Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, November 1.

This morning dispatches were received from Admiral Thornborough, on board his Majesty's ship Eagle, off the Texel, stating his having sent an officer in a boat to look close into the Texel, to discover the state of the forces of the enemy, when it was found they had laying there five sail of the line, eight frigates, and about 100 small craft, all ready for sea. Should they attempt to come out there is every reason to believe they will meet with a warm reception and safe convoy to one of our ports.

Our correspondent at Rotterdam informs us, no disturbances have broken out on the borders of Switzerland of a very formidable description.

November 2.

Sir George Rumbold, the British Resident at Hamburgh, with his papers, has been seized by a party of 200 French infantry, who surprised him at his house about a mile from the city, and carried him off. The Senate of Hamburgh, the day after this outrage, sent to the French Resident to inquire the cause of it, and to demand his liberation. The minister said he was ignorant of the cause, but supposed it to be a suit of Mr. Drake's affair.

It is said that Mr. Nicholls, the Consul at Hamburgh, has taken refuge in the house of Mr. Forbes, the American Resident. If the French wished to seize him too, they would not respect that asylum.

Couriers announcing the outrage have been sent to all the principal Courts. We should think that this repetition of the scandalous violation of the Germanic territory at Ettenheimmi will at last extort from the continental powers some measure for the protection of the most sacred intercourse of nations. If Fouche, the French Minister of Police, is to issue his mandates of arrest against individuals, nay, Ambassadors, in a neutral territory, he may lend his archers to seize their prey in the Palace of the Emperor of Austria or the King of Prussia. Others may not feel the effect of Bonaparte's lawless violence, but their turn may come if they have not the courage to defend the common law of nations.

The French Commercial Agent, who yet resides at Gottenburgh, has received an order from his government to quit Sweden immediately.

We have received some accounts from our squadron off Ferrol, all of which agree in stating, that no armaments were preparing in that port, and for this good reason, that the naval arsenals were totally unprovided with the means of furnishing one upon the most limited scale.

By accounts from Valetta, dated early in October, we have been favored with some further particulars of the Spanish insurrection.

At the beginning of last month, between three and four thousand of the King's troops entered the province of Biscay, without any opposition from the insurgents. Admiral Massaredo and General Orquilla, who are said to have been the ringleaders in that revolt, were arrested and sent to Burgos. Upwards of two hundred of the most important persons concerned in the insurrection are said to have fled, in consequence of the unfavorable answer received from Bonaparte, to whom it is reported the Biscayens offer to become vassels, at the head of the French government. His Imperial Majesty is stated to have recommended to them to continue in subjection to their own Sovereign, to whose assistance, in case it were necessary, he should send an army of two hundred thousand men. The business was, notwithstanding, considered as far from being settled.

A report of a very momentous and extraordinary nature has reached us by the same conveyance; but it is such a nature as to render it an act of discretion to refrain communicating it to the public.

According to accounts from Florence the house of Nicholas Maria Sassi, banker to her Etrurian Majesty, had stopped payment for the sum of two millions of Scudi.

Commerce.—The trade carried on between this country and America is immense. At Liverpool, seldom less than 60 vessels are loading at one time for that quarter, and the commerce carried on from London Hull and Glasgow, is proportionably great. From the last report two vessels sailed in the last week of August for New York, which, among other things, had on board 184,215 yards of cottons and muslins; 142,849 yards of printed cottons and linens; 255,735 yards of British, and 58,975 of Irish plain linen. Excepting in the midst of winter, there seldom passes a week, but one or two vessels sail from Greenock to the western world; and at the above mentioned period, ten or twelve vessels were loading for America.

The raw materials of which the above mentioned cargoes were compoſed, would not coſt the nation more than 5000. and they are worth above 100, 000.—The total value of the exports from Great-Britain to America amount to between eight and nine millions per annum, though in 1774 they did not exceed one million and a half. Including thoſe from the Britiſh ſettlements in the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, they will be little ſhort of twelve millions.

GENOA, Sept. 21.

An agreement has been entered into between England and Ruſſia, to poſſeſs the Iſland of Malta in common, for which purpoſe 500 Ruſſian troops will ſoon go from Corfu to Malta.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the U. S. armed brig Syren, off Tripoli, dated Aug. 9.

The ſcene of combat commenced the 3d inſtant, when the weather became favorable for our operations, and accordingly at 2 o'clock P. M. the ſignal was made to prepare for battle; at 3 o'clock we got within gun ſhot of the batteries, and caſt off the gun boats and bomb ketches. They advanced in a line a head, led on by captain S. Decatur, and covered by the Conſtitution, the brigs and ſchooners. The enemy had 17 gun boats moored in a line in front of their batteries, a ſo a brig of 16 and a ſchooner of 10 guns, to and the cover of their boats. The moments were anxious as we advanced; a diſcharge of ſhells from the bomb boats induced the enemy to open their fire, which was heavy and inceſſant; yet our brave fellows advanced with all poſſible intrepidity, through a ſhower of grape ſhot. When our gun boats got within 20 yards of the enemy they diſcharged their great guns, loaded with 42 pounds of muſket balls; this was followed with a volley of muſketry, which obliged five of the gun boats, compoſing the enemy's right wing, to cut their cables and retreat. Our boats then bore up for thoſe to leeward; captain Decatur boarded and carried the firſt boat, lieut. Trip boarded and carried the ſecond, and lieut. James Decatur, in the act of carrying the third, was killed. Capt. Decatur continued down their line and carried the third, all of which were ſately brought off. The attack continued an hour and an half. The Turks were driven out of fort Francis, and muſt have ſuffered much from our fire in the town as well as in their batteries. The reaſon the enemy's fire did us ſo little damage was on account of its being ſo badly directed. The three gun boats taken are excellent—two of them carry a 26 pounder each, of brais, and the other an 18 pounder. Lieut. Trip, who carried the ſecond boat, received eleven ſabre wounds, but none of them dangerous, and he is likely to do well. On the 5th we had the captured boats rigged, and ſhould have returned to the attack, but a ſmall French privateer, finding her birth in the harbour too warm, came out; by her we learned that the enemy had one gun boat ſunk, another loſt two thirds of her crew, and all the reſt were very much ſhattered; they alſo informed us that they were employed all night repairing their damages. The platforms in their batteries were torn up, and our unfortunate countrymen were employed to repair them.

The commodore ſent him back with the wounded, and next day he returned with a letter from the French conſul, bearing ſtrong marks of a poetic diſpoſition. However, the commodore determined to attack them to the weſtward. Accordingly on the 7th, at 8 A. M. the ſignal was made to advance in two lines, and attack the batteries. The morning was calm and warm, which prevented our getting in until 12 o'clock when the enemy opened their fire from their batteries, and in their confuſion fired at leaſt 50 guns without ball. The bomb boats got their poſition at half paſt 12, and anchored; the gun boats got within point blank range, and in a little time diſmounted two guns in the weſtern battery and drove out the enemy; a ſhell was thrown into battery Principale and burſt, which ſilenced their fire for nearly half an hour. At 1 P. M. the quarter deck of gun boat No. 9 blew up, by which event we have to lament the loſs of lieut. James Caldwell, commander, and Mr. Dorſey, a promiſing young officer, and eight of her crew. Mr. Spence, who was ſponging the gun, with ſome others, eſcaped unhurt; they had nearly completed the bearing of the gun to fire when they found the boat ſinking, and the brave ſurviving few gave three cheers as they went down, at which time we lay 200 yards from them, and our boats were immediately diſpatched and picked them up. This cauſed a ſmall ceſſation of our fire, but it was only momentary, and was renewed with redoubled vigor, and ſeemed to ſay, we will revenge our brave companions. At 5 o'clock the ſignal of recall was made and the firing ceaſed.

We, as in the other affair, have ſuffered nothing like what might be calculated on, owing to their bad management. We have loſt on this occaſion 10 men and two officers, and ſome wounded. It is not certain whether No. 9 blew up by accident or by a red ſhot. That it was cauſed by a ſhot, we have the obſervation of one of the men ſaved, who ſays he felt the ſhot ſtrike her, but before he could communicate the circumſtance ſhe blew up. The frigate John Adams joined us this day.

From the ſame, Auguſt 15.

I wrote you a long letter on the 4th, informing you of our operations on the coaſt, ſince when nothing has occurred. The baſhaw in his communication has offered peace to us, and the delivery of priſoners, for 150,000 dollars, 100,000, I believe has been offered; but the baſhaw has declared that he will ſuffer himſelf to be buried in the ruins of his caſtle, or drove into the country, rather than take leſs than the 150,000. Therefore we are preparing for an other attack this day. The weather is favorable.

General Monk.

THERE is a tradition in Scotland, that a dram of brandy produced the reſtoration of Charles the Second. The meſſenger from the Parliament of England had brought letters from that aſſembly to Monk, whilſt he remained at Edinburgh. He was at length entruſted by the Parliament with a letter to the Governor of Edinburgh Caſtle. This circumſtance he mentioned to one of Monk's ſerjeants, as he was going towards the caſtle. The Serjeant law ſomething unuſual in this, and prevailed upon the Meſſenger to drink a dram of brandy with him at a neighbouring ale houſe; from one dram they proceeded to another, till the Serjeant made his friend ſo drunk that he was enabled to take the letter out of his pocket without his being conſcious of it. This being done, he poſts to his General with the letter, who, on peruſing its contents, found that it contained an order to the Governor of the Caſtle to arreſt him, and keep him in ſafe cuſtody.

Provoſt Baillie ſays, "Monk came to Berwick, in the midſt of December, 1659, and lay in the fields in a very cold winter, near Coldſtream, with ſix or ſeven thouſand foot, and with two thouſand horſe. Many of our Scotch noblemen came to him at Berwick, and offered to raiſe quickly for his ſervice all the power of Scotland. But the moſt of his officers, refuſed it, fearing the ſlumbling of their army and friends in England—for as yet all of them, in their right well penned papers, did declare, as poſitively as ever, with divine atteſtations, againſt all kings and monarchy, and for a free parliament, and all former principles."

Monk, however, paid very little regard to theſe violent proteſtations; for before that time, whilſt he lay with his army at Coldſtream Moor, in Scotland, his chaplain, Dr. Price, repreſented to him how much both his obligation and his ſafety were concerned to bring about the reſtoration, and in complying with the deſires of the greater part of the nation; who wiſhed to have government ſettled in the old manner. The General told him that he was conſcious of the truth of what he ſaid, and that he ſhould not be wanting therein he ſoon as he ſhould find himſelf in a capacity to effect it; "of which, added he, I have now ſomewhat more hopes than formerly." But on taking his leave of Dr. Price, he ſaid, putting his hand on his ſword, "By God's grace I will do it."

Through the whole of the buſineſs of the reſtoration, Monk behaved with great lenity and great diſintereſtedneſs. He ſaved for Sir Arthur Haſlerig, his eſtate by pretending that, before the reſtoration was confirmed, he had made him a promiſe to do ſo. He was of great uſe during the plague in London in 1665, and prevented the ſpreading of that horrid calamity by the wiſe meaſures which he recommended, as well as by his extreme liberality.

Monk is thus deſcribed in the memoirs of that pleaſing and inſtructive writer, Sir Philip Warwick:

"He was a perſon of natural and intrepid courage, and who had made the ſword his profeſſion as ſoon as he was able to wield it. He was bred up under great Captains, and very early taken notice of by that great Prince and Soldier, Henery, Prince of Orange. Monk was a man of deep thoughts and few words, and what he wanted in elocution he had in judgement; and he had a ſecrecy in him, prevalent in all theſe qualifications of a ſoldier, which made him ſo fit an inſtrument in the hand of Divine Providence to work his Majeſty's reſtoration. Hence he carried it all ſo cloſely, that I believe no man to this day, can poſitively ſay, that he deſigned more than the general quiet to the land, and ſo he framed his deſigns ſuitable to the opportunities that were given him; but that he wiſhed that quiet might be procured by the means of his Majeſty's happy return, no one can rationally doubt; and in this ſhewed the ſolidity of his judgement, in that when deſpairing, Haſlerig and his party offered him the crown, it was no temptation to him."

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

On Saturday laſt departed this life, after a ſhort but painful illneſs, deeply regretted by all who had the pleaſure of his acquaintance, Mr. Thomas Schofield, aged 66, late of the firm of Schofield & Mosley, Merchants of this place.—His remains were attended to the place of interment in Maſonic Order, and by the moſt numerous and reſpectable concourſe of people ever aſſembled in York on any ſimilar occaſion.

He was juſt and upright in his dealings, ardent and ſincere in his friendſhips—in his manners hoſpitable, and a pleaſing, ſocial and inſtructive companion.

To the Printer of the Oracle—By PEWATEKAKA.

While the Earl of Selkirk was at Chenail-Ecarte, a Shawanee Indian living on the Thames who ſpeaks tolerable Engliſh, underſtanding that His Lordſhip wanted an Interpreter, went there to offer his ſervices. His Lordſhip received him kindly, and treated him in a very hoſpitable manner, telling him he was not in immediate want of an Interpreter, but might perhaps ſoon have occaſion for one, when he ſhould ſend for him.

Some time after this, the ſame Indian on his way from this place to the Thames accidentally met with a traveling Methodiſt Preacher in a Tavern. The Parſon hearing the Indian ſpeak Engliſh, entered in to converſation with him, and among other queſtions aſked him, if he did not wiſh to ſerve the Lord. "The Indian replied, I did once "wiſh to ſerve him, and went up for "that purpoſe, but, altho' I was well "uſed by him and got plenty of Grog "and as much Victuals as I could eat, "I now begin to think he told me a "lie as he has not ſent for me accord"ing to his promiſe; I will therefore "never depend on him any more." The itinerant Parſon aſtoniſhed, with hands and eyes raiſed towards Heaven, exclaimed "Lord have mercy upon us, Poor Soul!"

York, 1ſt Feburary, 1805.

MR. WEEKES avails himſelf of this public manner of ſoliciting the ſupport of the FREE and INDEPENDENT Electors of the Eaſt Riding of York and the Counties of Durham and Simcoe, at the next election of a Member to repreſent the Inhabitants of this Circle in Parliament. It is, he truſts, unneceſſary for him to expreſs, that, in aſpiring to the honor of being one of the Repreſentatives of the People, he bears in mind the importance of that ſituation, and the neceſſity of a faithful diſcharge of its functions. The particular occurrences in public affairs, whether viewed in the enacting of a law, or in enforcing the letter of it, or in the palpable effects of both, or whether developed in the official arrangements of civil departments, carry with them, in every political hemiſphere, this monition, that the vigilance of the legiſlator over the rights and privileges of his Conſtituents ought to be inceſſant; and that a due regard to the intereſts of the People, and a mild and impartial adminiſtration of juſtice, can beſt promote the proſperity of a State, and perpetuate its eſtabliſhments—this obſervation is not merely founded on the dictate of ſentiment, but on the written letter of the law aſſerted in the wiſdom of ancient parliaments, and confirmed amidſt the contending factions of later times: for in the great Charter of Engliſh liberty it is conciſely and emphatically declared that "no "freeman ſhall be arreſted, or impriſoned, or diſſeiſed of his tenements, "or deprived of his liberties or privileges, or outlawed, or baniſhed, or "in any other manner deſtroyed, ex"cept by the judgment of his peers, "or the law of the land," and in that ſecond Charter of perſonal liberty the HABEAS CORPUS AM, it is propitiouſly provided that "any perſon who "ſhall ſend another, priſoner out of "the Realm, or beyond the Seas, contrary to the law of the land, ſhall be diſabled from bearing any office, "ſhall incur the penalty of a præmu"nire, and be incapable of receiving "the King's pardon; and the party "ſuffering ſhall alſo have his private "action againſt the perſon ſo committing and all his aiders, advifers and "abettors and ſhall recover treble coſts "beſides his damages, which no jury "ſhall aſſeſs at leſs than five hundred "pounds." In theſe, as well as in many other acts of legiſlation, are legibly marked the integrity and independence with which the Repreſentative in former times conducted himſelf in the ſervice of the Public; but in none more particularly than in thoſe acts which guard againſt the impoſition of aids, taxes or other charges under the colour of prerogative, in which it is declared that "levying money for or to the uſe "of the Crown by pretence of prero"gative without grant of parliament, "or for longer time, or in other man"ner than the ſame is or ſhall be ſo "granted, is illegal," and in virtue of which the moſt invaluable privilege is preſerved to the ſubject, and a barrier againſt the attempts of corrupt miniſters either oppreſſive or unjuſt. The venerable antiquity of thoſe laws, ſome of which have withſtood the teſt of ſeveral centuries, unaltered and unrepealed, proves their efficacy, and affords this concluſion that thoſe, who maintain the immunities of the people, do more than render a temporary benefit to their Country, inaſmuch as that a ſecurity againſt arbitrary or oppreſſive meaſures tends not only to preſerve the tranquility, but alſo to promote the proſperity of the State, and eſtabliſhes a monument of worth to the lateſt poſterity. How far it may be laudable at this juncture to emulate the ſpirit and letter of theſe acts, in the reviſion and amendment of provincial laws of no leſs importance to the people; particularly the act for the qualification of Electors and the Jury Act, and to take a more general view of the management and poſture of public affairs, it is not for Mr. WEEKES in the ſituation of an election Candidate to affirm; but ſhall be ſo favored with the efficient ſupport of thoſe who enjoy the freedom of ſuffrage, and feel the independence to exerciſe it, he indulges himſelf in the hope, that their rights will at leaſt be more generally known, if not more fully aſſerted.

He cannot refrain from adding, that he is actuated more by a ſenſe of obligation and gratitude than ambition in thus devoting his exertions to the ſervice of the People, inaſmuch that as it is to their patronage he owes his independence—ſo on their future welfare muſt depend his proſperity—on their political aſcendency his importance in life, and thus connected, both in rights and intereſts, it is with him an indiſpenſible duty to ſtand, or to fall in our common defence.

Printing Office, Sept. 8th 1804.

To the Electors of the County of York, and the East Riding of the County of Durham, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

THE much to be lamented, and truly affecting loss sustained by the Public, in the premature fates of so many valuable Citizens, is a calamity of melancholy magnitude and distressing operation; and is to the interests, as well as to the feelings of this small Community, a wound bordering upon vital; a wound which will long remain unhealed, and a disaster of which the effects will be painfully felt by the Bench, the Bar, Society, the Legislature and the Country.

The severe dispensation holds forth an humiliating picture to human pride, and this affecting lesson to the survivors of those departed Worthies, that neither blooming health, nor blooming prospects, nor the undissembled affection of admiring friends, can avert the awful fate which, He who rules the Winds and Waves, dispenses to Man.

Grief excited by such a cause is surely sacred; for if genial benevolence combined with a brilliant catalogue of practical virtues, be a claim upon the affections of society—society will surely drop a tributary tear to the memories of so many of its brightest ornaments. However, this consoling hope, this fervid assurance, remains to those whose nearer connection renders the loss more individually afflicting: that the Sovereign Disposer of all events, is the Widow's and the Orphan's, the good Man's and the Christian's Friend. Be it the office of active piety to praise that beneficent Being for unnumbered blessings received at his hands, and to convey the sympathetic sigh which friendship heaves at the severing stroke to his glowing bosom; where may their spirits find a resting place, whom beyond the tainted illusions of hope, are now numbered amongst the dead. Bowing, as we ought, to the will of an overruling Providence, let us, whilst we feel with the tenderness of men, submit with the fortitude of Christians, and suffer the tide of grief which flows for the loss of such precious friends, to subside into a calm of pious resignation.

Gentlemen, the unfortunate event will consequently produce an Election to the vacant seats in the House of Assembly. For that of York, so ably and so honorably filled by my departed Friend, I offer myself a Candidate. If I succeed to it, my abilities, however slender, I pledge myself religiously to concentrate to the service of my Country: and may that liberty which is the birthright of Freemen and the gift of our God, be perpetuated by a well disposed People and a well chosen Legislature. I shall be thankful for Support at the day of Election,

I am, Gentlemen,
yours, &c.
J. CAMERON.

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9

Friday the 1st inst. being the day appointed by Proclamation for opening the Provincial Parliament, his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor came in the usual state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and being seated on the Throne with the accustomed solemnities, commanded by Message, through the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, the attendance of the House of Assembly—the Commons being come, the Honorable Speaker of the Legislative Council signified His Excellency's pleasure that they should return to their House to elect a Speaker, and present the person of their choice, for his Excellency's approbation, the following day at one o'clock.

Alexander M'Donell Esq. was then chosen to discharge the duties of that office.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker elect, with the Members went up to the Legislative Council Chamber at the time appointed, where in the usual forms His Excellency was pleased to allow and confirm Mr. M'Donell to be their Speaker.

After which His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following most gracious Speech to both Houses of the Legislature:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,
And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

SINCE the last Session of the Legislature of this Province, in pursuance of the Authority vested in me, by an Act passed therein, respecting the repairing and laying out of Public Highways, and building of Bridges, I have by Proclamation, appointed Commissioners, and have taken such other measures, as have appeared to me to be the best suited, for carrying into effect the Provisions of that Act.

I have also, by the Authority of the Legislature, appointed Commissioners, for the purpose of entering into a Provisional Agreement with those of Lower Canada, respecting the Duties and Drawbacks, on Goods and Merchandize passing from the one Province to the other. These Commissioners, I have no doubt, have executed the Trust, committed to their charge by that appointment, with fidelity and care. I have ordered the Provisional agreement entered into, to be laid before you, for the obtaining of the Sanction, and confirmation, of this Legislature.

I embrace this opportunity of congratulating you, on the success, which hath attended the first efforts of the cultivation of Hemp in this Province; the reward, with which, the Trustees of the Society instituted at London, for the encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, have been pleased to honor the Labors of the Industrious Farmer, will, I trust, still further stimulate his Exertions; and in every laudable pursuit, incite this infant Colony, to the practise of that Industry and diligence, which will promote the Intereſt of the Individual, and the prosperity of the Province.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have directed the Public Accounts to be laid before you, and am perſuaded, that you will examine them with that Attention, which the nature of the subject requires.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,
And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I forbear on this occasion, to point out in particular, the subjects which may now call for your Investigation and care; the knowledge with which you reſpectively poſſeſs, of the situation, and intereſts, of the Inhabitants of this widely extended Province, will enable you, to discover where the Aid of the Legislature may still be neceſſary, and it shall be my endeavour, at all times, to co-operate with you, in the enacting of such Laws, as may best promote, the true Object of all Legislation,—the Public Good.

The following Addreſſes were preſented to his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on Tuesday the 5th inſtant, in anſwer to His Excellency's Speech at the opening of the preſent seſſion of the Provincial Parliament.

To His Excellency PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majesty's Forces, within the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

We His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Members of the Legislative Council of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament aſſembled, beg leave to return Your Excellency our humble Thanks for your gracious Speech.

The meaſures which your Excellency has been pleased to take, for carrying into effect the Provisions of the Act paſſed in the laſt Seſſion, reſpecting the repairing and laying out of public Highways and buildings of Bridges, afford us ſatisfaction, in proportion to the Importance of their Object; and we flatter ourſelves they will be attended with the deſired Succeſs.

We ſhall loſe no time in taking into our Conſideration the Provisional Agreement, lately entered into with the Commiſſioners from Lower Canada, which Your Excellency has ordered to be laid before us; and have no doubt that the Commiſſioners appointed by Your Excellency have executed the Truſt repoſed in them, with ſuch Fidelity and Care as ſhall obtain for it, the Sanction and Confirmation of this Legiſlature.

We are extremely thankful to Your Excellency for the Information reſpecting the ſucceſs attending the firſt Efforts of the Cultivation of Hemp in this Province, and we rejoice very much to hear that ſome of its Farmers have been ſo highly honored by the Truſtees of the Society instituted at London, for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce. Such distinguishing Rewards, cannot fail to Stimulate the further Exertions of the Industrious Settlers in this Infant Colony, in endeavouring to eſtabliſh for it a Staple, which promiſes to be equally beneficial to themſelves and to their Mother Country.

We are gratefully Senſible of the conſtant Solicitude your Excellency ſhews to promote the true Intereſts of this Province; and we beg leave to aſſure Your Excellency that we ſhall not ceaſe on our part, to ſuggeſt from time to time ſuch Amendments and additions to its Laws, as may appear to us to be moſt conducive to the Public good; which we Concur with Your Excellency in thinking, ought to be the ſole Object of all Legiſlation.

By Order of the Houſe,
RICHARD CARTWRIGHT
Speaker.

Legiſlative Council Chamber, York 4th February 1805.

To which His Excellency was pleaſed to return the following anſwer:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council,

Your reſpectful Addreſs calls for my beſt thanks and acknowledgements; and I entertain the pleaſing hope, that the Inhabitants of this Province, will derive the greateſt benefits from Your Exertions and Care.

To His Excellency PETER HUNTER Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majeſty's Forces in the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it Pleaſe your Excellency,

We His Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons of Upper Canada in Parliament Aſſembled, return you our thanks for your Excellency's Speech, and for your Condeſcenſion in informing us of the meaſures which you have been pleaſed to take, to carry into effect the law paſſed in the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, relative to the Public Highways.

It is with pleaſure we learn, that the Commiſſioners on the part of our Siſter Colony, Lower Canada, have agreed with thoſe whom your Excellency has been pleaſed to appoint for this Province, and we hope that their proceedings have been ſuch as will merit the approbation of every branch of the Legiſlature.

We feel highly grateful for the benevolent attention, which your Excellency manifeſts to that important part of the Community, the induſtrious Farmer; and we truſt with confidence, that under your Auſpices, and from the patronage of our Parent Country, the cultivation of Hemp, and every other uſeful branch of Agriculture, will rapidly increaſe, and will highly conduce to the Proſperity of this Province.

When the Public Accounts are laid before us, they ſhall be attentively inveſtigated, and we ſincerely pledge ourſelves to promote every meaſure which by the Legiſlature may be deemed neceſſary for the Public Welfare.

ALEXr. M'DONELL,
Speaker Houſe of Aſſembly.

Commons Houſe of Aſſembly, 4th February 1805.

To which His Excellency was pleaſed to return the following reply:

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

I return you my beſt thanks for Your reſpectful Addreſs; and have no doubt, but that your deliberations and exertions, will effectually promote the happineſs and proſperity of His Majeſty's Subjects in this Province.

CHARACTER OF THE HON. THOMAS ERSKINE.

From the intereſting 'Letters of Marcus Auſtin.

ERSKINE, Gibbs, and Garrow,* are the three moſt powerful ſpeakers in the courts of law.

The perſon of Erſkine is ſlender, his height not exceeding the common ſize, his complexion ſallow, his hair dark, his face oval, and a little emaciated, the lower part of his forehead prominent, yet gradually retreating, his eye-brows full, a little perplexed, ſeated near his eyes, which are hazel, open and conciliatory, his noſe, narrow between the eyes, yet perfectly congenial, neither too large nor too ſmall, his mouth gently cloſed, ſeeming ready to await the dictates of his tongue, yet not large enough to give his eloquence its juſt tone, his lips thin meeting in union, and when irritated rather inclining to retreat, than project his chin, gently retreating, which in conjunction with his forehead, beſpeaks the man firm, yet modeſt, poſitive, yet ingenuous.

His countenance, when in a ſtate of repoſe, is unpoſſeſſing, but when he ſpeaks, his geſtures are rhetoric; his looks, perſuaſion; his voice, eloquence: in the glow of animation, commanding, but in the moment of paſſion, when leſt convinced, he is pure intelligence: diſdaining every by-road to conviction, he ſtrips the cauſe of all its ſurrounding circumſtances, places it on its own poſition, true to nature, paints it viſibly to the eye, and buries in oblivion every interfering particular. Both judge and jury are proſtrate in chains. It is the contention of principle, no matter whoſe, or what the intereſt; it heaven were concerned, it is ſtill the contention of principle. Of all cauſes which could ariſe, the preſent ſeems to involve the deepeſt conſequences: there is no diſtinction now between the great and the little, every thing but the point in queſtion is forgotten; Erſkine and his cauſe are ſovereign over all. Now flows the fountain of juſtice, now are explored the receſſes of iniquity, now are the deep foundations of fraud broken up. His eloquence becomes a torrent which ſweeps away every mound which art of ſauſtiſtue had raiſed: no longer had the law a ſingle hard feature: no perplexities, no uncertainties, no idle evaſions! Saturnian Jove deſcends with his equal ſcales, cumming retires in ſhame, oppreſſion lets go its victim, and innocence is ſeated on the throne of equity. At length, Erſkine himſelf, by degrees is forgotten, and forgé a himſelf; he rites to an effort not his own, and ſinks under ſuperior feelings, while the judge and jury, convinced even to enthuſiaſm, are impatient to withhold the verdict.

