRANT Eſquire, our Preſident Adminiſtering the Government of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada at York, this twentieth day of JUNE, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſixth year of our reign.

A. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of his Honor the Preſident in Council, to Military Claimants who were reſident in this Province, on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein, ſince that period, and who as yet have not laid their Claims before the Executive Government for the portion of Lands allowed by his Majeſty's inſtructions to perſons of that deſcription, that ſuch Military Claimants ſhall be admitted to apply for ſuch portion of Lands, under the like privileges as if they had made application previous to the ſaid 28th day of July 1798. Provided that the Military Claimant making ſuch application, ſhall by his own Affidavit, as well as by the Affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the Diſtrict wherein he reſides, to be made before the Quarter Seſſions of that Diſtrict, and certified by the Chairman of ſuch Seſſions make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province, that he the ſaid Claimant was reſident in this Province on or before the ſaid 28th day of July 1798, and ſince that period hath continued to reſide therein, which ſaid Affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lt. Governor or Perſon Adminiſtering the Government, in Council for ſuch Lands.

JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the Preſident in Council, that the perſonal attendance of the Sons of U. E. Loyaliſts at the Seat of Government for the purpoſe of applying for the Lands to which they are entitled under His Majeſty's inſtructions, will in future be diſpenſed with: Provided that the Perſon making ſuch application ſhall by his own affidavit, and alſo by the affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the Diſtrict wherein he reſides, to be made before the Quarter Seſſions of that Diſtrict, and certified by the Chairman of ſuch Seſſions, make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province that "he, the perſon making "the ſaid application, is the Son of a "U. E. Loyaliſt, (ſpecifying the name "and place of abode of his Father) & "that he hath attained the full age of "Twenty-one years," which ſaid affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Perſon adminiſtering the Government in Council for ſuch Lands.

—It is further hereby notified, that the above diſpenſation from perſonal attendance at the ſeat of Government is not to extend to the ſons of U. E. loyaliſts who reſide in the Home Diſtrict, they not being ſubject to like inconveniences with perſons of that deſcription inhabiting the more diſtant parts of this Province. JOHN SMALL.

Clerk of the Executive Council.

of Osiris, and this I think goes to prove good ale to be of great antiquity.

Respecting its good qualities, brother bowsers, there can be no room to doubt, that the great drinkers of wine, brandy, rum, Hollands, and all scalding spirits are the main pillars of the faculty; gout, emaciated bodies, and a speedy decay of nature, are the hourly attendants on thefe, while the bowser of good ale is the picture of health, plenty and good humour; his flamina is improved, he gives a race of beings to the world worth the fun to look on, and the good ale-bowser retains his faculties to the lateft period of human exiftence, when like a full ripe filbert he flips the fhell of life, and drops into the grave, refpected by all good fellows; and this I think is a fufficient argument for its particular recommendation.

If it were neceffary, I would prove how much good ale has been the delight and admiration of all nations upon earth. We learn from Athenæus, that it had been long commended for its excellent qualities; S phocles extols it to the clouds in his Triptolemus: Hecatæus prefers it in his Europæa, Periodus, Ariftophanes, in fhort, a thoufand of the moft learned of antiquity have fung or faid highly of ftrong ale, which certainly goes to prove its great refpectability.

The ancient learned of our own nation have not been behind in their commendations of good ale; to obtain a cup of this and a capon, the lufty father of a convent was never without an excufe for penetrating the abodes of plenty and hofpitality.

With ruffy gills the prieft of yore
Eater'd the farm, on confcience fcore;
The wicker chair he fat him down,
Th' obfequious family around
Attend to his folemn tale.

'Twas not for them his rev'rence came,
The archer took a higher aim;
He knew mine hoft greater'd a wife;
For 'tis confcience keeper kept a fafe;
His errand was for nut-brown ale.

This brings to my recollection fome excellent old rhymes in praife of good ale. I was once fo pleafed with them that I took a tranfcript from a Miffall, the production of the poet laureat Sir John Gower, dated (if I miftake not) 1382; rhymes which I think go to prove what no good fellow will deny, that good ale was a favourite beverage with good Engliih bowlers of antiquity.

Old Rhymes in praife of Good Ale,

BY A BOWSER.

I cannot eat a ftave of meat,
But fure I think that I can drink
With him that wears a hood;
Tho' I go bare, take yeno care,
Nothing am I a cold.
I fhall my fkin fo well with in,
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly go bare, go bare,
Both feet and hand go cold;
But belly, God fend thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

I love no roaft but a nut-brown toaft,
And a crab laid on the fire;
A little bread fhall do me ftead,
Much bread I don't deiire.
No froft or fnow, no wind I trow,
Can hurt me if I wold;
I am fo wraft, and roundly caft,
Of jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly, &c.

And oft my wife, that eafter life,
Lowe well good ale to feek;
Full oft drinks fhe, till ye may fee
The tears run down her cheek:
Then doth fhe bowl, to me fhe bowl,
Even as my wait Warm fhould;
And faith I warrant her, I took my part,
Of this jolly good ale and old.
Back and belly, &c.

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,
Even as good fellows fhould do;
They fhall not mifs, to have the bliffe,
Good ale doth bring man to.

And all poor fouls that have fcowred bowls,
Or them that have lufkily trode;
God fave the fouls of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old.
Back and fides go bare, go bare,
Both feet and hand go cold;
But belly, God fend thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

After this, I think, none but a milkfop will attempt to difpute the excellency of good ale. I fhall take up a little more of your time, brother bowfers, to fhew the nobility of good ale; ftart not at the word, I fay nobility of good ale; for this delectable liquor we have fhewn the world is indebted to an old Egyptian king (for there was a time when kings ftudied arts and fciences and were very ufeful to the nations they governed, by confulting the good of the people more than their own private intereits) his name was, as I have fhewn, Ofiris, who was, after his death, for the great good he did mankind, by the introduction of good ale, worfhipped as a god, and this I think will go to prove, as well the nobility of good ale, as the gratitude of its bowfers.

Miscellaneous.

QUEEN OF NAPLES.

The critical situation of the royal family at Naples, may probably render the following article, from Kotzbue's Travels, acceptable to many of our readers.

"I arrived at Naples, with strong prepossessions against the Queen, partly derived from books, and partly from verbal information; I left that city convinced of her amiable manners and disposition. I admit that, in these difficult times, she has not always conducted the helm with a steady hand; that she often adopted measures which she was obliged to retract, as well as others from which it was not in her power to recede; but may not the same be said of almost every prince in Europe? extraordinary circumstances require extraordinary measures. He with whom they succeed is denominated great; but those who are unsuccessful sink in the estimation of mankind. I am certain that the Queen always acted for the best; but when the road to it is enveloped in the thickest mist, the instinct of a Frederick is required to find it. The Queen is a most tender and affectionate mother to her children; this maternal heart is likewise a royal heart; nothing but the word usage is capable of hardening it against the people, or obliterating its sensibility. To make the people happy (says she to me) we are often obliged, tho' against our inclination, to act the despot; and if we do we are not beloved.' I expressed my opinion that this was not always the case, and as an example I mentioned Maria Theresa.—'Oh!' replied she, 'my mother was nevertheless unhappy towards the conclusion of her life, for the ungrateful people universally wished her death; and why? on account of a paltry impost.' Of the illusion of royalty, she speaks with an amiable candour and simplicity, which excite irresistible prepossession in her favour. She wished for the period when general tranquility shall allow her to cast off the burden of public affairs, and withdraw with her husband to solitude.—'Then,' said she, 'I will be one who was attached to Marie Caroline, and who merely said their count to their Queen.' Already does she keep the appointments to be near to me, and to hear me often speak in the words of one attached to her. 'The high will destroy us both, for the happiness of being a mother,' said she to me, who expected shortly to enjoy it.—'I have had seventeen living children; they were my joy. Nature made me a mother; the queen is only a gilt dress which I put off and on.' At these words she took her dress between her fingers, and looked it again with an air of contempt. 'He who possesses an independence,' said she, with an emphasis that was not affected, is far more happy than the prince upon a throne.' It would be improper to repeat all that she said concerning the present times, the Jesuits, &c. All however, manifested an enlightened mind, and a heart filled, indeed, with acrimony, but excellent at the bottom. She is accused of fulsehood and of artifice, but I really doubt whether it is possible so grossly to deceive one whose employment has for thirty years been the observation of mankind. What she said to me, she both thought and felt; nobody shall ever persuade me to the contrary.

THEATRICAL.

A very humorous piece made its appearance at the Theatre Francois, in Paris, a few weeks since. Its purport is to ridicule the facility with which divorces are obtained, and the indelicate traffic of getting a husband or a wife by advertisement or agency. An elderly man marries a young wife of unimpeachable virtue, but of a disposition so extravagant as to tire him of wedlock; he therefore, without having any thing to impute to her of moral defect, resolves to divorce her: and the young lady, who has nothing to charge her husband with but a defect very natural to his years, resolves upon the same thing; but both carry on the design privately, and determine, before they separate, to provide themselves with other helpmates. Early one morning, the gentleman goes to an office which advertised to supply both sexes with partners, and makes his business known to the master, with whom a very humorous scene ensues.—The master takes his memorandum book to enter the description of the old gentleman, and the humor consists in the vanity of the portrait which he draws of himself, contrasted with his real feebleness and age: for when the description is finished, an old man of seventy appears upon paper to have the activity and features of a youth of twenty-one. Just as the description is finished, the matter is informed that a lady is waiting for him; he begs his customer to withdraw into an inner room, and immediately the dame herself is ushered in. An excellent scene here ensues between the master, who is a coxcomb, and the lady, whose modesty will not permit her to dwell on her accomplishments. The memorandum book is then put into her hands and she immediately selects the description which the husband has just given of himself, and requests to see this active, well proportioned young fellow. "You shall see him this instant," says the master, "he is in the house." "How," says he praised," the exclaims, "but what are my charms to his?" (give me some rouge, Monsieur)—Can he look upon such a creature, (could you let me have some patches?)—I shall sink with confusion. Is he so amiable as he describes himself? O, Heavens—if he should not like me!

Whilst she is in the hurry of preparation, the master opens an inner door, and encourages the old gentleman to come forth, who at first hangs back; they soon, however, burst upon each other's view; and the explanation ends in a good laugh, and the determination of the parties to live together, and give over the thoughts of a divorce.

London paper.

An arch boy being at the table where there was a piping hot apple pie, putting a bit into his mouth, burnt it so, that the tears ran down his cheeks. A gentleman that sat by, asked him "why he wept?" Only, said he, because it is just come into my remembrance, that my poor grandmother died this day twelvemonths. Pho! says the other, is that all? So, whipping a large piece into his mouth, he quickly sympathized with the boy; who, seeing his eyes brimful, with a malicious sneer, asked him why he wept? A pox on you, said he, because you were not hanged, you dog, the same day that your poor grandmother died.

Ben Nash has one evening employed in collecting money for the Bath hospital; a lady entered, who was more remarkable for her wit than her charity, and not being able to pass by him unobserved, she gave him a pat with her fan, and said, "You must put down a trifle for me, Nash; for I have no money in my pocket." "Yes, madam, says he, that I will with pleasure, if your grace will tell me when to stop," then, taking a handful of guineas out of his pocket, he began to tell them into his white hat, one, two, three, four, five. "Hold, hold, (says the dutchess,) consider what you are about." "Consider your rank and fortune, madam," (says Nash) and continued telling six, seven, eight, nine, ten.—Here the dutchess called again, and seemed angry. "Pray compose yourself, madam," cried Nash, "and don't interrupt the work of charity;" eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen. Here the Dutchess stormed, and caught hold of his hand. "Peace, madam," says Nash; "you shall have your name written in letters of gold, madam; and upon the front of the building, madam; sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty. "I won't pay a farthing more," says the dutchess. "Charity hides a multitude of sins," replies Nash; twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty four, twenty-five. "Nash," says she, "I protest you frighten me out of my wits, L——d! I shall die!" "Madam, you will never die with doing good; and if you do, it would be better for you," answered Nash, and was about to proceed; but perceiving her grace had lost all patience, a parley ensued; when he, after much altercation, agreed to flop his hand, and compound with her grace for thirty guineas. The dutchess, however, seemed displeased the whole evening, and when he came to the table where she was playing, bid him stand farther, an ugly devil, for the hated the sight of him. But her grace afterwards, having a run of good luck at cards, called Nash to her: "Come, says she, I will be friends with you, though you are a fool; and to let you see I am not angry, there are ten more guineas for your charity."

[The following is apparently a very rough story; but I'll lay a wager that it is as true as three-fourths of the matter that appears in our democratic papers. Edit. Bal.]

POWERFUL EFFECTS OF PLASTER OF PARIS!

The wonderful efficacy of this wonderful manure was not fully known until recently; and Lucerne has the honor of the discovery. Col. Muncheson a farmer, in a neighbouring town had purchased a bushel of Gypsum, and left it standing in a bag, unknown to his wife.—She, good woman, in haste to make some pudding for her children's suppers, mistook the Plaster for Flour. The children feasted heartily and retired to sleep. The Col. in the morning, as was customary, rose early, and went into the chamber where his boys slept to call them up.—What was the astonishment of the father to find his sons had grown with such remarkable rapidity during the night, that their legs hung out of the bed on the floor, and one had been absolutely crowded out of bed!! The boys continue their growth, and bid fair in a few weeks to rival in size the children of Anak.

[Lucerne Fed.]

A man who is reputed to have been abused and persecuted, should have no especial care not to value himself on account of the friendship and sympathy which any person may shew towards him as a sufferer. For let his cause have been ever so weak and indefensible, some persons will be sure to espouse it, and give him their pity and countenance, perhaps for no better reason than because he is a sufferer.

KEENE, (N. H.) June 7.

A solemn and affecting Providence.

Killed instantly, by lightning, in his own house, on Sunday last, P. M. Mr. Joel Kendall, of Dublin, aged 39 years, his eldest son, aged nearly 16 years, and an elder brother of the said Mr. Kendall, of Mason, who was at his house on a visit.

The electrical fluid appears first to have entered the roof of the house near the chimney; immediately separated and took several directions, running down four of the spars and posts, which were much split and splintered. Three of the spars and posts were in front of the house; the other spar and post in the back part, which portion of the fluid killed the three persons. The two brothers were sitting near this post, in the lower room. The son was in a scullery, connected with this room, near an outer door, in which direction it appears the fatal fluid took its course from the post, killed the son, and striking the ground upwards of a rod from the door. Mr. Kendall, in the scullery near her son, was struck down, but received no material injury, not any of the rest of the family.

The funeral solemnities were attended on Tuesday, by a numerous collection of people. An appropriate discourse was delivered on the occasion, by the Rev. Lebin Ainsworth, of Jaffrey, from Amos iv. 12.

Mr. Joel Kendall has left a bereaved widow and six small children, in unexpressible sorrow, for the severe stroke of Divine Providence. The other Mr. Kendall has left, at Mason, a bereaved widow and ten children.

Most solemn is the warning of this striking Providence, that we who are alive immediately prepare to meet our God.

RAMAPO, (Orm.) June 9.

On Friday the 30th of May last, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. John Fidler, just Ashee Township, County of Berks, in the 70th year of his age, was killed by lightning. Mr. Fidler had just ordered his Grand Child from his door, that the lower part of it and was leaning over it to look out, when he was struck down. He was immediately taken up and carried to a bed, but no signs of life appeared—the was black from the top down his back to his heels—no very great injury was done to the house except traces were left of the course of the lightning. It is remarkable, that some time last year a child sitting in the same door, was struck by lightning, and very much scorched, but applying Medical aid, in a few days was perfectly restored.

Providence, June 14.

On the afternoon of Sunday last we were visited by a tremendous thunder-storm. The nimble glance of the "crooked lightning," followed immediately by the loud and reverberating peals of thunder, denoted the near approaches of that alarming visitant. In the town of Rehoboth, Mrs. Martha Paine, wife of Mr. Jonathan Pain, was in an instant changed to a corpse, and a man stunned, but not materially injured. At Cumberland a young girl by the name of Marris was also killed. At Pawtucket, an horse was killed by a flash, and a man stunned, who afterwards recovered. In North Providence, two instances transpired; in one, considerable damage was done to a dwelling-house, when the family were providentially absent; and in the other, a tree, contiguous to a dwelling-house, was much injured. No less than six instances can be enumerated where the destructive fluid has committed its ravages. Nature, on the close of the day, presented one of these spectacles of sublimity which mocks the rivalry of the pencil. The sun, clear and serene, was shining in one part of the hemisphere, while the murmurs of the retreating thunder were heard from another, and a magnificent bow on the skirt of the cloud expanded its radiance.

"Mild, bright, and cool, the landscape laugh'd around."

Advices from the Content fleet, but the great Emperor of the French is about to change his name from Bo-na a part, to Bo-na THE WHOLE.—Gaz. U. S.

A gentleman relating one night at a coffee-room in Oxford, that Dr. —, of Brazen Nose college, had put out his leg in crossing a kennel, five surgeons immediately set off for the Doctor's apartments, but returned dismayed, saying no such thing had happened: "Why (replied the gentleman) how can a man cross a kennel without putting out his leg?"

The following letter was actually written by an Usher of a school, as a model for a young gentleman to inform his parents that he should be home at the Christmas vacation. It may well match with the pedagogue's well-known love letter in Peregrine Pickle:

"It is impossible to verbally declare the sublimity or satisfaction which I experience, in the fond anticipation, of putting that period of temporal abstraction from scholastic attention, ordinarily concomitant the vacation, or in marking the diurnal sanctimonious employment usually directed, emphatically appellated holidays: therefore, in simple and humble dictates I inform you, that the recels is fixed for the 23d of the present duodecimal division of the annual solar revolutions; then shall I hope to experience all those domiciliary delectations, usually attendant on that periodical festivity, conjunctive with the hilarities of those, with whom I am enfraternally connected. Then those viands, vaporially affecting our olfactory organs with their salubrious effluvia, and our stomachs, with their invigorating influence, will be abundantly devoured, whether consisting of terrestered or bulliated quadrupedal carneous substance, the more delicate fibres of the volant aerial inhabitants, or the submarine pifcatory refidents.....concluding with those heterogeneous compositions, called puddings, aided by the exhilarating effects of vinous libations!"

Port Folio.

THERE are very few, who religiously live through "a day," as though there were to be no morrow;—and who at all times are prepared to quit the present stage of existence, to appear before the tribunal of their God;—and there are as few, who this day are preparing, for what to-morrow may produce. There are few, also, who are so happily constituted, by education & reflection, as to rise superior to the frowns of disappointment, and the smiles of fortune and levity;—and who turn each varied scene of human life, of nature, and of art, into moral usefulness.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

TO-day the Sun with splendid ray,
Beams joy and happiness around;
To-morrow winds tempestuous play,
And frost admonish the mere ground.

Such is the doom to man allign'd,
Such are the changes of the mind.

To-day the genial zephyrs breathe,
The fragrance of the opening year;
To-morrow sees the barren heath,
And vegetation disappear.

Such is the fate of human kind,
Such are the changes of the mind.

To-day the sun of pleasure smiles,
Youth, Joy and Beauty, crack the fetter;
The magic wand of Hope beguiles,
And not a dark cloud intervenes;

Such is the view to youth allign'd,
Such the delusion of the mind.

To-morrow disappointment comes,
Care's canker gnaws, the aching breath,
Regret each pulling moment foams,
Or sorrow rears her gorgon cruft;

Such is the doom to man allign'd,
Such are the changes of the mind.

To-day deceitful Pleasure weeps,
The gladd'ning smile of Joy and Peace;
We seek not sorrow's hidden fource,
Thus from may hid our pleasures cease;

Our prospects fair, and unconfin'd,
Yield sweet contentment to the mind.

To-morrow wears another face;
And darkening clouds obscure the view;
In vain the past longest we pursue,
Or drive the future to purfue:

But dreary are the thoughts allign'd,
To occupy the gloomy mind.

To-day then let us all prepare,
For what the morrow may produce;
To-morrow be our chiefest care,
To put each hour to proper use;

Mark of the fphere by Heaven defign'd,
And regulate the wandering mind.

Pardon asked for absent.—The following address of the intended honorable is extracted from an Eastern Provincial paper:

Whereas I, Benjamin Bunk,
Of Button town (and near the Church,)
At Stamford Market, o'er the bowl,
Got drunk and 'bus'd my neighbor Cobb;
For which he hath, to my vexation,
By law compell'd his dedication—
That I, without job knife or trowel,
Make oft of words as hide as Tredale,
And therefore do his pardon ask,—
A most ingenious genteel task!

But as I owe I was to blame,
Why, forbearance is, then, I'll beg my name.
BENJAMIN BIRCH.

[The following tale is well told, and is said to be founded on fact :—]

From the Lucerne Federalist,

AWHILE before the emptation
Of this from Britain's warlike nation,
A Suffield Yankey somewhat witty,
A pedling went to New-York City.
I need not to the knowing tell
What Jonathan took down to sell,
For they well know that Suffield's staple
Is bowls and dishes made of maple.
Away'ry house,—at ev'ry Store,
To man, and wife; to maid and w——e,
In every street,—in ev'ry square,
Jonathan tri'd to sell his ware
But all in vain,—I'll tell you why
(A cogent reason)—none would buy.
I told you Jonathan had wit,
So he on this expedient hit,
To sell his ware and fill his p——s
(" 'Twas better to do so than waste.)
Some British ships of war were there,
(Their streamers floating in the air.)
Their sails all bent, and every day
Expecting for to put to Sea.
The Yankey got (see how's a mystery
That's not reveal'd to any history.)
A Naval Officer's feet through-out,
By which when stuff'd he fill'ed out,
And with bold air, a merchent's Store
Enter'd who—he had been before ;
Then thus spoke he—" Our Comm'dore wishes
" A quantity of wooden dishes !
" If you have any that are neat,
" We'll take a parcel for the fleet,"
Oh, Wholesale did not recognize
The Yankey in his fine disguise,
And thus with serious air reply'd,
" I think, Sir, you can be Supply'd ;
" Aithe'r, I have some on hand,
" There're some in town, I understand,
" And if to-morrow you'll send up,
" I'll have them ready in my Shop.
" Any thing else, Sir ? my Comm'dore wishes
" Nothing wanted from the Store ?"
The Yankey bowing, deliquiant,
Replied, " Sir, nothing but the more "
Then march'd so quick as an express,
And quick reform'd his home made dress.
No sooner was he rigg'd complete,
Than wholesale waddled down the Street,
" Your both is bad, my friend," quoth he,
" You've all your ware on hand ! for,"
" Yes," quoth the Yankey, " and I with
" I'd never seen a wooden dish,
" I don't believe I ever shall
" Be able all my land to fill."
Quoth Wholesale, " friend it all a three is,
" To think to sell when cash is scarce is,
" Seldom your price's to out of reason
" You won't fail tho' you wait the Season ;
" But you'r obliige yr., I don't care,
" To take a portion of your ware.
" Nay, friend, as you are here a stranger,
" And are of being prest'd in danger,
(" The offer's out a kindness meant)
" If you'll deduct fifteen per cent.
" I'll take the load." " No," quoth the Yankey,
" I'll neither take yo up, nor thank ye,
" I'll sooner throw my ware away,
" Than fall a great from what I say."
Wholesale consinded in a trice
'Twas best to give the man his price,
So paid yo Jonathan his gold,
Thinking his ware already sold.
'Twas said for more than half a year,
The merchant's shelves were fill'd with ware,
And that he curs'd the British Navy,
For serving him a trick so fourry.
The Yankey as you well may guess,
Was highly pleas'd with his success,
And home to Suffield straight he hied,
And told his friends the trick he tried ;
And often now as round the fire
The social glass and pipe inspire,
The old man makes his neighbors stare,
Relating how he sold his ware.

An astronomer of the present times, in his calculations on the eclipse which took place on the 16th ult. makes these remarks :

" It will be total in the northern parts of the United States, its centre passing over lakes Michigan and Erie, about the middle of the Genesee country and very near Albany and Boston, thence out into the Atlantic ocean, to the Southward of Nova Scotia.

" This eclipse having travelled in expanfum ever since the creation, fell in open space quite clear of the earth, at every return of the Caldean period, till the year A. D. 967, when it first began to enter the visible hemisphere in the north-west, at the south pole ; since which it has continued to move to the northward, at each periodical return, and according to the mean motions of the sun, moon, and retrocession of the lunar nodes, will go off at the north pole about the year A. D. 2,355 ; whence it again commences its aiterial circuit, from which it will not return to the earth so as to perform the same revolution ever again, in less than 12,492 years."—Albany Gazette.

SELECTIONS FROM THE LATEST PAPERS.

NEW YORK, June 26.

A gentleman who arrived this morning in the ſhip Charles, in 38 days from Penzance, has obligingly furniſhed us with a file of London papers to the 7th of May inclusive.—The moſt intereſting articles will be found in the Commercial Advertizer of this evening.

This gentleman informs us that, in a converſation he had with Mr. Munro juſt before he left London, our Miniſter mentioned that he had reaſon to believe that the difference between Great Britain and the United States will ſoon be advantageouſly ſettled.

A new treaty has been ratified between Ruſſia and the Ottoman Porte.

"The Swediſh troops, ſays the London Courier, are evacuating Lunenburg and retiring to Swediſh Pomerania, which, it is ſuppoſed, the Pruſſians will immediately invade.

"There was a report yeſterday, May 6, that Count Haugwitz, was to be ſent to England, to adjuſt the differences between the two governments. A man more unlikely to ſucceed in ſuch a miſſion, could not have been eaſily ſelected.—We do not believe the report.

"The 21ſt, 27th, 31ſt and 35th regiments are on board the tranſports at Spithead, and are expected to ſail in a few days for Sicily."

LONDON, May 3.

This morning the Hamburgh mail due on Wedneſday arrived, and the intelligence which it brings is of the utmoſt importance. If the accounts from different parts of the Continent may be relied upon, the Ruſſians have actually evacuated Raguſa and Cataro, in conſequence of which the French have diſcontinued the works which they were conſtructing at Brenou, and the diviſions of Maſſena Ney, and Soult have commenced their march.

The Editor of the Hamburgh paper expreſſes a doubt of the truth of this intelligence; and it certainly does not appear probable, upon the firſt view of the ſubject, that the Ruſſians, having obtained poſſeſſion of ſuch an important poſition as that of Cataro (ſhould they ſubſequently relinquiſh it to the French. It is however poſſible that the Emperor Alexander may have been induced, by the entreaties of the Court of Vienna, to conſent to the evacuation of Cataro in order to ſave Auſtria from an immediate conteſt with France, the reſult of which, under the preſent circumſtances might be moſt fatal to her.

A ſlight ſkirmiſh has taken place between the Swedes and Pruſſians near Ratzeburgh, the reſult of which was, that the former being greatly inferior in numbers, were compelled to retire.

The inſignificant fortreſs of Gaeta ſtill holds out, although a French army of 24,000 men, with a formidable train of artillery, are employed in the ſiege. The garriſon conſiſts of 5000 men, who are well ſupplied with proviſions. It is ſuppoſed that Maſſena means to attempt the invaſion of Sicily, as he has collected a number of tranſports; but we think it very improbable that he would attempt ſuch an enterprize while the Engliſh and Ruſſians are complete maſters of the ſea.

The prediction which we made ſome months ago, reſpecting the States of the Church, are on the point of being verified: Pius the VIIth, after all his abject ſubmiſſion to the commands of Bonaparte, has, it is ſaid, received an intimation that his reſignation will be accepted. Cardinal Feſch is to be his ſucceſſor. The reſidence of the Pope is in future to be at Avignon, and the Roman State is to be incorporated with the kingdom of Italy.

The dilemma to which Auſtria is reduced, the gradually withdrawing veil, which has till of late been ſpread over the rapacious deſigns of Bonaparte, the firſt ſtep towards actual hoſtilities between Pruſſia and Sweden, the ſtill ſuſpended determination of Ruſſia with reſpect to thoſe two powers, and the formidable reſiſtance which the French have to encounter in Sicily, are points which we have again and again touched upon, and which receive freſh light from every day's occurrences.

In the midſt of feverish agitation in ſome parts of Germany, and of that deadly calm which portends the near approach of a ſtorm in others, it is curious to obſerve what efforts are uſed by the agents and vaſſals of France, particularly Bavaria, to propagate deluſive reports of peace, and to lull the people into a ſtate of the moſt fatal ſecurity.

From the United States Gazette.

The following melancholy and diſaſtrous occurrences, are ſtated in the New-South Wales Adverſtiſer of October 24th, 1804, from which we copy them. We are indebted for the paper to a reſpectable merchant of this city.

On Tueſday arrived the Union, American ſhip, which left this for China the 29th of Auguſt, came laſt from Tongataboo, one of the friendly iſlands, which ſhe left the 5th inſt.

By a young woman, named Elizabeth Morey, mate of the Union, and others on board, the following melancholy ſtatements were depoſed to:

DEPOSITION.

Reſpecting the loſs of the American ſhip Duke, of Portland.

Elizabeth Morey being ſworn, ſays that ſhe left the Cape of Good Hope with Mr. Lovat Mellon, captain of the American ſhip Duke, of Portland, bound to Lima; that on or about the 18 of June, 1802, the ſhip touched at an iſland in the pacific ocean, called Tongataboo; that captain Mellon received a meſſage from a white man named Doyle, then reſiding on the iſland (and who this deponent afterwards learnt, had got there from ſome veſſel tha had been caſt away on another iſland, and the captain and crew killed;) that the chief wiſhed him captain Mellon, to ſend one of his boats manned & armed him to aſſiſt in repelling ſome invaders that had landed from another iſland; that a boat was ſent armed, with eight men and the ſecond mate (Mr. Anderſon;) who, after he had performed the duty allotted to him returned on board in the evening; that previous to Mr. Anderſon's return on board Mr. Gibſon, the chief mate, with a boat manned with four men, went on ſhore for the purpoſe of bringing the former boat's crew on board; which he did, and both boats came together. That ſoon after the return of the boats on board, the chief of that part of the iſland named Ducova, came on board to return the captain thanks for the aſſiſtance he had received, ſtopped on board the ſhip all night, and on the morning following went on ſhore; that the night after the chief ſent word on board for the two boats to be ſent on ſhore for refreſhments the next morning; that the captain ordered the mate not to do ſo; but the following morning, before the captain was up, the mate had ſent them both manned and armed, with the ſecond mate; that about two hours afterwards the ſmall boat returned with two boys in her, accompanied by ſeveral canoes and natives with yams, and the white man Doyle; that after unloading her ſhe was again ſent on ſhore with the two boys, and the natives, while the white man Doyle, before mentioned, engaged on board. That ſhortly afterwards the natives with the ſaid Doyle, took an opportunity of ſurrounding the captain, chief mate, and ſailors then on board, ſeven in number, and killed them all except two boys, this deponent, and a black woman, her ſervant; and threw the dead bodies overboard. That this deponent, ſeeing the maſſacre, attempted to jump overboard, but was prevented by the white man Doyle, who told her not to be frightened, for ſhe ſhould not be hurt; that ſhe was ſent ſoon after on ſhore in one of the natives canoes, and given to the chief's wife;—that this deponent, after ſhe had got on ſhore, learnt from the boys, five in number, that were left alive, with a white man of diminutive ſtature that the whole of the ſhip's company that were on ſhore, had been killed except themſelves; that the ſhip, after the deponent's departure, was kept by Doyle; that the chief himſelf went off to get her unloaded for three ſucceſſive days; but not being able to accompliſh the unloading of the ſhip, he procured the five remaining white perſons to go on board to render aſſiſtance in landing the cargo, which conſiſted chiefly of bales of calico, and different piece goods; which they accompliſhed in ſix days following;—that all the ſails were unbent and landed except two; that after the cargo was ſo landed, the four white boys and man took an opportunity of driving the natives overboard, killed Doyle, cutting the cables, and ſtanding out to ſea with the ſhip; and that what further became of the veſſel the deponent cannot ſay.

DEPOSITIONS,

Reſpecting the ſhip Union, of America.

Daniel Wright, Chief mate of the ſhip Union of New-York being ſworn, ſays, that on or about the 29th of Auguſt, 1804, he ſailed in the ſaid ſhip from the harbor of Port Jackſon under the command of captain Pendleton, having taken on board Mr. John Boſton, ſhip this deponent underſtood to be Supercargo; that they touched at Norfolk iſland and from thence proceeded for the iſland of Tongataboo, one of the friendly iſlands, where they arrived on or about the 30th of September; that ſoon after they came to anchor a number of canoes viſited them, but left them at ſun ſet; that on the following morning they came off in great numbers, among whom was a Malay that ſpoke broken Engliſh, who informed them they could get plenty of wood, water, and refreſhments there, and was very urgent for the ſhip's boats to be ſent on ſhore: that one of the ſhip's boats was accordingly hoiſted out, manned with ſix men, four muſkets and two cutlaſſes; in which boat the captain & Mr. Boſton went; that ſoon after the departure of the boat from the ſhip, the natives became very troubleſome from their numbers on board and round the veſſel; that this deponent ſtationed all his remaining hands about the ſhip to prevent their coming on board; but they ſucceeded in getting up, contrary to his wiſh, to the number of thirty who this deponent obſerved had paſſed a number of cluos in the ſhip's chanels ready to be handed in: and from his obſervations he had no doubt but that they meant to take the ſhip; that the Chief frequently urged this deponent to let more men come on board, which he poſitively refuſed, telling him that he ſhould be obliged to turn out thoſe who were already on board, which he did the greater part without any reſiſtance or much trouble; that the chief did not ſeem in anywiſe diſſatisfied with this proceeding, but remained on board ſome time after, to eat and drink with this deponent; that he ſhortly after took leave of the ſhip, and was accompanied by the whole of the canoes alongſide; that immediately after the departure of the natives from the veſſel, this deponent hoiſted the colors of the ſhip and fired a gun to put thoſe on ſhore upon their guard, from his obſervation of the conduct of thoſe that were on board; but ſoon after taking up the ſpy glaſs and looking towards the ſhore, he perceived the ſhip's boat on the beach lying broadſide up, in the hands of the natives, and a number of natives about her; that this might have been between one and two o'clock, the boat having been gone about four hours; that this deponent then put the ſhip in the beſt order he could, expecting an attack from the natives—but no canoes came off that night; that the next morning two canoes came within hail, but would not come on board; and from ſeveral geſtures which they made the people on board wanted this deponent to ſtie on them, having conſtrued thoſe geſtures to that of the boat's crew being murdered, alſo wiſhing him much to get the ſhip under way, and leave the place immediately—but which this deponent would not allow of; that no further intercourſe paſſed that day.

That the day following ſeveral canoes came within hail, in one of which this deponent diſcovered the Malay, who aſked this deponent to come on ſhore, for that the captain and Mr. Boſton wiſhed him; that he endeavored to get the Malay alongſide, but could not prevail upon him to do ſo, though he promiſed to ſwim any him; the Malay then went on ſhore again. The ſame afternoon he came off again, accompanied by ſeveral canoes, in one of which the deponent obſerved an European woman who ſpoke to them in Engliſh, as did alſo the Malay, inviting him on ſhore; but by particular ſigns from the white woman, when unnoticed by the natives, ſhe forbid them to comply with the requeſt; that finding they could not prevail in getting another boat from the ſhip, they took their departure, and nothing further occured that day.

The next morning, being the third after the boat in which the captain and Mr. Boſton had gone on ſhore, ſeveral canoes again came off, in one of which was the white woman, and in the other the Malay, repeating the former requeſt; that the deponent endeavored to get him, (the Malay) along ſide by offering preſents for the chief, but without effect, that the white woman flood up in the head of one of the canoes, cried out that thoſe on ſhore were murdered by the natives, and then leaping into the water, ſwam towards the ſhip, the men on board preſenting their muſkets, and thereby deterring the natives from picking her up, by which means ſhe reached the veſſel, and was taken on board; that the ſaid woman informed the depouent, that the captand boat's crew had been murdered on ſhore; upon which information he ordered the natives to be fired on, and ſaw two fall in one of the canoes; that he immediately directing the cables might be cut and putting out to ſea, ſhaped his courſe for Port Jackſon, where he arrived in 19 days without accident.

The deponent further ſtates, that when getting under way, and throwing home his top-gallant ſails, he heard two muſkets fired on ſhore, but cannot take upon himſelf to ſay what produced this circumſtance, further than that the white woman informed him that the chief told her it ſhould be done, to induce him (the deponent) to believe the people were alive and well on ſhore.

Elizabeth Morey being ſworn, ſays, that ſhe lived with the chief's wife on the iſland of Tongataboo, and that on or about the 30th of September ſhe underſtood that a ſhip had arrived at the iſland—ſhe then reſided at the oppoſite ſide thereof; that one of the natives had come over for the purpoſe of bringing the Malay, who was known by the name of Charley, to go on board her; that three days after the veſſel's arrival ſhe was ſent for by the chief to converſe with one of the white boys that had come on ſhore, from whom ſhe learnt the ſhip's name, that ſhe was from New York, and that the captain and ſeveral of her people were on ſhore; that the chief deſired her to go off to the veſſel, and endeavour to get ſome more of her boats on ſhore; that ſhe went off in a canoe as ſhe was ordered, accompanied by the Malay, with five other canoes, and did as ſhe was directed, being afraid to do otherwiſe; but from the converſation ſhe had overheard among the natives previous to her going off, ſhe was ſatisfied that the greater part of thoſe who had gone on ſhore were murdered, —but being aſſiduouſly watched by the Malay, Charley, ſhe could not communicate her information to the officers on board the ſhip except by ſigns, which ſhe had uſed unconſcious at the time whether they were regarded by them or not; that ſhe again went on ſhore, and told the chief what ſhe had done. That upon the morning following ſhe was again ſent for by the Malay, who informed her that ſhe was again to go off to the ſhip to repeat her former meſſage, and endeavour to get on ſhore ſome of her people; that ſhe went off accordingly, accompanied by four canoes, in one of which was Charley the Malay; and on coming near the ſhip, ſhe ſtood up in the head of the canoe in which ſhe was, ſhe called to the people on board, informing them that their comrades were all murdered by the natives on ſhore, then jumped overboard and ſwam for the ſhip, calling to the people to fire on them in the canoes, which they afterwards did; that ſhe heard the two muſkets fired on ſhore, which ſhe knew was done by order of the chief, as he told her he would do ſo before ſhe left the ſhore, to induce the boats the more readily to leave the ſhip from an idea that Europeans were on ſhore filling for a boat.

Thomas Bordon, a ſeaman, being ſworn, ſays that he left Norfolk iſland in the Union, with captain Pendleton, that he touched at the iſland of Tongataboo; and corroborates in every part the depoſitions given by Mr. Wright, the chief officer, and that part of Elizabeth Morey's evidence reſpecting the natives having murdered the people from the ſhip; but adds, that when the natives were turned out of the ſhip by Mr. Wright, they went on ſhore apparently in a violent paſſion.

Gilbert Grant, a ſailor on board the Union, corroborates the above in every particular.

Sworn before us, this 26th day of October, 1804.

NOTHING.

[FROM A PARIS PAPER.]

In ſpite of the wit with which the eyes of our faſt readers generally inſpire us, we cannot deny that we are on ſome occaſions afflicted with ſuch a degree of ſterility as to be utterly incapable of producing any thing at all ſmart or entertaining.—What muſt we ſay under ſuch circumſtances? Nothing, reply our faſt readers. That is precisely what we have now reſolved to do. But you will ſay, that Nothing is a very inſignificant ſubject. Is this really your opinion? For our part, on the contrary, we believe that Nothing is at preſent every thing. May not the greater number of the voluminous romances, which conſume ſo much paper, and ſtuff the ſhelves of ſo many libraries, be very fairly reduced to Nothing? Are they not made of Nothing? Are they not ſold, or at leaſt are they not read for Nothing? What is obtained from reading them? Literally Nothing. How many people are there now a days, who, though originally Nothing, have, after being for a moment ſomething, again relapſed into Nothing? What is there in moſt cafes in thoſe pretty heads which not unfrequently turn ours? Nothing? The young Olympe pleads for a divorce from the old Geronte, to whom ſhe was married laſt year. What is it he has been doing during the year of their marriage? Why truly he has been doing Nothing. What does the prude Orphiſe, who exclaims ſo loudly againſt naked boſoms, conceal under the triple fur? Why she conceals Nothing. Can you conceive any thing more witty and spirited than Mr. Sheridan's Comedies, or more dull and insipid than the monstrous farces of Kotzebue? Nothing. Is there any thing more unhappy than the lot of an unfortunate stock jobber, more unfeeling than the heart of a rich miser, more light than the vows of a lover, more dull than the verses of Small Pybus? Still the answer is Nothing. You see then that Nothing is every thing, and even above every thing, for what is wanting to what has every thing. But Nothing has no where so great influence as over the fair sex. They know how to please with Nothing. With Nothing they play off all their attractions. A Nothing vexes and consoles them; a Nothing puts them out of humour, and the same Nothing restores them to cheerfulness. A Nothing gives them the vapours, & in its turn affords them pleasure and amusement. But we will no longer trespass on your patience with Nothing; and therefore we shall here close our remarks on Nothing!

MADAME RECAMIER.

A letter from Paris dated February 25, says. "The amiable and accomplished Madame Recamier is now preparing to quit her superb mansion in Rue de Mont Blanc, for an humble dwelling in the Marais, where she intends to establish a Pensionate for young ladies. No female of this capital retired from the circle of fashion with so much native dignity, and supported the reverse of fortune with more becoming fortitude. She carries with her not only the admiration of friends, but the esteem of those who once envied or hated her as a rival. The same as formerly, when in affluence, she has during the last winter received regular invitations to our numerous balls, routs, and assemblies;—and the Empress and the Princess Bonaparte have, by their Chamberlain informed her that her presence in the drawing room would always be agreeable; but she has renounced entirely all society, and in solitude applied herself for her new situation for life. Even the brilliant offer of princess Louis Bonaparte, to be governess of her children, has been declined in a modest letter; in which she says—"that though her education and capacity might be sufficient for the instruction of children of citizens they were not calculated for the education of the children of Princes"—She adds, "that the unavoidable diffipation of courts would besides prevent her from fulfilling her first duty, that of a wife." It is now discovered, that the houle of Recamier never poffeffed any great wealth, though its credit, during ten years, has been one of the moft extenfive."

The Cot of Mirth.

HAIL, White! focial feafon, hail!
Pleafure lives amidft thy gloom,
Here doth Mirth and joy prevail,
Here the buds of Friendfhip bloom.
How cheerful looks the roud fire,
How pleafing founds the merry tale;
Boy, pile the crackling embers higher!
—Another foaming can of ale.
Yet clofer draw each focial feat,
Around the flame-illumin'd hearth;
Let friendfhip in each bofom beat,
This is the happy Cot of Mirth.

Lateſt Intelligence.

NEW YORK, July 9.

By the Britiſh packet Windſor Caſtle, from Falmouth, and the ſhip Kingſton, from Liverpool, London papers are received to the 17th of May. The following are the moſt important articles they contain:

LONDON, May 10.

The Active, Willey, of London; the Laurel, Hume, of Liverpool, with 13 other veſſels, were taken on the coaſt of Africa, by a ſquadron from L'Orient previous to the 26th January. The Active is arrived at Waterford as a cartel.

By this veſſel we learn, that a reinforcement of French troops had arrived at Senegal and it was ſuppoſed would again make an attempt againſt Goree.

The Lords in Council have come to a reſolution to recommend to his Majeſty, to take off the embargo on Hamburgh and Oldenburgh veſſels. This meaſure has not yet gone through the neceſſary formalities, but no doubt, in a day or two, theſe channels for trade will again be opened.

On Saturday a report prevailed in the city that the Duke of Brunſwick was immediately coming to this country on a diplomatic miſſion from the Court of Berlin, and in order to endeavour to adjuſt the matters in diſpute between the two governments; and it was even ſaid, that a houſe had been hired for his accommodation.

May 13.

Mr. Jackſon, lately ambaſſador from this country to the court of Berlin, has arrived in London. He came over in the Ariadne frigate, from Huſum, and landed yeſterday at Yarmouth, about eleven o'clock, under a ſalute from the frigate.

By letters received yeſterday from Holland we learn, that the deputation which had been ſent to Paris, from the Hague, had returned, bringing with it the liſt of Bonaparte. We do not ſuppoſe, that the perſons who were appointed to that miſſion durſt remonſtrate againſt the eſtabliſhment of a conſtitution ſo contrary to the habits and feelings of the Batavians; but if they have, their repreſentations, it ſeems have been ineffectual. Bonaparte has decided, that they are to have a King in the perſon of his brother Louis. His future Majeſty, Louis the firſt, is at preſent much inſtipoied at Paris; but, if capable of undertaking the journey, he is to be at the Hague on Thurſday next, between which day and the 20th, he is expected to be proclaimed. The Dutch do not manifeſt proper gratitude for the favor which is deſigned for them. The nomination of king Louis, inſtead of ſatisfaction, has produced an univerſal depreſſion throughout Holland.—Some cities have even ventured to petition their High Mightineſſes to oppoſe the meaſure with all their power; but though we may applaud and admire this faint effort of departed freedom, we cannot flatter ourſelves with the expectation that it can produce any favourable conſequences. It will be in vain to propoſe any oppoſition to the power that has long ſince ruled, and is now on the very eve of entirely revolutionizing the Batavian government.

May 15.

It is ſaid that Denmark has been induced to join the league of Ruſſia, Sweden and England, and that a treaty of alliance between theſe four powers is in great forwardneſs.

The Continent again appears under arms, and it is highly probable that our next arrivals will bring intelligence of the commencement of hoſtilities between Auſtria and France, Pruſſia and Sweden.

A letter from Gibraltar, dated April 9, ſays, "The Swiftſure came from Tetuan, where ſhe had been to water. The Moors knocked down and killed one of the Lieutenants belonging to the ſhip employed on the watering buſineſs, and carried him off priſoner to Tetuan, becauſe Capt. Rutherford refuſed to give them a certain quantity of powder, which they demanded. The inſolence and extortion of both the Emperor of Morocco and the Dey of Algiers daily increaſe, and our government ſhould take ſome determined meaſures with the Barbary Powers to render the Britiſh flag in little reſpectable in their eyes, which certainly is not at preſent the caſe."

A letter from an officer on board the Pompee, Sir S. Smith, dated off Gibraltar, April 10, intimates, "that The Pompee is about to repair to Meſſina, for the purpoſe of bringing the King and Queen of Naples to England without delay."

May 16.

LONDON GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY.

WHITEHALL, May 15.

A diſpatch has been received at the Eaſt India Houſe from Sir George Hilaro Barlow, Bart. dated Illahabad the 4th December 1805, of which the following is an extract:

"I have now the honor to inform your Hon. Court, that, on the 22d ultimo, a definitive treaty was concluded between the Right Hon. Lord Lake and the Plenipotentiary agent of Dowlat Row Scindiah, upon terms which appear to me to be calculated to eſtabliſh the relations of amity and concord between the two ſtates upon the moſt ſecure and permanent foundation.

"Your Hon. Court will alſo have the ſatisfaction to be apprized of the expectation which I confidently entertain of a ſpeedy and favorable termination of hoſtilities with Juſwunt Row Row Holkar, and of the conſequent important reduction in the military charges of the ſeveral Preſidencies inſeparable from a ſtate of war.

"I have the ſatisfaction to inform your Hon. Court, that perfect tranquility prevails in every quarter of the company's dominions; and I am not aware of the probability of any occurrence of a nature calculated to diſturb it, or to impair the fundamental ſources of the Britiſh power and proſperity in India."

Diſpatches have been alſo received from Sir G. H. Barlow, dated Illahabad the 24th December, 1805, from which it appears, that in conſequence of the treaty of peace with Scindiah, and the confident expectation of a peace with Holkar, orders has been iſſued for the return of the troops belonging to the Preſidencies of Madras and Bombay within the limits of theſe governments reſpectively, where they were to be diſtributed in cantonments and placed on a peace eſtabliſhment.

SWEDISH DECLARATION.

"From the moment his Swediſh Majeſty had determined upon taking a part in the coalition againſt the uſurpation of Napoleon Bonaparte, his Majeſty had fixed his attention upon the preſervation of the electoral poſſeſſions of the king of England upon the Continent, which had been evacuated by the French troops. Ready to enter them with a Swediſh and Ruſſian army, united under his orders, but Majeſty haſtened, upon the firſt intelligence of the movement of a Pruſſian corps towards that country, to enquire into the intentions of his Pruſſian Majeſty, and in full confidence to demand of him, whether the march of his troops had the ſame object as that of the combined army; namely, that of reſtoring the electorate of Hanover to its legitimate poſſeſſor, and in that caſe to concert with his Pruſſian Majeſty the joint meaſures to be taken. The King of Pruſſia, from that period, evaded entering into any explanation relative to this important object, and that in a manner far from friendly. The hoſtility ſince manifeſted by that ſovereign, in joining the cauſe of the allies, could not but tend to augment his Majeſty's ſuſpicion; and his Majeſty did not heſitate to anticipate events, in cauſing it to be publickly made known, at a period when the intentions of the court of Pruſſia, with reſpect to the ſtate of his Britannic Majeſty, could only be matter of conjecture, that the country of Lauenburg ſhould ſtill remain under the protection of the Swediſh troops, until a convention for that purpoſe was concluded with the king of England. It was the ſole right of this monarch only, as proprietor of the country, to decide upon the future fate of his hereditary ſtates; every arrangement, therefore, relative thereto, between France and Pruſſia, was inadmiſſible.

"It was, notwithſtanding this arrangement that the king of Pruſſia, in his proclamation of January 27, which was publiſhed ſoon after, endeavored to aſſert his right to the complete occupation of the electorate of Hanover. The reiterated proteſtations made by the court of Berlin on this occaſion, of being induced to take this ſtep merely to ſave that country from calamities, ought to have been received as a guarantee for its future independence. This language, however, did not laſt long; inſtead of regarding the electorate as a depot till the return of a general peace, as his Pruſſian Majeſty had ſolemnly announced in the Proclamation, iſſued from Berlin, dated April 1, announced on the contrary the definitive union of theſe provinces to the Pruſſian monarchy; a meaſure which the court of Berlin pretended was founded upon the right of conqueſt, and a formal treaty with France.

"In this ſtate of things the king, faithful to his engagements with his Britannic Majeſty, though he could not uſe too much circumſpection upon the abandoning of the German ſtates of his ally became the ſubject of conſideration, which being once delivered from the preſence of the Swediſh troops muſt ſoon have fallen under the power of the Pruſſians. His Majeſty, therefore, confiding himſelf to the protection of the countries on this ſide of the Elbe, on his departure from Ratzeburg declared, that having left in this Duchy a corps of Swedes, under the orders of the aid de-camp general commandant count Lowenhielm, he ſhould look upon any attack upon theſe troops, and the independence of the country, as a meaſure of aggreſſion againſt his own ſtates. This declaration has been repeatedly made, and particularly in the letter of Count Lowenhielm, dated April 13, to the Pruſſian military commandants in Hanover, and the country of Mark. Count Lowenhielm ſaid expreſſly that he had the ſtricteſt orders to defend Lauenburg againſt foreign troops that ſhould attempt to enter it. Notwithſtanding this, a detached corps of Pruſſians paſſed that frontier at Mariauett, on the 23d of this month, and in ſpite of the brave reſiſtance of the Swediſh troops, by the ſuperiority of their numbers, they took forcibly poſſeſſion of the country.

"Under the preſent circumſtances, the king could not regard this violent meaſure otherwiſe than an act of hoſtility on the part of his Pruſſian majeſty; conſequently he has ordered an embargo to be laid upon all the Pruſſian veſſels in the Swediſh ports.

"If his Majeſty has ſo long delayed to reſent the outrages committed upon him and his allies by the Court of Berlin, it has ariſen from his majeſty's confidant wiſh to avoid every thing that might lead to rupture as long as poſſible. The intimate connection ſubſiſting between the king of Pruſſia and Napoleon Bonaparte, the declared enemy of the three allied courts; the excluſion of the Engliſh commerce from the ports and rivers of the North of Germany, together with the unjuſt authority eſtabliſhed in the electorate of Hanover—all theſe were ſufficient indications of the real ſyſtem of his faid majeſty; and the attack which has been juſt made upon the Swediſh troops in Lauenburg, has put the laſt ſeal to it.

"The undernigned, ſpecially charged by the king, his maſter, to treat with the accredited miniſters of the two allied courts, has received his majeſty's expreſs orders to expoſe the above mentioned facts, in order to enlighten the public opinion upon the preſent ſituation of affairs between the courts of Stockholm and Berlin.

"Count DE FERSEN,
"Grand Marſhal of Sweden.

May 17.

The Swiftſure, St. Ildefonſo, and Bellona, three of the prizes taken in the glorious battle of Trafalgar, from Gibraltar, paſſed Plymouth on Thurſday, in company with the Britannia and Dreadnought.

Extract of a letter from Plymouth, dated May 10.

"Arrived a chaſſe maree, laden with ſtate, cut out from Ile Dieu, in a gallant ſtyle, by the boats of the Conteſt gun-brig. Lieut. Gregory. Alſo another chaſſe maree, with ſtate, which with one then in ballaſt, were cut out in a very ſpirited manner by the boats of the Aſſault gun brig, Lieut. Swinburn. After the boats had ſecured the chaſſe marees, they ſtormed a battery of three 18 pounders which proteſted them, the guns of which they ſpiked, ſtruck the French colours, cut down the flag-ſtaff and brought off the French officer and his whole guard priſoners, with ſeveral others, as trophies. Next day Lieut. S. in the empty chaſſe maree, ſent the priſoners into the harbour in a flag of truce, and took a receipt for them not to ſerve again until regularly exchanged. Arrived L'Alexandre, French ſhip of 80 guns, captured by Admiral Sir J. T. Duckworth in the Weſt Indies, laſt from Scilly. She is a very fine ſhip, and though under jury maſts, the came up yeſterday in great ſtyle."

BOSTON, July 8.

We learn from Capt. White, of the ſhip Monſoon, who has arrived at Quarantine from Princes Iſland, (off the coaſt of Guinea) that a French ſquadron, from L'Orient, of one 74 gun ſhip, two 44's, and one 16 gun brig, commanded by Commodore Lamolle, in the months of February and March laſt, had run the coaſt down, and taken the Britiſh ſloop of war Favourite, of 18 guns, Capt. Dovie, and twenty-two ſail of Engliſh gunneamen; and run two aſhore at Lagos.—The ſquadron left Princes Iſland, the 28 April, for India.

NEW-YORK, July 10.

Since our laſt publication we have received European intelligence five days later than that by the Kingſton. The ſhip Liberty, captain Chew, arrived at this port yeſterday, has ſupplied the Editor of the Mercantile Advertiſer with Liverpool papers to the 24th of May, London of the 22d and Lloyd's Liſts of the 20th, from which we have ſelected ſome intereſting articles. Theſe papers afford a hope that the diſpute between Pruſſia and England will ſhortly be brought to an amicable concluſion.

LONDON, May 19.

The trial of Lord Melville concluded on Saturday, but the proceedings are not to be publiſhed until the Peers ſhall have given their deciſion, which it is expected they will do on Wedneſday ſe'nnight.

A letter from Dover, dated May 17, contains the following intelligence:—"By an American ſchooner, arrived yeſterday from St. Michaels, it appears there has been a hurricane:—moſt of the veſſels loading there, were blown out of the Roads; and the ſchooner loſt both her anchors and cables. She was the firſt of the fleet bound to London with fruit. An American brig from Cadiz, and another from Liſbon, came up in the afternoon from the river."

On Saturday ſome accounts were received from Holland, by a veſſel ſent into Yarmouth, by which we learn that the camp at Zeyſt is immediately to receive reinforcements. It is added that 50,000 Pruſſians are to join in the invaſion of this country, and are to embark at the Dutch ports.

Sir Richard Strachan ſailed from Plymouth yeſterday morning, with the following ſhips under his command: Caeſar, Terrible, Montagu, Bellona, Audacious, Belleiſle, and Triumph; and Decade, and Malampus frigates. This ſquadron is ſuppoſed to be gone in purſuit of Jerome Bonaparte's ſquadron.

May 21.

At the Court at the Queen's Palace, the 14th of May, 1806, preſent, the King's moſt excellent majeſty in Council.

Whereas during the interval which has elapſed ſince his majeſty found himſelf compelled by the hoſtile meaſures of his majeſty the King of Pruſſia, to lay an embargo on the ſhips and goods belonging to his jubjects, and to places under his controul, ſuch hoſtile meaſures have not been diſcontinued: and whereas the town of Papenburgh cannot but be conſidered as dependant on, & under the abſolute controul of Pruſſia; his Majeſty is therefore pleaſed, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is thereby ordered, that general reprizals be granted againſt the ſhips, goods, and ſubjects of the King of Pruſſia, and of the town of Papenburgh, (ſave and except any ſhips to which his majeſty's licence has been granted, or which have been directed to be releaſed from the embargo) ſo that as well his majeſty's fleets and ſhips, as alſo other ſhips and veſſels that ſhall be commiſſioned by letters of Marque or general reprizals, or otherwiſe, by his Majeſty's commiſſioners for executing the office of lord high admiral of great Britain, ſhall and may lawfully ſeize all ſhips, veſſels, and goods belonging to the King of Pruſſia, or his ſubjects, or others inhabiting within the territories of the King of Pruſſia, or belonging to the town of Papenburgh, (except as aforeſaid,) and bring the ſame to judgment in any of the courts of admiralty within his Majeſty's dominions; and to that end, his majeſty's advocate general, with the advocate of the admiralty, are forthwith to prepare the draft of a commiſſion and preſent the ſame to his majeſty at this board, authoriſing the commiſſioners for executing the office of lord high admiral or any perſon by them empowered and appointed, to iſſue forth and grant letters of marque and reprizals to any of his majeſty's ſubjects, or others, whom the ſaid commiſſioners ſhall deem duly qualified in that behalf, or for the apprehending, ſeizing, and taking the ſhips, veſſels and goods belonging to Pruſſia, and the veſſels and ſubjects of the king of Pruſſia, or any inhabiting within his countries, territories, or dominions or belonging to the town of Papenburgh, (except as aforeſaid) —and that ſuch powers and clauſes be inſerted in the ſaid commiſſion as have been uſual, and are according to former precedents; and his majeſty's advocate general, with the advocate of the admiralty, are alſo forthwith to prepare the draft of a commiſſion, and preſent the ſame to his majeſty at this board; authoriſing the ſaid commiſſioners for executing the office of lord high admiral, to will and require the high court of admiralty of Great Britain, and the lieutenant and judge of the ſaid court his lieutenant or ſurrogates, as alſo the ſeveral courts of admiralty within his Majeſty's dominions, to take cognizance of, and proceed upon all and all manner of captures, ſeizures, prizes, and reprizals of all ſhips and goods that are, or ſhall be taken, and to hear and determine the ſame, and according to the Court of Admiralty and the laws of nations to adjudge & condemn ſaid ſhips, veſſels and goods as ſhall belong to Pruſſia, or the veſſels and ſubjects of the King of Pruſſia, or any others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories, and dominions, or as ſhall belong to the town of Papenburgh, (except as aforeſaid;) and that ſuch powers and clauſes be inſerted in the ſaid commiſſion as have been uſual, and are according to former precedents; and they are likewiſe to prepare and lay before his majeſty at this board, a draft of ſuch inſtructions as may be proper to be ſent to the courts of admiralty in his majeſty's foreign governments and plantations for their guidance herein; as alſo another draft of inſtructions for ſuch ſhips as ſhall be commiſſioned for the purpoſes above mentioned.

May 22.

The Hamburgh mail arrived laſt night, and has brought intelligence of a moſt important nature. The ſteps adopted by this country have occaſioned a Change in the Cabinet of Berlin.

Count Haugwitz who has been the fatal adviſer of theſe meaſures which have produced, and threatened ſtill greater miſchief to his country, has retired from an office which he had neither the talents nor integrity neceſſary to render efficient for the public good, and has left Count Keller in the full adminiſtration of affairs. The circumſtances which produced this event, are ſtated to have proceeded from the king's request to the latter minister, to suggest the means most likely to bring about a reconciliation between the courts of Berlin and London. The first step taken has been to produce orders to the Prussian ports in the Baltic, not to obstruct the entrance or departure of any British ships, but on the contrary, to treat them in a friendly manner. Other measures were in contemplation to forward the renewal of a good understanding between the two courts.

Will Prussia still maintain that it occupies Hanover as a rightful possession? Will Napoleon suffer Frederick William to open his ports to British commerce? These are questions which a little time will solve.

It is possible this change may lead to the sending over some diplomatic agent to this country to endeavour to open some negociation for accommodating the differences between the two countries; but in the present state of Europe, the public should not be hasty to encourage a hope, in which they may be disappointed.

Another important piece of intelligence is stated in letters from Vienna of the 6th inst. According to these, "the differences relative to the mouths of the Cattaro, have been amicably accommodated. The representations made at St. Petersburgh have produced the effects wished for by Austria, and the Russian troops are making dispositions to evacuate the Cattaro."—We know not what degree of credit is due to this statement.

It is repeated, that such is the understanding between France and Austria, that an offensive and defensive alliance is about to be concluded, and Austria is bound actively to defend Bonaparte's late changes. This may be doubted.

Letters from Rome state, that two French ships have been taken by the English off Gaëtta.

Lord Melville's Impeachment.

The court was crowded to a very great degree in order to hear the remainder of Mr. Whitbread's speech. He continued addressing their lordships till near three o'clock. Mr. Plumer for the defendant, and the Attorney general for the Managers, argued a question of law, and the lords at half past three finished the whole of the trial. Nothing remains but to pronounce their judgment. This will not take place till Wednesday or Thursday fe'nnight.

Disagreeable but improbable Report.

Our Plymouth letter of yesterday states, that a report was very current that the Inshore Squadron of Brest, consisting of the Impetueux, of 80 guns, Captain Lawford, the Diamond and the Eurotas frigates, and the Haughty gunbrig, having been becalmed under the French batteries, the whole of the enemy's fleet consisting of ten sail of the line, had slipped their cables and captured them.—No such intelligence as the above has reached the Admiralty; we therefore trust it is incorrect.

May 25.

The Piedmontese, French ship of 80 guns, from Toulon, with dispatches, was going into the Cape of Good Hope but being informed by a Dane that it was in possession of the English, she proceeded for the Isle of France.

The Estrello, from Vera Cruz, for Cadiz, has been captured by the Fame, Polyphemus and Africa, men of war, and sent into Plymouth. The Estrello is laden with cochineal and dollars, and is supposed to be one of the richest prizes taken during the war.

June 7.

Lord Melville's trial is ended. Reports say that he has been acquitted, 66 to 44. Those who heard his defence anticipated his acquittal.

Mr. Fox has declared, that the disposition of the present Ministry is pacific; but that no propositions will be listened to but such as are fair and honorable for Great Britain and her allies.

Nine sail of the line, two frigates and a brig, are lying at Brest, ready for sea.

The embargo on ships and goods belonging to Bremin is taken off.

The Prussian ports of Memel, Dantzic, &c. are closely blockaded by a Swedish fleet.

The neutrality of Portugal is said to be again guaranteed by a treaty signed at Madrid the 19th May. This has not been effected without a new payment of tribute.

Private Letters from Dublin, state that Dwyer, the county of Wicklow rebel chief, and his companions, who were shipped off for Botany Bay, rose upon the crew on the voyage, and carried the vessel into the Brazils.

ALEXANDER GRANT,

PRESIDENT.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the fourth day of August to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the twentieth day of June last, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the Fourth day of this present month of August, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the eleventh day of September next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved ALEXANDER GRANT Esquire, our President Administering the Government of our said Province of Upper Canada at York, this FIRST day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty sixth year of our reign.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, May 31.

Government, after having ſhewn great tardineſs in publiſhing the royal order for granting letters of marque againſt the navigation of Pruſſia and Papenbourg, is equally ſlow in the execution of that order, and in maintaining it to its utmoſt extent. This order, agreed to on the 14th of this month by his Majeſty in council, and publiſhed on the 20th in the London Gazette, was not ſent until yeſterday by the Court of Admiralty to be carried into execution. Beſides, before this definitive diſpatch, it has been materially modified by another royal order, agreed to by his Majeſty in council on the 21ſt of this month, and publiſhed in the Gazette of the 28th. This ſecond order which bears the title of "Additional, to the act of the 14th May," makes an important and remarkable change, by reſerving for the navigation of the Baltic, and to the commerce carried on there, the ſame liberty which England has to the preſent time allowed to that navigation and commerce. The following is the tenor of the additional act.

G. R. The inſtructions to the commanders of all ſhips of war and armed veſſels who may have received from the Court of St. James Letters of Marque have been extended as follows:—

"As we have always been animated with a wiſh to prevent whatever might have a tendency to annoy the commerce of thoſe nations with whom we are at peace, as well as to promote the neceſſary operations of war; and as theſe objects will be more effectually anſwered if the preſent ſtate of the commerce and navigation of the Baltic remain uninterrupted: we have judged it expedient, and reſolve accordingly, That our ſhips of war and other armed veſſels, and all veſſels holding commiſſions from us, ſhall henceforth abſtain from taking or intercepting any ſhips or veſſels navigating the ſaid ſea; ordering and enjoining, beſides, to the commanders of all veſſels having letters of marque and reprifal, not to intercept in the Baltic, by virtue of their commiſſion or under their flag, any ſhip or veſſel with the intention of ſeizing her; but, on the contrary, to ſuffer ſuch ſhips or veſſels as they may fall in with in that ſea, to continue their voyage to their reſpective places of deſtination, without the leaſt obſtacle or reſtraint whatever.

By his Majeſty's command,
(Signed) SPENCER.

June 1.

Thurſday ſeven waggons loaded with caſks of ſpecie arrived at the Bank of England, under the eſcort of a party of light horſe. The caſks contain the ſubſidy, in dollars ſent ſome time ſince to Hanover, and which have been got away before the Pruſſians took poſſeſſion of that country. On their way to London they halted at Romford, when one of the ſentinels placed over the waggons was deteſted in breaking open one of the caſks, and lodged a priſoner in the barracks.

June 2.