O, ſacred tribunal! guarded in the ſhotleſt ermine† of juſtice. O, hallowed walls! where party ſpirit never enters, where the oppreſſed breathe their etherial element. O, glorious inſtitution! which chains the paſſions of men,

* The robes of the Judges are faced with ermine.
† The Engliſh Lawyers are dreſſed, when in Court, in a gown, (black) band and tie wig.

York, 9th February, 1805.

To the Electors of the County of York, and the East Riding of the County of Durham, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

THE much to be lamented, and truly affecting loss sustained by the Public, in the premature fates of so many valuable Citizens, is a calamity of melancholy magnitude and distressing operation; and is to the interests, as well as to the feelings of this small Community, a wound bordering upon vital: a wound which will long remain unhealed, and a disaster of which the effects will be painfully felt by the Bench, the Bar, Society, the Legislature and the Country.

The severe dispensation holds forth an humiliating picture to human pride, and this affecting lesson to the survivors of those departed Worthies, that neither blooming health, nor blooming prospects, nor the undissembled affection of admiring friends, can avert the awful fate which, He who rules the Winds and Waves, dispenses to Man.

Grief excited by such a cause is surely sacred; for if genial benevolence combined with a brilliant catalogue of practical virtues, be a claim upon the affections of society—society will surely drop a tributary tear to the memories of so many of its brightest ornaments. However, this consoling hope, this fervid assurance, remains to those whose nearer connection renders the loss more individually afflicting: that the Sovereign Disposer of all events, is the Widow's and the Orphan's, the good Man's and the Christian's Friend. Be it the office of active piety to praise that beneficent Being for unnumbered blessings received at his hands, and to convey the sympathetic sigh which friendship heaves at the severing stroke to his glowing bosom; where may their spirits find a resting place, whom beyond the fainteſt illusions of hope, are now numbered amongſt the dead. Bowing, as we ought, to the will of an overruling Providence, let us, whilſt we feel with the tenderneſs of men, submit with the fortitude of Chriſtians, and ſuffer the tide of grief which flows for the loſs of ſuch precious friends, to ſubſide into a calm of pious reſignation.

Gentlemen, the unfortunate event will conſequently produce an Election to the vacant ſeats in the Houſe of Aſſembly. For that of York, ſo ably and ſo honorably filled by my departed friend, I offer myſelf a Candidate. If I ſucceed to it, my abilities, however ſlender, I pledge myſelf religiouſly to conſecrate to the ſervice of my Country; and may that liberty which is the birthright of Freemen and the gift of our God, be perpetuated by a well diſpoſed People and a well choſen Legiſlature. I ſhall be thankful for Support at the day of Election,

I am, Gentlemen,
yours, &c.

Madame Touſſaint Louverture.

The following article is given in one of our late London papers, as an extract of a private letter from New York, dated September 6 1804.

"The widow of the unfortunate Touſſaint has juſt landed upon our Continent. Her account of her own and her huſband's ſufferings from Bonaparte's tyranny and executioners, would be incredible, were they not already equalled by the Corſican's former atrocities, and thoſe of his accomplices. Her mutilated limbs and numerous wounds are, beſides viſible proofs of the rocks and other inſtruments of torture from which ſhe has ſuffered in the dungeons of free, enlightened, and civilized France, and, under which, little doubt remains that General Touſſaint expired. From the moment Le Clerc, by perfidy and breach of treaties, got her huſband and herſelf into his poſſeſſion, they were loaded with chains, and during their whole paſſage to France they continued in irons, with hardly food enough to ſupport life. At their landing at Bordeaux, they were ſeparated, though ſhut in the ſame priſon.—What happened ſince to her huſband ſhe does not know, nor is ſhe yet certain whether he has periſhed, as the French papers have publiſhed, in a dungeon at Beſançon; or, whether, with a mutilated body, he continues to breathe the peſtilential air of French gaols, expoſed to the cruelties, and enduring a refinement in torments. Her firſt examination was before Lucien Bonaparte's brother in-law, the police commiſſary at Bordeaux, Pierre Pierre, who told her, "that her grave was already dug, and that her laſt day was come, if ſhe did not immediately diſcover the place where her huſband's ſecret correſpondence with the Engliſh was concealed, and where his and her own treaſures were buried or depoſited." Having never heard of any ſecret tranſactions with the Engliſh, and being convinced that when Le Clerc ſo perfidiouſly ſurpriſed her huſband, he got poſſeſſion, not only of all his papers, but of all his money, amounting to about 900,000 livres (12,500 l.) ſhe declared herſelf unable to make any diſcoveries. She was then carried back to her priſon, where Pierre Pierre arrived in the midſt of the night, with four Gens d'Armes d'Elite, who dragged her to a ſubterraneous hall. Here the police commiſſary, in ſhewing her the inſtruments of torture, repeated his former queſtions and threats. Her aſſurances, her prayers, her tears, and her declaration, that ſhe was in a ſtate of pregnancy, availed nothing. On the Gens d'Armes laying hold of her, ſhe fainted away. They carried her notwithſtanding, to the cell, where the moſt excruciating pain ſoon deprived her of ſenſe, which ſhe only recovered to feel that the premature delivery of a child, by miſcarriage, was at hand. One of the Gens d'Armes wives was then ſent for, and ſhe was delivered of a dead child. Her ſituation became at laſt ſo deſperate, that the ſurgeon of the priſon was ordered to viſit her, and to prolong a life ſtill neceſſary to the policy, avarice, and ferocity of Bonaparte, and his ferocious goolers. After an illneſs, which continued for ſix months, during which time ſhe had repeated promiſes of her liberty to ſee her huſband, ſhe gathered ſtrength enough to ſupport a journey; and one evening, after dark, Pierre Pierre arrived with a joyful countenance, informing her, that Bonaparte had generouſly permitted her to join her huſband at Paris. She was accompanied, during the journey, by two police agents, and one of the negro girls who came with her to Europe as an attendant.

The former forbade her to mention on the road who ſhe was, under pain of impriſonment; and the latter informed her, by her ſigns only, that ſhe alſo had felt the effects of Bonaparte's tortures, becauſe they were never left by themſelves, nor permitted to ſpeak low, one of the police agents being always with them. She entered Paris at 12 o'clock at night, and was immediately carried to the Prefecture of Police, from whence the Police Prefect, Dubois, ordered her to the Temple. The next evening ſhe was brought before the Grand Judge, Regnier, and the Police Director, Real; their Secretary, Deſmarais, read to her the former interrogatories before Pierre Pierre, at Bordeaux, together with her pretended confeſſions when upon the rack, the Procès Verbal of which was not only

GENTLEMEN,

THE much to be lamented, and truly affecting loss sustained by the Public, in the premature fates of so many valuable Citizens, is a calamity of melancholy magnitude and distressing operation; and is to the interests, as well as to the feelings of this small Community, a wound bordering upon vital: a wound which will long remain unhealed, and a disaster of which the effects will be painfully felt by the Bench, the Bar, Society, the Legislature and the Country.

The severe dispensation holds forth an humiliating picture to human pride, and this affecting lesson to the survivors of those departed Worthies, that neither blooming health, nor blooming prospects, nor the undissembled affection of admiring friends, can avert the awful fate which, He who rules the Winds and Waves, dispenses to Man.

Grief excited by such a cause is surely sacred; for if genial benevolence combined with a brilliant catalogue of practical virtues, be a claim upon the affections of society—society will surely drop a tributary tear to the memories of so many of its brightest ornaments. However, this consoling hope, this fervid assurance, remains to those whose nearer connection renders the loss more individually afflicting: that the Sovereign Disposer of all events, is the Widow's and the Orphan's, the good Man's and the Christian's Friend. Be it the office of active piety to praise that beneficent Being for unnumbered blessings received at his hands, and to convey the sympathetic sigh which friendship heaves at the severing stroke to his glowing bosom; where may their spirits find a resting place, whom beyond the fainteſt illusions of hope, are now numbered amongſt the dead. Bowing, as we ought, to the will of an overruling Providence, let us, whilſt we feel with the tenderneſs of men, submit with the fortitude of Chriſtians, and ſuffer the tide of grief which flows for the loſs of ſuch precious friends, to ſubſide into a calm of pious reſignation.

Gentlemen, the unfortunate event will conſequently produce an Election to the vacant ſeats in the Houſe of Aſſembly. For that of York, ſo ably and ſo honorably filled by my departed friend, I offer myſelf a Candidate. If I ſucceed to it, my abilities, however ſlender, I pledge myſelf religiouſly to conſecrate to the ſervice of my Country; and may that liberty which is the birthright of Freemen and the gift of our God, be perpetuated by a well diſpoſed People and a well choſen Legiſlature. I ſhall be thankful for Support at the day of Election,

I am, Gentlemen,
yours, &c.

The next evening ſhe was brought before the Grand Judge, Regnier, and the Police Director, Real; their Secretary, Deſmarais, read to her the former interrogatories before Pierre Pierre, at Bordeaux, together with her pretended confeſſions when upon the rack, the Procès Verbal of which was not only signed by Pierre Pierre, but by the four Gens d'Armes d'Elite. She was now told to be more explicit, her husband having confessed more than he felt, as the only means not only to obtain her liberty, but to avoid new tortures.

"Having nothing to discover, she persisted in her former denial, and was, therefore, upon a signal from Regnier, seized by the Gens d'Armes in the room, and carried to a dungeon to which she descended sixty six steps. There she was stripped naked, and put again on the rack, when Delmarais questioned her about the names of the secret Agents from the English Governor at Jamaica; of their transactions; of the Houses in England and America, to whom money had been remitted; where, in St. Domingo, they had buried treasure in gold, to the amount of ten millions, &c. What she has suffered at Bourdeaux was merely a trifle to the terrible pains inflicted on her at Paris, which, in a few minutes, deprived her both of the faculty to think and to speak. What happened to her afterwards in the Temple she does not remember, having been entirely deprived of her reason. When she began to recover it, last April, she found herself shut up, and chained in the mad house for women, called La Spetriere, near the Jardin des Plantes, at Paris. When Allemand, the Surgeon General of this Hospital, had made his report of her convalescent state, her second son was permitted to see her; and the consolation she received from his visits soon reflored her as much as she could expect to be on this side of the grave. This lenity of Bonaparte was caused by the promise and engagements of the young man to form a party at St. Domingo against Dessalines; and it was by agreeing to co-operate with her son, that they were both permitted to embark for the American Continent, after previously signing an acknowledgment of the kind treatment they had experienced in France. Both the and her son remained in a house of detention at Paris until an American vessel had been hired to carry them away from Europe. In this house they were treated not only with humanity, but with respect; and, before her departure, she received from Bonaparte one thousand Louis d'ors as an indemnity for her detention in France; and Madame Bonaparte sent her a diamond ring worth five hundred Louis d'ors, with a message, that she felt much for her situation, and desired her to forget the past, but remember that she was born a French Subject.

These particulars of her sufferings Madame Toussaint has related to the widow of a rich Planter of St. Domingo, Madame Bernard, who has sent them, in the above Letter, to a relative in this Country, with the addition that Toussaint's widow has lost, from tortures, the use of her left arm; and has no less than forty four wounds on different parts of her body. Pieces of flesh have been torn from her breast, as with hot irons, together with six nails of her toes!

As the climate of America does not agree with Madame Toussaint's decayed constitution, she intends, as soon as she has collected the wreck of her fortune, to settle at Jamaica, if the British Governor shall think proper.

Prince of Wales's Birth Day.

Windsor, August 12.

This being the birth day of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, their Majesties and the Royal Family received the compliments of the Nobility and Gentry on the happy occasion. The Union Flag was flying the whole day on the top of the Round Tower.

The morning had a lowering appearance, and some smart showers fell, but were soon over, and the afternoon was fair and inviting.

Between seven and eight o'clock in the evening, his Majesty, accompanied by the Queen and Princesses, walked on the Terrace, which was crowded with all the Nobility and Gentry in the neighbourhood, and people, in short, of every description, eager to have a view of their beloved Sovereign, and to be perfectly satisfied—as they were—by their own observation, of his complete recovery.

His Majesty was in excellent spirits, and conversed with many distinguished characters with much familiarity and humour. His memory appears to be as vigorous and correct as ever; for along two lines of considerable length which were formed by his subjects, one on each side of the walk, he spoke to almost all those who were in the front, and who had been formally introduced to him, addressing them each by name.

The Queen was equally condescending, and conversed with several of the Ladies and Gentlemen with much ease and familiarity.

An observation of his Majesty in addressing a certain Lady, is worthy of being mentioned. The subject was Scandal. "Every one (said his Majesty) has two balances, one for weighing his own character, and another for weighing others." Observing a fine coat upon a certain opulent taylor, his Majesty addressed him, and remarked—"The French say, the Coat makes the man.—"L'habit fait l'homme;"—but we must say the contrary of you. "L'homme fait l'habit."—"The Man makes the coat; and yet common report states, that it requires nine taylors to make one man!"—This happy jeu d'esprit affords much delight to the person to whom it was addressed, and among the company was the general talk and merriment of the evening.

His Majesty addressed himself with equal good humour to many others, and particularly complimented Lord Boston on his strict attention to his professional duties as a soldier.

Among the company present were Lords Uxbridge, Camden, Huntley, St. Helen's Hawkesbury, Castlereagh, and Rosslyn.—The beautiful Lady Castlereagh was also there, along with the charming Lady Selina Stewart, who is under her protection. We scarcely ever observed a more finished beauty than the latter, whose looks, shape and motion, seemed to fascinate every beholder.—The keen glance, yet pleasing languor, of her soft blue eye is irresistable. The short petticoat displayed the pink stockings and ancles of the finest shape. Her arms were bare almost to the shoulder, and both for polish, shape and whiteness, are perhaps unequalled. Lady Castlereagh might indeed be compared to Calypso and her Nymph, who enslaved Telemachus.—The Goddess is taller, and more majestick; the Nymph is more soft and fascinating.

The King retired from the Terrace about eight o'clock, leaving a feeling of mingled affection, respect and joy, in the company—affection, for his condescensions, respect for his virtues and station, and joy at the assurance of his perfect recovery. These happy tidings will be received with much exultation by all ranks in every part of the Country.

SALEM, December 21.

That ferocious and dangerous animal commonly denominated the ——— mount, is supposed now to exist in an extensive wood in the town of Boxford. The inhabitants of that town have frequently in the late season, lost their sheep, without being able to account for it; and several persons had reported that they had seen in these woods some animal of an uncommon and terrifying appearance, but without exciting much attention. Some time last month, however, a young man having occasion to go through some part of the woods, he took with him his gun, merely charged for a squirrel, in case he should chance to see one. As he was passing on, his dog, perceiving a squirrel at a little distance, began to bark; but as the young man was going to the place to shoot him, he perceived a large, long bodied, fierce looking animal, apparently of the cat kind, making towards him. He turned and ran, and, winged with terror, sprang upon the trunk of a fallen tree, which lay in a slanting position lodged upon another, and which he could scarcely have ascended in any other circumstance. He had got to about fifteen feet from the ground, when, casting his eye down, he beheld his enemy just on the point of making a leap at him, which caused him immediately to jump to the ground, so that each gained the other's place at the same instant: the young man then suddenly presented his gun at the face of the creature, and fired his small charge but could not determine whether it injured him; but he immediately sprang from the tree again, seized upon the gun, and with his enormous claws scratched and tore the stock. It was fortunate for the young man, that he took the gun for the object of his vengeance; it undoubtedly saved his life; he wrested it from him, turned and ran, and the creature, who, at one bound might have fastened his claws into his prey, did not pursue him: this is attributed to his missing him at the first spring, which is said to have the effect in some measure to disconcert and discourage them. The inhabitants intended to scour the woods, and destroy the creatures, whenever there should be snow to enable them to track their footsteps.

Since preparing the above, we understand there have been two killed near Andover.

The following statistical view of France is given in the Journal de Paris:—"France situated in a temperate zone between the 43d and 51st degree of northern latitude, contains from north to south 240 leagues, and 220 leagues from east to west. Its superficies consists of 3000 square leagues, and its population of 31 591,165 inhabitants, equal to 1000 individuals upon each league. It is divided into 108 departments, 108 prefectorates, 417 districts, and 47,468 communes. Its military state contains 7 divisions, commanded by so many generals of division. Its ecclesiastical establishment consists of 32 archbishops, 58 bishops, 4000 curates, 1,800 under curacies, and 80 consistorial or protestant churches. The war establishment of the army consists of 554,407 men, viz. of the infantry of the line 341,411, light infantry 100,130 cavalry of the line 14,120, light cavalry 68,988, artillery on foot 6,656, artillery on horseback 3229, pioneers, minors, engineers, 5673; in the whole, 554,407. The yearly conscription allows a male of near 2 millions of soldiers. Mr. Dutot has observed, in a work lately published upon the recruiting of the army, that France, when in danger, can choose her defenders among six millions of men able to carry arms. Her maritime power is far from what it was under Louis XIVs and what it will be one day under Bonaparte.—The clear revenue of France, during the year XI. was 589,300,000 livres. Her public debt amount to 1,365,000,000 livres, for which 84 millions interest is paid."

THE BATTLE OF HOHEN-LINDEN,

By THOMAS CAMPBELL, Esq.

On Linden, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay th' untrodden snow
Of Yller rolling rapidly.

But Linden saw another sight
When the drums beat at the dead of night,
Commanding fires of death to light
The darkness of her scenery.

By torch and trumpet fast array'd,
Each warrior drew his battle blade,
And furious every charger neigh'd
To join the dreadful revelry.

Then rush'd the steeds, to battle driven,
Then shook the hills, by thunder riven,
And, volleying like the bolt of heaven,
Far flash'd the red artillery.

And redder still those fires shall glow
On Linden's hills of purpled snow;
And bloodier yet shall be the flow
Of Yller rolling rapidly.

'Tis morn—yet scarce the lurid sun
Can pierce the war-clouds rolling dun,
While furious Frank and fiery Hun
Shout in their sulphrous canopy.

The combat deepens—on the brave,
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich! all your banners wave!
And charge with all your chivalry!

Ah, few shall part when many meet!
The snow shall be their winding-sheet,
And every turf beneath their feet
Shall be a soldier's sepulchre!

THE late Dr. Townfend walking down Broad-ftreet, Briftol, during an illumination, obferved a boy breaking every window which had not a light in it. Mr. T. aiked him how he dared to deftroy people's windows in fuch a manner. O, (faid the urchin) it's all for the good of the trade—I'm a glazier. All for the good of the trade, is it? (faid Mr. T. raifing his cane and breaking the boy's head) that's for the good of my trade—I'm a furgeon.

York, 9th February, 1805.

To the Electors of the County of York, and the East Riding of the County of Durham, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

THE much to be lamented, and truly affecting loss sustained by the Public, in the premature fates of so many valuable Citizens, is a calamity of melancholy magnitude and distressing operation; and is to the interests, as well as to the feelings of this small Community, a wound bordering upon vital: a wound which will long remain unhealed, and a disaster of which the effects will be painfully felt by the Bench, the Bar, Society, the Legislature and the Country.

The severe dispensation holds forth an humiliating picture to human pride, and this affecting lesson to the survivors of those departed Worthies, that neither blooming health, nor blooming prospects, nor the undissembled affection of admiring friends, can avert the awful fate which, He who rules the Winds and Waves, dispenses to Man.

Grief excited by such a cause is surely sacred; for if genial benevolence combined with a brilliant catalogue of practical virtues, be a claim upon the affections of society—society will surely drop a tributary tear to the memories of so many of its brightest ornaments. However, this consoling hope, this fervid assurance, remains to those whose nearer connection renders the loss more individually afflicting: that the Sovereign Disposer of all events, is the Widow's and the Orphan's, the good Man's and the Christian's Friend. Be it the office of active piety to praise that beneficent Being for unnumbered blessings received at his hands, and to convey the sympathetic sigh which friendship heaves at the severing stroke to his glowing bosom; where may their spirits find a resting place, whom beyond the fainted illusions of hope, are now numbered amongst the dead. Bowing, as we ought, to the will of an overruling Providence, let us, whilst we feel with the tenderness of men, submit with the fortitude of Christians, and suffer the tide of grief which flows for the loss of such precious friends, to subside into a calm of pious resignation.

Gentlemen, the unfortunate event will consequently produce an Election to the vacant seats in the House of Assembly. For that of York, to ably and so honorably filled by my departed friend, I offer myself a Candidate. If I succeed to it, my abilities, however slender, I pledge myself religiously to consecrate to the service of my Country: and may that liberty which is the birthright of Freemen and the gift of our God, be perpetuated by a well disposed People and a well chosen Legislature. I shall be thankful for Support at the day of Election,

I am, Gentlemen,
yours, &c.

OFFICIAL ACCOUNT.

Of the late attempt to blow up or set fire to the French Gun-Boats at Boulogne.

Admiralty Office, October 3 1804.

Copy of a letter from the Right Hon. Lord Keith, K. B. Admiral of the blue, &c. to William Marsden, Esq. dated on board his Majesty's Ship the Monarch, off Boulogne, the 3d inst.

Sir,

THEIR Lordships are aware that my attention has, for some time past, been directed to the object of ascertaining the most effectual mode for annoying the enemy's flotillas at their anchorages in front of their ports, under protection of their land batteries.

Having on the afternoon of the 1st inst. arrived at this anchorage, and finding the weather promising to be favorable, and about one hundred and fifty of the flotilla on the outside of the pier, I resolved to make an experiment on a limited scale, of the means of attack which had been provided.

The signal arrangements for this purpose were made on the morning of yesterday. The officers named below* were put in charge of the principal vessels which at this time were to be used. The armed launches, and other boats of the squadron, were appointed to accompany and protect them. The Cattor, Greyhound, and some smaller vessels, were directed to take up an advanced and convenient anchorage for covering the retreat, giving protection to men who might be wounded, and boats that might be crippled, and for towing off the boats in general, in the event of the wind freshening and blowing upon the coast.

The operation commenced at a quarter past nine o'clock last evening, and terminated at a quarter past four this morning, during which time several vessels, prepared for the purpose were exploded amongst, or very close to the flotilla; but an account of the very great distance at which they lay from each other, no very extensive injury seems to have been sustained, although it is evident that there has been very considerable confusion among them, and that two of the brigs and several of the smaller vessels appear to be missing since yesterday at the close of day. I have great satisfaction in reporting, that, notwithstanding a very heavy discharge of shells, shot, and musketry, was kept up by the enemy throughout the night, no casualty whatever, on our part, has been sustained. The enemy made no attempt to oppose their rowing boats to ours

Their Lordships will not expect that, at the present moment, I am to enter much into detail; but I think it my duty to state to them my conviction that, in the event of any great accumulation of the enemy's force in their roadsteads, an extensive and combined operation of a similar nature will hold forth a reasonable prospect of a successful result.

The conduct of the officers and men, who had been employed on this occasion, deserves my highest commendation: I cannot more forcibly impress their merits upon their Lordships' attention, than by remarking, that the service was undertaken, not only in the face of, but immediately under, the whole line of the enemy's land batteries, and their field artillery and musquetry upon the coast, but also under that of upwards of one hundred and fifty armed vessels, ranged round the inner side of the bay; and that the officers and men, who could so deliberately and resolutely advance into the midst of the flotilla, under such circumstances, must be considered worthy of being entrusted with the performance of any service, however difficult or dangerous it may appear to be, and consequently to be highly deserving of their Lordships' protection.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c. &c.
William Marsden, Esq.

KEITH.

England and Spain.—The last accounts from Spain (to Nov. 17. 1804) are of a pacific aspect; and those from England are not hostile. At the last date from Cadiz, no preparations for war with Great Britain were making; nor any talk of expected war;—notwithstanding the capture of the treasure-frigates had been fully confirmed. On recurring to the information given by Lord Harrowby, to the London merchants, in September last, it will be found, that the unneutral armaments making in Spain, had caused the English ministry to demand satisfactory explanations of their destination;—which Spain had neglected or refused to make. About the same time the Spanish Ambassador, in London, was informed, that until a satisfactory explanation had taken place, no ships of war, and particularly those supposed to be freighted with treasures, would be permitted to enter the ports of Spain. It has since been asserted in the American papers, that an armament, destined for the Floridas, to support the Spanish authority therein, had been made; but had since been dismantled.—If this was the armament complained of—it is be discontinued; and the Spanish government has thus represented it to the Court of London, and promised to observe an honest neutrality, in our opinion, the offensible cause of the dispute has ceased to exist; and unless some latent cause of hostility remains, a war between the two nations will not now take place.—Whether the vessels and property captured, will be restored, is a question we cannot solve. Our opinion is, that they will not be, during the present war. In one of the last English papers, it is mentioned, that the money would be retained in England, pending another negotiation to be opened, on the old subject of the "Manilla ransom." It may be recollected, that in 1762, a detachment of troops, from Madras, composed of soldiers, sailors, seapoys, cafres, lascars, topaſes, and French and German deserters, and commanded by General (Sir William) Draper, in an expedition against the Spanish Philipine isles, took the town of Manilla, by storm; and the officers found it extremely difficult to prevent the motley troops from making the city feel all the rapacious fits to which a city taken by storm is subjected from the common men. Promises of remuneration for their bravery and sufferings were made this collection; and on capitulation was entered into between the British and Spanish officers for such compensation as might satisfy them, and exempt the town from pillage.—By one of the articles, four millions of dollars were to be paid by Spain, as a ransom for the city of Manilla, and the effects of the inhabitants;—who, in consequence, were protected in their religion liberties and property.—Peace succeeding soon after, the Spanish government refused to ratify the capitulation; and the payment of the ransom has been evaded to this day. It would be in the style of Mr. Pitt's "gestion of affairs," were the money to be detained as a guarantee of the fulfilment of the capitulation on the part of Spain.

BLOCKADE OF THE ELBE.

We have no longer, says letters from Hamburgh, any hope of getting rid of the blockade of the Elbe. The repeated solicitations of our Deputy at London have only obtained a reply to the following effect: "That as long as the French shall occupy the German States of His Britannic Majesty, the blockade of the Elbe and Weser shall be continued with the general rigour." It is added, that the British Government declared to the Hamburgh Deputy, their astonishment at his attempting to make fresh applications, considering that too much had been already granted in permitting the Hamburgh ships to coast the Danish coast, to proceed to Tonningen, and return from thence. The intervention of the Prussian Minister for the same object was not more successful, and the Russian Ambassador refused to interfere in the business.

VESUVIUS AND ÆTNA.

THE earthquakes (says a Paris paper) continue almost daily at Spoletto, which is nearly deserted by its inhabitants. The lava of Vesuvius constantly overflows and alarms the neighboring country. Most of the towns and villages in its vicinity are abandoned, the people having carried with them their most valuable effects, concluding from several circumstances, that some new and terrible explosion is not distant.

Letters from Sicily state, that on the 10th August Mount Ætna ceased, for 24 hours, even to emit smoke, but this calm was succeeded on the 24th, early in the morning, with a terrible explosion, and a noise as if millions of cannons had been fired at once. When the last letter of the 18th left that island, a shower of fire continued still for three leagues round Ætna, from the burning materials thrown up by this mountain. No earthquake has been experienced, but a subterraneous sound, like thunder, was heard all over Sicily, particularly at and near Messina.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Surry Session.—The blind Sailor.

Robert Hewell was indicted for stealing a bundle containing wearing apparel; and also a sum of money, amounting to 7l. and upwards, the property of Francis Cooke, a blind sailor.

Mr. Morris, in a most impressive and animated manner, shortly stated the case, on the part of the prosecution.

The prosecutor being permitted by the court to tell his story in his own way, related it nearly as follows;

"Please your worship, my name is Frank Cooke; I have served his Majesty for several years, and have seen some hard service before now; you see that mark (pointing to a mark over his right eye.) About five years ago we engaged with a French frigate, and when she had struck we went on board her; but like a treacherous enemy, as she always was, when we got on deck, they attacked us, and in the fight I was struck just there (pointing) with a boarding pike it entered my head, and I fell overboard. On being taken up, seven splinters mixed with pieces of my hat, were taken out of my skull, and I immediately lost the sight of that eye; the loss of the other soon following, and I become blind, but still remained on board as captain's mate. The prisoner, Robert Howell, I had known for several years; we were messmates together, and intimately acquainted; when I was about to be discharged from the hospital ship at Sheerness, the Doctor appointed Bob Howell to be my guide and assistant as far as Bristol, whence we were going to our friends, we left the ship in a boat, and were landed somewhere in London, but I could not tell where. We had not gone far through the street, when we came to a gate way, at the corner of the street, and he took my stick from me, tore my pocket, where I had my money sewed up, off my jacket, and ran away with my bundle of clothes.—After remaining on the spot for near two hours, I made the best of my way as well as I could.—As I went along, I fell foul of a poor woman's tea-table, at the corner of a street, and had like to throw the poor creature's tea-things all about; but I thank Heaven, I did her no mischief; however, I told her my lamentable story, and she pitied me: a poor little ragged boy came up, and the begged of him to conduct me to Bow-street; the poor dear fellow led me along, and when I told him my story, the good natured soul put a penny-piece into my hand: we went along until I found myself on Bow street office steps. "Here is the place you will be sure to get redress," said the boy. There was no one at the office then, so I asked for the next public house, and he brought me to one just opposite. "I must now leave you," says he. I was sorry for it; but do you know, he soon came back again; and the dear generous fellow put another penny-piece into my hand, and bid me good bye.—Poor fellow! I shall never forget his generosity. I then got some porter with the money he gave me, and soon after was brought to the office, where I told my story. I have lived like a prince ever since. His bundle was then produced, and being asked, could he identify his cloths? he answered, "let me see, I will soon shew you." Then taking a blue spotted handkerchief, he felt the several corners of it, and holding it up, "See, there Gentlemen, there's a darn I made with my own hands, with white thread, its a clumsy thing." He was then given a pair of pantaloons and observed, "yes, yes, there are my pantaloons, I know them; they were too long for me, and I cut them short; with the pieces I cut off, I strengthened the inside of the thighs; see here they are, and my own clumsy work." His trowsers were then produced. "Now, I know these, they are my dirty trowsers I threw off the day I left the ship, and having turned them inside out, I folded them up, stocking fashion, to prevent their dirtying my other clothes; if you'd look, you'll see!"

In the course of the blind man's story he narrated an instance equally wonderful as his good fortune, in tracking this man:—it appeared, that while on duty on board in an engagement, in one of his Majesty's ships, in the Mediterranean he and one of the Lieutenants, in the act of boarding, were wounded and knocked overboard, and had to swim for their lives together. They were both saved by the boats; but never met after, until the day when the poor blind sailor made his appearance at Greenwich to claim a pension for the loss of his sight,—he heared a voice he knew, and called the Lieutenant by his name; he asked him the usual question, what he was doing there, and was answered to claim a pension; the Lieutenant, on enquiring found it was a fortunate meeting for his blind friend, who had come there unprovided with the necessary certificates; he soon furnished them, and aided that with his personal application, and succeeded in obtaining a pension ticket for him 30l. per annum.

When the prisoner was asked, would he ask him any questions, he answered in the negative, and the blind man immediately exclaimed, "That's he, that's his voice! I know it well!—He a British sailor! Oh, no! not he indeed!

The other witness proved that on the 2d of September last, the prisoner went to the White Lion Inn, in Tooley street, in the Borough, and brought with him a bag containing wearing apparel, he gave the landlord a five pound note, two of one pound each, and some change, to keep for him.—When he was apprehended, about a week afterwards, he acknowledged he had left the hospital ship in company with a blind sailor, who parted with him at the corner of a street, and did not see him afterwards. This was the prisoner's defence.

The chairman said, he would not trouble the jury with summing up the evidence, it was perfectly clear and circumstantial, and they were fully competent to judge of the facts. Without any hesitation, the jury found the prisoner guilty.

The chairman, in passing sentence, observed, that it was a case of the most aggravated nature that ever came before a court; he could not express the sensations he felt at the inhuman and abominable conduct of the prisoner; for no human observations of his imprest it stronger on the court, than the evidence of the blind sailor himself. The prisoner was then sentenced to seven years transportation, and in the mean time was confined to hard labour in the house of correction, Newington.

To the Electors of the County of York, and the East Riding of the County of Durham, &c.

GENTLEMEN,

THE much to be lamented, and truly affecting loss sustained by the Public, in the premature fates of so many valuable Citizens, is a calamity of melancholy magnitude and distressing operation; and is to the interests, as well as to the feelings of this small Community, a wound bordering upon vital; a wound which will long remain unhealed, and a disaster of which the effects will be painfully felt by the Bench, the Bar, Society, the Legislature and the Country.

The severe dispensation holds forth an humiliating picture to human pride, and this affecting lesson to the survivors of those departed Worthies, that neither blooming health, nor blooming prospects, nor the undissembled affection of admiring friends, can avert the awful fate which, He who rules the Winds and Waves, dispenses to Man.

Grief excited by such a cause is surely sacred; for if genial benevolence combined with a brilliant catalogue of practical virtues, be a claim upon the affections of society—society will surely drop a tributary tear to the memories of so many of its brightest ornaments. However, this consoling hope, this fervid assurance, remains to those whose nearer connection renders the loss more individually afflicting: that the Sovereign Disposer of all events, is the Widow's and the Orphan's, the good Man's and the Christian's Friend. Be it the office of active piety to praise that beneficent Being for unnumbered blessings received at his hands, and to convey the sympathetic sigh which friendship heaves at the severing stroke to his glowing bosom; where may their spirits find a resting place, whom beyond the faintest illusions of hope, are now numbered amongst the dead. Bowing, as we ought, to the will of an overruling Providence, let us, whilst we feel with the tenderness of men, submit with the fortitude of Christians, and suffer the tide of grief which flows for the loss of such precious friends, to subside into a calm of pious resignation.

Gentlemen, the unfortunate event will consequently produce an Election to the vacant seats in the House of Assembly. For that of York, so ably and so honorably filled by my departed Friend, I offer myself a Candidate. If I succeed to it, my abilities, however slender, I pledge myself religiously to consecrate to the service of my Country: and may that liberty which is the birthright of Freemen and the gift of our God, be perpetuated by a well disposed People and a well chosen Legislature. I shall be thankful for Support at the day of Election,

I am, Gentlemen,
yours, &c.

STATISTICAL ACCOUNT OF AUSTRIA.

Tranſlated form the PUBLICISTE.

Auſtria may be conſidered, after France, as the firſt power in Europe, as well from the extent of its territory as the amount its population.

The territory of Auſtria is eſtimated at 158,840 geographical miles, comprehending from 25 to 26 millions of inhabitants. The peace eſtabliſhment of the army is fixed by a regulation of the laſt year at 278,590 men, and is compoſed of

177,840 Infantry
35,760 Cavalry
11,000 Artillery
44,000 Troops on the frontiers.
10,000 Detached Corps.

The war eſtabliſhment of the army, according to Boettiches, amounts to 363,455 men, diſtributed into 136 regiments.

The revenues of the Auſtrian States, amount to 240 millions, which formerly exceeded the ordinary expenditure but the late wars impoſed the neceſſity of loans, and have raiſed the public debt to 960 millions of francs.

The principal cities are Vienna, the population of which is 254,000 inhabitants Venice 180,000, Prague 80,000, Gratz 35,000, Preſburgh 80,000, Bude, including Peſt, from which it is ſeparated by a bridge over the Danube, 38,000 Cracovia 24,000, Lemberg 20,000, Saltzbourg 20,000, Trieſte 18,000.

The publick buildings of Vienna, Bude, and ſtill more of thoſe of Venice, merit the traveller's attention.

The eſtabliſhments of the Hungarian Nobles correſpond to their great wealth, but not always to the manners of modern Europe.

In the palaces of Eſterhazy, ſituated ſome leagues from Preſburg, and which the Germans compare to Verſailles, there were, ſays Fortis, when he viſited it in 1792, 400 clocks, and not one book.

The maritime commerce of Auſtria is of recent date, and but little diſtinguiſhed in Europe. The internal trade, nouriſhed by natural wealth, is proſperous. The manufactures of Vienna are of ſilk, linen, gold, ſilver, porcelain, and looking glaſs. Bohemia is famed for the quality of its glaſs, and papers. Auſtria furniſhes horſes, wine, corn, and ſaffron. The vaſt plains of Hungary give abundant paſture, and its mountains abound in rich mines of gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, particularly the opale, which in the eaſt is preferred to the diamond; and they produce the choiceſt wines. The mines of opale are ſituated at Czervenitz, in the ſame latitude with Cremnitz, ſo much celebrated for its mines of gold.

The mines of Syria, and Moravia furniſh iron in abundance; thoſe of Iſtria yield annually more than 300,000 lbs of quick-ſilver; thoſe of Wieliſka, in Poland, yield immenſe quantities of ſalt. The extenſive foreſts of the Carpathian Mountains, furniſh the fineſt timber.

Auſtria, like France, is indebted for her wealth to her native productions.

ST. DOMINGO.

As an inſtance of the ſplendid and extravagant ſtyle in which the nobility of Hayti live; I will give a deſcription of an entertainment that was given by Lady Deſſalines on Sunday the 12th of February, at which I was preſent.

A few days previous to the appointed time, invitations printed on fine paper, with guilt borders, of which the following is a tranſlation, were diſtributed.

The Cape, February 11, 1804.

"LADY DESSALINES
Invites Monſieur————to a dinner and a ball, which ſhe gives to-morrow, preciſely at ſeven o'clock in the evening; ſhe hopes that he will do her the ſweet and agreeable favour of being of the party."

It was alſo given out at the ſame time, that in conſequence of this entertainment, the performances at the Theatre (which is always open on Sunday) would commence ſooner than common, that the gueſts might have an opportunity of aſſembling there, for the purpoſe of proceeding in a body to the houſe of feſtivity. The theatre opened at half paſt five, and was attended by a very large and reſpectable audience, including the greateſt part of the quality. At the concluſion, we moved on in a large croud, and at about eight o'clock found ourſelves before the gates of the Government-houſe. It is a grand and ſpacious building ſituate a ſhort diſtance from the ſtreet, having a gravel walk and green lawns in front of it. The avenue from the gates to the door of the houſe was brilliantly illuminated with about one thouſand ſmall lamps. We paſſed through the entry of the houſe into a large ſaloon, erected purpoſely for this occaſion. It was about ten yards broad, and one hundred long, covered and entirely lined with canvaſs. It was elegantly ornamented inſide with flowers, branches of trees, three hundred ſmall lamps of coloured glaſs hung round the room, four large chandeliers over the table, twelve great looking glaſſes, and a marble ſtatue at each end of the room in a receſs. The table contained all the meats, fruits, vegetables, poultry, paſtry, confectionary and liquors that could poſſibly be procured. Among theſe were beef, mutton, turkies, ducks, fowls, oranges, pine-apples, alligator pears, apples, pies, puddings, jellies, ſweet-meats, cakes, and claret, Madeira, and Champaign wines.

There were two hundred and fifty gueſts at the table, beſides many more who were obliged to ſtand. They conſiſted of General Chriſtophe at the centre, Lady Deſſalines on his right hand, and his wife on the left; ſix or eight other black generals, as many colonels and others of high rank, beſides all the other principal officers of the government and army then at the Cape; the Captain and all the officers of a Britiſh man of war; about 30 Americans; a great number of the white French inhabitants of the moſt reſpectable claſs, and an enormous croud of mulatto and black wenches. The table was ſurrounded by ſailors to keep off the rabble, who had rushed in, in thouſands, to ſee this elegant ſight, and a grand band of muſic played the whole time we were eating. This dinner came nearer to the idea one would form of a feaſt of the gods of fabulous hiſtory, than any thing I have ever ſeen or heard of, and I am confident that nothing in America ever equalled it for ſplendour, variety, or luxury.

General Chriſtophe was dreſſed in a ſcarlet coat, embroidered with gold lace with two golden epaulets, a large cocked hat with gold lace border, boots with gold buckles and taſſels, an embroidered veſt, and pantaloons of nankeen beautifully worked in front. The other officers were dreſſed in proportion, ſome however very little inferior to their General's. Lady Deſſalines wore a plain dreſs, her hair, or as her wool was ornamented with artificial flowers, beads, and combs, her arms with ſuperb rings and bobs, and her finger with a ring containing a ſmall gold watch, ſet in diamonds, valued at ſeveral thouſand dollars. The other ladies of diſtinction were alſo encumbered with trinkets and beads, but none of them ſo extravagantly as the Governor's lady.

At the concluſion of the feaſt ſeveral toaſts were given out by Chriſtophe, and drank with loud expreſſions of applauſe; among theſe were the General of Hayti (Deſſalines who were not preſent,) his Britannic Majeſty and the Preſident of the United States. The firſt was applauded by the negroes, the ſecond by the Engliſhmen, and the third by the Americans. After this the company retired into various parts of the houſe and garden, to keep out of the way until the tables ſhould be removed, and preparations made for the dance; when this was arranged, the muſic ſtruck up, and the whole room was in motion. As I declined dancing I had nothing to do but lounge about the room and be a ſilent ſpectator. Their chief dances were cotillions; moſt of them danced well, and ſome of them elegantly. In one place would be ſeen a genteel handſome Frenchman dancing to an ugly vulgar looking black face; and in another a delicate young Lady as fair as a lilly, going right and left with a great big negro that looked as frightful as Satan himſelf. I confeſs I often pitied the poor creatures that were obliged to ſubmit to ſuch a degradation, but when I afterwards conſidered that they would perhaps be maſſacred by the hands of theſe tame partners, my blood boiled with indignation.

It would be reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that upon an occaſion of this kind, where there was ſuch a large and crouded aſſembly of gentry, periſpiring with the fatigue of dancing, and in a hot climate, that the atmoſphere of the room would be impregnated with a certain ſomething, that is better imeli than deſcribed. Upon this ſubject I beg leave to remark, that the very general uſe of muſk and other ſcents in this place, ſo abſolutely predominated, that a ſmell of any other kind, ſtands no ſort of a chance. In fine, a ball room in St. Domingo, contains as pure and ſweet air as one in Philadelphia, except as it relates to the practice of perfuming.

About one o'clock of the following morning, being a little fatigued, I concluded upon going home, but was ſurpriſed to find that the gates were faſtened, by order, and the ſoldiers ſtationed there were ordered to let nobody out. In this dilemma I found but one remedy, and without being very ceremonious, I quietly laid down upon a bench in the ball room, and took a nap. I awoke a little after day light, and found them ſtill dancing. All round me on the floor and benches were to be ſeen ſleeping, beauties of all colours but white who it ſeems had been ſeized with the ſame infection that I had been. At ſun-riſe we left to eating again; a ſupper was ſet before us, being the remains of our dinner, with ſome union ſoup, on which we regaled for a few minutes, then paid our reſpects to our hoſteſs, and went home.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Carter to his friend in Providence (R. I.) dated St. Thomas, Nov. 26.

"Since I laſt wrote you from hence, this town has been completely deſtroyed by a tremendous fire, which commenced at about ſeven o'clock on the evening of the 22d inſtant, in a ſtore next to the King's wharf, and is ſaid to have been occaſioned by a negro ſmoking the muſquito curtains of a bed.—At firſt it was apparently very trifling, having been ſoon diſcovered, and there was not a breath of air to increaſe it; but as there were neither engines nor fire-buckets in the place, the inhabitants could not extinguiſh it. In about fifteen minutes afterwards a freſh breeze came from the Eaſtward, blowing directly in range of the town, and threatening it with total deſtruction. The inhabitants being unaccuſtomed to ſuch ſcenes, and not knowing of any method to ſtop it, were in the utmoſt conſternation. The American captains ſo ſoon went immediately on ſhore, with their crews, and propoſed to the commandant that they ſhould go to leeward of the fire, and pull down or blow up ſeveral houſes, and by that means ſtop its further progreſs; but this was objected to, and forbidden. After this, the inhabitants declined attempting to check the devouring element, and each one endeavoured to preſerve his own property, leaving the flames to take their courſe. They continued to rage with the greateſt fury until about 5 o'clock the next morning, when the wind fortunately veered more to the Southward and by this means a few houſes at the Weſt end of the town were preſerved. About 1500 houſes and ſtores were burnt, and the damage by loſs of goods, &c. is eſtimated at ten millions of dollars. Vaſt quantities of money, both gold and ſilver, were melted, the flames having extended ſo rapidly as not to allow time for ſaving it. There were ſeveral lives loſt; one old gentleman, who had a large quantity of caſh, preferred being burnt with it rather than quit his treaſure; he accordingly periſhed, and the next morning his bones were found extended over his iron cheſt. Nearly all our property was preſerved, owing to the exertions of our crew.—The government has laid an embargo on all veſſels, and put in requiſition all proviſions in the harbour, for the uſe of the truly wretched inhabitants; ſome of them, previous to the fire, were living in eaſe and affluence, but are now obliged to beg a piece of bread for their deſtitute families. The negroes, and the poorer claſſes of white inhabitants, are employed in digging among the ruins, and in the water, for the remains of proviſions that were burnt, and which they devour without the leaſt cooking. Few, I believe, have witneſſed greater ſcenes of diſtreſs and devaſtation than have been exhibited by this deſtructive fire.—Four fifths of the inhabitants are obliged to ſleep under buſhes in the mountains, for want of better ſhelter."

From late Engliſh Papers.

The Americans, in point of language, have riſen to ſuch a refinement, that a Grave Digger in that country is called a Planter.

A punning Upholſterer, in Bond-ſtreet, who is ſaid to be the ſon of a Fort Major, was found the other day by an old acquaintance ſewing bed ticks together. "Ah!" ſaid the viſitor, "do I live to find the ſon of a great ſoldier with a needle and thread in his hand inſtead of a ſword?" "Why," remarked the upholſterer, "Don't I ſhew clearly by that my diſpoſition to tack inſt."

An Iriſhman at Dover aſked a countryman of his there, if he could direct him to the Tiverton gun brig? "Go to the firſt that you can ſee (ſaid Pat) for by——they are all Turkiſh."

Did the ſons of the numerous and immenſe armies of France depend upon its own productions, inſtead of being extorted from other ſtates, that country would long ſince have been exhauſted of its proviſions. This is, perhaps, why Bonaparte means by occupying territories of other ſovereigns provinionally.

The fashion of nudity ſo rapidly gains prevalence amongſt our Elegantes, that they ſeem to be determined that "ſeeing the naked" ſhall no longer be conſidered as a part of the catalogue of charitable works.

JESUITS.

The Jeſuits at Naples have already made numerous novices. The ice of age, and long perſecution, have not diminiſhed their activity and zeal. The colleges of Gesù de Dieu, of Nanzarenis, and Monte Fulgori, are already crowded with diſciples and novices, ſo that the profeſſors have hardly time to inſtruct them all, and, therefore, have been obliged to refuſe admittance to ſeveral. Every noble family, attached to the King and to the Court, has ſome of their children or relations in the new Jeſuits' Colleges, greatly protected by the Queen as well as by the King; who according to report, have determined, for the future, to have their confeſſors of that order. It is ſaid, that the King of Sardinia has invited ſome of them to the iſland of Sardinia, and promiſed to reſtore to their order its former property. Another rumour, though not credited, ſays, that the ſame propoſals and offers have been made to them by England, with regard to the Iſland of Malta.

MARRIED,—in Cambridge [Eng.] October 15, 1804. James Gordon, a ſerjeant in his majeſty's ſervice, to Miss Nancy Pitcher, with a fortune of 3000l. Miss P. was in the conſtant habit of attending the evening parade, where the fine figure and manly appearance of the ſerjeant, added to the adroitneſs with which he performed the military manœuvres, made a deep impreſſion on her tender and unſuſpecting heart. She was not long in diſcloſing her paſſion to him: for one evening a friend of her's called the ſerjeant from parade, and acquainted him of her inviolable attachment. The gallant ſon of Mars, who had fought and bled in the defence of his country, anticipated the envied pleaſures of ſpending the remainder of his days in the arms of beauty, and in the enjoyment of domeſtic and conjugal felicity, and immediate cloſed with the propoſal.

The fate of the miſerable Hanoverians at Chelmsford, ſays the London Morning Poſt of October 26, was truly pitiable. They were marched (193) into that town—63 were littered down in a ſtable; by ſome accident (either their pipes or by ſome other means) the chips of a carpenter's ſhop were ſet on fire together with ſome hay, and before the whole of theſe poor men could be got out, the fire fell in on them, by which means eighteen were burnt to death, and ſix miſerably ſcorched. Many loſt their clothes. By the bounty of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Suſſex they were comfortably re-clothed, and enabled to proceed on their march. The Duke expreſſed himſelf with very much feeling on the melancholy occaſion, and proved, by his well timed liberality the ſentiments of a princely heart.

Retaliation—an hiſtorical fact.

After the firſt ſettlement of the Floridas by the Spaniards, the country was neglected by them, and ſome Frenchmen ſettled in it; and under the reign of Philip II. of Spain a fleet was fitted out at Cadiz to deſtroy them. His orders were executed with barbarity. The priſoners were hanged on trees with this inſcription, "not as Frenchmen, but as heretics." This cruelty was ſoon after revenged by Dominic de Gourgues, a ſkilful and intrepid ſeaman of Gaſcony, an enemy to Spaniards, and paſſionately fond of glory and hazardous enterpriſes. He ſold his eſtate, built ſome ſhips, and with a ſelect band of adventurers like himſelf embarked for Florida. He drove the Spaniards from all their poſts with incredible valor and activity, defeated them in every encounter, and by way of retaliation hung the priſoners on trees with this inſcription, "not as Spaniards, but as aſſaſſins."

The following diſſuaſives againſt Suicide are ſuggeſted by ſome recent melancholy inſtances of that crime.

If you are diſtreſſed in mind, live; ſerenity and joy may yet drawn upon your ſoul.

If you have been contented and cheerful, live; and generouſly diffuſe what happineſs to others.

LONDON, October 3 to October 21.

It is confidently reported, and solemnly believed, in France, that Bonaparte has dispatched as many by secret means as Robespierre did openly by the Guillotine. Not a day passes but somebody is seized by the Agents of Government, and removed from prison to prison, till it is impossible to trace them, and either destroyed at once, or suffered to linger out their miserable lives in a dungeon. This statement, we are assured, is by no means an exaggeration; and we are assured also, that the Earl of Oxford has returned to England with many authentic narratives of the horrible enormities perpetrated by order of the Corsican Monster.

The Minister of the Police, Senator Fouche, has written a long Letter to all the Bishops of the French Empire, reproaching many of them with their attachment to the Bourbons, and their schism; among other paragraphs this is remarkable—"Do you imagine that the true worship is not restored in our temples because the Bourbons have not been restored to the throne? is there the last connexion between the destiny of the Bourbons, and the invariable existence of the Gallican Church?"

The King of Sweden is arrived at Stralsund, on his way to Stockholm, after having spent more than a year in Germany.

The petition to which our Ribbonmen have affixed is highly creditable, Mr. J. Grimshaw, of the Manchester Corps, lately shot, at Blackfoot, a tea gull at the distance of 200 yards; and Captain Dewar, who commands a Rifle Corps at Cuckereth Camp, consisting of 200 of the West York, a few days since, shot a pigeon, likewise on the wing, at the distance of 100 yards; as did, at the same time, the Hon. Capt. Hawke.

From a London Paper of November 26.

It is said that government yesterday received from the Continent, the very important intelligence that the Austrian ambassador had made arrangements for his immediate departure from the court of Petersburgh, the emperors of France and Austria having agreed on the attack and conquest of Turkey. Private letters add, that the king of Prussia had declared himself hostile to this new plan of aggrandisement.

Bonaparte has furnished another comment upon the Law of Nations, in the stoppage and robbery of Mr. Wagstaff, the British messenger, on his way to Berlin, with dispatches. This act of highway robbery and felony was committed on the 13th, at noon day, between Rhena and Schwerin, by six French soldiers, one of whom was of superior rank to the rest, within cannon shot of the out-posts of the French army to Hanover. They robbed Mr. Wagstaff and a Hanoverian courier who was with him of the dispatches, and made the strictest search least they should have omitted any of the official papers—They dragged them both out of the carriage, and beat them most unmercifully. They tore their clothes, unsacked their pockets, and robbed them of their watches, money, and every article except their wearing apparel. They tore the insignia from Mr. Wagstaff's breast, and then tied him and the Hanoverian to two separate trees, in an adjoining wood. After some time Mr. Wagstaff contrived to release himself and the courier, and imagining, of course that it was perfectly unnecessary for him to proceed to Berlin without the dispatches, returned to London, where he arrived yesterday.

MONTREAL, February 18, 1805.

By a gentleman who arrived yesterday from New-York, we were kindly favored with Lloyd's Evening Post, (a London paper) of the 12th December—from which the following articles, are extracted.

LONDON, December 10.

The Tigris, Captain Graham, from India, arrived last Saturday off Hastings, with intelligence of the suppression of the hostilities which had been newly raised in that country, by the Mahratta Chief Holkar, against the British Government. Holkar's hostilities began with a successful eruption into the territory of Bundelcond. Of the British forces, a part were cut off, part effected a retreat. The retreat was continued in such trepidation, that they marched with great loss, 22 miles in one sultry summer's day. The commander in Chief instantly put under arrest, the officers to whose misconduct this loss and disgrace were imputed. He then advanced himself, with the main strength of his army against the enemy. This movement was at a time in the season the least favorable for such an operation. Yet Holkar was reduced to immediate submission.—Of the terms on which submission was accepted, we are not yet informed.

In Ceylon the preparations and enterprizes of the King of Candy to press the war into the British territories, have been entirely frustrated. Several very successful and destructive inroads have lately been made by the British into the Candian territory.

December 13.

In addition to the naval glories of our country, Capt. Sir Richard Strachan of the Donegal, has captured off St. Mary's, the Amphitrite, Spanish frigate, after a short action of eight minutes, in which the Spanish captain was killed, and a few of his men wounded.

DOVER, Dec. 10.—On Sunday about 3 o'clock, the premeditated expedition against Calais took place, under the directions of Sir Home Popham and Mr. Francis, which we are happy to state has been attended with greater success than the late Boulogne attack. The Antelope sailed for the above purpose on Thursday morning last. Nothing has been known till this afternoon, the truth of which may be relied on, as it comes from the mouth of a person who was engaged in the enterprize. The boats of the Antelope were sent close in shore, and so far succeeded as to get a fire brig placed directly under Fort Rouge which after a given time, with the assistance of the newly invented Carcasses, exploded by which the enemy's shipping had sustained considerable damage, and Fort Rouge almost destroyed. We cannot peremptorily state the number of vessels lost in this attack by the enemy, but they must be considerable, as well as the number [illegible] who must have perished by the blowing up of their vessels. Not a man was lost on our part, as the firing of the brig did not take place till the time fixed, which was sufficient to enable our men and boats to be completely out of danger.

DEAL, Dec. 11.—Arrived the Orpheus frigate from Quebec, with a convoy which are sailed for the River.

December 6.

The letters brought by the Prince of Wales packet from Lisbon were delivered out this morning. Mr. Frere has left Madrid, as appears by the following extract of a private letter from Lisbon dated November 21:—

"Mr. Frere and Mr. Hunter, have certainly left Madrid, and no hope now remains that a war with Spain can be avoided; the dispatches sent home by the Dona, were, it is said, very warm and hostile; as yet there are no movements here demonstrative of any change of system, but we cannot indulge the hope of being permitted to remain neutral, as on former occasions."

The answer of the Spanish Government was sent by the Dona, which left Lisbon on the 14th ultimo, nine days before the Prince of Wales: but the is not yet arrived.

No doubt of a war with Spain now remains—indeed we have long ceased to entertain any doubt on the subject.

Some firing has been heard at Dover from the French coast, supposed to be the rejoicing in consequence of the coronation of Bonaparte, which took place last Sunday.