The proſpect of an accommodation between this country and Pruſſia, has entirely vaniſhed; and the orders to take and deſtroy all Pruſſian veſſels is in full activity.

Almoſt all the wartime powers of Europe are, or muſt ſhortly be at war. Sweden is at war with Pruſſia, and has blockaded the Pruſſian ports in the Baltic. Ruſſia is the ally of Sweden, and muſt aſſiſt her in the war.—Denmark and Portugal are then the only European maritime powers that remain neutral.

Bonaparte, by an Imperial Edict, has decreed that "in future all officers of the navy, who ſhall be captured by the enemy, ſhall be reduced from that moment to one fourth of their actual pay." This edict has been communicated by Admiral Linois to the French officers captured with him in the Meſſenger and Belle Poule—adding, "and you, gentlemen, therefore, are hereby to be reduced, and muſt ſhift as well as we can with the little that remains."

Orders have been iſſued for putting eleven ſhips of the line in commiſſion, and fitting them for ſea with all expedition.

The Pallas frigate, Lord Cochrane, has returned into port to refit, after her daſhing and ſucceſsful cruize on the coaſt of France.

The laſt accounts from the fortreſs of Gaeta ſtate, that the gallant Prince of Heſſe Philipſtat, who is a nephew of the great Queen of Naples, was, with his garriſon, in high ſpirits; and appeared determined to make the fame of Gaeta as illuſtrious in hiſtory as that of Gibraltar. To every ſummons to ſurrender, he replies—"Gaeta is not Ulm, nor is the Prince of Heſſe a General Mack." The French troops daily increaſe before it; and all the arts of French enginery will be exerted to reduce the place.

The laſt accounts from Vienna ſtate, that the Mouth of the Cattaro, in Albania, which the Ruſſians lately took poſſeſſion of, is to be given up to the Auſtrians, to be by them ſurrendered to the French. It is ſaid, as ſoon as the Ruſſians ſhall have evacuated Cattaro, the Republic of the Seven Iſlands, of which Corfu is the capital, and where the Ruſſians have had a ſtrong force, will be attacked by a French force from Venice.

The Ruſſians have a ſquadron in the Adriatic, which blockades the port of Venice, and other French ports in that quarter.

June 5.

The method of puniſhing the ſeamen on board the men of war, by running the gantlet, is ordered to be immediately diſcontinued.

Sir R. Strachan ſailed from Plymouth on Monday morning, with the following ſhips under his command: Terrible, Montague, Bellona, Audacious, Belleiſle, and Triumph; and Decade and Melampus frigates. This ſquadron is gone in purſuit of Jerome Bonaparte's ſquadron.

Sir Sidney Smith, with the Pompee, and three frigates, has arrived off Sicily; all apprehenſions of an attack upon that iſland by the French muſt be at an end. It is ſtated, that Sir Sidney has ſucceeded in throwing ſupplies into Gaeta.

June 7.

A cartel has arrived from France, bringing over Lords Elgin and Yarmouth. The cartel is ſaid to have bro't diſpatches for Government; but nothing has tranſpired on the ſubject.

It is generally underſtood, on the continent, that the Senator Beauharnois is to govern Switzerland, under the title of Landamman for life; but that at his death, the country will paſs to his ſon-in-law the electoral Prince of Baden. Should this project be carried into execution, we ſhall ſee, ſays a German paper, reign at Naples, Prince Joſeph, the brother of the Emperor; in Upper Italy, Prince Eugene Viceroy; in Switzerland, the uncle of that Prince, the brother-in-law of the Empreſs; along the Rhine to the Maine, the electoral prince of Baden, ſon in law of Madame Beauharnois; from thence to Holland, Duke Joachim, brother-in-law of the Emperor: and in Holland, another brother of the Monarch.

In the event of the death of the Emperor of Germany, his Electoral highneſs Prince Joachim Murat, will moſt probably be a candidate for the Imperial diadem, and, with the ſupport of Bonaparte, there can be no doubt of his ſucceſs.

We underſtand that a meſſage from his majeſty will be brought down ſome day next week, Wedneſday we believe, relative to the pacific overtures from the French government; and that the correſpondence between the two countries, will at the ſame time be laid before both houſes.

By a gentleman who left the Hague on Saturday, the 17th ult we have been favored with the following information:

The Hague paper of the preceding day, ſtates, that the Pruſſian guards at Berlin, had fired into the Senate Houſe, whilſt the members were aſſembled: and that ſeveral of the troops had expreſſed a ſtrong unwillingneſs to march againſt the Swedes.

Count de Schlitz, a young Pruſſian Nobleman of rank in the army, had been ordered to attend his Majeſty, on account of ſome freedom of ſpeech with reſpect to exiſting affairs. Inſtead of attending the King he ſhot himſelf, leaving behind him a paper, in which he ſtated his reaſons for the act, and his unwillingneſs to ſurvive the honor of his country.

June 10.

An order was received at the Cuſtom-houſe, in Harwich, on Thurſday, to take out the crews of the Pruſſian ſhips detained there, the captains and maſters excepted, and to ſend them to Norman-croſs as priſoners of war.

Seventeen Pruſſian veſſels have been ſent into Yarmouth during the laſt week.

The following changes will immediately take place in the Navy Department: Sir Thomas Thompſon, who behaved ſo gallantly in the Leander, at the battle of the Nile, to be Comptroller of the Navy, in the room of Captain Nicholls; Sir Robert Barlow to be Deputy Comptroller, in the room of—— Duncan Eſq. Captain Thomas Hamilton to be a Commiſſioner in the Navy, in the room of Capt. Hammond, who will receive a penſion.

There are ſymptoms, we think, of a ſplitting between the Foxites and the Sidmouth party. Mr. Bond, who belongs to that party, has reſigned the office of Judge Advocate, becauſe, it is ſaid, he was required to make his reports to a Military Board, inſtead of making them, as his predeceſſors did, directly to his majeſty.

June 11.

Lord Melville's cafe continues to occupy the whole attention of the lords, who generally ſit on it with cloſed doors, till eleven or twelve o'clock at night. Much warm debate is, it is ſaid, ſhewn in theſe diſcuſſions. Beſides the language that had paſſed between two eminent law lords, a noble viſcount and another marquis are reported to have uſed expreſſions to each other which rendered it neceſſary to retire immediately for the purpoſe of explanation; but we are happy to ſay the interpoſition of friends is ſtated to have prevented the matter from proceeding to any unpleaſant extremity. It is further reported, that a queſtion has been put to the judges, as to how far the act of parliament regulating the manner of drawing the money from the bank, has been violated by lord Melville; and that the opinions are favorable to the noble lord.

It is not yet known when judgment will be given.

In conſequence of the arrival of diſpatches for government on Thurſday, by a flag of truce from France, and two cartels in the courſe of the week, with ſeveral perſons of diſtinction, who were detained at the commencement of the war, the Funds have experienced a riſe of one per cent.—Omnium, which was done at two 1-4 on Wedneſday, was on Saturday, contracted for at 3 1 3. —Nothing what ever has tranſpired reſpecting the nature of the diſpatches received, nor is any thing likely to be known on the ſubject, as government very properly keeps the matter a ſecret, to prevent ſpeculation in the funds, and in articles of merchandize. Cruizers are even kept for the purpoſe to meet the flags of truce at ſea, as ſoon as they quit the French ports, to take out the diſpatches. This was the caſe with reſpect to the laſt; however it argues favourable, that an intercourſe continues open, and that an arrangement is completed relative to an exchange of priſoners.

NEW YORK, July 18.

Capt. Sheldon, arrived at Providence from Cadiz, informs, that he left ten Spaniſh ſhips of the line in Cadiz Bay, ready for ſea, and that Lord Collingwood, with 17 Britiſh ſhips of the line, was blockading them.

Extract of a letter from a Spaniſh officer to his brother in New York, dated Gerrona, March 12, 1806.

"At the concluſion of this letter, the poſt came in, and brings us news that the conqueſt of Portugal is determined on. Martial Berthier has arrived in Madrid. Five thouſand French troops are on the march from that frontier, and two diviſions of Spaniſh Hibernians among them. A veſſel laden with the ladies and women belonging to the Spaniſh troops that paſſed to Etruria, were unfortunately taken by an Algerine rover; the ſailors fled in the boat, abandoning them to their fate. The ſailors have arrived, but no accounts with regard to the paſſengers can be had. A Brigadier General with his wife and a young girl of 16, were among the number."

From the New York Gazette.

So much has already been ſaid on the ſubject of the late eclipſe, that any remarks would be deemed ſuperfluous. It has no doubt excited the attention of aſtronomers, who will in due time favor the world with their obſervations. Having, however, been favored with Paul Wright's Life of JESUS CHRIST, we have thought proper to make the ſubſequent extract on the ſubject of the darkneſs at Judea while our Saviour was expiring on the Croſs.

"Behold the ſun, conſcious of the ſufferings of his Maker, and as it were to hide his face from this deteſtable action of mortals, is wrapt in the pitchy mantle of chaotic darkneſs! This preternatural eclipſe of the ſun continued for three hours, to the great terror and aſtoniſhment of the people preſent at the execution of our dear Redeemer. And ſurely nothing could be more proper than this extraordinary alteration in the face of nature, while the ſun of Righteouſneſs was withdrawing his beams, not only from the promiſed land, but from the whole world; for it was at once a ſtriking teſtimony given by the Almighty himſelf to the innocence of his Son, and a proper emblem of Him who was the Light of the world, at leaſt till his luminous rays, like the beams of the morning, ſhone out anew with additional ſplendor, in the miniſtry of his apoſtles, after his aſcenſion.

"The darkneſs which now covered Judea and the neighbouring countries, beginning about noon, and continuing till Jeſus expired, could not be the effect of an ordinary eclipſe of the ſun. It is well known that theſe phenomena can only happen at the change of the moon, whereas the Jewiſh paſſover, at which our dear Redeemer ſuffered, was always celebrated at the full; beſides, the total darkneſs of an eclipſe of the ſun never exceeds twelve or fifteen minutes, whereas this continued for full three hours.—Nothing therefore but the immediate hand of that Almighty Being which places the ſun in the center of the planitary ſyſtem, could have produced this aſtoniſhing darkneſs:—Nothing but Omnipotence, who firſt lighted this glorious luminary of heaven, could have deprived it of its cheering rays. Now ye ſcoffers of Iſrael, whoſe blood ye have to earneſtly deſired, and wiſhed it might fall upon you and your children! behold all nature is dreſt in the ſable veil of ſorrow, and in a language that cannot be miſtaken, mourns the departure of its Lord and maſter; weeps for your crimes, and deprecates the vengeance of heaven upon your guilty heads! Happy for you that this ſuffering Jeſus is compaſſion itſelf, and even in the agonies of death, prays to his heavenly Father to avert from you the ſtroke of his juſtice, thereby opening the gates of mercy even to you his murderers!

"The Heathens themſelves conſidered the preternatural eclipſe of the ſun as a miracle, and one of them cried out "either the world is at an end, or the God of nature ſuffers!" And well might he uſe the expreſſion; for never ſince this planetary ſyſtem was called from its original chaos, was known ſuch a deprivation of light in the glorious luminary of day. Indeed, when the Almighty puniſhed Pharoah for refuſing to let the children of Iſrael depart out of his land, the ſable veil of darkneſs was for three days drawn over Egypt; but this darkneſs was confined to a part of that kingdom; whereas this that happened at our Saviour's crucifixion, was univerſal, and not merely local."

Mungo Park.—We are ſorry, ſays the Charleſton Courier of July 1, to communicate to our readers, the death of this enterpriſing and indefatigable traveller, whoſe reſearches in Africa have been with ſo much avidity, and have afforded ſo much inſtruction. He had been amply ſupplied by the Britiſh government with every thing neceſſary to render his ſecond tour through the interior of that country, of the higheſt benefit to mankind. He arrived at Goree, in a Britiſh ſhip of war in the month of March, 1805; from which he aſcended the river Gambia, with about forty attendants, provided with portable canoes, and every thing neceſſary to render their travels eaſy and ſpeedy—they had penetrated about 1500 miles into the interior, to a place called Sego, which Mr. Park has deſcribed in his former Book of Travels. —The number of his attendants had been reduced by ſickneſs and death to three, excluſive of himſelf;—the King of this place, after carrying him into every part of the city, which is called in and conſidered the largeſt in Africa and ſhewing him every curioſity which it afforded, had cruelly and brutally murdered him, together with his attendants. This intelligence is furniſhed us by a gentleman recently from the Rio Pongus, who received the information from traders from the interior country, and on whom reliance might be placed.

Extract of a letter from Capt. Callaghan of the Britiſh brig Fame, which ſailed from Charleſton for Barbadoes, in March laſt, dated iſland of Porto Rico, May 2, 1806.

"I take this opportunity of acquainting you of my being captured on the 10th of March laſt, in lat. 20, 47, N. long. 67, W. by the French privateer Superb, of two long 18 pounders, two 6's, and 96 men, after a running fight of 30 hours, in which time I had all my ſtanding and running rigging ſhot away; and my main yard, main-top-gallant yard, fore-top ſail-yard, and jibboom, carried away by an 18 pound ſhot. The privateer made three attempts to board, but was repulſed. Unfortunately the wind at length failed, when the privateer ranged alongſide, and cut us completely with grape and langrage from her two 18 pounders; my few brave officers and men around me, worn out by manly exertions, were then compelled to ſtrike the Engliſh colors, which I preſume to ſay were well ſupported againſt ſuch ſuperior force (we having only ten men altogether, ſix four-pounders, and no ſmall arms.) The privateersmen kept up a fire of muſquetry at us for ſeveral minutes after we ſtruck, but thank God no perſon was killed or wounded, except a ſmall fleſh wound I received in my right leg. We had the ſatisfaction of killing their firſt lieutenant, and dangerouſly wounded ſeven men. The privateer was bound off Charleſton Bar, where ſhe intended to cruize for ſome weeks. I was moſt ſhamefully treated by the privateersmen, robbed of every thing I had, even to the hat on my head.—Dominique, the captain of the privateer, is one of the greateſt ſcoundrels in exiſtence—he treated ſeveral American maſters at ſea almoſt as bad as me, plundering them of cordage, and ſeveral other articles."

[The Superb is the privateer that engaged the Peterel ſloop of war off Charleſton Bar.]

Extract from Carr's Northern Summer.

AS a faſt in England always reminds me of a feaſt, I will juſt give a brief ſketch of a Ruſſian dinner, which is ſeldom later than 3 o'clock: upon a ſide board in the drawing room is always placed a table ſtilled with fiſh, meats, and ſauſages ſalted, pickled, and ſmoaked, bread and butter, and liquors; theſe airy nothings are mere running footmen of the dinner, which is in the following order: a cold diſh, generally of ſturgeon or ſome other fiſh, preceded follow my ſoup, a number of made diſhes, a profuſion of roaſt and boiled meats amongſt which the Ukraine beef is diſtinguiſhable, and abundance of excellent vegetables: then paſtry, and a deſert of very fine melons, and four flavorieſs wall fruit: the table is crowded with a variety of wines, and excellent ale and beer. The maſter of the houſe or a cook carves, and ſlices of every diſh are handed round to the gueſts. One of the moſt gratifying things that I always ſaw upon the ta-table, was a large vase of ice broken into small pieces, with which the guest cools his wine and beer. In the yard every Ruffian Houfe as two large cellars, one warm for winter and the other filled with ice for the fummer. The foup and coffee, and chocolate are frequently iced. One day at dinner, I fat by a lovely Ruffian lady, that is, born in Ruffia but of German parents: the explanation will fave me a remark embarraffing to gallantry, and which I wifh to avoid, refpecting the beauty of the proper Ruffian women, at leaft of thofe whom I faw. This accomplifhed woman, in my own language as pure as ever it fell from an Englifh lady's lips, requefting fome falt; upon my preffenting it fhe faid, "Whenever you give falt, never fail to fmile; it is a fuperftitious cuftom in Ruffia." A fmile in this country confidered as a charm againft poifon. Heavens! furely they have not to learn that,

"A man may fmile, and fmile and be a villain." They have a beautiful proverbial expreffion: "Banter, but never make the cheek red."

The following is given, in a recent periodical publication, as an original anecdote of Shakefpear:

It is well known that Queen Elizabeth was a great admirer of our immortal Shakefpear, and ufed frequently, (as was the cuftom with people of great rank in thofe days) to appear upon the ftage before the audience, and to fit delighted behind the fcenes while the plays of our bard were performed. One evening Shakefpear performed the part of a king; the audience knew of her majeffy being in the houfe.

She croffed the ftage whilft Shakefpear was performing, and on receiving the accuftomed greeting from the audience, moved politely to the poet, but he did not notice it! When behind the fcenes, fhe caught his eye, and moved again, but ftill he would not throw off his character to notice her: this made her majeffy think of fome means to know whether he would not depart from the dignity of his character while on the ftage. Accordingly, as he was about to make his exit, fhe ftepped before him, dropped her glove, and recroffed the ftage, which Shakefpear noticing, took up thefe words, fo immediately after finifhing his fpeech, that they feemed as belonging to it.

"And tho' now beat on this high embaffy,

"Yet ftoop we to take up our coufin's glove!"

He then walked off the ftage, and preffented the glove to the queen, who was highly pleafed with his behavior, and complimented him on its propriety.

Receipt to make perpetual Yeaft or Barm.

Take one pound of flour, make it the thicknefs of gruel with boiling water; add to it half a pound of raw fugar; put three fpoons full of well purified yeaft into a large veffel, upon which put the above ingredients, which will foon ferment violently. Collect the yeaft off the top and put it into a fmall necked pot—cover it up from the air—keep in a dry and warmifh place—when ufed in part, fupplace with a thin pafte, made of flour and fugar in the former proportions. I faw this ufed after it had been five months made. No yeaft is neceffary except the firft time.

Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, May 26.

Early yesterday morning died, after a tedious illness, at the Governor's apartment in Greenwich Hospital, Viscountess Hood, in the 77th year of her age.

Yesterday morning, a young man of the name of Cope, undertook for a wager of ten guineas, to go on foot from the ſtandard in Cornhill to Hyde Park, and return again in thirty-ſix minutes: the diſtance is ſix miles.—He ſtarted exactly at five o'clock, and returned back in thirty-four minutes and a half, being one minute and a half leſs than the time allowed. He was attended all the time by two perſons on horſeback, to ſee fair play. Great ſums of money were depending on the iſſue.

The report of the reſignation of Count Haugwitz appears to have been totally unfounded. There are, however ſtrong ſymptoms of a diſpoſition in the Cabinet of Berlin to make conceſſion to this country, but we are aware that the exerciſe of that diſpoſition depends upon the will of the Tyrant, of whoſe injuſtice Pruſſia has become the degraded inſtrument.

We have received the Hamburgh Correſpondent of the 21ſt inſt. which is one day later than the papers brought by the mail. It contains no intelligence of importance, but it is worthy of notice, that we find in it no corroboration of the accounts of the evacuation of the Cattaro, which appear in the paper of the 20th.

When the news was received a few days ago, that the ports of Pruſſia were again to be opened, it cauſed ſome activity among the merchants engaged in that trade. The buſtle is, however much leſs than might have been expected, an idea having got abroad that France, in permitting this meaſure, (and without ſuch permiſſion Pruſſia durſt not adopt it) aims only at entrapping a number of our ſhips in the Pruſſian harbors.

At this intereſting period, when Bonaparte affects to boaſt of fifteen diviſions of French troops are aſſoat in various parts of the world, it may be gratifying to the public to read the following ſtatement of the ſhips of the Britiſh Squadrons of Britiſh ſhips now on duty, or in reſerve of the ſtationary fleets which form the blockade of Braſt, Breſt, and the Texel:—

1ſt—Under Rear Admiral Sir R. Strachan.

Caeſar, 84 guns, Auguſtus, Belliſle, Bellona, Montagne, Zealous, and Leviathan, 74 each.

2d—Under Vice Adm. Sir C. Cotton.

Foudroyant, 84 guns, Courageux, Fame, Mars, Namur, and Hindoſtan, 74 each.

3d—Under Vice Admiral Thornborough.

Prince of Wales, 98 guns, Malta 84, Achille, Conqueror, and Illuſtrious 74 each.

4th—Under Rear Admiral Stirling.

Barfleur, 98 guns, Glory 98, Dragon, Mars and Revenge, 74 each.

5th—Under Rear Admiral Harvey.

St. George, 98 guns, Spartiate, Tonnant, 84 each, Bellerophon, and Plantagenet, 74 each.

6th—Under Rear Admiral Sir S. Smith.

Pompee and Ajax, 8 guns each, Excellent, Orion and Thunderer 74, Athieniene and Intrepid, 64.

The two firſt ſquadrons are in purſuit of Jerome Bonaparte—the three next are cruizing off Rochefort, Cape Finiſterre and to the weſtward, in order to intercept him—the laſt is in the Mediterranean; and it will be obſerved that this liſt does not include the three blockading ſquadrons, nor the forces ſtationed in the Eaſt or Weſt Indies.—When we add to this a liſt of 22 ſhips of the line fitting or refitting in our ports, excluſive of 6 ſhips of the line in dock, to ſupply the various demands that may be made upon Naval Service, we cannot but feel that the moſt lively acknowledgements are due to the activity, zeal and abilities of Government, who thus conduct a department ſo highly intereſting to the ſecurity and pride of Engliſhmen.

Riot Near the London Docks.

On Sunday afternoon, a deſperate affray took place between a number of Iriſh laborers and ſome American ſeamen (belonging to ſhips in the London Docks) in the Broadway adjoining the Docks.

The quarrel originated between an American and an Iriſhman, reſpecting a woman of the town. A battle enſued, and the Iriſhman having got the worſt of it, went away, and returning in the courſe of an hour (about five o'clock) with a ſtrong reinforcement of his countrymen, armed with broomſticks, bludgeons, pokers, and various other ſorts of weapons, which they brandiſhed in the air, and with violent imprecations, dared the Yankees, as they termed them, to fight. The Americans who were numerous, aſſembled in a body, for their protection, but did not attempt to commit or provoke any breach of the peace. Their forbearance, however only tended to render the Iriſhmen more furious, and they ſhewed every diſpoſition to make an immediate attack. Some of the Americans, induced by the threatening aſpect of affairs, procured from aboard a few weapons, but not ſufficient to arm the whole. This was taken by the ſons of St. Patrick for a challenge to a trial of ſkill with the ſhillela, and they inſtantly made a furious attack on the Americans, who defended themſelves ſtoutly, but were defeated in the end, with broken heads, legs, &c. after a moſt ſevere and bloody conteſt. Upwards of twenty Americans were wounded more or leſs, ſix of them ſo danger-uſly, that they were obliged to be carried off the ground. A young man had his ſkull fractured, and lies without hopes of recovery at the White Hart, Neptune ſtreet, ; one had both his legs broken, and was taken in a hopeleſs ſtate to the London hoſpital; another unfortunate man had one leg broken, and is by no means free from danger. An American captain we underſtand, is among thoſe moſt hurt in the fray. The ſucceſs of the Iriſh made them quite outrageous; after the reſult of the battle was known, reinforcements were conſtantly arriving, who enliſted under the banners of Murtoch Sullivan, their reputed leader.

This ſerious commotion excited general alarm in the neighbourhood, and notice of the proceedings were tranſmitted to the police office in that diſtrict, when Sir D. Williams, Mr. Davies of Lambeth-ſtreet office, and other magiſtrates, aſſembled together with a large poſſe of conſtables, headboroughs, and police officers, and repaired to the ſpot, where the rioters were ſtill together in great numbers. About 40 of the moſt active were apprehended, and lodged in the ſeveral watch houſes in the vicinity of Tower hill. Guards from the volunteer corps in the Diſtrict were placed over them all night.

Yeſterday morning the rioters were eſcorted to Lambeth-ſtreet office, Goodman's Fields, where they underwent an examination, were clearly identified to have taken an active part in the affray; 15 of theſe were fully committed for trial, and eight, who had been leſs violent than the reſt, were ſent on board the Tender. A woman was identified amongſt the crowd on the outſide of the office, as the perſon who gave to an Iriſhman, at the time of the conflict, a claſp knife for a weapon, was taken into cuſtody, examined, and fully committed.

Before the American ſeamen were ſuffered to depart the court, one of the magiſtrates called their attention to a few words he had to ſay. He reminded them of a riot which took place ſome time ago, in the neighbourhood of Wapping, in which ſome American ſeamen were the principal actors. On that occaſion the Americans were found culpable, and puniſhed accordingly. He did not mean to ſay, that any of thoſe preſent were concerned, but he wiſhed to impreſs upon their minds that the laws of this country were equally adminiſtered to perſons of all nations. The Americans were in this inſtance the injured parties, and juſtice ſhould be done them. He was happy to ſay, that from all that appeared, the Americans had conducted themſelves in this unpleaſant affair, with prudence and diſcretion; and any violence that had been manifeſted by them was only in their own defence. He concluded by exhorting them on all future occaſions to act with prudence and due forbearance, and they would be ſure to meet with the ſame reſpect and protection from the laws as Britiſh ſubjects.

An article in one of our late French papers, dated from Berlin, May 12, ſays, "Doctor Jungius, who underſtook the firſt aerial voyage in Germany, will, in a few days, make a new aſcenſion. He intends to go as far as the wind will carry him. He will take but very little ballaſt, and will fill his gondola with geeſe, pigeons and other winged animals, which he means to let looſe with labels at ſuch intervals as he may find it expedient to lighten the machine."

The following particulars are extracted from a letter written by captain Boyntion, of the Leviathane, off Cape Trafalgar, October 23, to the Patriotic Fund Committee in London:

"I muſt further intrude on your time by relating a trifling anecdote of one of my men, the captain of the forecaſtle, as it will ſerve to ſhew the enthuſiaſm of a Britiſh ſeaman when fighting with the enemies of his country: We had paſſed through the line, and had aſſiſted in diſabling and ſilencing the French Admiral's ſhip, and the four deckar, Santiſſima Trinidada; we were much galled by a diſtant cannonade, from a ſeparated few of the enemies ſhips; at laſt, the Saint Auguſtin, of 74 guns, bearing the pendant of Commodore Cagigal, gave us an opportunity of cloſing with him, which was immediately embraced, and he was ſoon taken. While this was doing, a ſhot took off the arm of Thomas Main, when at his gun on the forecaſtle; his meſmates kindly offered to aſſiſt him in going to the ſurgeon; but he bluntly ſaid, "I thank you ſtay where you are, you will do more good there," he went down by himſelf to the cock pit. The ſurgeon (who reſpected him) would willingly have attended him, in preference to others, whoſe wounds were leſs alarming; but Main would not admit of it ſaying, "Avaſt, not until it comes my turn if you pleaſe." The Surgeon ſoon after amputated the ſhattered part of the arm, near the ſhoulder; during which, with great compoſure, ſmiling, and with a ſteady clear voice, he ſung the whole of Rule Britannia. The cheerfulneſs of this rough ſon of Neptune, has been of infinite uſe in keeping up the ſpirits of his wounded ſhipmates, and I hope this recital may be of ſervice to him."

"I am ſorry to inform you, that the above-mentioned fine fellow died ſince writing the above, at the Gibraltar Hoſpital, of a fever he caught, when the ſtump of his arm was nearly well.

H. B."

KINGSTON, (Jamaica) May 24.

A Court-Martial was held on Monday on board the Surveillante frigate, at Port Royal, for the trial of four ſeamen (belonging to that veſſel, for mutinous conduct while in a ſmall prize at St. Andreas, and endeavouring to deſert with her to the enemy. The charge being fully proved, they were ſentenced to be hung. Two of them were executed yeſterday morning on board the frigate, and the two others have been reſpited till further orders from the Admiralty.

During the late cruize of the Arethuſa frigate, after ſhe had thrown her guns overboard to enable her to get off the Colorado, ſhe fell in with a Spaniſh 74 gun ſhip, ſuppoſed to be the San Lorenzo, going from the Havanna to La Vera Cruz. Capt. Briſbane, having ſummoned his men on deck, and repreſented to them the ſituation of his ſhip, offered to lay the Arethuſa alongſide the enemy, that they might attempt to carry her by boarding, to which they one and all conſented with three cheers and the frigate actually gave chace to the flying foe, and compelled her to ſeek for ſafety under the batteries of the Morro.

New York, July 17.

Jamaican Society.—From the London Courier of the 20th May, we copy the following account of the Anniverſary Dinner of the Jamaican Society. As the ſubject is very intereſting, and calculated to ſubſerve the cauſe of humanity, we preſume it will be acceptable to our readers.

The Jamaican Society's annual dinner was held on Saturday laſt, at the London Tavern, Biſhopſgate-ſtreet. The meeting was uncommonly numerous, upwards of 300 perſons being preſent. About ſeven o'clock the Duke of York took the chair. His Royal Highneſs was accompanied by the Earls of Westmorland and Egremont, and ſeveral other perſons of rank and diſtinction.

The Duke ſtated, that he had always been a warm advocate of the Vaccine ſyſtem, which he had no doubt, would ultimately triumph over the many illiberal attempts made to bring this glorious diſcovery into diſrepute. Loud and reiterated applauſe attended his Royal Highneſs's ſpeech.

Dr. Lettſom, from various documents, read to him by the Duke of the funds of the ſociety. From theſe papers, that the expenditure during the laſt year had conſiderably exceeded the income, clearly appeared.

The Rev. Rowland Hill ſpoke with great eloquence in ſupport of the vaccine ſyſtem. He ſtated that he had himſelf adminiſtered the operation to 1600 perſons in the courſe of the preceding year. He proteſted before God, that although he had inoculated of the variolic matter into many thouſands, he never knew it to fail.

Dr. Jenner's health was next drank. The Doctor returned thanks, and complimented the illuſtrious Chairman for the ſpeech he had made on the ſubject of Vaccination. He alſo thanked his friend, Doctor Lettſom, for the very important information he had conveyed to the ſociety. The Doctor added, that he continued to receive the moſt ſtarling information from every part of the globe reſpecting the progreſs of Vaccination. It had pervaded all parts of the civiliſed world, from the Ganges to the Miſſiſſippi. He, continued he, "is it not a matter of regret that here, in this metropolis, in the centre of the Britiſh Empire, vaccination proceeds with a languiſhing pace and languiſhes!" To what cauſe was this failure to be aſcribed, aſked Dr. Jenner, but to the inſidious efforts of a few intereſted individuals, who, by diſtributing their diabolic productions, too well ſucceeded in contaminating the minds of the lower orders of ſociety. He ſtated, that he had avoided taking any further notice of the many pamphlets publiſhed againſt the Vaccine Syſtem, as the talk of refutation had been ſo ably performed by many enlightened philanthropic individuals, both in and out of the profeſſion. "There is one point," ſaid the Doctor, "I wiſh to explain, namely, a charge of a ſpecific nature brought againſt me in one of their publications, who, as I am informed, as having failed in a ſeries of inoculation in the Weſt of England. I think it incumbent on me to declare, that not one ſingle individual therein mentioned, and who is ſubſequently ſaid to have had the ſmall-pox, was ever inoculated by me."

Mr. King, and ſeveral other Medical Gentlemen, ſpoke in ſupport of the Vaccine Syſtem. About 9 o'clock, the Duke of York retired. On the departure of the Duke, Lord Egremont took the chair. His Lordſhip ſpoke full half an hour in ſupport of the practice of Vaccine inoculation, and ſtated that he had ſupported it from its earlieſt infancy, having in the year 1799 introduced it at a village near his ſeat at Petworth. Since that period thouſands had been vaccinated in his own houſe, wherein he always retained a ſurgeon and apothecary for the expreſs purpoſe.

He never knew an inſtance of its failure.—The meeting did not break up until a very late hour. Among the company were the Neapolitan Ambaſſador, the Prince Caſtelcicala, David Scott, Eſq. M. P. Colonel Mathews, M. P. Mr. Bankes, &c. &c.

The ſubſcriptions on this occaſion were very liberal. The Duke of York gave fifty guineas. From the report it appeared that the number of perſons inoculated, at the different Stations, up to the 20th of February laſt, amounted to 19,491.

PHILADELPHIA, July 24.

On Sunday the 6th inſt. Capt. Patterſon being in the harbor of St. Thomas, where it had been rumoured for ſome days paſt, that the French fleet under a French Admiral, Jerome Bonaparte commanding one of the ſhips, intended to deſtroy the Britiſh merchantmen, conſiſting of near 200 ſail then arrived at Tortola, in order to collect the remaining ſhips that were to proceed to Europe, which occaſioned conſiderable alarm in the iſland.

At about 12 o'clock a large ſhip hove in ſight and another followed—and they continued following till ſix ſail of the line were in ſight and one frigate; they in paſſing hewed no colours, except one with a tri-colored flag at her fore top-maſt head, they had all ſail ſet; an Engliſh frigate followed them, cloſe on their heels, and ſoon after four Britiſh ſail of the line followed them, and as they paſſed ſhewed their colors—not being aſhamed of them.

The French went through the ſail Rock paſſage, and ſtood to the northward, the Britiſh fleet hove too, not for any diſtreſs having happened to it, but to wait for two frigates that had not yet joined them; the look-out Britiſh frigate kept up with the French fleet, and was ſome times within gun ſhot. The French fleet were ſeen ſteering with their heads to the north weſt, at the time it left with their heads to the ſouthward.

The French conſiſted in all of 18 guns, two of 74 guns, one a large frigate—the Britiſh of three of 74 guns, one of 64 and three frigates; they were about three leagues apart when the Governor of St. Kitts left them; the two ſtood hauled by the French fleet, and ſtill added about 7 P. M. and left the Envy, of Wilmington, laying too to be overhauled, after ſeveral ſhot being fired at her from the French Admiral's ſhip.—Admiral Cochrane has thus ſo far ſucceeded in driving this fleet off and preſerving Tortola and a valuable fleet of merchantmen.

Bad Weather out riding.—A gentleman riding from Dartford to London, ſaw behind him a great ſhower of rain, and ſeveral travellers, all great coated and wet through. He now put on briſkly, and out-rode the ſhower all the way, ſo that by the time he got to Shooter's hill, it had only reached his horſe's tail, and ſo continued till he got to London, he not being in the leaſt wet by it.

A Singular Converſion.—Within theſe few days, the Curate of a village near London, and one of the overſeers of the parith, a gentleman farmer, had a diſpute reſpecting ſome private buſineſs, and the farmer damned the clergyman's eyes. For this offence he was brought before the magiſtrates, at Marlborough-ſtreet, and convicted in the penalty of 5s. The farmer contended that he was not a gentleman, and that he ought to pay no more than 1s. The objection was over-ruled, as it appeared that he kept his ſporting dogs, and regularly took his wine after dinner. It happened, however, that the clergyman had omitted reading the act againſt profane ſwearing, &c. at the time ſtated by law: the farmer, therefore, returned the compliment, by informing againſt him, and the clergyman was obliged to pay the penalty of 5l.—Lon. pap.

A French Counſellor. A thief was one day diſcovered in the great chamber (a court of Juſtice in Paris) ſtealing a purſe. The court allowed the knave a Counſellor to defend him.—The advocate went up ſtairs to him, and taking him aſide, "Is it true," ſaid he, "that you ſtole the purſe of ſomebody now in court?" "It is very true, Sir, (replied the thief) but——" "Hold your tongue," ſaid the lawyer, "the beſt council I can give you is to ſcamper away as faſt as poſſible." The thief took the hint, and ran down the ſtair-caſe. The counſellor returning afterwards into court, the firſt preſident aſked him, what he had to ſay in defence of his client? "Gentlemen," replied he, "the poor wretch confeſſed his crime to me; and as he was not guarded by any one, and I was appointed his counſel, I thought fit to adviſe him to run away. He did not heſitate, but vaniſhed in an inſtant."

Extract from the Lay Preachers.

"Little children keep yourſelves from Idols!

A number of pretty women of my acquaintance have and will, in ſpite of my admonitions, ſet up a certain ſmoothed laced idol on the top of their toilets. They call it a looking-glaſs, and worſhip it hourly. This is a moſt pernicious idol; a great cheat of their time, and an artful flatterer of their beauty. They frightenmy satire and forget what manner of persons they should prove. They forget the blandishments of the fond husband, and are deaf to the pathetic wailings of the neglected child.—They become impatient of every domestic duty, and are careful alone with much care to be decked in purple, and perfumed with all powders of the merchant. Little Misses! listen to a friend. Break your idol. It is little enough, I assure you. Read instructive books; and sometimes, on a Sunday, sermons: much better ones I mean than those of the Lay Preacher.

The attachment of some French ladies to their lap-dogs, amounts, in some instances, to infatuation. I have heard of a lap-dog biting a piece out of a male visitor's leg: his mistress thus expressed her compassion:—"Poor little dear creature! I hope it will not make him sick!"

A physician went to visit a young lady, daughter of a nobleman. Defiring her arm to feel her pulse, the damsel, from pride, covered the place with her sleeve: the physician also drew down his coat sleeve, and applying it said, "A linen Pulse muft have a woollen Phyſician."

SIR HENRY WOTTON,

In his character of a happy life, has the following beautiful stanzas:

How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill.

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepar'd for death;
Untied unto the world by care,
Of public fame or private breath.

Who envies none that chance doth raise,
Nor vice hath ever understood,
How deepeſt wounds are given by praiſe,
Nor rules of ſtate, but rules of good.

Who hath his life from rumors freed,
Whose conſcience is his ſtrong retreat;
Whoſe ſtate can neither flatterer's feed,
Nor ruin make oppreſſors great.

Who God doth late and early pray
More of his grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmleſs day
With a religious book or friend.

This man is freed from ſervile bands
Of hope to riſe or fear to fall:
Lord of himſelf, tho' not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: GREETING:

WHEREAS it is neceſſary for the Peace and Good Government of the ſaid Province, that all His Majeſty's Officers within the ſame, ſhould continue in their ſeveral Offices and Employments; I have thought fit, by and with the advice and conſent of His Majeſty's Executive Council therein, to iſſue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the ſaid Officers to continue in their ſaid Offices and Employments, of which all Perſons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themſelves accordingly.

IN Teſtemony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty ninth day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſixth year of our Reign.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Fortunate Joke.

Dr. Flamstead was many years Astronomer Royal at Greenwich Observatory; a humorist, and of warm passion: persons of his profession are often supposed, by the vulgar people, to be capable of foretelling events. To this persuasion, a poor walker woman at Greenwhich, who had been robbed one night, of a large parcel of linen, to her almost ruin, if forced to pay for it, came to him, and with great anxiety earnestly requested him to use his art, to let her know where her things were, and who robbed her; the Doctor happened to be in the humour to joke he bid her stay, he would see what he could do, perhaps he might let her know where she might find them; but who the persons were he would not undertake to say, as he could not have any positive proof to convict them, it would be needless. He then set about drawing circles, squares, &c. to amuse her, and after some time told her, if she would go into a particular field, that in such a part of it, in a dry ditch she would find them all bundled up in a sheet: the woman went and came back with great haste and joy to thank the Doctor, and offer him half a crown as a token of gratitude, being as much as she could afford. The Doctor, surprized himself, told her, "Good woman, I am heartily glad you found your things, but I assure you I knew nothing of it, and only intended to joke with you, and then to have read you a lecture on the folly of applying to any person to know events, not in human power to tell; but I see the Devil has a mind I should deal with him—I am determined I will not, so never come, or send any body to me, any more on such occasions, for I never will attempt such another affair again while I live."

This story Dr. Flamstead told the Rev. and learned Mr. Whiston, his intimate friend.

From a London Paper.

Two sailors went into a church at Plymouth, on the Thanksgiving-Day, both of whom belonged to the Temeraire, on the ever memorable battle of Trafalgar. The clergyman, in the course of his sermon, mentioned the words "glorious victory," on which one of the tars observed to the other, 'Hear, Jack, there's the Victory.'—The clergyman pronounced the word "victory," a second time, on which the tar observed, "Mind, Jack, there's the Victory again." The clergyman, not long after mentioned the word "victory," a third time, on which the irritated tar observed to his companion, "D—my eyes, Jack, if we flop here any longer—that fellow has mentioned the Victory three times, and never mentioned the Temeraire, that was in the hottest part of the engagement, and took two ships," when they immediately left the church.

A LAUGHABLE DUEL.

In 1775, at Penfacola, Capt. John Bloomart, of the British Navy, who had senfe and refolution enough to defpife the barbarous practice of dueelling, having received a challenge, accepted it—and time and place were fixed.

Capt. Bloomart immediately employed workmen to caft up a intrenchment, with breaft works—and mounted thereon a large fwivel. On the day of meeting, he was there before his antagonist—having his piece loaded, ammunition prepared, and a fpy glafs and fpeaking-trumpet. Thus accoutered, he, by and by, with the aid of his glafs, difcovered the enemy approaching—and taking up his fpeaking trumpet, hailed him, "Whence came you? and whither bound?"

The man, affrighted, looked round—and after fome time, difcovered the military preparations of his antagonift, at a diftance, with his flow match burning, and all prepared for battle. When he had got over his firft apprehenfion, he began again to advance to the place agreed on for meeting. But he had not gone many paces, when he was again accofted, from the fpeaking-trumpet—"down with your ftayfails, and put about fhip: or, by all that's good, I'll blow you into the Heavens."

This voice and tone fo terrified the fellow that he turned about and ran off, as if Old Nick were in purfuit of him.

LORD RODNEY.

The following Anecdote of the gallant Lord Rodney is given by Mr. Cumberland:

It happened to me to be prefent, and fitting next to Admiral Rodney at table when the thought feemed firft to occur to him of breaking the French line, by paffing through it in the heat of the action. It was at Lord George German's houfe, at Stoneland, after dinner, when having afked a number of queftions about manœuvring of colums and the effect of charging with them on a line of Infantry, he proceeded to arrange a parcel of cherry-ftones, which he had collected from the table, and forming them as two fleets drawn up in a line, and oppofed to each other, he at once arrefted our attention, which had not been very generally engaged by his preparatory enquiries, by declaring that he was determined to pierce the enemy's line of battle (arranging his manœuvre at the fame time on the table) if it ever was his fortune to bring them to action. I dare fay this paffed with fome as mere rhapfody, and all feemed to regard it as a very perilious and doubtful experiment; but landsmen's doubts and difficulties made no impreffion on the Admiral, who having feized the idea, held it faft, and in his eager animated way went on manœuvring his cherry-ftones, and throwing his enemy's repreſentatives into fuch utter confufion, already poffeffed of that victory in imagination, which in reality he lived to gain, he concluded his procefs by fwearing he would lay the French Admiral's flag at his Sovereign's feet; a promife which he actually plegded to his Majefty in his clofet and faithfully and gloriously performed.

He was a ſingu ar and extraordinary man; therewere fome prominent and ſtrikingecce ntricitiesabout him, which, on a firſt aquaintance, might diſm ſs a curſory obſerver with inadequate and falſe impreſſions of his real character; for he would very commonly indulge himſelf in a looſe and heedleſs ſtyle of talking, which, for a time, might intercept and ſcreen from obſervation the ſound good ſenſe which he poſſeſſed, and the ſtrength and dignity of mind that were natural to him. We are apt to ſet that man down as vainglorious and unwiſe, who fights battles over the table, and in the ardour of his converſation, though among enviers and enemies, keeps no watch upon his words, confiding in their candour, and believing them his friends. Such a man was Admiral Lord Rodney, whom hiſtory will record amongſt the foremoſt of our Naval Heroes, k whoever doubts his courage, might as well diſpute againſt the light of the ſun at noon-day. That he carried this projected manœuvre into operation, and that the effect of it was ſucceſsfully deciſive, all the world knows. My friend Sir Charles Douglas, captain of the fleet, confeſſed to me that he himſelf had been adverſe to the experiment, and in diſcuſſing it with the Admiral had ſtated his objections: to theſe he got no anſwer but that "his counſel was not called for; —he required obedience only, he did not want advice."—Sir Charles alſo told me, that while the project was in operation (the battle then raging,) his own attention being then occupied by the gallant defence made by the French Glorieux againſt the ſhips that were pouring their fire into her, upon his crying out—"Behold Sir George, the Greeks and Trojans contending for the body of Patroclus!"—The Admiral, then gazing the quarter deck in great agitation pending the experiment of his manœuvre (which in the inſtance of one ſhip had unavoidably miſcarried,) peeviſhly exclaimed—"Damn the Greeks and Trojans; I have other things to think of."—When in a few minutes after, his ſupporting ſhip having led through the French line in a gallant ſtyle, turning with a ſmile of joy to Sir Charles Douglas, he cried out—"Now, my dear friend, I am at the ſervice of your Greeks and Trojans, and the whole of Homer's Iliad, or as much of it as you pleaſe, for the enemy is in confuſion, and our victory is ſecure."

OF THE LATE GENERAL OYRAY.

This, brave officer, who had been many years in the army with the rank of colonel, was adviſed to preſent a petition to the king, ſtating his age, ſervice, and circumſtances. This he long objected to, but at laſt conſented, and applied to the Chaplain of the regiment to write it. The divine concluded with the uſual words "and your petitioner ſhall ever pray," but to this the general ſhort objected, remarking that, "It would have been proper for a parſon, but was very improper for a ſoldier—I inſiſt, let common forms be what they will, that you ſerve the word, and inſert, and your petitioner will ever fight." It was preſented and he had the firſt vacant regiment.

A party of ſailors, who had been in the battle off Trafalgar, were, a ſhort time ago, met in Plymouth Dock (England) by ſome girls of their acquaintance. "So Ben," ſaid one of the girls, "you have loſt brave NELSON. The dear fellow! He is gone to Heaven I hope."—"Gone to Heaven!" replied Ben, "to be ſure he is—what the h—ll could ſhip him?"

QUEBEC, June 21. 1806.

We think the ſufferings and return of the deſerters who were brought back yeſterday, muſt ſerve as a leſſon to ſhew the impraſtibility of deſerting from this town, with ſucceſs; and the conſequent folly of the attempt. Of four that deſerted from the 100th Regt. three were brought back, and one died in the woods.

June 30.

The buſineſs of the Grand Juries, of the Quarter Seſſions, have been often erroneouſly conducted, and Bills found by majorities of leſs than 12 Jurymen, the following quotation from Blackſtone's Commentaries, Vol. IV, Ch. 23, may ſerve to ſet the matter right for the future.

"To find a bill, there muſt at leaſt twelve of the jury agree: for ſo tender is the law of England of the lives of the ſubjects, that no man can be convicted at the ſuit of the king of any capital offence, unleſs by the unanimous voice of twenty-four of his equals and neighbors: that is, by twelve at leaſt of the grand jury, in the firſt place, aſſenting to accuſation; and afterwards, by the whole petit jury, of twelve more, finding him guilty upon his trial. But, if twelve of the grand jury aſſent, it is a good preſentment, though ſome of the reſt diſagree. And the indictment, when ſo found, is publickly delivered into court."

Extract from the London Gazette, April 5, 1806.

82d. Regiment, or Prince of Wales's Volunteers. Lieutenant Wm. Vincent, from the 49th foot, to be Captain of a company by purchaſe, vice Woolley who retires.

On Sunday diſembarked, from his Majeſty's ſloop of war Driver, his Excellency Francis Gore Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada. He was ſaluted by the Driver, whoſe yards were manned; by the Champion, in full dreſs, as he paſſed her; and by the Garriſon.

Intelligence by the commerce.

The tranſport ſhip Naias, bound for this port, laſt fall, with three companies of the 100th Regiment, Major Bertram, and ſeveral women and children, was unhappily wrecked, on a ſmall iſland to the eaſtward of Cape Ray, on the 23d of October laſt. Thirty four men croſſed over on a raft made from fragments of the wreck to Newfoundland, twenty ſeven of whom periſhed in the woods. The five paſſengers in the Commerce, and two ſeamen, who remained at Newfoundland, are the only ſurvivors of all that ſailed in the Naias. They had the good fortune to be ſaved by their incapacity of continuing their rout with the 27 that periſhed.

Thus, melancholy to relate! were about 230 ſouls, the greater part in the prime of life, full of health, comelineſs vigour and ſpirits, ſuddenly ingulphed in the briny waves, a prey to the voracious monſters of the deep. Major Bertraman, it is ſaid, before he went to the bottom, had one of his arms broke in three places. He diſcovered much manlineſs and preſence of mind, exhorting all to die like ſoldiers. Great and perſevering efforts were made to ſave him, he having been held, for a conſiderable time by the hair of his head, but exhauſted nature at laſt gave way.

The realms of death, by fate, doom'd to explore,
He ſunk, untimely ſunk, to riſe no more.
Fortune perverſe! the young, the bold, the brave,
Paſſing for fame, to find a watry grave.

As an expreſſion of their grief, for this melancholy event, all the officers of the regiment, in garriſon here, have put on mourning, by wearing crape.

As this is not the only tranſport of the ſame fleet, that periſhed, by a late laſt paſſage, on a tempeſtuous and inclement coaſt, it is hoped that the tranſport board, and all on whom the tranſport ſervice depends, will, from fatal experience, learn wiſdom. It was not without much difficulty and danger that the tranſports which arrived reached their deſtined port. They were very near ſharing the ſame fate of the Naias and Two Friends.

Major Chriſtopher Dawſon late 26th Foot.

It will be a circumſtance gratifying to the friends of the late Major Dawſon of the 26th Foot, who periſhed on the Goodwin Sands, on the 16th of December laſt, in the Eurora Tranſport and a tribute due from a brother officer to his reſpected memory, to mention, that, as he lived reſpected, ſo he died univerſally regretted by every individual of the corps. He was a man of tender probity and the ſtricteſt honor, poſſeſſed of an excellent good heart, a humane feeling, and generous diſpoſition, and a very good officer.—His death will be as ſincerely lamented, as his loſs will be long felt by the corps to which he belonged.

DIED.—At Montreal the 21ſt inſt. John Chew Eſquire, Secretary of Indian affairs, as a young man of the ſtricteſt honor and moſt unconteſtable integrity, he was an example to youth of Canada; as a dutiful ſon and an affectionate brother his loſs is irreparable; as a ſteady friend, as a cheerful companion, and as an honeſt man, his death is keenly felt, and will long be regretted by thoſe who had an opportunity of knowing his worth.

MARRIED.

EPIGRAM

Britiſh Janet agreed with ſoft Lubin to wed,
And dowdy the nymph to the altar he led.
Returning and chattering he ſeem'd indiſpoſ'd,
He hung down his head and his eye ſtole he cloſ'd.
"I'm afraid, my dear Janet, I am greatly to blame,
"I've been guilty of ſome what I hardly dare name;
"Hitherto I the matter, with care, have conceal'd,
"But ſooner or later it muſt be reveal'd."
"Good Heaven!" ſays Janet, what's the ſecret behind?
"You alarm me, pray ſpeak, this is very unkind!"
"Oh," ſays he, "I'd a child ere my Janet I knew,"
"One chink!" exclaims ſhe, "Sure, Sir I've had Two."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, 30th August, 1806.

On Saturday the 23d inſtant, arrived here His Excellency FRANCIS GORE, Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of His Majeſty's Province of Upper Canada.—His Excellency landed at twelve o'clock, with the honours due to his rank: and was ſworn into office at the Government buildings on Monday laſt.

On Wedneſday the 27th inſt. Wm. Weekes, Eſq. Member of Parliament, for the County of York, Durham and Simcoe, on the part of the Inhabitants of the Home Diſtrict, preſented to his Excellency the following address:

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE, Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE, His Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, the Inhabitants of the Home Diſtrict, beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your ſafe arrival in this Province; and to expreſs to you the unfeigned aſſurance of our unſhaken loyalty and attachment to His Majeſty's perſon and Government. We alſo beg leave to add, that, we feel the moſt lively gratification in obſerving in your Excellency's appointment, the high prerogative of Regal authority unconnected with a Military eſtabliſhment: and we indulge ourſelves in the hope of experiencing, in your Adminiſtration of this Government, the paternal ſolicitude of a Gracious Sovereign for the proſperity of the Province, in uniſon with the affections of a grateful people.

In approaching your Excellency, with a zealous attachment to a Conſtitution, which neither innovation can impair, nor anarchy deform, we lament our being under the neceſſity of ſtating to you, that, ſince the eſtabliſhment of it in this Country, its ſyſtem has been miſtaken, and its energy miſuſed.—In ſituations in which it were matter of dignity, as well as of duty, to promote the public good, private intereſt only has been regarded; and prerogative and privilege have been indiſcriminately ſacrificed at the ſhrine of arbitrary impoſition.

We would willingly remove from our memory every impreſſion of former occurrences, if it were as eaſy to forget our ſufferings, as to ſubmit to them in ſilence; but we forbear at this period to ſolicit your Excellency's attention to their detail, pleaſed as we are in the expectation that a remembrance of the paſt, will ſtand only as a contraſt to the felicity of future times; and that under your Excellency's Adminiſtration, neither weak capacities, nor erring minds, will gain influence, or aſcendency, in the Councils of the Province.

It is unneceſſary for us to ſtate, nor is your Excellency now to learn, that the inſtitution of the Government, from which we receive a hereditary protection, has antiquity for its origin, and the wiſdom of ages for its ſupport;—That it has gained celebrity with time, and perfection with experience, and that any deviation from its principles muſt be an abandonment to our ruin: but we truſt it may not be deemed irrelevant to ſuggeſt, that many among us have ſupported it at the hazard of their lives, and at the expence of their property—that others have reſorted to it from choice, and have afforded to its eſtabliſhment the labor of their years, and the gleanings of their induſtry—and that it is the common concern of all to tranſmit it unimpaired from age to age, until, in the computation of its enjoyment, perpetuity and age become ſynonimous to our poſterity.

Signed by 301 Inhabitants of the Home Diſtrict.

To which his Excellency was pleaſed to return the following anſwer:

GENTLEMEN,

I thank you for your Congratulations on my ſafe arrival in this Province; and I receive with pleaſure your profeſſions of Attachment to His Majeſty's Perſon and Government.

I highly approve the ſentiments you profeſs of the Britiſh Conſtitution. My utmoſt endeavours ſhall be exerted to Adminiſter it here with Impartiality, and to preſerve it from Anarchy and Innovation.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the fourth day of August, to be commenced, held, called and dated, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the First day of August, We thought fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the Eleventh day of September next, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the thirteenth day of October next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of August in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our reign.

F. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of his Honor the President in Council, to Military Claimants who were resident in this Province, on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein, since that period, and who as yet have not laid their Claims before the Executive Government for the portion of Lands allowed by his Majesty's instructions to persons of that description, that such Military Claimants shall be admitted to apply for such portion of Lands, under the like privileges as if they had made application previous to the said 28th day of July 1798. PROVIDED that the Military Claimant making such application, shall by his own Affidavit, as well as by the Affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province, that he the said Claimant was resident in this Province on or before the said 28th day of July 1798, and since that period hath continued to reside therein, which said Affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lt. Governor or Person Administering the Government, in Council for such Lands.

JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the President in Council, that the personal attendance of the Sons of U. E. Loyalists at the Seat of Government for the purpose of applying for the Lands to which they are entitled under His Majesty's instructions, will in future be dispensed with: PROVIDED that the Person making such application shall by his own affidavit, and also by the affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions, make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province that "he, the person making "the said application, is the Son of a "U. E. Loyalist, (specifying the name "and place of abode of his Father) & "that he hath attained the full age of "Twenty-one years," which said affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person administering the Government in Council for such Lands.—It is further hereby notified, that the above dispensation from personal attendance at the seat of Government is not to extend to the sons of U. E. loyalists who reside in the Home District, they not being subject to like inconveniences with persons of that description inhabiting the more distant parts of this Province. JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN; GREETING:

WHEREAS it is necessary for the Peace and Good Government of the said Province, that all His Majesty's Officers within the same, should continue in their several Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to issue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the said Officers to continue in their said Offices and Employments, of which all Persons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

IN Testemony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trully and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our Reign.

Lateſt Intelligence.

GIBRALTAR, May 24.

Among the numerous atchievements of the Britiſh navy, the following will vie in brilliancy with the moſt celebrated.—On the 7th April, the Sirius frigate, Capt. Prowſe, of 36 guns, and 260 men, gave chaſe to, and came up with a French ſquadron, compoſed of the ſhip La Bergere, of eighteen 12 pounders, one 32 pound carronade, and 170 men; brig L'Abeille, eighteen 9 pounders, two 36 carronades and 110 men; brig La Laguerie, twelve 9 pounders, 72 men; brig La Janus, twelve 9 pounders 78 men; La Victorie, twelve 18, and two 68-pound carronades, 76 men; La Gracioſe, four 4-pounders, and one 36 pound carronade, 37 men; La Jalouſie, four 4 pounders, one 36 pound carronade and 53 men; La Gentille, four 4 pounders, one 36 pound carronade, and 36 men; La Provincale, four 4-pounders, one 36-pound carronade, and 49 men. Total French ſquadron, 93 guns and carronades and 661 men;—bound from Civita Vechia, along ſhore for Naples. The action commenced within piſtol ſhot; the water being ſmooth all the enemy's guns told.—Several of the ſmaller craft, having received damage, ran for the ſhore; the ſhip and three brigs continued the action; until at length the ſhip ſtruck and the brigs eſcaped.—The ſhip is carried into Malta. The French had 50 killed and wounded.—Our loſs is heavy, being 9 killed and 20 wounded.—Among the killed was Mr. Adair, nephew of the Captain of the Sirius, and brother to Capt. Adair of the marines, who was killed on board the Victory with Lord Nelſon, in the immortal battle off Trafalgar.

Copy of an enclofure from the Earl of St. Vincent, K.B. Admiral and Commander in Chief of his Majeſty's fleet in the Channel, to William Marſden Eſq. dated on board the Hibernia, off Ushant, the 27th of laſt month.

His Majeſty's ſhip Pallas, St. Martin's Road, Iſle Ree, May 10.

SIR,

The French trade having been kept in port of late, in a great meaſure by their knowledge of the exact ſituation of his Majeſty's cruizers, conſtantly announced at the ſignal poſts, it appeared to me to be ſome object, as there was nothing better in view, to endeavour to ſtop this practice, Accordingly the two poſts at La Pointe de la Roche, were demoliſhed; next that of Caſſous; then two in L'Anſe de Repos, one of which Lieut. Haſwell and Mr. Hillier, the gunner, took in a neat ſtyle from upwards of one hundred militia. The marines and boat's crews behaved exceedingly well; all the flags have been brought off, and the houſes built by government burnt to the ground. Yeſterday too the ſignal of Lieut. Norton, of the Firſt Cutter, and Lieut. Gregory, of the Caſtell gun brig, induced them to volunteer to ſtorm the battery, on Point d'Equillon, while we ſhould attack it by land in the rear, but it was carried at once; and one of fifty men, who were ſtationed to throw thirty ſix pounders, were made priſoners, the reſt eſcaped. The battery is laid in ruins, guns ſpiked, carriages burnt, barracks and magazine blown up, and all the ſhells thrown into the ſea. The ſignal poſt of L'Equillon, together with the houſe, ſhared the fate of the gun-carriages; the convoy got into a river beyond our reach.—Lieut. Mapleton, Mr. Sutherland the maſter, and Mr. Hillier, who, as they do on all occaſions, as they did at this time whatever was in their power, for his Majeſty's ſervice.—The Petty Officers, ſeamen and marines, fully ſuſtain the opinion that their country has before reaſon to form; yet it would be inexcuſable were not the names of the Quartermaſters, Burden and Cofins, particularly mentioned, as men highly deſerving any favor that can be ſhewn to the line to which they belong.

I have, &c.

LONDON, June 7.

Mrs. Thomas Hope's (a Banker's wife) firſt Aſſembly,

Was given on the evening of the King's Birth Day, at her houſe in Ducheſs St. Portland Place. The party exceeded 1500 faſhionables, including their Royal Highneſſes the Prince of Wales, Dukes of Cumberland, Cambridge and Glouceſter. Thirteen ſtate apartments were thrown open on this occaſion, namely—1ſt, the anti-room, fitted up a la Grecque; 2d the black velvet, or King Henry the VIIIth's room; 3d, the blue, or Etruſcan room, the walls and ceiling of this apartment being compoſed of a blue ground, and furniſhed with a crimſon ſatin; 4th, the ſtar room, which is fitted up to reſemble the ſtarry proſpect in the celeſtial regions; 5th, the Ottoman room, or boudoir; the ceiling of this room is ſtrict coſtume, as repreſenting the awning over a Turkiſh tent; 6th, the dining room, furniſhed a l'Egyptienne, the chairs, tables, ſideboards and pedeſtals, all being compoſed of the moſt beautiful mahogany, inlaid with ebony: in this room are the fineſt mahogany antique candelabras in the known world; 7th, the drawing-room, compoſed of bronze and gold furniture, magnificent mirrors of vaſt magnitude, candelabras, tripods, and two real gold chandeliers, or Grecian lamps, richly chaſed; 8th, the ſtatue gallery, illuminated by an immenſe number of ſilver lamps with patent burners; 9th, the picture gallery illuminated in the ſame ſtyle, 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th were the wing-rooms, ſo called from their occupying the angles of the building—theſe were all in the Grecian ſtyle.

The company began to arrive at eleven o'clock.—About one, what was called a Sand-wich ſupper, was ſet on in different rooms. The ſupper in fact, conſiſted of every delicacy, viz.—the fineſt wines and rareſt wines, which were ſerved in profuſion. On this occaſion were diſplayed ſeveral very large gold cups, reſembling vaſes. There were many other articles of gold, plate diſplayed, particularly ſeveral gold candleſticks with branched lights. In the hall were ſtationed twelve ſervants in rich ſtate liveries, and the large number of attendants out of livery lined the great ſtair-caſe. About twelve o'clock the celebrated band of Milaneſe muſicians arrived from Mr. Angerſtein's houſe in Pall-Mall, where a grand entertainment was given by that gentleman to the Princeſs of Wales.—Many of the diſtinguiſhed fashionables came from thence at a late hour. It was not until 5 o'clock in the morning that the party broke up.

TRIAL OF LORD MELVILLE.

Agreeably to the notice ſent from the Lords to the Commons on Tueſday, that their lordſhips would proceed further in the trial of lord Viſcount Melville this day, that Houſe, attended by their Speaker, were in the High Court of Parliament, Weſtminſter Hall, this morning exactly at ten o'clock. In conſequence, however, of a diſcuſſion which previouſly took place in the Houſe of Peers, it was not till half after eleven o'clock that the proceſſion of their lordſhips to the Hall took place; and it was twelve before the cuſtomary formalities of opening the Court had been gone through.

The ten articles of Impeachment were read, and the queſtion of guilty, or not guilty? was put ſeverally & reſpectively upon each of them to each Peer, beginning with the junior Baron, each Peer laying his right hand upon his left breaſt, & ſaying to each article "Guilty," or "Not Guilty, upon my honor."

The following are the diviſions on the different Articles:

On the firſt Article, charging him with applying 10,000l. of the public money to his own uſe, previous to Jan. 1786:—Not Guilty 120—Guilty 15.

On the ſecond Article, charging him with permitting Alexander Trotter to apply ſums of the public money to his own uſe, and repreſenting the ſwearing over a Turkiſh teſt; 6th, the dining room, furniſhed a l'Egyptienne, the chairs, tables, ſideboards and pedeſtals, all being compoſed of the moſt beautiful mahogany, inlaid with ebony: in this room are the fineſt mahogany antique candelabras in the known world; 7th, the drawing-room, compoſed of bronze and gold furniture, magnificent mirrors of vaſt magnitude, candelabras, tripods, and two real gold chandeliers, or Grecian lamps, richly chaſed; 8th, the ſtatue gallery, illuminated by an immenſe number of ſilver lamps with patent burners; 9th, the picture gallery illuminated in the ſame ſtyle, 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th were the wing-rooms, ſo called from their occupying the angles of the building—theſe were all in the Grecian ſtyle.

The following are the diviſions on the different Articles:

On the firſt Article, charging him with applying 10,000l. of the public money to his own uſe, previous to Jan. 1786:—Not Guilty 120—Guilty 15.

On the ſecond Article, charging him with permitting Alexander Trotter to apply ſums of the public money to his own uſe, and conniving at ſuch fraudulent application:—Not Guilty 79—Guilty 57.

On the third Article, permitting Alexander Trotter to draw public money from the Bank, and place it in the hands of his Bankers, Meſſrs. Coutts & Co. in his own name, and at his own diſpoſal:—Not Guilty 84—Guilty 53.

On the fourth Article, charging him with ſimilar connivance, in reſpect of public money placed by ſaid Trotter in the hands of Mink Spott, for the purpoſe of private emolument:—Not Guilty Unanimouſly.

On the fifth Article, charging him the ſame as in the firſt Article, only ſaying the Act ſubſequent to Jan. 1806:—Not Guilty 131—Guilty 4.

On the ſixth Article, charging him with receiving public money from Alexander Trotter, and devoting it to his own uſe, and with participating with ſaid Trotter in the profit made of the public money:—Not Guilty 86—Guilty 47.

On the ſeventh Article, charging him with receiving 22,000l. of the public money, without intereſt, from Alexander Trotter:—Not Guilty 81—Guilty 41.

On the eighth Article, charging him with receiving from Alexander Trotter 22,000l. of the public money, for which he defendant was to pay intereſt:—Not Guilty 100—Guilty 30.

On the ninth Article, charging that while the ſaid Alexander Trotter tranſacted the buſineſs of the defendant as his Agent, he, the ſaid Trotter, was from time to time in advance, to the ſaid Viſcount Melville, in that reſpect, to the amount of from 10 to 20,000l. which ſums were partly taken from the public money and partly from a mixed fund of public and private money:—Not Guilty 116—Guilty 16.

On the tenth and laſt Article, charging him with taking at ſeveral times between 1782, and 1784, and between 1784 and 1786, 27,000l. of the public money, and converting the ſame to his private uſe:—Not Guilty 123—Guilty 12.

The Lord Chancellor then informed the Noble Defendant, that, he was Acquitted on all the charges; and the Court broke up.

The Gazette contains an account of the capture of the Spaniſh ſchooner El Virgin del Carmen, off Cadiz, by the Niger, Hillyar; the Spaniſh ſchooner Santa Clara, by two boats, manned by a part of the crew of the Pique, capt. Ross; alſo by the ſame ſhip Pique, the Phaeton, and Voltigeur, two French brigs of war, with 10 guns and 120 men each. The two French brigs were obſtinately defended, and the Pique, we are ſorry to announce, had 9 officers and men killed, and 14 wounded in the action; Le Creole, French privateer, of 14 guns and 59 men, by the Rem Deer capt. Fyffe.