Notice has been stuck up at Lloyd's, that government is ready to contract for a number of vessels (transports) of from 150 to 300 tons burthen. It does not become us to enquire into or state the object of this measure.

An embargo is said to have been laid at Nantz and L'Orient, as at Havre, upon all Swedish ships.

QUEBEC, 5th January.

CANADIAN FENCIBLES.

In addition to the intelligence inserted of the Canadian Fencibles, destined to form a part of his Majesty's forces in the two Canadas, the following authentic information, received from a friend, leads us to hope that we shall not be long deprived of the services of so fine a corps; which mustered, in August last, 750 effective men.

Extract.

Ayr, 30 Sept. 1804.

"Six companies of the Canadian regiment are here, and the remaining four are quartered at Irvine and Kilmarnock, where we are to remain during the winter; and be ready to embark for Canada, by the first spring fleet, from the Isle of Wight, for which place we come time ago, had a route, but the men refused to march, and were encouraged in their misconduct, by some evil disposed person in Glasgow. Government having yielded to them so far, at their own request, suffered them to remain in Scotland, and for this purpose sent a route for Ayrshire. Notwithstanding many ungrateful fellows still refused to obey orders, of which eight of the ring leaders were confined and sent to Edinburgh to be tried for their lives. I am sorry to say they richly deserved the most exemplary punishment, as every pains was taken to convince them of their error. They have now mostly joined quarters, and are very quiet."

* These persons enlisted, we understand, on [illegible] upon which condition they [illegible] embarked for the East Indies.

£5000 has been lately subscribed, with great spirit and alacrity, by the citizens of Quebec, in shares of £100 each, towards providing a commodious hotel and assembly-room, in the upper town. The site is yet to be fixed on.

LATE AND IMPORTANT NEWS FROM EUROPE.

AMHERST, (New Hampshire) Jan. 29.

BY last evening's mail, we received London dates to the 24th of November, nearly a month later than those before published. They were brought by an arrival at New Bedford from the paper of which place we copy the following summary of intelligence.

Sir George Rumbold, the British Minister to the Circle of Lower Saxony, who was lately seized by an armed French force at his house near Hamburgh, in pursuance of an order from the Minister of Police, at Paris, has been liberated through the interference of Prussia, and has arrived in London. It appears that this interference was very promptly exerted and the order of the Morning Chronicle placed a considerable stress upon this act, as an evidence that Prussia is resolved to resist of the danger of the French Emperor's encroachments upon the independence and rights of the neighbouring states.—The Court at Berlin, it is further said, has communicated to the Senate of Hamburgh assurance on the part of his Prussian Majesty of effectual support and his resolution to maintain the neutrality of the Circle. It is understood that the papers of Sir George Rumbold, which were found at his country house, were of no importance, his principal papers being at Hamburgh.

The Porte, it appears, has refused to acknowledge Bonaparte's imperial dignity. In consequence of which, Gen. Brune, the French Ambassador at Constantinople demanded his passports on the 6th, and left that city on the 12th Oct. on his return to France. The Grand Seignior it is said, declared to the French Ambassador that by virtue of a stipulation subsisting between him and the Emperor of Russia, he was bound to consult the Emperor Alexander on the subject. It is stated, that he has assured the different Ministers however, that should war take place between Russia and France, he shall endeavor to remain neutral. M. Russin remains at Constantinople as French Commercial Agent.

The relations between the Cabinet of St. Cloud and that of Vienna appear to be friendly.

Denmark and Sweden remain inactive.

The subject of "the invasion" is scarcely noticed in our London papers. At the last dates Admiral Cornwallis had resumed his situation off Brest.

Capt. Allen, at New Bedford, from Cadiz which he left on the 19th Nov. informs that when he sailed war was confidently expected with England.—An English fleet of 7 sail lay off Cadiz.

VERDUN, Sept. 26.

Our town continues to be the place of detension of the English. We count here between six and seven hundred, four hundred of whom were detained here as hostages at the beginning of the present War. Among these last, eighty are Officers of the English Navy. The number of British Prisoners will be much augmented here, as the Minister of the War Department has ordered every British Subject, without exception, and, notwithstanding former permissions to reside in other places, to be brought to this town. This severity is caused by the escape of Sir James Craufurd. A detachment of the 81st Regiment is already arrived here from Valenciennes. Another English Gentleman made, with the assistance of some persons here, an attempt to escape. He was stopped at Longwy, and is now returned here. His Guides are arrested.

Among the persons here are Mr. Pagan, who has an income of 7 to 800,000 livres in the year; Lord Yarmouth; Mr. Nichols, the father, Member of the Opposition Party in the House of Commons: Colonel Uff, a friend of the Prince of Wales; Commodore General Barrington, Capt. of the Minerva; Graham, a well informed English Priest; Gower, Captain of the Shannon Frigate; Abercrombie, Colonel of the 5th Regiment of Foot, son of the General killed in Egypt; Lord Hamilton, a defendant of the man of letters of the same name; the son of the Famous Tinda, who is a Colonel. Two persons have obtained their liberty viz. Walter Boyd, the Banker in London, who during the last War, advanced money to the French Prisoners in England; and Charles Forbes, an able painter, very rich, but advanced in years.

Several of the English occupy their whole time with study; others learn to fence; and others again have formed clubs in the manner of their own country, where they assemble to eat, drink, and to give toasts, &c.—

(Hague Courant.)

The French National Almanack for the present year is called "Almanack for the year XIII of the French Republic, the first year of the Empire." This is the third change of the national Calender since the Revolution. In 1789, it was the first year of French Liberty: in 1792, the first year of the Republic; and now, in 1805, the first year of the Empire, which has swallowed up both Liberty and the Republic.

The Crows look with great eagerness to the proof of the French Emperor's will, that his troops shall invade Great-Britain, as they expect to be appointed Executors, and come in for the rest and residue.

The crime of suicide is so frequent in Paris, that a Pamphlet has been lately published in that city, entitled, "Every Man his own Hangman."

A RHAPSODY.

AS I walk'd by myself, I said to myself,
And myself said again to me,
Look to thyself, take care of thyself,
For nobody cares for thee;
Then I said to myself, and thus answered myself,
With the self-same repartee,
Look to thyself, or look not to thyself,
'Tis the self-same thing to me.

FROM AN ENGLISH PAPER.

EGYPTIAN WHEAT.

THERE are few countries from whence the patriotic and scientific traveller may not bring something to enrich or benefit his own. The peculiar qualities of the Egyptian Wheat having been unknown even to the nations to which Egypt was formerly the granary: but one of the officers with the desolating spirit of Bonaparte occasioned us to send there, has brought from thence a few grains of wheat which are likely to supercede the culture of all others, not only in Ireland, but here. The stem, which for strength and thickness, resembles the strongest reed, is about six feet high, having when nearly matured, a top or head about twice the size of an ear of our wheat, together with smaller ears, branching something in the manner of our oats. But what is most important, the stem is particularly nutricious for horses, rendering unnecessary the use of hay and corn. It will not be a matter of surprise, that all the seed, which Mr. Humphries, (a gentleman of Dublin, to whom it had been originally presented) could be induced to dispose of last year, was purchased with a avidity, for ten guineas per stone of 14lb; nor that he has been offered, and refused, eight thousand guineas by one person, for a crop of nine acres, which is, or was recently standing.

THOSE who have any claim on the Estate of the late THOMAS SCHOFIELD, deceased, will please take notice, that Probate of his last Will and Testament has been obtained by ALEXANDER WOOD and ROBERT HENDERSON, who will receive and grant receipts for all debts due to the said Estate.

Also to be let for one year, entering immediately, Lot No. 35, West Side of Yonge Street, in the Township of Vaughan, containing 210 Acres, of which 10 Acres are cleared and under Fence. There is a good dwelling House on the Improvement.

For terms apply to Alexander Wood or Robert Henderson. York, Feb. 22, 1805.

Latest Intelligence.

CHARLESTON January 30.

The ship Intrepid, capt. E. Steed, has arrived at Savannah, in 49 days from Liverpool.

Capt. Erving, arrived at this port yesterday, in 35 days from Ramsgate, England, brought two London papers of the date of Dec. 17. Extracts from the papers received by those arrivals, will be found in our columns of this day.

Bonaparte has been crowned emperor, by the Pope.

A note on the margin of a Liverpool paper, states that the English Minister had left Madrid. It will be seen that the Spanish Minister in England had received his passports, and was to set out for home on the 17th December.

The Porte has not yet acknowledged Bonaparte's authority, in a way acceptable to the Corsican.

LONDON, Dec. 17.

We have assured our readers, that a war with Spain was inevitable. We have now to state, that the die is finally cast, and that letters of marque and reprisal, which have for several days past been prepared, will immediately be issued. The Chevalier D'Anduaga, the Spanish ambassador at our court, has received his passports, and purposes setting out this day, on his return to Spain, accompanied by general O'Farrell, an officer in the Spanish service. The grounds of war will shortly be made known to the nation by ministers; and, if we are correctly informed, a stronger case than that which will be presented, has rarely been made out on any similar occasion. Fast sailing vessels are immediately to be dispatched to our different settlements abroad.—There being no Spanish ships at present in our ports, excepting those under detention by our cruizers, no order for an embargo will of course be issued. A vessel is just arrived at Sandgate creek which sailed from Cadiz on the 20th ult. with only half a cargo, in consequence of an intimation from the British consul, that he did not consider it safe for English vessels to remain in that port, an order for an embargo being hourly expected. Six British men of war, of different descriptions, were then cruizing off Cadiz. The disorder in the town had very much abated, owing to a material and favorable change in the weather.

The report of a projected change in the Batavian government is revived—and Schimmelpenninck, it is added will certainly be placed at the head of the new system, as a kind of Vice Roy to Bonaparte.—The Dutch finances continue to be in a most deranged state, and to add to the distress of the country, the sums required for the ensuing year, greatly exceeded those of the present, of which upwards of 40,000,000 of florins, nearly four millions sterling, are yet unpaid and unprovided for. To the other calamities which have resulted to Holland from its connexion with France, that of a national bankruptcy is now seriously apprehended in that devoted country.

Two Hamburgh mails arrived yesterday. By these we have accounts from Constantinople, which states, that the Porte had consented to acknowledge to send new Credentials to the Turkish Ambassador at Paris. The French Minister, not considering this as sufficient, had, it is further stated, again determined to quit Constantinople. We must remark, however, that this intelligence is vague and contradictory, and leaves still much room to doubt. The baggage of the French Ambassador had, it appears, been packed up for a fortnight previous to the 26th of Oct. on which day Madame Brune was to take her departure. The most probable supposition, we think, appears to be, that Gen. Brune has left the Turkish Capitol.

We are sorry to find that the Yellow Fever has extended to Ragusa, having been carried thither by a vessel from Spain.

A gentleman just arrived from the continent, states, that since the capture of Sir George Rumbold, every person who is a British subject, or suspected of being favorably inclined to England, is in apprehension of arrest. All the beautiful villas round Hamburgh are entirely deserted; all men of character, spirit and property within the walls of Hamburgh have removed their property, papers and valuables to the houses of foreign and neutral ambassadors, domiciliary visits being daily expected, under orders of Bernadotte. This tyranny is not confined to the north of Germany, as the same gentleman was requested by one of the Frankfort senators, not to continue in that city after the fair, as the senate could not answer for his safety.

There is said to be a list circulated on the continent of the most respectable British subjects settled in the continental cities, all suspected and watched. But this list being shewn Hamburgh Exchange, is of doubtful authenticity.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 16.

The following is an extract of a letter with which we have been favored from an officer on board his Majesty's ship Fithgard, dated off Cape St. Vincent, Nov. 28:—

"We cannot desire a better station! we heard of hostilities with Spain on the 15th of October, and on that very day we captured two ships. Lord Nelson received from us the first intelligence of the capture. We have already taken twelve ships, and entertain hopes of as many more. Yesterday we fell in with the Donegal, capt. Sir R. S. Strachan, who has taken a large Spanish frigate after a chase of 26 hours, and 25 minutes action, in which the Spanish captain was killed; the prize was from Cadiz, with dispatches for Teneriffe and the Havanna, laden with stores. The Donegal has also captured another Spanish ship, supposed to be the richest that ever sailed from Cadiz—her cargo is reported to be worth 200,000."

"November 29.—We have this day taken a large ship from the River de la Plata.

"December 3.—Since writing the above, we have captured the following ships:

Nostra Signora del Rosario, value	£10,000
Il Fortuna, - - - -	8,000
St. Joseph, - - - -	12,000
La Virgine Assumpto, -	6,000

DOVER, Dec. 16.

His Majesty's ship Favorite sent in yesterday morning, a fine lugger privateer, called La Cruizer, of Calais, carrying 15 guns and 76 men; she took a Collier some days since, which was retaken. Some of her crew, who are Calais men, speak in very high terms of the preparations for invasion at Boulogne, the number of gun-boats in readiness for service amounts to from eight to nine thousand; they pretend to make no doubt of the invasion being attempted early in the spring. The master of the privateer, who appears to be a thorough modern Frenchman, expressed much concern on learning that the privateer commanded by the famous Blackman was taken.

The American ship Montezuma, from Amsterdam for Baltimore, put in here yesterday with the loss of an anchor. She left Amsterdam on the 7th inst. at which time five line of battle ships and three frigates were lying in Nieu Diep. The accounts brought by this vessel confirm what has been so frequently stated of the utter detestation and abhorrence in which the French are held by the Dutch.

PARIS, Dec. 4.

The following is an extract of a private letter from Madrid, dated the 14th Nov.—"This city has been very much agitated since the intelligence of the capture of our frigates. A war with England being considered, after that circumstance, inevitable, the Government Paper is at 52 per cent. discount. The departure of the English Minister, however, being delayed a favorable turn was presumed upon, and they rose to 55; but at lenght this Minister set off yesterday at noon, and the Paper has fallen to 48. The French Minister General Bourgonville is expected here in three days, and his arrival, under the present circumstances, cannot fail to cause much sensation. The intelligence from Cadiz of the 9th still speaks of the contagious malady as not having ceased in that city.—In truth there remain very few persons who have not been attacked by it."

London, Nov. 22.

On the arrest and carrying off Sir George Rumbold, the British Minister to the Circle of Lower Saxony, the Senate of Hamburgh sent the following note to the minister resident there:

"It is with the deepest regret that the Senate is obliged to inform your Excellency of an occurrence, which is, in every respect, of a most serious nature, and which has filled the Senate with the greatest sorrow. Last night a detachment of between two & three hundred French troops, landed secretly in the suburb called Hamburger Berg, proceeded to the Grindel, and there surrounded the country house of Sir George Rumbold, Baronet, Charge d'Affairs from his Britannic Majesty, to the Circle of Lower Saxony, seized him and carried him, with some of his effects, to Hamburgh. As it was impossible for the Senate to prevent this occurrence, which did not come to their knowledge till after it had taken place, it now only remains for them to employ every means to claim the liberation of Sir George Rumbold, and the restoration of his effects.—The Senate begs your Excellency to be assured they will leave no means untried, as far as lies in their power, to obtain that end."

Hamburgh, Oct. 15, 1804.

Gottenburgh, November 2.

Dreadful fire.—Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock, a dreadful fire broke out here, which continued to burn with unremitted fury until ten, during which time (the houfes being chiefly of wood) it conſumed the whole ſouth-weſt part of the city; the large new barracks which were built with brick, and coſt 40,000l. ſterling, the two royal magazines of grain, the poſt-office, and the epiſcopal houſe, the freemaſon charity-ſchool, together with about two or three hundred houſes were entirely deſtroyed: The diſtreſſes of the ſufferers, particularly the poor, at this inclement ſeaſon, is very great, but every means is taken to alleviate it; the rich and patriotic merchant, Mr. John Hall, has, with a humane zeal which always diſtinguiſhes him, opened his ſpacious houſe and premiſes for as many as it will contain, and has given up his private theatre for the uſe of the Free maſons' charity children: Several others have followed his example. It is aſcertained that the fire has diſlodged more than 7,000 people, and has ſadly deformed one of the handſomeſt cities in the North of Europe.

OF SPAIN.

Nov. 23.—We have for the two laſt months entertained no doubt that a war with Spain muſt take place, and have expected that every courier from Madrid would inform us of the departure of our Ambaſſador from that metropolis, or his intention immediately to do ſo. The public at large, we believe, have entertained ſimilar ſentiments. It is now underſtood by the laſt diſpatches from Admiral Cochrane, off Ferrol, Miniſters received information from the Admiral, of his having received diſpatches from Mr. Frere, at Madrid, ſtating, that he had got his paſſports, and intended to leave Madrid on the 10th. Nothing however, is more probable. The notification of Lord Harrowby to the Merchants, and the capture of the Spaniſh frigates, ſhewed plainly that negociation was nearly exhauſted. We believe all impartial men are pretty well convinced of the impolicy of a Spaniſh war; but if there is the ſlighteſt probability of co-operation on the Continent, that impolicy will be the more conſpicuous.

about 2 o'clock, a dreadful fire broke out here, which continued to burn with unremitted fury until ten, during which time (the houfes being chiefly of wood) it conſumed the whole ſouth-weſt part of the city; the large new barracks which were built with brick, and coſt 40,000l. ſterling, the two royal magazines of grain, the poſt-office, and the epiſcopal houſe, the freemaſon charity-ſchool, together with about two or three hundred houſes were entirely deſtroyed: The diſtreſſes of the ſufferers, particularly the poor, at this inclement ſeaſon, is very great, but every means is taken to alleviate it; the rich and patriotic merchant, Mr. John Hall, has, with a humane zeal which always diſtinguiſhes him, opened his ſpacious houſe and premiſes for as many as it will contain, and has given up his private theatre for the uſe of the Free maſons' charity children: Several others have followed his example. It is aſcertained that the fire has diſlodged more than 7,000 people, and has ſadly deformed one of the handſomeſt cities in the North of Europe.

OF SPAIN.

Nov. 23.—We have for the two laſt months entertained no doubt that a war with Spain muſt take place, and have expected that every courier from Madrid would inform us of the departure of our Ambaſſador from that metropolis, or his intention immediately to do ſo. The public at large, we believe, have entertained ſimilar ſentiments. It is now underſtood by the laſt diſpatches from Admiral Cochrane, off Ferrol, Miniſters received information from the Admiral, of his having received diſpatches from Mr. Frere, at Madrid, ſtating, that he had got his paſſports, and intended to leave Madrid on the 10th. Nothing however, is more probable. The notification of Lord Harrowby to the Merchants, and the capture of the Spaniſh frigates, ſhewed plainly that negociation was nearly exhauſted. We believe all impartial men are pretty well convinced of the impolicy of a Spaniſh war; but if there is the ſlighteſt probability of co-operation on the Continent, that impolicy will be the more conſpicuous.

LONDON, Nov. 10 to 22.

Our cruizers still continue to detain Spanish vessels. The dollars already captured are ordered to be sent to the Bank of England. The Medusa, capt. Gore, is arrived at Portsmouth, with the Spanish frigate Matilda, of 36 guns, taken off Cadiz, without any resistance. The Spanish frigate was outward bound and laden with quicksilver.

The traffic between the ports of England and Holland was not at any time since the commencement of the war so great as it is just at this moment.

Between 60,000 and 70,000 quarters of wheat from Dantzick, were imported in ships which arrived last week in the Thames.

In the unfortunate Spanish frigate, La Mercedes, were embarked a Spanish gentleman, his lady, four daughters, and five sons. He was returning to Old Spain with his lovely family, the daughters remarkably beautiful (especially the eldest) with all his large fortune, the gradual savings of twenty-five years industry! A little while before the action commenced this gentleman, with a son (a lad) went on board the Rear Admiral's ship by his orders. Also! horrid to relate, in a few minutes he became the dreadful spectator of his wife, his daughters, and four of his sons, entangled in sulphurous flames, sinking into the abyss of waters, with all his treasures! This unhappy victim of calamity (so vast as not to be found in the sad records of human woe) arrived at Plymouth, with the unit of his comforts, in capt. Moore's cutter, who unceasingly administered all in his power to his alleviation.

We are happy to learn that trade is more than commonly brisk in most of our manufacturing towns. Since the cession of Louisiana to the Americans, immense orders have come over from thence to this country, particularly for flowered and fancy muslins. The returns made are in raw materials, dollars and provisions.

The entries of goods, and linens in particular, for the ports of America, at Dublin, continue to be very considerable, especially to Philadelphia, New-York, and Boston, and our imports from thence are of the most useful and valuable nature as being the materials of industry, except tobacco, which, however brings in a very large revenue to these countries.

It is stated, that the King of Prussia has been offended with the conduct of France, respecting Sir George Rumbold, that he has determined to permit no more French troops to pass into the Electorate of Hanover and the North of Germany.

Parliament is further prorogued to the 3d of January.

NEW-YORK, February 18.

Another letter from Spain, dated Dec. 1, says—"It is understood, that the Queen and Prince of Peace had conspired against the royal character and the Prince of Austria. Their design was to have them committed to a convent, under the charge of infamity; and then to erect a Regency under the joint influence of the Queen and her favorite."

This intelligence is in part confirmed by verbal information received from Capt. Smith, of the Resolution:—He left Cadiz the 3d of December, at which time it was currently reported "that the Prince of Peace had been stabbed by one of the grandees, in presence of the King—the wound not proving mortal, the Prince was placed under arrest. Other circumstances conspire to render it very probable that the government of Spain is about to experience a shock which may not only vary its form, but even jeopardize its existence."

Savage Cruelty.—Seldom, perhaps never, has there been an instance of such wanton and abandoned cruelty recorded in a civilized country, as is related in the following advertisement. While we detest the monster, capable of inflicting such horrid barbarity on an unoffending child, we sincerely and devoutly wish that the efforts made to apprehend him may prove effectual—and that ere long he may be brought before the tribunal of justice and receive the merited reward of his crime.

On the 10th inst. STEPHEN ARNOLD of the town of Burlington, county of Otsego, and state of New York, returned home from a school he was teaching in the neighbourhood, and enquired of a little orphan girl of six years of age, who lived with him, whether she would spell and pronounce GIG aright, she to mediately replied "yes, Sir," but being terrified by the severity of his manner, or not having acquired the command of articulation, or possibly, but not probably from a perverse humour, she pronounced it JIG. He then went out and collected a number of green rods or switches about three feet in length, with which he returned, and threw them down by the fire, declaring that he would whip her until she pronounced the word aright; his wife observed that the sticks were too big, he said he would fix them, and placed them on the embers and twisted them four or five of them supple; he then took six or seven of them and the affrighted child, out of the house, into the severely cold evening air, and turning her cloaths over her head, to prevent her screams being heard, and closing them in his left hand, which he rested on the top of a stake or post, held the child up in that manner with her body entirely naked, and whipped her for some time with great severity, when being himself cold, he took her into the house, and asked her if she would pronounce the word right, the as before, replied in an humble and obedient manner, "yes, Sir," but could not or would not pronounce the g hard but still said jig. He then took her to the same place, and repeated the barbarous scourging in the same manner at seven intervals, bringing her into the house between each and repeating the same question, and receiving the same answer as before. The sixth time he came in, after warming himself he told her the must go out again, upon which the child in a piteous and intreating tone cried, "Do uncle let me warm my feet, they are almost froze." He quickly replied in an enraged manner, "I'll warm your feet for you," and seizing her, repaired again to the bloody post, where he, in the most savage manner, exceeded his former tortures. The miserable child languished nearly four days and expired. The stubs or remains of several of the sticks were found broken or thrown off to about a foot in length. The whole of the horrid transaction occupied about an hour and an half of time, during which neither pity nor compunction was discernable in his eyes, features, words or actions; but he declared "that he had as leave whip her to death as not." The savage fury of this tyger in human shape, is declared, by the physicians and members of the Coroners inquest, to be incredible. The whole of her back had the appearance of a mass of bruised and lacerated raw flesh, her thighs and legs were deeply cut in various places, exhibiting a sight of horror, which would chill the blood of the most infernible of the human race. The bereaved and distressed mother has been, at times delirious. The monster, who perpetrated this horrible act, made his escape a few hours before death had delivered the victim of his barbarity, from further torture. He has a wife but no children, is about 34 years of age, sandy hair, a little bald, speaks through his nose, has something of a down look, shews his upper teeth when speaking, is very abstemious as to strong drink, has a father in Rhode Island.

The subscribers will pay the above reward, which is made up by the contributions of the good citizens in the neighbourhood, to any person or persons, who will apprehend the said Arnold and deliver him to either of them in Burlington aforesaid, or produce sufficient testimony, that he is secured in any gaol in the United States, Louisiana, either of the Canadas or Nova Scotia, so that he may be brought to trial: and they strongly recommend that every person would be vigilant to detect the villain, and to take particular notice of all strangers they may happen to meet with. All Printers in America, Europe, or the West Indies, will observe the cause of humanity by giving the foregoing, or the substance thereof, one or more insertions in their papers.

QUEBEC.

DIED, at his house in St. Famille street on Wednesday morning the 13th instant, FRANCIS LEMAISTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of Gaspe, one of the Adjutants General of the Militia of this Province, and Colonel of one of the Battalions of the Militia of this City.

His remains were attended yesterday to the place of interment by the 15th Regiment, and flank companies of the British militia, under arms with their arms reversed; the artillery company of the British militia, with two field pieces; the officers of the army not on duty; those of the British and Canadian militia, in their uniforms; a numerous assemblage of the most respectable citizens, and gentlemen of the Legislature, and a great concourse of persons of every description. During the procession the band of the 15th Regiment, as usual, playing the dead march in Saul. The body was followed by the late horse of the deceased, preceding the mourners. At the place of interment the company of militia artillery fired three rounds with each field piece: and the 15th Regiment with the two flank companies of the British militia, fired three vollies together.

A very deplorable accident happened last week at St. Agustin, a few leagues from this City: a whole family of eight persons, & a woman belonging to the same parish who lodged in the house, were buried under the ruins of their house which was crushed to pieces in the night, by the falling of a great body of snow from the Cape under which it was built. The accident was not discovered by the neighbours till next morning: the place where the house stood was barely discernable; they however proceeded immediately to remove the snow and the ruins, and were so fortunate as to extricate two of the unfortunate family alive. The mangled bodies of the remainder presented the most affecting sight; and the whole consisting of a father, mother, four children and the woman who lodged in the house, were taken to the neighbouring church yard the following day and buried in the same grave; a striking example of the vanity of human life.

The name of the family is Villeneuve, the woman's name Laurencelle; she has left two children, who lodged with her, but were, providentially, at another house at the time of the accident.

On the 16th of June, 1806, there will be a total Eclipse of the Sun, visible if the air be clear. The darkness, occasioned by this remarkable eclipse, will be so great, that if our atmosphere should be free from clouds, the stars will undoubtedly appear.

A total eclipse of the sun, is such a rare phenomenon in the catalogue of eclipses, that there will not probably be another of the kind, at the same place, within the period of the present generation. We have therefore, for the gratification of such of our readers as delight in contemplating the beauty of celestial phenomenons, been at the trouble of making some calculations relative to the different aspects and places of this great eclipse.—The calculations are made for the meridian of Greenwich in Connecticut, in lat. 41, 36, N. long. 83, 12, W. of Greenwich, and are as follows, viz.

	h. m. sec.
Beginning of the eclipse at	9 53	A. M. ap. time
Total darkness	11 14 30
Middle of the eclipse	11 16 30
End of total darkness	11 17 30
Eclipse ends	12 44
Duration	2 51

The moon's dark shadow will cover a spot on the earth's surface of more than 600 miles broad, at all places within which, the sun will appear totally eclipsed.

As our method of calculation has been rather teutative, than strictly mathematical, we present the reader with the following elements of this eclipse, that he may amuse himself, if he pleases, with a trigonometrical calculation of its different phases;

ELEMENTS.

This eclipse having travelled in the expanfium ever fince creation, fell in open fpace quite clear of the earth at every return of the Chaldean period, till about the middle of the 10th century, when it firft touched the earth at the South pole; fince which time it has continued to wear to the Northward at each periodical return of 18 years, &c. And according to the equable motions of the fun, moon and retroffion of the lunar nodes, this eclipfe will wear off at the North pole of the earth about the year A. D. 2344, whence it again commences its ethereal route from which it will not return to the earth fo as to perform the fame revolution over again, until after a period of more than 10,000 years. Norwich Republican.

The following is faid to be a fragment of an ancient Egyptian King, found at Thebes:

I never denied juftice to the poor, for his poverty; neither pardoned the wealthy for his riches.

I never gave reward for affection, nor punifhment upon paffion.

I never fuffered evil to efcape unpunifhed, neither goodnefs unrewarded.

I never denied juftice to him that aſked it, neither mercy to him that deſerved it.

I never opened my gate to the flatterer, nor mine ear to the backbiter.

I always ſought to be beloved of the good, and feared of the wicked.

I always favored the poor, that was able to do little, and God, who was able to do much, always favored me.

HIS MAJESTY's SPEECH.

This day his Majeſty went in the uſual ſtate to the Houſe of Peers, and opened the Seſſion of Parliament with the following moſt gracious Speech from the Throne:

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"Since the end of the laſt ſeſſion, the preparations of the enemy for the invaſion of this kingdom have been continued with inceſſant activity, but no attempt has been made to carry their repeated menaces into effect.

"The ſkill and intrepidity of my navy—the reſpectable and formidable ſtate of my army and militia—the unabated zeal and improved diſcipline of a numerous volunteer force, and the general ardor manifeſted by all claſſes of my ſubjects, have indeed been ſufficient to deter them from ſo preſumptuous and deſperate an enterprize. While this ſpirit continues to animate the country, and its voluntary exertions for its own defence ſubſiſt in their full vigour, we need not fear the conſequences of the moſt powerful efforts on the part of the enemy. But let us never forget that our ſecurity has ariſen from the reſolution with which we have met and provided againſt the danger, and that it can be preſerved only by ſteady perſeverance and unremitting activity.

"The conduct of the court of Spain evidently under the predominant influence and controul of France, compelled me to take prompt and deciſive meaſures to guard againſt the effects of hoſtility. I have, at the ſame time, endeavoured, as long as it was poſſible, to prevent the neceſſity of a rupture; but in conſequence of the refuſal of a ſatisfactory explanation, my miniſter quitted Madrid; and war has ſince been declared by Spain againſt this country.

"I have directed a copy of the manifeſto which I have cauſed to be prepared on this occaſion, to be laid before you, together with ſuch papers as are neceſſary to explain the diſcuſſions which have taken place between me and the Court of Madrid. You will, I truſt, be convinced by them that my forbearance has been carried to the utmoſt extent which the intereſts of my dominions would admit, and while I lament the ſituation of Spain, involved in hoſtilities contrary to its true intereſts, I rely with confidence on your vigorous ſupport in a conteſt, which can be attributed only to the unfortunate prevalence of French councils.

"The general conduct of the French government on the continent of Europe has been marked by the utmoſt violence and outrage, and has ſhewn a wanton deficience of the rights of neutral territories, of the acknowledged privileges of accredited Miniſters, and of the eſtabliſhed principles of the law of nations.

"Notwithſtanding theſe tranſactions ſo repugnant to every ſentiment of moderation and juſtice, I have recently received a communication from the French government, containing profeſſions of a pacific diſpoſition.

"I have, in conſequence expreſſed my earneſt deſire to embrace the firſt opportunity of reſtoring the bleſſings of peace on ſuch grounds as may be conſiſtent with the permanent ſafety and intereſts of my dominions; but I am confident you will agree with me, that thoſe objects are cloſely connected with the general ſecurity of Europe. I have therefore not thought it right to enter into any more particular explanation without previous communication with thoſe powers on the Continent with whom I am engaged in a confidential intercourſe and connection, with a view to that important object, and eſpecially with the Emperor of Ruſſia, who has given the ſtrongeſt proofs of the wiſe and dignified ſentiments by which he is animated, and of the warm intereſt he takes in the ſafety and independence of Europe.

"Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons.

"I have directed the eſtimates for the public ſervice to be laid before you. I regret the neceſſity of any additional burdens being impoſed on my people; but I am ſure you will be ſenſible how much their future ſafety and happineſs depends on the vigor of our exertions, and that in the mode of raiſing the ſupplies, you will continue to ſhew your anxiety for the ſupport of public credit, and for reſtraining, as much as poſſible, the accumulation of the national debt.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In conſidering the great efforts and ſacrifices which the nature of the conteſt requires, it is a peculiar ſatisfaction to me to obſerve the many proofs of the internal wealth and proſperity of the country. It will, I am ſure, be your great object to maintain and improve theſe advantages, and at the ſame time to take all ſuch meaſures as, by enabling me to proſecute the war with vigour, may afford the beſt proſpect of bringing it to a ſafe and honorable termination."

LETTERS OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL.

At the Court of the Queen's Palace, the 11th January, 1805, preſent the King's moſt excellent Majeſty in Council:

Whereas his Majeſty has received information that the king of Spain has iſſued a Declaration of War againſt his Majeſty, ſubjects and people: his Majeſty therefore being determined to take ſuch meaſures as are neceſſary for vindicating the honor of his crown and for the vigorous proſecution of the war in which he finds himſelf engaged, is pleaſed by and with the advice of his Privy council, to order, and it is hereby ordered that general reprizals be granted againſt the ſhips, goods, and ſubjects of the king of Spain, ſo that as well as his majeſty's fleets and ſhips, as alſo all other ſhips and veſſels that ſhall be commiſſionated, by letters of Marque or general reprizals, or otherwiſe, by his majeſty's commiſſioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of Great Britain, thall and may be lawfully ſeize all ſhips, veſſels, and goods belonging to the king of Spain, or his ſubjects, or others inhabiting within the territories of the king of Spain, and bring the ſame to judgement in any of the Courts of Admiralty within his Majeſty's dominions; and, to that end, his majeſty's Advocate General, with the Advocate of the Admiralty, are forthwith to prepare the draft of a commiſſion and preſent the ſame to his majeſty at this Board, authoriſing the Commiſſioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral, or any perſon or perſons by them empowered and appointed, to iſſue forth and grant letters of marque and reprizals to any of his majeſty's ſubjects or others whom the ſaid commiſſioners ſhall deem fitly qualified in that behalf, for the apprehending, ſeizing, and taking the ſhips, veſſels, and goods belonging to Spain, and the veſſels and ſubjects of the king of Spain or any inhabitants within his countries territories or dominions; and that ſuch power and clauſes be inſerted in the commiſſion, as have been uſual, and are according to former precedents; and his majeſty's ſaid Advocate General, with the Advocate of the Admiralty, are alſo forthwith to prepare the draft of a commiſſion, and preſent the ſame to his Majeſty at this board, authoriſing the ſaid commiſſioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral to will and require the High Court of Admiralty of Great Britain, and the Lieutenant and Judge of the ſaid Court, his Surrogate or Surrogates, as alſo the ſeveral Courts of Admiralty within his Majeſty's dominions, to take cognizance of, and judicially proceed upon all and all manner of captures, ſeizures, priſes, and reprisals of all ſhips and goods that are or ſhall be taken, and to hear and determine the ſame; and according to the courſe of Admiralty, and the laws of nations, to adjudge and condemn all ſuch ſhips, veſſels and goods as ſhall belong to Spain, or the vaſſals and ſubjects of the King of Spain, or to any others inhabiting within any of his countries, territories and dominions; and that ſuch powers and clauſes be inſerted in the ſaid Commiſſion as have been uſual, and are according to former precedents: and they are likewiſe to prepare and lay before his Majeſty at this Board a draft of ſuch inſtructions as may be proper to be ſent to the courts of Admiralty in his Majeſty's foreign governments and plantations for their guidance herein; as alſo another draft of inſtructions for ſuch ſhips as ſhall be commiſſioned for the purpoſes aforementioned.

Copy of a letter tranſmitted from the Swediſh Conſul, London, to Thomas Hogg, Eſq. Applegate.

LONDON, January 8, 1805.

SIR,

Having received official information from the Royal College of Stockholm, that an embargo has been laid on all Swediſh ſhips at Antwerp, and likely to extend not only to France, but all countries under its dominions, I have to requeſt you will make this circumſtance known to all Swediſh captains in the ports of Barnſtable and Biddeford, and warn them from attempting to enter any French ports under preſent circumſtances.

I remain reſpectfully,

Sir, your moſt obd't ſervant,

CLASE GRILL, Swediſh Conſul.

To Thomas Hogg, Eſq. Applegate, Swediſh Vice Conſul for Barnſtable and Biddeford ports.

January 14.

The Gazette of Sunday night contains an order in council granting general reprisals and letters of marque againſt Spain. This being the uſual form of declaration of war, ſome of our contemporaries entertained an expectation that it would be accompanied with a ſpecification of all the reaſons. The order in council contains one that is as good as ten thouſand: it ſtates, that Spain has declared war againſt us. Among the ſignatures to this order is that of Vifcount Sidmouth. This is the firſt public act of his Lordſhip in his new capacity.

Whatever was the object of his miſſion, the French meſſenger is returned to France in the Immortalite.

Without pretending to vouch for the authenticity of the fact it aſſerts, we inſert literally the following letter received this morning from Dover.

"Dover, January 13, 1805.

"Sir—The Frenchman who was taken up and put on board the Utrecht in the Downs, was certainly, however you may doubt it, the bearer of diſpatches from France; he is as certainly ſent back without any anſwer to what he brought. This you may rely upon."

The Gazette confirms our report of the elevation of Mr. Addington to the Peerage, by the title of Vifcount Sidmouth; and of the appointment of Lord Mulgrave to the office of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the room of Lord Harrowby. Various other Miniſterial changes are ſaid to be in contemplation. Among thoſe, which we conſider moſt entitled to credit, is the appointment of the Earl of Buckinghamſhire to the place of joint Poſt-Maſter General, vice Lord Charles Spencer, who retires upon a penſion. The Duke of Portland alſo goes out on a penſion, and it is almoſt certain that he will be ſucceeded by Viſcount Sidmouth, as preſident of council. This new arrangement is confidently ſpoken of in the political circles as having been effected by the influence of his Royal Highneſs the Prince of Wales. Should this report be founded in fact, the coaleſced oppoſition will prove formidable only in talents to the Miniſter. Mr. Yorke is alſo mentioned as likely to come into office, and will probably ſucceed Lord Melville, ſhou'd the latter reſign the Admiralty. The ſucceſſor of Sir Evan Nepean in Ireland is not yet mentioned with any degree of confidence.

January 15.

Laſt night we received a number of Paris papers, which complete our ſets from the 25th ult. to the 6th inſtant, and alſo Dutch Journals to the ſame date. The former contain an account of the opening of the Legiſlative Body on the 27th ult. with a ſpeech of Bonaparte on the occaſion. The ſpeech is in that ſort of abrupt ſtyle which characterizes moſt of his productions.

By accounts received from off Breſt, it appears that there are twenty five ſail of the line beſides frigates, now lying in that harbour, completely fitted, and ready for ſea.

Yeſterday morning died, at an advanced age, the Right Hon. John Moor, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England.

January 16.

The Lively frigate commanded by captain Hammond, has fallen in with, and captured another Spaniſh dollar ſhip valued at 100,000l. ſterling. The Lively was not accompanied by any other veſſel. This is the ſecond plate ſhip which this meritorious officer has been ſo fortunate as to fall in with.—The Diamond frigate, capt. Elphinſtone, has alſo captured a Spaniſh ſhip of war, ſaid to be of great value; the enemy fought the Diamond ſome time and had three men killed, and three wounded in the action.

The brig Apollo, laden with hides, tallow, and three cheſts of dollars, from the river la Plata, captured by the Fifgard frigate, was ſpoke with in lat. 51, long. 16, 20, being leaky, and having only ſeven people on board, intended to make ſome port on the north weſt of Ireland. On Wedneſday ſe'nnight the ſhip Edward arrived in the port of Lime reck from Dublin; about 10 days previouſly, in lat. 52, long. 18, ſhe fell in with a Spaniſh ſhip from the river Plata, laden with hides, dollars, &c. prize to his Majeſty's ſhip Fifgard, with a ſignal of diſtreſs. Notwithſtanding the ſea was running very high, the Edward boarded her and took out the Lieutenant of the Fifgard and ſeven ſeamen. Shortly after the went down.

January 18.

Seldom a day paſſes without our hearing of ſome rich captures from the Spaniards. Another Spaniſh ſhip, richly laden, from the Havanna, has been ſent into Plymouth, and more are expected; upwards of forty ſail of veſſels from the Havanna having been ſpoken with 16 days ago off the Weſtern Iſles. They had not the leaſt idea of war.

The Spaniſh ſhip taken by the Lively is arrived at Cove; her name is the Don Miguel, from Honduras, and her cargo conſiſts of indigo, and 78 boxes, containing 200,000 dollars, beſides ſeveral boxes of wrought gold and ſilver, valued altogether at 200,000l. ſterling.

Meſſengers, we believe, have been ſent off to Peterſburgh, Berlin, and Stockholm, with the information of the pacific overture from France, and with copies of his Majeſty's ſpeech, and the addreſſes of both houſes of parliament. The ſpeech, and the intelligence that both houſes had unanimouſly agreed to addreſs his Majeſty upon it, were, as we ſtated yeſterday, ſent off to Paris immediately after the riſing of the two houſes on Tueſday evening. In the diſpatch from M. Talleyrand, it is underſtood that a copy of Bonaparte's ſpeech upon opening the legiſlature, was incloſed.

It is not difficult to predict what the anſwer to our communication to the courts of Peterſburgh and Berlin will be. They will adviſe negociation.—But that anſwer cannot be expected to be received in leſs than two moths. In the mean time it is extremely probable that Bonaparte will either dotice our anſwer to him in the Moniteur, or will tranſmit another diſpatch to us.

January 19.

Price of Stocks this day at one 62 1-2 14. Reduced 60 1-2 5-8.

o'clock: Conſ. for money 61 1-2 5-8—do. for Jan, 61 5 8 3 1 4.—For Feb.

Policies were opened reſpecting the chances of war, 50 guineas for 1 year, 30 for two years, and 20 for three years, to receive 100l. for each ſum, if the war continued longer than the periods mentioned.

Lord Henry Sidmouth (late Mr. Addington, created a peer) is appointed Lord Preſident of his Majeſty's Council, in the room of the Duke of Portland, who retires on account of ill health.

The French frigates Didon and Cybelle, from New York, have arrived at a port in France.

The report has been in circulation ſome time that ſubſidiary treaties with Ruſſia and Sweden are in great forwardneſs, and it is ſtated that the ſubſidies will amount to no leſs than five millions per annum. In return, Ruſſia is ſaid, ſtipulates to bring into the field an army of 100,000 men, to be employed againſt France in any way effectual. The Emperor of Germany and the King of Pruſſia have been invited on very advantageous terms to accede to the confederacy, but hitherto without effect.

Private letters from Spain ſtate, the people are very much diſſatisfied with the conduct of their Government, and that the Prince of Peace becomes every day more obnoxious, not only to the multitude, but to the Nobility, who conſider him as the ſervile agent of Bonaparte in Spain.

One of theſe communications ſtates, that the Prince of Aſturias, aided by the old Caſtilian Nobles, has determined to oppoſe the baleful influence of the Prince of Peace in the State; and that the latter, being of courſe ſupported by the French intereſt, had determined to make a good ſtand againſt his Royal Highneſs.

The Britiſh blockading fleet has reſumed its ſtation off Breſt.

An additional ſtrong ſquadron of the Britiſh fleet, under Lord Gardner, is to be ſtationed off Ireland. His Lordſhip hoiſts his flag on board the Hibernia, of 120 guns, juſt launched.

THE ROMNEY.

Copy of a letter written by Rear Admiral Ruſſell, to Rear Admiral Kittert, Commander in Chief in the Texel.

His Britannic Majeſty's ſhip Eagle, North Seas, 3d Dec. 1804. P. M.

SIR,

I have this moment received your flag of truce, conveying to me the honorable Captain Colvill; late of his Britannic Majeſty's ſhip the Romney, wrecked upon your coaſt, with eight of his officers, whom you have firſt humanely ſaved from impending deſtruction, and whom your Government has, with its ancient magnanimity, releaſed and reſtored to their country and friends on their parole of honor.

They are all, Sir, moſt ſenſibly affected with heartfelt gratitude to the Batavian Government for their emancipation from captivity, to Admiral Kikkert, for their preſervation from the jaws of death, and to all the Dutch officers and the inhabitants of the Texel, for their kindneſs and moſt humane attention.

This, Sir, is nobly alleviating the rigors of war, as the Chriſtian heroes of your country and mine were wont formerly to do in theſe ſeas, before a conſiderable portion of European intellect was corrupted by falſe philoſophy.

Captain Colvill will communicate to the Right Hon. the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty your propoſal for the exchange of priſoners.

Accept, Sir, of my ſincereſt thanks, and the aſſurance that I am, with great reſpect, &c.

(Signed) T. M. RUSSELL.

The cargo of Santa Maria, from the the Havanna, for Ferrol and Corunna, captured by the Phoenix of 44 guns, capt. THE YOUNG ROSCIUS.

The indiſpoſition under which the Young Roſcius labours is a ſevere cold, attended, of courſe, with a ſlight degree of fever; but there is nothing in the leaſt degree dangerous, and remaining at home and taking the uſual remedies for a cold will enable him to make his appearance on the ſtage again, completely recovered, in a few days.

[The London newſpapers were filled with articles reſpecting Maſter Betty, the "Young Roſcius," as he is denominated in the bills.—He continued to excite aſtoniſhment and praiſe; but at the laſt dates was confined by ſickneſs. Bulletins of his health are daily publiſhed.]

If all the Volunteers in Great Britain (according to Mr. Yorke's enumeration) were placed in a ſingle line, each man at 83 yards diſtance from the other they would extend round the globe;—and were each man to fire in ſucceſſion, in the manner of light infantry, they would fire one round in 5 days, 18 hours, 55 minutes.

A ſtriking inſtance of Longevity.—In days of yore, a gentleman travelling through the Highlands of Scotland, happened to fall in with a man who appeared to be about eighty years of age, weeping bitterly: On inquiring the reaſon, the old man informed him that his father had juſt been whipping him—the gentleman's curioſity led him to viſit their cottage, where he ſaw the father; and on expoſtulating with him on his cruelty in uſing thus his ſon, was told, that the young raſcal had been throwing ſtones at his grandfather, who was at work in the garden.

Died a ſhort time ſince, the notorious Scotch Moggy, alias Wheeler, alias Barnſby. This character was univerſally admitted by the Police Officers to be the moſt expert pick pocket in England.—There was ſcarcely a fair or race, between Berwick upon Tweed and the Land's End, where ſhe had not exerciſed her profeſſional talents. She originally came from Scotland, and married one of the notorious Wheelers, with whom ſhe lived ſome years. On the arrival of another notorious pick pocket from Botany Bay, of the name of Barnſby, ſhe took a great fancy to him, and left her huſband. With him ſhe practiſed picking pockets for ſeveral years, both in town and country. Although in perſon rather delicate, it was no unuſual thing to ſee her on Lord Mayor's Day, and other public occaſions, in the greateſt crowd, in conſpiracy with the notorious gang of huſtlers who have for ſo many years infeſted the metropolis. She generally dreſſed in a very genteel ſtyle. About ſeven years ago ſhe was at Bath, committing her depredations, and at one of the churches received the ſacrament; at the ſame time the Mayoreſs of Bath happened to be one of the communicants, Moggy obſerving her to have a very valuable gold watch, contrived to rob her of it before the concluſion of the ſolemn ordinance. She had ſeveral children, whom ſhe kept at boarding ſchool.—Notwithſtanding ſhe had been ſeveral times tried on capital charges, ſhe was always fortunate enough to eſcape [illegible]

LONDON, Nov. 22.

The following extraordinary paragraph appeared in a ſecond edition of the Cork Mercantile Chronicle of yeſterday ſe'nnight:

"We have juſt received information, communicated by the Maſter of a veſſel who arrived in our harbour from Morlaix, that orders had been iſſued by the French Government to the Commiſſioners at that port, and ſimilar orders to the Commiſſioners of all the ports, that in the event of the arrival of any Ruſſian ſhips, all poſſible aſſiſtance and accommodation ſhould be given them; this was ſaid to be the reſult of a treaty of amity between the French and Ruſſian Governments. By the ſame ſource we are informed, that a great number of troops had marched from the neighbourhood of Morlaix, for Breſt ſaid to be deſtined for a ſecret expedition."

His Majeſty's armed ſhip William, the Downs, Dec. 12.

SIR,

Leſt any exaggerated account ſhould reach the public relative to the conſequences of the late malignant fever at Gibraltar, I think it may be the means of leſſening the apprehenſions that the friends of the ſurviving officers may be ſuppoſed to feel from the recent calamity, to tranſmit to you an accurate liſt for your information of thoſe officers who had died previous to the 12th November (as before the publication of their names, their friends will have, probably, received the official information of their deceaſe.) Thoſe who had been ill when we failed on the 12th of Nov. were ſuppoſed to be in a ſtate of convaleſcence; and it gives me real pleaſure to add, that great hopes were entertained at that time, that the fever would totally ſubſide, two or three only dying daily. Two thirds of the inhabitants, it was ſuppoſed, had fallen, to the number of 3000. The military had by no means ſuffered in the ſame proportion.

I am, Sir,
your moſt humble ſervant,

PERSEVERING SPIRIT OF REVENGE.

CRIMINAL TRIBUNAL OF THE SEINE.

The following ſingular trial lately took place before this tribunal. A man named Dollard, who formerly held a commiſſion in the army of Italy, ſtood accuſed of attacking, with intent to murder, Citizen Vallelin, principal clerk of Citizen Demantort, notary, reſiding in the rue Vivienne at Paris. In the year 6, Citizen Vallelin, at that time clerk with Mr. Monnet, notary, in the rue L'Autrefec, became acquainted with the wife of Dollard, in conſequence of ſome paper he was employed to draw up for her. He learned from her, that ſhe was unfortunate, her huſband being in Italy, and neglecting to remit money for her ſubſiſtence. He gave her ſome aſſiſtance, which led the way to a more intimate connexion. Dollard hearing of this, and furious with jealouſy, came to Paris, and entering M. Demantort's office, addreſſed Vallelin as a perſon ſent by Dollard, ſaying that the latter, wounded in the moſt tender point, demanded, and expected full and entire ſatisfaction. Vallelin anſwered, that he had no more than a tranſient paſſion for this woman, which was ſoon extinguiſhed by his learning that ſhe was openly faithleſs to her husband and her love, living openly with another perſon at Florence. Dollard then diſcovered himſelf, demanding ſatisfaction, challenging Vaſſelin to fight, who refuſed, ſaying that he did not chuſe to fight for an infamous woman.

Dollard retired with many violent threats. He afterwards watched the footſteps of Vaſſelin, provoked him in every poſſible manner, addreſſing many outrageous letters to him, waited for him at his door, inſulting him with the groſſeſt language, pelted papers, filled with furious expreſſions, on the ſtair-caſe of his lodging, and renewed his threats from time to time. Vaſſelin wearied out with ſo much ill-uſage, accepted the challenge, and the parties met at Romainville: Dollard being accompanied by an officer of Chaſſeurs, and by Citizen Gaſpard, Captain of Artillery, he claimed, as the offended perſon, the choice of weapons, which the ſeconds oppoſed, obſerving that the ſword or the ſabre were unequal arms in this caſe. Piſtols were fixed on: and the diſtance of fifteen paces meaſured. Vaſſelin gained the right of the firſt fire, by drawing lots, and fired in the air. Dollard was enraged with this generoſity, which ſeemed to interfere with his reſolution of taking vengeance. He inſiſted that they ſhould fire together, on a ſignal from the ſeconds; and that on every unſucceſsful fire, they ſhould advance five paces, till one ſhould fall; "For," ſaid he, "one of us at leaſt muſt be left dead on the ſpot."

On the ſignal, Dollard fired, but Vaſſelin did not fire; and again generouſly preſented his full front to his adverſary. Captain Gaſpard, the ſecond of Dollard, called out to Vaſſelin, to preſent an oblique front, which he inſiſted upon was the cuſtom. Vaſſelin then took an oblique poſition, and his ball juſt grazed his hip. Vaſſelin gave his piſtol, ſtill loaded, to one of the ſeconds, and aſked Dollard, if he yet demanded further ſatisfaction?—The latter, although more and more incenſed with Vaſſelin's generoſity, was compelled to deſiſt, as the ſeconds repreſented, that any further purſuit of his vengeance would be atrocious. The ſeconds entreated that the matter might end here; and ſolemnly adjured Dollard to forget his thirſt of vengeance. He then ſaid he was ſatisfied; and it was agreed that the parties ſhould dine together, as a mutual proof of reconciliation. Dollard could not forbear ſaying to captain Gaſpard, "Why did not you let him ſtand with a full front? If you had not interfered, I ſhould have killed him." During the dinner, of which Vaſſelin bore the expence, Dollard was inconſiderate enough to report the following fact, which fully exhibits the malignity of his mind. Having ſome diſpute with General Brouſſier, he followed him to Turin, way-laid him, and employed four men to attack him with bludgeons. When he ſaw him ſtretched on the ground almoſt lifeleſs, he ſaid concealed by the obſcurity of the night, "Are you now content? Take this from your humble ſervant." The manner in which the company received this declaration, ſeemed for the time to affect Dollard, for he left the room abruptly and violently agitated.

Some time after this ſcene, Dollard renewed his threats and his outrages towards Vaſſelin. After having compelled him, by the moſt brutal conduct, to fight, he now intimated that he muſt purchaſe his future peace by a ſum of money. Vaſſelin declared to Dollard, that he had been willing to hazard his life to expiate his errors, but that he would not make any pecuniary ſacrifice. On this anſwer, delivered in a firm manner, Dollard gave way to convulſive tranſports of rage; he every where followed Vaſſelin, repeating his outrages ſo every form, and declared to his ſiſter-in-law, that he was reſolved to murder him.

He obſerved that Vaſſelin frequently went to bathe. On the 15th of Fructidor (Sept. 1) he met him in the Rue Vivienne, and held a ſtick over his head, with many threats. On the ſame evening, Vaſſelin being at a bath near the Pont de la Concorde, obſerved, as did alſo his companions, three men who, from time to time, were looking through the crivices of the wainſcot of the bath. Vaſſelin, thinking himſelf ſecure in the midſt of his friends, did not reflect on Dollard's implacable hatred, and ſtill leſs ſuſpected the ſnare that was ſpread for him. He left the bath to ſwim in the open river; and obſerved a man who ſwam at a little diſtance, who ſaid to him, "Will you not ſwim further into the ſtream?" Vaſſelin accepted this ſpecies of challenge, and in the midſt of the current, another man ſeized him by a bandage which bound his hair, plung'd him under water, and gave him two wounds, with a ſtiletto. Vaſſelin fainted, and was carried down by the ſtream to the Pont de Concorde, where his head ſtruck againſt the ſtone work of the bridge. The blow fortunately brought him to his ſenſes, and he gained one of the piers. Here he ſat, endeavouring with his hands to ſtop the blood, which poured copiouſly from his wounds. After ſome time, fearing that he might periſh for want of aſſiſtance, as the night approached, he collected all his ſtrength, and plunged into the water, if poſſible to gain the ſhore. When he was within a few paces he grew ſo faint he could ſwim no longer. A man and a woman happened to be on the edge of the river; and at length got hold of his arm and drew him on ſhore; but ſeeing the blood flow from his wounds, they fled with terror. Vaſſelin then proceeded towards the bath, where he arrived after ſeveral falls. His friends had been in ſearch of him; he fainted in the arms of one, after having only ſtrength to declare that he had been attacked and wounded in the river. He was carried to M. Demantur's where two Surgeons being called in, declared his wounds to be dangerous.—Contrary to their expectation, however, he recovered. Such were the extraordinary facts which appeared on the trial. The Tribunal having heard the Counſel for the accuſed, adjourned the ſentence to the following day. The Preſident on that day, ſummed up the whole evidence to the Jury, who after two hours deliberation, found the accuſed guilty; and the Tribunal condemned him to ten years impriſonment. The priſoner having heard his ſentence, ſaid, with great audacity, "I am either guilty or innocent of this charge; I merit either death or acquittal: but I know how to withdraw myſelf from the horrors of impriſonment."