Extract from the new Dutch Monarchical conſtitution.

"The King ſhall have, excluſively, and without reſtriction, the complete exercife of the government, and all the power neceſſary to ſecure the execution of the laws, and to cauſe them to be reſpected. He has the nomination to all the charges and offices, civil and military, which, according to anterior laws, were veſted in the grand Penſionary. He likewiſe enjoys the pre-eminence and the prerogatives hitherto attached to that dignity. The coin of the ſtate ſhall bear his image. Juſtice ſhall be adminiſtered in his name. He has the right of granting pardon, abolition, or the mitigation of the pains pronounced by judiciary awards; nevertheleſs, he ſhall not be authoriſed to exerciſe this right, but after having heard the members of the national court in his privy council.

"The government of the Colonies, and every thing relative to their internal regulation, belong excluſively to the King.

"The Law is eſtabliſhed in Holland by the concurrence of the legiſlative body, formed of the aſſembly of their High Mightineſſes, and by the King. The legiſlative body is compoſed of 38 members, elected for five years.

"To complete the number of members authoriſed by the foregoing article their High Mightineſſes ſhall preſent to his Majeſty, a liſt of two candidates for each of the vacant places. The King ſhall make the election out of the candidates propoſed."

NATCHEZ, July 1.

The following very extraordinary circumſtance occurred a few days ſince. If the Advocates for duelling were compelled to ſettle their "affairs of honor" in a ſimilar manner, ſubſtituting a common hang-man to terminate the ſcene in place of a foe to one of the parties, it is probable the practice would ſoon become leſs faſhionable.

At about two o'clock P. M. an Indian was diſcovered by the family gotening the ſouth end of Col. Chaulit's lane. He drew their attention, being painted in an uncommon manner, his whole body appeared red; he held in his right hand a gun, which he brandiſhed with many geſticulations, in his left a bottle; he was attended by two other Indians, in rather a ſober pace—At the oppoſite end of the lane ſome more Indians were diſcovered, among whom was a man, painted in like manner, but unarmed; he was held and detained by a woman—but when the one brandiſhing his gun came within about 20 ſteps of him, he burſt from the embrace of his wife, and rallied towards his antagoniſt—at about four yards diſtance they both halted, when the unarmed one preſented his naked breaſt to the other, who took deliberate aim, but appearing to recollect himſelf, he dropt his gun, took a drink from the bottle, which was tied to his wriſt—the other patiently and reſolutely bolding his breaſt open and preſented all this time, having finiſhed his drink, and gave a whoop, he took fresh aim, & in an inſtant the other dropt almoſt at his feet;—this done, he handed his gun with all poſſible ſpeed, gave it to a bye ſtander (ſon to the deceaſed.) he then in turn bared and preſented his breaſt, and was inſtantaneouſly ſent into eternity.

The dead bodies were carried each the way they had come, and by their reſpective friends interred one at each end of the lane; the wife and relatives of the unarmed one, who was firſt killed howled over his remains three days & nights, they then diſappeared—on Friday laſt they returned again, fired ſeveral guns on approaching the grave, gave a general howl about 2 quarter of an hour and retired.

We learned from ſome among them who ſpeaks broken Engliſh, that they had quarrelled over a bottle ſome conſiderable time ago, when the Indian who was firſt killed had had his finger bit by the other in ſuch a manner that his arm inflamed; he declared he was "ſpoiled," and that they muſt both die, they agreed and formed the arrangement as related.

BOSTON, July 30.

DIED]—In Kingſton (Eng.) Mr. T. Lloyd, 2d Lieut. of the Dreadnought, man of war: While on a party of pleaſure with ſome brother officers, in the height of good humour, he requeſted his companions to go with him to the church-yard, and ſee a ſpot where he ſhould like to have his body interred. They went; and though in apparent good health at the time, he was taken with a complaint in the bowels, died a few hours after, and was interred in the ſpot he had pointed out, agreeable to his deſire.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.

Capt. Wanting, of the brig Farmer, arrived here on the 28th ult. hauriſhes the following intereſting information:

St. Kitt's, July 8.

This morning a ſloop arrived here from Monſerat, with intelligence of the arrival of a French ſquadron of ſix ſail of the line and one frigate at that iſland, under the command of Admiral Williſaumes, who has as pupil and ſecond in command, Jerome Bonaparte; a boat was ſent on ſhore, and demanded the ſhipping in the road, which were immediately delivered up; they conſiſted of three ſhips and one brig.

The ſhipping at Nevis, in this road, got under weigh with all poſſible expedition, and proceeded to Brimſtone hill where they found the fleet had left that at ten o'clock, they purſued their way home.

The French ſquadron hove in ſight about noon (which put the inhabitants in great conſternation, bundling all their effects to the plantations) ſteering towards Briſtone hill, having in tow the ſhip ——, obtained from Monſerat, they were off this garriſon in the afternoon, when in gun-ſhot a fire was opened upon them, which they returned by a few broad-ſides on the few ſhips that remained under the hill.

On Friday the 4th inſt. they were at St. Martins, and left there the ſame evening for Tortola, with the intention, as they ſaid, "to deſtroy the ſhipping and burn the town, in order to root out that neſt of pirates and privateersmen."

On Saturday the 5th inſt. they were ſeen by a Britiſh brig of war off Spaniſh Town; the ſame day a Britiſh ſquadron of four ſail of the line and ſeveral frigates, under command of Admiral Cochrane, were ſeen under a heavy preſs of ſail, ſteering for Tortola, ſix hours after of the French ſquadron; they doubtleſs will come together on Sunday the 6th.

The ſchooner Margaret Tingey, capt. Newcomb, arrived at the Lazaretto, Philadelphia, on Friday, in 17 days from Martinique, via St. Thomas. In the Gulph Stream Capt. N. was boarded by the Britiſh frigate Fortune, who ſaid he had cut off 24 ſail of droggers from Samana, and deſtroyed them at ſea, as alſo two other veſſels, one of them loaded with coffee; and that the frigate, with ſix ſail of the line, were convoy to a fleet of 272 merchantmen, from the Weſt Indies, bound to Europe, &c. then in ſight, and through which Capt. N. had paſſed.

Capt. Evans, arrived at this port from Antigua, was brought to, about the 22d July, in lat. 28 deg. long. 67 deg. by a Britiſh ſquadron commanded by Vice Admiral Sir John Borlace Warren, conſiſting of ſix ſhips of the line, a frigate and two brigs, ſteering to the northward, in purſuit of the French ſquadron.

NOTE.

Admiral Warren's ſquadron, conſiſting of the Foudroyant, of 84 guns; (flag ſhip) Hero, 74, Capt. Gardner; Fame, 74, Capt. Bennet; Courageux, 74, Capt. Billett; Namur, 74, Captain Halſtead; Ramilies, 74, Capt. Pickmore; Amazon, 38, Capt. Parker; Saracin ſloop, 18, Capt. Prevoſt; and Moucheran brig, 16, Capt. Hawes; ſailed from St Helen's (England) the 4th June, with ſealed orders; but ſuppoſed in queſt of Jerome Bonaparte.—The force of the ſquadron ſeen about the 22d July by Capt. Evans, agrees exactly with the force above ſtated.—On the 25th July, the ſquadron under Williſaumes and Jerome Bonaparte was in lat. 32 deg. 30 min. long. 72 deg.—So that on that day, it is probable, the above ſquadron was not far in the rear of the French.—The French ſquadron conſiſts of the Foudroyant 84 guns, Le Veteran 74, L'Eole 74, Le Cirtard 74, Le Patriote 74, Le Jupiter 74, and a 40 gun frigate.—It is ſingular, that the flag-ſhip in both ſquadrons ſhould bear the ſame name, and be of the ſame rate.

[Boſton Centinel.

Captain Farmer of the ſhip Waſhington, from New Orleans, was boarded off Havannah by the Britiſh brig Port Mahon, the lieutenant of which veſſel informed him he had received intelligence from the Commander of a New-York brig from Leghorn, that Admiral Collingwood had recently captured and ſent into Gibraltar 8 French ſhips of the line, and that he (the captain of the brig) ſaw them laying there in the Roads. The brig had arrived at Engliſh Town in a very ſhort paſſage.—

FROM A LONDON PAPER.

Bonaparte.——The following brief sketch of this modern King-maker, is copied from a late European publication:

"Poſſeſſed from nature of a reſtleſs and ambitious ſoul, he has let ſlip no opportunity of promoting his intereſts, and lifting himſelf up from the loweſt ranks of life. He has been the child of fortune, and yet he has left nothing to fortune that he could effect by his activity and his intrigues. He had triumphed over all his rivals? for in a military government, ſuch as that in which he contended, the chief power often becomes the prize of the moſt daring and crafty, while other qualities are of no account. His unſocial mind inceſſantly revolves new ſchemes of ambition, which he diſcloſes and proſecutes with the moſt conſummate diſſimulation. Order and humanity and good faith, are continually in his mouth; while in every ſtep of his career, he tramples without regard on theſe ſacred names. Though enthuſiaſtically deſirous of the character of a hero, he poſſeſſes no liberality of ſoul; and in all his tranſactions, in vain do we ſearch for a noble and generous deed. The cruelties he has committed are of a new kind in this civiliſed age; the relation of them would fill the ſoul with horror. His abilities have occaſionally called for many praiſes, and much admiration; but a man that in his deſigns and actions conſtantly diſregards thoſe principles of juſtice and uprightneſs which regulate the conduct of other men, always appears to poſſeſs higher abilities than he actually has;—his actions, having no reſtraint or barrier are prompt, for he conſults only his power. But diveſted of principle, his wiſdom is only craft, and his bravery is the daring of a robber. By ſome he has been compared to the illuſtrious Caeſar but he has not the generous nature of that extraordinary man; and his military ſkill ſinks into nothing before the tranſcendent genius of the Dictator of Rome. It is difficult to find a reſemblance of him, except we go to the countries of the Eaſt, where ſometimes riſe to view thoſe diſturbers of the peace of mortals, whoſe ſteps are marked by deſolation, and in whoſe dark ſouls no pleaſing ray of humanity ever ſhines."

Bonaparte's Brothers.—Of the four brothers of Bonaparte, Lucien is the richeſt. While he held the office of Miniſter of the Interior, he is known to have ſold the proteſtions of Government to ſmugglers and contraband dealers, in which trade his receipts for ſome time were enormous. He was not leſs dexterous in converting his foreign miſſions into ſources of profit. The negociations in Spain, in which Portugal alſo was included, were worth to him above 550,000l. and though he has not lately, from having fallen into diſgrace with his brother, held any ſituation of emolument, his fortune, notwithſtanding the pomp and luxury in which he lives, amounts to nearly a million and a half ſterling.—It was remarked at Paris during his ſtay there, that none of the Princes of the Bourbon Family had ever equalled him in ſplendour and magnificence. In his private life he is completely what is called in France bon vivant yet he is not without commendable qualities. Like the Regent, whom he is ſaid to have a good deal of reſemblance, he is fond of ſhow, of a luxurious table, and of a ſenſual enjoyment of every ſort; like him he is hoſpitable, generous, and fond of the fine arts.—He has, perhaps, the choiceſt gallery of pictures that can be poſſeſſed by an individual. He is reckoned the fineſt of the family in point of talents. Joſeph Bonaparte is of a very different character. Leſs immoral in his life, he is alſo leſs popular in his manner, among a people where libertiniſm often paſſes as a recommendation. More prudent and more obſequious to the will of his brother, he is a greater favourite with the family.

RUTLAND, (Vt.) Auguſt 2.

Obituary Notice.—Died at Bridport, on the morning of the 12th inſt. in a fit of the apoplexy, a Dutchman traveller; his name is unknown. He was found on the 7th inſt. about a o'clock P. M. under a tree by the wayſide, apparently indiſpoſed. Being interrogated by the people whether he were unwell, he replied that his head ached, and requeſted them to tie a handkerchief about it.

Some perſons enquired of him where he belonged; he ſaid about Little York, in Upper Canada—that he came from St. John's to Vergennes in a ſloop, belonging to a Captain King, loaded with ſhad and ſalt; and that he was going to Skeenſborough;—ſoon after he was deprived of ſenſe and voluntary motion, and remained till he died, notwithſtanding every effort which was made uſe of for his recovery.

He was a man apparently about 35 or 40 years of age; 5 feet 5 inches in height; well fet, and ſomewhat learned with the ſmall pox; and appeared to have been a labourer.

He had, in his knapſack, ſome decent clothes and other effects; and in his pockets fifteen copp'd watch and ſome money.

This is to requeſt any perſon who may have knowledge of the man, to communicate the ſame to the ſubſcriber; and if he has any heirs, they can, by proper application, have his effects, by defraying the expences of his illneſs, funeral charges, &c. otherwiſe they will be diſpoſed of according to law.

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, GREETING!

WHEREAS it is neceſſary for the Peace and Good Government of the ſaid Province, that all His Majeſty's Officers within the ſame, ſhould continue in their ſeveral Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council, to iſſue this Proclamation, hereby authoriſing the ſaid Officers to continue in their ſaid Offices and Employments, of which all Perſons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themſelves accordingly.

IN Teſtemony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſixth year of our Reign.

F. G.

(CIRCULAR.) Downing Street, 8th June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation propofed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 5th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.
(Signed)
Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein.

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, June 26.

Yeſterday arrived a Gottenburgh, Mail; the only intelligence it brings deſerving notice is the following: given under the date of June 16:—"We have great reaſon to believe that the differences be twen it is ey & Ruſſia will be ſpeedily accommodated through the medium of Ruſſia.

Spain has made a laſt naval effort, by equipping 25 ſail of the line. Of this number eight are at Carthagena, and nine at Cadiz. Bonaparte has inſiſted, that ſhe ſhould either declare againſt Ruſſia or shut her ports againſt the ships of that Nation; but now he is anxious for a reconciliation with Ruſſia, the intended proceeding, it is thought will not be carried into effect.

It is believed that ſome requiſition has been made to Pruſſia, on the part of France, to evacuate Hanover.

Bonaparte is ſaid to have it in contemplation to add Hanover to the kingdom of Holland, and to give it beſides, the command the mouth of the Emns, the Weſer and the Elbe.

June 27.

Polices have been opened at Lloyd's within the laſt few days, giving ſixty guineas to receive one hundred, if peace ſhall be concluded with France before the firſt of January.

June 30.

The funds this day have advanced in price, propably in conſequence of Ld. Yarmouth's arrival at Paris being announced in the Moniteur, and the intelligence that the French 3 per Cents. has riſen from 63 1-2 to 64 1-2.—The prices at one o'clock this day were—3 per cent Conſols for the opening 63 5-8 a 3-4—Reduced 62 3-8 a 1-2—Omnium 6 1-2 a 3-4.

Since our laſt, Dutch papers to the 25th, which contain French news to the 20th inſt. have come to hand. They are chiefly occupied with details relative to the entrance of King Louis into Holland, and his reception in that country.

The ſpeech of King Louis to their High Mitneſſes bears every appearance of having been prepared at Paris. It is in the ſame ſpirit with the declarations that paſſed at the Thuilleries when the new conſtitution of Holland was firſt announced.

The new King felicitates himſelf on the ſymptoms of affection he has received from his ſubjects—who delivered with appropriate complaiſance the ſpeeches that had been prepared for them. We learn, however by a gentleman now in town, and who came from Amſterdam in the American brig Clinton, arrived at Dover, a circumſtance that ſhews more forcibly than all the details that can appear in the Dutch journals, what are the real ſentiments of the Dutch people on this occaſion:—Orders were iſſued to ſerve out to each ſeaman on board the ſhips of war lying in the Texel, an allowance of Geneva to drink the health of the new king—To a man they declared they were not then thirsty! and therefore they had no use for the spirits!!

The old Dutch Republicans declare, that ten years ago they would as eafily credited a report of the Emperor of China being arrived at the Hague, as that they would have a king fet over them by the French, who were fighting againft loyalty. Captain Tetten, of the American fhip Conftellation, from Amfterdam, arrived at Cowes, fays that the diffatisfaction that prevails in Holland at the new government impofed upon that country, is very general. Harraffed as the Dutch have been by various governments during the laft ten years, they cannot be fuppofed to depart on this occafion from their natural phlegmatic indifference; but the galling confideration is, that under this new government they will regain no part of their independence. Louis may not be more unexceptionable to them than Schimmelpenninck; but they know that either of them is the mere puppet of a greater power, who fays to thefe mock monarches, in the words of Trinculo, "you fhall be king, but I will be viceroy over you!".

There are now fix fhips of 74 guns and one of eighty guns, lying in the Nieu Diep, ready for fea; and in the Roads the Rifleman brig.

Letters from Italy mention, that the flotilla fent by the French, to attack Gaeta by fea, has fallen into the hands of the Engliih.—Prince Heffe Philipftall ftill continues his gallant defence of the place, and harraffes the befiegers with repeated forties, which have been hitherto fucceefsful.

The intelligence in the following private letter, which appears very probable, is important:

"Hamburgh, June 20.

"Yeflerday evening, it was reported here, that the fate of Germany was decided. There is no longer an Emperor of Germany, but inftead thereof, three great powers, Auftria, Pruffia and Bavaria. The remainder of Germany, Saxony, Heffe, the Hanfeatic towns, &c. will form a confederated ftate, under the protection of the Emperor of the Romans, which title Bonaparte will aflume. He will be repreiented in Germany by the Arch Chancellor Cardinal Felch. I cannot vouch with abfolute certainty for the truth of this arrangement, though I believe it cannot be doubted that it will take place."

Letters dated the 18th inftant, from Bremen, mention, that the Pruffian garrifon was pofitively to evacuate that city within three days after. Poffibly the inhabitants may find fome relief & convenience in this arrangement. We think, however, it is not likely to produce much commercial advantage to them. The blockade of the Weier, will fcarcely be difcontinued, as long as the obnoxious and general order of the court of Berlin for fhutting its ports againft Britifh veffels remain unretracted.

July 1.

Much expectation was raifed in the Houfe of Peers yeflerday, refpecting the nature of the queftion which Lord Melville intended to put to the Miniiters, with regard to the preient ftate of India. Many Peers attended in their places, and a great number of members of the other Houfe appeared behind the Bar. Lord Melville was for fome time in converfation with Lord Minto, previous to his rifing to put his queftion. It appearing from the anfwer of that Noble Lord, that the prefent Governor General, Sir G. Barlow, was only to continue at the head of affairs until a fucceffor arrived to take his place, and that confequently there was no ftable Government at preient in India, Lord Melville gave notice that he fhould on Friday next fubmit a motion to the Houfe, fhewing how precarious our power and fecurity in India were under fuch unfettled circumftances.

More honors are in the contemplation of Napoleon or his relatives. His Mother, it is now faid, is to be appointed Queen of Rome, and her fon, Lucien Bonaparte, to be nominated her fucceffor.

Count Keller, whofe difpofitions appeared fo favourable to the maintenance of good underftanding between Great Britain and Pruffia has a length formally refigned his feat in the Cabinet of Berlin, and retired to his Eftates. Pruffia, of courfe, fubmits entirely to be the humble inftrument of Napoleon in every thing he may command.

LIVERPOOL, July 3.

Saturday's Gazette contained an order in Council for liberating all Papenburgh veffels detained previous to the 14th of May.

The naval returns up to this day, ftate the number of fhips in commiffion to be—of the line, 132; fifties 15, frigates 165, floops, &c. 181; gun brigs &c. 247, making a total of 730 veffels.—The Ordinary comprife 24 fhips of the line; 18 repairing for fervice and 24 building.

The French General Boyer fet off on Wednefday, on his return to France. It is underftood that he is to be exchanged for one of the gentlemen who have been detained fince the beginning of the war.

We underftand that a prefentment has been made to the Grand Jury at Weftminfter, of a Public defaulter, who is charged in the deficiency of 80,000l.

Wednefday, a foreigner of diftinction was charged in execution, in the Exchequer, for 20,000l.

Parliament is expected to be prorogued about the 29th of next month. A diffolution, for which the Miniiters are rumoured to be acftively preparing, is expected to take place in September.

By the bill now pending refpecting the abolution of certain fees and holidays at the Cuftom Houfe, all in-ward letter days in the Calendar, except the Birth days of their Majefties, Good Friday, and Chriftmas Day will be abolifhed.

Conftantinople, May 8.

Mr. Arbuthnot, the Engliih Ambaffador, has had a frefh conference with the Reis Effendi; at which he emphatically declared, that if the Porte did not, within a few days, come to a determination to renew its treaties with England, an Engliih fquadron would certainly make its appearance in the Levant, as any further refufal muft be confidered as a rupture between the two powers. To this declaration no other anfwer has been given on the part of the Porte, than that it is refolved to maintain the neutrality which it has hitherto obferved.

NEW YORK, Auguft 18.

By arrivals from Liverpool, at Philadelphia and Bofton, we are put in poffeffion of London dates to the 18, and Liverpool to the 3d of July. In addition to the former details, we give the following fummary from the Boiton Gazette:

From thefe papers it appears that no adjuftment of our affairs with Great Britain had taken place; nor had any circumftances occurred, which indicated a belief that it would take place immediately.

The London Courier of the 23d of June, advies, "That Mr. Wilkinham, had invited at Dover, with difpatches from Mr. Talleyrand for Mr. Fox." To this article the fame paper adds, "It is now, we think, beyond a doubt, that a negociation for peace is going on, and that the negociation is carried on direct between Mr. Fox and Mr. Talleyrand. When they have agreed on certain bafis, each government will appoint negociators. Perhaps Mr. W. brought the neceffary paffports."

Lord Yarmouth had been fent by the Britifh government to the French Court, with difpatches. He arrived at Paris on the 18th June; but the tenor of his difpatches was not divulged in France, nor were they publicly known in London; yet fuch were the public hopes entertained in conieqquence thereof, that the French funds rofe one per cent.

Mr. Pinckney, the American Ambaffador to Great Britain, with his family and fuit, arrived at London on the 23d June, laft from Liverpool.

A London paper of June 24, fays, that the American funds had experienced a conliderable depreffion for the five preceding days.

Mr. Erfkine, fon of the Lord Chancellor, is ftated to have been appointed Ambaffador to the American States.

An opinion is ftill entertained that the difpute between Pruffia and Sweden will be accommodated through the interference of Ruffia.

From fome recent manoeuvres of the French cabinet, a war between Ruffia and Turkey is highly probable.

Gaeta ftill holds out; and the vigorous oppofition which is made to this place has occafioned an infurrection in the Neapolitan States, which has excited conliderable alarm to the French.

The evacuation of Cattaro feems not to be credited in England. From this circumftance the Britifh Journalifts indicate, that the tumults of the late warfare on the continent is not finally fettled, by the contefted powers, engaged therein.

The French have added to their dominions on the Continent, the republic of Ragufa, in Dalmatia. This little Commonwealth may anfwer for fome of the lefs ambitious members of the Napoleon family.

Mr. Fox was fo much indifpofed during the latter end of June, as to be unable to attend the duties of his office; and fears were entertained that he would not be able to appear in public during the fitting of Parliament.

A war between Ruffia and Turkey was fuppofed to be on the eve of breaking out, from fome recent manoeuvres of the French Cabinet.

QUEBEC, Auguft 11.

On Thurfday laft, the 7th inftant, arrived here from England, through the States, the Hon. Henry Allcock Efqr. Chief Juftice of this Province.

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN; GREETING:

WHEREAS it is neceffary for the Peace and Good Government of the faid Province, that all His Majefty's Officers within the fame, fhould continue in their leveral Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and conient of our Executive Council, to iffue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the faid Officers to continue in their faid Offices and Employments, of which all Perfons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themfelves accordingly.

IN Teftemony whereof, WE have caufed thefe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our faid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witnefs our trufty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Efquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty ninth day of Auguft, in the Year of our Lord one thoufand eight hundred and fix, and forty-fixth year of our Reign.

F. G.

(CIRCULAR.) Downing Street, 18 June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation proposed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient

Humble Servant,

W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

COPY.] Pay Office, Horse Guards, 8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occation, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.

(Signed)

Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

LONDON.

The following letter is said to have been written by the Emperor Bonaparte to the King of Sardinia:

"Sir and Brother—I made you a king, and, from particular esteem and respect for your person, sent you my ministers at war and able counsellors to organize and direct the administration of your states; yet though you have enjoyed these advantages full four months, you have done nothing really useful, and I consequently have reason to believe that you do not possess the qualities necessary to govern well. I must therefore advise you to abdicate in favour of your Son, of whom I have conceived better hopes. As I wish and expect your acquiescence in this proposal, I shall take care to secure to you a suitable pension. "NAPOLEON."

St. John's, (Antigua) July 22.

It appears that the inhabitants of Barbadoes have been alarmed for the fate of Antigua.—The squadron of men of war (mistaken by the Vigilant for French) was Admiral Cochrane's which appeared off this harbour on the 5th instant, and no doubt the alarm guns which are generally fired upon the appearance of a fleet, were supposed to be the commencement of a cannonade.

It was at 7 o'clock, on the morning after the admiral sailed hence, that he saw the French fleet lying too, on the south side of Torrola, and immediately bore down upon them. The enemy at the same time filled their sails, and ran towards the island of St. Thomas. At one P. M. the Captains of the Elephant, Canada, and Agamemnon, in obedience to a signal previously made, repaired on board of the Northumberland, where a council of war was held, by which, we have reason to believe it was resolved, that "It would be improper for the Admiral to attack, with his small squadron, a force so very superior." At a little after two, P. M. the French ships doubled the southwest point of St. Thomas, and soon after disappeared.

The Northumberland, Elephant and Canada, returned to these Roads on the 17th inst. after having watered at St. Kitts,

This morning the hon. Sir Alex. Cochrane, rear Admiral of the white, and commander in chief of his Majesty's ships in these seas was invested, in a private manner with the Ribb and of the Order of Bath, at the government house of this island.

It was, we understand the Admiral's with that the ceremony should be private.

No accounts have been received respecting Sir J. B. Warren and the fleet under his command, since their passing St. Kitts on the 14th in the evening.

Admiral Villeneuve.—It is now generally admitted, that this unfortunate commander was murdered by the same hands which deprived Toussaint, Pichegrue, Captain Wright, and many others of their lives. It may not be uninteresting to our readers to find here some of the considerations, which may direct their judgment on this mysterious event.

While Admiral Villeneuve was in England, he received repeated assurances from France, that his government was fully satisfied with his conduct.—Such was the information directly transmitted by the marine minister, Decres, and corroborated by various letters, not only to himself, but to his officers. These officers were unanimous in representing his plans on the day of battle to have been judicious, his manoeuvres skilful, and his bravery exemplary. He had, in his instructions to his captains, anticipated every mode of attack that could be adopted by the English, and had even provided for the attempt to break his line in a column, which was so successfully made. In effecting that bold enterprize, lord Nelson's column was vigorously opposed by the Bucentaur, admiral Villeneuve and the Redoubtable, capt. Lucas. But it is affirmed by all the officers, that eleven sail were inactive, Several instances of bravery occurred in the French fleet. The conduct of capt. Lucas is well known. Capt. Infernet, of the Intrepide, refused to follow his division in its flight, obeyed the orders of the Commander in Chief, and fought till his ship, the worst sailor in the fleet, could no longer be kept afloat. We believe that, had every ship of the enemy fought with equal bravery, the number of captures would, perhaps, have been still greater, but our loss would have been more considerable. Our present object is to prove that Admiral Villeneuve was not responsible for the loss of a battle which in any circumstances not depending on accident, would have raised the British name to the loftiest height of glory. Admiral Villeneuve was not vanquished, because Lord Nelson was invincible. Admiral Villeneuve was conquered, because Lord Nelson was irresistable.

Bonaparte has publicly said that the battle was imprudently engaged. Does he mean that Admiral Villeneuve attacked the English fleet? He knows that the latter began the attack, & that the former could not avoid the engagement. Does he mean that the Admiral left Cadiz imprudently? He recollects the orders of his minister to Villeneuve: Suffer not yourself to be blocked up in Cadiz. We can bear the loss of a few ships, but we cannot bear the loss of our honor. The Admiral did more than obey; he chose the most prudent time, when a large detachment had left the English fleet under admiral Louis.

So confident was Villeneuve of the propriety of his conduct, so eager was he to court investigation, that he warmly and repeatedly solicited permission to return to France. Baffled by the coldness of the last admiralty, he found in the present the most courteous liberality, and consequently left this country with the officers who were with him. He had been separated above a year from a wife, to whom he was tenderly attached; he had directed her to meet him in Paris. Within a day or two of that interview, he is said to have shot himself.

The naked truth is, that Bonaparte knew that the Admiral was in possession of the reasons why the battle was imprudently engaged. He knew that his own impetuosity had forced Villeneuve to risk an engagement. He knew that an enquiry must either take place or not. If it did not take place, he felt that conclusions, derogatory from his power, would be drawn, as it would be an acknowledgment of the immense superiority of the English navy. In the other case, he knew that an enquiry would produce discoveries far from repugnable to his own political sagacity. To free himself from the dilemma, he ordered a brave man, whose only fault was to have fought under such a tyrant, to be put to death.

A similar dilemma induced him to murder our magnanimous countryman Captain Wright, after a series of tortures unknown to the most uncivilized ages. This fact cannot be too extensively known. We mean, therefore, in a few days, to put the credibility of our readers to a severe trial, by the most dismal relation which they have ever perused. [Lon. paper.

CAPTAIN WRIGHT.

The fate of this gallant officer ought to be known in every part of the civilized world. We should think ourselves dead to every feeling of justice and humanity, if we did not exert our efforts in exposing the unexampled barbarity of the French government, and the fate of degradation to which the French nation must be reduced, when such enormities are committed and tolerated.

Our readers will recollect, that capt. Wright was confined in the Temple in Paris, because his ship had conveyed some royalists to France. We need not appeal to the history of former wars, because the French have annihilated every vestige of precedent, and of solemn convention; but during the last, when we took many of the ships that landed rebels in Ireland, and spies in Great Britain, we treated their commanders and officers as prisoners of war, who were exchanged, and had every privilege usually granted to brave men taken in combat.

Sir Sidney Smith was likewise in the Temple. He was fortunate enough to escape; but had he lived to the reign of Bonaparte, he would have shared the fate of his brave countryman. Wright; because he would have displayed the same inflexibility of principle, the same attachment to his country.

The French government conceived, that Captain Wright was in the secret of his government, and determined, that if he refused to become a traitor, he should perish a victim. D'Invernois, Fouche's private secretary, ordered him to a final private interrogatory, in which he offered him a large sum of money, and the rank of Admiral in the French service, if he would divulge what he knew of the plans of his government, and of its correspondence with the disaffected in France. This spirited officer replied with indignation to these proposals; but, as they were frequently repeated, with new allurements, he concluded with remaining silent. He was then told that the torture should restore him to the use of his voice. He was seized and laid on the rack. There he uttered no complaint, though inflammation the most tormenting were employed, and pains the most acute were endured. When threatened that he should expire in torments, he said, "I do not fear to die; my country will revenge my murder, and God receive my soul."—During the two hours of the first day that he was stretched on the rack, his left arm and right leg were broken, and his nails torn from the toes of both his feet. He was then placed under the care of a surgeon, during five weeks; but before he was perfectly cured, he was carried to another private interrogatory, at which, besides Desmarets, Fouche and Real were present.

The minister of police now informed him, that, from the mutilated state of his body, he must be convinced, that it was not the intention of the French government ever to restore him to his country, where he might relate events which the policy of France required to be buried in oblivion; he therefore, had no choice between serving the emperor of the French, and the perishing in prison. He replied that he was resigned to his destiny, and would die as he had lived, faithful to his king and country.

The man in the full possession of his mental faculties and corporeal strength is generally different from that unfortunate being whose mind is enervated by sufferings, and whose body is weakened by wants. For five months capt. Wright had seen only gaolers, spies, executioners, letters and racks; his food had been bread and his drink water. He who, thus situated, preserves his native dignity, and innate sentiments, is more worthy of monuments or statues, than the legislator or the conqueror.

Captain Wright was again stretched on the rack, and what is called by the French regenerators, the "infernal torment," were inflicted on him. After he had been pinched with red hot irons, brandy and gun powder were poured into his wounds, and let several times on fire, until his flesh was nearly burnt to the bones. In the convulsions, the consequence of these sufferings, he is said to have bitten off a part of his tongue; but still no groans were heard. As life remained, he was again placed under the care of a surgeon; and a spy, in the dress of a Protestant clergyman, presented himself, as if to pray by him. This offer he accepted, but when this man began to ask some insidious question, he cast on him a look of contempt, and never spoke to him again. At last, every method to obtain information from him proving ineffectual, a mameluke strangled him on his bed. Thus expired a hero, whose fate has excited much compassion, and whose character has received more admiration, even in France, than any of the great men who have fallen fighting for the mighty Napoleon. Captain Wright has diffused new rays of glory on the British name, from his dungeon and from his tomb.

If any thing could equal the barbarity of the deed, it is the barefaced impudence with which the French government acquainted the world with his death.—We extract the relations from the Star of November 1, 1805, as translated from the Gazette de France: "Captain Wright, of the English navy, a prisoner in the Temple, has put an end to his existence in his prison, after having read in the Moniteur, an account of the destruction of the Austrian army!"

This atrocious act may, to some of our readers, appear incredible. The writer, on whose authority we state most of the particulars, thus explains the means of his knowledge: Captain Wright was attended by a surgeon of the name of Vaugard, who gained his confidence, and was worthy of it. From causes easily conceived, he survived his patient only twelve hours: during which he wrote the shocking details, and sent them to three of the members of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps, with a prayer to have them forwarded to Sir Sidney Smith, or to Mr. Windham. From one of those ministers I have obtained the original, in Vaugeard's hand writing.

Sir,

I tranſmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymaſters General of the Army, acquainting me that in conſequence of the ſerious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, reſiding in His Majeſty's foreign Colonies, are expoſed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymaſters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Caſtlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1ſt of September laſt, their Lordſhips had thought proper to reſcind the ſame, and to ſubſtitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is incloſed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magiſtrates for the purpoſe of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is ſuggeſted; and I am to deſire you will take ſuch meaſures as you may think beſt calculated to carry into execution the Regulation propoſed. In the event, however, of any difficulties ariſing in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to preſent objections of a ſerious nature, I am further to deſire you will ſtate ſuch difficulties to me with as little delay as poſſible.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your moſt obedient

Humble Servant,

W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horſe Guards, 8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of Auguſt laſt a Regulation was made by the late Paymaſters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances reſiding in the Britiſh Colonies, particularly in thoſe on the Continent of America, ſhould not be paſſed at this Office, unleſs the Competency of the Magiſtrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Juſtice, Senior Reſident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been repreſented to us, that the greater number of Officers reſiding in the American Colonies, are put to very ſerious inconvenience and expenſe (and ſuch as in many inſtances will ſcarcely admit of their making the ſaid Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively conſidered the ſubject to reſcind it, and to ſubſtitute in its place, the encloſed Regulation, which we think will meet the caſe both in reſpect to its ſecuring the Officer from any unneceſſary inconvenience and expenſe, and the Public from Impoſition; we therefore requeſt you will have the Goodneſs to cauſe ſuch Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the reſpective Colonies, as will enſure its being carried into execution with as little delay as poſſible.

It is our wiſh that a ſufficient number of Magiſtrates (or where there are no Magiſtrates, Notaries Public) ſhould be appointed Commiſſioners for the ſpecial purpoſe of adminiſtering the Oath, to the ſaid Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magiſtrates, or Notaries Public, on a ſimilar occaſion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint ſuch number of Commiſſioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the leaſt inconvenience to the perſons who are to make the Affidavit, and alſo ſuch as by their reſpective reſidences in different parts of the Colonies, are beſt calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to obſerve that we have no proof (although ſome papers of ſuſpicious appearance have been preſented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be eſſentially neceſſary in caſes where there is great ſcope for improper Practices, that a ſtrong check ſhould be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.

(Signed)

Right Honble. William Wyndham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymaſters General of His Majeſty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the Britiſh American Forces, reſiding in the Britiſh Colonies on the Continent of America, and, alſo of all other Officers on the Britiſh Half Pay reſiding therein:

The Officer to ſtate in addition to the uſual Affidavit, that he is the Perſon who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the Britiſh American Forces, and the year in which he was ſo placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A Liſt of the Officers reſiding in the ſaid Colonies, with the Diſtricts in which they reſpectively reſide, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be tranſmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which Liſt is to be formed from the returns made by the reſpective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be paſſed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is deſirable that the Regulation ſhould be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Iſſue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the firſt opportunity.

The Governors of the reſpective Colonies, to tranſmit to this Office a Liſt of the perſons authorized to adminiſter the Oath to the ſaid Officers, the Diſtricts for which they ſeverally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as poſſible. The ſaid perſons being Magiſtrates (or where there are no Magiſtrates or none conveniently reſident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commiſſioners for the ſpecial purpoſe of adminiſtering the ſaid Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the ſaid appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magiſtrates or Notaries Public, on a ſimilar occaſion in the ordinary courſe of Buſineſs. And it is to be diſtinctly underſtood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a ſufficient Voucher, ſave and except ſuch Affidavits taken before Commiſſioners appointed as above. The Commiſſioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapſed ſince the perſons in queſtion were placed on the ſaid Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cauſe, by the firſt opportunity that occurs after ſuch appointment has taken place.

All other Officers reſiding in the ſaid Colonies, who are on the Britiſh Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above ſtated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commiſſioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay ſince the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced.

NOTICE is hereby given to all Perſons reſiding in the Province of Upper Canada, who are in the receipt of Half Pay or Allowances from Government, that unleſs they do make a Return to this Office, on or before the 24th day of December next enſuing, containing their Names and the name of the Diſtrict in which they reſide, and alſo their Age, and the Period from which they have been in the receipt of Half Pay or Allowances, their Affidavits for the ſame will not be paſſed at the War-Office, after the 25th December, 1806; to which period the Regulations from the Pay Office, Horſe Guards, of the 28th Auguſt, 1805, (publiſhed in the York Gazette) are to continue to be in force, after which time the late Regulations from that Office, dated the 8th May, 1806, (publiſhed as above) are to be acted upon.

By Order of the Lieutenant Governor,

WM. HALTON, Secretary.

LONDON, July 3.

Valentine Jones, Eſq. charged with miſverſations in the Weſt Indies to the amount of 80,000l. and upwards, has given bail in the Court of King's bench himſelf in 20,000l. and four ſureties in the remainder amount, for his appearance on the day of trial. The proſecution is at the inſtance of the Lords of the Treaſury.

Letters from St. Peterſburgh, received by the laſt Hamburgh Mail, mention, that great changes were expected to take place in the Department for conducting Foreign Affairs. It was alſo rumoured, that ſome alteration was intended in the Conſtitution of the Senate.

An intereſting converſation took place laſt night in the Houſe of Commons on the ſubject of vaccine innoculation, occaſioned by a motion which Lord Henry Petty brought forward, for the purpoſe of obtaining the opinions of the firſt medical men in the kingdom as to the truth of this great diſcovery. His Lordſhip, as well as every other member who ſpoke, appeared to be fully perſuaded, that its utility was unbounded. The great object of the preſent motion appeared to be to remove the prejudices that lately began to prevail in this country againſt vaccination.

July 4.

The uſual meſſage from his Majeſty, previous to the termination of the ſeſſion, was yeſterday brought down to both houſes of parliament. A vote of credit will of courſe be granted, to enable his Majeſty, in the words of the meſſage, "to defeat the enterpriſes of the enemy, and provide for the exigency of public affairs." It is ſuppoſed the ſeſſion will not continue above three weeks longer.

The lateſt accounts from the Mauritius, received via the Cape, mention that great preparations were making at the iſland for a vigorous defence againſt an attack by the Engliſh, who was ſeriouſly expected; they had collected proviſions for nine months. General Decaen had made large contracts for tents, and other military equipments, for a great number of troops, which were daily expected from France. Port North Weſt was full of Danes, Spaniards and Americans.

July 8.

The funds yeſterday after various fluctuations, left off at the ſame prices at which they opened. This morning they experienced a depreſſion of one per cent. in omnium, and of one half per cent. in the conſols. Some very large ſales were made by thoſe who had previouſly bought to an immenſe amount. Thoſe who bought ſo largely laſt week may themſelves in ſome meaſure have been the cauſe of the depreſſion ſince Saturday. They held out the moſt confident aſſurances that peace would be ſigned immediately—nay, ſo deciſive was their tone and language, that they fixed almoſt the day & hour. On Thurſday laſt they ſaid that negociations had advanced ſo far that a meſſage from the Lord Mayor might be expected in the courſe of the morning, and that of courſe it would be immediately tranſmitted to Lloyd's.

To Lloyd's therefore, perſons crouded from all quarters. The great room was filled, all in expectation of the meſſenger from the manſion houſe. The ſeats and benches which would enable the perſons occupying them to hear more diſtinctly the meſſage read, were warmly contended for. No meſſage came, and the hopes then held out not being realized, many began to think, either that ſome obſtacles had occurred in the negociation, or that it had entirely broken off.—The fall ſince Saturday is ſaid to have been principally occaſioned by a rumour that France had demanded a reduction of our navy to a certain number, a demand which of courſe could not be complied with.—Then, as Lord Holland had not ſet off on Saturday or yeſterday, it was ſuppoſed that he would not ſet off at all. His Lordſhip may reſt aſſured that the ſpeculating watch has ſtops well, & that the moſt eager and minute inquiries have been made at Holland houſe as to his baggage, and whether any preparations are making for a long journey. It is now rumoured that his Lordſhip will not ſet out until the next week.—Baſilico the meſſenger, is gone back to Paris, he ſet out on Saturday evening, and ſailed in the Buſſick gun brig on Sunday. As he is directed to make all poſſible ſpeed, and as he made the laſt journey to and from Paris in leſs than a week, it is ſuppoſed he will return by Friday. Another report in circulation is, that Baſilico will bring back the paſſport for Lord Holland, who will ſet off about Monday or Tueſday. The principal terms having been, according to report arranged, his lordſhip will have little more to do than give them an official form, and ſign them. They would arrive in this country, according to the wiſhes and intentions of miniſters, after the prorogation of parliament.

Undoubtedly ſome notice may be expected to be taken of the negociations in his majeſty's ſpeech upon the prorogation. It may be ſaid in it, that his Majeſty having received, or having made (which ever be the caſe) propoſals for peace, is employed in negociations, which he hopes to bring to a favourable iſſue, and to make peace upon terms conſiſtent with the honor, the ſecurity, and the intereſts of his Majeſty's dominions. But it is probable the ſeſſion will not be permitted to cloſe without a queſtion being put to his Majeſty's Miniſters upon the ſubject. It is reported that conſiderable differences of opinion exiſted in the cabinet upon the ſubject, and that a diviſion took place—Mr. Fox, Lord H. Petty, Earl Moira, Lords Howick, Erkine and Fitz William, for peace; Mr. Windham, Lords Grenville, Spencer, Sidmouth, and Ellenborough, for war. Having thus publiſhed the rumours which have been circulated with regard to peace (not pledging ourſelves either for the truth or falſehood of any of them) we ſhall publiſh another rumour which has reached us ſince writing the above: it is.—That the negociations are broken off; and that ten battalions are immediately to be ſent out upon a ſecret expedition.—COURIER.

The following intelligence reſpecting the reported pacific negociation between this Country and France, appeared alſo in the Courier on Monday.

The depreſſion of the funds on Saturday had damped the expectation of thoſe who thought peace with France at no great diſtance. Becauſe no official communication was made after the arrival of Baſilico, who was ſuppoſed to have brought the ultimatum of the French Government, it was immediately believed that the nature of that ultimatum was unfavourable. The fact is rumoured to be quite the contrary.

The negociation is reported to be ſo far advanced, that moſt, if not all the obſtacles that exiſted are ſaid to have been removed; the principal terms to have been arranged; and nothing it is added remains to be done but to draw them up in an official form. Lord Holland, it has been inferred, is on the point of going to Paris; he will proceed thither not to commence a negociation, but to sign the terms agreed upon between Mr. Fox and M. Talleyrand. Affairs having advanced thus far, it appears strange to our readers that no official communication has been made, and any delay should take place in the signing of the preliminaries. The following is rumoured to be the reason. Were the preliminaries signed, they would of course be made public, and would be opened to discussion in parliament. They would in all probability give rise to warm and long debates; but Mr. Fox's health is not sufficiently restored to enable him to take part in them at present; and as he is the Minister for foreign affairs, and has been principally concerned in negociating the peace, his presence and active participation in the debates are deemed indispensible.

The negociation therefore, it is added, will not be brought to a final conclusion, nor the preliminaries be signed till after the prorogation of Parliament, which will take place about the 25th instant. By this means, ministers will gain time till next session of Parliament, and Mr. Fox will complete the re-establishment of his health, and be able to bear the fatigues of debating. It is probable too, that Parliament may be dissolved soon after peace has been signed.

The following are reported to be some of the principal terms:

Malta to be possessed by this country in full sovereignty.

The Cape to be ceded to G. Britain.

Hanover is to be restored to its lawful sovereign.

The new arrangements made by Bonaparte upon the continent to be acknowledged.

The Manufactures and Merchandize of this country to pass through the Continent.

No ships of the line to be built on either side without previous notice being given of such intention by the party intending to build to the other party, which then may build an equal number.

These are said to be among the principal articles.

For the perfect accuracy of the foregoing intelligence, we do not of course mean to pledge ourselves; but it is in general circulation among those who are supposed to have the best means of information. We give it as we have received it.—COURIER.

We just hear that Mr. Fox has passed a bad night and is worse this morning than he was yesterday.

Last night a vote of Credit to the amount of 2,400,000l. was agreed to by the House of Commons, in the Committee of supply.

The following new arrangements are at length finally concluded, viz:

Lord Minto, to be governor-general of India,

The Right Hon. Thomas Grenville to be President of the Board of Controul, with a seat in the Cabinet, and Earl of Lauderdale to be Lord keeper of the great Seal of Scotland, vice the Duke of Gordon.

The day before the Packet sailed from Lisbon it was reported, that the expedition, which lately proceeded from the Cape of Good Hope (supposed at the time, to be destined to the River de la Plata) had really gone amongst the Mauritius, on account of the surrender of which might soon be expected. It is not stated through which channel this intelligence reached Lisbon.

The Dutch Royal Court Gazette, of the 3d inst. mentions a fact of considerable importance. It states, under the head of intelligence from Vienna of the 18th ult. that M. D'Oubril had received his passports on the preceding day, and was making preparations for his journey to Paris.—One of the French Journals even affects, that M. D'Oubril is at Strasburgh, on his way to Paris.—This would certainly indicate an approximation between France and Russia.

ADDRESS.

Columbus, daring genius, fearless reveal'd
Their Mothers mines by Ocean long conceal'd,
When great Apollo, Lord of deathless fame,
Here with'd to spread the glories of his name.
He calls the Muses from their sacred grove,
The Pendus daughters of imperial Jove,
To fee what hopes this younger world displays
Of rising worth deserving future praise:
They spread their golden pinions to the sky,
And o'er the Atlantic waves with boldness fly.
Where deep St. Lawrence winds his tedious course,
Now gently gliding, or rolls with dreadful force,
Where silence claims a solitary reign,
And no sweet songster cheers the gloomy plain.
The disappointed Nymphs of Pindus flare,
Their throbbing bosoms still their anxious care,
When lo! a native maid approaches nigh
With rapid steps, and wildness in her eye;
Her feather'd robe with coral sprigs inlaid,
On ev'ry side fantastic splendour shed,
Through flowing plumes that on her head the wore
A regular Eagle's crooked bill appear;
Vermilion lines with tattoo'd spots in rows
Controll the ring dependant from her nose;
She resents no ligh skin or flowing hair,
Her taste prefers a copper hue to fair.
A warrior's bow in her brown hand she bore,
And at her back a feathered quiver wore.
The Muses flaring seek Apollo's aid,
He beckon's finning out to be afraid.
I come, the stranger spoke, O power divine
To beg instruction from the mighty Nine.
In vain my fav'rite children try to sing,
While mental darkness cramps their spreading wing
O dissipate the baleful gloom so night,
And grant a portion at your Heavenly light.
The Muses frown, disdaining haughty airs,
And Terpsichore a cutting speech purports.
But Phebus gently checks the rising ire
And greets the Stranger with a welcome smile:
Your prayer we grant, from humbly you decide
To take your fitter mates for your guide.
Erato's simple genius will repress
The striking wildness of your antic dress;
Your rugged style Sweet Clio shall remove,
Your taste the chaften'd Thalia shall improve;
The rest their various graces shall impart,
Reject the wrong, and secure good by art;
Bright science here in future times shall reign,
And not one of the long a brilliant train:
The long of deaths no longer shall be heard
Nor savage manners learning's steps retard.
This happy day the Prophets truth declares,
Behold the blooming fruit that Science rears;
Though far from ripe, the penetrating eye
May now its future excellence descry:
Nay, if I candour whisper in your ear
That modest youth are damp'd by anxious fear;
It chills the soul when anxious to please,
And breeds alarms that reason can't appease.
It's power I see, I proceed to shew
Our sons how grand, alas our progress flow,
Sweet independence here we learn to prize,
The choicest gift below the circling skies;
Our heedless pallions wisely to controul,
To rule and purify the human soul;
That virtue bound to wisdom can bellow
More solid joy than vice can ever know.

We learn our anxious parents to revere,
Our friends to love, to serve our country dear;
The vile, though powerful, always to despise
Though poor, to court the virtuous and the wise.
To woo fair Science, fource of pure delights,
Firm reason, surest guide, and steadiest light.
And here imperfect by nature's wondrous law,
Our ardent hopes to heavenly perfection draw.
And though the weakness of the human mind
From wish'd perfection leaves us far behind,
The constant honour of our mighty plan
Is to maintain the dignity of man.

POETRY.

Oh! not to love thee were a sin,
For sure if Heaven's decree be done,
That thou art destin'd first to win,
As I was destin'd to be won.
A Cupid e'en to thee my Girl,
He'd sweetly shall I pair my age,
Contented like the playful Squirrel
To wanton up and down the Cage,
When death shall every joy like this,
And come to shade our sunny weather,
Be part left the light of bliss,
And both our souls exhal'd together.
Then 'tis from an Angel of the Sky,
That comes to charm me into love;
I'll gaze and die—who would not die,
If death were half so sweet as this.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the fourth day of August, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING!

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the First day of August, We thought fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the Eleventh day of September next, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the thirteenth day of October next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Elquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of his Honor the President in Council, to Military Claimants who were resident in this Province, on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein, since that period, and who as yet have not laid their Claims before the Executive Government for the portion of Lands allowed by his Majesty's instructions to persons of that description, that such Military Claimants shall be admitted to apply for such portion of Lands, under the like privileges as if they had made application previous to the said 28th day of July 1798. PROVIDED that the Military Claimant making such application, shall by his own Affidavit, as well as by the Affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions that he is the Person who was resident in this Province on or before the said 28th day of July 1798, and since that period hath continued to reside therein, which said Affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lt. Governor or Person Administering the Government, in Council for such Lands.

JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the President in Council, that the personal attendance of the Sons of U. E. Loyalists at the Seat of Government for the purpose of applying for the Lands to which they are entitled under His Majesty's instructions, will in future be dispensed with: PROVIDED that the Person making such application shall by his own affidavit, and also by the affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions, make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province that "he, the person making "the said application, is the Son of a "U. E. Loyalist, (specifying the name "and place of abode of his Father) & "that he hath attained the full age of "Twenty-one years," which said affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person administering the Government in Council for such Lands.—It is further hereby notified, that the above dispensation from personal attendance at the seat of Government is not to extend to the sons of U. E. loyalists who reside in the Home District, they not being subject to the inconveniences with persons of that description inhabiting the more distant parts of this Province. JOHN SMALL.
Clerk of the Executive Council.

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN; GREETING.

WHEREAS it is necessary for the Peace and Good Government of the said Province, that all His Majesty's Officers within the same, should continue in their several Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to issue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the said Officers to continue in their said Offices and Employments, of which all Persons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

IN Testemony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Elquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our Reign.

(CIRCULAR.)

Downing Street, 18 June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation proposed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient

Humble Servant,

W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.)

Pay Office, Horse Guards,

8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.

(Signed)

Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced.

YORK, 4th October, 1806.

The following Address was presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on his arrival at Kingston resp-

To his Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esq. Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE the Magistrates, Clergy, and other Inhabitants of the Town of Kingston, beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your safe arrival in this Province, and to express our gratitude to our most gracious Sovereign for this additional instance of his paternal care, in appointing one of your Excellency's knowledge and experience in Colonial Government to preside over us.

And we also beg leave to assure your Excellency, that none of his Majesty's subjects are more firmly attached to his Person and Government, and our happy Constitution, than your Excellency's

most obedient,

and very humble servants,

Peter Smith,	Aaron Smith,
Joseph Anderson,	Jo. Forsyth,
Wm. Crawford,	John Stuart,
John Ferguson,	Thomas Markland,
Allan Mac Lean,	John Gamble,
Donald Mac Donald,	James Cumming,
Lawrence Herchmer,	William Jarvis,
John Kirby,	Poole England,
Richard Robinson,	Thomas Cook, jun.
W. Robins,	Aug. Bolton.

To which his Excellency was pleased to return the following Answer:

Gentlemen,

I Return you my very sincere thanks for this Address. I receive with great pleasure your assurances of attachment to his Majesty's Person and Government. I shall be happy at all times to co-operate with the Inhabitants of Kingston in any measures calculated for its advancement and improvement.

FRANCIS GORE,

Lieut. Governor.

Kingston, 9th August, 1806.

On Tuesday the 30th September, the following Address from the Quakers residing on Yonge Street, was presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor:—

The Society of the People called Quakers, to FRANCIS GORE, Governor of Upper Canada, sendeth greeting.

NOTWITHSTANDING we are a people who hold forth to the world a principle, which in many respects differs from the greater part of mankind, yet we believe it our reasonable duty, as saith the Apostle, "submit yourselves unto every ordinance of man for the Lords sake, whether it be to the King as supreme, or unto Governors as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well;" in this we hope to be his humble and peaceful subjects. Although we cannot, for conscience sake, join with many of our fellow mortals in complimentary customs of man; neither in taking up the sword in order to shed human blood, for the Scripture saith, that "it is "Righteousness that exalteth a nation, but Sin is a reproach to any "people."

We feel concerned for thy welfare and the prosperity of the Province, hoping thy Administration may be such, as to be a terror to the evil minded and a pleasure to them that do well: then will the Province flourish and prosper under thy direction—which is the earnest desire and prayer of thy sincere Friends.

Read and approved in Yonge-Street Monthly Meeting, held the 18th day of the ninth month, 1806. Timothy Rogers and Amos Armitage, are appointed to attend on the Governor therewith.

Signed by Order of said Meeting,

NATHANIEL PEARSON,

Clerk.

To which his Excellency was pleased to return the following Answer:

I Return you my thanks for your dutiful Address, and for your good wishes for my welfare, and prosperity of this Province: I have no doubt of your proving peaceful and good subjects to his Majesty, as well as industrious and respectable members of Society. I shall at all times be happy to afford to such persons my countenance and support.

FRANCIS GORE,

Lieut. Governor.

Government House, York, Upper Canada, 30th Sept. 1806.

QUEBEC, August 18.

Jeremiah M'Gath, second mate of the Hearn, Capt. Robertson, crossing the decks of the Canada my, Captain Bradsham, at the Queen's wharf, on Wednesday night, between nine and ten o'clock, to hail the Hearn, then at anchor in the stream, fell down the main hatchway of the Canada my, and was killed on the spot.—Two boys that were with him gave the alarm, and he was immediately taken up on deck lifeless. It was very dark at the time. The reason given for the main hatch-way's being open, was, that it was for the purpose of drying and airing the hold. This might be a good reason for its being open in the day, but could be none for its being so in the night, the air of the night being damp and unsuitable to the end in view. The premature and shocking death of this man, it is hoped, will serve as a lesson against the like improvidence for the future.

On Thursday, Mr. Hamilton Lieut. of the Grenadiers, of the 100th Regt. in company with Mr. Loring of the 49th regiment, returning from shooting as they were crossing the river St. Charles, at the General Hospital Ferry in a canoe, unhappily the canoe overset, by which the former gentleman was drowned. The persevering exertions of the latter, to save his brother officer, by swimming and plunging for him, though ineffectual, do no less credit to his feelings and humanity than to his spirit and resolution. His efforts were unremitted until his strength was quite exhausted. Some others dived in search of the body, but the depth of water was so great, it being high tide, and so much disturbed by persons dragging with grapplings, and using other endeavours, that the divers could not see the bottom. The body

...found at low water, on Friday. The deceased is much regretted. He was a youth handsome in his person and pleasant in his manners. His remains were interred on Saturday with the usual military honors. Besides the military, the funeral was attended by His Honor the President, and a number of gentlemen of the Town.

Setting aside the chapter of accidents of this week, we have cause to congratulate the public on the barrenness of our Obituary for some time past.

August, 28.

On Thursday night last, this city was visited by a Thunder storm of uncommon violence. The lightening struck several buildings in Town, particularly the Roman Catholic Parish Church, the house of Mr. Bailarge, Painter and Sculptor, in St. Francis street, and that of Mr. Louis Seguin, cooper in the same street, both of which have been considerably damaged. Fortunately no lives were lost nor any person materially injured. During the same storm a barn belonging to Jean Pierre Bedard at Charlesbourgh was consumed by the lightening and a man of the name of Caries was killed at Point Levi. In the night there fell a quantity of rain supposed to be equal an ordinary rain of two days duration.

Died, last week, Mr. Andrew Caldwell an ancient and respectable inhabitant of this City. He left his house in Town on Wednesday, in a feeble state of body, to go to the country, and had been seen the same day not far from his farm, but not having made his appearance at the house, diligent search was made for him, without effect, till Friday, when he was accidently found drowned on the beach near one of his own lands. On Saturday a Coroon r's inquest sat on the body, which was brought to town and burried the same day.

On Monday morning departed this life, after a long and painful illness, which she supported with uncommon fortitude and resignation, Mrs. Elizabeth O'Hara. Wife of Captain Edward O'Hara of the 2d Battalion of Royals, and Aid de Camp to General Boyer, Commander in Chief at Barbadoes.

BOSTON, Sept. 2.

Since our last, arrivals in this port have brought intelligence from London, down to the 19th of July. Many surmises were in circulation respecting the prospect of peace between England and France. The speculations of the English paragraphists, on this important subject are so extremely vague, it would afford our readers but little or no satisfaction, were we to copy them in detail.—The secrecy observed by the Cabinet is represented as having so effectually eluded curiosity, that no certain data, whatever, transpired, on which an opinion as to the result could rest.—The only facts of consequence, known, are in substance as follows:

Mr. Oubril has arrived at Paris from Vienna. He was said to have received dispatches from Petersburgh, before he left Vienna. At Paris, the expectation of peace was predominant.

On the 15th and 18th of July, it is stated that a constant communication was kept up between the Cabinets of St. James and St. Cloud, and that the British council were deeply engaged in deliberating on the dispatches they received from Paris.

It is stated in a paper of the 19th of July, that Mr. Basilico the French messenger, had reached Deal on the 18th; that he immediately embarked, and had proceeded to France.

After publishing these and many other symptoms of an interesting communication between the two countries, the London editors earnestly caution the public against a rash confidence in the probability of peace.

The Dutch marine manifest a spirit very far from cordial, towards their new French King. It is said the fashion declare, it force be threatened to effect obedience to the orders of their strange sovereign, they will very quietly put to sea.

The embargo on Prussian ships in the ports of France, has been discontinued. Little Gaeta still successfully resists the arms of the Emperor of France and King of Italy!

The French are assembling a formidable force in Dalmatia, with the express intention of penetrating into Albania. With such designs openly avowed on the part of the enemy, our astonishment increases, that the Court of St. Petersburgh should have ever consented to surrender Cataro; the occupation of which by a weak garrison has been sufficient to impede their operations for upwards of four months.

Gaeta preserves not only a communication with the sea, but likewise with the mountains, and receives from their hardy natives continued supplies.

The Leeward Island fleet has safely arrived. This agreeable intelligence was communicated to the Admiralty Office by telegraph, and soon after conveyed to Lloyd's.

The Marquis of Douglas will set off on his embassy to the Court of Petersburgh in the course of next week.

Lord Caledon goes out Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. Mr. Bernard accompanies him as Chief Secretary.

Part of the troops intended for foreign service, have been ordered to embark at Ramsgate immediately. Several regiments have already embarked & are in the Downs.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex is certainly going to Jamaica.—This measure has arisen from his ill state of health, which requires his residence in a warm climate; and from motives of political interest, which demands the establishment of a Viceroyalty in that island. The government of Jamaica, it is thought, next to that of Ireland, is the best thing under the Crown.

The Commissioners of Military enquiry are at present, we understand, engaged with the Medical Department of the army; they begin with the General Hospitals, the immediate department of the Surgeon General; & they commence inquiry from the year 1794, when the British army was on the Continent.

ROME, May 17.

The Prince of Hesse Philipsthal has actually received a reinforcement of English, though their number is not known. Yesterday he made a sortie with three columns; the first, consisting of about 500 English and Neapolitans, went by water a distance of 6 miles from the place. The greatest part of them took possession of the little fort of St. Andrew upon the high road to Naples, where they killed a number of French belonging to the garrison, and spiked the cannon; but being soon after attacked by a superior number of French, 20 English and 80 Neapolitans were made prisoners, one of whom was hanged immediately upon an olive tree by the road side. The rest of the column retreated to the mountains, and it is probable that their retreat to Gaeta is cut off. The other two columns, with the Prince at their head, made an attack upon the French works; but after a little fkirmishing they returned to the barrels. In the mean while the English kept up a brisk cannonade from the sea, and did some damage to the French. Sicily has an army of 30,000 men on foot for its defence, but most of these men are natives.—Sir Sidney Smith is standing off Gaeta.

HIS MAJESTY'S MESSAGE.

Yesterday the lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, where the House of Commons had assembled, communicated from a paper addressed to both Houses of Parliament, as follows:

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty has commanded us to acquaint you that the state of the public business enables his Majesty to close this session of Parliament.

"We are, at the same time, directed to express to you the great satisfaction which his Majesty has derived from your unremitting zeal and diligence, and from that attention to the most important interests of his Empire, which has been so conspicuously manifested in all your proceedings.

"The Measures which have been adopted for the permanent improvement of the various branches of our Military system, your attention to combine these arrangements with the great object of public economy, and the regulations which you have established for the speedy and effectual audit of public accounts, call for his Majesty's particular acknowledgements."

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We have it in command from his Majesty to thank you for the provision which you have made for the various exigencies of the public service, particularly by raising within the year, so very large a proportion of the necessary supplies; a measure in itself highly advantageous, and which must create, both at home and abroad, the most favourable impression of our national resources, and of the spirit which animates the British people. You may be assured that the utmost attention shall be paid to the frugal administration of those supplies which you have so liberally granted.

"His Majesty is particularly sensible of the fresh proof he has received of your affectionate attachment to him in the provision which you have made for enabling the younger branches of his Royal Family to meet the necessary expenses of their station."

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty being always anxious for the restoration of peace on just and honorable terms, is engaged in discussions with a view to the accomplishment of this most desirable end. Their success must depend on a corresponding disposition on the part of the enemy; and in every event, his Majesty looks with the fullest confidence to the continuance of that union and public spirit among all ranks of his people, which can alone give energy to war or security to peace."

James Monroe, Esq. Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States of America, having received new Letters of Credence, giving him jointly with William Pinckney Esq. the character of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary from the United States, they had on this day a private audience of His Majesty, to deliver their said credentials.

Downing-street, July 21. The King has been pleased to appoint the Hon. Thomas Erskine, to be His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America.

Extract of a New York Mercantile Advertiser.

Capt. Reading from Cuba, has given the following interesting extract from his log book:

"August 24, at 6 A. M. the Moro Castle bearing S. S. W. distant two or three leagues, saw a Spanish frigate turning to windward for the Havanna. A strong S. E. current, and the wind at S. W. together to anchor under a battery about 2 leagues from the Moro, where she was immediately reinforced by ten or twelve sail from the Havanna, which had joined a line with her under cover of the battery. At 8 o'clock a British frigate hove in sight. Several shot were fired at them from the Moro Castle, which they little regarded—they shortened sail, and hove to seemingly to have some communication with each other. At the same time the Spanish frigate's boat had great communication on shore as we learnt were landing money which they had brot from the Gulph of Mexico. At 24 minutes past 10, the two English frigates bore down towards the battery under which the Spanish ships had formed a line. At 40 minutes past 10, the Spanish gun-boats opened their fire upon the headmost English frigate, which was soon followed by the ships and battery. At 52 minutes past 10, the Arethusa, who led the van of the English, opened a heavy and well directed fire upon the Spanish line. At 20 minutes past ten, the sternmost English frigate came up and commenced a tremendous fire upon the Spanish frigate, which soon occasioned her to alter her colors—she flood the fire of the British 15 minutes. Two of the gun boats were blown up, five were sunk, and three were driven on shore. The frigates then let go their anchors and fixed the fort. They manned their boats at half past 1 P. M. cut her cables, tow her out, and hauled off to repair damages. The Anson soon after fired two shot at us, brought us to, and ordered us under the Commodore's stern, which we obeyed. He ordered our boat on board, and defired the captain to come on board with his papers. The Arethusa supplied us with a butt of water, and many other necessaries, and otherwise treated us with every degree of politeness—they then gave us liberty to proceed, but not to go into any Spanish port. The Arethusa, capt. Basbin, had two men killed and ten wounded; the Anson, capt. Ledyard, none. The Spanish frigate La Pomona, 44 guns, had her captain killed—and it is believed that 200 Spaniards were destroyed in the action.

Lord Nelson's Will.—The following additional Codicil to the Will of his Lordship, was proved on the 4th inst. at Doctors Commons:

"October the twenty-first, one thousand eight hundred and five, then in sight of the Combined fleets of France and Spain, distant about ten miles.