A gentleman of Wilmington, N. C. being lately ſolicited by his neighbour to be his ſecurity to the Marſhal, after reading the Bond, uttered in a faultring tone of voice, I am ſo ſickly, and ſo poorly—ſo ſickly, and poorly, that I do not think I can write? then taking up a pen, made an attempt to write his name on a piece of paper and tore it off. The other obſerved that he could write well enough, and preſſed him to ſign the Bond: to which he replied, "I am going to your wharf to look at ſome lumber, but will be back again in the afternoon; in the mean time try to get ſome one elſe to ſign it with you; I am ſo ſickly—and ſo poorly." The other ſtill perſiſting in his ſolicitations, declared it was only a matter of form. "Oh! ho! matter of form do you ſay?" exclaimed the pretended ſick man, "I had to pay Six Hundred Dollars for matter of form not long ſince, and ſhall have to pay Six Hundred more in a ſhort time, and I am ſo ſick—and ſo poorly! and marched off.—Wilm. Gaz.

Greatneſs of Mind.—A celebrated hiſtorian gives the following anecdote as a noble inſtance of humility in a perſon who had raiſed himſelf to the higheſt rank of his profeſſion by his own merits:—

"There is a ſtory related of the Ruſſian General Bauer by an authentic writer, which places him in ſuch an amiable light, and conveys at the ſame time ſuch a ſevere reproach, to that falſe pride which counſels man to guard againſt the diſcovery of a plebian origin, as a mortal wound to his reputation, after genius, caprice, or fortune has mounted him on the car of greateſt, that we ſhall deem no apology neceſſary for the length of its inſertion. The orders of the Czar having fixed this General in Holſtein, at the concluſion of the year 1702, he invited one day his principal officers to an entertainment, and diſpatched, at the ſame time, a ſimilar meſſage to a miller and his wife, whoſe habitation aroſe near the town of Holſum. The miller, to whom the Ruſſian name was ſo formidable, felt great uneaſineſs at this ſovitation, as he interpreted it not into an honorable courteſey, but into an abſolute command. With fear and wonder the anxious pair fought the camp, where Bauer himſelf received, ſeated them both by his ſide at the table, and exhorted them to baniſh every apprehenſion of danger. During the dinner, he queſtioned his humble gueſt concerning the actual ſtate of his family, and after he had aſcertained the number of his children, he aſked him whether he had any brothers? I had one, replied the miller, but as he entered into the army at a very early age, and no tidings have been received of him, I muſt therefore conclude that he has fallen in ſome engagement. Then General Bauer, addreſſing himſelf to the aſſembly, thus emphatically expreſſed the noble feelings of truth, virtue and affection:—

"Gentlemen, you have always been inquiſitive to know my origin; your curioſity ſhall now be ſatisfied; I drew my firſt breath in the mill which belongs to my brother, whom you beheld here with my ſiſter." On ſaying theſe words, he aroſe from the table, threw himſelf into the arms of his aſtoniſhed relatives, and requeſted the company to dine with him the next day at the paternal mill. The reader might juſtly accuſe us of diminiſhing the effect of this pleaſing and inſtructive ſcene, if we did not add that the generous Bauer ſettled his brother in a happy independence, and charged himſelf with the education of his nephews. In my mind, this anecdote, for its moral excellence, is almoſt worthy to be inſcribed in letters of gold. In juſtice to the honour of the Czar, we muſt obſerve, that he admired and praiſed this exemplary conduct of the truly magnanimous General."

Heroiſm.—Captain Nelſon, who is now appointed acting Captain of the Boudroyant, was in France during the fury of the Revolution, and while the popular rage was vented on the unfortunate bakers. Paſſing through one of the ſtreets, he perceived a baker in the hands of the mob, who were hurrying him away a la lanterne. With all the inconſiderate bravery of a generous tar, thoughtleſs of his own danger, he ruſhed among the ſanguinary multitude, and throwing himſelf round the half dead wretch, declared, that "if they deſtroyed one innocent man, they ſhould the other,"—The extraordinary generoſity of this heroic action was not loſt on the ſurrounding multitude; and thoſe very people, who but for him would have exulted in the deſtruction of their victim, now carried him and his deliverer before the National Convention. With loud ſhouts of applauſe he was welcomed, as having ſaved the life of a citizen; was preſented with a national ſword, dedicated to ſuch purpoſes, and a civic crown placed on his head.

OUR KINTRYTOR, A GRAVE O'T!

TUNE "Whiſtle o'er the lave o't."

By JOHN MAYNE, author of the poem of 'Glaſgow.'

Bonaparte o'er the ſea,
Threatens you and threatens me;
But "ſtagie-handed tho' we be,
We'll whiſtle o'er the lave o't.
Let him come, or let him bruſh,
Back again he'll never brush,
Our iſland is his journey's end—
He'll only get his grave o't!
And for the braſh like ſons o' ſtrife,
Who'd ſhun the low that ga'e us life,
By a' that's dear to man and wife,
An inch they'll never have o't!
We'll fight like men who daſe be free,
We'll make them ſa' or gar them flee;
And, when we've drown'd them i' the ſea,
We'll whiſtle o'er the lave o't!
To his King and Kintry's cauſe,
Each is he who' nobly pa's!
Loud FAME records him in her ha's,
And GLORY tells the brave o't!
Sound, ſound your pipes, your chaunters blaw!
To arms, to arms! hurra, hurra!
Our King, our Liberty, and Law;
Our Kintry, or a Grave o't!

On reading the REGULATIONS for the French NAVAL UNIFORM.

GREAT Emperor, why this needleſs care,
Cocking ſmall hats, and cropping hair,
Why ſhirts a-piece? (to Frenchmen rare)—
And thoſe waſh'd clean on Monday.
Riſk thy dear ſoul—the coſt beguile—
Red cowls, black ſtocks for every meſs!
And then the ſlic one's for full dreſs!
And then, the dance on Sunday!
Faith! ſave nankeen and rich array,
Juſt lead thy Seamen out one day,
From Calais Pier and Boulogne Bay
As far as Channel middle—
Our generous Tars will do their beſt
To have their jackets trim'd and laced;
Gratis they ſhall be ſmartly dreſs'd,
And dance without a fiddle!

A Tyrolian Hunter — The Tyroleſe mountaineers are paſſionately fond of the chaſe, and train their children to it. In every village there is a little ſquare appropriated, where the young people practice ſhooting at a mark, as ſoon as they are able to carry a gun. The beſt markſmen among them frequently go to the different places of Germany where prizes for ſhooting are diſtributed, and never return till they have gained ſome. The parſnet of the chamois, which is allowed to be the moſt laborious and difficult of all hunting, is that which has the greateſt attraction for the Tyrolian. Eighty years, wearing a large green hat to keep off the ſun, his gun flung at his back like a ſoldier's muſket, and ſtick pointed with iron in his hand, he traverſes the deepeſt vallies and the higheſt mountains, on which he often paſſes ſeveral days ſucceſſively. His haver ſack, which is commonly covered with fur, and in which he carries his proviſion, a ſmall ſpeaking trumpet, and a pair of iron hooks, ſerves him alſo for a pillow by night. He makes uſe of the iron hooks in climbing the moſt rugged rocks; and being often obliged to go down them, or way from one rock to another, he frequently finds it expedient to make a conſiderable inciſion in the ſoles of his feet, that the blood which comes from it may ſtrike about them, and make a kind of paſte to prevent his ſlipping! What men are keen ſportſmen indeed! and unfeeling to themſelves! Self-denial and pain are forgotten in the purſuit to which man is paſſionately devoted. The philoſopher, intent on the ſolution of a problem, forgets his meal; and the hunter in the chaſe braves death, and is regardleſs of wounds.

Among the manuſcripts bequeathed by the late Rev. Mr. Cole to the Britiſh Muſeum, appears the following memorandum:

"Deſdra, Effex.—When I was here at Dr. Cock's inſtallation, they were taking the bones and coffins out of the old vault belonging to the family of Stonehouſe, and putting them into a hole in the church-yard, in order to fit it up for Mr. Shilwell's family. This made me often reflect on the folly of vaults and leaden coffins. Once in an hundred or an hundred and fifty years, and families ſeldom laſt longer, a new proprietor takes poſſeſſion for himſelf; and the old inhabitants, even of a grave or reſting place, are turned out to make room for new comers; who, in their turn, are ſerved the ſame way. If the bodies are put in leaden coffins, theſe are ſent to the plumbers, with part of their inhabitants, and melted down for other purpoſes. So that a man has a better chance to keep poſſeſſion of his grave undiſturbed, if he lies of mother earth are allotted him in ſome obſcure corner of the church-yard, than in the moſt ſumptuous vault that can be prepared."

The Hydra of the Pagan Mythology has been rendered leſs miraculous by a diſcovery of Dr. Cozzi [illegible]i, of Prato, in Tuſcany. He had the opportunity of examining a ſerpent with two heads which was [illegible] alive. It died from [illegible], but it is preſerved in ſpirits for the gratification of the curious. It has, in ſome reſpects, the appearance of [illegible] animals, for the functions of the heads ſeemed perfectly independant of each other, and they were perceived often to move in contrary directions, and in ſearch of different objects.

It is ſaid to be well known in France that Pichegru was put to the torture by ſome of Bonpartte's Mamelukes; that to prevent him from revealing the iniquitous treatment he had ſuffered, he was ſtrangled, and when his body was expoſed to undergo the farce of an examination into the cauſe of his death, a cloth was carefully placed over his legs to which the torture had been applied. Part of this puniſhment conſiſted of burning the feet. It is added that Moreau would have been treated in the ſame way, if the ſoldiery and people in general had not manifeſted ſo ſtrong an intereſt in his fate.

Button, the celebrated Naturaliſt, was in the habit of riſing with the ſun, but it was with great difficulty he conquered his natural indolence. He thus relates the manner in which he accompliſhed it: "In my youth I was extremely fond of ſleep, and that fondneſs robbed me of much time. My poor Joſeph (a domeſtic who ſerved him ſixty-five years) was of the higheſt utility to me in overcoming it. I promiſed him a crown for every time he ſhould make me get up at ſix o'clock. He failed not every day to rouſe and torment me—I abuſed him. He came the day following, and I threatened him, "Friend Joſeph," ſaid I to him at noon, "you have gained nothing, and I have loſt my time. You don't know how to manage the matter. Think only on my promiſe, and never heed my threatenings." The day following he accompliſhed his point. I beg'd, entreated, then abuſed, and wo'd have turned him off. He riſed me by abſolute force; and had his reward every day for my ill humour in the morning of waking—my thanks and a crown an hour after. I owe to poor Joſeph at leaſt ten or twelve volumes of my work."

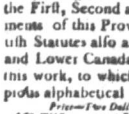
MR. PRINTER,



CHARITY being a duty moſt ſtrictly injoined and inſiſted upon by our glorious Redeemer and Saviour the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, it behoves every man, as he regards his eternal ſalvation, to underſtand the word in its literal ſenſe and meaning, and alſo to practice it in its fulleſt extent.—By the word Charity, is not ſolely meant the giving of Alms, for that we know, may, and has been done from ſelf-intereſted motives; but by the word is meant, veiling the imperfections of our fellow mortals, and not expoſing them either to the ridicule or contempt of the multitude. By the word Charity is alſo meant, that if we know evil of any man, we are not to publiſh it; but we may privately exhort him and ſhew him the error of his ways. By the word Charity is likewiſe meant, to do our fellow creatures as much good as we poſſibly can without injuring ourſelves: in ſhort, "to do unto all men as we would that "they ſhould do unto us," is the full and true meaning of that word. Let us lay our hands upon our hearts and conſult them, whether we have followed this divine precept; if we have not, let us apply for aſſiſtance from on High to enable us to do ſo; and if we have injured our neighbour in thought, word, or deed, let us endeavour to make every poſſible reſtitution, ſuch as conſcience dictates.—Then ſhall we enjoy peace of mind here and happineſs hereafter.

Yours,

A SAMARITAN.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

LONDON, January 26.

Last night dispatches were sent off from the Admiralty to Admiral Cornwallis, off Plymouth, with orders for him to resume his former station with all possible dispatch.

There is a report in the city that Bonaparte had resolved to send M. Schimelpinnick to London with pacific overtures. It produced a slight rise in the stocks. We attach no credit to the report.

The report of the capture of Minorca by Lord Nelson, is probably well founded. The enterprize and promptitude of the gallant admiral would in all likelihood induce him to think of attempting that important island, after having intercepted the reinforcements destined for it.

January 28.

The Hamburgh Correspondent, under the head of Paris, Jan. 9th, speaks of a report, that some discussion had taken place with Count Cobenzel, the Imperial Ambassador at Paris, on the subject of the Austrian army assembling on the frontiers of Italy. It is said, however, that these discussions are likely to be amicably terminated.

It is said that the French government have proposed to confer on the King of Sardinia, by way of indemnity, the sovereignty of the Seven Islands; a project which it is easy to see would be rejected by Russia.

Intelligence from various parts of Italy, gives reason to suppose, that the Court of Naples has been compelled to abandon its system of neutrality, or that the troops of France have entered the territory of his Sicilian Majesty.—As a preliminary step towards this movement the Italian troops in the pay of France, were to re enter Italy, and occupy such places as the French should quit on their advancing into the Neapolitan states. The English minister is stated to be in momentary apprehension of being obliged to quit the city of Naples.

January 29.

Hamburgh, Jan. 4.

"Paris letters of the 26th ult. state, that a reconciliation has been effected between Lucian Bonaparte and his brother Napoleon.

"Bonaparte has authorised the Pope to invite all the constitutional bishops and clergy, who formerly took the constitutional oath, to abjure its obligations. All of them have obeyed the invitation, except Saurine, formerly a member of the national convention, and new bishop of the department of the Upper and Lower Rhine. The Pope has, it is said, demanded the restitution of the church property, and the restoration of the Jesuits, but these demands have been peremptorily rejected by Napoleon.

"Letters from Genoa, of the 5th ult. mention that the French fleet at Toulon, with 8000 troops on board, will embrace the first favorable opportunity to sail, and occupy the ports of Sicily and Naples. There were, on the 3d ult. upwards of one hundred ships in Genoa.

January 17.

"Private advices from Paris of the 2d inst. positively state, that a siege of Gibraltar, By a combined French and Spanish army, is at present a favourite measure of Bonaparte's councils, and that the King of Spain has been invited to adopt it. Several of the ablest French engineers, including Carnot having been charged with drawing a plan of the intended siege, that of the latter is said to have the preference, and a duplicate of it with the manuscript instructions and memorial, have been sent to General Bournonville at Madrid, who has presented it to the Spanish Cabinet.

"The Court of Madrid has now official intelligence that Dessalines had declared war against Spain, and that serious disturbances have broken out in Mexico. The Viceroy of that colony has written home for military succours.

"The Court of Lisbon has been invited by the French and Spanish courts to shut its ports against the English. The Prince regent, however, has hitherto assigned various weighty reasons for not coming with their requests.

"General Moreau, according to some advices from Spain, has taken his departure for America on board of an American ship. The individuals accused of the last conspiracy against Bonaparte are still in close custody, and some of them have been sent to different fortresses.

"There are now at Paris two deputies of the Italian Republic, with instructions to offer the crown to Bonaparte as King of Lombardy.

January 25.

"Letters from Paris of the 4th inst. mention, that General Mutat is to have the chief command of the combined force which is to attack Gibraltar.—The French army is to consist of fifty thousand men.—The operations of the combined French and Spanish forces are to be seconded by the French and Spanish fleets. The Admiral Gravina, who was to leave Paris about the middle of the present month, having received his letters of recall, and the news of his appointment on the 27th ult. The chevalier d'Andurain at London, is mentioned as his successor in the embassy at the Court of the Tuileries.

"The last accounts from Italy stated that the Neapolitan Majesty in answer to the ultimatum notes of the French minister Alquier, to shut his ports against the English, demanded some time longer to wait for the arrival of some important dispatches from Saint Petersburgh, London and Vienna. This Alquier and the French General St. Cyr, said they were not authorized to grant; but they both dispatched couriers to Paris for fresh instructions.—Meanwhile the British diplomatic agent at Naples was making preparations for his departure.

"The sailors and soldiers of the Italian Republic who joined the expedition on the coast of France, have been ordered to return to Italy.

"Monsr. de la Rochefoucault, French Ambassador in Dresden, succeeds Champagny as Ambassador at the Court of Vienna.

"The King of Sweden is arrived at Elfingburg.

"Gen. Brune is said to have left Constantinople under a Turkish escort.

Paris papers to the 18th arrived last night, but their contents are of little importance. Of the pacific overture of this country, nothing seems to be publickly known at Paris. The attention of the French government is engroled by the active preparations carrying on by Austria. We were correct in stating that an alliance had taken place between Bonaparte and Count Cobentzel, upon the subject of those preparations. Gen. Mack is to have the command of the Austrian army in Italy. In mentioning these preparations, the French papers add, that—'for some days past there has been frequent mention of some important changes in the cabinet of Vienna. It is confidently asserted, that Count L. de Cobentzel, who has rendered essential services to his sovereign and to the Austrian monarchy, is soon to be placed at the head of the Austrian government, as first Minister and chancellor of the Austrian Empire, which place has remained vacant since the death of prince Kaunitz, and that his imperial majesty intends to raise him to the dignity of Prince of the Germanic Empire."

The French papers are anxious to have it believed, that these changes in the Austrian Ministry will be favorable to the continuance of peace between the two countries. But they seem alarmed at the frequent communications between Vienna and Petersburgh, and they suspect the large army assembling in Italy is part of a plan of co-operation of with the Emperor of Russia. Early in the spring the Emperor is to proceed to Italy, to inspect the troops, and is to be accompanied by the Emperor and the Archduke Charles.

But if the intercourse between Austria and Russia affords them uneasiness, the French papers affect to speak with confidence of the disposition and sentiments of Prussia. They assure us the remains firmly attached to France, and is decidedly against any continental league. They have intented, perhaps fabricated, an article from Berlin of the 3d, in which they say, that "for some time there have been reports that a treaty of Subsidy between England and Sweden was on the tapis, but that the negociation was attended with difficulties. We now learn that our court has made serious representations to that of Stockholm, to divest it from an alliance which might have fatal consequences of the tranquility of the north of Germany, which his Prussian Majesty is firmly resolved to prevent."

A very rich Spanish ship has been taken and sent into Falmouth, by the Malta, of 84 guns.

No less than fifteen Spanish prizes, exclusive of the Amphitrite frigate, have been carried into Gibraltar.

Private letters received by the last Hamburgh mails, state that the exportation of corn, from the Swedish and Prussian ports, has been prohibited, in consequence, it is supposed, of the magazines of provisions which are about to be formed for the use of the armies in those countries.

Private letters from Holland, state, that it is now generally believed that Schimmelpenninck will not be placed at the head of the new government, but Bonaparte's brother-in-law, General Murat.

It is stated with confidence, that Lord Melville is very shortly to retire from the Admiralty, and that Ld. Spencer is to be his successor.

Yesterday dispatches were received from Ad. Cochrane, off Ferrol. They state there was reason to suppose the French fleet in that port would endeavour to get to sea, having since the war commenced, been completely fitted out by the Spanish artificers.

The loan intended to be negociated for in March, is not, we are well assured, to exceed the sum of twelve millions, the rest of the supplies being to be raised within the year.

The Courts of Vienna and Copenhagen have declared, in answer to the circular note of M. Talleyrand, respecting the Ministers of Great Britain, whom Bonaparte professed to put out of the protection of the public law, that they cannot recognize so extraordinary a principle.

The King of Prussia does not discontinue the marks of his displeasure at the detention of the papers of Sir George Rumbold—and it is in consequence of this sovereign's known indignation that these papers have not yet been published by the government of France.

Austria, Prussia and Russia, are represented as being far advanced in negociations, of which this the object to maintain the peace of the continent, and to guarantee it against encroachments upon the part of any other power.

PARIS, January 9.

The seige of Gibraltar, which the English have had now in their possession exactly one hundred years, is to be undertaken with from eighty to a hundred thousand men. The camp at St. Roch will be more numerous than during the American war.

MADRID, November 27.

Since the appearance of Admiral Nelson's fleet before Barcelona, great fears are entertained for Minorca. This island, whose means of defence are not very formidable, would be an important acquisition to the English: the works of Mahon are in a very wretched condition, and the garrison does not consist of more than 1000 men.

DECEMBER 16.

A part of the garrison of this metropolis, has received marching orders, but their destination is not known.

Eight regiments of infantry and several companies of artillerists are on their march to the camp of St. Roch, which, added to other formidable movements, leaves no room to doubt of its being the fixed determination of our government to make an attack on Gibraltar:—this important place, in the hands of the English, has long enough been a monument of our weakness; and it is now time to wipe away the foul disgrace. Every thing announces an unalterable resolution not to spare our enemy in any single instance.

DECEMBER 21.

A part of the garrison here has received orders to hold itself in readiness to march. A quantity of artillery from the great arsenal at Segovia will be sent against Gibraltar. The war against England will be carried on with vigour; and the greater part of our Marine, which consists of 65 ships of the line, of various sizes, besides other vessels, will be got in readiness for sea immediately. Public prayers will soon be put up for the blessing of Heaven on our arms.

CADIZ, December 13.

Admiral Gravina is shortly expected here from Paris. All ships of war here, and at Carthagena, are fitting out and many seamen are levied.

MILAN, December 17.

Mr. Livingston, the late envoy from the states of north America to Paris, has arrived here; he is making a journey to Lower Italy.

M. D'Oubril, late Ruhian Charge d'Affaires at Paris, has since his return been appointed a Counsellor of State, rewarded with considerable presents, and employed in the departure of Foreign Affairs.

Orders have been given to fit out at Venice, in a short time, twenty-two corvettes, from 12 to 18 guns.

We are assured that General Mack will have the command of our strong cordon of troops on the Italian frontiers.

STOCKHOLM, January 12.

Accounts from St. Petersburgh state, that the greatest activity prevails in the dock-yards, both at Cronstadt and Revel: at the former place several new ships are building. A formidable fleet, it is said, will be soon in a state of readiness.

From Berlin we hear that the late encroachments of the French in Hamburgh, and the seizure of Sir George Rumbold and the Messenger, have ever since made his Prussian Majesty view all the motions of Bonaparte with a jealous eye.

PARIS, January 7.

We have received an account from Antwerp of a desperate scuffle having taken place between some American sailors, who were attacked by a party of Spanish sailors, who supposed them to be English. Many lives were lost on both sides, and several very severely wounded.

ITALY, December 11.

French troops continue to march from Upper Italy to the Ecclesiastical state, and to the Neapolitan Territory. Eighteen thousand men are now assembled between Cevignola and Goggin, waiting for orders to enter the kingdom of Naples.

CONSTANTINOPLE, November 30.

The Spanish Envoy has received, by a courier, who had an incredible quick passage, the intelligence of actual war between Spain and England, and he has communicated it to the Porte, which has caused a great sensation in the Divan. It is thought that this news may effect change in the present political system of the Porte.

HOUSE OF COMMONS JAN. 23.

The House, in a committee of supply, agreed to the following resolutions.

"That 120,000 men, including 20,000 marines, be voted for the service of the navy.—That a sum not exceeding £3,380,000 be voted, for thirteen months pay of the said number of seamen and marines, at £1 17s. per month per man.—That a sum not exceeding £1,961,600 be voted for provisions for the same, at £1 18s per month per man.—That a sum not exceeding £468,000 be voted for the wear and tear of the ships, at the rate of £3 per month per ton.

NEW YORK March 19.

Rise in Paris.—The following article is copied from a London paper of the 28th January—

A report was very prevalent at the west end of the town on Saturday, that a most alarming riot took place lately at one of the Parisian Theatres, while Bonaparte was present, and that the indignant multitude made an attempt to assassinate the tyrant, who is become odious beyond description in the eyes of the people. This report, we understand, came from a very respectable quarter; but knowing nothing of the fact ourselves, we leave our readers to pronounce their own judgement upon it. We have only to observe, that it derives some degree of confirmation from the information of a Gentleman arrived at Portsmouth, from France who states that about a fortnight since a general discontent prevailed in that country, and that Paris was in the greatest state of commotion. It is added, "that Bonaparte's object in making the late overtures of peace to our government, was to quiet the general Ferment," occasioned probably by the hostile declaration in his last Exposé, "that France will never accept of any conditions of peace with England, except those of the Treaty of Amiens."

A very intelligent gentleman who has just effected his escape from France, states that every town through which he passed, not excepting even the capital, the general sentiment of the people was that of utter disgust at the proceedings of the government. Nothing can exceed the severity of the tyranny under which they have for some time suffered; but the extraordinary watchfulness of their oppressors, and increased rigor of the military in every direction, are such as to make them despair of the success of any effort they could at present make to redress their country's wrongs.

We learn by the brig Washington, from Teneriffe, that two or three days previous to her sailing a Packet arrived there with the intelligence that Great-Britain had declared War against Portugal, and that the former had attacked and taken possession of Madeira.

The King of Great Britain has been pleased to appoint Francis Gower, Esq. to be Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the islands and plantations in America commonly called the Bermuda or Somer islands.

Stephen Arnold, of the town of Burlington, in the state of N. York, who in a most wanton and cruel manner whipped a girl of about six years of age, seven times in the space of an hour and an half, because she did not pronounce gig as he required, and which caused her death—was apprehended at this place on Monday evening last, by Mr. Thomas Coboon, who had heard of him at Owego upon the Susquehannah, and followed him 320 miles. His apprehension was attended with singular circumstances. On Sunday he arrived here: he was unsuccessful in three or four applications he made for a passage down the river; he continued in the vicinity, upon Grant's Hill, a considerable part of the day, and was frequently upon the point of committing the dreadful act he left murder, but was happily deterred by a directing Providence. Monday night he called at Mrs Henderson's tavern for something to eat, but said he had no money; in a short time Mr. Coboon came in and was informed that a countryman of his was in the room, to whom he addressed himself, and discovered that he answered the discription of Arnold; after requiring the other company to leave the room he read the advertisements; while reading he discovered the other drawing something from his pocket, upon which he raised his eyes and said, You are the man, the hand dropped—it was a pistol which was cocked twice, and only prevented from doing execution by Mr. Coboon's firmness. They took him to a magistrate, but on the way he drew a pistol and fired—; different direction was given to it by his arm being seized by a bystander; the flash of the pan singed his temple, and the ball flew by the ear of Mr. Coboon; it however did no injury. The pistol, a number of balls, a rope, and some money, was found upon him; he called himself Smith, and would give no satisfaction that night. The next day he made full confession—and appears to be fully sensible of the enormity of his crimes, deplores the violence of his passion, which have sunk him from a respectable standing in society to the lowest degradation.—Pittsburg Tree of Liberty.

YORK—SATURDAY, APRIL 13.

ANECDOTE.

An honest Quaker being obliged to appear in a Court of Justice in Ireland, as an evidence in a cause, after having taken his affirmation, he proceeded in giving his evidence, in the course of which he made use of the word's like-wife and also so often, that one of the Judges on the Bench lost his patience, and interrupted him rather petulantly, by observing that the words were synonimous.—"I ask thy excuse, friend," said the Quaker, "they are not: For thy brother W. is a Judge, so art thou also; but not—like-wife."

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith &c.

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament of our Town of York, on the eighth day of April, to be commenced, held, called and declared, and to every of you.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN,

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given, they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming partakers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. And whereas certain persons notwithstanding such notice, do still continue to occupy and possess such Lands without any authority, licence or title derived from the Crown to the same; and being willing that these persons may have the fullest notice of their danger, and of the consequences of their conduct, and that they may not avail themselves of the unmerited forbearance of the Crown, by assuming or pretending to any right, claim, or title in, or to the Lands so illegally and unjustly occupied and possessed by them as aforesaid. I PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council thereof, hereby again give notice to, and warn such person or persons that do possess and occupy Lands therein without any licence, title or right whatever derived from the Crown, having ever been obtained for such Lands, forthwith to quit and remove from the same; it being the intent of the Executive Government of this Province to prevent and frustrate such illegal and fraudulent usurpations, as well as to support the claims of such individuals as are justly entitled to the enjoyment of his Majesty's bounty therein.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this eleventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five, and in the forty-fifth year of his Majesty's reign.