"Whereas the eminent services of Emma Hamilton, widow of the Right Hon. Sir Wm. Hamilton, have been of the very greatest service to our King and country, to my knowledge, without her receiving any reward from either our King or country: first, that the nation and the King of Spain's letter of 1796, to his brother the King of Naples, acquitting him of his intention to declare war against England; from which letter the ministry sent out orders to them. Sir J. Jervis, to strike a stroke if opportunity offered, against either the arsenals of Spain or her fleets: that neither of these was done it not the fault of Lady Hamilton; the opportunity might have been offered.

Secondly, the British fleet under my command, could never have returned a second time to Egypt, had not Lady Hamilton's influence with the Queen of Naples, caused letters to be wrote to the Gov. of Syracufe, that he was to encourage the fleet being fupplied with every thing, fhould they put into any port of Sicily; we put into Syracufe, and received every fupply—went to Egypt, and deftroyed the French fleet!—Could I have rewarded thefe fervices, I would not now call upon my Country, but as that has not been in my power, I leave Emma Lady Hamilton, a legacy to my King and Country, that they will give an ample provifion to maintain her rank in life. I alfo leave to the beneficence of my country my adopted daughter Horatia Nelfon Thompfon, and I defire fhe will ufe in future the name of Nelfon only; thefe are the only favors I afk of my King and Country at this moment, when I am going to fight their battle.—May God bleis my King and Country, and all thefe I hold dear —my relations it is needlefs to mention; they will, of courfe, be amply provided for.

Corfican Revenge.—Mrs. Spencer Smith had been fome time in Italy, for the benefit of her health, and when the war broke out, was at the baths of Waldagno, near Vicenza, from whence, with other Englifh families, the retired to Venice, then an Auftrian garrifon, but fince furrendered to the French, whofe conduct in the firft inftance towards the Englifh fugitives found in that place, was uncommonly moderate. Mrs. Spencer Smith, in particular, who was confined by illnefs to her bed, received permiffion to remain till the recovery of her health, with the promife of being then allowed to retire wherever fhe chofe. Thus this lady remained unmolefted till the 18th of April, waiting for a paffage to Malta and England, when fhe was arrefted by order of Bonaparte, and placed in cuftody of a police guard of four men. She was removed that day to Padua, from thence to Milan, and is now, we underftand, to be matched to Verdun or Valenciennes, a diftance of at leaft 500 miles.—[Lon. pap.

Dr. Timothy Todd, an eminent Phyfician of Rutland, in Vermont, riding at full fpeed to vifit a patient dangeroufly fick, was thrown from his horfe, broke his leg, and wrenched the foot fo as to diflocate it at the ancle. In this deplorable fituation, the Doctor remained nearly two hours, before any affiftance came. In the mean time he crawled to a rock by the fide of a run of water, in which he laved the wounds, and cleanfed them from the clotted blood, and the fragments of his ftocking, which had been impelled into them—and, taking his inftruments from his pocket, with aftonifhing fortitude proceeded to take up a principal blood veffel—and when found by his friends, was difcovered with a pencil in his hand writing the following lines. Much has been vaunted of the firmnefs of the ancient ftoics, but he who can enter into the dreadful agonies of the Doctor's diftrefs, muft confefs, that the ferene fortitude and the true magnanimity of the Chriftian, by far excel the boafted infenfibility of the ftoic.

Foot Race.—The Foot-race between Lord Edward Somerfet, and the Hon. Edward Harbourd, took place yefterday morning in lord's cricket-ground. The rank of the fwift-footed antagonifts, and the celebrity they have already acquired for feats of activity, naturally attracted a numerous concourfe of fafhionables of both fexes.—The fpace to be run was nearly 100 yards. Lord Edward had the ftart of Mr. Harbourd and maintained the advantage for about 60 yards, when Mr. Harbourd gained upon and croffed him. In paffing, they ran againft each other, and in conſequence, as it is fuppofed, of the concuſſion, Lord Edward fell, Mr. Harbourd came in firft of courfe—but a difpute arofe refpecting the cauſe of Lord Edward's fall, which was not decided till after a long conference between three gentlemen, to whom the matter in queſtion was referred,—when Lord Frederick Beauclerk was chofen umpire; and the decifion, which proved highly ſatisfactory to both parties, was as follows: That on account of the accident which happened the race was deemed void; but Mr. Harbourd is allowed the power of calling on lord Edward, to run the race over again, any time within the next ſix months, upon giving his lordſhip ſix weeks notice. The bets were ſix to four in favour of Mr. Harbourd, who, when youth, ſuperior vigor and happy adapted form for ſuch exertions are conſidered, it is natural to ſuppoſe he muſt have gained upon his antagoniſt in the laſt fifty yards. Indeed the ladies were heard to obſerve, that however equal the competitors might be thought in other reſpects, it ſhould be recollected that Ld. Edward was a married man.

One Good act of Captain Whitby.

When Capt. Whitby, now of his Majeſty's ſhip Leander, commanded the Defire frigate at St. Domingo, Deſlalines, from information or ſuſpicion that an American Maſter of a veſſel had ſmuggled off ſome French Whites, to prevent them falling into his hands, ordered the laid Maſter to be hanged on the maſt in his preſence. Captain Whitby, ſhocked at ſo horrid a proceeding, ſent a boat manned and armed, to the reſcue of the ill-fated American. Fortunately the knot had ſlipped, and he was ſuſpended by the chin. A muſket ball was fired to clear the way, the ball of which paſſed near Deſlalines; the boat's crew landed, took down the victim, who ſoon recovered, and reſtored him to his ſhip. Deſſalines, inſtead of reſenting this, ſuffered Capt. W. to go at all times on ſhore unmoleſted, and paid him marked attention.

EXTRACT.

No heathen nation ever exhibited more remarkable inſtances of magnanimous generoſity and virtue, than the ancient Romans. We will cite an example worthy of imitation:—

"When Camillus was beſieging a ſmall city, and no hopes were entertained of his taking it under a conſiderable length of time, a ſchoolmaſter, who had the care of the children of the principal citizens, decoyed them into the Roman camp, and baſely offered to put them into the hands of Camillus, as a ſure means of compelling the inhabitants to ſurrender immediately. Camillus was ſtruck with the treachery of a wretch, whoſe duty it was to protect innocence, and not to betray it: Regarding the traitor with a fierce air—"Execrable wretch," ſaid he, "other thy abominable propoſals to creatures like thyſelf, and not to me. Though we are enemies to the city, there are natural tieſ that bind all mankind, which ſhould never be broken.—We fight not againſt an age of innocence, but againſt men; men who have indeed uſed us ill; but whoſe crimes are virtues when compared to thine." So ſaying, he immediately ordered him to be ſtript, his hands tied behind him, and, in that ignominious manner, whipped back to the city by his own ſcholars."

The late David Hume, Eſq. lived in the new town of Edinburgh; between which and the old town there is a communication, by means of an elegant bridge, over a ſwamp. Before one day to cut his way ſhorter, Mr. Hume took it into his head to paſs over a temporary one, which had been erected for general accommodation, till the new one could be completed. Unfortunately part of the temporary one gave way, and our illuſtrious philoſopher found himſelf ſtuck in the mud. On hearing him call aloud for aſſiſtance, an old woman haſtened to the ſpot, from whence the ſound ſeemed to proceed; but perceiving who he was, retired giving him any help. "Why, cried ſhe, are you not Hume the atheiſt?" "No! no! no! (returned the philoſopher) I am not an atheiſt; indeed you miſtake good woman, you do indeed!" "Let me hear then, returned the woman, if you can ſay the Belief."—Mr. Hume accordingly began the words, I believe in God, &c. and finiſhed them with ſo much propriety, that the old woman, convinced of his Chriſtian education, charitably afforded him that relief, which otherwiſe he would have thought it a duty of religion to deny.

We have often heard the anecdote of the boy, who being ſent by his maſter to beat his breakfaſt, conſtrued the direction into an order to eat it, on the authority of the old pedagogues, that "If was not a letter." The lad was not without law on his ſide. In the caſe of Shelbury vs. Bopard, (Cro. Eliz. 173.) in error, it was moved, that the writ of error ſhould abate for a variance between the writ and record, "for that the record was of lands in Colcheſter, and the writ ſuppoſeth the lands to be in Colcheſter;" but it was held to be no variance, becauſe "H non eſt litera, ſed aſpiratio." Cro. Anecdote.—A lady, deſervedly to be honored for her maternal feelings, was very much alarmed by having read in a morning paper, that her ſon was courting the Muſes, at Bath; and wrote him a letter, earneſtly requeſting him to beware of bad women, who would bring him to a morſel of bread.

It is my cuſtom, in a dearth of news, to entertain myſelf with ſome collection of advertiſements, that appear in all our public Prints. Theſe I conſider as accounts of news from the little world, in the ſame manner that the other parts of the paper are from great. If, in one, we hear that a ſovereign Prince is fled from his capital city, in the other we hear of a tradeſman who has ſhut up his ſhop. If in one we find the victory of a general, in the other we ſee the declaration of a private ſoldier. A man by no means big enough for the Gazette may eaſily creep into the advertiſements, by which means we often ſee an apothecary in the ſame paper with a plenipotentiary, or a running footman with an ambaſſador. An advertiſement from Piccadilly, goes down to the poſterity with an article from Madrid, and John Bartlett, of Goodman's fields, is celebrated in the Erie paper with the Emperor of Germany.—Addison

Interesting and important experiment in the Culture of Wheat.—On the 8th of August, 1804, a gentleman took a plant of wheat which had been sown in the beginning of June, and divided it into eighteen parts, and putting them into the ground, let them remain therein till the latter end of September, when he again took them up, and subdividing them into 67 parts of roots, replanted them:—they remained in this state till the end of March and the beginning of April, when the plants were a third time taken up, separated into 300 roots, and again replaced in the garden. Early in the season he reaped his little harvest, and found that by this process a single grain had been made to produce twenty one thousand one hundred and nine years containing five hundred and seventy thousand grains, measuring three pecks and three quarters, and weighing 67 lbs.—Lon. paper.

The leech, kept in a large phial, three fourths filled with water (changed once a week in summer, and twice in winter) and covered with a bit of linen rag, will prognosticate the changes of the weather: In serene weather it lays rolled up in a spiral form at the bottom. When it rains before afternoon, it creeps to the top and remains till the weather is settled. Against wind, it creeps in rapid motion, and seldom rests till it begins to blow hard.—If a remarkable storm of thunder and rain is to succeed it lodges some days before continually without the water, and is very uneasy and convulsed. In frost as in clear summer weather, it lies at the bottom and in snow, as in rain, it keeps at the mouth of the phial.

Anecdote.—Mr. Jefferson's Proclamation against Whitby reminds us of a ludicrous event that took place at the trial at Westminster of Lord George Gordon in 1780. One of the short-hand writers had clambered up to an elevated station of the hall to take down the proceedings, and with his ink-stand in his button hole and his pen behind his ear, was waiting with anxiety for the commencement of the trial, when Lord Mansfield had spied him, ordered an officer of the Court to take him into custody—the officer looking up at him, as a dog at a cat on a tree, called out, "you fellow come down and be taken into custody"—"not I" says the stenographer, "do you come up and catch me if you can." The poor officer after being heartily laughed at, not caring to risk his bones in the attempt, sneaked away and suffered the quill-driver to maintain his station unmolested during the whole trial.—*Char. Anecdote of the great constitutional Judge, Lord Chief Justice Holt.

In the reign of Queen Ann, in 17 4, several freemen of the borough of Aylesburgh had been refused the liberty of voting at an election for a member of Parliament, tho' they proved their qualifications as such. The law in this case imposes a fine on the returning officer of 100l. for every offence. On this principle they applied to Lord Chief Justice Holt, who delired the officer to be arrested. The House of Commons alarmed at this step, passed an order in the House to make it penal for either judge, counsel, or attorney, to stop at the trial; however, the Lord Chief Justice, and several lawyers, were hardy enough to oppose this order, and brought it to the Court of King's Bench. The house highly irritated at this contempt of their order, sent a Serjeant at arms for the judge to appear before them; but that resolute defender of the laws bade him, with a voice of authority, be gone; on which they sent a second message by their speaker, attended by as many members as stipulated the measure. After the speaker had delivered the message, his Lordship replied to him in the following remarkable words.—"Go back to your Chair, Mr. Speaker, within these five minutes, or you may depend on it I will send you to Newgate: you speak of your authority, but I tell you I sit here as an interpreter of the laws, and a distributer of justice; and were the whole House of Commons in your belly, I would not stir one step." The Speaker was prudent enough to retire, and the House were equally prudent to let the affair drop.

And an independent judiciary was undeniably proved to be a public benefit of inestimable worth.

A young lady was very much in love with a young Irish officer; but that false delicacy which prevails among the female sex, would not permit her to disclose her passion. However, her attentions were unremitted, and she was lavish in compliments when opportunity would permit. But the officer was a delicate man & unexperienced in these matters; he was therefore unconscious of her meaning: and if reminded for the young lady either to be more explicit, or continue in all the torture of suspence. The former being her choice she availed herself of a circumstance which happened. There were fowls, and a scarcity of plates—to the officer she hardly room for his fragments? which the young lady taking notice of, and resolving to seize the present happy moment, turned about, and with an expressive look, thus, pray, sir, say your bones unto mine. The officer took the hint, and an explanation took place that evening.

A tar on the neighbourhood of Wapping, who has lately applied a tobacconist shop, has the following notice upon a board in the window:

For many a gale I weather'd out,
Secure the cabin lay,
And having worn my coat so stout,
My smoker have I'ye laid.
No wonder for to-day I swear,
To spare or rob my tar!
But only beg my friends would smoke,
And buy a prudent gale.

EJACULATORY SONNET.

THY judgements, God, are holy, right and just,
Tho' oven yerils, and this, we think to dust;
Tho' the storm threats thy throne in course thy face,
I cannot in dust, nor my pen'ry grows;
First in thy truth, thy promise ever flies,
And jesus' boast my misery will procure;
Thy mercy beams with full resplendent ray,
And opens the portals of eternal day.
Before thy throne I bow beneath thy rod,
And own the sin and misery I've to God;
Thy hand I feel, nor dare thy dreadful power,
Support me, God, in this tremendous hour,
While'er my doom, whate'er my fate shall be,
O! grant me still to put my trust in thee.

The letter written by captain Wright, dated from the Temple at Paris, and addressed to Mr. Wallis, his first lieutenant, who was at the same time prisoner in Verdun Depot:

My dear Wallis,

IN order to make you but little on the Transfer of an offence, and favor at early delivery of my letter, I lend you this time merely a short one, in acknowledgment of your kind favor of the 20th instant, which procured me the pleasure of receiving your's of the 9th August, a few days ago. Accept of my best thanks the your congratulations on my promotion, which, however, it become indifferent to me, as more than to demonstrate the justice and liberality of government, of which I never entertained a doubt. I beg you to bear in mind that I have every proper feeling upon the subject, and that the handsome manner in which it has been conferred, has not escaped my observation, or failed to have due weight upon me, although it has been in my contemplation to decline it, considering, through an official channel here, in order to relieve parliament from the embarrassment my extraordinary situation must have given it under, and to prevent a practice, which I forbear to characterize, from bearing on any other victim of either side; but I feel upon further reflection, that although I was willing to forego its protection, yet an act of mine, thus situated, could absolve my government from the performance of its duty to a British subject. I request to hear that you are under the jurisdiction of a liberal minded military man, for I was under that unpleasant necessity in the regime you might be subject to. I think I had already prepared you to expect [illegible] from individuals, where they might be [illegible] to [illegible] that right. I doubt not you will make me acquainted with every your own eye to obliterate from the young minds of my poor boys (a) unfavourable impressions, to which they may have been subjected, and which will tend to neat, at length, that you are near those dear to me, in whose progress my whose fashionable course—give them my best wishes, and relieve their memories with what has been so often implied upon them. I must have no intercept, no indiscretion beyond truth, address out, or inclemency, no attraction from the truth, or suspicion of prejudice, to literature by exaggeration, no inappropriate conjure or proper person to make, but a liberal, gentlemanly conduct, and a steady perseverance agreeably, which will atone further the difficulties, that are before them. Remind them often of their distinction, of the precious leisure they have upon their hands; let the main spring of their actions be the character or my dear country, [illegible] remains them often how much I expect from them.

If Mr. Trevor's son (b) be with you, let him partake of all the advantages I propose incurring to my own three boys, but with such delicacy as would hurt neither his own, nor his parent's feelings. In the mean time, [illegible] pecuniary whatever the pecuniary [illegible] may be desirable, which, in the course of our correspondence, though it continues, I shall especially [illegible]

I am not unaware, my dear Wallis, that I am thus imposing a difficult task, and trying a dear brother's patience; but I am sure you will undertake it with pleasure.

Give my best respects to all my officers individually, and tell the dastard, I wish [illegible] good side of his father. I recommend him to walk to the public [illegible] if they are not in the neighborhood, and to follow up chemistry with science.

I shall be very glad to hear from any of my officers, when only are to a misthing more. [illegible] this, let my servant King attend on the boys, and tell him I have juggled him to take care of them.

Is your Mr. Brown (c) recovered? The last I heard of him was before your departure hence. Pray give an account nominally of all my people. Poor old Langton I suppose you know is no more. Is that your being, (d) whose death seemed unwilling to accompish, still living?

I have a little cat that has just taken the caprice of lying upon my papers, and puts to me, to you much perceive that I am not without amiable society; and I much tell you, for the comfort of any other amiable creature who may weep for my misfortunes, that I can bear them, however great or multiplied; but that I am [illegible] than people are aware whose apprehensions magnify, even are aware of, for I have within a few months obtained the facility of spreading books, and subscribing to the Monitor, whole names and prejudices I affect you I am not in the least danger of stopping. Now take you well, and believe me, most feasibly and unfeignedly, your friend.

P. S.—Tell me, particularly, what all the boys have done; tell them I occasionally think of them. Adieu!

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:—

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: GREETING

WHEREAS it is neceffary for the Peace and Good Government of the faid Province, that all His Majefty's Officers within the fame, fhould continue in their feveral Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and confent of our Executive Council, to iffue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the faid Officers to continue in their faid Offices and Employments, of which all Perfons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themfelves accordingly.

IN Teftemony whereof, WE have caufed thefe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our faid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witnefs our truffy and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Efquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of Auguft, in the Year of our Lord one thoufand eight hundred and fix, and forty-fixth year of our Reign. F. G.

(CIRCULAR.) Downing Street, 18 June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation propofed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation, We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; We therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.
(Signed)
Right Honble William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof, which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

THE ORACLE.

YORK, 11th October, 1806.

On Wednesday evening the 1st inst. his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor and family arrived at Niagara, after a pleasant passage of little more than four hours.

At twelve o'clock next day, the Magistrates and principal Inhabitants waited upon him, and presented the following Address:—

To his Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, the Magistrates and the principal Inhabitants of the District of Niagara, embrace with pleasure this early opportunity of presenting our personal respects, and of congratulating your Excellency on your safe arrival as Lieutenant Governor in this Province.

In adverting to the melancholy event which led to this, we are well assured that we will not offend, by expressing our sincere regard, and our unfeigned sorrow for the loss of your predecessor, who was endeared to us by a former connexion, and as this is a debt of gratitude for very essential favours.

Happy in a Constitution, the best perhaps, which has yet been devised—under the auspices of our most gracious and much loved Sovereign—under the protection of a Mother Country, in which we justly pride ourselves—possessing also a healthy climate, and cultivating a fruitful soil, we continue, under the blessing of God, to enjoy peace in the greatest plenty.

For such manifold favours, we believe that the best way to shew our thankfulness is by endeavouring so to act as to merit them.

Thus situated, we have nothing whereof to complain; we hardly know of any thing for which to ask.

In a country so recently settled, and whose regulations cannot all have obtained the test of experience, some difficulties will naturally arise, some inconveniencies may present themselves requiring amendment.

Should any such occur amongst us, we will confidently address ourselves to your Excellency, with the well founded hopes that we shall receive from your paternal care such redress as it may be in your power to give.

To our congratulations we beg leave to join our warmest wishes, that health, happiness, and every comfort may constantly attend on you and yours.

These, the sentiments of respect and regard, are at our request, and in our presence, subscribed as ours, by

(Signed) R. HAMILTON,
Lieut. of the County of Lincoln, and Chairman of the Quarter Sessions

He was pleased to receive them very graciously, and to their Address returned the following Answer:—

Gentlemen,

I Thank you for this early mark of your respect and attention.

The sorrow you so feelingly express for the loss of my predecessor, reflects the highest honor on you. I have been long enough in this Province to be convinced, that the measures of the late Lieutenant Governor were calculated for the benefit of this country and for his Majesty's interest.

I rejoice at the loyalty and attachment you profess to our most gracious Sovereign, and that you are sensible of the blessings of our happy Constitution.

I shall be at all times happy to pay attention to the representations of his Majesty's subjects; and be assured, Gentlemen, that this Address has impressed me with the most favorable opinion of the Magistrates and principal Inhabitants of Niagara.

(Signed)
FRANCIS GORE.

Latest Intelligence.

NAPLES, June 7.

Vesuvius continues to rage. The crater still discharges a great quantity of flames, resembling balls. On the 4th and 5th, a continual noise was heard extremely loud, while the thick cloud that enveloped the summit of the mountain was alternately penetrated by flashes of fire, amazingly vivid, resembling lightning. The course of the lava ran towards the Torre del Greco, and along the entrance upon which the Chamber of Consultation is situated, and has proceeded to the distance of four miles, destroying all the vines, vineyards, and habitations it has met with in its course. Just now it has reached the high road in the neighbourhood of Torre del Greco, while a great number of strangers and curious persons are repairing to the spot to be witnesses of the singular phenomenon. The Torre del Greco is situated at the foot of Vesuvius, with a population of 15,000 souls.

The present eruption of Vesuvius exceeds any thing of the kind within the memory of man. The summit of the mountain is torn to pieces, and the rim of the crater is quite altered, in consequence of the number of the fissures, to such a degree, that it is thought that in the course of a few days the whole side of the mountain will fall in. About 200 dwelling houses and effates have been ruined, with large tracts of vineyard ground, corn fields, &c. The volcano still seems to contain a large portion of matter, as the subterraneous noises are dreadful.—Flashes of lightning are emitted from time to time from clouds of smoke. The people are extremely apprehensive that the Torre del Greco may share the fate of Herculaneum, in the year 79. A part of the streets of Torre del Greco have already been inundated by the lava, which the inhabitants have removed with incredible labour and fatigue.—Still the stream continues to run very near the place; and the inhabitants are deterred from leaving their houses for fear of being injured by the glowing cinders discharged by the mountain. A great quantity of ashes have also fallen in Naples.

On Saturday arrived here the ſhip Felix, Captain Reed, from Naples, which portfhe left the 30th July ; we have received no papers by her, but the verbal information which we obtain from an intelligent paſſenger, is in ſubſtance to the following effect :

France had been much talked of, but had not indulged any ſpeculations founded on expectation of that event. The general opinion was, that there would be no peace immediately. It was ſaid that the French Emperor had given in his ultimatum, which was in terms that it was not ſuppoſed Britain would accede to.

The Fleet. — Our coaſt is in probable will be the ſcene of a great Naval enterprize, as the Britiſh fleet, as well as the French, are now near us. On Saturday evening the Melampus frigate, one of the fleet of Sir R. Strachan, anchored in Hampton Roads This fleet is compoſed of the Valiant, Raſpuce, Agincourt, 74 ; Belliſle, 74 ; Bellona, 74 ; Montague, 74 ; Terrible, 74 ; Triumph, 74 ; Melampus and another frigate

It appears that Sir R. Strachan having heard in the Weſt Indies, that Admiral Willaumez was on the coaſt of America, & probably knowing the route which Sir John B. Warren had taken, he loſt no time in ſeeking the French fleet, and it is ſurpriſing how they have miſſed. Thus the fleet of Admiral Willaumez, and the ſquadron of commodore L'Hermite, or parts of both, were on the coaſt there can be no doubt.

The Patriot of 74 guns and the Valentine frigate, belonging to Admiral Wiſeman's fleet are in port, the former at Annapolis, and the latter in the Delaware. The Cybele frigate belonging to commodore L'Hermite's ſquadron, is in this port.

The following is a liſt of the French force.—The Requin, 80 guns ; Pluton, 84 ; Veteran, 80 ; Superbe, 74 ; Eole, 74 ; Impetueux, 74 ; Patriot, 74 (at Annapolis) ; Firbleent, 44 ; Valeureux, 40 (in the Delaware) ; Cybele, 44 (at Norfolk.)

RESUSCITATION.

On Monday week, as two perſons were bathing in Jackſon's Boats, a little above the Queen's Bank, in the Tyne, one of them ſlipped into a hole, and was ſuppoſed to be drowned. The body, after remaining under water nearly half an hour, was taken out, and conveyed to the South Shore Cuſtom-houſe. A young medical gentleman who happened to be in the neighbourhood, and who immediately attended, was informed at the time, operate a vein, no doubt from the beſt intentions, and though the blood appeared, there were no hopes of returning life. Another medical gentleman was ſent for, who merely applied hot cloths, but left him, declaring there was no chance of recovery. In half an hour his aſſiſtant alſo left him, expreſſing the ſame opinion. Fortunately, however, Dr. Stephens, of Low-hill, happened to be in the neighborhood, and very humanely offered his aſſiſtance.—On examining the body, he declared his opinion that life might be reſtored, provided perſeverance was exerted.—He inſtantly ſent for a medicine of his own preparation, which was juſt before ſent to a patient not far diſtant, and which he applied to the breaſt, axillæ, temples, feet, &c. In the ſpace of ten minutes, although two hours had now elapſed ſince the body was taken up, ſymptoms of reſpiration was reſtored In the courſe of an hour, the moſt encouraging practical recovery manifeſted itſelf, and in three hours the poor unfortunate man, who had been ſo precipitately ſnatched the victim of untimely death, recovered his ſpeech, and is now we underſtand, reſtored to his friends and ſociety. We conceive it to be of great importance that facts at this nature ſhould be made as public as poſſible.

(CIRCULAR.)

Downing Street, 18 June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to refcind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation propofed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.)

Pay Office, Horse Guards, 8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor; Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to refcind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.
(Signed)

Right Honble. William Windham &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

Lateft Intelligence.

LONDON, August 4.

On Saturday evening, about five o'clock, Lord Lauderdale, appointed minister plenipotentiary on the part of our government, to conduct the negotiation that has been for some time going on with the Court of St. Cloud, left town. Mr. Goddard, the person who brought over the difpatches received on Friday, did not accompany his Lordship, as flated in some morning papers, but followed him yesterday. His Lordship was accompanied by Profeffor Dugald Stuart and Mr Baffour, the meffengers, who will bring back the firft difpatches from his Lordship.

About one o'clock yesterday morning Lord Lauderdale reached Deal, and foon after embarked on board the Clyde frigate, commodore Owen, which failed for the French coaft between five and 6 o'clock and landed his Lordship at two o'clock the same morning. His Lordship would probably reach Paris this day.

The Expedition.—Were it not that Lord Lauderdale has actually fet out for Paris, we fhould have been inclined to think that feveral circumftances connected with the expedition to Sicily formed rather to indicate apprehenfions of the failure of the negociation. The Guards, who have been for fome time kept rather in an undecided ftate at Chatham, Deal, Ramfgate, &c. and marched and counter-marched in variety of direction, after being at length embarked, have been ordered to proceed with all expedition to Portfmouth, where the expedition for Sicily will ftart.

Many Officers of the Guards have proceeded to Portfmouth by land: moft of the ftaff of them have done fo. There are to be immediately embarked, and to follow to Portfmouth with all fpeed, the Royal Staff corps, the Royal Waggon corps, the Royal Artillery, the 95th regiment five companies, the 40th regiment, the 52d do. the 62d do. and the 81th do.

August 5.

The Clyde frigate returned to Deal, yefterday, after having fafely landed lord Lauderdale at Calais. Some meffengers have proceeded to France with difpatches, fince his lordfhip left town, but no difpatches have yet been received from his lordfhip. The difpatches with the refult of his conference with the French plenipotentiary, or the Minifter for foreign affairs himfelf, may be expected at the clofe of the prefent, or early in the next week.

The Emperor of Ruffia is underftood to have propofed to his Swedifh Majefty to difcontinue the hoftilities on the Pruffian ports; and it is fuppofed if his reprefentations fhould not be attended to, that he would give his permiffion for the invafion of Pomerania.—It was generally believed in that part of the 25th ult. This apprehenfion, however, may be conftrued as premature. Pruffia will fubmit to compromife, if the terms until the refult of the repreſentations laft made by her to the Court of St. Peterſburgh is known.—There is nothing now in the ftate of the continent to induce his Swedifh Majefty to continue in that ungenerous attitude which he has fo long preſerved, with fo much honor to his country, and advantage to his perſonal character.

In opinion is prevalent in Germany, that Ruffia and the Porte are on the eve of war, and that the latter is to receive the affiftance of the powerful army which the French have collected in Dalmatia. Between its enemies and its allies, the Turkifh power is in a fair way of being driven out of Europe.

It is now pretty well known, that Lt General Simcoe, is to be the fucceffor to Lord Lake, in the Eaft-Indies.

Accounts by the Lisbon mail ſtate, that Bonaparte had required of the King of Spain to receive an ambaſſador from the new created king of Naples. It was alſo infiſted on, that the Catholic Majeſty ſhould agree to the dethroning of his own daughter, the queen of Etruria, and that he ſhould further conſent to the incorporation of four of his provinces with the kingdom of France, viz. Catalon a, Arragon, Navarre, and Biſcay, thereby making the river Ebro the boundary between France and Spain, inſtead of the Pyrenees. The Courts of Madrid made ſtrong remonſtrances againſt ſuch unjuſtifiable pretenſions; & war was even declared by the French miniſter ſix hours before his Catholic Majeſty conſented to the meaſure.

August 6.

Yeſterday diſpatches were received by a flag of truce, from Boulogne Their contents have not tranſpired.

Stocks declined yeſterday towards the cloſe of the market The fall was ſcarcely accountable for. Some would have it that diſpatches had been received from France, which brought accounts unfavorable to peace. —Others ſent a meſſenger over Lauderdale to order his immediate return The real cauſe, however, was ſimply this: Several holders of omnium finding the price high enough, withed to realize their profit, and brought large ſums into the market for ſale.

We ſtand yeſterday, and on the beſt authority, that M. D'Oubril had, in ſigning the preliminary treaty with France gone beyond his inſtructions.

We can now add, that the terms are ſo ignominious and diſadvantageous to Ruſſia, that it is thought by ſome diplomatiſts, the Emperor Alexander will probably heſitate to ratify them.

In the mean time, Napoleon acts as if even the Definitive Treaty was ſigned. On the very day that D'Oubril ſigned the preliminary treaty, it was intimated to the Auſtrian ambaſſador, that his mother muſt immediately abdicate the crown he has ſo long worn as head of the German Empire, and confine himſelf to torture to ſuch matters as concern only his own houſe.

The Lord Hobart packet, from New-York and Halifax, is arrived at Falmouth.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.

Further particulars reſpecting the late engagement off Havanna.—Captain Johnſton, whom we mentioned yeſterday as having returned to Charleſton in conſequence of the late gale, was boarded on the 3d inſtant, by the Engliſh frigates Arethuſa, Capt. Brifbane, and Anſon, Capt. ——. Capt. Briſbane ſent his boat on board, with two hogſheads of water, we being then on allowance of a pint bottle of water per day. He alſo ſupplied the Peggy with water. Capt. Briſbane had with him two prizes, the Spaniſh frigate La Pomone, and the brig Mary, of Philadelphia

The following account of the capture of La Pomone was handed to Capt. Johnſton by the Captain's Clerk of the Arethuſa:—

"Auguſt 20, we diſcovered a ſtrange ſail—made all fail poſſible in chaſe. At firſt, thought her a Spaniſh line of battle ſhip—made ſignal to lay the ſtrange on board. On coming up, found her anchored to leeward of Havanna, under the protection of a battery, mounting 16 thirty-ſix pounders, and ſupported by twelve gun boats, each carrying a twenty-four pounder forward, and a nine pounder aft, with 100 men. At 11 A. M. we ran cloſe to ſhore, and anchored within piſtol ſhot of her. A general action commenced ſoon after In the courſe of twenty minutes the ſtrunck, and proved to be La Pomone, from Vera Cruz laden with ſpecie and plate.

"During the action the fort blew up, three gunboats ſhared the ſame fate, ſeven ſunk, and two ran aſhore.

"The Arethuſa had two ſeamen killed; and Capt. Briſbane, two Lieutenants and thirty ſeamen wounded. The Anſon, one killed and ſix wounded.

"La Pomone, had her captain and twenty men killed, and thirty men wounded; ſeveral of which have ſince died. She mounted 42 guns, and carried 340 men."

September 18.

The following curious circumſtance occurred on Tueſday laſt, at Mr. George Eyre's ſhip-yard, Kenſington:

On heaving down the ſhip Penſylvania Packet, lately from Cowes, in order to diſcover a ſmall leak, which ſhe had experienced on her paſſage home, it was found that ſhe had been ſtruck about the fort below the bends by a large fiſh, which had driven its taſk or ſword through the copper ſheathing and bottom plank, to the ceiling inſide; and being unable to draw it out again, had remaining in the hole broke off ſhort outſide. The force with which it was driven in, was ſo great as to ſplinter the plank and cauſe the leak. That the ſword been withdrawn, 'tis probable the ſhip would have made more water than could have been riſted by the pumps. Part of the ſword was cut off in extricating it, the remainder meaſures ten inches long, and nearly two inches in diameter.

THE PEACE.

Captain Story, who arrived at this port yeſterday, in 47 days from Leghorn, informs, that on the 16th of Auguſt, off Malaga, he was boarded by ſeveral officers from the Britiſh cutter L'Eſpoir, Capt. Hope, then only two days from Gibraltar. They informed Capt. Story, (and in ſuch a way as to induce Capt. S. to believe the news), authentic accounts had reached Gibraltar, direct, that on the 9th of Auguſt, the PRELIMINARIES of PEACE were ſigned at Madrid, between SPAIN and GREAT BRITAIN —and that it was the general opinion, at Gibraltar, that a General Peace would ſoon take place

From the knowledge of Captain Story's veracity, we give full credit to the above information.—

N. Y. Gaz.

A gentleman who arrived here yeſterday from Leghorn, in the ſhip Connecticut, Capt. Story, has favoured the Editors of this Gazette with a Gazette Italien papers to the 30th of July, from which the following is tranſlated.

A letter from Naples of the 19th of July, contains the following official Note of the ſurrender of Gaeta:

"Yeſterday the 18th, at 6 P M the fortreſs of Gaeta ſurrendered to the French. As ſoon as the grand breach was formed in the citadel, at the foot of the counter-ſcarp, which in extent was ſufficient to contain 16 men in front, three columns of French troops were ready to aſſend it; and the garriſon ſeeing the impoſſibility of reſiſtance, and the great impatience, the ſignal of aſſault.

"The Marſhal Meſſena demanded the ſurrender for the laſt time. The beſieged aſked for ſeveral hours delay, in order to obtain the permiſſion of the Prince Philiſtadt (who is uppears by another paper, had been wounded, and requested on board a Britiſh veſſel); —but they were anſwered, that in one hour, the place would be taken by force of arms. The appearance of the columns ready to march at a moment's warning, a breach already made & eaſy to be mounted and the ſecurity of being treated agreeably to the laws of war, were the ſtrong motives which induced the garriſon to capitulate.

"The garriſon are priſoners of war, with permiſſion to march off, but not to ſerve in 18 months The artillery and magazines were delivered to the French in the ſtate in which they were found. The other articles are, as yet, unknown.

"The artillery of all the forts of the capital, this morning announced this important event."

In the year 1792, the Rev. Mr P——n, who held a living not many miles from Hull, returning home from doing duty one day, attended by his wife and ſon on old horſe, their carriage broke down. The ages of the party, their driver, &c. at that time, was as under, viz the vicar 75 years, his wife 83, nurſe 66, coachman 77, firſt horſe 25, ſecond horſe 15, and the carriage 50; in all 449 years.

MONTREAL, Auguſt 18.

On Tueſday laſt, whilſt was the univerſary of the Prince of Wales's birth day, a numerous company of Gentlemen and Ladies went from Montreal to the Caledonia, to the opening of the new locks and passing a number of batteaux through the Canal. The company were seated in the batteaux, being proceeded by the Band of Music of the New Brunswick Fencibles, and proceeded through the Canal, the sides of which were decorated with colors and crowded by a great concourse of spectators assembled from the country adjacent, and were received at the head of the Canal by a discharge of guns.

The flight was highly pleasing to the beholders. After passing through the Canal the company were regaled at a very handsome entertainment prepared by Captain By the Commanding Engineer.

This Canal at the expense of Government is cut through a bed of rock a quarter of a mile in length, and the work performed in a masterly manner, which does great credit to those who planned and those who have had the direction of the work, and will greatly facilitate the transports of Lower and Upper Canada.

I have sent you," says Jack Handspeck, in answer to the letter giving an account of the Victory of Trafalgar, "a copy of a song on the occasion of the late most brave commander, Lord Nelson, written by Mr Pa- r our captain's clerk, who you must know is a bit of a poet, and a great favourite, I assure you, in the ward room, because he can palaver and give them some of you white lined chamber talk."

COPY OF THE VERSES.

Sam Spritsail was a seaman true,
As ever lov'd his glass or bowl;
No landman's tricks Sam Spritsail knew,
Nor ever flunk'd from Neptune's shoal.
Sam Spritsail now would stir the land
From top gallant mast-head thrice;
And with a bet mount Gallic hand,
Could fleer three a nonpareil's eye.
And now clofe off Trafalgar bay,
The Gallic squadron bears to fight;
England Expects and we they;
No British seaman shuns the fight,
But ah! though England gains the day,
The loss of England we regret;
Since Victory bears the news away,
The gallant Nelson is no more.
A quarter-master now at night,
As Sam stands by the hour glass,
He tells the story of the fight,
While the minutes cheerful pass.
Yet let no fearful terror spread,
The foe we yet shall dare to meet;
For though our gallant Nelson is dead,
His Spirit lives throughout the fleet. [Ex. Mag.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, 18th October, 1806.

The following Addresses were presented to the Honorable Mr. Justice Thorpe while on the Circuit:

Sandwich, 4th September 1806.

SIR,

WE the Grand Jury of the Western District, being strongly impressed with a high sense of your distinguished merit in the discharge of the various duties of your office; and having in the various courts in which we were called upon to discharge the function of Jurors, received from you such explanations of our duty, as enabled us to discriminate between controversy and claim, between accusation and offence; beg leave to return you our sincere thanks, and to offer you our congratulations, for the high honors you have so justly acquired, and which we have labored to carry into effect.

We assure you that the lessons of moderation, and the principles of candid order, which you were pleased to convey to us shall be not only remembered by ourselves but assiduously diffused among our relations and friends, and that it shall be our constant endeavour to circulate through every part of the community, sentiments so instructive to our present happiness, and so conducive to our future prosperity.

(Signed by the Foreman and 25 others.)

To the Petit Jury of the Western District.

GENTLEMEN,

EVERY sentiment breathed in your kind address, is creditable to me, honorable to you, and valuable to the community.

You respect and uphold the Law, you love and diffuse morality, you set the best example for social order, and reward the exertion of others by the warmest encomium.

Such principles, private virtue, and active industry, lead to greatness, honorable and sure; that you may long enjoy the blessings you so truly deserve, is the fervent wish of your obliged, obedient and very humble servant

ROBERT THORPE.

Sept. 6th 1806.

To the Honble. Justice Thorpe,

WE the Petit Jury of the District of Niagara, beg leave to make to you as the chief of their Assizes, our sincere acknowledgments for your exemplary attention to us of the important matter of our duty, and also to offer you that indubitable conveyed with such perfection, and do reward to Justice, which we conceive will always be held by us in grateful remembrance.

We admire the constitution, on which you have so happily discoursed in progress to us, we contemplate its system, and its tendency to ensure to us the enjoyment of the most valuable rights and the exercise of the most distinguished privileges.

It is to us no small consolation, on returning to our domestic concerns, that the execution of those laws, which we from duty as well as choice, are follicitous to maintain, are entrusted to one so capable of deliberating on their import, and so tenacious of preserving them inviolable: and we hope that neither the efforts of the misguided, nor the remonstrances of the ignorant, will ever shake those rules of evidence which give to the trial by Jury a certainty of decision and a standard of Justice.

[Signed by the Foreman and 33 others.]

To the Petit Jury of the Niagara District,

GENTLEMEN,

I was anxious to affix you in the faithful discharge of your important duty, as your approbation of my exertion is more than reward.

Your admiration of the Constitution, of which you are so valuable a branch, and your veneration of those Laws, which you so skilfully expound, is virtuous and security.

While we commiserate the misery of the Eastern & contemplate the happiness of the Western hemisphere, let us be grateful to the Almighty for our accumulated blessings, and sincerely pray, that England may be an example, and France a warning to our latest posterity.

Be assured Gentlemen, I shall preserve attentive remembrance of your obliged, obedient humble servant,

ROBERT THORPE.

October 6, 1806.

I will labor to accomplish you Gentlemen, that your confidence has not been misplaced; in your obliged, obedient, and very humble servant

ROBERT THORPE.

DIED, on Friday the 10th inst. at night, in consequence of a wound received that morning in a duel, WILLIAM WEEKES Elquire, Barrister at Law, and a member of the House of Assembly for the Counties of York, Durham and Simcoe. His remains were interred at Niagara on Saturday.

Found,

ON Sunday last, the 12th inst. on the Beach opposite Messrs. Ashbridges, an IRON POT, capable of containing about two pails full—whoever may own the above mentioned pot, may have it again by proving property and paying charges, on application to Samuel Lewis or to the Printer hereof.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the thirteenth day of October to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty-ninth day of August, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the thirteenth day of October instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the safe and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twentieth day of November next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this SIXTH day of OCTOBER, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-fifth year of our reign. F. G.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of his Honor the President in Council, to Military Claimants who were resident in this Province, on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein, since that period, and who as yet have not laid their Claims before the Executive Government for the portion of Lands allowed by his Majesty's instructions to persons of that description, that such Military Claimants shall be admitted to apply for such portion of Lands, under the like privileges as if they had made application previous to the said 28th day of July 1798. PROVIDED that the Military Claimant making such application, shall by his own Affidavit, as well as by the Affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province, that he the said Claimant was resident in this Province on or before the said 28th day of July 1798, and since that period hath continued to reside therein, which said Affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person administering the Government in Council for such Lands.—It is further hereby notified, that the above dispensation from personal attendance at the seat of Government is not to extend to the sons of U. E. loyalists who reside in the Home District, they not being subject to like inconveniences with persons of that description inhabiting the more distant parts of this Province. JOHN SMALL

Clerk of the Executive Council.

Council Chamber, 16th May, 1806.

NOTICE is hereby given by order of His Honor the President in Council, that the personal attendance of the Sons of U. E. Loyalists at the Seat of Government for the purpose of applying for the Lands to which they are entitled under His Majesty's instructions, will in future be dispensed with: PROVIDED that the Person making such application shall by his own affidavit, and also by the affidavit of one or more of the Inhabitants of the District wherein he resides, to be made before the Quarter Sessions of that District, and certified by the Chairman of such Sessions, make it appear to the Executive Government of this Province that "he, the person making "the said application, is the Son of a "U. E. Loyalist, (specifying the name "and place of abode of his Father) & "that he hath attained the full age of "Twenty-one years," which said affidavits are to be annexed to the Petition

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN & GREETING:

WHEREAS it is necessary for the Peace and Good Government of the said Province, that all His Majesty's Officers within the same, should continue in their several Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to issue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the said Officers to continue in their said Offices and Employments, of which all Persons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

IN Testemony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty-ninth day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our Reign. F. G.

(CIRCULAR.) Downing Street, 1st June, 1808.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation proposed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient

Humble Servant,

W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 8th May, 1808.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.

(Signed)

Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the 1st of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business: And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation proposed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient

Humble Servant,

W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Core, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 8th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.

(Signed)

Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807 of Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

☞ From a want of the neceſſary information we, in our laſt, announced the funeral of Mr Weekes as having taken place on Saturday the 11th inſt.—We now beg leave to refer our Readers to the following correct ſtatement:—

OBITUARY.

It is with ſentiments of the deepeſt regret that we announce to the publick the death of William Weekes Eſquire, Barriſter at Law in this Province; not only from the melancholy circumſtances attendant on his untimely death, but alſo from a view of the many virtues the Province is deprived of by that death. In him the orphan has loſt a father, the widow a friend, the injured a protector, ſociety a pleaſing and ſafe companion, and the Bar one of its ableſt advocates.

Mr. Weekes was honeſt without the ſhew of oſtentation—wealth or ſplendor held no lure for him; nor could any pecuniary motives induce him to ſwerve in the ſmalleſt degree from that which he conceived to be ſtrictly honorable. His laſt moments were marked with that fortitude which was the characteriſtic of his life; convinced of the purity of which, he met death with pleaſure.

His funeral was delayed longer than could have been wiſhed, a form of law being neceſſary previous to that ceremony, he was interred on Tueſday the fourteenth. His funeral was attended by a reſpectable aſſemblage of people, from the houſe of John Mackay, Eſq. in the following order:

FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of Separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. List, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the Satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted in that List, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful subjects may be made partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to its fullest extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

Copy of a letter from the Right Hon. the Earl of St. Vincent, K. B. Admiral and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's fleet employed in the Channel, Soundings, &c. to William Marsden Esq. dated on board his Majesty's ship the Hibernia, off Ushant, the 5th instant.

Sir,

I have great pleasure in transmitting the accompanying letter from Captain Keats, with its inclosure from Captain R. D. Oliver of his Majesty's ship the Mars whose perseverance and judgment enabled him to capture a fine French frigate in the face of her three consorts of equal force.

I am, &c. ST. VINCENT.

Superb, August 5.

My Lord—I have the honor to acquaint your Lordship a letter from Captain Oliver, of the Mars, dating his chace, from the squadron, and capture of La Rhine, a fine French frigate, on the 28th ult. with which he is just returned; and I cannot exceedingly that the Mars could not be kept right on the night of the 27th, as it would, doubtless, have led to more important success.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) R. G. KEATS.

The Earl of St. Vincent, K. B. &c. &c.

Mars, at Sea, July 29, lat. 15 deg. 9 min. N. long. 24 deg. 50 min. at noon.

SIR—I beg leave to acquaint you, that I continued in pursuit of four of the enemy's frigates the night of the 27th instant; although I left sight of them, as also of the squadron under your command soon after it was dark, except the Spencer, which we saw until about eleven o'clock, on the ice quarter, when she was observed to have some lofts fires. We steered about a point more than the boat might, with a light in the stern, standing to the southward, and carried a press of sail; I was induced so to do from observing the course the enemy's squadron was steering when first seen, and judging that it would increase their difficulty of getting to seaward of us; it had that effect most fully, for at day light yesterday morning they were discovered directly on the same bearing as on the previous evening though at a greater distance, except their fast-most ship, which we appeared to be gaining on. This induced the French Commodore to tack with his three headmost ships, and join her, and formed in line of battle on the larboard tack, I thought, and with a view to a determination to try the fortune of war, which was what every one on board the Mars most anxiously wished; but after making some signals, about three in the afternoons he made off with three frigates, the other continued her course under an extraordinary press of sail, and finding she was the only one we had gained on, during a chace of 150 miles, and the day for ligats, I still kept after her till 6 o'clock, when in the midst of a violent squall of wind and hail, we were ranging upon her larboard quarter; after the first flash her colors, just at the moment our broadside was ready to open upon her. She proved to be La Rhin, a very fine French frigate of 44 guns, 18-pounders on the main deck, and 32s new; only four years old, commanded by Captain Chefneau; the squadron was commanded by Monsieur Leonard Lamellierie, in the Hortensia, with the Hermione and Themis frigates, on their return from Porto Rico. Soon after the Rhin had surrendered, as the squall clear'd away, the other three frigates were standing to the south East; and I regret to the weather, which has yet prevented our removing more than one third of the prisoners, made it impracticable for me to pursue them further. I cannot conclude without expressing my admiration of the conduct of every officer and man in this ship during a chace of twenty four hours against so superior a force, which very bad weather, also frequent vain appearal of our flags were felt, and repeated wish of every one, in short, that the commander of the French squadron waited our approach, from the great mind manifested by every person on board, I have no doubt but our efforts would have been crowned with complete success in their direction.

I have the honor to be, &c.

ROB. DUDLEY OLIVER.

To Captain Keats, of his Majesty's ship Superb, commanding a detached squadron, &c.

P. S. The Rhin was ascertained to be about five or six quarter-deck and forecastle guns, and a proper enemy.

The Lords of the Admiralty have received the following copy of a letter from Capt. Sibley, of the Minerva of 38 guns to Sir Home Popham, viz.

Admiralty, in Table-Bay, Cape of Good Hope, May 20.

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you of the arrival of his Majesty's ship under my command, at this anchorage, with the vessels (as per margin) * accompanied by the Spanish ship Medea (formerly the Dedaigneuse La Reparadora, of 30 guns; 12 and 24 pounders) and 315 men, Commanded by Brigadier General an officer in the Spanish navy. We fell in with and captured her on the 8th inst. in lat. 30, deg. 30 min. S. and long. 14 deg. 20 min. W. She had been out a month from Montevideo, in the Rio de la Plata, and had taken nothing. I have great satisfaction in announcing the capture of this ship to you, as from her magnitude and force, she might have done much mischief to the trade on the coast of Africa; her crew are a deliperate set of French, Spaniards, Portuguese, & Americans, the principal officers French, she had authority from the Viceroy to wear the colours of the King of Spain, and had a company of Spanish Infantry on board. She is a strong well built vessel, about four years old, coppered and copper fastened, and is, in my opinion, well calculated for his Majesty's service. I have the honor to be, &c.

JOHN SIBLEY,

Commodore Sir Home Popham, &c. &c.

NEW YORK, October 8.

Late and interesting Foreign News.—To the politeness of Captain Waterman of the ship Eliza, who arrived this morning in 40 days from Liverpool, we are indebted for London papers to the 15th of August. Our regular files of London papers and Lloyd's List, from our Liverpool Correspondent, are to the evening of the same day inclusive. From them, we have made a copious and interesting selection for the Commercial Advertiser of this evening.

The prospect of Peace is daily inflowing. Basilico, the anxiously expected Messenger from Paris, with dispatches from the Earl of Lauderdale, arrived at Mr. Fox's office on the morning of the 14th. All that has transpired respecting their dispatches is contained in the following articles from the Courier of the 15th.

The Cabinet Council yesterday was held at one o'clock, and last till three. It was attended by Lord Grenville, the Lord Chancellor, Earl Spencer, Lord Howick, Lord Sidmouth, Lord Henry Petty, Mr. Windham, and the other Cabinet Ministers in town, with the exception of Mr. Fox. As soon as it broke up, Bulkley was ordered to be in readiness to return to Paris. He set off at half past ten last night. He was not more, it is said than 48 hours from Paris, having left that capital on Tuesday morning, and not on Monday, as was reported yesterday.

Mr. Fox says the Oracle of the 14th, continues to advance every day more and more rapidly to a state of convalescence. After a very agreeable and refreshing night's rest, he yesterday morning awoke wonderfully improved in his bodily health. Mr. Fox's numerous friends will rejoice to hear, that the physicians finding his stomach greatly invigorated, ordered him food of a more substantial kind. He again passed several hours in the drawing-room, seeing and answering several enquirers personally. He also wrote some short letters, read and signed his name to some dispatches, and, in fact, began actively to resume his official duties. Lord and Lady Holland, Mrs Fox, and, in short, the whole family, with its extensive connexions, are at last comforted in their hopes and wishes, that Mr. Fox is now out of danger.

At the Council held yesterday, at the Queen's House, says the Courier of the same date, Parliament was further prorogued from the 28th instant, to the 9th October. But then Parliament, will, it is reported, never meet again. A dissolution is said to be intended in September.

We understand that letters from Amsterdam, of the 8th of August, in town, stating that the hopes of Peace at that place were at an end, and that the ships of the line at Amsterdam and Helvoetsluys, which were dismantled in July, were refitting with great expedition, and were ordered to be in immediate readiness for sea.

England and America.

The Lord Mayor gave yesterday a splendid Entertainment to the Lord Chancellor and others of the Cabinet Ministers, in honor of his Excellency the Inmble David Erskine, the Minister processing from England to America. There were present on this occasion—

The Lord Chantellor, Earl Spencer, Lord Ellenborough, Mr. Windham, Sir S. Lamarie, W. Curtis, and Charles Price; Mr Barclay, Mr Combe, Mr Malone, Mr Hackney, General Lynne, the hon H. Erskine, T. Erskine, Mr Harris, and Mr Wilson, the Lord Chancellor's Solicitor.

After dinner the following toafts were drank:

"The King, and God bleſs him."

"The Queen, and Royal Family."

"The Prince and his Royal Brothers, and thanks to them for the honor they have done the City on the preſent Mayoralty by their preſence."

"The American Miniſters preſent, Mr. Monroe, Mr. Pinckney, and General Lyman; and may there be perpetual harmony between the two countries."

Mr. Monroe begged leave to return thanks for the honor which had been done him, which he did not eſtimate ſo much perſonally, as with regard to his country. There exiſted a cheriſhed reaſon, he ſaid, which made it deſirable for him to promote a becoming feeling of good-will between Great Britain and America; but whoſe he muſt be conſidered a faithful ſervant of his republic, yet no perſonal exertions on his part ſhould be wanting to preſerve that cordiality which was ſo eſſential to the proſperity of the two countries; and he begged leave to drink all their good healths.

Mr. Pinckney obſerved, that he accorded perfectly in the ſentiments that had been expreſſed by his colleague, and that no endeavors on his part ſhould be wanting to promote the good underſtanding which ought ever to ſubſiſt between Great Britain and America.

The next toaſt was—

"The Lord Chancellor of England, and may the name of Erſkine and the trial by jury ever be united."

The Lord Chancellor returned thanks. He ſaid, he felt it to be of the higheſt honor that he could enjoy, to have his health drank and introduced in the manner it had been at the Head-Quarters of the City of London, a City where he has many opportunities of ſeeing the talents which he poſſeſſes in ſupport of that law which was the admiration of the world, and which was ſo admirably executed by his noble and learned friend preſent, whoſe health he would take the liberty of propoſing.

The health of Lord Eldon was drank with great applauſe.

His Lordſhip thanked the company for the honor they had done him, ſo much beyond his deſerts.

The ſpeaking of the Turkiſh Aſſembly at Paris took place upon a Saturday, the day on which the Jewiſh Sabbath is every where obſerved. This, we doubt, was done by Napoleon, to ſignify his diſdain of ſuch ſuperſtitious and baſtile notions.—We have likewiſe ſeen it ſtated, that he intends to force the Jews to abandon their Sabbath. The Jews will reſiſt the ſtrongly entertained by the Imperial Conſtable, to the religion and rites of their fathers; and, if he ſhould attempt to violate their feaſt, one of the moſt ſolemn of our Almighty, the abrogation of which, by force, muſt be conſidered as the moſt daring act of impiety ever committed by man.—Corſica, and Buonaparte's native country, ſhould have taught him to reſpect the religious opinions of others.

GIBRALTAR, July 21.

The Spaniſh government has ſhipped orders to the thirteen regiments of infantry, two of artillery, and twelve of militia, on the leaving of war; the cauſe aſſignation of their troops upon board. Many conſiderations on which people ruminate upon this ſingular meaſure, the moſt probable of which is certainly that of an approaching rupture with France. Nor has there been are ſufficient grounds for it.

The unworthy ſtate which our Spaniſh Monarch had lately to bear from Bonaparte for having ventured to interfere on behalf of the King of Naples, and indicated to ſubſcribe the required renunciation to his rights to that Throne; the obligation impoſed upon him to confirm a war with England, however ruinous that war may prove; the imperious command to recently laid upon him to break with Sweden, though the unfriendly conſideration of the Spaniſh commerce rendered her friendſhip more neceſſary to Spain than ever; and, finally, the heavy tributes which are exacted from him, while his army and navy are left without pay, and almoſt every claſs of his ſubjects is reduced to the greateſt ſtraits; all theſe would certainly warrant a rupture; but nothing of the kind can be expected. Buonaparte's Diplomatic Aid-de-Camp (Duroc) is at this very moment on an extraordinary miſſion at Madrid, and the Spaniſh government appears to be even letting a ſingle of its ſhips ſail. Others ſuppoſe that the regulars are to be employed in expeditions by ſea and land, while the militia are to keep guard in the country; and this opinion is corroborated by the order ſent to the commander of the Caſtle ſquadron to hold himſelf in readineſs to ſail, at a moment's warning, with his eight ſail of the line, however, manned; and by the well known ſtate in which Spaniſh America ſtands of diſaffection from the mother country. But, on the other hand, how could the Spaniſh Government think of expoſing a part of its army, and the remainder of its navy, to almoſt certain deſtruction, informed as it is that Lord Collingwood is at the mouth of the harbour from which the expedition muſt ſail, and that the Atlantic is covered with our fleets?—The third opinion, which ſends their troops to Portugal to garriſon the forts from which it is intended to exclude the Engliſh ſhips, is the moſt unlikely: and we ſhould not be ſurpriſed, that the King had conſented to the meaſure however contrary to his inclinations, to prevent the flate at his ſon-in-law being overrun with French troops.

On the 5th inſtant, the Chiffonne frigate with General Moore, &c. ſailed from this place for Sicily: Dr. Rae's regiment went from this place in the tranſports, under convoy at the Chiffonne.

The garriſon is perfectly healthy, and there has been no appearance of the epidemical diſeaſe raging in Spain this ſummer.—But we have received accounts, within theſe few days, of the plague having broke out at Tunis, on the coaſt of Africa; in conſequence of which a rigid quarantine is impoſed on all veſſels from that neighbourhood.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the thirteenth day of October, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty-ninth day of Auguſt, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the thirteenth day of October inſtant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and confirmed to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the twentieth day of November next enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this SIXTH day of OCTOBER, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſixth year of our reign.

L. S.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, as may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt, to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

Buonaparte's Diplomatic Aid-de-Camp (Duroc) is at this very moment on an extraordinary miſſion at Madrid, and the Spaniſh government appears to be even letting a ſingle of its ſhips ſail. Others ſuppoſe that the regulars are to be employed in expeditions by ſea and land, while the militia are to keep guard in the country; and this opinion is corroborated by the order ſent to the commander of the Caſtle ſquadron to hold himſelf in readineſs to ſail, at a moment's warning, with his eight ſail of the line, however, manned; and by the well known ſtate in which Spaniſh America ſtands of diſaffection from the mother country. But, on the other hand, how could the Spaniſh Government think of expoſing a part of its army, and the remainder of its navy, to almoſt certain deſtruction, informed as it is that Lord Collingwood is at the mouth of the harbour from which the expedition muſt ſail, and that the Atlantic is covered with our fleets?—The third opinion, which ſends their troops to Portugal to garriſon the forts from which it is intended to exclude the Engliſh ſhips, is the moſt unlikely: and we ſhould not be ſurpriſed, that the King had conſented to the meaſure however contrary to his inclinations, to prevent the flate at his ſon-in-law being overrun with French troops.

YORK, November 1, 1806.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders of the Counties of York, Durham and Simcoe, convened by Advertiſement at Moore's Hotel, on Monday the twenty-ſeventh ult. it was unanimouſly reſolved that the following Addreſs be preſented to Mr. Juſtice Thorpe:—

To the Honorable Mr. Juſtice THORPE.

SIR,

OVERWHELMED with grief at the unexpected death of our late able and upright Repreſentative, we, Freeholders of the Counties of York, Durham and Simcoe, feel that we have neglected our intereſts in the ſeaſon of ſorrow.—Now awake, it is to you we turn; notwithſtanding the great portion of conſolation which we draw from the knowing of an impartial and energetic adminiſtration.

Fully perſuaded that the great object of your heart is the advancement of public proſperity, the obſervance of the laws, and the practice of religion and morality, we haſten with aſſurances of our warm ſupport, to invite you from your retreat to repreſent us in Parliament.

Permit us however, to impreſs upon you, that as ſubjects of a gracious and beloved King; as a part of that Great Nation which has for ſo long a time ſtood the bulwark of Europe, and is now the aſylum and unacceſſible rythum of liberty; as the Children of Engliſhmen, guided, protected and governed by Engliſh laws; in fine, as an integral of this community, to whom every one we are induced to place the higheſt confidence in your virtue, from the firm baſis that equally indenſible to the impulſe of popular feeling and the influence of power, you will purſue what is right.—If this has been the body of your deciſions, may it be the ſpirit of your counſels.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the thirteenth day of October, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty-ninth day of Auguſt, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the thirteenth day of October inſtant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and confirmed to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the twentieth day of November next enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this SIXTH day of OCTOBER, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſixth year of our reign.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, as may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt, to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

(CIRCULAR.)

Downing Street, 7th June, 1806.

Sir,

I tranſmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymaſters General of the Army, acquainting me that in conſequence of the ſerious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, reſiding in His Majeſty's foreign Colonies, are expoſed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymaſters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Caſtlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1ſt of September laſt, their Lordſhips had thought proper to reſcind the ſame, and to ſubſtitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is incloſed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magiſtrates for the purpoſe of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is ſuggeſted; and I am to deſire you will take ſuch meaſures as you may think beſt calculated to carry into execution the Regulation propoſed. In the event, however, of any difficulties ariſing in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 5th May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Paymasters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military. All vacancies residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office) that any frauds have actually been committed on the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.
(Signed)
Right Honble. William Windham, &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Paymasters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Fraud being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the person in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated; but the caution as to Age therein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

PROCLAMATION.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE the THIRD by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland KING, Defender of the Faith:

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN; GREETING:

WHEREAS it is necessary for the Peace and Good Government of the said Province, that all His Majesty's Officers within the same, should continue in their several Offices and Employments; We therefore have thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to issue this Proclamation, hereby authorizing the said Officers to continue in their said Offices and Employments, of which all Persons concerned, are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this Twenty ninth day of August, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-sixth year of our Reign.

INTERESTING NARRATIVE.

[We have been favoured with the following interesting narrative, communicated by a respectable friend at Archangel, to their correspondent in London:]

ARCHANGEL, June 8, 1806.

Information was received here some time ago, that a ship, which, from the description, we supposed to be the Argo, Captain Kidson, had been seen by some Lapplanders on the rocks, in the White Sea, covered with ice, and that attracted by a light to windward at that season, they approached the vessel, and with difficulty got into the cabin, but found no food on board. The cargo consisted of wheat in bags. These natives on their arrival at Kola, made a report of what they had seen, and proper persons were sent from thence to learn some further particulars.—We have now received a letter from a person (written on the spot) giving a detailed account of this melancholy affair:

The vessel, which from part of a journal found on board, proves to be the Argo, Thomas Kidson, late master, is lying on three near a place called the Three Islands, the keel and forepart are gone, and the wheat is going out through the bottom, being entirely spoiled and good for nothing, and the wreck only is a fixture to be burned for what may be saved from it.

Some of the inhabitants from the nearest settlement being employed in getting anchors, ropes, and any other stores they could find on shipboard, were at a little distance, a pole standing in the snow, which they removed, and the following day a dog came out of the hole, which on digging deeper immediately returned; curiosity induced them to clear away the snow, and at the depth of two fathoms and a half, they discovered the dog and the remains of four human bodies. The animal had eaten part of the flesh of three of them for its sustenance during the winter; one was entire.

It appears that the unfortunate crew having quitted the ship, and got safe on land, were unable to find any habitation, and thus perished from the inclemency of the season.

From the Philadelphia Register.

On the request of a benevolent correspondent, who has suggested the possibility that the little unfortunate who is the subject of the following article, may have been stolen from his parents in America or the West Indies, we are induced to re-publish this interesting narrative:—

Extract from the Monthly Magazine for Oct. 1804.

Yorkshire.—Six or seven weeks ago, a woman went to Bridington, and sold a lovely boy with a delicate, soft fair skin, to a chimney-sweeper, for eight guineas: the child is about eight, can be no more than four years old, and had been taken up a chimney by an elder boy, and left there. As might be expected, he fell down and broiled his legs terribly against the grate. His air and manner were so different from the situation he was in, that the inhabitants of Bridington were in an uproar about it; the lowest kind of people said it was a shame to keep such a child to by mean an employment; and poor as they were, he should be welcome to share with their own children. The Misses Strickland, of Boynton, hearing of the child, went over, and were so much interested with him, and so persuaded that he had been stolen, that as the chimney sweeper was glad to part with him, they took him home with them, and he is with them still. Soon after he got to Boynton, Sir George Strickland's seat, a plate with something in it was brought to him: he was quite delighted when he saw the silver forks, and said Papa had such forks as those: the carpet too in the drawing-room he called Papa's. The housekeeper showed him a silver watch; he asked what sort it was—Papa's was a gold watch: he then pressed the hands and said, "Papa's watch sings; why does not yours?" Sir George, on being told of this showed him his gold repeater; the child pressed the spring and when it struck, jumped about the room saying, "Papa's watch sings like!" At night when he was going to bed, he said he could not go to bed till he had said his prayers; he then repeated the Lord's prayer almost perfectly. The nurse in the room of housemaid, that he was gathering flowers in his Mamma's garden, and the woman who told him, answered and asked him, if he liked riding? he said "yes;" and she said him he should ride on a horse, and let him on a horse, after which they got into a coach, and then into their own carriage, and "away we drive." He has no recollection of his name or where he lived; but it seems to have been in the country. He flatted, whenever he heard a servant or Sir George's cousin George, and looked as if he expected to see somebody that he knew: On enquiry he told he had an uncle George, whom he loved dearly." Sir George has had the child advertised, but as it happened his friends may have concluded he was drowned.

From the same.

"We are particularly requested to give an early information of the following circumstances, relative to a child who was lately found to a chimney-sweeper at Burlington, [New-Jersey, England] in Yorkshire, which we gave an account of in our Magazine of October last, 1804.