Latest Intelligence.

NEW-YORK, March 28.

London and Liverpool Papers and Lloyd's Lists, each to the 8th of February, inclusive, are received at the office of the Mercantile Advertiser, for which we are indebted to the politeness of captain Waite of the Liverpool Packet. They are ten days later than any heretofore received, and, we believe, are the latest on the Continent. They are, however, uncommonly barren of political intelligence, as the subsequent extracts (which comprize every article worth extracting) will shew.

The news of the Rochefort fleet having eluded the vigilance of the British, & got out of port, was well known in England early in February, and its destination was the subject of much speculation. It was by some supposed to have a visit to Portugal for its object; by others an attack on Ireland. The latter opinion was current for some time, and was founded on the circumstance of five large ships having been seen off the Coast of Cork on the 31st of January, which it was afterwards discovered were Indiamen from St. Helena. It does not appear, by the London papers, that the remotest idea was entertained of the fleet's having sailed for the West Indies.

We have in the paper of the 8th February a very distressing account of the loss of the Earl of Abergavenny, East-Indiaman, which left Portsmouth for bombay and China on the 21ſt of January, with four hundred perſons on board, three hundred of whom periſhed with the veſſel. In the moſt intereſting part of the narrative the paper has been ſo torn by accident by one of the paſſengers of the Packet that we are unable to give (as we otherwiſe would have done) a connected and circumſtantial account of this unfortunate diſaſter.

LONDON, February 2.

The two Hamburgh mails, which became due, arrived yeſterday. An article from Madrid ſtates, "that on the day on which the declaration of war appeared here, a treaty of alliance was ſigned with Portugal, by which the Court of Liſbon declares itſelf an ally of Spain, and an enemy to England."

Letters from Genoa, dated January 2, ſtate that on the 28th of December, the French fleet lay ſtill at anchor at Toulon; the report that it had put to ſea was premature. On the 21ſt of December, Admiral Nelſon, with 18 ſhips of war, ſailed from Cagliari, in Sardinia, where he had taken in water and proviſions, while Admiral Buckerton, with his ſquadron, was cruiſing off Minorca.

The French ſquadron at Rochefort, conſiſting of ſix ſail of the line and two frigates, effected their eſcape from that port on the 11th ult. There is no doubt but ſome of our fleets will be able very ſoon to give a good account of them.

We are concerned to ſtate the loſs of his Majeſty's ſhip Doris, of 36 guns, Captain Campbell, which ſtruck on a rock on the coaſt of Spain, while in chaſe of one of the enemy's brigs. The officers and all the crew were ſaved.

The Felix ſchooner arrived at Plymouth, on Thurſday, having on board part of the crew of the Doris. The ſame veſſel alſo brings the melancholy intelligence of the death of Captain W. H. Jarvis, of the Tonnant of 80 guns, who was upſet in his barge in going from that ſhip to the Admiral—one man periſhed with him. Captain Jarvis was nephew and heir to the titles and eſtate of Earl St. Vincent.

Government have juſt iſſued inſtructions to our Naval Commanders, not to moleſt any neutral veſſel going with ſupplies of grain to Spain, during the preſent diſtreſs of that unfortunate country, even though the grain ſhould belong to our enemy.

Orders have been ſent to the tranſport board, that all the private property belonging to the officers and men of the captured Spaniſh frigates, whether in money or goods, ſhould be forthwith reſtored to the owners.

The monthly report of the ſhips in commiſſion in the Britiſh Navy, ſtates them to be 697, of which number 105 are of the line; 24 of 50 guns; 137 frigates, and 431 ſloops of war; beſides theſe, there are a great number building and repairing, receiving ſhips, ſmaller veſſels, &c. making in the whole a grand total of 905 ſail.

February 5.

Mr. Pitt gave notice yeſterday of his intention to bring forward the Budget next Monday week. The bringing forward the Budget earlier than was expected, and the idea of its being the intention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to raiſe a ſum ſufficient to pay off the Loyalty Loan, in addition to the Loan for the ſervice of the year, occaſioned a depreſſion of the funds yeſterday of nearly one per cent. It is ſuppoſed that the Loyalty Loan Holders will be paid off by an iſſue of Exchequer Bills.

The army eſtimates were moved yeſterday. By theſe it appears that we have an army of regulars, militia and ſupplicles, of upwards of 900,000 men, and a Volunteer army to the full amount. If to theſe be added our naval force, it will be found that we have a greater number of men in arms than any country in Europe, not excepting France herſelf; we had almoſt ſaid than any two countries.

February 8.

We are ſtill unable to communicate any information to our readers reſpecting the Rochefort ſquadron.

Diſpatches have been received from Lord Nelſon and Sir John Orde; but we underſtand they do not contain any thing of importance. Sir Thomas Trigge had arrived from Gibraltar in the Tribune frigate. He ſailed on the 27th December. We are happy to ſtate that all remains of ſickneſs in the Garriſon have diſappeared. Only three perſons died in the Garriſon the week before the Tribune ſailed, and none of them of the Fever.

We have the ſtrongeſt reaſon to believe that there is no foundation for the report of the capture of the Prince of Wales's Iſland.

We have lorborne, for ſome days, to notice the filly ſtories in the leading oppoſition paper, of letters having been ſent by Mr. Pitt to a Great Perſonage—of his determination to reſign, &c. &c. &c. becauſe we really conſidered them as too contemptible to require animadverſion. With reſpect to the ſtatement in another paper which pretends to ſupport Adminiſtration, of the intended Reſignation of Lord Melville, we can only ſay, that it is juſt as deſtitute of truth as the former.

HALIFAX, Feb. 23.

It is ſaid, "that the intercourſe between this Province and the United States, hitherto authoriſed by Proclamation, will be diſcontinued after the firſt of May next, unleſs ſome urgent neceſſity, occaſioned by the failure of crops ſhould require the importation of Flour or Grain."

As the purpoſes of this ſtep, if taken, muſt be to encourage the agriculture and commerce of the Province, we flatter ourſelves, that the exerciſes of the Farmer, and the liberality of the mercantile intereſt, will mutually co-operate to evince the propriety of the meaſure.

Should we thus prefer Canada, as the ſource from whence to ſupply our deficiencies in grain, &c. it would be but fair and juſt, were the Parliament of that Province to exonerate our trade from the extra duty under which it labours there.

MISCELLANY.

Diamond Rock.

The following is a very entertaining account of the Diamond Rock, near Martinique, and of the Britiſh taking poſſeſſion of and fortifying it; being an extract of a letter from a Britiſh Officer to a friend in England, written February 17, 1804.

AT preſent, my dear friend, abandon all your romantic ideas about Highgate, Hamſtead, and the lower regions of Norwood Foreſt, or even your own Chalfont, to make room for a ſet of new ones, as wild as thoſe of Cruſoe, and more true. Near Martinique, in the middle of the ſea, is a huge rock, called the Diamond, from its ſhape, I ſuppoſe. This rock has ſtood ſince the creation, without man, bold as he is, ever daring to venture near its deſtructive form. The ſurge has beaten againſt its ſpiky ſplinters, in vain anger, and the hollow cave ſtill remurmurs to the howling winds. This mighty rock has been gazed at by many, but trodden by none; ſea crabs alone have ventured up into its holes, and birds of prey have alone aſcended to its rugged ſummits. Behold the genius of the deep, the genius of Britiſh enterprize! It is not a month ſince all this was, and the voice of ſong and labour now reſounds through every part of it; wigwams and thatchings, cots and hammocks, appear in every hole; the pot and kettle's ſteam aſcends, and the light glimmers in the cavities where ſea birds and bats formerly built their neſts. Where was the boaſted ingenuity of French engineering? It was tremendouſly for their ſkill. Now they ſtand on the ſhore with their ſpy glaſſes, and wonder.

Were you to ſee how, along a dite, and, I had almoſt ſaid, a perpendicular acclivity, the ſailors are hanging in cluſters, hauling up a four and twenty pounder by hawſers, you would wonder! they appear like mice, hauling a little cheeſe!—ſcarcely can we hear the governor on the top, directing them with his trumpet, the Centaur lying cloſe under it, like a cocoa ſhell, to which the hawſers are fixed.

From that ſhip, which you muſt know is a 74, iſſued forth carpenters, ſmiths, turners, miners, machines, engines and directors, and alſo your friend, their humble hiſtorian, who thus attempts to deſcribe their gigantic exploits, though his pencil is unable to keep pace with their labours.

The height of the Diamond is ſix hundred feet, meaſured by a quadrant on board of the Unyſles; its circumference is not quite a mile, Martinique being cloſe by, within three quarters of a mile. The ſouth ſide of the rock is inacceſſible, it being a flat ſheep, like a wall, ſloping a little towards the top, and the graſs climbing up. The eaſt ſide is alſo inacceſſible, with an overhanging cave about three hundred yards high; on the S. W. ſide alſo are caves of great magnitude, but perfectly impregnable from that ſide. The weſt has breakers running into the ſea, where the people firſt landed; here a guard is placed, and a lodgment made for ſtores; the landing is ſometimes very dangerous, and at beſt you muſt creep on your hands and feet, through cranies, till you wind to the north weſt ſide, every moment endangering your neck ſhould you ſlip. At laſt you reach the north weſt, and here a ſtage of green fig trees, and a beautiful grove, firſt relieves the eye: this grove mounts up, under an immenſe grotto, which overhangs it, and here is now the tent of the Governor, Capt. M———. Cloſe by ſtands the tent which I inhabit; our family conſiſts of a Newfoundland dog, a cat and kitten, and ſuch wild ſparrows and rabits as chuſe to viſit us.

The ſurge often drives the ſpray as high as I ſit: it is a muſic which the ear never tires. I meſs with Capt. Morris, and we genally have viſitors; the link of good nature is never broken, and we are as profuſely liberal as our circumſtances and ſituation will admit. Each lends the other his ſpoon, a penknife ſerves to cut up a joint, and fingers are ſubſtituted for forks.

We throw the ſhot upon the Martinique ſhore, and bring every boat to if we pleaſe. In the evening we walk to the Queen's Battery, thus tracing our rocky path along the overhanging ridge to the ſummit, where our little brotherly tents ſpread their canvaſs on crois ſticks, and are barricadoed with ſtones. Warmed by the genial bowl, we ſhake hands, bid good night, retire upon the dried graſs, and, rolled in blankets, ſleep ſhuts our weary eye-lids, while neither fear nor uneaſineſs intrudes on our repoſe. At night, the continued roaring of the ſea below is only interrupted by the replies of the watching ſentinels above, or the ſcreams of the tropic birds.

Some tanks are building, and almoſt finiſhed, which will, in one day, catch as much rain-water from the rock as will ſerve the colony for half a year. This place is very healthy, notwithſtanding which an hoſpital has been begun, and the walls are already mounting. I know not what the good people of England will think of ſo hazardous an undertaking, in a place where no ſpade can make impreſſion, and where every thing is blown and torn from it by mining; the lime fetched from St. Lucia; the bricks cut out with gunpowder; ſaws hammers, anvils, &c. made out of old anchors; forges going; and all this within the ſhort time of about ſix weeks; for my own part, I am aſtoniſhed, at the efforts of a ſingle ſhip's crew. But however perilous of acceſs, the ſailors built, like ſea birds, their neſts in the moſt terrific caves. Like buſy ants, the crew creep about the rude maſs; every where they are at work; the ſaw, the anvil, the axe, the grating file, is found.

The ſeamen call their coming here, going aſhore; and ſo powerful is this liberty-looking wildneſs of nature to the mind, that they return to the ſhip with reluctance, though often, while here, deprived of every comfort and allowance.—Here they will work twice as hard, and conceal their being ill, and even die without help, rather than leave the barren rock to return on board. A few days ago, the Centaur drifting, was driven to ſea, and we were left without water; but, whatever I may have read of Roman horoiſm, I every day ſee more ſtriking inſtances of that virtue among Britiſh ſeamen. Thirſty, and often without bread, in the heat of the ſun, on this comfortleſs, and at preſent barren rock, in the face of the enemy, who is erecting his work to throw bombs, they remove rocks, coloniſe a ſtinty ſoil, without intermiſſion and without murmurs, and can ſtill generouſly ſhare the little which they have left. When the marines were gone from the rock the other night, on an expedition, in the middle of the night, the alarm was given, and every man was in five minutes on the batteries to defend His Majeſty's Rock!

Not far away from the reſt of the world, it enjoys an everlaſting ſpring, ſheltered from heat and rain, ſo that in the heavieſt ſhower you may breakfaſt and dine in the open air; and behold the hurricane rage below and around, while you indulge in the gentle breeze.

Among the manuſcripts bequeathed by the late Rev. M. Cole to the Britiſh Muſeum, appears the following memorandum:

"Debden Eſſex.—When I was here at Dr. Cox's Inſtallion, they were taking the bones and coffins out of the old vault belonging to the family of Strouds-houſe, and putting them into a hole in the church-yard, in order to fit it up for Mr. Swinnell's family. This made me often reflect on the folly of vaults and leaden coffins. Once in an hundred or an hundred and fifty years, and families ſeldom laſt longer, a new proprietor takes poſſeſſion for himſelf; and the old inhabitants, even of a grave or reſting place, are turned out to make room for new comers; who, in their turn, are ſerved the ſame way. If the bodies are put in leaden coffins, theſe are ſent to the plumbers, with part of their inhabitants, and melted down for other purpoſes. So that a man has a better chance to keep poſſeſſion of his grave undiſturbed, if ſix feet of mother earth are allotted him in ſome obſcure corner of the church yard, than in the moſt ſumptuous vault that can be prepared."

ANECDOTE.

An Officer of the Britiſh Artillery being quartered in the Town of Skibbereen, in Ireland, happened to be invited to dine with a neighboring Squire; the company conſiſted of eight Militia Colonels.—After dinner, the King's health being the firſt drank, the Toaſt came to a Colonel Beechie, he gave the "Wooden walls of England." The officer of Artillery was the next to give a Toaſt; He gave the Wooden walls of Ireland.—Being aſked for an Explanation, he ſaid, "The Militia Colonels of it."

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith &c.

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the eighth day of April, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHereas by our Proclamation bearing date the second day of March last, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our said Provincial Parliament until the Eighth day of this present month of April, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the fifteenth day of May next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General commanding his Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN,

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given, they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming partakers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. And whereas certain persons notwithstanding such notice, do still continue to occupy and possess such Lands without any authority, licence or title derived from the Crown to the same, and being willing that these persons may have the fullest notice of their danger, and of the consequences of their conduct, and that they may not avail themselves of the unmerited forbearance of the Crown, by assuming or pretending to any right, claim, or title in, or to the Lands so illegally and unjustly occupied and possessed by them as aforesaid. I PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council thereof, hereby again give notice to, and warn such person or persons that do possess and occupy Lands therein without any licence, title or right whatever derived from the Crown, having ever been obtained for such Lands, forthwith to quit and remove from the same; it being the intent of the Executive Government of this Province to prevent and frustrate such illegal and fraudulent usurpations, as well as to support the claims of such individuals as are justly entitled to the enjoyment of his Majesty's bounty therein.

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That where any such nominee or nominees, as aforesaid, in his, her, or their life times, and under his, her, or their hand and seal, hands and seals shall have executed any written instrument giving, or purporting to give, any charge, incumberance or lien, on any such lot or lots, parcel or parcels of Land, so claimed and allowed as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons in whose behalf such instrument may have been executed, his, her, or their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, to cause the same to be registered in the office or offices, of the Register or Registers, for the county or counties, in which any such lot or lots, parcel or parcels of Land shall respectively lie or be situated; and such written instrument shall have the same (and no other) force, validity and effect, than if such nominee or nominees had at the time of executing the same been in possession of a patent from the Crown for such lot, or lots, parcel or parcels of Land as aforesaid.

V. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That any person or persons, to whom any Lands have been allowed by the Commissioners for the securing and ascertaining titles to Lands in this Province, under and by virtue of certain Acts of the Legislature thereof, passed in the thirty-seventh, thirty-ninth, and forty-second years of his Majesty's reign, which said person or persons, is or are dead, without having obtained, his Majesty's letters patent for the same, may and shall for the purposes of this Act, be considered as the nominee or nominees of such Land, and the Commissioners to be appointed under and by virtue of this act, may and are, hereby authorized, to examine the claim or claims brought before them, by or in behalf of the heir or heirs, devisee or devisees of such person or persons as last aforesaid; and to hear and determine such claim or claims in like manner, and under the same regulations, provisoes and restrictions as are by this Act directed to be observed, with respect to the claim or claims brought before them, by the heir or heirs, devisee or devisees of any nominee or nominees of the Crown, and shall report thereon in like manner, and such report shall be final and conclusive, and have the same and no other force and effect; and it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government, in like manner to issue his Majesty's letters patent for the lot, or lots, parcel, or parcels of Land, specified in such last mentioned report, to, or in trust for, such person or persons, his, her, or their heirs or assigns as are therein ascertained, and declared by the said Commissioners, to be the heir, or heirs, devisee or devisees, of the person or persons, to whom any Lands may have been allowed by the Commissioners acting under and by virtue of any former Act or Acts of the Legislature of this Province, herein before mentioned.

XI. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in case any person or persons, who shall appear before the said Commissioners, to give evidence respecting any such claim or claims as aforesaid, shall wilfully or corruptly forswear him, her, or themselves, in giving such evidence, he, she, or they shall incur the like pains and penalties, as would have been incurred upon a conviction of wilful and corrupt perjury, in any evidence given in his Majesty's Court of King's Bench in this Province, in any cause there depending.

XII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That in all cases in which witnesses shall have duly appeared, to give evidence before such Commissioners, either voluntarily or in obedience to such summons as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for said Commissioners, to order and direct the party or parties who shall have produced such witness or witnesses, to pay such witness or witnesses, for his, her, or their loss of time and expences, such sum or sums of money as the said Commissioners in their judgment shall deem equitable and just, which order the party or parties, upon whom the same shall be made, is, and are, and he, she, and they, is and are hereby required and enjoined to obey, and such sum or sums of money, shall and may be recovered, and recoverable, under and by the authority of this Act, by action or suit in any of his Majesty's Courts of justice in this Province, due regard being had to their respective jurisdictions.

BY THE KING.—A PROCLAMATION FOR A GENERAL FAST.

GEORGE R.—We, taking into our moſt ſerious conſideration the juſt and neceſſary war in which we are engaged, and putting our truſt in Almighty God, that he will graciouſly bleſs our arms, both by ſea and land, have reſolved, and do, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, hereby command, that a Public Day of Faſting and Humiliation be obſerved throughout thoſe parts of our United Kingdom called England and Ireland, on Wedneſday the Twentieth day of February next enſuing, that ſo both we and our people may humble ourſelves before Almighty God, in order to obtain pardon of our ſins, and in the moſt devout and ſolemn manner ſend up our prayers and ſupplications to the Divine Majeſty, for averting thoſe heavy judgments which our manifold provocations have moſt juſtly deſerved; and for Imploring his bleſſing and aſſiſtance on our arms for the reſtoration of peace and proſperity to us and our dominions. Given at our Court, at the Queen's Palace, this 2d. day of January, 1805, in the 45 year of our reign.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

The Gazette contains a ſimilar Proclamation for a General Faſt in Scotland Thurſday the 21ſt. of February.

The late gale at Guernſey.

"His Majeſty's ſhip Thiſbe, capt. Shephard, ſailed from Portſmouth the 12th of December and after chaſing a French lugger privateer of 16 guns cloſe into Dieppe, arrived at Guernſey on the 17th; it blew ſo hard that the privateer's lee-guns were quite under water, and although within half-gun ſhot, the Teiſbe unfortunately could not get her guns to bear: the privateer carried ſuch a preſs of ſail, that ſhe was almoſt under water during the chace.

On Monday the 17th, the Thiſbe laying at anchor in Guernſey Roads, received orders to proceed to Jerſey, with an anchor and cable for his Majeſty's ſhip Seven. At about two the Niobe frigate, capt. Scott, came in and anchored cloſe a-head of the Thiſbe; and although every exertion was made in veering cable, ſhe fell on board the Thiſbe; which ſhip was obliged to veer two cables to get clear of the Niobe; ſhe, however, carried away the Thiſbe's figure head, and did her ſome damage. At about four the Niobe attempted to weigh, to get clear, but fell on board a ſecond time, and ſprung the Thiſbe's Bowſprit, which obliged the Thiſbe to veer to three cables, but being ſo near the rocks was forced to cut, and make ſail, and anchored without the Niobe.

The next day it came on to blow very ſtrong from the Eaſtward, which obliged the Thiſbe to let go the ſheet anchor, and had it ready for letting go. At about a-leven that night it blew a hurricane, and in half an hour after the beſt bower cable parted: the only anchor they had remaining was then let go, with the Severn's cable bent to it, which brought the ſhip up within half a cable's length of the rocks; almoſt immediately the Niobe and Sylph cut away their maſts, and at one in the morning the gale increaſing, and the Thiſbe pitching very heavy, the firſt-maſt was cut away, which eaſed her very much; ſhe continued riding ſo till ten o'clock, and no appearance of the gale ceaſing, the main-maſt was cut away. About four in the afternoon the gale abated, the ſheet anchor was attempted to be got up, but the cable parted, being cut to pieces by the rocks; and when the other anchor was hove up, it was found, that if the gale had continued two hours longer, the Thiſbe muſt inevitably have been loſt, and all the crew drowned.

GUERNSEY.

Laſt Thurſday, a deputation from Alderney waited upon the Hon. the Lieutenant Governor, and in the name of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and principal inhabitants of the Iſland of Alderney, preſented him with a ſuperb Gold Box ornamented with diamonds and rubies, with a ſuitable complimentary inſcription. The deputation on preſenting the box, delivered the following addreſs:

To the Hon. Major General Doyle, Colonel of the 87th Regiment, Lieutenant Governor of Guernſey, and Commanding in Chief his Majeſty's Forces in the Iſland of Guernſey and Alderney.

"SIR,

"We feel highly gratified in being appointed by Lieutenant Governor Faby to have the honor of preſenting to this Box, with the inſcribed Addreſs in the name of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and principal inhabitants of the Iſland of Alderney: a token of reſpect, which, though ſmall, yet being unprecedented, they hope you will be pleaſed to receive as expreſſive of their grateful ſenſe of the unexampled exertions and efficacious meaſures you have adopted for their benefit and defence.

"We have to regret that our powers are inadequate to expreſs in terms as energetic as we could with our unbounded gratitude to the beſt of Kings, for having been graciouſly pleaſed to appoint to the Chief Command of theſe Iſlands, a General whoſe conciliatory conduct has won the eſteem of our Iſland, while his abilities eminent in the ſenate as in the field, have contributed with ſuch honor to himſelf and advantage to his Country, to eſtabliſh on a permanent baſis the great and exalted character of the Britiſh Nation.

"In the name of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and principal Inhabitants of the Iſland of Alderney.

"your obedient and faithful,
"humble ſervants,

"JAMES HAMILL, Town Major.

To which the General made the following reply.

"GENTLEMEN,

"I accept with pride and gratitude this honorable mark of approbation from the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and principal Inhabitants of the Iſland of Alderney.

"I had long admired the manly port with which the brave defenders of that important out poſt had bid a proud defiance to the teeth of the inſolent foe; with this feeling it naturally became the firſt object of my attention, on being honoured with the Command, to give encouragement and effect to the zeal of its loyal inhabitants.

"In fulfilling this duty to the beſt of Kings, ever alive to the happineſs of his people, I ſhall have been ſo fortunate as to have conciliated the good opinion of your loyal countrymen, I ſhall have obtained the object of my ambition and gratified the beſt feelings of my heart.

"Accept, Gentlemen, my warmeſt acknowledgements for the polite and obliging manner in which you have been pleaſed to convey to me this flattering token of eſteem from your loyal Iſland."

[Paſſed 2d March, 1805.

WHEREAS the preſent mode of deciſion in this Province, upon Petitions complaining of undue Elections, or Returns of Members to ſerve in the Parliament thereof, is defective, for want of thoſe ſanctions and ſolemnities which are eſtabliſhed by Law in other trials, and is attended with many inconveniencies :

For remedy thereof, be it enacted by the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, by and with the advice, and conſent of the Legiſlative Council, and Aſſembly, of the Province of Upper Canada, conſtituted and aſſembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act, paſſed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of "an Act, paſſed in the fourteenth "year of his Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act to make more effectual proviſion for the Government of the Province of Quebec, "in North America, and to make "further proviſion for the Go"vernment of the ſaid Province," and by the authority of the same, That every petition, complaining of an undue Election, or return of a Member, or Members, to serve in the House of Assembly, shall contain the grounds and reason of complaint, and in case the House of Assembly, shall think such grounds and reasons (if true) sufficient to make the election void, a day and hour shall, by the said House be appointed, for taking the same into consideration, and notice thereof, in writing, shall be forthwith given by the Speaker, to the petitioners, and the sitting Member, or Members, or their respective agents, accompanied with an order to them to attend the House at the time appointed, either in person, or by their counsel or agents.

II. Provided always, That no such petition shall be taken into consideration within fourteen days after the same shall have been first read in the House by the Clerk, unless by consent of parties.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That at the time appointed for taking such petition into consideration, and after reading the order of the day for that purpose, the House shall be cleared, and the Members thereof (excepting the Member or Members whose election shall be contested) with the Speaker, shall be sworn at the Table, well and truly to try the matter of the petition referred to them, and a true judgment give, according to the evidence; the Speaker shall then take the Chair, the doors shall be opened, and the petitioners, their counsel, or agent shall attend.

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the witnesses for the petitioners shall be ordered by the Speaker to retire without the House, and the petitioners, their counsel, or agent, shall call them in one by one, for examination, and each and every witness, as aforesaid, shall be sworn at the Bar of the House, and the names of the witnesses, for either party, shall be given in to the Clerk of the House, before they are sworn.

V. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That after the witnesses for the petitioners shall have been fully examined, the sitting Member, or Members, shall be requested by the Speaker, to make a defence, and the witnesses for the said sitting Member, or Members, shall be ordered to retire, shall be separately called in for examination, and shall be sworn in manner aforesaid; provided nevertheless, That whenever any Member of the House shall be a witness for either party, he shall not be obliged to retire, as aforesaid; but he shall be sworn in his place.

VI. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said sitting Member, or Members, whose election shall be contested, as aforesaid, shall not be allowed to vote upon any question, which shall arise in the course of the trial, or upon the determination thereof.

VII. Provided always, That no such determination as aforesaid, shall be made, nor any question be proposed, unless there be a quorum of the House; and no Member shall have a vote on such determination, or any other question, or resolution, who has not attended during the whole of the trial.

VIII. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the oaths by this Act directed to be taken, shall be administered by the Clerk of the House, and that any person who shall be guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, in any evidence, which he shall give before the House, in consequence of the oath, which he shall have taken by the direction of this Act, shall, on conviction thereof, incur, and suffer the like pains and penalties, to which any other person convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury is liable, by the Laws and Statutes of this Province.

An ACT to ratify and confirm certain Provisional Articles of Agreement, entered into by the respective Commissioners of this Province and Lower Canada, at Montreal, on the fifth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and four, relative to Duties, and for carrying the same into effect; and also to continue an Act passed in the thirty-ninth year of his Majesty's reign, and continued by an Act passed in the forty-first year of his Majesty's reign.

[Passed 2d March, 1805.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WHEREAS Articles of Provisional Agreement, were made, and entered into at Montreal, on the fifth day of July, in the forty fourth year of your Majesty's reign, by the Commissioners nominated and appointed on behalf of the Province of Upper Canada, by His Excellency Peter Hunter Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, by commission, bearing date the twenty-second day of March, in the forty-fourth year of your Majesty's reign, in pursuance of, and under the authority of an Act, passed in the thirty-seventh year of your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to authorize the "Lieutenant Governor to nominate and appoint certain Commissioners for the purposes therein mentioned," and the Commissioners nominated and appointed on behalf of the Province of Lower Canada, by an Act of the Provincial Parliament thereof, passed in the forty-fourth year of your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for appointing Commissioners to treat with the Commissioners appointed, or to be appointed, on the part of Upper Canada, for the purposes therein mentioned," which agreement is as follows:—

The said Commissioners having met, and communicated to each other their respective powers and authorities, and having taken into consideration, and maturely deliberated upon the objects of their appointment, and finding, that no material alteration hath taken place in the relative situation of the two Provinces, so as to require any change in the existing provisions, for ascertaining the respective proportion of duties and allowance for drawbacks, on articles imported at the Port of Quebec, or otherwise, it is unanimously agreed, that the articles of agreement at present subsisting between the two Provinces, be further continued, and be in force, as if they were here particularly inserted, until the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and nine.