From various circumstances, it is impossible he can be the child of the woman who sold him; but mothers are very confused, quite choice of a gentleman well brought up, his clothes good, and that of the South of England.

His tales of his papa and mama, but cannot tell where they live; he has dark eyes and complexion, and an high mind; it is not very wrong to think that his father can have any other name than that of papa, and it is possible he may be abroad: he says his mama is dead, which appears likely, as from many things he says he seems to have been chiefly with an old woman, who he invariably says are called Mr. and Mrs. Farnbrough.

The child was living in the family of Sir George Strickland on the 24th of July last, as appears by a letter lately received in London, where he had been sent by a gentlewoman, and his parents not then discovered. Whether this little boy was stolen from his parents, or parent, or whether he was lent away by some cruel relation for some disturbed purpose, time that remained in the papers bailed of the "Children in the Wood," seems doubtful: whichever be the case, it is to be hoped he may soon come to light. If any person should, from reading the above or the following account, be able to give any information on the subject, tending to the discovery of the child's relations, they are desired to communicate it to Mr. William Jones, No. 6, Church-Street, Paddington, near Islington, the Secretary to the Society in London, for supporting the charity of climbing boys, &c. and for improving the condition of children, and others employed by chimney-sweepers.

London, August 22d, 1805.

Account of a Woman speaking well without a tongue.—This woman was a native of Montigny, in the territory of Elva's, in Portugal; the case was attested by Wilcot, Bishop of Rochester, then Chaplain to the English Factory at Lisbon, in a letter dated from that city September 3, 1667, and was laid before the Royal Society in London. The following is an extract from the letter:

"The Conde d'Ericeyra, a Nobleman of letters, and curious in natural knowledge, brought from the frontiers of this country a woman without a tongue, who yet spoke very intelligibly. She is between thirty and forty years of age, but in stature exceeds but one or seven or eight. I was with her at the Conde's house, and made her pronounce every letter of the alphabet, which she can do distinctly. She hath not the least bit of tongue, nor any thing like it, but teeth on both sides of her under jaw, which turn very much inward, and almost meet. She finds the great want of a tongue in talking; for as others when they eat move their meat about with their tongue, she is forced to do her fingers. She pretends to distinguish tastes very well, but I believe, doth it imperfectly. Her voice, although very difmuth, is a little hollow, and like that of such people who have lost their teeth.—[London Paper.

QUEBEC, Sept. 22.

Shocking Accident.—From a want of proper attention in weighing some gun-powder, for a pocket piece, by candle light, in the shop of Mr. Charles Desbarats, in the upper town, on Saturday even ing, the last seven o'clock, the powder in the scale took fire, and communicated to a larger quantity in the shop. By the exertion the boys were immediately set on fire: Mr. Gugler, the clerk, a young man, was terribly, and Mr. Desbats, then in the shop above the shop, had his right eye and hand dreadfully scorched and blasted: his left eye was much broke, and the great toe of his left foot much hurt. His safe is critical, but nothing decisive can yet be pronounced on it: every thing therein be hoped from the skill and elasticity attention may be expected.

The windows of the shop, or lower story, were blown out, the front wall much shattered as the wood work shattered. Of the second story the front was blown up, the other wood-work also shattered and three windows blown out. Of the third story the floor is considerably damaged, and some parts of glass were broke, and other damage was done. The windows of several houses in the neighborhood suffered by the accident, as well as by pieces of boards and articles of merchandize flying against them, notwithstanding that the street is of a considerable width.

By timely succour the fire was soon quenched: but, in addition to the ruins of the house, the water was effective to a large amount of goods. To the Bank Guard's credit is due to the military for their care in preventing the property, by forming a small circle round the house, until proper measures were taken to secure the effects.

After so severe an example, we persuade ourselves that all retailers of powder will be careful, nor be cupid any quantity of so powerful a combustible to the action of fire. They must fill by candle-light, which would be much better avoided, common prudence requires it; no candle should be suffered near the fire where such an article is kept or weighed. Paper lamps, out of the way of danger, appear to us the most eligible for giving light in a shop, particularly where young clerks serve. The quantity of powder kept in a house ought never, on any pretence, to be exceeded by law.

It is a happy circumstance that Mr. Desbats' hands in an open situation, turning, in a moment, a certain fire quarter, which gave a free course to the impulse of the air. Had the neighborhood been clofer the accident, from opposing walls, would have increased the conception, and consequently the damage.

Just as this paper was going to press, we received information of the Mr. Desbats' sight is considered to be slightly impaired, but it appears that he suffered less injury in the head.

From a London Paper of June 12.

The following miraculous and providential escape from impending destruction, may be depended on as a fact:—

On Wednesday, the 21st of May, as capt. Jones, of the Royal Pluthore Militia, quartered at Hythe, who had that morning accompanied the regiment to field exercise on the higher near Folkstone, was standing with several of the officers, near the edge of the cliff, the earth suddenly gave way under him, in consequence of which, he was instantly precipitated for the distance of twenty-eight yards, in an oblique direction, from the top, but was most providentially stopped in his fall by a small shatement on the surface of the rock, against which his foot accidentally struck. In this dreadful situation he lay suspended near a quarter of an hour, without daring to move, before any effectual assistance could be rendered him. Scarcely, however, had this distressing circumstance occurred, when Thomas Roberts, a private in the regiment, alarmed at the only perilous condition of his officer, endeavoured, at the obvious risk of his own life, to extricate him; but in the attempt, literally fell from the top to the bottom of this tremendous precipice, being a distance of 540 feet, of which 260 were quit perpendicular. Providentially the man in his rapid descent, did not touch the captain, and unthought-of save him, had already extended his hand to him for the purpose. During this interval, a rope was expeditiously procured from the Signal house, and a noose being made at the end, it was lowered to the spot where capt Jones still lay, who, with much difficulty, succeeded in fastening it round his body, and was then gradually drawn up the frightful steep by the spectators, who, still for some time, doubted the possibility of rescuing him: he however at length, happily escaped, without having sustained any material injury.

The soldier, though terribly cut and bruised on the head and various parts of his body, was taken up alive, and without a single bone being fractured, on the beach, near a large boat quarry, and immediately conveyed to the regimental hospital at Hythe, where, to the utter astonishment of every one, he is now able to walk about, and is declared by the surgeon of the regiment out of all immediate danger.

The height of the cliff, having been accurately taken by an officer of the regiment, is found, by actual admeasurement to be as follows, viz.

	FEET.
Oblique distance of Captain Jones' fall,	84
Perpendicular height from the above point, downwards,	261
Remainder, (again oblique,) to the base,	204

THE ORACLE

YORK, November 8, 1806.

At a Meeting of Freeholders held at Moore's Hotel, on the 20th ult. for the purpose of considering of a proper person to Represent them in Parliament, William Willcocks Esquire, in the Chair, it was resolved unanimously, That Mr Justice Thorpe be requested to Represent the Counties of York, Durham and Simcoe, in the place of our late much lamented William Wonker Esq. deceased;—where it was also resolved, That the Meeting should be adjourned to the 27th, and that notice should appear in the next Gazette.

(Signed)
WILLIAM WILLCOCKS, Chairman.

At the Meeting, pursuant to the said Adjournment, (the Chairman being unavoidably absent) the following Address was unanimously agreed upon:—

To the Honorable Mr. Justice THORPE.

SIR,

OVERWHELMED with grief at the unexpected death of our late able and upright Representative, we, Freeholders of the Counties of York, Durham and Simcoe, feel that we have neglected our interests in the fixation of Parties.—Now awake, it is to you we turn; now with heeding the great motion of consolation which we drew from the dawning of an impartial and energetic administration.

Fully persuaded that the great object of your heart, is the advancement of public prosperity, the subsistance of the laws, and the practice of religion and morality, we hasten with effusions of our warmest support, to invite you from your retreat to represent us in Parliament.

Permit us however, to impress upon you, that as subjects of a gracious and beloved King; as a part of that Great Nation which has for so long a time Stood the bulwark of Europe, and is now the solitary and inaccessible asylum of liberty; as the Children of Englishmen, guided, protected and enthroned by English laws; in fine, as members of this community, as fathers and sons we are induced to place this confidence in your virtue, from the firm hope, that equally indelible to the impulse of popular feeling and the influence of power, you will pursue what is right—which has been the help of your decisions, may it be the spirit of your counsels.

Signed by forty-two Persons, residing in the Town and Township of York.

When William Jarvis Esquire, was requested to wait on Mr. Justice Thorpe (who at that instant had arrived from Niagara) to know his pleasure upon the subject of the above Address; Mr. Jarvis returned with a favourable answer, which Mr. Justice Thorpe has since communicated in the following terms:—

GENTLEMEN,

WITH pleasure I accede to your desire, if you make me your Representative I will faithfully discharge my duty; your confidence is not misplaced, nor shall the least moment of dissatisfaction, be the lot of my existence.

Your late worthy Representative I lament from my heart; in private life was a warm Friend, as the Barrister Advocate, and in Parliament a firm Patriot; it is but just to draw consolation from our Governor, when the first act of his administration, granted to those on the U. E. list, and their children what your late much valuable Member so strenuously laboured to obtain; justly from this, we have every reason to expect that the liberal intentions of our beloved Sovereign, (whose chief glory is to reign triumphantly enthroned in the hearts of his subjects) will be fulfilled, honoring those who give, and those who receive, enriching the Province and strengthening the Empire.

Let us cherish this hope in the blossom, nay it dot be blasted in the opening.

I am, Gentlemen, very truly, your obliged and obedient
humble Servant,
ROBERT THORPE.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twentieth day of November to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the SIXTH day of October, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twentieth day of November instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twenty-fifth day of December next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this fourteenth day of NOVEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign. F. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. List, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof to the satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted in that List, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful subjects may be made partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to its fullest extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October, in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

By his Excellency's Command,

Wm. JARVIS, Sec'y.

CIRCULAR.

Downing Street, 1st June, 1806.

Sir,

I transmit you herewith the Copy of a Letter which I have received from the Paymasters General of the Army, acquainting me that in consequence of the serious inconvenience and expence to which the officers on Half-Pay, residing in His Majesty's foreign Colonies, are exposed in getting their affidavits certified under the Regulations required by the late Paymasters General, which was forwarded to you in Lord Castlereagh's Circular Letter of the 1st of September last, their Lordships had thought proper to rescind the same, and to substitute in place of them, the regulations, of which a copy is inclosed, wherein the propriety of appointing Magistrates for the purpose of taking the Affidavits of Officers on Half Pay is suggested; and I am to desire you will take such measures as you may think best calculated to carry into execution the Regulation proposed. In the event, however, of any difficulties arising in carrying this Regulation into effect, which may appear to you to present objections of a serious nature, I am further to desire you will state such difficulties to me with as little delay as possible.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
W. WINDHAM.

Lieut. Governor Gore, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.) Pay Office, Horse Guards, 1st May, 1806.

Sir,

On the 28th of August last a Regulation was made by the late Pay-masters General, that the affidavit of Officers on the Half Pay or Military Allowances residing in the British Colonies, particularly in those on the Continent of America, should not be passed at this Office, unless the Competency of the Magistrate, before whom it was made, was certified by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Chief Justice, Senior Resident Member of the Council or Attorney General of the Colony.

It having been represented to us, that the greater number of Officers residing in the American Colonies, are put to very serious inconvenience and expense (and such as in many instances will scarcely admit of their making the said Affidavit) by the above mentioned Regulation. We have thought proper after having having attentively considered the subject to rescind it, and to substitute in its place, the enclosed Regulation, which we think will meet the case both in respect to its securing the Officer from any unnecessary inconvenience and expense, and the Public from Imposition; we therefore request you will have the Goodness to cause such Directions to be given thereon to the Governors of the respective Colonies, as will ensure its being carried into execution with as little delay as possible.

It is our wish that a sufficient number of Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates, Notaries Public) should be appointed Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the Oath, to the said Officers, from which they are to derive no Emolument beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates, or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion, and we therefore recommend the Governors to appoint such number of Commissioners, as they in their Judgment may think will execute the object of this Regulation, with the least inconvenience to the persons who are to make the Affidavit, and also such as by their respective residences in different parts of the Colonies, are best calculated to produce the effect required.

We think it right to observe that we have no proof (although some papers of a suspicious appearance have been presented at this Office,) that any frauds have actually been committed on the Receipt of the Half Pay, or Allowances; but it appears to us, to be essentially necessary in cases where there is great scope for improper Practices, that a strong check should be applied in order to prevent them.

We have the Honor to be &c.,
(Signed)
Right Honble. William Windham &c. &c. &c.

Regulation made by the Pay-masters General of His Majesty's Forces, to prevent any Frauds being committed in the Receipt of the Half Pay; or Allowances of Officers of the British American Forces, residing in the British Colonies on the Continent of America, and, also of all other Officers on the British Half Pay residing therein:

The Officer to state in addition to the usual Affidavit, that he is the Person who was actually placed on the Half Pay or Allowances of the British American Forces, and the year in which he was so placed; according to the accompanying Forms, Numbers 1, 2 and 3.

A List of the Officers residing in the said Colonies, with the Districts in which they respectively reside, Age and Period from which they have been in receipt of their Half Pay or Allowances, to be transmitted to this office by the Governors thereof; which List is to be formed from the returns made by the respective Officers to them and which Returns if not made in a given time, the Officers to be informed that the Affidavit for their Half Pay, or Allowance, will not be passed at this Office. The Period to be allowed for the Returns to be made, to be regulated by the Governors; but it is desirable that the Regulation should be completed, in all its Parts in time for it to operate in the Issue of Half Pay from the 25th December 1806, to 24th June 1807. Officers on changing their place of Abode, are to notify it to the Governor by the first opportunity.

The Governors of the respective Colonies, to transmit to this Office a List of the persons authorized to administer the Oath to the said Officers, the Districts for which they severally act and Signature of each, in his own hand writing, with as little delay as possible. The said persons being Magistrates (or where there are no Magistrates or none conveniently resident, Notaries Public) are to be appointed by the Governors Commissioners for the special purpose of administering the said Oath, but they are to derive no Emolument from the said appointment beyond that which would have accrued to them as Magistrates or Notaries Public, on a similar occasion in the ordinary course of Business. And it is to be distinctly understood that no Affidavit will be received at this Office, as a sufficient Voucher, save and except such Affidavits taken before Commissioners appointed as above. The Commissioners are to be cautioned particularly to attend to the age of the Officers coming before them, as more than twenty years have elapsed since the persons in question were placed on the said Half Pay, or Allowances. The Governors are to notify every new appointment, from Death or other cause, by the first opportunity that occurs after such appointment has taken place.

All other Officers residing in the said Colonies, who are on the British Half Pay, or Allowances, are required to make their Affidavits in the Form and Manner above stated, but the caution as to Age herein recommended to the Commissioners, does not apply to them as they may have been placed on Half Pay since the Period, at which the American Half Pay, or Allowances commenced

NOTICE is hereby given to all Persons residing in the Province of Upper Canada, who are in the receipt of Half Pay or Allowances from Government, that unless they do make a Return to this Office, on or before the 24th day of December next ensuing, containing their Names and the name of the District in which they reside, and also their Age, and the Period from which they have been in the receipt of Half Pay or Allowances, their Affidavits for the same will not be passed at the War Office, after the 24th December, 1806; to which period the Regulations from the Pay Office, Horse Guards, of the 28th August, 1805, (published in the York Gazette) are to continue to be in force, after which time the late Regulations from that Office, dated the 8th May, 1806, (published as above) are to be acted upon.

By Order of the Lieutenant Governor,
WM. HALTON, Secretary.

LONDON, August 17

Lord Grenville Levefon Gower had yesterday his first audience of Mr. Fox since his return from Pezersburgh. The Rt. Hon. Secretary of State complied with his Lordship very freely and walked through his apartments with him.

Baron Jacobi failed from Harwich on Thursday last with his whole suite: he had a favourable wind for Hamburgh, where he is to land.

August 19

Letters from Plymouth state, that General Simcoe embarked on Friday last on board la Santa Margaretta frigate, which immediately failed: it is added that the rendezvous is given off the rock of Lisbon, and that he will assemble there a very considerable naval force. Besides the Hibernia, Lord St. Vincent will be joined by four ships of the line and four frigates, and it is said that one of the expeditions will repair to the same place. The departure of Lord St. Vincent for the South, and the assembling of a very considerable squadron at the mouth of the Tagus, give rise to several conjectures.

Mr. Fox goes on Thursday next to St. Ann's Hill, where he purposes passing a few days, should his health which is daily improving, continue to mend

The three French frigates which failed in company with le Rhin, have put into Bourdeaux. The Carolina man of war, which arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday, fell in on her passage with a neutral, from whom she received this intelligence

Letters from Plymouth of the 16th instant state, that General Simcoe and his suite received orders yesterday to embark immediately on board la Santa Margaretta, of 36 guns, Captain Rathborne, who is the bearer of secret orders. This frigate accordingly set sail last night. Her destination is unknown, but it is supposed she will touch at Lisbon

It is rumoured that General Simcoe is to go to the East Indies, and that will be his ultimate destination 3 differently, however he [illegible] repair thither on board la Santa Ma[illegible] which has not taken in provisions for so long a voyage. He embarked yesterday noon with some other officers.

Yesterday the second regiment of the Dragoon Guards were all united together, when four companies were picked out for the expedition; they remain to about three hundred men and will be commanded by Lieut. Col. Bierseton. These companies embarked this morning on board the Canopus (one of our largest) lay, on board the Republic the Thetis and the Medea; they left their horses on shore, in the guard of the other companies. We are ignorant whether the latter will follow those who are gone; but it is the[illegible] that the ships will join at Cove to the vessels are all ready. The rest of the regiment will be quartered in the small villages in the neighbourhood untill new orders.

A company of artillerymen have also been embarked under the command of Capt. Hardker, on board the Medea; this ship is to form part of the expedition, will set sail as soon as she has received orders. All the troops of the expedition will receive three months money; funds for that purpose were yesterday drawn out of the Citadel and distributed on board the ships, which are now all ready to set sail: General Grey will embark on board the Sampson of 64 guns, and Lord Paget in the Repulse of 74.

The transport vessels laden with troops, set sail yesterday for Deal.

August 20.

Yesterday, at two o'clock a Cabinet Council was held at Mr. Fox's Office—The health of this Minister continues to amend and he is now completely out of danger.

Yesterday morning all Lord Caledon's suite and equipage, together with Grenon horses, were embarked at Gravesend on board the Mermaid frigate, which immediately set sail for the Downs, whence she will proceed to the Cape of Good Hope. His Lordship will embark at Portsmouth on the 1st September, as will also his Secretary and the rest of his suite.

The transport vessels with troops on board which set sail from the Downs, have put in arrived at Portsmouth, where they have been joined by the Captain, Ganges and King's. Fisher, with a fleet for the Mediterranean

August 21

Yesterday was discount day at the stock Exchange, for Omnium, and the variations for that Stock were in great, the intrigues and ins & outs various, and in short the speculations of every kind so considerable, that it really was an important day. The rumours respecting the fate of peace, which were spread by means of this agitation, prevailed, and Stocks experienced a considerable fall. However, upon examining the fact, we find that it was only 2 points, and that the principal cause of the fall, was the discount of Omnium.

Mr. Fox gains fresh strength every day. He was so well yesterday as to be able to walk in his garden, and to have after wards a conference with the Marquis of Douglas, previous to the departure of that gentleman for Petersburgh, to whom his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales also paid a visit before he set off. The same day Mr. Fox saw several of his friends, and find that it was only 2 points, and that the principal cause of the fall, was the discount of Omnium.

Dr. Erskine, appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at the Congress of the United States, set off on Thursday last for his destination. The same day Mr. Bentham quitted London on a mission to the Court of Lisbon

A letter from Portsmouth, of the 20th Aug. Rates as follows:

"The transports which failed from Margate with the troops for Sicily, appeared off this port yesterday evening, about five o'clock: they were all assembled near the Isle of Wight this morning at two o'clock, when the Ganges, the Captain and the Kingfisher, which were waiting for them, took them under convoy for Plymouth; one of the ships had left anchor, and the rest of the convoy are repairing to Spithead with the Fury the Devastation and the Explosion. It is said here, among the officers of these regiments, that the 13th, 14th and 25th are going to Portugal to defend that kingdom, and that if this project should miscarry or appear impracticable, they will repair to South America. Some light vessels arrived this morning from the Downs to take sheets troops on board. General Sir Hugh Dalrymple arrived in Gosport on board the Captain. General Wynyard and Brigadier-general Stewart, with their staff, fail for Sicily on board transports

The attack upon Fort Gobed in the East-Indies, which was supposed to have taken place in consequence of the renewal of hostilities in that quarter, is stated on the authority of British officers just arrived from India, to have arisen from the following circumstance. It having transpired that the Fort in pursuance of a Stipulation on the treaty, was to be given up by Scindia, an enterprising partizan with a strong force, surprized the place, and refused to deliver it into the hands of Scindia, pretending that he held it for his legitimate Sovereign the Rhana of Gohud. Major Bowin was in consequence ordered to complete the surrender of the place to Scindia's troops. He proceeded against it with one battalion sepoys. The attempt was however unsuccessful, the fort being defended by Europeans, except one, were blown from India, to have arisen from the following circumstance. The Expedition.—On Monday morning about 8 o'clock, the wind being at S. S. E. the signal was made for getting the fleet at Plymouth ready to sail, every ship had a boat to her anchor, but by 9 o'clock the wind had shifted again to the S. W. and put a stop to any further proceedings. It is reported that orders have gone from the Admiralty to countermand the sailing of part of them.

A number of transports are now assembled in the Downs, waiting for orders. At Ramsgate they expect four of the 14th to come in every tide.

Further Peril.—We are concerned to state, that the greater parcel of this fleet has been captured and burnt by a French flag of the line of 80 guns. They were coming home under convoy of the Champion of 24 guns, which has arrived at Portsmouth, and which could render them hardly any assistance, the French flag having brought the wind up with her, as the fear men term it, and come upon the fleet before it could differ, though they had been in sight two days before.

One of our Portsmouth letters states, that the whole of the ships of which the convoy consisted, amounting to thirty-seven sail, were destroyed about a fortnight ago in the [illegible] sea, 30.

Another letter, and we sincerely hope the more correct of the two, says the convoy consisted of 16 sail, of which 13 were destroyed by the enemy, and 3 had separated. Among the latter were 3 transports having the 6th regiment on board.

A cabinet council was yesterday held at the Foreign Office at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, which was attended by Lords Spencer, Moira, Grenville, Sidmouth, Erskine, Hawick, and Messrs. Windham and T. Grenville. The council is understood to have been held on the information last received from Paris.

Lieutenant Hewett of the Royal Navy, Agent for transports port of Cork, has received orders to engage as many vessels as he can procure for that service, for twelve months certain.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.

Harriman at Domingo.—The schooner Sally, Priddis, Capt. Sadler, has arrived at Frederick-town and brings St. John papers to the 18th Sept. from which is copied the following account of the dreadful hurricane at Domingo:

ST. JOHN'S, (Aut.) Sept. 18

Arrived this morning, the Danish sch'r. Mariner, capt. Nelson, from Barbadoes and Dominica. She brings the first dispatchable accounts of the ravages made by a hurricane at the latter island, on the night of Tuesday last. Some faint idea may be formed of the violence of the storm from the following letter to a gentleman in this island, dated at Roseau the [illegible]

On Thursday night, the 9th inst. we experienced the most violent hurricane known in this island for 50 years; about 9 o'clock at night, it began to blow from the northward, and continued until 1 when it blew [illegible] hard, as to render it impossible to move from the house.

"The rain fell most dreadfully, and caused the river to run through the streets like a torrent. The consequences are distressing to every thing I ever saw, almost the whole centre of the town is carried away; every many houses are lost. Persons, houses, [illegible] and every thing which stood in the street leading between Mr. Dodd's and Mr. Chiet's were swept into the sea. The scene of the inhumane perfons were drowned, and there is no possibility of rendering them any assistance from the darkness and horror of the night.—All the houses at the river Side, with many of the inhabitants are also carried away.

"The house and store rented by capt. Dyers, was also washed away; and I am sorry to add, that young Mr. Harper, son and partner of Mr. Dyers, went with it. Capt. M'Kay, by an extraordinary effort, leaped from that house on a high wall, as the house was pulling over Mr. Mayer's, and escaped. All the shipping, except one vessel, are lost, several seamen perished. The estates have suffered severely. Many buildings at Bruce Bryers, except one, were blown down; but fortunately very few lives were lost there. The officers and men lay all night on the ground, not daring to get up for fear of being blown off the hill."

Another letter says, "It is ascertained that at least 107 persons perished in the storm."

York, Oct. 23, 1806.

It is dated from Baltimore, the 10th ult. at 6 o'clock the 26th May, and addressed to the Governor by Lieut. Col. Bierseton. These companies embarked this morning on board the Canopus (one of our largest) lay, on board the Republic the Thetis and the Medea; they left their horses on shore, in the guard of the other companies. We are ignorant whether the latter will follow those who are gone; but it is the[illegible] that the ships will join at Cove to the vessels are all ready. The rest of the regiment will be quartered in the small villages in the neighbourhood untill new orders.

A company of artillerymen have also been embarked under the command of Capt. Hardker, on board the Medea; this ship is to form part of the expedition, will set sail as soon as she has received orders. All the troops of the expedition will receive three months money; funds for that purpose were yesterday drawn out of the Citadel and distributed on board the ships, which are now all ready to set sail: General Grey will embark on board the Sampson of 64 guns, and Lord Paget in the Repulse of 74.

The transport vessels laden with troops, set sail yesterday for Deal.

August 20.

Yesterday, at two o'clock a Cabinet Council was held at Mr. Fox's Office—The health of this Minister continues to amend and he is now completely out of danger.

Yesterday morning all Lord Caledon's suite and equipage, together with Grenon horses, were embarked at Gravesend on board the Mermaid frigate, which immediately set sail for the Downs, whence she will proceed to the Cape of Good Hope. His Lordship will embark at Portsmouth on the 1st September, as will also his Secretary and the rest of his suite.

The transport vessels with troops on board which set sail from the Downs, have put in arrived at Portsmouth, where they have been joined by the Captain, Ganges and King's. Fisher, with a fleet for the Mediterranean

August 21

Yesterday was discount day at the stock Exchange, for Omnium, and the variations for that Stock were in great, the intrigues and ins & outs various, and in short the speculations of every kind so considerable, that it really was an important day. The rumours respecting the fate of peace, which were spread by means of this agitation, prevailed, and Stocks experienced a considerable fall. However, upon examining the fact, we find that it was only 2 points, and that the principal cause of the fall, was the discount of Omnium.

Mr. Fox gains fresh strength every day. He was so well yesterday as to be able to walk in his garden, and to have after wards a conference with the Marquis of Douglas, previous to the departure of that gentleman for Petersburgh, to whom his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales also paid a visit before he set off. The same day Mr. Fox saw several of his friends, and find that it was only 2 points, and that the principal cause of the fall, was the discount of Omnium.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, November 15, 1806.

We have been favored with the following Letter from the Honorable Robert Hamilton to the Lieutenant Governor, and his Excellency's Answer.

To his Excellency Lieut. Governor GORE.

SIR,

THE Agricultural Society of Niagara, is now furnished with the utmost harmony for upwards of Twenty years.—If they have not made a great deal of noise, they flatter themselves that they have done some little good, and they have enjoyed much comfort.

At the last meeting it was unanimously Resolved to solicit the favor of your Excellency to become an Honorary Member of this Society; and should they be so far indulged, they would further pray that you would as Patron, take them under your more immediate protection.

They beg leave to state, that the Society has formerly enjoyed this distinction from one of your Predecessors, Lieut. General Simcoe, and that under his Patronage, they assisted most materially in procuring to their country, the variety of Fruit with which it now abounds.

Hoping that the honor they solicit, would now, as then, stimulate them to further exertions, for the improvement of the Country in which they reside; they have deputed me to prefer this their Request in the most respectful manner.

I am thus gratified with the opportunity of saying with what regard I have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's
Most obedient and
very humble Servant,
R. HAMILTON. Pte. pro. tem.

Niagara, Nov. 3, 1806.

To which His Excellency was pleased to return the following answer:

York, 12th November 1806.

SIR,

I AM much flattered with the unanimous resolution of the Agricultural Society of Niagara, in soliciting me to become an honorary member, and that I should as Patron take them under my immediate protection.

I beg of you to express to the members of the Society, that it will afford me much satisfaction in becoming an honorary member of so laudable an institution, and of affording them every assistance, and protection in my power.

Accept, Sir, my best thanks, for the very handsome manner with which you have been pleased to communicate the resolution of the Society.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
with sentiments of esteem
your faithful servant,
FRANCIS GORE,
Lieut. Governor.

The Hon. R. Hamilton, &c. &c. &c.

The following Address from the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of the District of London, was received by his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on the 14th November 1806.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE, the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of the District of London, beg leave to present our congratulations to your Excellency, on your safe arrival to this Province, as Lieutenant Governor.

In thus tendering our respects to your Excellency we cannot refrain from expressing our gratitude to our most gracious Sovereign, for this further instance of the paternal care and solicitude which he has ever manifested to his subjects. In appointing your Excellency to preside in the Administration of the Government of this Province, we feel well assured, that he was directed in his choice by a sincere desire to promote the prosperity of the Country; and we doubt not, that under your Administration every of his Majesty's subjects in this Province, will impartially enjoy, in its fullest extent, the protection and benefits of our happy Constitution.

We beg leave to assure your Excellency, that none of his Majesty's subjects appreciate more justly or feel more grateful, for advantages enjoyed under his Government than we do, or feel more anxious and willing at all times to shew our gratitude by making every effort within our reach to add to the support of his Government and in contributing to the promotion of his interests, and we feel well satisfied that the People of this Province will find in your Excellency a firm and sincere advocate of every measure calculated for the benefit and prosperity of this Country.

The remoteness of our residence from the seat of Government, prevents us from personally presenting to your Excellency this testimony of our respect and regard; we beg your acceptance of it, with our warmest wishes for your health and happiness.

We have the honor to be,
your Excellency's
most obedient humble Servants,

District of London,

GENTLEMEN,

I Return you my best thanks for this very loyal and dutiful Address.

The paternal care of his Majesty to his subjects in this Colony, demands every return of gratitude on their part, and I trust you will continue to be animated by sentiments of respect to our beloved Sovereign, and of attachment to our most excellent Constitution.

As for myself, I cannot render a more acceptable service to my King than by promoting the happiness of his People.

Government House,
York, 14th Nov. 1806.

Upon the Trial of Michael Bellinger of Niagara, at the Court of Oyer and Terminer last holden at that District, for a Nuisance by erecting across one Concession line in front of his farm, a fence, as declared by the Honorable Mr. Justice Thorpe, to be contrary to the Statute, and to the Common Law of England, and also to the Laws of this Province, and not to be justified by the Statute of Highways, and that nothing but an actual survey of the several Townships, and an Act of Parliament, could confirm them both. The Grand Jury of that District made the following presentment:—

THE JURY of our Sovereign Lord the King, on the Grand Inquest, find it indispensably a part of their duty, in addition to the opinions delivered hereafter from the Bench, and their sentence having been adopted as the rule of Conduct for the Commissioners of Highways.

From the Bench it having been delivered, that the only roads in the Country, were those represented on the Compass and Simcoe plans, which fact is had been removed from those plans since 1793, as the Provincial Statute points out.—The Commissioners of Highways, fully perceived such opinions were correct, under and by virtue of the 18th, and 19th Geo. III. and several clauses in the Provincial Statute, given power under the Commissioners in the Districts now appointed in the respective Districts, assisted at the Special Sessions held for that purpose in October in conformity to those opinions on the occasion it has always been considered the particular duty of the Overseers, to take upon themselves to act in obedience to order the removal of any nuisance in the High Road or any encroachment that may exist in any part of any road within his direction, also to search such of the Government Reservations left for roads as to their respective directions might be the public be wanting, and that particular portion of the Government Reservation immediately in front of the Farm of Michael Bellinger that has long travelled, and the Overseer of that division did order the removal of his fence, but for want of support in the execution of his office from the Magistrates, he was obliged to bring the affair forward by way of Indictment.

Should the doctrine be maintained that individuals may at pleasure shut up and exclude the appropriations made by Government as the Compass and Simcoe Plans, without being liable to any penalties for so obstructing the internal communication of the Country, the most alarming consequences must follow; a foundation will be laid for litigation, and the whole Country torn to pieces by dissensions and strife.

The public Records, in the office of the Surveyor General may unequivocally express, that the Chain of reservation was an appropriation under His Majesty's instructions for Public Highways.

The Jurors therefore, cannot but consider it as presumptuous and criminal for any individual whatever to shut up or encroach on the limits especially appropriated by His Majesty for the purposes of public convenience.

The Jurors represent that they conceive it does not receive an actual Survey of the Townships by the Commissioners of Roads, to confirm the Compass and Simcoe plans Highways, inasmuch as they were specially appropriated by the Crown for that purpose, one was it in their opinions so contemplated by the Statute.

And the Jurors of our Lord the King, duly watching the strong hand and Gracious Sovereign, of the Great Fire of Preservation of His Majesty's loyal subjects, do present the Hon. Rob. Hamilton, Elijah Phelps, James Lewis, David Lizard and Joseph Ellicott for having fenced across the Government reserves in the first and second Concessions of the Township of Niagara, and the reservations between the Lots leading to the four mile Creek, being one of the most public Roads in the District.

Signed By order of Grand Inquest,
R. CLENCH, Foreman.

To the ELECTORS of the County of YORK, &c.

BY the melancholy and much lamented death of one of our late valuable Representatives, the Seat being vacant, I have prefumed to offer myself as a Candidate for the same. In doing so, I have not the right of the aristocrat responsibility attached to the character of a Representative of a free and flourishing People. I shall attain that honorable station, my first and earnest endeavours shall be directed to the establishment of Public Schools and Places of Worship; to the improvement of the High-Ways in this Province; to procuring a new and general Survey of the several Townships, and to the execution and establishment of Magistrates Courts in each. Thefe are the first objects which prefent themfelves to my view, as immediately neceffary; and to be inftrumental in obtaining them, would be my greateft pride.

I congratulate my fellow fubjects on the happy footing on which they are now placed with refpect to the U. E. Lands.—That equal juftice and wifdom may direct all our Councils—and that the Country may be ever flourishing, happy and free, is the fervent wish and conftant prayer of,

GENTLEMEN,
your humble fervant,

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, or may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt; to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

Victory of the Engliſh over the French in Italy.

The official account of the brilliant affair of Calabria, as published in the Gazette of the 30th Sept. with which we were politely favored by W. C. Greene, eſquire in the New Gaite, is as follows.—Boſton Repertory.

Admiralty-Office, Sept. 4, 1806.

A diſpatch has been this day received by the Right Hon. William Windham, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, from Major General Sir John Stuart, commanding his Majeſty's troops acting in Calabria, of which the following is a copy:

Camp on the Plain of Maida, July 6, 1806.

SIR,

It is with the moſt heartfelt ſatisfaction that I have the honor of reporting to you, for the information of his Majeſty, the particulars of an action, in which the French army quartered in this province, have ſuſtained a ſignal defeat by the troops under my command.

Gen. Regnier, having been apprized of our diſembarkation at St. Eufemia, appears to have made a rapid march from Reggio, uniting as he advanced, his detached corps, for the purpoſe of attacking, and with his characteriſtic confidence, of defeating us.

On the afternoon of the 3d inſt. I received intelligence that he had taken poſt at Maida, about 10 miles diſtant from our poſition, that his force conſiſted at the moment of about 4000 infantry & 300 cavalry, together with 4 pieces of artillery, and that he was in expectation of being joined within a day or two by 3000 more troops, who were marching after him in a ſecond diviſion.

I determined therefore to advance towards his poſition, and, having left four companies of Wurtemberg regiment under Major Fither to protect the ſtores and occupy a work which had been thrown up at our landing place, the body of the army marched the next morning according to the following detail.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, November 15, 1806.

We have been favored with the following Letter from the Honorable Robert Hamilton to the Lieutenant Governor, and his Excellency's Answer.

To his Excellency Lieut. Governor GORE.

SIR,

THE Agricultural Society of Niagara, is now furnished with the utmost harmony for upwards of Twenty years.—If they have not made a great deal of noise, they flatter themselves that they have done some little good, and they have enjoyed much comfort.

At the last meeting it was unanimously Resolved to solicit the favor of your Excellency to become an Honorary Member of this Society; and should they be so far indulged, they would further pray that you would as Patron, take them under your more immediate protection.

They beg leave to state, that the Society has formerly enjoyed this distinction from one of your Predecessors, Lieut. General Simcoe, and that under his Patronage, they assisted most materially in procuring to their country, the variety of Fruit with which it now abounds.

Hoping that the honor they solicit, would now, as then, stimulate them to further exertions, for the improvement of the Country in which they reside; they have deputed me to prefer this their Request in the most respectful manner.

I am thus gratified with the opportunity of saying with what regard I have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's
Most obedient and
very humble Servant,
R. HAMILTON. Pte. pro. tem.

Niagara, Nov. 3, 1806.

To which His Excellency was pleased to return the following answer:

York, 12th November 1806.

SIR,

I AM much flattered with the unanimous resolution of the Agricultural Society of Niagara, in soliciting me to become an honorary member, and that I should as Patron take them under my immediate protection.

I beg of you to express to the members of the Society, that it will afford me much satisfaction in becoming an honorary member of so laudable an institution, and of affording them every assistance, and protection in my power.

Accept, Sir, my best thanks, for the very handsome manner with which you have been pleased to communicate the resolution of the Society.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
with sentiments of esteem
your faithful servant,
FRANCIS GORE,
Lieut. Governor.

The Hon. R. Hamilton, &c. &c. &c.

The following Address from the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of the District of London, was received by his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on the 14th November 1806.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE, the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of the District of London, beg leave to present our congratulations to your Excellency, on your safe arrival to this Province, as Lieutenant Governor.

In thus tendering our respects to your Excellency we cannot refrain from expressing our gratitude to our most gracious Sovereign, for this further instance of the paternal care and solicitude which he has ever manifested to his subjects. In appointing your Excellency to preside in the Administration of the Government of this Province, we feel well assured, that he was directed in his choice by a sincere desire to promote the prosperity of the Country; and we doubt not, that under your Administration every of his Majesty's subjects in this Province, will impartially enjoy, in its fullest extent, the protection and benefits of our happy Constitution.

We beg leave to assure your Excellency, that none of his Majesty's subjects appreciate more justly or feel more grateful, for advantages enjoyed under his Government than we do, or feel more anxious and willing at all times to shew our gratitude by making every effort within our reach to add to the support of his Government and in contributing to the promotion of his interests, and we feel well satisfied that the People of this Province will find in your Excellency a firm and sincere advocate of every measure calculated for the benefit and prosperity of this Country.

The remoteness of our residence from the seat of Government, prevents us from personally presenting to your Excellency this testimony of our respect and regard; we beg your acceptance of it, with our warmest wishes for your health and happiness.

We have the honor to be,
your Excellency's
most obedient humble Servants,

District of London,

GENTLEMEN,

I Return you my best thanks for this very loyal and dutiful Address.

The paternal care of his Majesty to his subjects in this Colony, demands every return of gratitude on their part, and I trust you will continue to be animated by sentiments of respect to our beloved Sovereign, and of attachment to our most excellent Constitution.

As for myself, I cannot render a more acceptable service to my King than by promoting the happiness of his People.

Government House,
York, 14th Nov. 1806.

Upon the Trial of Michael Bellinger of Niagara, at the Court of Oyer and Terminer last holden at that District, for a Nuisance by erecting across one Concession line in front of his farm, a fence, as declared by the Honorable Mr. Justice Thorpe, to be contrary to the Statute, and to the Common Law of England, and also to the Laws of this Province, and not to be justified by the Statute of Highways, and that nothing but an actual survey of the several Townships, and an Act of Parliament, could confirm them both. The Grand Jury of that District made the following presentment:—

THE JURY of our Sovereign Lord the King, on the Grand Inquest, find it indispensably a part of their duty, in addition to the opinions delivered hereafter from the Bench, and their sentence having been adopted as the rule of Conduct for the Commissioners of Highways.

From the Bench it having been delivered, that the only roads in the Country, were those represented on the Compass and Simcoe plans, which fact is had been removed from those plans since 1793, as the Provincial Statute points out.—The Commissioners of Highways, fully perceived such opinions were correct, under and by virtue of the 18th, and 19th Geo. III. and several clauses in the Provincial Statute, given power under the Commissioners in the Districts now appointed in the respective Districts, assisted at the Special Sessions held for that purpose in October in conformity to those opinions on the occasion it has always been considered the particular duty of the Overseers, to take upon themselves to act in obedience to order the removal of any nuisance in the High Road or any encroachment that may exist in any part of any road within his direction, also to search such of the Government Reservations left for roads as to their respective directions might be the public be wanting, and that particular portion of the Government Reservation immediately in front of the Farm of Michael Bellinger that has long travelled, and the Overseer of that division did order the removal of his fence, but for want of support in the execution of his office from the Magistrates, he was obliged to bring the affair forward by way of Indictment.

Should the doctrine be maintained that individuals may at pleasure shut up and exclude the appropriations made by Government as the Compass and Simcoe Plans, without being liable to any penalties for so obstructing the internal communication of the Country, the most alarming consequences must follow; a foundation will be laid for litigation, and the whole Country torn to pieces by dissensions and strife.

The public Records, in the office of the Surveyor General may unequivocally express, that the Chain of reservation was an appropriation under His Majesty's instructions for Public Highways.

The Jurors therefore, cannot but consider it as presumptuous and criminal for any individual whatever to shut up or encroach on the limits especially appropriated by His Majesty for the purposes of public convenience.

The Jurors represent that they conceive it does not receive an actual Survey of the Townships by the Commissioners of Roads, to confirm the Compass and Simcoe plans Highways, inasmuch as they were specially appropriated by the Crown for that purpose, one was it in their opinions so contemplated by the Statute.

And the Jurors of our Lord the King, duly watching the strong hand and Gracious Sovereign, of the Great Fire of Preservation of His Majesty's loyal subjects, do present the Hon. Rob. Hamilton, Elijah Phelps, James Lewis, David Lizard and Joseph Ellicott for having fenced across the Government reserves in the first and second Concessions of the Township of Niagara, and the reservations between the Lots leading to the four mile Creek, being one of the most public Roads in the District.

Signed By order of Grand Inquest,
R. CLENCH, Foreman.

To the ELECTORS of the County of YORK, &c.

BY the melancholy and much lamented death of one of our late valuable Representatives, the Seat being vacant, I have prefumed to offer myself as a Candidate for the same. In doing so, I have not the right of the aristocrat responsibility attached to the character of a Representative of a free and flourishing People. I shall attain that honorable station, my first and earnest endeavours shall be directed to the establishment of Public Schools and Places of Worship; to the improvement of the High-Ways in this Province; to procuring a new and general Survey of the several Townships, and to the execution and establishment of Magistrates Courts in each. Thefe are the first objects which prefent themfelves to my view, as immediately neceffary; and to be inftrumental in obtaining them, would be my greateft pride.

I congratulate my fellow fubjects on the happy footing on which they are now placed with refpect to the U. E. Lands.—That equal juftice and wifdom may direct all our Councils—and that the Country may be ever flourishing, happy and free, is the fervent wish and conftant prayer of,

GENTLEMEN,
your humble fervant,
JAMES FULTON.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeffes of our faid Province, to the Provincial Parliament of our Town of York, on the twentieth day of November to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the SIXTH day of October, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our faid Provincial Parliament until the twentieth day of November inftant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conftrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal confideration, the eafe and convenience of our loving fubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and confent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforefaid, hereby convoking, and by thefe prefents enjoining you and each of you that on the twenty fixth day of December, next enfuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into confideration the ftate and welfare of our faid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may feem neceffary. Herein fail not.

IN Teftimony whereof, WE have caufed thefe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our faid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witnefs our trufty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this fourteenth day of NOVEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thoufand eight hundred and fix, and forty-feventh year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, or may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt; to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

Victory of the Engliſh over the French in Italy.

The official account of the brilliant affair of Calabria, as published in the Gazette of the 30th Sept. with which we were politely favored by W. C. Greene, eſquire in the New Gaite, is as follows.—Boſton Repertory.

Admiralty-Office, Sept. 4, 1806.

A diſpatch has been this day received by the Right Hon. William Windham, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, from Major General Sir John Stuart, commanding his Majeſty's troops acting in Calabria, of which the following is a copy:

Camp on the Plain of Maida, July 6, 1806.

SIR,

It is with the moſt heartfelt ſatisfaction that I have the honor of reporting to you, for the information of his Majeſty, the particulars of an action, in which the French army quartered in this province, have ſuſtained a ſignal defeat by the troops under my command.

Gen. Regnier, having been apprized of our diſembarkation at St. Eufemia, appears to have made a rapid march from Reggio, uniting as he advanced, his detached corps, for the purpoſe of attacking, and with his characteriſtic confidence, of defeating us.

On the afternoon of the 3d inſt. I received intelligence that he had taken poſt at Maida, about 10 miles diſtant from our poſition, that his force conſiſted at the moment of about 4000 infantry & 300 cavalry, together with 4 pieces of artillery, and that he was in expectation of being joined within a day or two by 3000 more troops, who were marching after him in a ſecond diviſion.

I determined therefore to advance towards his poſition, and, having left four companies of Wurtemberg regiment under Major Fither to protect the ſtores and occupy a work which had been thrown up at our landing place, the body of the army marched the next morning according to the following detail.

Advanced Corps.—Lieut. Col. Kemp, with 1056 four pounders.

Light infantry battalion.
Detachments Royal Corſican Rangers.
Detachment Royal Britiſh Volunteers.

18 Brigade.—Brigadier Gen. Cole, with three flat flanker.
Grenadier Battalion.
27th Regiment.
20 Brigade.—Brigadier Gen. Ackland, with three four pounders.
78th Regiment.
81st Regiment.
31 Brigade.—Col. Oswald, with two 4-pounders
58th Regiment.
Watteville's Regiment, 3 companies.
60th Regt Lieut. Col. Ross, landed during the action.
Reserve of Artillery.—Major Lemoine, 4 6s pounders and a howitzer.
Total.—Rank and file, including the Royal Artillery, 4781
General Regnier was encamped on the side of a woody hill, below the village of Maida, fronting into the plain of St Eufemia; his flanks were strengthened by a thick impervious underwood. The Amasto, a river perfectly fordable, but of which the bed the extremely marshy, ran along his front: my approach to him from the sea side (along the borders of which, I directed my march, until I had nearly turned his left) was across a spacious plain, which gave him every opportunity of minutely observing my movements

After some loofe firing of the flankers to cover the deployment of the two armies, by 9 o'clock in the morning the opposing fronts were warmly engaged, when the prowefs of the rival nations, formed now fairly to be at trial before the world, and the fuperiority was greatly and decidedly to be our own.

The corps which formed the right of the advanced line, was the battalion of light infantry, commanded by Lieut. Col. Kempt, conſiſting of the light companies of the 20th, 27th 35th, 61ſt, 81ſt, and Watteville's, together with one hundred and fifty choſen battalion men of the 35th regt. under Major Robinſon.—Directly oppoſed to them was the favorite French regt. the 1ſt Legere. The two corps at the diſtance of about 200 yards fired reciprocally a few rounds, when, as if by mutual a-greement, the firing was ſuſpended & in cloſe compact order and awful ſi-lence, they advanced towards each o-ther until their bayonets began to croſs. At this momentous criſis the enemy be-came appalled. They broke, and en-deavoured to fly, but it was too late; they were overtaken with the moſt dreadful ſlaughter.

Brigadier Gen. Ackland, whoſe bri-gade was immediately on the left of the light infantry, with great ſpirit availed himſelf of this favorable moment to preſs inſtantly forward upon the corps in his front; the brave 78th regt. com-manded by Lieut. Col. Macleod, and the 81ſt regt. under Major Pleyderleath both diſtinguiſhed themſelves on this occaſion. The enemy fled with diſmay and diſorder before them, leaving the plain covered with their dead & wound-ed.

The enemy being thus completely diſcomfited on their left, began to make a new effort with their right, in hopes of recovering the day. They were re-ſiſted moſt gallantly by the brigade un-der Brigadier Gen. Cole. Nothing could ſhake the undaunted firmneſs of the grenadiers under Lt. Col. O'Cal-laghan, and of the 27th regt. under Lieut. Col. Smith. The cavalry ſuc-ceſſively repelled from before the front made an effort to turn their left, when Lieut. Col. Ross, who had that morn-ing landed from Meſſina with the 20th regt. and was coming up to the army, during the action, having obſerved the movement, threw his regiment oppor-tunely into a ſmall cove upon their flank, and by a heavy and well directed fire, entirely diſconcerted this attempt.

This was the laſt feeble ſtruggle of the enemy, who now, aſtoniſhed and diſmayed by the intrepidity with which they were aſſailed, began precipitately to retire, leaving the field covered with carnage. Above 700 bodies of their dead have been buried upon the ground —The wounded and priſoners already in our hands (among which are Gen. Compere, and an aid-de-camp, the Lt. Col. of the Swiſs regt. and a long liſt of officers of different ranks) amount to above 1000. There are alſo above 1000 men left in Monteleone and the diffe-rent poſts between Maida and Reggio, who have moſtly retired from Meſſi-na to Napoleon, whenever a Britiſh force ſhall be ſent to receive their ſub-miſſion, and to protect them from the fury of the people. The peaſantry are ſtrongly bringing in fugitives, who diſ-perſed in the woods and mountains after the battle. In ſhort, never has the pride of our preſumptuous enemy been more severely humbled, nor the ſupe-riority of Britiſh troops more gloriouſly proved than in the events of this memorable day.

His Majeſty may, perhaps, ſtill deign to appreciate more highly the achieve-ments of this little army, when it is known that the ſecond diviſion which the enemy were ſaid to be expecting had all joined them the night before the action and the ſtatement that I have heard of their numbers places them at a leſs calculation than 7000 men.

Our victorious infantry continued the purſuit of the routed enemy ſo long as they were able; but as the laſt-ter diſappeared in every direction, and we were under the neceſſity of preſerv-ing our order, the trial of ſpeed became unequal.

The total loſs occaſioned to the ene-my by this conflict cannot be leſs than 4000 men. When I oppoſe to the a-bove our own ſmall comparative loſs, as underneath detailed, his Majeſty will, I hope, diſcern in the fact, the happy effects of that eſtabliſhed diſcipline to which we owe the triumphs by which our army has been latterly ſo highly diſtinguiſhed.

I am now beginning my march ſouth-ward, preparatory to my return to Sici-ly, for which ſtation I ſhall re-em-bark with the army, ſo ſoon as his Si-cilian Majeſty ſhall have arranged a diſ-poſition of his own forces to ſecure thoſe advantages which have been gain-ed by the preſent expedition.

There ſeldom has happened in ac-tion in which the zeal and perſonal exer-tions of individuals were ſo imperiouſly called for as in the preſent; ſeldom an occaſion where a general had a fairer opportunity of obſerving them.

The general officers, and thoſe who commanded regiments, will feel a ſtron-ger ſenſe of their merits in the circum-ſtances that have been detailed of their conduct, than in any eulogium I could preſume to paſs upon them.

The 58th and Watteville's regt. com-manded by Lieut. Colonels Johnſton and Watteville, which formed the re-ſerve, under Col. Oſwold, were ably directed in their application to that eſſential duty.

The judgment and effect with which our artillery was directed by Major Le-moine, was, in our dearth of cavalry, of moſt eſſential uſe; and I have a plea-ſure in reporting the effective ſervices of that valuable and diſtinguiſhed corps.

To the ſeveral departments of the army, every acknowledgement is due; but to no officer, am I bound to expreſs them ſo fully, on my part, as to lieut. col. Dunbury, the deputy Qr. Maſter General, to whoſe zeal and activity, and able arrangements in the important branch of ſervice which he directs, the army as well as myſelf are under every marked obligation.

From Capt. Tomlin, the acting head of the Adjutant General's department, and from the officers of my own family, I have received much active aſſiſtance. Among the latter I am to mention Lt. Col. Moore of the 23d light dragoons, who being in Sicily for his health at the time of our departure, ſolicited per-miſſion to accompany me on this expe-dition, he was wounded in the execu-tion of my orders.

From the medical department under the direction of Mr. Grieves, the depu-ty inſpector, I am to acknowledge much profeſſional attention the more ſo, as their labours have been greatly accu-mulated by the number of wounded priſoners who have become equally, with our own, the ſubject of their care.

The ſcene of action, was too far from the ſea to enable us to derive any di-rect co-operation from the navy; but admiral Sir Sidney Smith, who had ar-rived in the bay the evening before your action, had diſpoſed ſuch a diſpo-ſition of his and gun-boats as would have greatly favored us, had events obliged his to retire. The ſolicitude however of every part of the ſquadron to be of uſe to us, the promptitude with which the ſeamen ballened on ſhore with out ſupplies, and anxiety to aſ-ſiſt our wounded, and the tenderneſs with which they treated them, would have been an affecting circumſtance to obſervers, even the moſt indifferent. To me it was particularly ſo.

Captain Fellowes, of his Majeſty's ſhip Apollo, has been ſpecially attach-ed to this expedition by the Rear Ad-miral; and, in every circumſtance of profeſſional ſervice, I beg leave to diſ-tinction our grateful obligations to this officer, as well as to Captains Cocket and Watſon, agents of tranſports, who acted under his orders.

Captain Buckley, my Aid-de-Camp, who will have the honor of preſenting this letter to you, has attended me throughout the whole of the ſervices in the Mediterranean, and will there-fore be able to give you every addi-tional information on the ſubject of my preſent communication.

I have the honor to be, &c.

J. STUART, maj. Gen.

DEATH OF MR. FOX.

London Sept. 15.

At a quarter before ſix o'clock on Saturday after-noon this great and illuſtrious Stateſman yielded up his laſt breath, to the arms of his nephew, Lord Holland, his diſſolution was ſo gradual and accom-panied by ſo little ſtruggle, as ſcarcely to permit the moſt anxious eye to aſcertain the inſtant his friends had at leaſt the ſad and melancholy conſolation of perceiving that he ſuffered no pain.—and they will have periſhed in the storm, by the unerring ſymp-toms of exhauſtion that had encreaſed for the two days preceding. On Friday afternoon the Phyſicians ap-prehended to him the approaching cloſe, and he receiv-ed it as he had done in the firſt inſtance, with that firm tranquility of ſtoick which characteriſe of his nature, and which he maintained to the laſt.

Mr. Fox died at the very moment when the Turk and Tower guns were announcing the capture of Buenos Ayres.

There are various reports as to who is to ſucceed Mr. Fox in the foreign department. Among thoſe who are mentioned are the Marquis Wellesley, Lord Holland and Mr. T. Grenville. The laſt mentioned gentle-man, it is generally thought will be appointed.

It is ſingular to remark the fatality that has ſtarred among the leading men of this Country with in the laſt twelve months, viz.

MARQUIS CORNWALLIS, Oct. 5.
LORD NELSON, Oct. 21.
MR. PITT, Jan. 23.
LORD THURLOW, Sept. 12.
MR. FOX, Sept. 13.

Mr. Fox was in his 58th year. He was elected to Parliament before he was of age—acted with the then Mi-niſters, and his firſt ſpeech was againſt the miniſtry.

He was often in and out of the miniſtry.

Laſt night a meſſenger left town for Paris. He will carry the news of the death of Mr. Fox.

The embarkation of troops for fo-reign ſervice is renewed with encreaſed activity.

An order has been received at the dock yard, Portſmouth, to communi-cate how ſoon the flat bottomed boats which are uſually employed in diſem-barking troops, can be got ready for ſervice.

The boats of the Haughty, gun-brig have recently cut out of port 8 Spaniſh loaded veſſels. She has in her laſt cruize deſtroyed 13 or 14 other veſſels.

An attempt to cut out Jerome's ſhip Veteran, we have every reaſon to be-lieve, has ere this, been made by two of our frigates.

The Ruſſian Miniſter in announcing to the French Cabinet the refuſal of his maſter to ratify the treaty of M. d'Andreoſſi, declares, "that that Miniſter had acted entirely contrary to the orders and inſtructions which he had received; but that in order to leave no poſſible meaning reſpecting peace and general tran-quility entire, the Imperial Miniſtry has received orders to make known to the cabinet of the Thuiller-ies, the baſis on which his Imperial Majeſty will be ready to renew the negotiations; ſo that it will depend on the French Government to accept or de-cline the equitable laſt and moderate propoſals which are made to it."

Boſton October, 31.

FROM EUROPE.—The laſteſt foreign papers received in town, are from Greenock, by the way of New-Bedford. Our foreign department will give a view of the principal events which have occurred ſince our previous dates. Among theſe, the capture of Buenos Ayres, and the deceaſe of Mr. Fox, are the moſt prominent. The laſt event —the refuſal of the Emperor Alexan-der, to ratify the treaty which his mi-niſter concluded—the orders for the re embarkation of troops in England for a ſecret expedition—and the initia-tory governments on the continent—are unfavorable to peace.—But ſtill the poſſibility of a peace remains while the Britiſh plenipotentiary continues at Paris. Fullarton.

Extract of a letter from commodore Pop-ham who commanded the expedition a-gainſt Buenos Ayres, to the ſecretary of the Admiralty.

On Buenos Ayres, 6th July.

SIR,

In a letter which I had the honor to addreſs you from St. Helena, on the 30th of April, I fully explained, for the information of my lords com-miſſioners of the Admiralty, the mo-tives that induced me to preſs ſo ſtrong-ly the urgency and expediency of un-dertaking an expedition againſt the e-nemy's ſettlements in Rio de la Plata.

I have therefore only to give you a ſhort detail of the proceedings of the ſquadron ſ previouſly congratulating their lordſhips on his Majeſty's forces being in full poſſeſſion of Buenos Ay-res and its dependancies, the capital of one of the richeſt and moſt extenſive provinces of South America.

To the commerce of Great Britain it exhibits peculiar advantages, as well as to the active induſtry of her manufac-turing towns. And when I venture in addition to aſſure their lordſhips of the extreme healthineſs of the climate, I truſt I only hold out a conſolation that the friends of every perſon em-ployed on this expedition are juſtly entitled to, and which I am ſatisfied will be equally gratifying to the feel-ings of every Britiſh ſubject.

As I conſidered it an object of ma-terial conſequence to obtain the ear-lieſt local information of the river, I placed the ſquadron under the direc-tion of captain Rowley, and proceeded in the Narciſſus for that purpoſe.

On the 8th ult. we anchored near the iſland of Flores; and, after paſſing Monte Video the following day, we detained a Portugueſe ſchooner, by whom the intelligence we had former-ly received, was generally confirmed. On the 11th, we fell in with the En-counter and Ocean tranſports near the ſouth coaſt of the river; and on the 13th we joined the ſquadron.

It was immediately determined to attack the capital, and no time was loſt in removing the marine battalion to the Narciſſus, the Encounter, and the tranſports, for the purpoſe of pro-ceeding to Buenos Ayres, while the Diadem blockaded the port of Monte-Video, and the Raiſonable and Diome-de, by way of demonſtration, cruized near Maldonado, and other available points.

Our progreſs up the river was very much retarded by the ſhoalneſs of the water adverſe winds and currents, con-tinual logs, and the great inaccuracy of the charts;—but by the unremitting and laborious exertions of the officers and men I had the honor to command, theſe difficulties were ſurmounted, and the ſquadron anchored, on the after-noon of the 25th, off point Quelme a Pouchio, about 12 miles from Buenos Ayres.

As it was impoſſible for the Narciſſus to approach the ſhore, on account of the ſhoalneſs of the water, the Encoun-ter was run in ſo cloſe as to take the ground more effectually to cover the debarkation of the army in caſe of neceſſity; the whole however was landed in the courſe of the evening without the leaſt oppoſition;—con-ſiſting of the detachment of his Ma-jeſty's troops, from the Cape, and that from St. Helena, with the marine bat-talion under the orders of capt. King, of his Majeſty's ſhip the Diadem, which was compoſed of the marines of the ſquadron augmented by the incorpora-tion of ſome ſeamen, and three com-panies of Royal Blues from the ſame ſource of enterprize, which had been regularly trained for that duty, and dreſſed in an appropriate uniform.

The enemy was poſted at the village of Reduction, which was on an emi-nence about two miles from the beach, with the appearance of a fine plain be-tween the two armies, which however proved on the following morning to be only a morais in a high ſtate of ver-dure.

This in ſome meaſure checked our advancement, nor did the enemy open his field train till the troops were near-ly in the middle of the ſwamp, from whence he thought it was impoſſible for them to be extricated.

The able and excellent diſpoſition of Gen. Beresford, and the intrepidity of his army, very ſoon however ſatisfied the enemy, that his only ſafety was in a precipitate retreat, for we had the ſa-tisfaction of ſeeing from the ſhips near 3000 Spaniſh cavalry flying in every direction, leaving their artillery behind them, while our troops were aſcending the hill with that coolneſs and courage, which has on every occaſion ſtamped the character of a Britiſh ſoldier, and has been exemplified in proportion to the difficulties and dangers by which he was oppoſed.

On the 27th, in the morning, we ſaw firing near the banks of he river Cheilo, but it blew ſo hard that it was totally impracticable to have any com-munication with the ſhore during that day. On the 28th, our troops took poſſeſſion of Buenos Ayres.

I have ſ t Lieut. Grover to take poſſeſſion of Enſenatas or Barragon, a port to the eaſtward of Buenos Ayres, where I underſtand there are two gun veſſels and two merchant ſhips.

ALBANY, Nov. 11th.

A Gentleman of this city, lately from Waſhington whoſe diligence and correctneſs may be relied on, reports that a letter had been received at that place, by a Mr. ——, reſpecting the death of Mr. Fox, which was his brother in Kentucky, purporting, that, in conſequence of a commotion of the People, who ſuſ-pected that Charles Fox, Eſquire, of that place, to favour his party in Chippewa.

The preſent miſtate of this report induces us to repeat the names of the perſons implicated as honeſt, until the authenticity of the report is fully aſcer-tained.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, November 22, 1806.

To RALFE CLENCH, Eq. M. H. As Foreman of the Grand Jury, Niagara &c. &c.

SIR,

A preſentment from the Grand Jury of the Niagara Diſtrict, with your Signature, has been publiſhed in the York Gazette, of the 15th November, 1806.—And the officers of the Crown concerned at the Aſſizes have aſſured me, they never gave any copy, or patti-ed with the original Preſentment.

The introduction miſrepreſents the ſentiments of the Court in the caſe of the King v. Bellinger, and the Preſ-ſentment convinces me that the Grand Jury miſconceived the opinion and ad-vice of the Court relative to the Con-ceſſion Lines, though delivered on ſe-veral occaſions at their requeſt. As this is a ſubject of general import, I will, without alluding to the Preſentment, ſtate, for the ſatisfaction of the public, the opinion, deciſion and advice of the Bench on thoſe Lines at the laſt Aſſizes for Niagara.

The Court conſidering that the Crown had intended to reſerve the land be-tween the Conceſſion Lines for High-ways (although there was no evidence offered to eſtabliſh it) ſuffered the cauſe of the King v. Bellinger to proceed, until the proof produced to eſtabliſh where the Conceſſion Lines ran, was a note from a Clerk in the Surveyor Ge-neral's Office, ſtating that the Conceſ-ſion Lines lay between ſuch and ſuch a lot; and from the inſufficiency of this evidence, the Traverſer was acquitted; for the Court is bound to receive only the beſt evidence the nature of the caſe will afford.

On an application from the Grand Jury to the Bench for advice, many di-fficulties occurred to the Court; firſt, that although the Crown intended the land between the Conceſſion Lines for Highways, yet that this land muſt be laid out or travelled to conſtitute it a Highway; ſecondly, that although the land between the Conceſſion Lines was originally intended to be reſerved for Roads, yet many Grants contain the land includes by thoſe lines; and third-by, that the necessary evidence for ascertaining those boundaries, would be troublesome and expensive.

Therefore the Court advised, that a Bill should be brought into Parliament, declaratory of the Royal intention to reserve the land within the Concession Lines for Roads, and enacting, that any Deed granting land within such Lines, should be void, so far as related to the land contained within such Concession Lines; to which a clause should be added, allowing compensation for the land so reserved, according to the circumstances of the case; and lastly, that the Commissioners, or Magistrates should, on sufficient application, cause the Concession Lines to be opened into Roads, on such evidence of the Boundaries being produced, as the act should determine sufficient; for a Court of Law cannot pass by Letters Patent, nor receive insufficient evidence, because it would establish a convenient Highway, when it might make a precedent for admitting evidence, that in the next cause would sacrifice an estate. The Court considered this an easy and safe mode, by which every difficulty would be removed, and hoped the advice might be satisfactory and beneficial to the public.

I cannot, Sir, conclude this without assuring you, that I am perfectly satisfied that the Presentment was published without your knowledge or consent.

I am, Sir, your obedient
very humble servant,
ROBT. THORPE.

DIED.

On Thursday the 13th inst. in the 7th year of his age, George Berkeley Small, fourth son of John Small Esqr. of this place.—The melancholy and painful sufferings which he underwent during an illness of eighteen days with the greatest patience and fortitude, was truly distressing to all who saw him; and must have greatly heightened the affection of his affectionate parents, to whom he had peculiarly endeared himself by an amiable temper and disposition.

His remains were attended to the place of interment on Wednesday the 19th inst. by a few select friends, witnesses to his sufferings.

Postscript.

LONDON, August 18.

Our last accounts from Paris mention, that a new Catechism has been completed for the use of all the churches of the French empire, and, with the approbation of the Representatives of the Holy See, will shortly be published.

ALGIERS, June 7.

A camp of eighty thousand men has been some time assembling, under our walls, which broke up last night for Tunis. The Artillery and ammunition is to be transported by water. The British orders are given to respect French vessels and French property.

The English have lately captured a Genoese vessel, which had a pass signed by the Dey and an Algerine Pilot on board. The Dey, who has taken offence at this, has ordered the English Agent away, and sent a Bruzer to Malta, whither the captured vessel was brought to obtain her restitution.

June 13.

A Courier from Constantinople, who has like wise brought letters to the Jew from persons of importance at Venice, is just arrived here, and first back immediately, as it is supposed, to hasten the march of the army. A ship of war, which cleared out with ammunition, is returned.

When the body of the illustrious hero of Trafalgar was put into a cask of spirits to be transported to old England, the hangman exactly imitated one of his Majesty's Ships in readiness to sail at the opening. A seaman who had for forty years served in the admiral's ship, seized the hand, and giving it a cordial grasp, at the same time wiping away a tear that glistened on his weather-beaten cheek, exclaimed, "D——n me old boy, if you are not in better Spirits than any of us."

Affrays.—Yesterday, says the London Courier of Aug. 16, an ancient Briton, named Griffith, was brought before the chief magistrate, charged with an assault and battery upon the person of a German Philosopher, who is also a dealer in cheefe, sour-crout, smoaked sausages, and other savory viands, of which assault and battery the complainant exhibited the sad marks, in a pair of black eyes, and a countenance covered by the authority Books of an adept in pugilism.

The German stated, that he was in a public-house on Wednesday night, in company with a number of persons, of whom Griffith was one; and that having had some warm disputes with a lawyer, who was not at present forthcoming, the conceit was some time ended, when the lawyer, after cool and mature deliberation, stood up, and struck him with his fist on the eye; and that immediately afterwards, the rest of the company, amongst whom was Griffith, entered into a very liberal fisticuffication of the same kind of complaisants, attacked him en masse, and beat him somersetously.

W. Griffith, in his defence, gave quite a different version of the story: and from his statement, it appeared that the lawyer, who, it seemed, was also a philologer, though of a different School, was very warmly engaged in an ethronomical discussion with the German, touching the order of the system in which our earth is placed. The German obstinately maintaining the doctrine of Tycho Brahe, that our earth is stationary, and that the sun and planets move round it as a centre, while the lawyer, who is a disciple and champion of the Copernican School, maintained the doctrine of Newton, and the moderns. Much gin and beer were exhausted in the dispute, and much of learning, and eloquence lavished on both sides. The contest became too hot to be sustained by words; and the parties unable to bring each other to reason by the dint of argument, referred at last to the ultima ratio regum. The lawyer told the German, that if he would promise not to take the law of him, he would knock him down. The German, indubitable of his kindness, acceded to the proposal, which was immediately ratified, under the sign manual of the lawyer, upon the head-eye of the German, who countersigned, in his turn, upon the nose of his antagonist. War being thus commenced, according to the law of arms, as laid down by Grotius, the battle waxed hot; and the lawyer, though the smallest, proving the better man, and too much for his antagonist in pugilistical logic, Griffith, as a mediator, stepped in to negociate a peace, if possible; and in endeavouring to separate the parties out of the focus of mutual attraction, the German seized a pewter pot, and with it proceeded to demonstrate, upon the head and arms of Griffith, a problem on the attraction and collision of bodies.

The Magistrate dismissed the charge, as against Griffith, and told the Complainant to find out the lawyer, as the proper object of his prosecution.

FROM THE CUMBERLAND REGISTER.

The following articles have been related to the editor, by a gentleman of veracity:—

About the close of the American war, this gentleman, being at an Indian town in Louisiana, at the confluence of two rivers, he observed an Alligator swimming on the surface of the water, but paid little attention to it, being nothing uncommon in that part of the world; but hearing a splash in the water, he instantly looked round, and saw an Indian swimming directly towards it. The animal no sooner saw him than it came to meet him. When they met, it opened its jaws to devour him, but he thrust his hand into its mouth, and immediately wheeled round and made for the shore. The Alligator began to make a considerable struggle, but in few minutes turned on his back and died; the Indian then hauled him out of the water, and the gentleman who had been all this time chinking on what could be the cause of the death, was surprised to see that the Indian had taken a piece of wood sharped at both ends; this he had dexterously fix into its mouth, which, when it made the snap at him, stuck fast into both its upper and under jaw, from which it could not clear itself, or close its mouth, and of consequence must have suffocated.

The same gentleman gives us a peculiar instance of Indian barbarity. He says, that on his return to Pensylvania, in company with the same Captain, who had brought goods from New Orleans, to trade with the Creek and Cherokee Indians, he was one day at an Indian town, where they were regaled with a woman, who had been left behind her a young child, which had not as yet been taken from the breast. The infant was taken to the grave by a young woman, a near relation of the deceased, where the corpse already was put in the grave, looked round and asked each of the persons present if they would take the child and officiate as a parent to it; but no person would undertake the charge. When the last this, she clasped her hand on the infant's mouth, with its nose between her finger and thumb, and held it in that manner for a considerable time—which put an end to its earthly career; and as soon as it appeared to be dead, she laid it in the grave with its mother, who were both buried together. From this instance of barbarity, we may see the wonderful power of custom upon the minds of mankind; for it would appear that this destruction, children that seem unable to provide for themselves, not only to take them, but even to put them to death at pleasure, when it did not suit their convenience or inclination to suffer them.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twentieth day of November, to be convened, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the SIXTH day of October, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twentieth day of November instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twenty sixth day of December, ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the State and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this fourteenth day of NOVEMBER in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein from that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. List, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted to the List, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful subjects may become partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to the fullest extent.

GIVEN, under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October, in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

By his Excellency's Command.

WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE, Sept. 13.

Terms granted to the inhabitants of Buenos Ayres and its dependencies, by the Commanders in Chief of his Britannic Majesty's forces by land and by sea.

Art. 1. The troops belonging to his Catholic Majesty who were in the town at the time of the surrender of the British troops, shall be allowed to meet in the barracks of Buenos Ayres, march out of the fort with all the honors of war, and shall then lay down their arms and become prisoners of war, but such officers as are natives of South America, or married with natives of the country, or regularly domiciliated, shall be at liberty to continue here for so long as they behave themselves as becomes good subjects and citizens, taking the oath of allegiance to his Britannic Majesty, or proceed to Great Britain with regular passports, having public ships to carry them to Europe, not to serve until regularly exchanged.

2. All sorts fide private property, whether belonging to the civil or military servants of the government, to the inhabitants, burghers and inhabitants of the town of Buenos Ayres and its dependencies, to the Illustrious the Bishop, the Clergy, the Convents, Churches, Monasteries, Hospitals, Foundations, and other public institutions of that kind shall remain free and unmolested.

3. All persons of every description, belonging to this city and its dependencies, shall receive every protection from the British Government, and they shall not be obliged to bear arms against his Catholic Majesty; nor shall any person whatever in the city or its dependencies, take up arms, or otherwise act immically to his Majesty's troops or government.

4. The cabildo, magistrates, burghers, and inhabitants shall preserve all their rights and privileges which they have enjoyed hitherto, and shall continue in full and free exercise of all their legal functions, both civil and criminal, under all the respect and protection that can be afforded them by his Majesty's government until his Majesty's pleasure is known.

5. The public archives of the town shall receive every protection from his Britannic Majesty's government.

6. The different taxes and duties levied by the magistrates to remain for the present, and to be collected by them in the same manner, and applied to the same gerous to barricadoes, for the general good of the city, until his Majesty's pleasure is known.

7 Every protection shall be given to the full and free exercise of the Holy Catholic Religion, and all inferior flowers to the most illustrious the Bishops, and all the Holy Clergy.

8. The Ecclesiastical Court shall continue in the full and free exercise of all its functions, to be precisely on the same footing as it was heretofore.

9 The coasting vessels in the river will be given up to their owners, according to a proclamation dated the 30th ult.

10. All public property of every description belonging to the enemies of his Britannic Majesty, shall be faithfully delivered up to the captors; and as the commanders in chief bind themselves to see the fulfilment of all the preceding articles for the benefit of South America, so do the Cabildo and Magistrates bind themselves to see that this last article is faithfully and honorably complied with.

Given under our hands and seals, in the Fortress of Buenos Ayres, this 2d day of July 1806.

Another dispatch from General Beresford, to Lord Castlereagh, dated Fort of Buenos Ayres, 2ist July, 1806 mentions, that though the City of Buenos Ayres was at the mercy of the troops which entered it, a regard for the national character had induced him and Sir Home Popham to grant the terms above recited, and also to give up to the proprietors one hundred and eighty coasting vessels captured, and their cargoes valued at one million and an half of dollars, which they hoped would meet his Excellency's approbation.

He also informs, that a mounted detachment under Capt. Arbuthnot, had been sent to Luxan, 50 miles distant, to reconnoitre the country, ascertain the disposition of the people, and escort back some of the treasure, which had been taken from Buenos Ayres, which, if private property, as declared should, be given to the owners. Captain Arbuthnot reported favorably of the country, which is described as a perfect flat, and the view of the horizon obstructed by nothing but immense herds of horses and cattle. Much of the treasure was caught actually going to Cordova, and the rest, but for the opportune arrival of the party would have been pillaged. The waggons conveying the treasure were expected to arrive the 13th July. Those with the Royal treasure arrived some days before. It has since been landed safe at Portsmouth.

PROMOTIONS OF RUSSIA. Aug. 20.

The name of M. D'Oubril is no longer found in the list of the members of the Foreign Department.

A German Gazette, announces, that his Prussian Majesty is on the point of concluding a Confederation for the North of Germany.

On the 21st of August, an alliance was concluded between Prussia and Hesse.

Great preparations are making in Russia. That Empire has 40,000 men on the frontiers of Moldavia, 40,000 on those of Gallacia, and 150,000 on those Prussia.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.

All the movements now taking place appear to announce war. The garrison of this City as well as that of Potsdam have to day received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march at the first signal. The gens d'armes the garde du corps, and the hussars leave Berlin to day; the rest of the garrison will follow to-morrow. The place of these troops will be supplied by other regiments. On the 15th, the Saxon troops, forming the garrison of Munden, received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march at the first signal. It is evident that the [illegible] and measures are at present the subject of a thousand conjectures.

BERLIN, Sept. 2.

His Majesty will very soon [illegible] great Theatre of war in the north. Cabinet Ministers [illegible] Hague &c. will, it is said accompany his Majesty. It is expected that the Foreign ministers will follow the King to the head quarters.

The Princes Henry and William, left our yesterday for the army; each of them will command a brigade.

GRENOBLE, Sept. 19.

Since our last, both the Hamburgh Mails which were due have arrived. Their contents are important. Prussia has been driven to such extremity, that unless she at length determine to resist the further incroachments of France, she must submit to receive the Imperial CUP DE GRACE, and sink into absolute vassalage. Russia holds a commanding position—Sweden preserves her wonted spirit—and Austria seems waiting for an opportunity to revenge the insults she has sustained.

A Gottenburgh Mail has likewise arrived; the following is an extract of a letter from that place.

"The messenger Ballet arrived here yesterday from St. Peterburgh:—He brings advice, that the Emperor of Russia has refused to ratify with France the convention concluded by M. d'Oubril. A private letter from Stockholm contains the same intelligence, with the addition, that a new Coalition is forming against France, to consist of Russia, Prussia, Sweden, Hesse, &c. If this be true, peace must yet be at a distance."

Another letter from Gottenburgh, of the date of Sept. 5 says:—

"A Russian courier arrived yesterday in eight days from St. Petersburgh, with important dispatches for England.

"All the accounts from St. Petersburgh agree in stating, that the Emperor has refused to ratify the treaty made with France; and that M. D'Oubril, is in some disgrace for having gone beyond his instructions. The Russian army has been considerably augmented, and 500,000 men are ready to march at a moment's warning. The command of it will be given, it is said, to the old General Kanntokoy, who was famous in the time of Catharine."

New-York, October 31.

Latest Intelligence.—It appears that the editor of the Philadelphia Register has received by the Ship Protection, which arrived at this port, later dates than any received here, by one day. Extracts follow:

London, Sept. 11.

Arrival of dispatches from France, 4 o'clock, a. m.

We stop the press to state the arrival of a messenger, who as we are informed, reached town about two hours ago, with dispatches from lord Lauderdale, with which he proceeded immediately to Sir Francis Vincent's house in Arlington-street.

Mr. Parsons, the messenger, arrived in town between two and three o'clock this morning with dispatches from the earl of Lauderdale in answer to those which he carried over with him. He left Paris on Tuesday—landed at Deal at five o'clock last night, and immediately proceeded in a post chaise and four to London.—Upon his arrival he first went to Downing street, and then to Sir Francis Vincent's, at Arlington-street. The dispatches were immediately forwarded to lord Grenville.

Mr. Parsons made the journey from London to Paris with very great expedition—he was only 45 hours in going.

The dispatches of which he is the bearer, are stated to be of very considerable importance. A council was held upon them this day at one o'clock.

Besides Mr. Smith, the messengers, were not, as was generally affected, dispatched for Paris yesterday. No messenger was dispatched till this morning. Basilico left London about two o'clock this morning.

Mr. Erskine, son of the lord chancellor, and the new minister from England, is a young gentleman of amiable and respectable character and warmly attached to the United States. He married about seven years ago, the daughter of General Cadwallader, of Pennsylvania, one of the patriots of 1776. and who died in his country's defence.—By this marriage, Mr. E. has a daughter whom he left in Philadelphia, (where he returned to England some years ago) with her grandmother, Mrs. Cadwallader, the general's widow. Mr. Erskine's father, the lord chancellor, is known to entertain, and to express upon all occasions, the most partial sentiments towards this country, and to have vested a considerable portion of his property in the American funds. The sending out Mr. Erskine to the United States, in the character he now fills, is the strongest proof of the sincere disposition of the British government to cultivate a lasting friendship with the United States.—*Mer. Extraordinary Phenomenon.

[The following account of an extraordinary phenomenon, that appeared to a number of people in the County of Rockingham, late in November, 1802, was made the 9th of August, 1806, to professor of David Dickie, Esq of the county and state aforesaid, [illegible] Esq. of the same county, Esq. of the county of Buncombe, and Miss Betsey Newton of the state of Georgia, who unanimously agree, with the contents of the relation, that Mr. Newton should communicate it to Mr. J. Gales, editor of the Raleigh Register and State Gazette. Farley Brown, a widow woman, who lives near the Apalachian mountain, declared that on the 3rd day of July last, about six o'clock P. M. her daughter Elizabeth, about 8 years old, was in the corner field, about ten poles from the dwelling house, which distance by computation six furlongs from the Chimney Mountain, and that Elizabeth told her brother Morgan, aged eleven years, that there was a man on the mountain. Morgan was incredulous at first; but the little girl affirmed it, and said the saw him rolling rocks or picking up sticks, adding that he was a large of people. Morgan then went to the place where Sue was, and calling out, said that he saw a man. [illegible] on the top of the Chimney rock, lying in the air. On which, Polly, daughter of Mr. Reeves, aged fourteen years, and a negro woman, ran to the dwelling, and called Mrs. Reeves to come and see what to fright yonder was. Mrs. Reeves left the house [illegible] poles towards them, and, with [illegible] distant as might, she turned toward the Chimney Mountain, and discovered a very numerous band of beings, resembling the human species, but could not discern any particular members of the human body, nor distinction of sexes; that they were of every size, from the tallest men down to the least infants; that there were more of the small than of the full grown, that they were all clad with brilliant white raiment, but could not discribe any form of their raiment; that they appeared to rise off the fire of the mountain [illegible] of the said rock, and about as high; that a considerable part of the mountain's top was visible above this shining band, that they moved in a northern direction, and collected about the top of the Chimney rock. While all but a few had reached said rock, two formed to rush together, and bobbed them, about two feet, a third rush. Those three moving with great agility towards the crowd, and had the nearest resemblance to men of any before seen. While the shining body took, the men were seen to direct their flight upwards of an hour, the first for Mr. Storey, who did not come at sight, on a second and [illegible] about fifteen minutes after the first, Mr. Storey came; and being seen before me, he gives the following, relative to the [illegible] of which Mrs. Reeves gave.*

Mr. Storey said, when he was coming, he espied to be making extraordinary, and when come, being asked if he saw those single people on the mountain, he answered no; but on looking a second time, he saw more glittering appearances of human kind than ever he had seen of men at any general review; that they were of all sizes from that of men to infants; that they moved in throngs round a large rock, not far from the Chimney rock; they were about the height of the Chimney rock, and moved in a semi circular course, between him and the rock, and so passed along to a shallow creek between him and the mountain, to the place where Mrs. Reeves had they rose; and then rose of a full five yards before the general crowd about the space of twenty yards; and as they swiftly came to their place, they vanished out of sight, leaving a solemn and pleasing impression on the mind, accompanied with a diminution of bodily strength.

Whether the above be accountable on philosophical principles, or whether it be a prelude to the defeat of the Holy City, I leave to the impartially curious to judge.

GEORGE NEWTON.

P. S. The above subscribing has been informed, that on the same evening, and about the same time in which the above phenomenon appeared there was seen by a gentleman of undoubted veracity, who was returning from the place, a bright Rainbow, apparently near the sun, from the West, where there was no appearance of either clouds or rain; but a haze in the atmosphere. The public are therefore at liberty to judge, whether the phenomenon had any thing supernatural in it, or whether it was some unusual exhalation or mist taken from the face of the mountain, which exhibited such an unusual Rainbow.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

A letter from Messrs. Beckwith, Daniel and Co. at London, dated the 28th July, received by a Commercial house in this City, contains the following information.

In consequence of an application having been made to the Committee for Trade of the Privy Council, their Lordships have been pleased to resolve that in future a direct Commercial intercourse may be carried on between Gibraltar and Malta, and Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada; that all the productions of the Mediterranean, wines, fruit, oils, &c (excluding manufactured goods) which have been hitherto sent circuitously by way of England, may hereafter be sent direct to the said provinces, and that their produce, raised beef, becomes admissible into [illegible] where, &c. may be carried direct from thence to Gibraltar and Malta." It is also intended to make application for convoys, for the whole voyage or to a certain latitude.

The Wheat harvest is now over in this District, and we are happy to be able to state, with certainty, that it has been unusually abundant. It has been got in without any accident either before or after cutting, and will prove to be of an exceeding good quality. Extract of a letter from Three Rivers, dated 3d inst.

"Last night, about eight o'clock, a shock of an earthquake was felt in this town, and lasted with such violence, as to cause us to imagine the whole fabric was tumbling about our ears. Every thing in the house was overturned, and almost every person in the street. It is supposed that Mr. M. Hart's loss by the fire, will exceed twenty pounds sterling. The gold was in great danger for three minutes, but fortunately the wood stopped in the [illegible]

About noon the regiment appeared, under arms on the parade, with small branches of trees in their caps, as fervent as laurels. After the usual exercise had been brought their colours, they marched off to the Esplanade, where they drew three wallets [illegible] which Colonel Rooke made them form into a hollow square, in which he addressed them, in an animating speech, reminding them of the laurels they gained at the point of the bayonet, on the day they celebrated, when they gallantly vanquished a superior force; and concluding strongly to them a full confidence of all times, in their weapon. He further complimented them upon their present good behaviour, and on the account he had received from Lieut Col. The men received each a shilling, being a further payment of prize-money, out of the three [illegible] a large sum having been previously paid them. The day was concluded by the regiment with great hilarity.

I had always thought that the substance of the [illegible] resembling mineral pitch, ran in the same manner, and advanced sideways like a river of fire; and indeed it is evident I probably, that in a great number of eruptions, it actually exhibits that appearance.

Another dispatch from General Beresford, to Lord Castlereagh, dated Fort of Buenos Ayres, 12th July, 1806 mentions, that though the City of Buenos Ayres was at the mercy of the troops which entered it, a regard for the national character had induced him and Sir Home Popham to grant the terms above recited, and also to give up to the proprietors one hundred and eighty coasting vessels captured, and their cargoes valued at one million and an half of dollars, which they hoped would meet his Excellency's approbation.

He also informs, that a mounted detachment under Capt. Arburthnot had been sent to Luxan, 50 miles distant, to reconnoitre the country, ascertain the disposition of the people, and escort back some of the treasure, which had been taken from Buenos Ayres, which, if private property, as declared should, be given to the owners. Captain Arbuthnot reported favorably of the country, which is described as a perfect flat, and the view of the horizon obstructed by nothing but immense herds of horses and cattle. Much of the treasure was caught actually going to Cordova, and the rest, but for the opportune arrival of the party would have been pillaged. The waggons convey ing the treasure were expected to arrive the 13th July. Those with the Royal treasure arrived some days before. (☞ It has since been landed safe at Portsmouth.

FRONTIERS OF RUSSIA, Aug. 20.

The name of M. D'Oubril is no longer found in the list of the members of the Foreign Department.

A German Gazette, announces, that his Prussian Majesty is on the point of concluding a Confederation for the North of Germany.

On the 21st of August, an alliance was concluded between Prussia and Hesse.

Great preparations are making in Russia. That Empire has 40,000 men on the frontiers of Moldavia, 40,000 on those of Gallacia, and 150,000 on those Prussia.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.

All the movements now taking place appear to announce war. The garrison of this City as well as that of Potsdam have to day received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march at the first signal. The gens d'armes the garde du corps, and the hussars leave Berlin to day; the rest of the garrison will follow to morrow. The place of these troops will be supplied by other regiments. On the 13th, the Austrian troops, forming the garrison of Munster, likewise received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march at the first signal. It is evident that the Sovereigns are determined to support the cause of a thousand confederates.

BERLIN, Sept. 1.

His Majesty will assemble a Council of War next Tuesday, at which the principal Cabinet Ministers and Generals will assist. It is said accompany his Majesty. It is expected that the Foreign ministers will follow the King to the head quarters.

The Princes Henry and William set out yesterday for the army; each of them will command a brigade.

GRENNOCH, Sept. 19.

Since our last, both the Hamburgh Mails which were due have arrived. Their contents are important. Prussia has been driven to such extremity, that unless she at length determine to resist the further incroachments of France, she must submit to receive the Imperial LAW DE GRACE, and sink into absolute vassalage. Russia holds a commanding position—Sweden preserves her wonted spirit—and Austria seems waiting for an opportunity to revenge the insults she has sustained.

A Gottenburgh Mail has likewise arrived; the following is an extract of a letter from that place.

"The messenger Basser arrived here yesterday from St. Petersburgh:—He brings advice, that the Emperor of Russia has refused to ratify with France the convention concluded by M. d'Oubril. A private letter from Stockholm contains the same intelligence, with the addition, that a new Coalition is forming against France, to consist of Russia, Prussia, Sweden, Hesse, &c. If this be true, peace must yet be at a distance."

Another letter from Gottenburgh, of the date of Sept. 5 says:—

"A Russian Courier arrived yesterday in eight days from St. Petersburgh, with important dispatches for England.

"All the accounts from St. Petersburgh agree in stating, that the Emperor has refused to ratify the treaty made with France; and that M. D'Oubril, in some disgrace for having gone beyond his instructions. The Russian army has been considerably augmented, and 500,000 men are ready to march at a moment's warning. The command of it will be given, it is said, to the old General Kanniokoy, who was famous in the time of Catharine."

Arrival of dispatches from France, 4 o'clock, a. m.

We stop the press to state the arrival of a messenger, who as we are informed, reached town about two hours ago, with dispatches from lord Lauderdale, with which he proceeded immediately to Sir Francis Vincent's house in Arlington-street.

Mr. Parsons, the messenger, arrived in town between two and three o'clock this morning with dispatches from the east of Lauderdale in answer to those which he carried over with him. He left Paris on Tuesday—landed at Deal at five o'clock last night, and immediately proceeded in a post chaise and four to London.—Upon his arrival he first went to Downing-street, and then to Sir Francis Vincent's, at Arlington-street. The dispatches were immediately forwarded to lord Grenville.

Mr. Parsons made the journey from London to Paris with very great expedition—he was only 45 hours in going.

The dispatches of which he is the bearer, are stated to be of very considerable importance. A council was held upon them this day at one o'clock.

Besides the Smiths, the messengers, were not, as was generally affected, dispatched for Paris yesterday, no messenger was dispatched till this morning. Besides left London about two o'clock this morning.

Extraordinary Phenomenon.

[The following account of an extraordinary phenomenon, is said to appear to a number of people, in the County of Rutherford, State of North Carolina, was made the 7th of August, 1806, in presence of David Forney, Esq. of the county and State aforesaid, Jesse Anderson, and the Rev. George Newton, of the county of Buncombe, and Miss Betsey Newton of the state of Georgia, who unanimously agree, with the confess of the relators, that Mr. Newton should communicate it to Mr. J. Gales, editor of the Raleigh Register and State Gazette.]

Paulby Reaves, a widow woman, who lives near the Apalachian mountain, declared that on the 3d day of July last, about six o'clock P. M. her daughter Elizabeth, about 8 years old, was in the common field, about one poler from the dwelling house, which floods by computation six furlongs from the Chimney Mountain, and that Elizabeth told her brother Morgan, aged eleven years, that there was a man on the Mountain. Morgan was incredulous at first, but the little girl affirmed it, and said she saw them rolling rocks and picking up sticks, adding that she saw a heap of people. Morgan then went to the place where she was, and calling out, said that he saw a thousand or ten thousand things flying in the air. On which, Polly, daughter of Mr. Reaves, aged fourteen years, and a negro woman, ran to the children, and called to Mrs. Reaves to come and see what a sight yonder was. Mrs. Reaves says she went about eight poles towards them, and, without any frightful alarm or fright, she turned towards the Chimney Mountain, and discovered a very numerous crowd of beings, resembling the human species, but could not discern any particular members of the human body, nor distinction of sexes; that they were of every size, from the tallest men down to the least infants; that there were more of the small sizes of the full grown, than they were all clad with brilliant white raiment, but she could not discribe any form of their raiment; that they appeared to be on the side of the mountain south of the said rock, and about as high; that a considerable part of the mountain's top was visible above their flocking host, that they moved in a northern direction, and collected about the top of the Chimney rock. When all but a few had reached said rock, two formed to rise together, and bobbed them, about two feet, a third rose. Those three moving with great agility towards the crowd, and had the most refreshing tones to some of any before seen. While the flight which took the open vista aforesaid, the three were rising nearly from the same place, and moving positively in the same order and direction. After these several observations and views towards the rock.

During this relation, behind all the spectators thought indeed appeared of an hour, the first of Mr. Sharp, who did not come at first, on a friend message from about fifteen minutes after the first, Mr. Sharp return and being now before me, he gives the following relation, to the substance of which Mrs. Reaves assents.

Mr. Sharp said, when he was coming, he observed to see nothing extraordinary, and when come, being asked if he saw those people on the mountain, he answered no: but on looking a second time, he saw some glittering appearances of human kind there were he had seen at any general review: and as they respectively came to this place, they was fixed out of sight, leaving a solemn and pleasing impression on the mind, accompanied with a diminution of bodily strength.

Whether the above be accountable on philosophical principles, or whether it be a prelude to the descent of the Holy City, I leave to the intelligent reader to judge.

GEORGE NEWTON.

P. S. The above subscribed has been informed, that on the same evening, says about the same time in which the above phenomenon appeared there was seen by a gentleman of character, who was differed miles distant from the place, a bright Rainbow, apparently over the Sun, then in the West, where there was no appearance of either clouds or rain; but a haze in the atmosphere. The facts are therefore at liberty to judge, whether the phenomenon had any thing supernatural in it, or whether it was some unusual exhalation or vapor from the face of the mountain, which exhibited such an unusual Rainbow.

A letter from Messrs. Brickwoods, Daniel and Co. of London, dated the 18th July, received by a Commercial House in this City, contains the following information.

In consequence of an application having been made to the Committee for Trade of the Privy Council, their Lordships have been pleased to resolve that "in future a direct Commercial intercourse may be carried on between Great Britain and Malta, and between Scotia, New-Brunswick and Canada; that all the productions of the Mediterranean, wines, fruit, oils, &c. Extract of a letter from Three Rivers, dated 3d inst.

"Last night, about seven o'clock, a short brake of an hour, was succeeded by a most violent storm of wind, such as has not been on the whole memory of man now living, and I hope never to see again. The roofs of houses, barns, stables, &c. were torn off in every direction, and many of them blown to the ground. Several vessels in the harbour were driven from their moorings, and some of them were driven on shore. The gale was at its height about 10 o'clock, and lasted for about an hour, but fortunately the wind changed to the south west.

"It is supposed that it happened through the cave-holes of a person making a distillery on the spot; and then a spark caught in something that took fire, which communicated to the steeple. No lives were lost. All the Nuns are lodged with the Grand Vicar to the present."

On Thursday was celebrated with much festivity, by the 49th regiment, the anniversary of the Victory on the sandy banks of the Nile, in the year 1799, on which that regiment particularly distinguished itself.

About noon the regiment appeared, under arms on the parade, with their bonnets of trees to shelt caps, to serve as laurels. After the grenadier company had hoisted their colours, they marched off to the Esplanade, where they drew three volleys; when Colonel Brock made them form into a hollow square, which he addressed them, in an animating speech, reminding them of the laurels they gained at the point of the bayonet, on the day they celebrated, when they gallantly vanquished a superior force; and, after a severe struggle, obtained a full conquest, for them and their posterity. The regiment then marched off in the most regular manner, and returned to the parade, where they went through the manual exercise, platoon firing, &c. with the greatest regularity and steadiness, and concluded with three cheers for the King, which were returned by the regiment with great hilarity.

FROM THE PARIS MONITEUR.

Extract of a letter dated Naples, June 6.

"On the 31st of last month we enjoyed, for the first time, the spectacle of an eruption of Vefuvius. A column of very black smoke rose from the crater about ten o'clock; flames now and then burst from this column; at length the eruption appeared in a mass of flame, of immenfe diameter, and occupying the whole vaft extent of the crater. This mafs was forced up by fucceffive emiffions of whitifh flame, which as it rofe in the air, aflumed a more inflame red colour. Ignited ftones, fome of which were of a large fize, were projected with violence above this body of fire, and often fell beyond the circumference of the crater. At midnight there was not as yet any current of lava, but frequent explofions of the mafs of matter, even before it reached them; and the bright and clear light produced by their combuftion, indicated the exact fituation of the progrefs of the lava. The walls of inclofures and of houfes, celebrated by the brufh, crumbled to pieces before this moving mountain, or were thrown down by the force of the impulfion.—Immediately after the firft appearance of difturbance in the crater, the cave curbed afhes, and left it ftanding; for this variety of action it is impoffible to affign any reafon.

After we had remained in this difmal and alarming night, we went up to the convent of the Capuchin friars, fituated on a kind of peak of confiderable height, that overlooks the whole region, which extends from the fouth to the weft, from the foot of Mount Vefuvius to the fea. This building has hitherto been fpared, as well as the thick wood in which it has been embofomed. It is one of the moft eaftern points to Vefuvius, and that from which you are beft able to difcover and trace the progrefs of the lava. It is the afylum to which the wretched inhabitants of the defolated plain have often fled with their moft valuable effects; to which they have driven their flocks, and conveyed their wives and children.

Here we ftaid a conderable time; our view extended over the declivity of Vefuvius, from which ran feveral currents of lava, that iffued from the fides of the mountain; while numerous flames of fire, of which we had a nearer profpect the night before, danced continually from its fummit. We had likewife a view of the plain, in which appeared the long windings of the rivers of fire. The reddifh reverberation of the lava, and the conflagration in the plain, ftimulated that ideafcape. On every fide appeared the image of defolation; but yet it exhibited a picture in fplendid, a fcene fo magnificent, that the effects with which it was attended were entirely forgotten in the contemplation of its picturefque and poetic beauty. In ftort, when my mind figures to itfelf dreds every minute, the smoke of the lava, the subterraneous thunders, those continual hissings, so many wonders, so many objects of grief and admiration, I should think that a dream had deceived me, if the imagination, which produces such dreams, were capable of creating images so awful and so grand.

On the 3d, the eruption continued, and the lava still advanced; the detonations were louder and more frequent than the preceding day. In the evening the flames rose to a still greater height, attracting the electricity of the air, and of the clouds, which emitted splendid flashes.

On the 4th, the eruption was less violent.

On the 5th, Vesuvius began to throw out ashes, which, we are assured, announces the conclusion of the eruption.

The Highlanders in Sicily.—In the German papers received by the last Mail, there is a letter from Messina, which contains the following paragraph.——"Among the British troops which arrived in Sicily, there was a regiment of Scotch mountaineers 15 hundred men strong. They are a fine set of men, brawny and well built, the greater part have blue eyes and fair hair. The peculiar distinction of their national dress renders them real sans culottes. Those who know the sanguine temperament of the fair sex in Sicily, will easily conceive what sort of an impression such a corps as this was likely to produce among them. In fact, matters got at last to such a state, that the Archbishop considered it necessary to apply to General Stuart, and to request that he would order his Wild Mountaineers to put on some additional clothing. He was laconically answered, "that this possibly might be done if the Archbishop thought he could make Sicilian Ladies themselves dress with more regard to decorum." The Highlanders were, however, soon after embarked for Calabria, to the great consolation of the Reverend Prelate.

By a singular coincidence, there have lately been opposed to Gen. Regnier, and other French officers who were in Egypt, Sir J. Stuart, Sir J. Moore, and the same band of heroes who expelled the French from that country, together with the identical regiments which gained such fame in that memorable campaign, viz. the 20th, 28th, 58th, &c.

QUEBEC FLEET.

It is with deep regret we have to announce the capture or destruction of the chief part of the Quebec fleet. This intelligence has been brought by the Champion of 24 guns, captain Bromley, which acted as convoy, and arrived on Tuesday at Portsmouth. The Champion failed from Halifax with about 20 sail of vessels, & on the 16th inst. in lat. 47 long. 30, fell in with the enemy. It will be seen from the following letter, the accuracy of which may be relied upon, that the extent of the injury done to this convoy is not so great as generally feared.

QUEBEC FLEET.

It is with deep regret we have to announce the capture or destruction of the chief part of the Quebec fleet. This intelligence has been brought by the Champion of 24 guns, captain Bromley, which acted as convoy, and arrived on Tuesday at Portsmouth. The Champion failed from Halifax with about 20 sail of vessels, & on the 16th inst. in lat. 47 long. 30, fell in with the enemy. It will be seen from the following letter, the accuracy of which may be relied upon, that the extent of the injury done to this convoy is not so great as generally feared.

Portsmouth, Aust. 27.

"The Quebec convoy has been more fortunate than was expected; six of them only are taken and burnt, the others made sail on different tacks and escaped. The masters of four of the ships landed here this morning from a pilage boat, taken out of the American ship Alert, Lowe, from Boston bound to Amsterdam, at the back of the Isle of White, viz. D. Stephenson master of the Silver Eel, from Quebec, with mast and timber, for London; Jonathan Strom, master of the James, from Quebec, with oak timber and staves, for Portsmouth; Thomas De-well, master of the John and Isabella, from Quebec, with masts and timber for London; Thomas Lawson, master of the Lydia, from Quebec, with staves, potash, and wine, for London, whose ships were taken and burnt with Alexander, W. Rees, master, from Quebec for Cork, and the Hester, W. Sanderderson, from Quebec, for Liverpool, in lat. 47 long. 86, by the Veteran of 74 guns, commanded by Jerome Bonaparte, who had left his squadron cruizing off the Gulph of Florida, and was returning to Europe. The master of the Alexander and the master of the Hester, was put on board the Aberdeen, American ship from Norfolk, bound to Falmouth. The masters expected to have found Jerome at Spithead; as he is not, they think he has arrived in France, which he seemed anxious about. They were put on board the Alert when in latitude of Brest. There were on board the Veteran, T. Bulley, master of the Hilton, from N. Foundland for Oporto; P. Carr, master of the Active from Dominica and Antigua bound to Dublin; and T. Rullel, master of a schooner belonging to New-Providence, whose ships had been taken by Jerome and burnt.

"The Eagle transport, which escaped from Jerome Bonaparte, with part of the 6th regiment on board from Quebec, is arrived. The Veteran chaced her for a considerable time, but failed so badly that the got away."

It appears from this account, that the masters arrived at Portsmouth were put on board the American ship the day they were captured, and unless some of the convoy, from having altered their course, were so unfortunate as to have fallen in with the Veteran afterwards, the remaining ships may be considered as tolerably safe. We do not give much credit to that part of the information obtained by the masters, which states that the remainder of the French squadron was left cruizing in the Gulph of Florida. We rather believe that it was not many hours fail astern of Jerome Bonaparte. It is not, we think, very likely that a single ship, and a dull sailer too, as it appears from her having ineffectually chased the Eagle transport, would be sent to run the gauntlet of our numerous squadrons and cruizers, particularly when she contained so rich a freight as Jerome.

In consequence of the information obtained of the route of the enemy, an Admiralty Messenger was sent off to Plymouth, with orders for the immediate sailing of some ships destined to intercept the French squadron.

Upon the capture of the vessels belonging to the Quebec fleet by Jerome Bonaparte, he ordered the ships to be destroyed, after the persons who were sent to execute that service had supplied themselves with a few necessaries. The Veteran was in a very bad condition, and the crew shewed much disposition to mutiny; their officers looked upon them with great jealoufy, and the followers who were sent to burn the Lydia, offered to run away with the ship, they were so dissatisfied.—Their mutinous spirit made the French officers behave very civilly to the prisoners, whom they seemed to look to for support in the event of any disturbance. Jerome Bonaparte is reported to be a gentlemanly behaved man, but of a meagre appearance, and wears a great many ornaments; the captains of the merchantmen represented to him the great difference there was in the quality of provisions they were supplied with, with what they had been accustomed to, and the uncomfortableness of their situation, to being ordered to mess with the common men, on the dirty decks; this was done through the second captain of the ship, and Jerome requested him to wait a little, and he would give him an answer.—Soon after which they were ordered on board an American ship, which had brought them at Portsmouth. She was previously supplied with a stock to fleer by, to avoid giving information to our cruizers, of which she unfortunately did not see one. Jerome ordered the apprentices to be liberated with the captains and the seamen only to be detained, of which there were one hundred and twenty on board, taken in different prizes. Bonaparte's birth day was celebrated whilst they were on board, to which Jerome invited the prisoners, and gave them an extra allowance. From the short distance from Brest, 300 miles, and the favourableness of the wind, there is too much reason to suppose that he has got into some port.

The London Monthly Magazine contains a series of letters on the present state of Switzerland, by a traveller in that country, in London. From one of these letters we extract the following interesting article:

Near Zurich there was an auxiliary army of Russians, who came far, very far, from the borders of Asia, and the immeasurable deserts of Siberia and Tartary. Many of the rude inhabitants of those remote climes now eyed with amazement the novel and grand spectacle of Helvetia's towering snowy mountains, and were destined to carry on a new and unusual warfare amidst its craggy precipices and in the depth of its abysses. The whole surrounding country abounds with accounts of the intrepidity, obedience, fidelity, and fturdiness, of these Northern warriors. —Even the French officers were often heard to speak with admiration of their military virtues.

The melancholy incidents which took place during these hostilities, are necessarily fresh in the memory of the inhabitants. Among several which have been related to me, I cannot refrain from communicating one which was strongly impressed my mind. A newly married pair were living happy and careless in their village, when the tidings were brought by fugitives, of a decisive battle having just taken place in the neighborhood. The report was too soon confirmed by the thunderings of the approaching cannon. The bridegroom, equally animated by a martial spirit, and a love for his wife, wavered betwixt a desire of engaging in the conteft and of flying with the object of his affections. He went out as far as the hasty intrenchments of the retreating party, where cannon was already planted against cannon, and where the cries of the combatants were loft in the horrid roar of guns and the clath of arms. In this scene of tumult, the thought of his bride, and of her abandoned state, gained the ascendancy in his mind; he hastened back to his house amidst a shower of balls, which struck the earth on all sides of him. Before he reached his home, his aged parent met him in tears, and pointed to the roof, where a hostile ball had violated their peaceful dwelling. Where is my wife? was the reply of the anxious husband. On being informed that she was in the house, and had gone up stairs to see the cottage that was said to be burning in the neighbourhood, he flew to the garret, where to his inexpressible horror, he saw her weltering in her blood. The very ball which had struck the roof had taken off both her legs in the moment in which she looked out at the window. She now lay in the agonies of death; he threw himself beside her, and called her for a moment to life, by the loudness of his lamentations. She opened her eyes, essayed to stretch forth her arms, and moved her lips to speak to him; but her arms sunk, her lips refused to do their office, she reclined her head, and her soul fled to heaven!

She is dead, cried the frantic husband, starting up, and breaking through the crowd of spectators, who vainly attempted to oppose his progress; he rushed towards the intrenchments, and was seen no more.

Some soldiers afterwards related that a young man suddenly sprung in among them, they knew not from whence, snatched the arms from the hands of one of them, and was darting over the intrenchments with incredible fury, when some grape-shot shattered his body in pieces, and numbered him with the slain who filled the ditch. There he probably remained; for when the intrenchment became useless, after having been stormed by the enemy, the most was closed up, and served as a common grave for the friendless stranger and the unhappy husband, whose beloved wife, after a week's union, was consigned at the same time to a grave in the neighbouring church yard!

According to the ancient law of the frozen regions of Siberia, a man was allowed two wives in winter, and only one in summer.

A race against time (if such it can be called) of a new description was performed, two or three days since, in the neighborhood of Vauxhall.—A person laid a bet of 20 guineas that he would walk on his hands one mile in 35 minutes along the road. His feet he was allowed to use as he pleased, provided he kept his hands upon the ground. He performed the task in 32 minutes, and consequently won the wager, but, however without experiencing considerable inconvenience before he arrived at the end of his journey, from the creeping and crawling posture in which he was obliged to proceed.

Voluntary Cremation.—It appears from a late publication that the number of women who submitted to be burned on the funeral pile of their husbands within 30 miles round Calcutta amounted, only in the short space between the 15th of April and the 15th of October, 1804, to 116. Such is the prevalence of this shocking superstition, which it is to be hoped that the gradual progress of English laws, manners, and religion, will, in a great measure, suppress, if not altogether abolish!

Early on the morning of Tuesday last, some persons, unknown, were received rowing off from the American ship Frances, in Greenock harbour, with the tenders, which they had cut from the ship's sides, and some articles they had taken from the forecastle.

The crew of the Frances immediately gave chace to, and would have overtaken the depredators, but that they, rather than be taken, leaped into the sea, and abandoned their boat, which was taken possession of, and is to be sold to pay damages.

In a review of a Division of militia at Dover England, Aug. 9. "they formed from sections into the line in double quick time with perfect precision, a manoeuvre which has never been attempted with a body of this description." This is highly gratifying, as one of the principal faults with militia is that they are always too slow in their motions.

A list of the persons, who resided at N.W. end of Eleutheria, one of the Bahama islands, who lost their lives in a storm of Sept. 14, has been published. The number is 35, including 12 children. Not a house was left standing, and only 17 of the inhabitants are living, and they are upon a hill surrounded with water, and without shelter or provisions. The number of houses destroyed on Harbor-island, from an accurate return, is 119.

There were two species of mines discovered much about the same time, namely Gold in South America, and Coal in England. The first unnerved the arm of Industry, and the second strung it with vigor.

Extract of a letter from Maryborough, (Ireland) Aug. 3.

"A circumstance of an extraordinary nature has lately happened—As three gentlemen (two of whom were attornies, coming to the Assizes of this town) were crossing the Curragh of Kildare, on Friday, the 18 inst. a violent storm of wind and rain came on, which caused them to resort to their umbrellas, for protection against the rain; in a very few minutes, one of the umbrellas was srefted, by the violence of the storm, from the hand of the gentleman who held it, and carried aloft, nearly out of sight, but fell in a short time, and was again suddenly raised from off the ground by a whirlwind, carried up quite out of sight, and never since been heard of, although the gentlemen who lost it, and the others who accompanied him, watched for the return of it for a considerable time—and although the following occurrence bears a fabulous appearance, yet it is an undoubted fact, the gentleman who lost the umbrella, whilst anxiously waiting its return, was suddenly arrested from his saddle, carried a few yards up, and afterwards let down within a short distance of his horse.—The gentlemen above alluded to, were John Scott, Samuel Scott, and John Butler.

Some workmen, in sinking a cistern at the factory of Messrs. Gardiner, Leicester, found ten feet below the surface of the earth, the remains of a large Roman building, the walls of which were four feet thick, and composed of alternative layers of Forest stone and Roman bricks. From its similarity to the Temple of Janus, it is supposed to have formed a part of that work, from which it is distant about 100 yards.

FEMALE HEROISM.

A short time since, when the constables of a certain village were delivering the notices for a return of persons liable to serve in the militia, they left one, in course, at the house of a single Lady, who made a return as follows:

"Not a male in my house, excepting a Mouse,
To repel the bold Corsican foe,
But when times are so bad that men cannot be had,
I, a Spinster will willingly go."

CURIOUS ACCUSATION.

At the Dundalk assizes Henry Rob was indicted for assaulting and committing a Rape on on the body of Judith Collins. When she appeared to prosecute, she deposed, that she knew the prisoner very well, and being asked if he was any relation of her's, she answered, he was her husband!—Acquitted.

From an account, in one of the Paris papers, of the receipts of the theatres in one day, it will not be believed that the Parisians have greatly suffered by the war. They state the following as the receipts of one evening.

NEW YORK, July 22.

The prefect of Venice has ordered to fail of the line, six of which are of 90 guns, to be laid on the stocks in the arsenals of his prefecture; the keel of the Charlemagne was laid down on the 7th of March, being the anniversary of the first coalition of Austria, Prussia, the German Empire, England, Holland, Spain, Portugal, the two Sicilies, the Papal States and the king of Sardinia, against France, which was declared in 1793. on this date—there was an extraordinary carnival and great rejoicings.

The naval commissioners at Venice have ordered a vast store of ship timber to be transported from the forests of Dalmatia to their arsenals, and the construction of two immense dry docks, upon the same principles as those which have existed for 240 years, and by which the Venetian republic was enabled to preserve their ships from decay double the period of any other nation.

From the Mercantile Advertiser.

Some further particulars concerning the loss of the ship Essex, in the Red Sea, the massacre of her crew, and of Mahomed like the pirate.

In the year 1803, a numerous body of Arabians of the sect of the Wahabees under their leader, the invincible, and as they think, divine Abdul, (the Bonaparte of Arabia) twice sacked the city of Mecca, destroyed the tomb of the great prophet Mahomet, and committed dreadful ravages on the unfortunate inhabitants of the country. After this he subdued Medina, another city, sacred in the eyes of all good Mussulmen, and conquered nearly all the country situated above Mocha, on the eastern side of the Red Sea, introducing a new religion entirely subversive of the Mahometan faith.—Some of the followers of Abdul betook themselves to a new employment, that of plundering and destroying the vessels of every nation, that sailed on the Red Sea. Among the rest Mahomed Ali principally distinguished himself, having purchased the island Camaran of the sheriff, or Prince of Gabela, which is made his head quarters, and from where he has spread more terror, than did the Buccaneers formerly amongst the Spaniards.

He sails in a strong well armed vessel with a numerous crew, made up of fanatics like himself, and enemies to every nation, excepting their own, the Wahabees. Unfortunately this pirate was, with his ship, at Mocha, when the ill fated Capt. Orne arrived in the Essex of Salem, with 60,000 dollars to purchase a cargo of coffee. Coffee was not to be had at market, and capt. Orne was altogether at a loss how to proceed. An English merchant, whose name we have not learned, understanding the embarrassed situation of capt. Orne, informed him that if he proceeded forty miles further up to a town called Hadida, he would there procure coffee lower than usually asked for at Mocha, and offered himself to go in the Essex, and execute the whole business for the trifling commission of two and a half per cent. Captain Orne listened to this advice, and finally agreed to it. The pirate Mahomed by some means came to the knowledge of all these circumstances, and had the address to persuade capt. Orne to receive on board about 30 of his crew to navigate the vessel, & pilot her to Hadida.

The Essex failed in company with the pirate's ship; night approached, but alas! not one of the unfortunate crew were fated to behold their country again, or the light of another day. At a given signal the pirates on board fell upon the crew with their knives, the Captain being ged along side, and in a few minutes not an American was left to tell the sad tale of their destruction. The headless body of the captain, and mutilated carcase of the Englishman, floated on shore, and being recognized, received the rites of burial in a far distant land. The Essex was plundered and burnt.

This shocking catastrophe ought to prove a warning to all American captains, not only to guard them against the smallest deviation from their orders, but also against reposing confidence in strangers without being first well assured of their characters. It also shows the necessity of being well armed and prepared to encounter those fiends in human shape, on entering into the channel of the Red Sea—fiends who massacre and plunder all nations without distinction—but we earnestly pray, that the vengeance of our country may one day overtake the cruel perpetrators of this eventful tragedy.

Extraordinary Death.—A few days ago a most singular and melancholy circumstance happened at Swansea. A man of the name of David George, with another person, was drawing a net in the river, near the pier; he, with the too common practice of taking the fish into the mouth, was disengaging a small sole from the net, when the fish made a spring down his throat and choaked him! Medical assistance was obtained with all possible speed, but every effort to extract the sole proved unavailfog, while a chance of saving the man's life remained; nor was it until the operation of opening the windpipe had been performed that the whole of the fish could be removed. A Coroner's Inquest has returned a verdict of 'Accidental Death!' The poor fellow has left a pregnant widow and five small children to lament his loss.—Bristo Mer. Gaz.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twentieth day of November, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the SIXTH day of October, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twentieth day of November instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twenty-fifth day of December next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Esquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this fourteenth day of NOVEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign.

F. G.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of seperation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of Separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. List, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted in that List, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful subjects may be made partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to its fullest extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October, in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov't.

By his Excellency's Command.

WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

KINGSTON, (Jam.) Sept. 29.

Late accounts from a neighboring colony state, that the insurgents there had recently an engagement with Gen. Ferrand, in which they received a very severe repulse, from four to five thousand of their men having been killed and wounded during the contest. Disparches are likewise said to have arrived there from France, expressing the most ardent wish of the Emperor Napoleon to have good order and tranquility re-established, for which purpose it was stated, that every succour with troops, &c. should be afforded them, and that one of the branches of the imperial family was to be nominated to the government of the colony. This it was generally supposed and accredited, would be "Notre Frere Jerome," an appointment no doubt more consonant and agreeable to his feelings, and where he runs less risk of either his life or being made a prisoner, than that of his recent "hair breadth escape" while on board a French man of war.

September 30.

We understand Vice-Admiral Dacres has received a letter from Sir Richard J. Strachan, which was put on board the American schooner Four Sisters, arrived yesterday, dated on board the Caesar, September 1, off Bermuda, which states that his squadron had encountered a very severe hurricane, on the 19th August, off Honegads, that dispersed the whole of them, and the only ship in company with him then was the Triumph of 74 guns, she had lost her mainmast and sprung her foremast; the Terrible of 74 guns was totally dismasted, and left in charge of the Decade frigate. In regard to the fate of the rest of the squadron, Sir Richard is said to have been totally ignorant.

October 4.

His Majesty's ship Veteran, of 64 guns, Captain A. F. Evans, which sailed on the 28th July, as convoy to the homeward bound fleet, to a certain latitude, and afterwards to call at Bermuda, arrived yesterday at Port Royal.

By the Veteran we have obtained a very disasterous account of the July fleet. It appears that on the 21st August, lat. 29. 50, long. 78. 31, a tremendous hurricane commenced, and continued with unremitting violence until the morning of the 22d, at which time 11 sail of the fleet were perceived making signals of distress; every assistance was immediately rendered them, by manning the boats, when they fortunately succeeded in saving the crews of the brigs Coro and Ann, of London, and ships Achilles, of Glasgow, which vessels we lament to say, with the ships Pallas, Herculean, Forty Second, Rathleigh, Africa, Erin, James, (of Liverpool) and Coverdale, immediately after went down, and it is feared every soul on board of them perished. On the 23d, the weather moderated, when only 62 sail were collected, and proceeded under the protection of the Penguin brig of 18 guns, captain Smith. Twenty-four sail were then missing, supposed to have separated during the hurricane. On the 30th, the Veteran fell in with the Franchise frigate, one of the convoy, under jury masts, intending to proceed home. The Magicienne frigate, captain Mackenzie, the commodore of the convoy, was forced to put into Bermuda, in a very damaged state, but had sailed again for England previous to the Veteran's leaving that place.

The Barbara Cutter was dispatched from Bermuda by Capt. Evans, to apprise the Lords of the Admiralty of the melancholy fate of the fleet.

From the Kingston Chronicle of Oct. 3.

His Majesty's brig Ferret, of 18 guns the hon. captain Cadogan, came into Port Royal late on Wednesday evening. We are much concerned to state, that during her cruize off Laguira, the crew mutinied, rose upon the officers, and endeavoured to obtain possession of the vessel while they were below; but, by the gallant and intrepid conduct of capt. Cadogan, who fortunately succeeding in getting on deck, instantly followed by his officers, soon compelled the mutineers to lay down their arms, who it seems made but little resistance, on being commanded to do so by their captain when he and the officers had got upon deck. No lives were lost, nor a single person wounded. The boatswain and twelve of the crew, who were the principal ringleaders, were immediately put in irons. It was the intention of the mutineers, had they succeeded in carrying their infamous purpose into execution, to have taken the Ferret into Laguira.

Captain Ledlie, of the Columbian army, who returned in the Ferret, was put on board the Galatea, one of Miranda's vessels, at Aruba. The General still continued at that island with his force, but had little hopes, it appears, of succeeding in his enterprize; the general, we fear, was too sanguine; his means of attaining the laudable object he had in view were altogether insignificant, which must have disappointed those who had flattered him with their immediate aid and support, and, from the want of whose assistance, all his hopes and expectations of succeeding must have been at once shattered.

FRANCE.

Paris September 9.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte arrived on Sunday at St. Cloud after his long cruize. His Majesty immediately presented him with the great Ribbon of the Legion of honor.

September 17.

The general opinion here is, that War is unavoidable. They speak of the departure of the Emperor, as an event not very distant. Lord Lauderdale is still here. Frequent couriers pass between this and Holland; and it is believed the will be called upon to take a confiderable part in the war, which now threatens all Europe.

ENGLAND.

London, Sept. 18.

The measures about to be adopted in respect to the capture of Buenos Ayres, will we trust, be such as to secure the commercial interests of this country every advantage that the possession of so valuable a settlement can afford, & at the same time to promote the prosperity of the Province. We have already expressed our anxiety for the speedy arrival of reinforcements to enable the victors to retain possession of the important fruits of their enterprize and their gallantry; and we are now happy to find, that a part of the troops who have lately embarked are destined for that service.

The latest accounts from Naples contains a decree for the purpose of restoring internal tranquility, which shews more clearly than a volume of evidence the inflamed and perturbed state of that unfortunate country. Several parts of Calabria have been laid waste by fire and sword—but as these means have not been found adequate to the end, the mild and merciful Joseph has called in the aid of secret tribunals, to supply the deficiency. He has established a cruel and sanguinary Inquisition, and the loyalist who has escaped fire and the sword of the military, is thus referred to endure the aggravated horrors of a mock trial, to be butchered in cold blood.

September 19.

Although it seems the English are not willing to exclude neutrals from trading to Buenos Ayres, yet it is supposed the duties will be such as not to encourage the importation of any other than British goods.

Mr. Sheridan has declined the honor of the Westminster election. Earl Percy will probably be elected, having the support of Lord Grenville and other distinguished friends.

Bets are laid that the negociation will break off within a fortnight.

The British government has issued an order for opening the trade of Buenos Ayres to the British merchants, and reinforcements have been sent out to hold the conquests.

Earl Spencer transacted the foreign business after Mr. Fox's death.

The Bishop of Quebec arrived in London the 14th September.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, September 1, 1806.

"There is here at present a British fleet of 25 sail of the line, under the command of the Earl St. Vincent.

"A large reinforcement of ships, and 16,300 troops are expected here to protect the Portugese against the Spaniards who have entered the frontiers. Gen. Hutchinson, the commander in chief with his staff, has just arrived in the Santa Margaretta frigate."

SKETCHES OF NEWS.

Latest Foreign.—The last mail from New-York brought us news from Paris to the 25th of September—at which time every aspect exhibited "dreadful notice and preparation" for War. Negociations with England were still going on. But it was said that unless a categorical answer from Prussia was received, Bonaparte would enter Germany with 300,000 men: his body guard had left Paris for the Rhine, where an immense army was assembling.

The latest of Miranda states that he had arrived at Trinidad, and abandoned his expedition.

A dreadful accident happened at Malta, on the 15th (or 18,) of July, when 400 barrels (40,000 lbs.) of powder were blown up, and occasioned the most horrible destruction within its sphere. From 1000 to 1400 inhabitants are stated to have been killed or mangled by the explosion.

"MALTA, July 18—Private letter.

"I now come to relate to you an event of the most melancholy description and almost unparalleled in regard to the dreadful and miserable consequences. It happened this morning. A magazine took fire, and blew up with an explosion scarcely ever known to be equalled; by it 370 barrels of gunpowder, and above 1600 shells and grenades, were blown up. Such an immense quantity as 40,000 lbs. of gunpowder must occasion the most dreadful havoc and destruction. The houses adjacent in every direction were blown immediately into ruins—and how shocking it was to the inhabitants you may easily conceive, as there was no chance of escaping.—The buildings were all of stone, of an immense thickness. It is calculated that one thousand persons have either perished or are dreadfully maimed. The principal sufferers are the Maltese, who chiefly lived near the place.—One man has lost his wife and six children—others nearly the same; and whole families are buried together. Those who escaped momentary death perhaps, are shockingly disfigured and maimed, and crawling about in a miserable condition.—Fourteen artillerymen, who were in the magazine, were of course blown to atoms.—The band of a regiment (the 39th) were playing "God save the King" near the place—two men were killed on the spot—the whole remainder were much wounded. The guards on duty were killed. The magazine is situated on the side of the water opposite to the city of Valetta; it is called Bormola. Stones were thrown over to us, some to the distance of two miles. It was situated close to the water side, and the bed of the sea was so shook by it, that it rose up and overflowed the banks. Two vessels (small ones) were sunk. Immense stones were thrown up which fell into the water; others on the ships and rigging; one I saw which fell on a vessel just arrived, weighed an hundred weight. The guard ship, the Medway man of war, is moored some distance from the disasterous place; but a stone fell upon the quarter deck, and broke the thigh of the gunner, who had lately arrived. A Mr. Woodhouse here, who, with his brother, has a great wine-making concern in Sicily, has lost two hundred and 50 pipes of it, worth nearly 7000l. —they were at some distance from the place; but the shock was so great that the casks burst.

"In short, it is a scene of misery which no language can describe. The churches are filled with the dead. A friend of mine, just come from the ruins, says, that he was walking over them when he lighted on the head of a woman. Her whole body was crushed flat; and although it is only a few hours since the general calamity took place, her body, owing to the intense heat, was entirely putrified.—Nothing farther has yet been ascertained.

"It is supposed, however, that the men were employed in cutting away the fuses from the shells, or doing something like that, when by some means a spark arose. The merchants here have begun a subscription of 20 pounds each, for the relief of the poor sufferers. A whole town, I may say, is destroyed.

"The accident happened this morning about a quarter past six o'clock. They say, there are now buried in the ruins one thousand barrels of gun powder that are in danger: but I trust in God it is untrue, were that to blow up, it would bring all Malta in ruins. May the Almighty avert such another disaster!"

Sir Home Popham has written letters from Buenos Ayres, to the Mayor and Corporation of Birmingham and other principal commercial cities, in which he points out the importance of this conquest to the trade of Great Britain: He says the city of Buenos Ayres, alone contains 70,000 inhabitants. The staples of the country are indigo, tobacco, vincenta, wool, cotton, tiger and seal skins, figs, dried tongues, beef and hams, saffron, cochineile, cocoa, hemp, hides, tallow, gum, gold, silver and precious stones. Of the article of hides, there are exported every year, upwards of 400,000.—

FROM LATE LONDON PAPERS.

September 18.

The sum of 300,000l. granted by Parliament to the officers and men who fought the battle off Trafalgar, will begin to be paid this day, at the following rates:—

Petty officers	26 6 0
Seamen and Marines	4 10 0

Russian Cabinet. Baron de Budberg, Minister of Foreign Affairs. Prince Lapoukin, Minister of Justice. Count Ketchoubney, Minister of the Interior. Count Zvadofsky, Minister of Finance. Count Romantzoff, Minister of Commerce. Gen. Vaesmitinoff, Minister of War.

Russia has 1250,000 men encamped on the frontiers of Moldavia, Gallacia, and Prussia.

The troops of Hesse will act, on all occasions, in concert with the Prussians.

Mr. Fox left no will and very little property.—The last words he uttered were addressed to his wife—"I die happy; but I pity you."

The Prince of Wale, and Duke of Clarence have made a tour into the interior; and have been received with much affection and respect.

We understand that it is in contemplation to send home all the detained Prussians in this country;—and to release all such Prussian vessels, as contained no property avowedly French or Dutch.

York, 10th Dec. 1806.

states that his squadron had encountered a very severe hurricane, on the 19th August, off Honegads, that dispersed the whole of them, and the only ship in company with him then was the Triumph of 74 guns, she had lost her mainmast and sprung her foremast; the Terrible of 74 guns was totally dismasted, and left in charge of the Decade frigate. In regard to the fate of the rest of the squadron, Sir Richard is said to have been totally ignorant.

October 4.

His Majesty's ship Veteran, of 64 guns, Captain A. F. Evans, which sailed on the 28th July, as convoy to the homeward bound fleet, to a certain latitude, and afterwards to call at Bermuda, arrived yesterday at Port Royal.

By the Veteran we have obtained a very disasterous account of the July fleet. It appears that on the 21st August, lat. 29. 50, long. 78. 31, a tremendous hurricane commenced, and continued with unremitting violence until the morning of the 22d, at which time 11 sail of the fleet were perceived making signals of distress; every assistance was immediately rendered them, by manning the boats, when they fortunately succeeded in saving the crews of the brigs Coro and Ann, of London, and ships Achilles, of Glasgow, which vessels we lament to say, with the ships Pallas, Herculean, Forty Second, Rathleigh, Africa, Erin, James, (of Liverpool) and Coverdale, immediately after went down, and it is feared every soul on board of them perished. On the 23d, the weather moderated, when only 62 sail were collected, and proceeded under the protection of the Penguin brig of 18 guns, captain Smith. Twenty-four sail were then missing, supposed to have separated during the hurricane. On the 30th, the Veteran fell in with the Franchise frigate, one of the convoy, under jury masts, intending to proceed home. The Magicienne frigate, captain Mackenzie, the commodore of the convoy, was forced to put into Bermuda, in a very damaged state, but had sailed again for England previous to the Veteran's leaving that place.

The Barbara Cutter was dispatched from Bermuda by Capt. Evans, to apprise the Lords of the Admiralty of the melancholy fate of the fleet.

From the Kingston Chronicle of Oct. 3.

His Majesty's brig Ferret, of 18 guns the hon. captain Cadogan, came into Port Royal late on Wednesday evening. We are much concerned to state, that during her cruize off Laguira, the crew mutinied, rose upon the officers, and endeavoured to obtain possession of the vessel while they were below; but, by the gallant and intrepid conduct of capt. Cadogan, who fortunately succeeding in getting on deck, instantly followed by his officers, soon compelled the mutineers to lay down their arms, who it seems made but little resistance, on being commanded to do so by their captain when he and the officers had got upon deck. No lives were lost, nor a single person wounded. The boatswain and twelve of the crew, who were the principal ringleaders, were immediately put in irons. It was the intention of the mutineers, had they succeeded in carrying their infamous purpose into execution, to have taken the Ferret into Laguira.

Captain Ledlie, of the Columbian army, who returned in the Ferret, was put on board the Galatea, one of Miranda's vessels, at Aruba. The General still continued at that island with his force, but had little hopes, it appears, of succeeding in his enterprize; the general, we fear, was too sanguine; his means of attaining the laudable object he had in view were altogether insignificant, which must have disappointed those who had flattered him with their immediate aid and support, and, from the want of whose assistance, all his hopes and expectations of succeeding must have been at once shattered.

FRANCE.

Paris September 9.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte arrived on Sunday at St. Cloud after his long cruize. His Majesty immediately presented him with the great Ribbon of the Legion of honor.

September 17.

The general opinion here is, that War is unavoidable. They speak of the departure of the Emperor, as an event not very distant. Lord Lauderdale is still here. Frequent couriers pass between this and Holland; and it is believed the will be called upon to take a confiderable part in the war, which now threatens all Europe.

ENGLAND.

London, Sept. 18.

The measures about to be adopted in respect to the capture of Buenos Ayres, will we trust, be such as to secure the commercial interests of this country every advantage that the possession of so valuable a settlement can afford, & at the same time to promote the prosperity of the Province. We have already expressed our anxiety for the speedy arrival of reinforcements to enable the victors to retain possession of the important fruits of their enterprize and their gallantry; and we are now happy to find, that a part of the troops who have lately embarked are destined for that service.

The latest accounts from Naples contains a decree for the purpose of restoring internal tranquility, which shews more clearly than a volume of evidence the inflamed and perturbed state of that unfortunate country. Several parts of Calabria have been laid waste by fire and sword—but as these means have not been found adequate to the end, the mild and merciful Joseph has called in the aid of secret tribunals, to supply the deficiency. He has established a cruel and sanguinary Inquisition, and the loyalist who has escaped fire and the sword of the military, is thus referred to endure the aggravated horrors of a mock trial, to be butchered in cold blood.

September 19.

Although it seems the English are not willing to exclude neutrals from trading to Buenos Ayres, yet it is supposed the duties will be such as not to encourage the importation of any other than British goods.

Mr. Sheridan has declined the honor of the Westminster election. Earl Percy will probably be elected, having the support of Lord Grenville and other distinguished friends.

Bets are laid that the negociation will break off within a fortnight.

The British government has issued an order for opening the trade of Buenos Ayres to the British merchants, and reinforcements have been sent out to hold the conquests.

Earl Spencer transacted the foreign business after Mr. Fox's death.

The Bishop of Quebec arrived in London the 14th September.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, September 1, 1806.

"There is here at present a British fleet of 25 sail of the line, under the command of the Earl St. Vincent.

"A large reinforcement of ships, and 16,300 troops are expected here to protect the Portugese against the Spaniards who have entered the frontiers. Gen. Hutchinson, the commander in chief with his staff, has just arrived in the Santa Margaretta frigate."

SKETCHES OF NEWS.

Latest Foreign.—The last mail from New-York brought us news from Paris to the 25th of September—at which time every aspect exhibited "dreadful notice and preparation" for War. Negociations with England were still going on. But it was said that unless a categorical answer from Prussia was received, Bonaparte would enter Germany with 300,000 men: his body guard had left Paris for the Rhine, where an immense army was assembling.

The latest of Miranda states that he had arrived at Trinidad, and abandoned his expedition.

A dreadful accident happened at Malta, on the 15th (or 18,) of July, when 400 barrels (40,000 lbs.) of powder were blown up, and occasioned the most horrible destruction within its sphere. From 1000 to 1400 inhabitants are stated to have been killed or mangled by the explosion.

"MALTA, July 18—Private letter.

"I now come to relate to you an event of the most melancholy description and almost unparalleled in regard to the dreadful and miserable consequences. It happened this morning. A magazine took fire, and blew up with an explosion scarcely ever known to be equalled; by it 370 barrels of gunpowder, and above 1600 shells and grenades, were blown up. Such an immense quantity as 40,000 lbs. of gunpowder must occasion the most dreadful havoc and destruction. The houses adjacent in every direction were blown immediately into ruins—and how shocking it was to the inhabitants you may easily conceive, as there was no chance of escaping.—The buildings were all of stone, of an immense thickness. It is calculated that one thousand persons have either perished or are dreadfully maimed. The principal sufferers are the Maltese, who chiefly lived near the place.—One man has lost his wife and six children—others nearly the same; and whole families are buried together. Those who escaped momentary death perhaps, are shockingly disfigured and maimed, and crawling about in a miserable condition.—Fourteen artillerymen, who were in the magazine, were of course blown to atoms.—The band of a regiment (the 39th) were playing "God save the King" near the place—two men were killed on the spot—the whole remainder were much wounded. The guards on duty were killed. The magazine is situated on the side of the water opposite to the city of Valetta; it is called Bormola. Stones were thrown over to us, some to the distance of two miles. It was situated close to the water side, and the bed of the sea was so shook by it, that it rose up and overflowed the banks. Two vessels (small ones) were sunk. Immense stones were thrown up which fell into the water; others on the ships and rigging; one I saw which fell on a vessel just arrived, weighed an hundred weight. The guard ship, the Medway man of war, is moored some distance from the disasterous place; but a stone fell upon the quarter deck, and broke the thigh of the gunner, who had lately arrived. A Mr. Woodhouse here, who, with his brother, has a great wine-making concern in Sicily, has lost two hundred and 50 pipes of it, worth nearly 7000l. —they were at some distance from the place; but the shock was so great that the casks burst.

"In short, it is a scene of misery which no language can describe. The churches are filled with the dead. A friend of mine, just come from the ruins, says, that he was walking over them when he lighted on the head of a woman. Her whole body was crushed flat; and although it is only a few hours since the general calamity took place, her body, owing to the intense heat, was entirely putrified.—Nothing farther has yet been ascertained.

"It is supposed, however, that the men were employed in cutting away the fuses from the shells, or doing something like that, when by some means a spark arose. The merchants here have begun a subscription of 20 pounds each, for the relief of the poor sufferers. A whole town, I may say, is destroyed.

"The accident happened this morning about a quarter past six o'clock. They say, there are now buried in the ruins one thousand barrels of gun powder that are in danger: but I trust in God it is untrue, were that to blow up, it would bring all Malta in ruins. May the Almighty avert such another disaster!"

Sir Home Popham has written letters from Buenos Ayres, to the Mayor and Corporation of Birmingham and other principal commercial cities, in which he points out the importance of this conquest to the trade of Great Britain: He says the city of Buenos Ayres, alone contains 70,000 inhabitants. The staples of the country are indigo, tobacco, vincenta, wool, cotton, tiger and seal skins, figs, dried tongues, beef and hams, saffron, cochineile, cocoa, hemp, hides, tallow, gum, gold, silver and precious stones. Of the article of hides, there are exported every year, upwards of 400,000.—

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty sixth day of December to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have thought fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twenty-fifth day of December instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, for the Actual Dispatch of Public Business, there to take into consideration the State and Welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Elquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign.

F. G.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Elquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of Separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the infertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of Separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. List, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the Satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted in that List, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful subjects may be made partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to its fullest extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October, in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.

Fire at St. Thomas.—On Saturday arrived the schr. Emily, Lauderbrun, from St. Thomas, with whom came passengers, capt. Sulgar and Mr. Thomas, merchant, both late of the sloop Rising Sun, of this port, which vessel they sold at St. Thomas. By the attention of capt. S. we are furnished with a newspaper giving the following account of the fire at that island—to which he adds orally, that there were in the conflagration 252 houses and stores destroyed, with a great variety of European, East and West India goods; the loss estimated from two to five millions of dollars. The loss of the stores and goods we are told, has chiefly fallen on the European factors and merchants, & that capt. Vanneman and Mr. Totten, who have lost their all, are the only Americans who have materially suffered.

St. Thomas, Oct. 12.

The quick re-establishment of the town of St. Thomas, had scarcely made the inhabitants forget the disastrous night of the 22d of Nov. 1804, when a fresh fire has renewed that painful scene, and consumed a rich quarter of the town.

A fire broke out (about half past 9 in the evening of the first inst.) in a store situated in the market place which is about the centre of this town. Notwithstanding the quick succour, which the civil authorities brought in conjunction with the inhabitants, it was impossible to confine the flames: they extended in such quickness to a pretty large circumference, that scarcely any thing was saved. The houses of Messrs. Lange and Suffren constructed with bricks and not yet covered, put a stop to the flames in the eastern quarter. A light breeze springing up about eleven o'clock, caused the flames to break out in the northern quarter and spread themselves to a considerable extent.—The ravages did not stop in this quarter, but for some vacant lots and the demolition of some buildings which being inconsiderable were soon pulled down. It is supposed that more than a 4th part of the town has been consumed. The two extremities are fortunately saved, but the centre which was newly and handsomely built now discovers but the standing walls, and a space covered with the ashes of merchandizes, furniture and precious effects to a very considerable amount.

The fire lasted till about ten minutes past 12, and was perceived at St. Croix.

The greatest order reigned during this unfortunate night; the rest of the town owes not less its safety to the exertions of the civil authorities and inhabitants than to the favorable circumstances by which they were seconded.

The correspondents of Thomas F. Gamble and co. are informed that their stores happily escaped damage by the last terrible conflagration.

The Trinidad Weekly Courant, after noticing the capture of Buenos Ayres, thus remarks:

Thus has one of the most important possessions of Spain in America surrendered to his Majesty's arms—we may say without bloodshed. The Treasure of the Crown, in specie and other valuable effects is represented as being immense, and the rewards of our gallant soldiers and sailors will not be confined to the honor of the achievement.

In a political and commercial point of view the importance of this conquest is invaluable. The Rio de la Plata, on the south bank of which Buenos Ayres stands, is navigable for hundreds of leagues for small craft, into the heart of the kingdom of Paraguay, which bounds the river on the north and east, while on the south and west, it waters the extensive province of Tucuman, a country that for health & fertility is not exceeded in the world. The capital of this province is Potosi, the riches of whose mines is proverbial. It is distant from Buenos Ayres about 300 leagues, but the road is good and level, and horses are to be found on the plains of Buenos Ayres in sufficient numbers to mount all the cavalry of Europe. The treasure from Potosi is conveyed on Mules backs to Buenos Ayres, in packages, fitted for the purpose, and there shipped for Europe; and, on all occasions when the season of the year to pass Cape Horn is unfavorable, or danger of enemies, and the exigencies of the state require the assistance of Peru, the treasures from Lima, are conveyed in the same manner over the Andes, deposited at Potosi, and brought by the King's artizans, or muleteers, thence to Buenos Ayres; to that we may consider this port as the key of the treasury of Peru, in like manner as the Havanna is the key of that of Mexico.

As Bonaparte has divided and subdivided the continent of Europe into kingdoms and principalities, and created kings and princes at his own contemplation, may we not also be indulged in the sports of fancy by making a few of our own choice, who are rewarded by profession. A revolution in the Spanish and Portuguese European governments appears at hand, and we have every reason to suppose the removal of the royal family of Portugal to St. Salvador, the capital of Brazil, is determined on, hence the expedition of Lord St. Vincent and General Simcoe, with a suitable force, has gone to Lisbon. Should this event take place, it is our business to deprive Bonaparte of the dominions of Spain in America, and of the riches that immense country has hitherto furnished to its government. A fair opportunity now offers —we have the road to Peru open to us; Potosi, may be considered as already in our possession—Chili is in our rear, and only separated from us by the Cordeliers. A well concerted attack on la Vera Cruz, to put us in possession of Mexico; and on Carthagena, to enter the kingdom of Grenada, would, by one great and combined effort deliver all South America from the dominion of Spain, and open to Great Britain a source of wealth & commerce hitherto unknown in the annals of the world—Let his Majesty's ministers look to it—the spirit of the people is with us—they abhor French doctrines and French principles, and now is the time to make a stroke that will change the face of the commercial globe.

The Fortitude has brought the first division of the Chinese Emigrants, 200 in number, mechanics and artizans, all very orderly industrious people; and we hear it is the intention to give every sort of protection and encouragement to this valuable class of labourers, who, by proper attention and treatment on the part of the inhabitants, will prove a source of riches to the colony that at present we have not even a suspicion of.

LONDON POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE Aug. 30.

A gigantic and eccentric Hibernian seaman, named Gough, which has been taken into custody by the peace officers on Friday, for riotous conduct, breaking windows, and raising a mob opposite the East-India house, was brought up from the Poultry Compter, where he had been in durance, to answer for his conduct, and to say what surety he could give to keep the peace, if he was now liberated? He answered, "the devil a peace he wanted to break at all at all, if the people who made such a noise about the peace would let him alone in peace and quietness, and not to be insulting him, or making game of his country."

The Magistrate told him he thought it would be better to let him remain where he was until Monday, when his temper would be less ruffled, and his mind more cool. To which he answered, "that the devil a ruffle he willed to wear on his temper, and as to coolness, he was as cool as a cowcumber; and no wonder for him to be cool; for the devil burn the bit he had eat, since he had the honor of seeing his Lordship last, but bread and water."

The Magistrate told him, he was still confident it would be better for him to remain a few days. To which he answered, he hoped his honor did not main to send him back to that shabby, hungry place where he was; for sure, he did not think, that a man, like him, could live upon three half pence worth of bread in a day. All he wanted was to go home to Northend, where he lodged, to get clean linen;—but if his Worship would lend him a clean shirt, and send him a right sort of dinner to-day and to-morrow, he had no objection to stay till Monday.

The Magistrate then asked him, if he would go on board the Enterprize Tender? To which he answered, "sure he was there already, for a whole night, double ironed, handcuffed, and gagged for only damning the King and Government, and how could he help it, when a blackguard press gang almost cut him to pieces in the name of the King and Government? He had no occasion to go on board the Enterprize, when he only wished to go into the service in a ship he knew, the Salvador del Mundo, at Plymouth, where he was well known to the officers. He had just come from India in a Company's ship."

The Magistrate told him he was his friend, though perhaps, he did not know it; and only wished to keep him out of harm's way. He looked like an honest fellow: and if he would promise not to get tipley, or break any windows, or strike any person, but go directly out of town, he would liberate him.

To this he answered, "Very possible his Lordship might be his friend, though, to be sure, he had a d——d odd way of shewing it. Perhaps his Worship was one of his own trade; he was a cabinet maker born, and so was his father before him, and both were reared among the chips. If he had kept the fifth commandment, he need not be there now, nor any where else either; as to getting tipley, devil a spoonful would he drink till he left town, if all the water in London was turned into liquor; nor a window would he break. His honor was pleased to say he looked like an honest fellow, and God Almighty wrote it upon his forehead. But as to striking any body, he had more regard for his health, for he was a double fronted man, and if he struck any man a blow with his fist, he would knock the brains out of his head, if he had any brains in it."

The Magistrate, upon this solemn promise to be quiet and leave town immediately ordered him to be discharged.

From the Mercantile Advertiser.

As there have lately appeared in several newspapers various accounts of Mr. Mungo Parke and his fellow travellers in Africa, the following extract of a letter from him to his friend at Goree, being the only authentic information received since he reached the river Niger, will no doubt prove acceptable to those who feel an interest in the fate of that enterprising man.

"Sanfanding Bambouras, November 10, 1804.

"My dear Friend—We left the Gambia in good health and spirits, and continued travelling with the greatest and most flattering prospect of success, till we had crossed the Faleme River, and entered Manikoodo—here, alas! the rainy season commenced, and the soldiers were affected with fevers. The fever had at first the appearance of typhus, but in a few days the yellow tinge of the skin convinced us that we had a more dangerous disease to contend with. [Here he relates his method of treatment, which, he says, he has every reason to believe would have been very successful, had they had proper convenience, and not been exposed to the heat of the sun.] Our numbers diminished very rapidly; for as the rainy season advanced, the dysentery made its appearance, and we reached the river, (2nd August) in a very weak and sickly state.—On our arrival we had a long palaver with the King of Bambouras, and received permission to pass to the eastward, and arrived at Thiripla, (Sanfanding) where we have resided near two months, fitting out our schooner, and laying in provisions. The healthy season is now set in, and I indulge the hope of reaching the coast before any more of us drop off. Out of 44 Europeans who left the Gambia in good health, only Lieutenant Martin and three soldiers, viz. Abraham Bolton, John Connor, and Thomas Higgins, of the Royal African corps, and myself, remain alive. I have not had a day's sickness since I left Goree. Mr. Anderson, my brother, friend, and companion, died of a dysentery on the 28th of Oct. and Mr. Scott of a fever, two months ago.

"I am yours, &c.

(Signed) "MUNGO PARKE."

The guide who brought these letters says, that he saw Mr. Parke to the eastward of Sanfanding, after the date of his letter. He also reports, that there was an English ship in the Gambia that had letters on board from Mr. Parke, for his Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State.

To the Independent Electors of the County of Durham, the East Riding of the County of York, and the County of Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

IN obedience to the Solicitations of a great many of my Friends and Neighbours, I am induced to make you a tender of my Services, as a Candidate, at the approaching Election on the 29th instant, to Represent you in Parliament.

Actuated by no other motive than a desire of promoting Harmony and Concord among us, and unmolested by any Spirit of Party, my only aim shall be the Public Weal and the Prosperity of our Country; to which end my most strenuous Efforts shall be at all times exerted.

Should I be the Object of your Choice and have the Honor of Representing so respectable a portion of this Province, I shall seize with zeal, every opportunity of convincing you how much I am,

Your faithful and devoted servant,
THOMAS B. GOUGH.

Yonge Street, 15th Dec. 1806.

To the Independent Electors of the County of Durham, the East Riding of the County of York, and the County of Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

WHEN first I had the honor of Addressing you, it was in a style of moderation suited to the fair and honorable Cause I had embarked in, the PUBLIC GOOD—at that time I did not expect to intrude myself further upon you; but on my going through the Country, I found the Agents of another Candidate had spread Calumnies, as false as they are despicable; knowing my Reputation in that part where I reside, and am best known, was unassailable by their impotent attacks, have had recourse to the vile artifice of telling you, that I was to leave the Country immediately; which is an infamous Falsehood.—Gentlemen, from the moment I concluded on offering you my Services, I determined, if I should be honored by your choice, on a faithful discharge of the Sacred Trust by a diligent attendance on my Duty. Many of you, Gentlemen, know the stake I have in the Country, which must attach me to it and its welfare.—How desperate and declining must the hopes of a Party be, to be obliged to have recourse to such low subterfuges?

I should not have troubled you with any boast of my Character or Circumstances, being so well known, but left the imposition might impress those unacquainted with me, if not contradicted.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most obedient and
devoted Servant,
THOMAS B. GOUGH.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty ſixth day of December, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the twenty-ſixth day of December inſtant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conſtrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſeven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, for the Actual Diſpatch of Public Buſineſs, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſeventh year of our reign.

F. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers: Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, it may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, for her notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt, to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

By his Excellency's Command,
WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

By the ſhip Reſolution, Brown, arrived at Boſton in 45 days from Liverpool, the following intelligence is received:—

LONDON, October 9.

Reſignation of the Miniſtry.

Meſſage to the Mayor.—Lord Howick preſents his compliments to the Lord Mayor, has the honor to tranſmit, for the information of his Lordſhip, a copy of a Meſſage juſt received from Deal

Downing Street, October 8.

"Telegraph Meſſage from Deal, 7 minutes paſt one, P. M. 8th Oct.—8th.—A Meſſage arrived—Lord Lauderdale quits Paris to-morrow.—Clyde frigate ordered to attend.

(Signed) "JAMES SHAW, Mayor.

"Meſſage houſe half paſt 4, P. M."

The Courier ſays Miniſters muſt have been certain the Negociation had completely failed before they would have made a communication like the above.

Wherever the intelligence ſpread, it was received with joy. On the exchange repeated huzzas were given.

Freſh orders were iſſued to the Britiſh Naval Commanders on the news that Lord Lauderdale was coming home.

It was reported the Britiſh had gained another victory in Italy.

The French frigates, Minerva, Indefatigable, Glory, Armide, and Preſident, have been taken by the Britiſh.

Lord Percy had been elected for Weſtminſter.

Mr. Whitebread was appointed Secretary at War.

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable houſe in Liverpool to his Correſpondent in this city, dated Oct. 11th.

"All hope of an amicable termination of the differences between Great Britain and France ſeems now to have ſubſided. A Meſſenger has arrived from Lord Lauderdale ſtating that his Lordſhip would quit Paris on the 9th Octoober, and the Clyde frigate has been ordered to Calais to bring him over. The funds have fallen in conſequence about 3 per cent. It is not thought that this event will produce much effect upon our markets, as it has been for ſome time generally expected. Hoſtilities have not yet commenced between France and Pruſſia."

LONDON, October 3.

Departure of his Prussian Majesty to join his Army.

The Hamburgh mail due on Wednesday arrived this morning. The intelligence from Germany becomes of the deepest importance, and the next mail we suppose, will bring the intelligence of war having commenced. Their Prussian Majesties have left Berlin On the 26th they set off for Potsdam, for Magdeburgh, and proceeded to Halle, Merseburgh, and Naumburgh, the head quarters of the army. The Queen returned immediately to Berlin. The Prussian army increasing in strength daily, is advancing Gen. Kalkreuth has taken the position of Gen. Blucher; his right posted towards Munster; his left on the side of Esh Frotland. General Blucher, who has joined General Kalkreuth, has moved more to the left, and occupies the territory at Waseck, opposite to the Hessian frontier General Rucher wrote hear quarters are at Gottingen, has advanced his position in a right line partly towards General Blucher. The grand army is commanded by Marshal Mollendorf and his Majesty in person, and is computed at 70,000 infantry and 18,000 cavalry. Its present station is in the vicinity of Merseburg. To the left are the troops in Silesia, under Prince Hohenlohe, to which 20,000 Saxons are to be added.

The Prussian troops thus occupy a line extending from Munster on the Ems, to Merseburg on the Saxie. Meanwhile the French troops have deemed it right to fall back from Westphalia; but they are receiving daily reinforcements in Franconia and on the Mein. It is stated in a Berlin article of the 3d ult. that the French Ambassador is supposed to have applied for his passports. Some letters from Emden mention that Prussia means to place 40,000 men at the disposal of the Prince of Orange to act on the side of East Friesland. But Prussia will not be able to give the Prince so large a force until the Russians have joined her and perhaps Austria. The French, however, according to the Dutch papers, are apprehensive that no attempt will be made against Holland; for the force appointed to defend it is estimated at 80,000 men. The German Legion might be advantageously employed at the present moment; and we trust Government will send it immediately to join the Prussians.

It would be difficult to describe the enthusiasm that pervades the Prussian army. The troops to a man burn with the most eager desire for battle, and we have hardly a belief that hostilities on the part of the Prussian Government would be attended with the most dangerous consequences. The spirit of the army is raised too high to be satisfied with any thing but war. Nor is the flame confined to the troops—it has spread to the provinces, and extends to every part of the kingdom. Several of the principal cities have already demanded permission to raise regiments at their own expence.

Of the Russians we have no particular account—they are certainly advancing to the assistance of Prussia—of the troops that retired after the peace of Presburgh, a large body, we believe, never marched further than Prussian Poland. It is evident that Prussia is not without strong suspicions of Austria. The troops that had been ordered to have Anspach and Eichstadt, have received counter orders. Mortier, who was supposed to be destined to act in Franconia, is to command in Bavaria. His baggage has already arrived at Augsburgh. Bavaria is levying men on such the greatest expedition, and the accounts from Augsburgh affect that all persons, whatever be their rank, who do not enter voluntarily, are forced to enter. It is not without reason that Bavaria views the present state of affairs with anxiety and apprehension. All the Italians in Bavaria have been commanded to return home, in order to be subject to the conscript laws.

There is a ridiculous report mentioned in an article from Paderborn of the Elector of Hesse having declared that he will remain neutral. The contrary is known to be the case.

While these events are passing in the North of Germany, the South of Italy continues to be the seat of the most sanguinary warfare. It we may draw an inference from the manner in which the French account speak of the events in that quarter, we have to infer that they have met with the most determined resistance, and that they have not been successful. An article from Rome of the 30th ultimo, says that Massena has had several bloody battles lately, of which we have not yet received the particulars. It war breaks out in Germany, the French will, in all probability, be under the necessity of abandoning Naples. King Joseph's First Chamberlain is arrived at Paris from Naples, to prepare, it is supposed, for his Majesty's return.

October 4

The Gazette of this evening contains the following letters transmitted by Admiral Sir Charles Cotton, Bart. to William Marsden, Esq.

Canopus at Sea, September 29, 1806.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you of my falling in with the French frigate Le President, of 44 guns, 330 men, commanded by Monsieur Gallard, on the 17th inst in lat. 37 deg. 27 min. N. long. 6 deg. 62 min. W. and after a chase of seventeen hours, she struck to his Majesty's squadron under my command.

The President is one of the frigates that sailed from France with the Regulus, Sybille, and Surveillante corvette; separated in a gale of wind on the 30th of April, in lat. 22 deg. 26 min. N. and long. 55 deg. W. I have the honor to be, &c.

THOMAS LOUIS.

Centaur at Sea, September 29, 1806.

SIR,

Yesterday morning, about one o'clock, I had the good fortune of falling in with a squadron of the enemy standing to the westward; the squadron under my orders being then on the larboard tack, steering in the Chesterton light house, six or seven leagues from us, the Revenge to windward and the Monarch to the leeward, on the look out, the latter ship first making a signal for an enemy, when I soon discovered seven sail to leeward of me; and confirming them, to part, line of battle ships, the signal was made to form the line, and shortly after I observed them bearing up, making all sail, and running to the S. S. W. The signal was instantly made for a general chase, and the Monarch, from her position and good sailing, was enabled to keep steadily within gun shot, a mile and a half, or little more a head of the Centaur, and the Mars on the starboard bow.

At day light we made them out four large French frigates and two corvettes, one of which bearing a Broad pendant; at five the Monarch fired a few chace shot; and at six the weathermost frigate hauled more to the wind's eye, in pursuit of which I dispatched the Mars; and one frigate, with the two corvettes edged away to the south east, the remaining three frigates keeping to close order, indicating the intention of supporting each other. At a quarter past ten the Monarch opened her starboard guns on the enemy, when a heavy cannonading commenced, and by our gunnery's management at a distance right they succeeded, to some purpose, in stopping the Monarch's fire and rigging before the Centaur could get up. At eleven we got within fair range of two, and opened our fire from the starboard guns, which the Monarch kept engaging the third ship, and about noon one of the two frigates struck, and the one opposed to the Monarch shortly after.

It was just before this I received a severe wound in my right arm (since amputated, and doing well I hope) which obliged me to leave the deck; a short time previous to this had succeeded in capturing her chace, and with her prize, hasted towards the Centaur, in chace of the remaining ship, the French commodore's, and at three affected in capturing her. Their ships of the enemy made an obstinate resistance, but the result was, as it may be well supposed, attended with much slaughter, being crowded with troops out of Rochefort the evening before.

I cannot add too much praise to captain Lee, of the Monarch, and the gallant and officer like conduct, but I am sorry to find his loss has been rather severe, the swell of the sea preventing, at times, the opening of the lower gun ports.

To Captain Larkin, of the Mars, I feel thankful, for his steady conduct and attention; and I have also to express my satisfaction at the manner in which captain Boyle, King, Sir John Core, and Maitland in getting up with the enemy, although they could not succeed. The Revenge, from being well to the windward, became confidentially often after bearing up.

To Lieutenant Cole, First of the Centaur, I have to add my approbation of his judicious conduct, before and after my leaving the deck, and I also feel much pleased at the steady exertions of all my officers, seamen and marines.

I enclose herewith, a return of the killed and wounded, and I also annex a list of the enemy's ships captured, and will make a return of their lists as soon as possible. I have the honor to be, &c.

SAMUEL HOOD.

A return of killed and wounded on board his Majesty's ships Centaur, Monarch, and Mars, in an action with a squadron of the enemy's frigates on the 25th September, 1806.

Centaur——1 seaman and 2 marines killed; captain Sir Samuel Hood, K. B. and 3 seamen wounded.

Monarch——1 petty officer and 2 seamen killed; 1 lieutenant, 1 warrant officer, 4 petty officers, and 14 seamen wounded; 1 seaman, 2 corporals, and 4 private marines, wounded.

Mars——None killed or wounded.

Total——19 killed and 26 wounded.

Names of the officers killed and wounded.

Centaur——Captain Sir Samuel Hood, K. B. wounded.

Monarch——Mr. Bidden, midshipman, killed; Lieut. Henderson, Mr Duffy, boatswain, and Mr. Geary, midshipman, wounded.

A list of the enemy's ships captured by the squadron under the orders of Sir Samuel Hood. K. B. 25th September 1806.

La Cloire, of 48 guns, commanded by M. Soleil, Capitaine de Vaiffeau, carrying a broad pendant.

L'Indefatigable, of 44 guns, commanded by M. Gaudiers, Capitaine de Vaiffeau.

La Minerve, of 44 guns, quite new, commanded by M. Casey, Capitaine de Fregate.

L'Armide, of 44 guns, two years old, commanded by M. Langlois, Capitain de Fregate.

Remarkable her ships, of large dimensions, mounting 28 French eighteen pounders on their main decks; 24 pound carronades on their quarter decks and forecastles, and about 300 men (including troops) in each ship, full of stores, arms, ammunition, and provisions, &c.

La Themis, of 44 guns, old——Elcaped.

La Syiph, of 18 guns, new——Elcaped.

La Lynx, of 18 guns, new——Elcaped.

October 7.

Our letters from Yarmouth inform us, that a ſtrange fleet has been ſeen in the North Sea, but whether Dutch or Ruſſian is not yet known. Admiral Ruſſell ſailed from Yarmouth yeſterday morning in queſt of them, and we may ſoon expect to receive farther accounts reſpecting them.

October 8.

It was yeſterday ſtrongly reported, that the Britiſh troops had made themſelves maſters of Gaeta not long after its ſurrender to the French. This, however belongs to the rumours of new & important ſucceſſes in Italy, of which no advices have been received, but which we ſhall be extremely happy to confirm.

In the late capture of Le Preſident, 44 guns, by Admiral Louis's ſquadron, the Diſpatch, 18. Capt. Hawkins, abſolutely engaged her an hour and a half moſt gallantly, before the Spartiate of 84, capt. S. F. La Forey, came up to her aſſiſtance, when ſhe ſtruck her colours; ſhe is ſaid to be very rich in gold duſt, ivory, and elephants teeth, her ſhare of plunder from the Britiſh ſhips ſhe captured on the coaſt of Africa.

The Diamond frigate, capt. Argles, is appointed, with ſeveral ſmaller veſſels, to blockade the port of Havre.

October 9.

The Lord Mayor immediately upon the receipt of the important news by the Telegraphe from Deal, went to the Exchange and to Lloyd's, where the news was hailed with ſhouts of applauſe. The importance of the ſubject demands a particular account of all the circumſtances attending this communication. When the Telegraphic communication arrived, miniſters were at Levee at the Queen's Houſe, and they there received the information. Upon their return they met and held a council upon it, and the note was diſpatched to the Ld. Mayor about 4 o'clock. By this withholding the intelligence until after the money market had cloſed, much gambling was prevented. As the funds ſuffered little or no variation in the courſe of the day, it is evident that the ſmalleſt hint of the news had not tranſpired until after 3 o'clock, the hour at which the market cloſes. About half paſt 4 the Lord Mayor repaired to the Royal Exchange, where he read Lord Howick's note, and the telegraphic diſpatch aloud, where it produced three diſtinct cheers. The place being very numerouſly attended, his Lordſhip conceiving that many of the gentlemen at a diſtance had not heard him diſtinctly, proceeded to another part of the room, and read the Bulletin a ſecond time, when it was received with three diſtinct cheers, ſtill more loud, if poſſible, than the firſt. His Lordſhip then proceeded to Lloyd's Coffee-houſe, where ſtanding upon a table, near the middle of the room, he read the official note, which was received with the greateſt buſts of applauſe.

One of the merchants, unable to reſiſt the impulſe of his feelings addreſſed the company at ſome length. He confeſſed, that had he been the firſt to have applauded or cheered on the occaſion, it might have been ſaid, that he was actuated by intereſt; but to find that the merchants of London, who now ſurrounded him, and who were ſuppoſed to have no other intereſt in the event than the honor of their country approved ſo enthuſiaſtically of the reſult of Negociation, afforded him the very higheſt ſatisfaction and joy. He at the ſame time aſſured them—and no man who knows him can doubt the aſſertion—that he felt as ſincerely for the honor and glory of his country, as the moſt independent among them. He therefore congratulated them, on the occaſion; for although peace was at all times deſirable, a glorious war was preferable, to an inſecure or diſhonourable peace. He rejoiced in the patriotic ſpirit which prevailed the meeting. It would greatly tend to give additional confidence to our Government, in the purſuit of a neceſſary war; and when known in Paris, as the true ſentiments, not only of the merchants of London, but of the Britiſh nation at large, would greatly tend to paraliſe the wicked and dangerous Councils of the Tyrant of France. This ſpeech, the ſpontaneous effuſion of the moment, was received with very great applauſe.

A Copy of the Bulletin was then poſted in front of the Manſion Houſe. The news ſoon ſpread through every part of the city, and was every where received with equal ſatisfaction.—Mr. Liſle is the Meſſenger whoſe arrival was announced in the telegraphic diſpatch, from Boulogne, and arrived in town at one o'clock laſt night, at the Foreign Office, where he delivered his diſpatches which will be ſubmitted to a Cabinet Council this day. The general opinion upon the Meſſage was, that the negociation was compietely at an end. There can be no doubt that it is ſo, unleſs the French Plenipotentiary Mr. Champagny, was authorized to accede to the terms which Lord Lauderdale propoſed.—It is probable that miniſters, unwilling to allow the diſcuſſion to be farther protracted, inſtructed his Lordſhip to ſubmit certain propoſals, and to notify, that unleſs theſe were accepted, he ſhould quit Paris within a given time.—Conſidering all the circumſtances of the caſe, it will not appear very likely that Lord Lauderdale would be detained by ſuch an occurrence.

The Clyde frigate has ſtood over to Boulogne to wait for Lord Lauderdale; he may be expected to reach Boulogne by Saturday night, or Sunday morning.

To the Independent Electors of the County of Durham, the Eaſt Riding of the County of York, and the County of Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

IN obedience to the Solicitations of a great many of my Friends and Neighbours, I am induced to make you a tender of my Services, as a Candidate, at the approaching Election on the 29th inſtant, to Repreſent you in Parliament.

Actuated by no other motive than a deſire of promoting Harmony and Concord among us, and uninfluenced by any Spirit of Party, my only aim ſhall be the Public Weal and the Proſperity of our Country; to which end my moſt ſtrenuous Efforts ſhall be at all times exerted.

Should I be the Object of your Choice and have the Honor of Repreſenting ſo reſpectable a portion of this Province, I ſhall feize with zeal, every opportunity of convincing you how much I am,

Your faithful and devoted ſervant,
THOMAS B. GOUGH.

Yonge Street, 15th Dec. 1806.

To the Independent Electors of the County of Durham, the Eaſt Riding of the County of York, and the County of Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

WHEN firſt I had the honor of Addreſſing you, it was in a Style of moderation ſuited to the fair and honorable Cauſe I had embarked in, the PUBLIC GOOD—at that time I did not expect to intrude myſelf further upon you; but on my going through the Country, I found the Agents of another Candidate had ſpread Calumnies, as falſe as they are deſpicable; knowing my Reputation in that part where I reſide, and am beſt known, was unfailable by their impotent attacks, have had recourſe to the vile artifice of telling you, that I was to leave the Country immediately; which is an infamous Falſehood.—Gentlemen, from the moment I concluded on offering you my Services, I determined, if I ſhould be honored by your choice, on a faithful diſcharge of the Sacred Truſt by a diligent attendance on my Duty. Many of you, Gentlemen, know the ſtake I have in the Country, which muſt attach me to it and its welfare.—How deſperate and declining muſt the hopes of a Party be, to be obliged to have recourſe to ſuch low ſubterfuges?

I ſhould not have troubled you with any boaſt of my Character or Circumſtances, being ſo well known, but leſt the impoſition might impreſs thoſe unacquainted with me, if not contradicted.

I am, Gentlemen,
your moſt obedient and
devoted Servant,
THOMAS B. GOUGH.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith :—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty sixth day of December, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have tho't fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twenty-sixth day of December instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the yeir of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, for the Annal Dispatch of Public Business, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Elquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Elquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING :

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. List, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that List, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOWYE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. List, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the

Lord Charles Somer-

Mr. Whitebread will also be speedily called into office, but the arrangement for that purpose is not yet matured.

We can now add, with the utmost confidence, that Lord Grenville proceeded on Monday morning to Windsor, to take the King's pleasure upon the above nominations, all of which it is presumed will be confirmed at the Privy Council held this day.

A letter which we have received from an officer in the Mediterranean, by the Camel, arrived on Sunday at Spithead, states the enemy's force to follows : at Cadiz, ready for sea, Spanish, 1 three decker, and 6 two deckers ; French 5 two deckers, and 1 Frigate—total, ready for sea, 12 sail of the line and one frigate ; sitting, 2 two decke s, and 6 line of battle ships and 1 frigate—total, in preparation, 7 sail of the line and 2 frigates. At Carthagens, 2 three deckers, 6 two deckers, two frigates and one corvette, ready for sea. At Toulon, 3 two deckers 3 frigates and 2 corvettes. At Venice, sitting, 2 two deckers, one frigate, 8 corvettes, 2 galliots, and about 120 gun boats.

The Hamburgh Mail, due on Sunday, arrived last night, with letters and papers to the 18 inst. Hostilities had not commenced, at that date, between France and Prussia ; but the military movements were continued on both sides with increased activity. The Russian troops to the amount of 90,000 men, are said to have arrived on the frontiers of Silesia ; and on the other hand the French troops in Germany are all in motion ; those which were lately encamped near Paris are supposed to be destined for Holland. A letter from Hamburgh of the 30th of last month, says, that their Majesties and Prussia Majesties, the Archduke Charles, and the Grand Duke Constantine, are expected at Dresden.—Bonaparte was to proceed to Dusseldorf and Cologne. The French minister, Laforest, still continued at Berlin on the 27th last month, but every thing was prepared for his departure.

At twelve o'clock, this day, the Consols were 60 3/4 and Omnium 3 1-2, being a fall of about 3/4 per cent. This depreciation is not great when we consider the cause. The fall would probably have been more considerable, but for the relief which has for some time anticipated in the best informed circles.

One of the expeditions now fitting out, is said to be destined against Vera Cruz.

It is a curious circumstance, though not yet observed by any of the Newspapers, that Bonaparte at Paris to put himself at the head of his army the same day this year, that he departed from his capital last year to march against the Austrians, namely on the 24th of September. Whether the result of the war will be as disastrous for Prussia as it was then for Austria, a very short period will determine ; but it seems as if Bonaparte anticipated the same success, by choosing the same day for his departure, and he will no doubt have the circumstances to his fabours, as of omission of their good fortune.

Ministers deny that Lord Lauderdale was ordered to quit Paris—they say that he applied for his passports in consequence of the French Government rejecting or evading the terms on which he was instructed to treat. After considerable difficulty his Lordship obtained his passports, and was to set off from Paris yesterday.

From all quarters we have heard that the news of the rupture of the Negociation has occasioned the greatest satisfaction. The Mail coaches to commemorating the intelligence as the villages to they passed along on Wednesday evening to various directions, were cheered by the inhabitants with shouts of applause ; and the general cry was, " Eternal War, rather than a dishonorable Peace !"

Bonaparte left Silesia on the 18 inst. for Wurtzburgh. The French army amounting to Paris papers which have been received to the 11th, would be assembled between Wurtzburgh and Schweinfurt by the 6th. The encours from the different parts of Germany would indeed seem to be, that Bonaparte was determined to bring the whole mass of his force to bear at once against Prussia. Soult's division which was on the Iser, is said to have been ordered to the Upper Palatine, and it is still said, that not a French regiment will be left in Swabia or Bavaria.'

From the circumstance of the French troops drawing in such force towards Schweinfurt it is evident that Bonaparte means to commence the campaign by an irruption into Saxony, and not into Hesse. It is said that he will enter Saxony on the fourth and on the fourth week. Part of his army will advance between Saxe and Coburg and Saxe Meinengen, and another part will occupy Bareuth, and proceed by the Voigtland. To should form as Bonaparte meant to attack at the same time the main army under the Duke of Brunswick, and the troops under General Hohenlohe, we are not able to state with perfect accuracy what are the positions of the Prussian troops. The head quarters were at Naumburgh on the 29th ult. the date of the last accounts. Hohenlohe is advancing to Hoff.

It is probable that hostilities have commenced before this time. They began last year on the 7th October ; they may begin on the same day this.

A Russian squadron of four sail of the line, three frigates and a brig, arrived at Portsmouth yesterday to take in provisions. It is bound to the Mediterranean, and has about 4000 troops on board.

A heavy firing was heard at Deal and Dover on Wednesday night and yesterday morning, in the direction of Boulogne. It is supposed to proceeded from an attempt of our cruizers to set fire to the fleets by means of rockets of an enormous size discharged from vessels of a light draught of water, upon the principle of fluttle thrown from a mortar battery.

The success of Miranda's expedition against the Caraccas, is in much calculated upon, that several ships are already fitting out for that destination. Notice of the first that is to sail was given yesterday at Lloyd's.

Anecdote of Mr. Fox.—It was in the interval between the first and second operation, that he expressed his conviction that his disease would terminate fatally. Lord ——— said, that he might a party for Chiffinch, in the country, and that he had letters the library to include Mr. Fox in it without his knowledge. But it will be a new house, Sir, added he, and I think you will approve of it. I shall indeed be in a new house by Christmas next, said Mrs. Fox. " My Lord, what do you think of the state of the final affair doath ?" Lord ——— confounded I believe by the unexpected turn which Mr. Fox had given to the conversation, only made no reply. Mr. Fox continued.—" That it is on no mind, I am convinced. The cause one of the Deity is a proof that there exists ; why am therefore the last to man ? and if such an existence as the soul exists, by its nature it may exist forever. I should have hesitated in the immortality of the soul though Christianity had never existed ; but how it adds an important from the body, is beyond my capacity at judgement. —This, however, I shall know by next Christmas." Mrs. Fox here took his hand and wept. Mr. Fox was much moved.—" I am happy," said he, " full of confidence, I may say of certainty."—Lon. Pap.

A ginger-bread baker at Bungay, in Suffolk, who was in the habit of attending all the fairs in that neighbourhood, for the purpose of selling ginger-bread, and amusing the people with stories, which he played in order to attract them to his Stall, his gooses being affected with a cough, a goodess at Brundish, in the same county, advised him to give the animal a mixture of vinegar and honey, which, in a short time, had the desired effect of restoring the donkey to health. The baker, reasoning on the good cure wrought on the animal, concluded that it might produce a similar effect on the human body ; he therefore determined to give it a trial, under the name of the Pigeradle Balsom, and commenced advertising it at a groats per bottle, as a Specific for consumptions of the lungs, &c. &c. and Asthma in toto, the efficacy of this medicine (merely simple enough) so soon smoked by people, from whose elevated . . . tion to life, one might suppose, would have known better. He soon gave up ginger-bread baking and Selling, for the more lucrative, but less honorable, practice of selling honey and vinegar at a guinea a pint, by which he smuffed a considerable fortune, which soon raised him to the distinguished honour of a Doctor of Physic, although probably ignorant of Pharmacy, anatomy and chimistry.

LONDON, October 3.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE PRUSSIAN, SAXON AND RUSSIAN FORCES.

At a moment when the political horizon is again overcast, and every thing seems to announce the immediate commencement of a formidable conflict, a sketch of the respective forces of Prussia, Saxony, and Hesse, cannot be misplaced in our readers.

Mr. Whitebread will alſo be ſpeedily called into office, but the arrangement for that purpoſe is not yet matured.

We can now add, with the utmoſt confidence, that Lord Grenville proceeded on Monday morning to Windſor, to take the King's pleaſure upon the above nominations, all of which it is preſumed will be confirmed at the Privy Council held this day.

A letter which we have received from an officer in the Mediterranean, by the Camel, arrived on Sunday at Spithead, ſtates the enemy's force as follows : at Cadiz, ready for ſea, Spanish, 1 three decker, and 6 two deckers ; French 5 two deckers, and 1 Frigate—total, ready for ſea, 12 ſail of the line and one frigate ; ſitting, 2 two deckers, and 6 line of battle ſhips and 1 frigate—total, in preparation, 7 ſail of the line and 2 frigates. At Carthagena, 2 three deckers, 6 two deckers, two frigates and one corvette, ready for ſea. At Toulon, 3 two deckers 3 frigates and 2 corvettes. At Venice, ſitting, 2 two deckers, one frigate, 8 corvettes, 2 galliots, and about 120 gun boats.

The Hamburgh Mail, due on Sunday, arrived laſt night, with letters and papers to the 1ſt inſt. Hoſtilities had not commenced, at that date, between France and Pruſſia ; but the military movements were continued on both ſides with increaſed activity. The Ruſſian troops to the amount of 90,000 men, are ſaid to have arrived on the frontiers of Gallicia ; and on the other hand the French troops in Germany are all in motion ; thoſe which were lately encamped near Paris are ſuppoſed to be deſtined for Holland. A letter from Hamburgh of the 30th of laſt month, ſtates, that their Ruſſian and Pruſſian Majeſties, the Archduke Charles, and the Grand Duke Conſtantine, are expected at Dreſden.—Bonaparte was to proceed to Duſſeldorff and Cologne. The French ambaſſador, Laforeſt, ſtill continued at Berlin on the 27th laſt month, but every thing was prepared for his departure.

At twelve o'clock, this day, the Conſols were 60 3-4, and Omnium 3 1-2, being a fall of about 3 per cent. This depreſſion is not great when we conſider the cauſe. The fall would probably have been more conſiderable, but our the reſult been no ſome time anticipated in the beſt informed circles.

One of the expeditions now fitting out, is ſaid to be deſtined againſt Vera Cruz.

It is a matter of conſequence, though not yet obſerved by any of the Newspapers, that Bonaparte is in Paris to put himſelf at the head of his army the ſame day this year, that he departed from his capital laſt year to march againſt the Auſtrians, namely on the 24th of September. Whether the reſult of the war will be as diſaſtrous for Pruſſia as it was then for Auſtria, a very ſhort period will determine ; but it ſeems as if Bonaparte anticipated the ſame ſucceſs, by chuſing the ſame day for his departure, and he will no doubt ſtate the circumſtances to his ſoldiers, as if ſubmiſſive of their good fortune.

Miniſters deny that Lord Lauderdale was ordered to quit Paris—they ſay that he applied for his paſſports in conſequence of the French Government rejecting or evading the terms on which he was inſtructed to treat. After conſiderable delicacy his Lordſhip obtained his paſſports, and was to let off from Paris yeſterday.

From all quarters we have heard that the news of the rupture of the Negociation has occaſioned the greateſt ſatisfaction. The Mail coachmen on communicating the intelligence at the villages as they paſſed along on Wedneſday evening in various directions, were cheered by the inhabitants with ſhouts of applauſe ; and the general cry was, " Eternal War, rather than a diſhonourable Peace !"

Bonaparte left Mentz on the 1ſt inſtant, for Wurtzburgh. The French army according to Paris papers which have been received to the 11th, would be aſſembled between Wurtzburgh and Schweinfort by the 4th. The concourſe from the different parts of Germany would induce us to believe that Bonaparte was determined to bring the whole maſs of his force to bear at once againſt Pruſſia. South's diviſion which was on the Inn, is ſaid to have been ordered to the Upper Palatine, and it is aſſerted, that not a French regiment will be in Saxony after the fourth and on the fourth week. Part of his army will advance between Saxe and Coburg and Saxe Meyningen, and another part will occupy Baireuth, and proceed by the Voigtland. It ſhould ſeem as Bonaparte meant to attack at the ſame time the main army under the Duke of Brunſwick, and the troops under General Hohenlohe, we are not able to ſtate with perfect accuracy what are the poſitions of the Pruſſian troops. The head quarters were at Nuremburgh on the 27th ult. the date of the laſt accounts. Hohenlohe is advancing to Hoff. It is probable that hoſtilities have commenced before this time. They began laſt year on the 7th October ; they may begin on the ſame day this.

A Ruſſian ſquadron of four ſail of the line, three frigates and a ſloop, arrived at Portſmouth yeſterday to take in proviſions. It is bound to the Mediterranean, and has about 4000 troops on board.

A heavy firing was heard at Deal and Dover on Wedneſday night and yeſterday morning, in the direction of Boulogne. It is ſuppoſed to proceeded from an attempt of our cruizers to ſet fire to the ſtores by means of rockets of an enormous ſize diſcharged from veſſels of a light draught of water, upon the principle of thoſe thrown from a mortar battery.

The ſucceſs of Miranda's expedition againſt the Caraccas, is ſo much calculated upon, that ſeveral ſhips are already fitting out for that deſtination. Notice of the firſt that is to ſail was given yeſterday at Lloyd's.

Anecdote of Mr. Fox.—It was in the interval between the firſt and ſecond operation, that he expreſſed his conviction that his diſeaſe would terminate fatally. Lord ——— ſaid, that he made a pretty fair Chriſtmas, in the country, and that he had taken the liberty to include Mr. Fox in it without his knowledge. But it will be a new ſcene, Sir, added he, and I think you will approve of it. I ſhall indeed be in a new ſcene by Chriſtmas next, ſaid Mr. Fox. " My Lord, what do you think of the Rate of the ſoul after death ?" Lord ——— conſidered I believe by the unexpected turn which Mr. Fox had given to the converſation) made no reply. Mr. Fox continued :—" That it is ſo natural, I am convinced. The exiſtence of the Deity is a proof that ſoul exiſts ; why not therefore the ſoul of man ? And if ſuch a preſence as the ſoul exiſts, by its nature it may exiſt forever. I ſhould have believed in the immortality of the ſoul though Chriſtianity had never exiſted ; but how it acts as impelled from the body, is beyond my capacity at preſent. —That, however, I ſhall know by next Chriſtmas." Mrs. Fox here took his hand and wept. Mr. Fox was much moved.—" I am happy," ſaid he, " full of confidence, I may ſay of certainty."—Lon. Pap.

LONDON, October 3.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE PRUSSIAN, SAXON AND HESSIAN FORCES.

At a moment when the political horizon is again overcaſt, and every thing ſeems to announce the commencement of a formidable conflict, a ſketch of the reſpective forces of Pruſſia, Saxony, and Heſſe, cannot be unpleaſant to our readers.

MILITARY FORCE OF PRUSSIA.

Guards, 31,174 rix.

A Regiment	1155
Grenadier Guards	2156
Life Guards	625
Companies not arranged	250

INFANTRY, 175,307, viz.

	Reg.	Bat.	Men.

Huſſars 9-1 Batt.	16,452	16,056
Yowarzays 1-1 Batt.	1,577	1,561

Each of theſe regiments coſts, exclusively of the horſes, the annual ſum of 79,200 rix-dollars ; 12 regiments, of courſe, amount to 948,000 rix-dollars.

Relative to the 14 regiments of dragoons, reckoning five ſquadrons to a regiment, their annual expences, exclusive of the horſes, amount to 73,900 rix-dollars, or the ſum total of 1,168,200 rix-dollars.

The Ruſſian conſiſt of nine complete regiments, of ten ſquadrons each, beſides a battalion that was raiſed in 1798, conſiſting of five ſquadrons. A regiment of Huſſars coſts the Rate 137,000 rix-dollars, and the whole corps 1,811,500 rix-dollars.

The Tyrcaccyes were originally raiſed out of the Baſkians and Tartarian Pulks ; and, beſides ſabres and piſtols, are armed lances. Their annual expences amounts to 205,500 rix-dollars.

THE ARTILLERY.

Conſiſts of four regiments of field artillery, of 9,186 men ; one regiment of riding artillery, fifteen companies of garriſon artillery, two companies and a command of Pontoniers, four companies of Miners, and 13 Engineers.—Total 15,810 men.

The artillery in the Electorate of Saxony, Frederick Auguſtus of one large 24-pounder ; and the Elector George William, had at leaſt, in 1627, as well as king Frederick William, ſcarcely 300 artillerymen. The five and a half regiments coſt at preſent, yearly, 80,000 rix-dollars.

SUNDRY CORPS.

The Royal Cadets, into which 5-6-9, Nobles were received, from the year 1717, till 1796. The Inſtitute of Cadets at Pottſdam conſiſts of 48 ; the Cadetry Field Yagers, 122 ; the Invalids of the Guards at Weſter near Pottſdam, 525, three companies of the Royal Corps at Berlin, 652 ; ſeventeen companies of Invalids in the Provinces, 2,450 ; Officers of the Train and attendants, 84 ; foudry recruiting parties, ſupernumeraries, &c. 7,510 men.

The whole force of Pruſſia appears to be 270,000 men, to which are to be added three Field Marſhal Generals, viz. the Dukes of Brunſwick, Mollendorf, and the Elector of Heſſe ; ſeven Generals of Infantry, viz. Prince Ferdinand of Pruſſia, Prince George of Anhalt-Deſſau, Courbiere, Kalnein, Prince Hohenlohe, Knoblauch, and Pirch.

Generals of Cavalry ; Count Kalkreuth, Schulenburg, Kleiſtert, the Duke Eugene of Wirtemberg, the Duke of Saxe Weimar Kohler.

Lieutenant-Generals of Infantry, viz. Oeſtrich, Grolan, Prince of Orange, Count Laſſy, Merkatz, Reuſchin, Rutt, Prince Louis Ferdinand of Pruſſia, Eller, Rachel, Schmettau, Maudlen, Lanſich, Arnim, Count Wartenſleben, Reſtorff, Templehof, the Prince Prince of Heſſe, Seidlitz, Winning, Plotz, Frowerde, Kalkreuth, Seerſtien, Romberg, Thadden, Rouvet.

Lieutenant Generals of Cavalry : Prittwitz, Katte, Elſter, Bilmark, Brecher, Holzendorf, Brofewitz, Meuling, Count Hertzberg, L'Eſtocq, Balern ; 100 Majo-Generals, 183 Colonels, 62 Lieutenant-Colonels, and 666 Majors.

The troops of the firſt Elector of Brandenburg, upon an equal footing with the reſt of the German Princes, originally conſiſted of a life guard of 100 men ; but the Elector George William, in 1633, maintained 2000 men. The ſame year the Elector Frederick herſelf to 16,000. King Frederick William I. left his ſucceſſor, Frederick the Great, a ſtanding army of 76,000 men in the year 1740 ; and which, when Frederick the Second came to the Crown, was 100,000 ſtrong ; and has increaſed under the preſent Monarch to 270,000.

The ſupport of this army amounts to the annual ſum of 22 to 24 millions, about two thirds of the whole revenue ; and, according to the proviſion of the new ſyſtem throughout the Pruſſian Monarchy, about 6,000,000 men are ſubject to the conſcription, and 2,800,392 are free.

THE MILITARY FORCE OF SAXONY.

This army, in 1802, inclusive of the guards and 943 invalids, was 34,823 ſtrong ; the infantry, with the corps of cadets and the 9th regiment, conſiſted of 22,183 men ; the artillery, including 31 engineers and 51 penſioners 2,145 men. The yearly ſupport of each regiment of infantry amounts to 61,633 rix-dollars. The Officers conſiſt of five Generals of Infantry, two Lieutenant Generals of Cavalry, 62 of infantry, and twelve Major Generals.

THE MILITARY FORCE OF HESSE.

Conſiſted in 1804, of fifty four battalions and twenty-ſix ſquadrons. The infantry was compoſed of the Guard grenadiers, the Life and Grenadier Guards, viz. 6 regiments of infantry, one battalion of Fuſiliers, one of Yagers, five garriſon, and ſeven provincial regiments. The Cavalry, beſides the Life Guards and the regiment of Gens-d'Armes conſiſted of two regiments of Cuiraſſiers, three regiments of dragoons, and one of huſſars.

The artillery conſiſted of one corps, and one corps of riding artillery, exclusive of one battalion of invalids, one corps of Cadets, and the engineers, making a total of 16,000 men.

The Staff conſiſted of one General of Infantry, two of Cavalry, twelve Lieutenant Generals, thirteen Major Generals, twenty-five Colonels, and other Officers, ſeveral of whom received penſions. A Regiment of Infantry conſiſted of two battalions ; its full complement was 1300, but the regiments were ſeldom full.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith :—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty fixth day of December, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have tho't fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twenty-fixth day of December inftant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conftrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal confideration, the eafe and convenience of our loving fubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and confent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforefaid, hereby convoking, and by thefe prefents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the year of our Lord one thoufand eight hundred and feven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, for the Actual Difpatch of Public Buſineſs, there to take into confideration the ſtate and welfare of our faid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed. Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſeventh year of our reign.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING :

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, or may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt, to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty in its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov't.

By his Excellency's Command.

WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

LONDON, September 22.

Arrangements are underſtood to be in a ſtate of forwardneſs for the amicable adjuſtment of our differences with Pruſſia. The Pruſſian ports are expected to be opened immediately to our trade.

Rear Admiral Stirling has been ſent out to ſupercede Sir Home Popham. He ſailed from Plymouth ſome time ago. It is reported too, but we truſt the report is untrue, that Sir Home is coming home under arreſt.

The Gazette of Saturday night contains his Majeſty's Order in Council for opening a trade with Buenos Ayres, and its dependencies, according to the regulations in force between this country and its colonial poſſeſſions in the Weſt Indies and America. The judicious arrangement made by Sir Home Popham, for the reduction of the duties on imports, is confirmed, with the exception of German linens, which for the preſent remain ſubject to the duties formerly paid. We are happy to obſerve that the importation of ſlaves is totally prohibited. This prohibition, while truly gratifying to the friends of humanity, muſt eſſentially tend to the diſtreſs of the Spaniſh Government as of the great number of ſlaves imported into Buenos Ayres from Africa, the

at round by Cape
[illegible] gold and silver mines in Peru.

The Rofario and fome other of our cruizers, have lately been employed in examining all the enemy's ports from Ushant to Cape Ortegal, in confequence of information received by Government, that the enemy were bufily employed in naval arrangements along that coaft. By this furvey it has been afcertained, that the naval eftablifhments at Breft, L'Orient, Rochefort, &c. are precifely as they have been for fome time paft.

September 23.

The Expedition—The variety of thefe the mode of equipment of fome of them, and the term for which they are victually victualled, puts conjecture at defiance.—A great many flat bottomed boats have fent from the Downs, and moft of the tranfports have now one or two of them. The lateft report is, that the reinforcement going out to Buenos Ayres is to conſiſt of the 17th Light Dragoons, "the brave Death or Glory regiment," General De Lancey's regiment; of the 18 battalion of the 5th, General England's regiment, and of the 88th, Connaughs Rangers, General Reid's regiment. The Ardent, of 64 guns, and the Charwell floop, to convoy them immediately.

We have juft learned, that an expedition will fhortly be fent out to the Weft Indies.

With fincere pleafure we learn, that rewards and honors are to be conferred on Sir Home Popham and Major-General Beresford.

Captain Donelly has been promoted from the Narciſſus to the Ardent line of battle fhip.

On Sunday the tranſports with the following regiments failed from Portfmouth:—

40th Regiment, 1ſt battalion; 40th do. 2d battalion; 14th ditto. 2d battalion; 5th German Legion, detachment; 6th German Legion, detachment; 7th ditto. whole regiment; 8th ditto. whole regiment.

Part of the 9th Dragoons marched through Dover yeſterday from Deal, on their way to Portſmouth, where they are to be embarked for foreign ſervice.

Major General Sir Arthur Wellefly and Sir George Prevoſt will, it is faid, get the commands of ſeparate expeditions.

The Veteran, Jerome Bonaparte's ſhip, is hauled into the inner harbor, at Concarneau, and moored head and ſtern to the ſhore, there not being room for her to ſwing: her guns are taken out to make batteries to protect her even there, and her ſails unbent, fo apprehenſive are they of a viſit from ſome of our ſhips.

September 25.

We underſtand that the following are the new arrangements which are agreed upon in conſequence of the lamented death of Mr. Fox:

Earl Fitzwilliam, from indiſpoſition, wiſhes to retire from the ſituation, (which requires regular attendance) of Lord Preſident, but to retain his ſeat in the Cabinet.

Lord Sidmouth, to be Preſident.

Lord Holland, to be Lord Privy Seal.

Lord Howick to be Secretary of State for the Foreign Department.

Mr. Thomas Grenville, to be firſt Lord of the Admiralty.

Mr. Tierney, to be Preſident of the Board of Controul.

Mr. Bragge Bathurſt to be maſter of the Mint, vice Lord Charles Spencer.

Mr. Whitebread will alſo be ſpeedily called into office, but the arrangement for that purpoſe is not yet matured.

We can now add, with the utmoſt confidence, that Lord Grenville proceeded on Monday morning to Windſor, to take the King's pleaſure upon the above nominations, all of which it is preſumed will be confirmed at the Privy Council held this day.

A letter which we have received from an officer in the Mediterranean, by the Camel, arrived on Sunday at Spithead, ſtates the enemy's force as follows; at Cadiz, ready for ſea, Spaniſh, 4 three deckers, and 6 two deckers; French 5 two deckers, and 1 Frigate—total, ready for ſea, 12 fail of the line and one frigate; ſitting, 2 two deckers, and 6 line of battle ſhips and 1 frigate—total, in preparation, 7 fail of the line and 2 frigates. At Carthagena, 2 three deckers, 6 two deckers, two frigates and one corvette, ready for ſea. At Toulon, 3 two deckers 3 frigates and 2 corvettes. At Venice, ſitting, 2 two deckers, one frigate, 8 corvettes, 2 galliots, and about 120 gun boats.

The Hamburgh Mail, due on Sunday, arrived laſt night, with letters and papers to the 18 inſt. Hoſtilities had not commenced, at that time, between France and Pruſſia; but the military movements were continued on both ſides with increaſed activity. The Ruſſian troops in the amount of 90,000 men are ſaid to have arrived on the frontiers of Siteſia; and on the other hand the French troops in Germany are all in motion; thoſe which were lately encamped near Paris are ſuppoſed to be deſtined for Holland. A letter from Hamburgh of the 20th of laſt month, ſays, that their Rebels and Pruſſian Majeſties, the Archduke Charles, and the Grand Duke Conſtantine, are expected at Dreſden.—Bonaparte was to proceed to Duſſeldorf and Cologne. The French miniſter, Laforeſt, ſtill continues at Berlin on the 27th laſt month, but every thing was prepared for his departure.

At twelve o'clock, this day, the Conſols were 60 3-4, and Omnium 3 1-2, being a fall of about 3 per cent. This deſcription is not great when we conſider the cauſe. The fall would probably have been more conſiderable, but the reſult been for ſome time anticipated in the laſt mentioned circles.

One of the expeditions now fitting out, is ſaid to be deſtined againſt Vera Cruz.

It is a curious circumſtance, though not yet obſerved by any of the Newspapers, that Bonaparte left Paris to put himſelf at the head of his army the very ſame day this year, that he departed from his capital laſt year to march againſt the Auſtrians, namely on the 29th of September. Whether the reſult of the war will be as ſatisfactory for Pruſſia as it was then for Auſtria, a very ſhort period will determine; but if Bonaparte anticipated the ſame ſucceſs, by chooſing the ſame day for his departure, and he will no doubt ſhare the encouragement to his ſoldiers, as if omnious of their good fortune.

Miniſters ſtate that Lord Lauderdale was ordered to quit Paris—they ſay that he applied for his paſſports in conſequence of the French Government rejecting or evading the terms on which he was inſtructed to treat. After conſiderable delicacy his Lordſhip obtained his paſſports, and was to ſet off from Paris yeſterday.

From all quarters we have heard that the news of the rupture of the Negociation has occaſioned the greateſt ſatisfaction. The Mail conſiſted no communicating the intelligence to the villages as they paſſed along on Wedneſday evening in various directions, were cheered by the inhabitants with ſhouts of applauſe; and the general cry was, "Eternal War, rather than a diſhonourable Peace!"

Bonaparte left Mentz on the 18 inſtant, for Wurtzburgh. The Pariſh army according to Paris papers which have been received to the 12th, would be aſſembled between Wurtzburgh and Schweinfort by the 4th. The accounts from the different parts of Germany would induce us to believe that Bonaparte was determined to bring the whole maſs of his force to bear at once againſt Pruſſia. Such a diviſion which was on the Iſen, is ſaid to have been ordered to the Upper Palatine, and it is aſſumed, that once French regiment will be left in Swabia or Bavaria.

From the circumſtance of the French troops drawing in ſuch force towards Schweinfort it is evident that Bonaparte means to commence the campaign by an irruption into Saxony, not into Heſſe. It is ſaid that he will enter Saxony on the fourth and on the fifth week. Part of his army will advance between Saxe and Coburg and Saxe Meinungen, and another part will occupy Baireuth, and proceed by the Voigtland. It ſhould ſeem as Bonaparte meant to attack at the ſame time the main army under the Duke of Brunſwick, and the troops under General Hohenlohe, we are not able to ſate with perfect accuracy what are the poſitions of the Pruſſian troops. The head quarters were at Naumburgh on the 29th ult. the date of the laſt accounts. Hohenlohe is advancing to Hoff.

It is probable that hoſtilities have commenced before this time. They began laſt year on the 7th October; they may begin on the ſame day this.

A Ruſſian ſquadron of four ſail of the line, three frigates and a ſloop, arrived at Portſmouth yeſterday to take in proviſions. It is bound to the Mediterranean, and has about 4000 troops on board.

A heavy firing was heard at Deal and Dover on Wedneſday night and yeſterday morning, in the direction of Boulogne. It is ſuppoſed to proceed from an attempt of our cruizers to let fire to the flotilla by means of rockets of an enormous ſize diſcharged from veſſels of a light draught of water, upon the principle of bombs thrown from a mortar battery.

The ſucceſs of Miranda's expedition againſt the Caracas, is ſo much calculated upon, that ſeveral ſhips are already fitting out for that deſtination. Notice of the act that is to fall was given yeſterday at Lloyd's.

Anecdote of Mr. Fox.—It was in the interval between the riot and ſecond operation, that he expreſſed his conviction that his diſeaſe would terminate fatally. Lord —— ſaid, that he muſt ſpeak the Chriſtmas to the country, and that he had taken the liberty to include Mr. Fox in it without his knowledge. But it will be a new ſcene, Sir, ſaid he, and I think you will approve of it. I ſhall indeed be in a new ſcene by Chriſtmas next, ſaid Mr. Fox. "My Lord, what do you think of the ſtate of the foul after death?" Lord —— confeſſed he could believe by the exerciſe of reaſon which Mr. Fox had given to the converſation, no ſatisfactory reply. Mr. Fox continued—"That is an example, I am determined. The conſciouſneſs of Deity is a proof that ſome entity why not therefore the ſame man ſhall ſtand in exiſtence as the ſoul exiſts, by its nature it may exiſt forever. I ſhould have preſerved in this immortality of the ſoul, that Chriſtianity had never exiſted; but how it acts as impreſſed from the body, is beyond my capacity as judgement. —That, however, I don't know by reaſon Chriſtianity." Mrs. Fox here took his hand and wept. Mr. Fox was much moved—"I am happy," ſaid he, "full of confidence, I may ſay of certainty."—Lon. Pap.

A ginger-bread baker at Bungay, in Suffolk, who was in the habit of attending all the fairs in that neighbourhood, for the purpoſe of ſelling gingerbreadnuts and amuſing the people with mufic, which he played on a fiddle to attract them to his ſtall, his penury being affected with a cough, a perſon at Redmarſh, in the ſame county, adviſed him to give the animal a mixture of vinegar and honey, which, in a ſhort time, had the deſired effect of reſtoring the donkey to health. The baker, exulting on the rapid cure wrought on the animal, concluded that it might produce as falutary an effect on human lungs—therefore determined to give it a trial, under the name of the Vegetable Balſam, and commenced advertiſing it at a guinea per bottle, as a certain cure for coughs, colds, &c. &c. and ſtrongs to relate, the efficacy of this medicine (merely ſimple enough!) was ſoon atteſted by perſons, from whoſe elevated ſituations in life, one might ſuppoſe, would have known better. He ſoon gave up ginger-bread baking and fiddling, for the more lucrative, but leſs honourable, purſuit of ſelling honey and vinegar at a guinea a phial, by which he amaſſed a conſiderable fortune, which ſoon raiſed him to the diſtinguiſhed honour of a Doctor of Phyſic, although perfectly ignorant of pharmacy, anatomy and ſurgery.

LONDON, October 3.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE PRUSSIAN, SAXON AND RUSSIAN FORCES.

At a moment when the political horizon is again overcaſt, and every thing ſeems to announce the commencement of a formidable conflict, a ſketch of the reſpective forces of Pruſſia, Saxony, and Heſſe, cannot be unpleaſant to our readers.

MILITARY FORCE OF PRUSSIA.

Guards, 31,174, viz.

A Regiment	1155
Grenadier Guards	1150
Life Guards	605
Corps not yet arranged	750

INFANTRY, 175,307, viz.

	Reg.	Bat.	Men.
Muſketeers and Grenadiers	58	116	126,768
Fuſileers	—	24	21,456
Field Yagers	1	3	2,087
Third Battalions	—	58	25,496

The whole of the Infantry are divided under what are termed the following inſpections, viz. Pottſdam, Berlin, Mark, Magdeburg, Pomerania; Eaſt, Weſt, and South Pruſſia; Warſaw; Upper and Lower Silefia, Weſtphalia, and Franconia.

A regular regiment conſiſts of three battalions, 2,357 ſtrong. The grenadiers of two regiments are reckoned together. Each regiment of infantry coſts the ſtate annually 115,800 rix-dollars; conſequently, 58 regiments require the ſum of 6,716,400 rix-dollars.

The twenty-four battalions of Fuſiliers, which are diſtributed among the eight brigades of Magdeburg, Weſtphalia, firſt and ſecond of Eaſt Pruſſia, firſt and ſecond of Warſaw, Upper and Lower Silefia, coſt the annual ſum of 946,000 rix-dollars. They have partly their own proper cantonments.

The regiment of Field Yagers, which in 1740 originally conſiſted of 68 men, has obtained its preſent complement, from the year 1793 to 1802.

CAVALRY, 40,474 Men.

Regiment.	Men.	Horſes
Cuiraſſiers 12	10,416	9,216
Dragoons 14	12,880	12,040
Huſſars 9-1 Bat.	16,658	16,056
Yagers 1-1 Bat.	1,577	1,161

Each of theſe regiments coſts, exclſively of the horſes, the annual ſum of 79,000 rix-dollars; 12 regiments, of courſe, amount to 948,000 rix-dollars.

Relative to the 14 regiments of dragoons, reckoning five ſquadrons to a regiment, their annual expences, exclſive of the horſes, amount to 73,000 rix-dollars, or the ſum total of 1,168,000 rix-dollars.

The Pruſſian conſiſt of nine cuiraſſier regiments, of ten ſquadrons each, beſides a battalion that was raiſed in 1798, conſiſting of five ſquadrons. A regiment of Huſſars coſts the ſtate 137,000 rix-dollars, and the whole corps 1,811,500 rix-dollars.

The Yowarczys were originally raiſed out of the Bohemian and Tartarian Pulks; and, beſides ſabres and piſtols, are armed lances. Their annual expences amount to 205,500 rix-dollars.

THE ARTILLERY.

Conſiſts of four regiments of field artillery, of 1,186 men to a regiment of riding artillery, fifteen companies of garriſon artillery, two companies and a company of Pontoneers, four companies of Miners, and 89 Engineers.—Total 13,210 men.

For artillery in the Electo[illegible] of Saxony, Frederick Lewis, of one large 24-pounder; and the Elector George William, had at firſt, in 1827, as well as King Frederick William, fourteen 350 artilleriſts. The four and a half regiments cant at preſent, yearly, 750,000 rix-dollars.

SUNDRY CORPS.

The Royal Cadets, into which 5 or 9, Nobles were received, from the year 1717, till 1796. The Inſtitute of Cadets at Potſdam conſiſts of 48; the Cavalry Field Yagers, 122; the Invalids of the Guards at Weſter near Potſdam, 543; three companies of the Royal Corps at Berlin, 892; ſeventeen companies of Invalids, in the Provinces, 2,430; Officers of the Train and attendants, 84; Sundry recruiting parties, Yagers ſervers, &c. 7,510 men.

The whole force of Pruſſia appears to be 250,000 men, to which are to be added three Field Marſhal Generals, viz. the Dukes of Brunſwick, Mollendorf, and the Count de Hoditz; ſeven Generals of Infantry, viz. Prince Ferdinand of Pruſſia, Prince George of Heſſe Darmſtadt, Cocherets, Kotzeg, Prince Hohenlohe, Kleiſt, and Pirch.

Generals of Cavalry: Count Kalkreuth, Schulenburg, Rohrary, the Duke Eugene of Wirtemberg, the Duke of Saxe Weimar Kohler.

Lieutenant-Generals of Infantry, viz. Owſtein, Courbiere, Prince of Orange, Count Lacy, Meyerinck, Rauch, Prince Louis Ferdinand of Pruſſia, Hake, Richel, Schmettau, Maudfeu, Lanſich, Arnim, Count Wartenſleben, Reipartz, Treuenfels, the Prince Princes of Heſſe, Selbers, Winning, Plato, Grawerde, Kalkreuth, Stenſlen, Romberg, Theoden, Borſtell.

Lieutenant Generals of Cavalry: Prittwitz, Katte, Blumy, Bilnaek, Bischer, Holzendorf, Brofewitz, Blumig, Count Herzberg, L'Eſtocq, Bevern; 108 Major-Generals, 183 Colonels, 62 Lieutenant-Colonels, and 666 Majors.

The troops of the firſt Electors of Brandenburg, were the firſt coming with the reſt of the German Empire originally conſiſted of a life guard of 100 men; and that Elector George William, in 1627, maintained 400 more. Theſe were by the Elector Frederick raiſed to 30,000. King Frederick William I. left to Succeſſor, Frederick the Great, a ſtanding army of 76,000 men in the year 1740; and which, when Frederick the Second came to the Crown, was 200,000 ſtrong; and has increaſed under the preſent Monarch to 250,000.

The ſupport of this army amounts to the annual ſum of 22 to 24 millions, about two thirds of the whole revenue; and, according to the proviſo of the new ſyſtem throughout the Pruſſian Monarchy, about 6,000,000 men are ſubject to the conſcription, and 2,800,000 are ſubject to the conſcription, and 2,800,000 are ſubject to the conſcription, and

THE MILITARY FORCE OF SAXONY.

The army, in 1802, inclufive of the guards and 911 invalids, was 34,013 ſtrong; the invalids, with the corps of cadets and the guards, conſiſted of 22,183 men; the artillery, including 31 engineers and 58 pioneers 2,548 men. The yearly ſupport of each regiment of infantry amounts to 61,633 rix-dollars. The officers conſiſt of five Generals of Infantry, two Lieutenant Generals of Cavalry, ſix of infantry, and twelve Major Generals.

THE MILITARY FORCE OF HESSE.

Conſiſts in 1804, of fifty four battalions and twenty-ſix ſquadrons. The infantry was compoſed of the Body guards, the Life and Grenadier Guards, ſix regiments of infantry, one battalion of Fuſiliers, one of Yagers, five garriſon, and ſeven provincial regiments.

The Cavalry, beſides the Life Guards and the regiment of Grand-Arms conſiſted of two regiments of Dragoons, three regiments of dragoons, and one of huſſars.

The artillery conſiſted of one corps, and one corps of riding artillery, exclſive of one battalion of invaliſs, one corps of Cadets, and the engineers, making a total of 16,000 men.

The Staff conſiſted of one General of Infantry, two of Cavalry, twelve Lieutenant Generals, thirteen Major Generals, twenty five Colonels, and other Officers, ſeveral of whom received penſion. A Regiment of Infantry conſiſted of two battalions; its full complement was 1300, but the ſegiments were ſeldom full.

From the London Gazette, Sept. 4.

At the Court at the Queen's Palace, the 18 of October, 1806, preſent, the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty in Council.

Whereas it has been repreſented to his Majeſty, that, over and above the royal duties, and the conſulate or municipal duties, payable upon divers articles exported from the city, town, and forteſs of Buenos Ayres, and its dependencies, including therein all and every the territories belonging to, or forming a part of, the Government of the ſame, a duty of two reals upon each ox hide, and of one real upon each horſe hide, exported, was levied and paid during the time the ſaid city, town, and forteſs of Buenos Ayres, and its dependencies, were under the Spaniſh government: And whereas the Commander of his Majeſty's forces, to whom the ſaid city, town, and forteſs have intermedered, has thought fit, until his Majeſty's pleaſure ſhould be known, to reduce the ſaid additional duty to one real upon each ox hide, and to make a proportionate reduction of the duty payable upon each horſe hide exported; his Majeſty is thereupon to order and declare, that the ſaid reduced duties, and no other, ſhall until the further ſignification of his Majeſty's pleaſure, continue to be paid upon each ox hide and horſe hide exported as aforeſaid, in Britiſh ſhips, owned by his Majeſty's ſubjects, and navigated according to law; or in the ſhips bona fide belonging to any of the ſubjects or native inhabitants of the ſaid city, town, and territories, ſuch native Inhabitants being peaceably reſident within the ſame, and under the obedience of his Majeſty's Government there. And the Right Honorable the Lords Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Treaſury, and the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, are to give the neceſſary directions herein as to them may reſpectively appertain.

W. FAWKENER.

At the Court at the Queen's Palace, the 18 of October 1806. Preſent, the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty in Council.

It is this day ordered by his Majeſty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, that horſes, mules, aſſes, neat cattle, ſheep, hogs, poultry, and every other ſpecies of live ſtock, and live proviſions, be added to the articles which his Majeſty by his order in Council of the 17th of laſt month, has authoriſed the Governors, and Lieutenant Governors of his Majeſty's Iſlands and Colonies in the Weſt Indies (in which deſcription the Bahama Iſlands and the Bermuda or Somer's Iſlands are included) and of any lands or territories on the Continent of South America to his Majeſty belonging, to permit to be imported into the ſaid Iſlands, Colonies, Lands and Territories, reſpectively; and that the ſaid additional articles be accordingly permitted to be ſo imported, in the manner, for the time, and under the terms and conditions mentioned in the ſaid order.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legiſlative Counſellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes of our ſaid Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty ſixth day of December, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have thought fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our ſaid Provincial Parliament until the twenty-ſixth day of December inſtant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and conſtrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal conſideration, the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and conſent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſeven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, for the Actual Diſpatch of Public Buſineſs, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our ſaid Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may ſeem neceſſary. Herein fail not.

IN Teſtimony whereof, WE have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and ſix, and forty-ſeventh year of our reign.

F. G.

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the inſertion of their Names on the U. E. Liſt, or have been ſuſpended from the ſame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beſtowed by His Majeſty on that meritorious claſs of ſubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perſons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alſo reſident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have ſince died without having their Names inſerted on that Liſt, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwiſe would have derived from His Majeſty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforeſaid, ſolicitous to promote the welfare, and happineſs, of His Majeſty's Subjects of every deſcription in this Province, more eſpecially of thoſe who have ſo ſtrongly manifeſted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majeſty; and alſo ſolicitous that the Children of ſuch perſons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons who were reſident in the Britiſh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of ſeparation in the year 1783, and who have reſided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1793, and have continued to reſide therein ſince that period, or may have been ſuſpended from the U. E. Liſt, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the ſatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inſerted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and conſent, further notify and declare, that the Names of ſuch perſons as are now deceaſed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Liſt, and who were alſo reſident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alſo inſerted in that Liſt, to the end that the Children of ſuch Loyal and faithful ſubjects may be made partakers of His Majeſty's Bounty to its fulleſt extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31ſt day of October, in the 47th year of His Majeſty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thouſand eight hundred and ſix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

By his Excellency's Command,
WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

BRITISH MANIFESTO, on the Failure of the Negotiations with France.

DECLARATION.

The negociations in which his Majeſty has been engaged with France having terminated unſucceſsfully, his Majeſty thinks proper to make this public Declaration to his ſubjects and to Europe, of the circumſtances which have led to an iſſue which his majeſty deeply regrets. He has no object nearer to his heart than the concluſion of a ſecure and permanent peace. He laments the continuance of a war affecting the happineſs of ſo many nations, and which even amidſt all the ſucceſſes that attend his arms, is ſo burthenſome to his faithful and affectionate people. But he is confident that there can ariſe on this occaſion no other ſentiment, either in his own dominions, or in any part of Europe, than that of an increaſed conviction, that the reſtoration of general tranquility is retarded only by the injuſtice and ambition of the enemy.

The French government, unſatisfied with its immenſe acquiſitions on the Continent, ſtill openly perſeveres in a ſyſtem deſtructive of the independence of every other power. War is purſued not for ſecurity, but for conqueſt; and negociations for peace appear to be entered into for no other object, than that of deluding the neighbouring powers into a state of false security, while France is herself preparing, arranging and executing her unremitted projects of encroachment and aggression.

Her conduct in the recent discussions has afforded but too many proofs of this disposition.

The negociation originated in an offer made by the French government of treating for peace on the basis of actual possession, which was stated to admit of mutual compensation; and a distinct assurance was added, that his Majesty's German dominions which had been attacked without even the pretence of any cause of hostility, should be restored.

Such a proposal appeared to his Majesty to afford a just foundation for negociating; it was therefore accepted with this reserve, that the negociation should be conducted by his Majesty in concert with his allies.

During their proceedings, a minister sent by the Emperor of Russia, to treat for the same important object, in concert with his Majesty's government, was induced, by the artifices of the enemy, to sign a separate treaty, on terms equally repugnant to the honor and interests of his Imperial Majesty.

No sooner had this base been mutually admitted, than it was departed from by the enemy, and that too in points of so great importance as to call for an immediate declaration on the part of his Majesty, that unless the principles proposed by France herself were adhered to, the communication which had been opened between the two Governments must at once be closed.

This produced new professions of the disposition of France to make considerable sacrifices for the attainment of peace, if the discussions were suffered to proceed; at the same time that a difficulty was started on account of the want of full powers in the person intrusted by his Majesty with this communication. Steps were thereupon taken by his Majesty for opening a regular negociation by Ministers duly authorised, in order to ascertain, in a manner the most satisfactory and authentic, whether peace could be obtained on terms honorable to the King and his Allies, and consistent with the general security of Europe.

Unmoved by this unexpected event, the King continued to negociate precisely on the same principles as before. He relied, with a confidence which experience has amply justified, on the good faith and steadiness of an Ally, in concert with whom he had begun to treat, and whose interest he had maintained throughout with the same firmness as his own.

The French government, on the contrary, elated by this advantage, of which it boasted as equal in importance to the most decisive victory, departed in every conference more and more widely from its own offers and engagements. Not only did it take upon itself to change at its own will the basis of the negociation with Great Britain, but it violated, in points still more important, every principle of good faith with Russia. The chief inducement offered to that power as the price of all the sacrifices extorted from her Minister, had been the preservation of Germany.—Yet, before the decision of Russia on this treaty could be known, France had already annihilated the whole of the constitution of the Germanic empire; had reduced under her own yoke a large proportion of the states and provinces of Germany; and not content with this open contempt of obligations so recently contracted, had at the same time instigated the Porte to measures directly subversive of her subsisting engagements with Russia.

While such conduct was pursued towards his Majesty, towards his allies, & towards all independent powers, there appeared so little hope of any favorable issue to the negociation, that his Majesty's Plenipotentiaries demanded their passports to return to England.

This demand was at first eluded by an unusual and unexplained delay; and the French Government afterwards, by some material concessions, accompanied with intimations that others of still greater consequence might be the result of further discussion, procured a renewal of the conference, which were protracted from day to day, till at length it was announced at Paris that the Emperor of Russia had indignantly rejected the unauthorised and separate treaty signed by his minister.

In consequence of this important event, the strongest assurances were given to his majesty's minister, that France was now preparing to make sacrifices to a great extent, in order, by securing peace with Great Britain, to re-establish the tranquility of the world.

The objects of these assurances appeared, however, to be, that of engaging his Majesty in a separate Negociation, to the exclusion of his Allies; a proposal which his Majesty had rejected in the outset, and which he could still less admit of at a time when the conduct of Russia had imposed on him an increased obligation not to separate his interests from those of so faithful an Ally. To these insidious overtures, his Majesty steadily refused to listen; but he took the most effectual method to avoid all appearance of delay, and to accelerate, if possible, the favourable issue of the Negociation. The confidential intercourse which he had constantly maintained with Prussia, enabled his Majesty to specify the terms on which peace with that power might be obtained; and his Minister was accordingly instructed to state to France, in addition to his own demands, those of his Ally, to reduce them into distinct articles, and even to conclude on these grounds a provisional treaty to take effect whenever Russia should signify her accession.

This form of negociating was, after some objection, acceded to by France. Terms were now offered to his Majesty more nearly approaching than before to the original basis of negociation, but these were still far short of what his Majesty had uniformly insisted on, and was now more than ever entitled to expect; and the decisive rejection of the just demands of Prussia, as well as of the conditions proposed by his Majesty in behalf of his other allies, left to his Majesty no other course than that of ordering his Minister to terminate the discussion and return to England.

The foregoing short and simple exposition of facts stands in need of no comment. The first overtures which led to negociation were made by the enemy, and they were accepted by his Majesty in the sincerest spirit of peace. Every opening which seemed to afford the most distant prospect of accommodation has been anxiously embraced, nor was the Negociation finally broken off while any hope of a favourable issue could be entertained. His Majesty's demands were uniformly just and reasonable; directed to no other object of personal aggrandizement, but to such only as were indispensably required by the honor of his crown, his engagements to his allies, and a due consideration of the general interests of Europe.

It is with heartfelt concern that his Majesty contemplates the continuance of those evils always inseparable from a state of war; but it is with his enemies that this awful responsibility rests; and for the issue of the contest his Majesty trusts, with confidence, to the justice of his cause; to the resources and bravery of his people; to the fidelity of his allies; and, above all, to the protection and support of Divine Providence.

In contributing to the great efforts which such a contest must unavoidably require, his faithful and affectionate subjects will not forget that all their dearest interests are at stake; that no sacrifices they can be called upon to make, are to be compared with the certain disgrace and ruin of yielding to the injurious pretensions of the enemy; that with the inviolable maintenance of the good faith and public honor of their country, its prosperity, its strength, and its independance, are essentially connected; and that, in asserting the rights and upholding the dignity of the British empire, they defend the most powerful bulwark of the liberties of mankind.

LONDON, Oct. 14.

We have already announced the arrival of Lord Lauderdale in town. He left Paris on Thursday afternoon, and slept that night at Chantilly. It is to be observed that the Noble Lord asked for passports at the time the Emperor set out for the army, and from that moment all negociation ceased. Passports were not refused, but they were not granted; and it seems obvious that it was the policy of the French Emperor to endeavour to gain time, in the hope of making a compromise with the King of Prussia, and to keep the English Minister at Paris as a color to his intrigue. It turned out, however, that powers had been left with Champagny at Paris, to grant passports to his Lordship, should he apply for them—a circumstance of which neither his Lordship nor the British Government had any information; upon being officially applied for, however, they were immediately obtained as above, and Lord Lauderdale quitted Paris in twenty-four hours afterwards.

In the interim, all hopes of peace having vanished, our Government had issued orders for the experiment to be made upon Boulogne, which was attempted last Wednesday night—to prevent the French from marching all their troops from the coast, as they did last year. This is a wise measure and we believe will be persevered in, and we have every hope, that in the end the destruction of the flotilla will be effected.

The impression which this unexpected attack made upon the enemy may be judged by the effects. When Mr. Ross, the messenger, arrived on Tuesday with dispatches for Lord Lauderdale, it was with the utmost difficulty that he could obtain permission to land. He was conveyed in a close shut cabriolet to a Hotel, and was detained the whole day at Boulogne. At night he was allowed to proceed; and he met Lord Lauderdale at Amiens, where his Lordship slept on Friday night. The noble Lord dispatched Mr. Scott before him, to apprise Ministers of his having set out; but on his arrival at Saumur (the second post on this side Montreuil) Mr. Scott was put under arrest by the gens d'armes, who detained him until Lord Lauderdale and Suite came up; a troop of horse then conducted them to Boulogne. An offices even took a seat in the Noble Lord's carriage. At Boulogne he slept on Saturday night, and on Sunday forenoon he and his suite were marched through a double file of musqueteers to the boats in which they embarked, to be put on board the Clyde frigate. All the people of Boulogne turned out to behold the march of the English Ambassador, and though it seemed to be the earnest desire of General le Brun, the Commander in Chief, to shew disrespect to the Noble Earl, there was nothing but sorrow and disappointment at the failure of the negociation marked on the faces of the spectators. By sending Lord Lauderdale to Paris, Ministers have given a convincing proof to the whole world how seriously they were disposed for peace—but after the issue which we have seen, we should consider it as degrading to the country ever again to send a negociator to the enemy's capital, even if solicited so to do in the most pressing manner.

BATTLE IN ITALY.

A Gentleman arrived in Leghorn, by the latest arrivals from the Continent, states, that prior to his departure, (we have not been able to ascertain the precise date, but know that it is recent) accounts had reached that city from Naples, of great and continued disasters having befallen the French troops in Calabria.

It was fully understood there, that a second general engagement had taken place, in which the French were completely defeated. General Jourdan is stated to have been killed by a musket shot discharged from a tree by a Calabrian. Massina is also said to have been dangerously wounded, and most of the officers of rank either killed or wounded. This victory, though glorious, was purchased with the loss of many valuable lives.

After this sanguinary affair, the remainder of the French fell back upon Naples; and it was even said that they had quitted that city, and had sought shelter in the Roman territory.

We also learn, that a respectable Banking house in the City received a letter from Vienna, dated the 24th of September, which states, that intelligence had been received there of the total dispersion of the French troops in Calabria on the 22d August, when most of the officers of rank were killed prior to the flight of the French. This decisive blow is said to have been given by an armed force of insurgents headed by a woman of the name of Rossi, whose husband was inhumanly butchered by the French, for being inimical to the Usurper's Government. This formidable force call themselves the "Army of Vengeance." Joseph Bonaparte, the account states, fled to Florence.

October, 16.

Yesterday evening one of the hottest presses for seamen ever known took place on the River and in the neighbourhood. Two receiving ships came up abreast of the Tower. Every thing shews that the most extensive and energetic system of operations will be carried on, since the enemy have left us no alternative but a vigorous prosecution of the war.

The transports with troops on board for Buenos Ayres, sailed on Friday with a fair wind, and by this time, we have no doubt, are clear of the Channel.

The ships proceeding with the two armies to South America, are the Ardent, of 64 guns, the Unicorn, Nereid, Thisbe, and Daphne frigates, and the Pheasant and Charwell sloops; and it is not improbable, but that Sir Samuel Hood, who has been appointed to succeed Sir Home Popham, may proceed with them in a 74.

Great preparations are making to attack the flotilla at Boulogne.

We have just heard that another expedition of 4000 men is immediately to be formed, and will be sent off with dispatch.

Baron Jacobi, the Prussian Minister, has arrived here; and entered on the duties of his mission.

Lord Holland has been appointed to the Privy Seal, vice Lord Sidmouth, resigned.

Lord Gower has been appointed on a foreign diplomatic mission: it is supposed he is going to Vienna.

A new creation of Peers is now a measure completely decided upon. Several names are mentioned, but their we decline to state at present, as in a day or two we hope to present our readers with a correct list.

BERLIN, Oct. 7.

Besides the 80,000 Russians which are on their march for Germany, twenty regiments of Cossacs have received orders to march for the same country.

LEIPSIC, Oct. 4.

We learn, that two Russian columns, each of 50,000 men, are in full march, one through Warsaw to Silesia, under the conduct of the Prussian General Chlehowski, he being Commissary for the purpose.—The second army passes through Lithuania and Eastern Prussia. The Russians have raised a great magazine at Libau, by which it is presumed a third Russian army will arrive.

By recent intelligence from Dublin, we believe, that an appointment has taken place which marks the sentiments of administration to the Roman Catholics. A very high and lucrative office, that of Commissioner of Excise, has been bestowed upon Mr. Terry of Cork, a gentleman of that persuasion.

TRANSLATED FROM GERMAN PAPERS.

Extract of a letter from Berlin, dated 14th October.

The following details, furnish some further particulars respecting the late engagement, in which our ever to be lamented Prince Louis fell while fighting for his country.

Prince Louis commanded the van of the corps of Prince Hohenlohe. The latter ordered him to march to Rudolphstadt with 6 or 7000 men, in order to assist general Tauenzien, who was stationed at Hoff, to form a junction with the grand Prussian army.—This the Prince accomplished on the 8th inst. On his crossing the Saal between Rudolphstadt and Saalfeld, he fell upon a corps of 5000 French troops who wanted to dispute his passage, but who soon were compelled to give way. Soon after the whole of Bernadotte's army, consisting of 30,000 men, came up and attacked our small corps with great impetuosity, which disproportionate contest obliged our troops to retreat, until we reached the river Saal, but not till we had withstood the superior force of the enemy for 7 hours. Our loss consisted of 1500 men, and that of the enemy is more considerable.—What renders our loss more afflicting, is the death of Prince Louis, who displayed the greatest courage and who received two pistol balls through his head, while encouraging his troops, who gallantly withstood the enraged enemy with their bayonets.

Prince Louis seems to have had some prediction of his fate previous to his leaving the capital, which he mentioned to his friends, and which induced him to make his will.

It is said that 60 of the enemies chasseurs have formally protested to our Magazines of Naumburg and set fire to some of them.

According to accounts from Breslau, quarters have been bespoke there, for 80,000 Russians, besides 30,000 expected from Ralisch, in Poland.

To the Independent and Respectable ELECTORS of the COUNTY of DURHAM, the East Riding of the COUNTY of YORK, and the COUNTY of SIMCOE, who honored me with their Support at the late ELECTION.

GENTLEMEN,

PERMIT me to return you my most sincere and grateful Thanks, for your exertions in my behalf in the late Contest; exertions as honorable to you as flattering to me; although your efforts have not, on this occasion, obtained their merited success, I pledge myself to pursue my endeavours, where I hope and have a confidence of attaining the object of your wishes.

You went to the Hustings, Gentlemen, under the Banners of Liberty, Loyalty and Union, with hearts animated with pure love of KING and CONSTITUTION, and many of you have proved your attachment thereto by shedding your blood in their support; but your opponents were preceded by the Standard of Discord, Anarchy and Rebellion, which in another part of the Empire had led thousands to a premature Death, and many who escaped the horrid carnage of the field, expiated their Treasons, in the vain attempt to sever the Crown from the Harp, by an ignominious exit at the Gallows, and their heads were affixed as public Spectacles, to warn the deluded; but Charity and the Honor of this Country impels me to hope it was only the incautious Indiscretion of the unthinking.

I have also to return my Thanks to many, who on account of the friends of my offering myself as a Candidate, had so far previously engaged themselves as not to be able to interest with confidence, though I had their warmest wishes, I could not avail myself of their Support.

Persevere, my friends, in your attachment to your King, maintain the good Order you have been accustomed to, pursue your industry, and cherish your domestic comforts; follow the dictates of reason but be not deluded by discontented Demagogues and when other parts of the world may be defeated by the ravages of war, or agitated by internal Commotion, you will be tranquil and secure.

I am, Gentlemen, with gratitude and respect, your faithful humble Servant,

THOMAS B. GOUGH.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Efquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers perfons who were refident in the Britifh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of feparation in the year 1783, and who have refided in this Province on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to refide therein fince that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the infertion of their Names on the U. E. Lift, or have been fufpended from the fame, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be beftowed by His Majefty on that meritorious clafs of fubjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other perfons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were alfo refident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798; but have fince died without having their Names inferted on that Lift, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwife would have derived from His Majefty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforefaid, folicitous to promote the welfare, and happineis, of His Majefty's Subjects of every defcription in this Province, more efpecially of thofe who have fo ftrongly manifefted their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majefty; and alfo folicitous that the Children of fuch perfons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Lift, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers; Do, by and with the advice and confent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of fuch perfons who were refident in the Britifh Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of feparation in the year 1783, and who have refided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to refide therein fince that period, or may have been fufpended from the U. E. Lift, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the fatisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inferted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and confent, further notify and declare, that the Names of fuch perfons as are now deceafed, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Lift, and who were alfo refident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be alfo inferted in that Lift, to the end that the Children of fuch Loyal and faithful fubjects may be made partakers of His Majefty's Bounty to the fulleft extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 24th day of October, in the 47th year of His Majefty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thoufand eight hundred and fix.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov't.

By his Excellency's Command,
WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

TURKEY.

SEMLIN, Auguft 28.

On the 13th July, four thoufand Arnauts, commanded by the Vifir of Romalia, and forming the advance of a much more numerous body, paffed the river Morawa.—The commanding officer of the Servian troops on that quarter, not being in fufficient force to oppofe the paffage of the above, retired feveral leagues.—Having received a reinforcement of 5000 men, and being joined by the young men of the vicinity, he advanced and attacked the Arnauts, who were entrenched upon the Servian fide of the Morawa.—The latter after fome refiftence were repulfed, and obliged to repafs the river.

In the mean time (July 16) the Turks in much greater force, and commanded by Sacas Pacha, again repulfed the Morawa, near Kurwingrad. The object was to feize upon this place; but the Servians had erected redoubts near it, furnifhed with a numerous artillery; and had alfo provided boats to defend the fuburb d'Alexinza, had the enemy attacked it. The Turks, advancing upon Kurwingrad, were received with a brifk fire of artillery; which did not intimidate them:—They continued to advance; and tried to carry the village by affault, notwithftanding a terrible cannonade, and an inceffant fire of musketry. At this time the Servian cavalry, who had secreted themselves in the rear of the redoubts, moved, and attacked the Turks on all sides. This rapid and unexpected manœuvre put the Turks in disorder, and forced them to a precipitate retreat. Purfued by the Servians, they regained the back of the river; and it was not until after having fuftained much lofs that they were able to re embark and to gain the oppofite fide. Of the eight cannon they had with them, two fell into the hands of the Servians, the other fix were thrown into the river. During thefe events, a corps of Servian troops poſted in the rear of Kurwingrad, advanced upon the Duina; and having embarked, fteered for Alexinza.—Having gained the bank, the Servians leaped into the water, and purfued the Turks: a great number of whom, in their flight, had proceeded towards Alexinza; and the two parties meeting near this place, a great carnage enſued.

The total lofs of the Turks on this day, was more than 2,000 men. All their artillery fell into the hands of the Servians, befides a great quantity of baggage, ammunition, and proviſions.

September 8.

After the unfortunate battle of the 16th July, the Ottoman troops re aſſembled; and having been reinforced by a corps from Andrinople, under the orders of Sacri Pacha, their number was found to be 22,000 ſtrong. Being ſufficiently furniſhed with arms and ammunitions, the Turks reſolved to march anew, with all their forces, againſt the inſurgents. Thefe laſt, informed of the deſign by their ſpies, collected their recruits, and took every neceſſary meaſure to repulſe their enemy. The Servian army, 31,000 ſtrong, occupied in entrenched camp a mile from Alexinza; and were divided into columns, commanded by the Chiefs Mladen, Jacoblowich and Stanvila; and were very judiciouſly diſpoſed. In the night before the battle, the Servian Chiefs having learnt, that the Turks meant to attack them the next day, ſent of two diviſions to form ambuſcades near the Morawa, and in the rear of Bagno. At five in the morning, the Turks left their camp, and advanced upon the two columns near Alexinza; at ſix commenced the attack; and a briſk fire of artillery and muſketry, was kept up ſeveral hours. The Turks, unable to force the centre of the Servian line, attacked the wings; but with equal ill ſucceſs.—When the combat was at the higheſt, the two inſurgent columns left their ambuſh, and fell upon the backs of the Turks.—Theſe laſt immediately formed two lines, one of which attacked theſe two columns, and the other the principal corps. The battle on both ſides was conducted with great fury; and the Turkiſh cavalry were diſtinguiſhed for the rapidity of their movements. Victory hung a long time in ſuſpenſe, when at length, the Servian main body broke the Turkiſh line; and the conſequence was their total route and defeat. They attempted to rally, but were ſo cloſely purſued by the Servians, that they were a ſecond time put to flight, with the loſs of their camp, four cannon, and all their ſtores. The loſs on both ſides is eſtimated at 5,000 killed, beſides wounded.—The Turkiſh commandant, Bim-Baſchi, and the Chiefs Delie and Sacri-Pacha, were made priſoners in the battle, but were reſcued by the Turkiſh cavalry.—This battle was fought the 30th of Auguſt.

SWITZERLAND.

BERNE, September 7.

UNCOMMON ACCIDENT.

We received information, two days ſince, of a dreadful accident which has deſtroyed ſeveral villages in the Canton of Schwitz. The following are the details of their diſaſter, the moſt dreadful recorded in the annals of Switzerland:

"On Tueſday, the 2d of September, at five in the evening, the Knippenbuld Rock, which formed the ſummit of Mount Rofenberg, was on a ſudden detached from its ſtation, and at the ſame time part of the Mountain, of ſeveral feet in thickneſs, on the weſtern ſide, and above 28 feet thick on the eaſt ſide, gave way, and fell into the valley which ſeparates the Lake of Zug from that at Lnwerz, overwhelming the whole of the village of Goldau, Rothau, Bufingheu, Hulloch, three parts of that of Lnwerz, and ſome houſes in the village of Stein. The fall of one part of the mountain into the lake of Lauwerz, about a fourth part of which is filled up, cauſed ſuch an agitation in the waters of the lake, that they overthrew a number of houſes chapels, mills, &c. along the ſouthern ſhore of the lake; amongſt others the mill of Lnwerz, where fifteen perſons were killed and buried in the ruins of the buildings, all the parts of which were diſperſed with ſuch violence that the foundation only remains. This mill was ſituated 50 feet above the level of the lake.

"The waves alſo beat againſt the village of Seeven, ſituate at the extremity of the lake, and deſtroyed ſome houſes.—Two perſons were killed. In the villages which were overwhelmed, not an individual eſcaped. Upwards of 1100 perſons have been the victims of this diſaſter.

"Several circumſtances attending this event are very remarkable. Enormous maſſes of rock were carried thro' the air to prodigious diſtances. The rocks in falling, drew with them immenſe maſſes of earth, of from ten to eighty feet in thickneſs; and numbers of theſe maſſes, together with large blocks of flint ſtone, were thrown on the oppoſite ſhore, to the height of from eighty to one hundred feet. One can ſcarcely believe one's eyes when one ſees theſe phenomena. Every inſtant one ſees houſes, ſome forced on one ſide, others cut in two and ſeparated at great diſtances, and others carried more than a quarter of a league from their foundations.

"The villages of Goldau and Rothau, conſiſting of 115 houſes, that of Bufingen, of 126, have totally diſappeared. Of Lnwerz, which loſt 25 houſes, three remains ten buildings, all much damaged.

Extract of an Official Relation,

Reſpecting the Haytian Campaign, againſt the tyrant Deſſalines, from the 13th to the 17th October.

A horrible attempt was to be made in the ſouth part of this iſland—thouſands of victims were to be ſacrificed to the ſuſpicion, or rather ferocity of Deſſalines—General Marcou, and the inſpector, Stephen Maintor, were to be the executioners of the ſanguinary orders againſt the diſtrict of Aux Cayes.

Already they were buſy, about the means of putting their ſchemes into operation, when they were both arreſted by the brave Colonel Wagnac, whereupon the inhabitants of Aux Cayes roſe in a body, and ſwore to conquer or die.

The miniſter at war, the generals Ferron and Vaval, and the Colonels Franciſque and Jean Louiſaac, alſo joined the party of patriots.

Having made his diſpoſitions, the miniſter left L'Anſe a Veau, with the 16th and 18th half brigades, and advanced to the bridge of Mirogome. The next morning they held a conference with Gen. Yayou, who was encamped at Petit-Goave, and finding the latter well diſpoſed to act in co operation, they ſettled all points;—but deferred proceeding further until the arrival of Gen. Petion, Gen. Migloire Ambroiſe, and Colonel Homare, the firſt was ſick, evinced the ſame patriotic zeal.

On the 15th Gen. Petion arrived at Petit-Goave, where he was received in the manner he deſerved, by the troops.—Both diviſions marched to Grand Goaves, where they found Gen. Germain; who, though he feigned to join our party, was yet ſoon known to be a turn-coat.

That night we paſſed at Leogane, and the next morning marched with the 11th, 12th, 15th, 16th, 21ſt, and 24th half brigades, and three companies of dragoons, to Port-au-Prince, which place we were maſters of at four. General Germain becoming the mute and more ſuſpected, he was arreſted at ten at night. A traveller into med us that Deſſalines' van-guard was approaching us, and he in fact, came himſelf without ſuſpicion.

At the inſtigation of general Yayou, the ſoldiers and iſlanders of the plain of Cul de Sac, ſtated the urgency of putting Deſſalines and Germain death in order to preſerve liberty. That the ſoldiers were willingly diſpoſed to do their duty—that the planters were to watch the plains—and that moreover, they pledged their words, not to let Deſſalines have the leaſt ſuſpicion of what was going to paſs—they kept their promiſes. Deſſalines traverſed the whole plain, without being apprized of the diſpoſition of the army. This circumſtance reminds us of a well known ſentence, that a tyrant has always a great many flatterers, and not a ſingle friend.

Deſſalines being entirely ignorant of all theſe facts, and not knowing of our having poſſeſſion of Port-au-Prince, continued on his route, in the moſt perfect ſecurity. At eight in the morning he was on the outer poſts of our camp, without ſuſpecting it—only in the moment when he was to be arreſted, he conceived his error, and then trying to make his eſcape, he received the mortal blow, which put an end to his life and crimes.

Colonel Marcadier was killed, (tho' much regretted) in defending Deſſalines. On the ſide of the enemy, ſome more were wounded, and on our ſide but one man killed. Thus were our proceedings in four days, crowned with the moſt fortunate ſucceſs. This great event, ſo remarkable in the annals of the hiſtory of mankind, will ſhew to the aſtoniſhed ones, what an oppreſſed people are capable of: and will at the ſame time gain us the eſteem and admiration of other nations.

On the 18th, at nine in the morning a Te Deum will be chaunted in order to celebrate this memorable day, on which tyranny was aboliſhed, and Liberty reſtored.

Done at Head-Quarters, at Port-au-Prince, the 18th October, 1806.

(Signed) ETIENNE GERIN,
Miniſter of War and Navy.
PETION,
Commanding general of the 2d diviſion.

YAYOU,
Commanding general of the weſt Leogane.

VAVAL,
General of brigade, of the diſtrict of Nippos.

NOVA-SCOTIA.

HALIFAX, Nov. 7.

In conſequence of a gallant action performed by Lieut. Huges of H. M. brig Phoſphorus, ſon of W. Huges Eſq. of the naval yard here, in beating off an enemy's veſſel of ſuperior force, on the 14th of Auguſt, the Lieutenant has been honored with a very polite letter, written by command of H. R. H. the Duke of Kent; and the committee for the Patriotic Fund at Lloyd's, voted 100l. in caſh, and a ſword or vaſe, 100l. 50l. to Mr. T. Heſter, falling maſter; 20l. each, to four ſeamen, ſeverely—and 10l. to one ſeaman ſlightly wounded.

The origin of females expoſing their boſoms.—When the Sicambri, a clan in France, began to retire and fly from the field of battle, their women met them, uncovered their boſoms, and ſaid, "if ſtrike there, ye cowards! we with that ye would kill us, rather than expoſe us to the diſgrace attendant on ſlavery." This behaviour, and their reproach-a routed the courage of the Sicambri, and raiſed their pride; they rallied, returned to the charge, repulſed and defeated the enemy. In commemoration of the ſhare their women had in the honor of that day, they were permitted to let their boſoms remain bare; and thus the faſhion, which ſtill prevails, owed its origin to the undaunted behavior of the females on that occaſion.

So far reſpecting a ſtimulus to courage, from the ſudden, and almoſt never failing preſence of mind, inherent to the fair ſex of all ages, the good effects of it here were moſt ſenſibly felt; and led our females of the preſent day, waived the dread of a defeat from an implacable enemy, they would then have done well, in imitating this conduct of the Sicambrian women. But imitating them prematurely, and without a cauſe, in the expoſure of what modeſty ſhould conceal, has left us almoſt deſtitute of any hope to be derived from their aſſiſtance in the hour of extremity.—Jam. pap.

London Paragraphs.

Jerome Bonaparte boaſts of having burned ſome Engliſh merchantmen.—This is the only Engliſh fire he dare ſtand.

At a late trial for Crim. Con. one of the witneſſes, a ſimple fellow, who lived in the family, was aſked, if he ever ſuſpected that the lady in queſtion was unfaithful to her huſband's bed? he ſaid, "he never did, for he could ſafely ſwear, that he did not believe there was a woman in the kingdom that loved her bed better."

AFFECTING INCIDENT.

The following diſtreſſing circumſtance is ſtated to us as having occurred in a town in the north of this kingdom, (Ireland):—

A young Gentleman of conſiderable pretenſions as to character and attainments, paid his addreſſes to a young Lady, who, to being gifted with ſuperior endowments of mind and perſon, added the proſpect of a liberal fortune if married with the conſent of her father.—It being a material object with him to have whatever may be her ſuitor of equal advantages in point of fortune, he ſignified his diſapprobation of the exiſting attachment the had formed, and peremptorily directed that there ſhould be no future familiarity with her lover, urging his want of independence as the motive. Her objections and reaſoning were unavailing—her father was deciſive in his injunctions.—Her aſſeverations, that the ſtrength of her preſent prepoſſeſſion would preclude even in remote poſſibility any other regard, had no influence. A young man, a diſtant relative, was propoſed for her acceptance by her father, as eligible in proſperity, which he conceived to be the material matrimonial ingredient; and he, although in poſſeſſion of her ſituation, preſſed his addreſſes, in defiance of frequent explanations and repulſes, and they were accordingly married.—The morning after their marriage, when with the exception of her huſband, every one had withdrawn from the breakfaſt table, the emptied the contents of a ſmall phial into a tea cup, and drank it. Her huſband, with ſome aſtoniſhment, remarked the degree of chearfulneſs with which the drank it. She with much ſerenity informed him ſhe had drank poiſon; and that ſhe had found it a very ſweet draught. The truth of her aſſertions was obvious upon examining the tea-cup—a white ſediment which remained, explained the fact fully. Every poſſible remedy was reſorted to for preſervation—but the ſtrength of the poiſon reſiſted all reſources. In leſs than an hour the exceſs of her agony, which ſhe bore with a placid countenance, brought on the heavy hand of death and ſhe breathed no more. The miſery of the ſurviving parties is indeſcribable.

FEAR.

Lord Nelſon, when about eight years old, being on a viſit at his aunt's, went one day birdneſting, and wandered ſo far that he did not return home till long after duſk. The lady, who had been much alarmed by his abſence, rated him ſoundly, and among other things ſaid "I wonder fear did not drive you home."—"Fear," replied the boy, with great ſimplicity. "I don't know him."

The origin of eating Gooſe on Michaelmas Day.—Queen Elizabeth, on her way to Tilbury Fort, on the 29th of September, 1588, dined at the ancient ſeat of Sir Neville Unafreville, near that place, and as Britiſh Beſs had much rather dine off a high ſeaſoned and ſubſtantial diſh, than a ſimſy fricaſee, or a raſcally ragout, the Knight thought proper to provide a brace of fine geeſe, to ſuit the palate of his royal gueſt. After the Queen had dined very heartily, ſhe aſked for a half pint bumper of Burgundy, and drank deſtruction to the Spaniſh armada. She had but that moment returned the glaſs to the Knight, who had done the honors of the table, when the news came (as if the Queen had been poſſeſſed of the ſpirit of prophecy) that the Spaniſh fleet had been deſtroyed by a ſtorm. She immediately took another bumper in order to digeſt the geeſe and good news; and was ſo much pleaſed with the event, that the every year after, on that day, had the above excellent diſh ſerved up; the court made it a cuſtom, and the people have followed the faſhion ever ſince.

Affecting Narrative.—Some days ago we inſerted a moſt intereſting account of a poor ſoldier, who had taken refuge among the tremendous fiſſures of Dover Cliffs, where he had ſubſiſted fifteen days upon wild cabbages, and ſimples produced by the contiguous ſoil. A circumſtance equally diſtreſſing, wonderful, and affecting has juſt occurred in the neighborhood of Bath.—On Monday laſt, as a gentleman and a ſporting companion were making their way through Conſley's wood, ſituate between Monkton Farley and Kingſdown Hill, they were alarmed at hearing the feeble moaning of a human voice, and preſently they perceived a wretched figure proſtrate on the ground. On a nearer approach they diſcovered it to be a man orphanly emaciated, and without the ability to move, and ſcarcely ſtrength to articulate. The ground about him was ſcratched up, and tendered quite bare of graſs, evidently ſhewing that the poor wretch had been long ſtruggling on the ſpot. Having taken proper caution to mark the place, the ſportſmen haſtened to the Swan Inn, on Kingſdown Hill, and on relating the circumſtance, ſome of their hearers exclaimed, "Poor Lockier! he has been miſſing ever ſince the night of the dreadful thunder and lightening, nor has tale or tidings been ſince heard of him." A verdict paſſions inſtantly fought the retreat of the forlorn being, whom they found juſt exiſting; and ſome little nouriſhment being adminiſtered, a cart was procured, which conveyed him to the above Inn, where with medical aſſiſtance and due care, he ſoon recovered ſo far as to give the following diſtreſſing account of himſelf:—

On the evening of the 19th of Auguſt, he fought ſhelter in the above wood from the violence of the ſtorm. What happened afterwards he knows not, but he ſuppoſes that a ſtroke of lightning deprived him of his ſenſes and the uſe of his limbs. The firſt circumſtance of his recollection is, the hearing of a gun, fired at ſome ſhort diſtance; and frequently afterwards the like reports, and the ſound of ſome human voices. He concluded from theſe things, that it was the firſt of September, and that he muſt have then lain in a ſtate of inſenſibility thirteen days. He however, had not ſtrength to make himſelf heard; and on endeavouring to riſe, he found that all his lower limbs were torpid, or apparently dead. In his pocket he found his ſhaving diſh, in which he cought ſome rain, and drank it as often as it could be procured; and he tore up all the graſs within his reach, which he had eagerly chewed. He had ability to minute down in a memorandum book that he had in his pocket, many of theſe particulars, in order, he ſaid, that it ſhould be known when he was found, how long he had remained in that ſtate before he expired, as he had no hopes of relief but in death. We are happy to learn, upon minute inquiry, that the poor fellow is likely to recover, but with the loſs of one or more of his toes, which are in a gangrane ſtate; and that he has due profeſſional aſſiſtance paid to him by Mr. Maſon, ſurgeon, of Bath Eaſton, as well as moſt humane attention from the landlord of the Swan.

Lockier, who has thus miraculouſly ſurvived, after being twenty days in a ſolitary wood, is well known at Bath; he lived upwards of 15 years with the late Rev. Mr. Whitchoburch, in Paragon-buildings; he afterwards kept the Crown public-houſe, at Weſton, but failing in buſineſs, he has ſince worked as a laborer at farm houſes in the neighborhood of South Wraxall, Early, &c.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the twenty fifth day of December, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date this fourteenth day of November, we have tho't fit by & with the advice of our Executive Council to Prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the twenty-fifth day of December instant, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the Second day of February next, which will be in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seven, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at in our Town of York, for the Anvil Dispatch of Public Business, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN Testimony whereof, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE Elquire, our Lieutenant Governor of our Province of Upper Canada at York, this nineteenth day of DECEMBER, in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and six, and forty-seventh year of our reign. F. G.

Wm. JARVIS, Secretary.

Proclamation.

FRANCIS GORE Elquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

TO ALL TO WHOM THESE PRESENTS SHALL COME—GREETING:

WHEREAS there are divers persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the treaty of separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period; but have neglected to obtain in due time the insertion of their Names on the U. E. Lift, or have been suspended from the same, and are thereby deprived of the advantages intended to be bestowed by His Majesty on that meritorious class of subjects.

AND WHEREAS there are other persons, who in like manner did join the Royal Standard, and who were also resident in this Province on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, but have since died without having their Names inserted on that Lift, whereby their Children become deprived of the privileges that they otherwise would have derived from His Majesty's Bounty.

NOW KNOW YE, that I FRANCIS GORE Lieutenant Governor, as aforesaid, solicitous to promote the welfare, and happiness, of His Majesty's Subjects of every description in this Province, more especially of those who have so strongly manifested their attachment, and Loyalty to His Majesty; and also solicitous that the Children of such persons, who, when alive, were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Lift, but are now removed by death from being admitted to that privilege, may reap the fruits of the Loyalty of their Fathers: Do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of this Province, hereby notify and declare, that the Names of such persons who were resident in the British Colonies in America, before the breaking out of the American War, who joined the Royal Standard previous to the Treaty of Separation in the year 1783, and who have resided in this Province, on, or before the 28th day of July 1798, and have continued to reside therein since that period, or may have been suspended from the U. E. Lift, may, upon application being made, and proof produced thereof, to the Satisfaction of the Executive Government, be now inserted thereon.

And I hereby, with the like advice and consent, further notify and declare, that the Names of such persons as are now deceased, who in their lifetime were entitled to have been placed on the U. E. Lift, and who were also resident in this Province, on, or before, the 28th day of July 1798, may, upon due proof thereof to the Executive Government, be also inserted in that Lift, to the end that the Children of such Loyal and faithful Subjects may be made partakers of His Majesty's Bounty to its fullest extent.

GIVEN under my hand and Seal at Arms in Council at York, this 31st day of October, in the 47th year of His Majesty's Reign and in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and six.

FRANCIS GORE, Lieut. Gov'r.

By his Excellency's Command.

WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

LONDON PARAGRAPHS.

Singular Law Case.

Lifford Assizes commenced on Monday the 11th inst. In the Civil Court the cafe of Wauchob vs. Dill, from its circumftances, excited particular attention. It was an action of ſlander brought by the keeper of a public houſe at Caſtleſin, againſt his Paſtor, for words ſpoken of him before the congregation at the Meeting-houſe. The defence was that the plaintiff had given ſcandal and offence to religion, by encouraging cock fighting, cards, hazard, and other irregularities, at his houſe, during the preparation week preceding the holy ſacrament; in conſequence of which the Defendant thought it his duty to admoniſh the plaintiff, and finding him refractory, had proceeded to a public rebuke, which it was inſiſted he had a right to do, by the rules of the Preſbyterian Church. On the other ſide it was alledged that the defendant acted rather from motives of private malice, than of zeal in the diſcharge of his duty. After a long trial, the jury retired, and brought in a verdict for the plaintiff, 40s. This action had been tried at a former Aſſizes, when the plaintiff recovered no damages, but the proceedings were ſet aſide for ſome legal defect.

An escape from Drowning, by means of Mr. Daniel's Life Preserver.—We some time since informed our readers of the loss of the Alert private ship of war, carrying eighteen guns and eighty four men, commanded by James Deformeaux, Esq.

Mr. George Willers, then surgeon of the ship, states, that on the morning of the 22d of Sept. last, a most violent storm came on, accompanied by tremendous gales of wind, and that the Alert was drove on shore off the Western Islands, and in five minutes went to pieces. The captain and every officer except himself perished, with sixty-four of the brave crew; thirteen of the men saved themselves by clinging to the broken planks and spars, which drifted from the wreck. Mr. Willers fortunately possessed one of Mr. Daniel's Life Machines, and the infant the ship struck, he went to his trunk, put on his Life Preserver, and in two minutes was expoled to the open sea, though he could not swim, the sea at times running mountains high. In this situation Mr. W. was for a length of time at the mercy of the waves. When the storm abated, he found himself about a mile from the shore surrounded with dead bodies. But the reader is better able to judge than he can describe what his feelings must be on observing a boat coming from the shore to his assistance, and which proved to be a large Portuguese shallop, with twenty men, who picked him up, paid him great attention, and conveyed him on shore.

We are sorry to learn that Mrs. Hannah Moore is at present in an alarming state of health. Her religious opinions may appear somewhat too rigid in those times of licentiousness and dissipation, but she may justly be considered as a distinguished ornament of British Literature; and her Works in support of taste, morals and piety, do honor to her talents and character, and will preserve both in respectful remembrance.

A man was taken up and examined by one of the Magistrates last week, charged with some petty crime, who, being proved guilty, was told, that he should serve the King his punishment should be dispensed with; he asked Mr. Justice in what way? "In what way," replied his Worship, "what countryman are you, fellow?"—"Irish, an please your Honor."—"Have you ever been at sea?"—"Have I ever been at sea? Why does your Worship think I was trundled over here in a wheelbarrow from my own country?"

A Frenchman named Frenfye, was lately put on board a prison ship in Port Royal harbour, for refusing to enlist for the defence of the island, saying that he would not carry arms against his countrymen. This fellow and his family, were saved about three years ago, from the massacre at St. Domingo, and have ever since received the protection of the British Government.

Whatever improvements may be deemed necessary for the better recruiting of our regular army, the gentlemen employed in the old way of recruiting do not seem to have fallen off in the least, in the customary allurements to recruits. Among other captivating descriptions of the advantages and glories of a military life recently advertised, we read of "young gentlemen wanted for beautiful and elegant regiments of cavalry, with horses and dresses finer than any eastern emperor!" and "to complete noble regiments of infantry about to sail to the golden world!" "none but gentlemen of high character and truly noble spirit need apply!"

As there is nothing too high or too low, too general or too minute for the comprehensive genius of the Emperor of the French, we learn without surprise, that he has compiled a Cathechism, for the use of all the Churches in his Empire. Even the Synod of the Jews, now sitting at Paris, will most likely be compelled to adopt it.

Lord Stanhope, who is always directing his mind to some object of utility, has lately circulated among his friends a small work entitled, "Principles of the Science of Tuning Instruments with fixed tones." In this little treatise the nature of musical temperament is investigated, and explained in a novel, interesting, and satisfactory manner. That disagreeable sound, technically called the Wolf, which musicians have always been so anxious to get rid of, is proved to be of great advantage in modulation, when distributed according to the Stanhope temperament. His Lordship objects to the expression, the Wolfe, in the singular number, & shews that there are in fact five Wolves in the quints and major thirds; and clearly demonstrates, that so far from being imperfections, "it is precisely the proper distribution of those five wolves which produces that charming and essential variety of character between different keys, which is one of the chief requisites in a well tuned instrument. This work is printed at Mr. Wilson's Stereotype press, and it is a most beautiful specimen of the high degree of perfection to which the art of printing by fixed types has been brought, under his Lordship's direction and patronage. An iron press, of a most ingenious construction, also invented by his Lordship was used in working off all the impressions which have yet been taken from the stereotype plates of the treatise we have just noticed. The largest sheet can be printed on this press by a single pull, and it is calculated to produce a great saving both in time and labour.

Incredible as the following circumstance may appear, it is attested to be a fact: a rat was lately detected in a kitchen, in Edinburgh, in the act of carrying away a silver table-spoon. Upon searching the haunt of the animal, two other spoons, formerly lost, a purse with money, and other valuable articles, were found. A servant in the family, when the last mentioned articles of plate were missed, was discharged and compelled to pay for them.

FUNERAL OF LORD THURLOW.

The remains of Edward Lord Thurlow, were yesterday interred in the Temple Church, in the same vault in which those of his brother, the late Bishop of Durham, had formerly been deposited.

At half past 12 o'clock, the body was removed from his Lordship's house in Great George-street, Westminster, and the cavalry proceeded along the Strand, in the following order:

The Plume of Feathers.
Light Mutes on Horseback.
His Lordship's saddle horse, led by two servants,
Decorated with the family arms and escutcheons.
Coronet, on a crimson velvet cushion.
The Hearse drawn by six Horses.
Five Mourning Coaches, each drawn by six horses.
Ten private Carriages, with servants behind them.

The procession did not stop at the Temple Gate, in Fleet Street, but proceeded down Silver Street, and entered the Temple by the Gate at Whitefriars. The distinguished persons who attended the funeral then alighted from the carriages, and accompanied his Lordship's remains, on foot, to the place of interment.

The Pall bearers were,
The Lord Chancellor,
The Duke of Newcastle,
Lord Wm. Ruffell,
Lord Eldon,
The Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench,
And the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer.

Besides the relatives of the deceased, we also observed the following mourners:

Mr. Baron Thompson, Mr. Justice Le Blanc, Sir Wm. Scott, the Dean of Windsor, Colonel Macnaghan, the Attorney General, Mr. Tyrwhitt, &c.

All the Benchers of the Inner and Middle Temples now in town attended on this melancholy occasion.

The Dean of Winchester performed the funeral service, and the whole of the solemn ceremony was concluded by two o'clock.

The ceremony was admirably arranged by Messrs. Mathial and Tatham.

Hardships of a Military Life.

WE have received the following letter, with the inclosure, from Hamburgh and the facts stated may be relied on. If the French eat and drank like the Prussians, it is a wonder that any sort of food is to be had.

Hamburgh, June 10th, 1806.

SIR,

The following extraordinary production comes from the pen of Maj. Von Streit, in his Prussian Majesty's service, and is addressed to the Town Clerk of Graefenberg, in the territory of the city of Nuremberg; should you be of opinion it will amuse your readers, you will oblige me by inserting it in your paper. It is faithfully translated from the Allgemeine Zeitung of Friday, May 23, 1806—Page 571.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. Y.

Mr. Town Clerk,

I have, in compliance with the orders I have received already, verbally informed Mr. Town Clerk, which information has been repeated by the commanding officer of the place, that the Prussian troops under my command are to be treated in the same manner, and are to receive the same allowances with the royal imperial French troops in Nuremberg, but to prevent even the possibility of a misunderstanding, I repeat in writing, that the officers are to be furnished with four hot dishes at dinner, besides soup, and are to have wine both at dinner and supper; and always two hot dishes at supper besides soup. Each non-commissioned officer and private is to have, besides his breakfast, two hot dishes at dinner, besides soup, and two quarts of beer; and for supper only one hot dish, besides soup, and two quarts of beer. I take this opportunity to desire Mr. Town Clerk will observe, that the troops under my command will regulate the police of the town with the greatest exactness, and that smoking in the street is forbidden, on pain of such corporeal punishment as we shall think fit to inflict, and confiscation of the pipe;—and that after half past nine no inhabitant will be permitted to be seen in any inn or alehouse; the patroles will look to this, and arrest all persons who shall be found out after that hour, who will infallibly be punished with fine and whipping. I expect this order will be exactly obeyed. Mr. Town Clerk will immediately provide me with a penknife and paperfolder, which shall be returned on my departure, he will also take care that we get all the newspapers that are read here. The beer in this house is bad, and very good is to be had at Kloster Weteoe; the Town Clerk will therefore have several barrels filled there, and sent to head quarters, or at least from 25 to 30 pitchers every day. It is just the same with the wine, which it is almost impossible to drink; we had a sort of red wine, which, at best, was only tolerable; it is just out, and care must be taken to provide good wine. My officers were contented with that wine, and the table in general, although they had not as many dishes as they had a right to demand. Care must be taken to provide a dessert at least twice a week, together with three bottles of Champaign. To preserve good order and to prevent the exhorbitant bills of innkeepers, I make known that each officer is to have a bottle of wine at dinner and the same at supper—there are ten officers, therefore twenty bottles of wine must be furnished daily. If this requisition is not immediately complied with, I shall make Mr. Town Clerk answerable for all the unpleasant consequences.

VON STREIT, Major.

Head-quarters, Graefenberg, April 18.

ANECDOTES.

A country clergyman, while catechising his little flock, came to a girl who had received the addresses of a neighboring youth, who was just recovering from a fit of sickness, which she vainly supposed was occasioned by the excessive of his passion for her, addressed her thus: "Wha made ye, lassie?" "God, Sir," replied the girl, making an awkward courtesie. "And wha did ha for ye, lassie?" "Nobody, Sir, as I know on," courtesying as before. "Do ye not ken that some one de'd for ye?" "No Sir, Jonathan Dayton was but rid three weeks for me, but folks says he's got about again, sir."

An old woman who had for sore eyes purchased an amulet, or charm, written upon a bit of parchment, and wore it about her neck, and was cured. A female neighbor, laboring under the same disorder, came to beg the charm of her. She would by no means part with it, but permitted her to get it copied out. A poor school boy was hired to do it for a few pence. He looked it over very attentively, and found it to consist of characters which he could not make out; but, not willing to lose his pay, he wrote thus:—"The Devil pick out this old woman's eyes and Puff up the holes."—The patient wore it about her neck and was cured also.

INTERESTING LAW CASE.

KING'S BENCH, GUILDHALL, July 10.

Sittings after term, before L'd Ellenborough.
Jackson v. Lovefy.—EXCESSIVE CRUELTY.

The Junior Counsel, who opened the pleadings, stated that this was an action for assaulting, putting in irons, falsely imprisoning, and flogging the plaintiff. The damages were laid at 500l. and the defendant had pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Parke.—"I have to disclose a case of more unparalleled cruelty, than any which has come to my knowledge, either in the course of my reading, or of my professional experience. When the defendant in the pursuit of his voyage had arrived in Jamaica, he found it expedient to make some addition to his crew; and for this purpose he hired the plaintiff in the capacity of Captain's Steward, and a man named Robinson as Second Mate. The ship failed for Liverpool in April, 1805, but it was not until the 4th of June that any thing occurred material to state in elucidation of this affair. On that day, the plaintiff being on duty on deck with Robinson, whose watch it was, asked leave of the latter to go below, in order to make the cot, of the First Mate. Permission being given, he performed what he proposed, and at the same time, at the desire of the First Mate, gave him some grog. Presently afterwards the Captain inquired what he had been doing? to which the plaintiff replied confidently with the truth. The principal Mate hearing that the plaintiff had told the defendant that he had given him some spirits, was so much irritated that he pursued him to the mizen chains, where plaintiff fought refuge, and then threw him into the sea, as the vessel was advancing at the rate of five knots an hour. Robinson, by jumping into the boat, rescued the black from a watery grave. It was not until the evening that the defendant interposed, but then he ordered the plaintiff to be turned before the mast, and immediately tied his hands behind him, and fastened him to the ring bolts of the deck, in which situation he was continued more than eight hours, the Captain, in the mean time, throwing buckets of water over him, as he said, 'he was so fond of the sea.' (It seems the unhappy plaintiff had threatened to cast himself overboard to escape the cruelty of his tyrants.) The next day, at 4 in the afternoon, defendant called plaintiff on deck, and charged him with stealing money from one of the passengers, which the latter positively denied. After some ineffectual search on the person and in the bag of the plaintiff, the defendant, taking a new log-line, made what is called a cat-o'nine-tails. The plaintiff was then stripped naked, tied up, and flogged by the defendant, until being exhausted, he commanded the Chief Mate, and afterwards the Second Mate, without intermission, to renew the torture.—While the wounds were yet fresh, this inhuman monster ordered the brine to be taken from the barnish tub, (so the beef cask is termed) and to be rubbed into the open sores. To add contempt and derision to this horrid series of atrocities, the plaintiff was thrown into the turtle tub full of water, under which his head was at intervals immerged by this barbarian. These infernal ceremonies being performed, the lacerated wretch was put in double irons and in this condition exposed, without a rag to cover him. Gentlemen, on the 8th of the same month, this miserable object was again brought upon deck, and then the Captain said to him—'If you do not tell me where the money is, I will have the value out of your back.' The man persisting in his innocence the Captain, assisted by the Chief Mate and two others of the crew, again returned to apply the same torment, until the plaintiff was in a state of insensibility; after which he was put in irons as before, and continued in that situation until the following day. The like ferocity was practised on the wretched victim on the 11th, 13th, and 14th of the month; and on the 5th of July, the ship having arrived at Liverpool, he was put on shore, and Mr. Lindsay, a respectable surgeon, attended him, until money and friends forsaking him, he was sent to the Infirmary of that town, and although most terribly lacerated, he has survived to bring his case before an English Jury.

Daniel Robinson confirmed the statement in the opening. He also said, that the passenger who had lost a guinea and some silver was two thirds of his time in some from intoxication, and actually died drunk. He had lost only a guinea and some silver. On the occasion the man was flogged for three hours without any cessation, and in all he had received about 1000 lashes. Particularly on the 14th, the punishment was so severe, that the blood gushed from his breasts. His back was apparently in a state of mortification.

Mr. Lindsay said he had been eight years in the navy, and had attended officially on many occasions when punishments were inflicted, but he never knew a single instance where the effects were so terrible. A large portion of the flesh came away over a surface of the back, sixteen inches square. After this there was a prodigious accumulation of the fungus, or proud flesh. He saw his patient yesterday, when he observed considerable contractions in the muscles of the back, in consequence of the wounds.

Mr. Topping addressed the jury for the defendant. He observed, that the case, as represented by the learned counsel, and proved by the witnesses, seemed to him to be incredible. He could not imagine that any human being could have survived a punishment so severe, and so often repeated, as that which the witnesses had described.—Unfortunately the defendant had gone to sea upon another voyage without having left any instructions behind him with a view to his defence. All he could therefore do, was to suggest to the jury the probability that there had been a considerable degree of exaggeration, and to entreat that they would be as lenient in their verdict as the nature of the case would allow them.

Lord Ellenborough remarked, that the case was certainly as the learned counsel had described it, one of most unparalleled cruelty. He should have been induced to suppose that the statement of it had been greatly exaggerated and overcoloured had it not been that it had been so clearly proved, not only by the witnesses for the plaintiff, but by the absence of the testimony on the part of the defendant. The defendant appeared to have added insult of barbarity, in a way which the very lowest degree of human depravity could scarcely account for. A disclosure to such savage, and, as it appeared, unprovoked cruelty, he believed, had never before disgraced the annals of a British Court of Justice. His Lordship said, he was well assured that no recommendation from him was necessary to urge the jury to make the most ample compensation in their power for the severe sufferings he had undergone.—The jury consulted a few moments, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages five hundred pounds, the full amount laid in the declaration.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, January 24, 1806.

"A Peep into Futurity—the effect of Astronomic labour."

"Thomas Tolman Esq. of Greenfborough, in the ftate of Vermont, has made a calculation of all the Eclipfes of the Sun and Moon, for a hundred years to come; in which, he has reduced all the mean times to the true, by four Equations; and alfo the Sun's diftance from the Nodes, at every of thofe times. By a calculation of this kind extended, and ufed in Chronology, the true times of notable events, at the moft diftant periods, might be known with the fame certainty, as we may depend that the Heavenly bodies will be regular and uniform in their motions—the revolutions and cycles of Eclipfes might be better afcertained than at prefent; and indeed, a new and more perfect one might be difcovered; while the ordinary annual calculator would be furnifhed with an Affiftant and Guide of confiderable ufe on the queftion of Eclipfes. In the above period, the great Eclipfe of June laft, will return five times, (according to the Chaldean Cycle) but with fome variation each time, as refpects the Earth generally, and much more, as refpects any particular place."