May it therefore please your most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act "to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That all and every part of the Provisional Agreement, herein before particularly mentioned, and every clause thereof, be ratified, approved, and confirmed, and the said Provisional Agreement, and every part and clause thereof, is ratified, approved, and confirmed accordingly, and shall have the same effect, force, and validity, for, and during the term of this Act, as if the exisiting Articles of Agreement were herein particularly set forth.

II. And whereas, an Act was passed in the thirty-ninth year of your Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to ratify, approve, and confirm the Provisional Agreement, made, and entered into by Commissioners on the part of this Province, and Commissioners on the part of the Province of Lower Canada," expired, and was at an end, on the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one; and whereas, the said Act was renewed, and continued, until the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five; and whereas it is expedient and necessary to renew, and continue the said Act, (except so much of the same, as relates to the suspending the operation of the sixth article, of the therein recited Provisional Agreement,) Be it therefore Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all, and every clause (excepting as herein before mentioned) obligation, penalty, fine, matter, and thing, in the said Act contained, be renewed, continued, and enacted accordingly; and all, and every clause, obligation, penalty, fine, matter, and thing therein contained, (except as herein before mentioned) shall have the same effect, force and validity for, and during the continuance of this Act, as if the same were herein particularly repeated and set forth.

III. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Provincial Treasurer shall, and is hereby authorized and required, to receive the monies which now are, or hereafter may become due, and payable, from the said Province of Lower Canada, to this Province, pursuant, and by virtue of this Act, and of the articles of Provisional Agreement herein before ratified and confirmed, in the same manner, as he is directed by the above recited Act, hereby renewed and continued as aforesaid.

IV. And be it further Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That this Act shall have force and effect, from the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five, and shall continue to be in force to the first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and nine, and no longer.

OPERATIONS IN INDIA.

From the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, received at the office of the New York Mercantile Advertiser.

Fort-William. Nov. 25.

The Governor-general has received a dispatch from capt. Mercies, of his Majesty's 22d regiment of foot, major of brigade to major-general Fraser, (addressed to his Excellency's military secretary) dated Camp near Deeg, November 13, 1804, of which the following copy is published for general information.

Camp, 8 miles S. W. of Deeg, November 13, 6 P. M.

To Captain Armstrong,

Military secretary to His Excellency the Gov. General and Capt. General, &c.

SIR,

I am directed by Major General Fraser to acquaint you for the information of his Excellency the Governor-general, that the army under his command, arrived within three Cros's of the Fort of Deeg yesterday, and found the enemy very strongly encamped, with their left extending to Deeg, and large jeel of water extending to their right, and covering the whole of their front. From the late hour at which the army encamped, and not having correct information of the enemy's position the General thought it advisable to delay the attack until this morning. Having made his arrangements for the security of his camp, he tries under the honorable Lieutenant-colonel Monfon; the 2d under Lieutenant-colonel G. S. Browne; and the two regiments of Naval Cavalry, under Lieutenant-colonel T. Browne; and part of the Park, under Lieutenant-colonel Horsford, at three o'clock this morning. We made a circuit to our left, round the jeel, to enable us to come on their right flank. A little after day-break, we formed in two lines attacked, and carried a large village which was on their right flank. The Major-general immediately purfued his fuccefs, and marched down on their line, and took poffeffion of their guns and howitzers, which are now bringing into Camp. I regret to fay that General Frazer has been feverely wounded while at the head of the troops, leading them into action, and in conſequence, was obliged to be carried of the field. The honorable Colonel Monfon then aſſumed the command, and atchieved what what General Frazer fo happily commenced. We drove the whole of the enemy under the Fort of Deeg, when the people in the fort opened a very heavy fire on us. The number of guns is not yet afcertained, nor that of the killed and wounded, but our loſs has been fevere. Regular returns of the number of guns and of the killed and wounded, will be ſent by the honorable Colonel Monfon to-morrow; who will likewiſe give a detailed account of the action. Major-general Frazer feels it impoſſible to expreſs his high ſenſe of obligation to the whole of the troops under his command, for their undaunted courage and gallantry, particularly to his Majeſty's 76th regiment, who have on this occaſion, as on every former one, done honor to themſelves and their country. I have the honor to be, Sir your moſt obedient humble Servant. (Signed)

J. MENZIES, Major of Brigade.

November 26.

To his Excellency the moſt noble Marquis Wellefley, Governor General, &c. &c.

My Lord,

I have the honor to inform your Lordſhip, that in purſuance of my intentions expreſſed in my diſpatch of yeſterday's date, I reached this place this morning, with the cavalry before day-break, after a march of upwards of 34 miles.

The enemy occupied a poſition cloſe under the walls of Ferruckabad, and I completely ſucceeded in ſurpriſing them. The conſequence has been, that yaſt number of their men and horſes have been deſtroyed, and the whole cattle and baggage taken which they poſſeſſed.

Jeſwant Rao Holkar eſcaped by an early flight, but his troops in the greateſt confuſion, were purſued and every cut to pieces by my cavalry. I am happy to add that we have ſuſtained very little loſs either in men or horſes.

I have not time at the preſent moment to expreſs the ſatisfaction I have derived from the good conduct of all the corps engaged, but I ſhall have the honor of forwarding to your lordſhip my ſentiments on this ſubject as ſoon as poſſible. I have the honor to be, my Lord, your lordſhip's moſt faithful humble ſervant, Head Quarters, Perwichdil, Nov. 17, 1805.

An authentic letter received from an officer of rank in the Camp of the Commander in Chief, gives the following account.

"After a march of 34 miles this morning we reached the enemy's camp before day-break, and completely ſurpriſed them. We gave them firſt ſeveral diſcharges of grape from the horſe artillery, and then his Majeſty's 8th dragoons moved on upon them, and great havock enſued; ſo complete was the ſurpriſe, that many of the horſes were remaining at their pickets when the 8th got in among them. I was with the 8th all day, and I aſſure you their execution was moſt conſiderable, and the enemy's loſs muſt have been enormous, the whole plain was covered with themſelves and horſes. Our marching for theſe laſt ſeventeen days has been very great. This day our horſes went upwards of fifty miles."

The official details of the glorious and deciſive victory, obtained by the gallant army under the command of Major-General Frazer, at Deeg on the 13th inſt. have not yet been received by the Governor General.

By authentic letters, however, dated at Agra, addreſſed to his Excellency the Commander in Chief, and tranſmitted to the Governor General, it appears that "the enemy had taken up a ſtrong poſition with the fort of Deeg, on the flank, and a fortified village on the other, and in this ſituation with their numerous artillery (it is ſaid) they conceived themſelves perfectly ſafe; our troops however convinced them to the contrary, and in a moſt gallant manner ſucceeded in forcing them to abandon their guns, and ſeek protection under the walls of the fort. Thoſe accounts likewiſe mention that upwards of one hundred guns have been taken, their tumbrils either taken or deſtroyed, and the enemy completely diſperſed; and the Major General Frazer is now encamped within two miles and fronting the gate of the fort of Deeg."

Another account ſtates, "the General attacked the enemy under the walls of the fort of Deeg, and took poſſeſſion of eighty guns, beſides many more diſabled, not yet counted. The firing was heard at Agra."

Bridgetown, March 2—9.

Gallant defence of Dominica and defeat of the French.

This highly pleaſing intelligence was received here yeſterday by the arrival of a veſſel direct from that Iſland, and we are enabled, from the information of a very intelligent gentleman who came paſſenger from thence, to give our readers ſome particulars which cannot fail to be intereſting. The enemy having, as we were before informed, arrived off Roſeau early in the morning of the 22d ult. were miſtaken for an Engliſh ſquadron, and had even made ſome diſpoſitions to debark their troops before the error was diſcovered; no ſooner, however, were they aſcertained, than a warm fire was opened on them from the batteries along the coaſt, which their ſhips inſtantly returned, and continued a ſmart cannonade until they had effected the landing, at about 7 o'clock, at Pointe Mechelle, of full ſeven troops. Brigadier General Prevoſt, ever on the alert, had at this time advantageouſly poſted a detachment from the 46th regiment and town militia, with a few black troops, amounting in all to not more than 150 men, to annoy the enemy; this ſmall band, led on by major Nudin, moſt gallantly oppoſed the enemy, and notwithſtanding their ſuperior numbers, inſtantly checked their advance, and threw the whole body into confuſion. The action became more general, the enemy repeatedly endeavoring to advance, but being as often repulſed, found it neceſſary to ſend off their wounded, and received freſh troops from their ſhips. In this time the town unfortunately took fire from the wad of the batteries commanding it having fallen on ſome of the houſes; the enemy's force being alſo undiminiſhed from the freſh ſupplies which were landed, while their opponents were harraſſed and fatigued, and the flames ſpreading with deſtructive fury, naturally creating great confuſion, our gallant but unequal corps were drawn off with the greateſt judgment, and conducted by General Prevoſt in ſafe retreat to Prince Rupert's.

During the conteſt made with ſuch gallantry and effect, Major Nurſe received a wound (feared to be fatal) and one militia man and five regulars were killed, and about 30 ſlightly wounded; but the loſs on the part of the enemy was conſiderable; the wounded cannot be aſcertained—however, full 300 of the ſlain ſerve to ſhew the effects of our well directed fire, and gallant defence. A flag of truce was now (about two in the afternoon of the 22d) ſent in to the French Commandant, and the ſhattered town and two evacuated forts agreed to be ſurrendered at diſcretion to an unworthy and diſgraceful enemy, whoſe object, inſtead of conqueſt, was fordid plunder and oppreſſive requiſitions. A demand of 7500 dollars, to be inſtantly furniſhed, and the unconſumed remnant of the town given up to the mercy of their diabolical marauders. In their career of pillage, not even the moſt trifling articles eſcaped them, and many worthleſs and abandoned negroes gave them aid. Having obtained their booty, they re-embarked on Wedneſday morning laſt, and before two in the afternoon, the men on board the fleet, having previouſly burnt one ſhip in the bay, ſunk two ſmaller veſſels, and ſent 10 or 15 others (the whole there) to Guadaloupe, ſtood to ſea with a light wind; and, when the veſſel which brings theſe particulars left Roſeau (about four o'clock that afternoon) they were not more than three leagues from the land, with their heads to the northward.

Amidſt all that promptitude and alacrity which has been manifeſted, as well on the part of the King's regular garriſon as the militia forces of the Iſland, ſince the arrival of the enemy's ſquadron in theſe ſeas, we have never for a moment loſt ſight of the vigilant zeal of Sir Samuel Hood on the ſame occaſion. The commodore, it is well known, inſtantly ſailed from Carliſle Bay upon the receipt of intelligence of the French fleet's arrival at Martinique: and although we have not heard any particular account of his proceedings ſince his departure, we cannot heſitate to attribute to him, ſuch a judicious

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice iſſued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the adminiſtration of Mr. Preſident Ruſſell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was among other things ſignified to ſuch perſons, as had ſettled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title ſo to do; that if after warning given [illegible] ſhould not remove from the ſaid Lands, they ſhould be proſecuted according to Law, and be diſqualified from becoming partakers of his Majeſty's Bounty in any part of this Province. And whereas certain perſons notwithſtanding ſuch notice, do ſtill continue to occupy and poſſeſs ſuch Lands without any authority, licence or title derived from the Crown to the ſame; and being willing that theſe perſons may have the fulleſt notice of their danger, and of the conſequences of their conduct, and that they may not avail themſelves of the unmerited forbearance of the Crown, by aſſuming or pretending to any right, claim, or title in, or to the Lands ſo illegally and unjuſtly occupied and poſſeſſed by them as aforeſaid. I PETER HUNTER Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the ſaid Province, do, by and with the advice and conſent of the Executive Council thereof, hereby again give notice to, and warn ſuch perſon or perſons that do poſſeſs and occupy Lands therein without any licence, title or right whatever derived from the Crown, having ever been obtained for ſuch Lands, forthwith to quit and remove from the ſame; it being the intent of the Executive Government of this Province to prevent and fruſtrate ſuch illegal and fraudulent uſurpations, as well as to ſupport the claims of ſuch individuals as are juſtly entitled to the enjoyment of his Majeſty's bounty therein.

...ment of the growth and cultivation of Hemp within this Province, and the exportation thereof."

[Passed 2d March, 1805.]

WHEREAS by an Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the forty-fourth year of his Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for granting to his Majesty, a certain sum of money, for the further encouragement of the growth and cultivation of Hemp within this Province, and the exportation thereof," it was, among other things enacted, that the sum of forty pounds should be the rate, or price to be paid per ton for hemp, which may be purchased under, or in virtue of the said Act. THE VIDETTE EATERS.

Some time since, when the Dublin Yeomanry were on permanent duty, the main guard of a certain Fusileer Corps, being stationed in Stephen's Green, near the residence of their Captain, Sir John W—, a very fine pair of leverets, which were intended as a present for the Knight, by the blundering of a drunken higler, were left at the guard house. Without any very minute enquiries after the owner of the leverets, they were ordered to be dressed for supper, and, in addition to the contents of their haversacks, afforded a very comfortable regale to the men on duty. Scarcely was supper ended, when the guard was ordered to be turned out, and two videttes, or orderly men, having notified to them the approach of the visiting officer, immediately rode on to give a similar warning at the next military post. The officer, who was an Englishman, soon overtaken, and having inspected the guards required of the serjeant, had he seen this videttes? Now the honest serjeant, though a good practical soldier was totally ignorant of the termes de guerre. The similitude of hounds struck his ear; his conscience accused him; he thought the leverets were enquired after; and he replied, with evident confusion, "why please, your honour, we ate them." "What," exclaimed the astonished officer, "ate the videttes, ate the videttes! and in the name of wonder, what have you done with their arms?" "Why," answered the serjeant, "we ate them too; we ate them, legs, head, arms, and all; but we then did not know they were your honour's." The astonished officer thought it a folly to remonstrate, and fled with horror from a body of men, who seemed to unite the carnivorous propensities of the anthropophagi, to the digestion of the ostrich.

Neutral vessels, freighted with the produce of the French Colonies, are admitted into the ports of France, on paying the same duties as are imposed on French bottoms, which is one third less than on foreign ships. This encouragement has induced several Americans to embark in this carrying trade, which they disguise by conveying the produce first to the United States, and then covering it with fresh papers.

The Revolutionaire frigate, which arrived at Portsmouth on Monday se'nnight from New-York, performed the voyage in fifteen days, which is the quickest passage ever made; she run from 200 to 260 miles every day. The Revolutionaire was waiting three months for the French frigate to come out of Hampton Roads, which is to convey Jerome Bonaparte and lady to France. The Canibrian frigate, Capt. Beresford, relieved her. Captain Bradley, formerly Commander of the Canibrian, came passenger in the Revolutionaire, which has brought home 200,000 dollars.

According to the monthly statement of the British navy, the total number of the ships now in commission is 695, of which 105 are of the line, 21 fifty gun ships, 141 frigates, and 428 sloops of war. There are besides 78 ships of the line repairing, building, and in ordinary, and a great number of smaller vessels; making the grand total 918, ships, of which 183 are of the line. Of cutters, armed brigs, and hired vessels, there are about 150 which, added to the number of ships of superior force would make the British naval force at present amount to 1068 ships of war of different descriptions.

No continental intelligence has been received since our last.—The offer of the King of Prussia to mediate between this country and France, it is believed in certain political circles, has been accepted by the latter power; or rather it has been granted by the French Ambassador at the Court of Berlin, that such an interference was accepted, and would be considered as a manifestation of a wish, on the part of Prussia, to preserve the peace of the Continent.

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given, they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming partakers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. LONDON, FEB. 20.

The sense of Parliament now appears, from the great majorities on the important questions lately discussed, to be decidedly in favor of Administration. The country has received with satisfaction and sanctioned with its warmest approbation, the decision of its Representatives. The language held by all the Members of Administration, proves that the most perfect concord reigns in the Cabinet.

FEB. 26.—Of the sailing of the Toulon squadron, with troops on board, the letters from Gibraltar make positive mention—adding, that Lord Nelson was at the time of their sailing taking in water at Sicily; and that he received intelligence of the event four days after the ships had left Toulon. If Lord Nelson was watering at Messina, and the French attempted to pass through the strait that seperates Sicily from Italy, they would fall into his very teeth—if he was watering at Palermo and they attempted to pass to the Westward of Sicily, they would hardly escape him. At any rate we entertain the most sanguine expectations that they will never again reach a French Port. Perhaps indeed, the Bay of Aboukir may be destined to be a second time the scene of British victory, and of Lord Nelson's glory, if the French are gone, as we are still strongly of opinion they are, to repossess Cast Iron Bridge over the Thames.

The arch of this elegant structure is the flatteft legment ever built on a large scale, being the legment of a circle of 2,522 feet diameter, the chord or span, 180, and the versed line or height 16 feet; it springs from abutments of stone built on piles, and is 27 feet 2 inches in breadth; it consists of 6 ribs, placed 5 feet asunder, kept in their position by perforated cross bars, placed horizontally at the top and bottom of each arch piece, quite across the bridge; each of the ribs is composed of 39 arch pieces, 4 feet 7 and a quarter inches long at top, and 4 feet 6 3-8 inches at bottom, 4 feet deep, and 4 1-4 inches thick; they are cast hollow, for the purpose of introducing dowels 4 1-4 inches wide, and two inches thick; through these dowels, and also the arch pieces, are cast holes, into which wedges are driven, which bring the parts into close contact, and very considerably lessen the shoot or thrust of the arch.—The spondrils are filled up with circles, which diminish from the abutments to the centre: the whole is covered with plates one inch thick, and two feet broad, on the ends of which rest the pannels, on which the balluftrade is placed.—The whole weight of iron is 270 tons, of which the covering plates weigh 100—the bridge was cast by the Walkers of Rotherham, on an improved plan, for the invention of which, his Majesty has been graciously pleased to grant his royal letters patent to Mr. T. Wilton, engineer of Weatmouth bridge, under whose direction the whole iron-work was thrown across the River Thames, and completed in ten months.

The first day the bridge was opened for public use, the commissioners had the pleasure of seeing 100 fat oxen, 60 horses, and a great number of people upon the bridge, at the same time, without producing the least effect upon it; although the trotting of a horse makes it vibrate. The King and Royal Family passed over in the first four coaches, drawn by four horses each.

DREADFUL FIRE IN LONDON.

On Sunday morning, 3d Feb. a little after three o'clock, a dreadful fire broke out in the house of Mr. Barr, tallow chandler, Upper Adam-street, Edgeware-road. It was discovered by a coachman, who had been putting up his horses at a neighbouring stable, and who, on passing through the street, was alarmed by a strong smell of smoke. He immediately knocked at Mr. Barr's door, and alarmed the neighbourhood, by a loud cry of "Fire." In a short time Mr. and Mrs. Barr appeared in the balcony of the first floor, with each of them an infant in their arms. Several of the neighbours, who had been routed from their beds by the noise, were now in the street, in front of Mr. Barr's house, and having procured ladders, they relieved him and Mrs. Barr, with the two infants, from their perilous situation. The house was by this time all in a blaze, and a coachman of the name of Pierce, who resided in the second floor, was fortunate enough, at the imminent risque of his life, to rescue his daughter, whom he carried down stairs amidst fire and smoke. He had scarcely reached the door in safety with her, when recollecting that his wife remained behind, he exclaimed, in an agony of grief, "O! Betfey, Betfey, Betfey!" To return as he came was impossible, as the staircase was completely enveloped with the flames; but he had scarcely uttered the above words when one of the windows in the two pair of stairs front room opened, and the unfortunate woman presented herself. Without a moment's hesitation she precipitated herself into the street. By the fall her thigh was broken, and her neck dislocated, and she instantly expired in the presence of her husband and daughter, who were eye-witnesses of her melancholy fate.

The fire had by this time got possession of every part of the house, which presented nothing but one entire blaze and no hope was left that any of the unfortunate inhabitants that remained in it could possibly escape. They consisted of Mr. Adams, a coachman, and his wife; an elderly lady, and her two grand-sons, fine lads, and two young men, servants out of places, all of whom, to the number of seven, melancholy to relate, fell victims to the fury of the flames! The foot-guards quartered at Portman-street barracks, and the Mary-la-Bone Association, attended, and used every exertion to prevent the spreading of the fire, and to protect the property of the neighbourhood. On Monday morning, at nine o'clock, four labourers, who were present, volunteered their services in digging for the unfortunate sufferers, and about half past two discovered the body of Mrs. Jerams, the elderly woman, and shortly after, her youngest son, a fine young man of 18 years, a postillion; and another son, a groom, 25 years of age. The bodies, when found, were entirely naked, the hair burnt off, but from the suddenness of the house falling in, they were not defaced, but appeared parboiled from the heat. At this moment a servant in livery appeared, with his wife, and claimed the wretched sufferers as his mother and brothers—but this was not the measure of their grief, for the next body found was their infant child, eleven months old, who, with its infant brother, three years old, fell victims to the flames.—On Tuesday morning the body of Mr. Adams was found, near to which was that of his wife, who was pregnant; after the latter was loosened from the earth, and the workmen were conveying it on their shovels, to the shells, the spectators were shocked at a sight which it would be indelicate in us to describe. The bodies were taken to Mary la-bone Workhouse, and a verdict of accidental death returned by the Coroner's Inquest.

NEW YORK, April 16.

Moreau according to report, was detained in Spain, because Bonaparte was afraid that he would be received with too much distinction in America. It was indeed natural to suppose that a Republican General would be well received in America, having fallen a victim to the ambition of a man who has convicted a Commonwealth, at least what was held forth as such, into the most absolute Monarchy on earth.

The King has been pleased to appoint Andrew Allen, jun. Esq. to be his Majesty's Consul for the State of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

By our Greenock papers we learn, that Dr. Robison, professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, is lately deceased. He was one of the most profound mathematicians of the age, and made several important improvements in mechanical philosophy. His scientific productions, tho' little known in this country, are prized by the learned of Europe. Here he is best known by his "Proofs of a Conspiracy;" a work which came home to the feelings of a very large class of society, and which is universally known throughout Christendom. Dr. Playfair, ex-professor of mathematics in the same university, has succeeded him.

It is observable that Dr. Rotheram, professor of Natural Philosophy in the neighbouring university of St. Andrews, died about the same time.

From the same source we learn, that the medical world has lost one of its most valuable members by the death of the celebrated Dr. Wm. Buchan, in the 76th year of his age; a man who, perhaps beyond all others, simplified the language and doctrines of medicine, and, by adapting his style to ordinary understandings, stripped the science of its mysteries, and in fact taught every one to be his own physician.

His Domestic Medicine is doubtless one of the most useful books on the subject in any language: and his Advice to Mothers, cannot be too much recommended.—Daily Advr.

SALEM, April 23.

Accounts received from the West Indies to the 24th March, state the fleet of the French to be at anchor in Fort Royal harbor, Martinique.

Intelligence has been received New York, via Baltimore, stating, that the British squadron under command of Admiral Cochrane, had arrived in the West Indies, and was blockading the French fleet at Fort Royal, Martinique.

EXTRACT.

WHEN cattle are kept out in winter it is recommended as an useful practice to rub some tar at the root of the horn, which prevents the wet from getting between the root and the skin, and it is said contributes to preserve the health of the animal, and to keep it free from various diseases to which it may otherwise be liable.

[The following is extracted from the third number of "The Philadelphia Medical Museum," conducted by John Redman Coxe M. D. of Philadelphia, and just published by M. Thomas Dobson, at No. 41. South Second street.]

The following valuable extract from a Paris paper, (the Gazette Nationale, ou le Moniteur Universel, for October 4. 1804.) will doubtless be read with the highest satisfaction by the friends of vaccination through America, as an ample proof, in addition to former testimonials, of the security obtained by that practice against the small pox.

"His excellency the minister of the interior, has communicated to the central society of the vaccine established near him, the result of a counter proof which, by the concurrence of circumstances accompanying it, ought to make an epoch in the history of vaccination.

"Six black children, the first who were vaccinated in the Isle de la Reunion. (Isle de Bourbon) and whose infection afterwards served for more than 5000 other individuals, were embarked in the vessel, the Young Caroline, (infected with the small pox) and carried to one of the Isles des Seychelles, where the vessels was obliged to perform quarantine. These six children remained three months on board, constantly placed in the focus of the infection; and pains were taken to make them live, eat and sleep with the infected. They were also, during the quarantine, twice innoculated for the small pox, each time with large incisions in both arms.—It is stated by the register, daily kept, that these six children having slept under the bed clothes of the persons having the small-pox, in contact with their pustules, eating and drinking out of the same utensils, having been twice innoculated from those, who afterwards fell victims to their disorder, were preserved from all contagion, and continues at the present time in perfect health.

"This counter-proof is perhaps the strongest in the history of vaccination, from the particular circumstance, that these six children after reaching the place of quarantine, lived for 15 days in the midst of twenty blacks in the confluent small-pox, of whom six are dead; of twenty to twenty five other blacks in the state of scabbing, defiscation and convalescence, seven of which number died before the vessel arrived; and all were contained between decks of a small vessel, in a space of 8 feet by 10 or 12. This counter-proof merits a place in the immense collection of useful experiments made in Europe upon vaccination; it fulfils moreover, the important end proposed by government, and it confirms in the most unqualified manner the antivariolic property, which the numerous trials made by the most distinguished physicians had attached to the new innoculation."

It is to be hoped that after reading the above, even the most sceptical will be convinced, and that greater attention to the anomalies of the disease, will serve to explain the supposed cases of subsequent small pox, and enable us to guard against their future recurrence.—Poulson.

Lateſt Intelligence.

Summary of Foreign News, by an arrival at Boſton, with London dates to the 18th of March—not very intereſting.

Though there was much talk of negociations for peace; there were no other indications of it. It was reported, that the anſwer of the Emperor Alexander to the communication by the Britiſh King of Bonaparte's overture of Peace, had been received in London; but the purport of it had not been communicated. It was certain, that treaties of alliance offenſive and defenſive, were in train of negociation between Great Britain, Ruſſia and Sweden; tho' it was affirmed in the French papers, authoritatively, that an alliance between England and Ruſſia, would not take place; and that Pruſſia had undertaken to prevent a like treaty between Sweden and Great Britain.

It was the prevailing opinion, that Portugal would not be ſuffered to continue neutral.

The French had marched a diviſion of troops into Lubec (one of the free Imperial cities) and demanded a heavy loan, at the point of the bayonet; more it was ſaid, than the city could pay. This is not very corroborative evidence of the boaſted exuberance of the French reſources, under the new dynaſty.

The Emperor Napoleon I. was, it was ſaid, on the eve of ſetting out for Italy, accompanied by his Holineſs the Pope.—Some accounts ſay, to witneſs the coronation of his brother Joſeph, as

The Lilly had on board 160 men, 60 of whom were killed during the engagement, 40 were saved, and the rest were lost when she blew up.

Government are reported to have received accounts from France through a special channel, by which it appears that a great shew of preparation is again making at all the principal ports in the channel, indicative of some speedy attempt at invasion, which the army was assured would not be delayed beyond three months after the coronation, and which should be preceded by the payment of all arrears, as also by a largess, the peculiar gift of the Emperor. Report states that the Emperor arrived at Boulogne on Monday last.

The dispatches with which Prince Gallitzin was charged by the cabinet of Petersburgh to the Emperor of Germany, contained proposals, it is said, for a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance, and stipulations for bringing 300,000 Russians into the field. This overture, we further understood, was strengthened by an offer, on the part

Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, March 5.

Government are in daily expectation of the Emperor Alexander's answer to his Majesty's communication respecting the late overtures made by Buonaparte.

Mr. Pitt has concluded his bargain for the loan of twenty-two millions and an half. The terms are more favourable for the country than those of last year. The income tax is to be augmented; and new taxes on letters, salt, pleasure-hunting and legacies left to strangers.

March 6.

Government are reported to have received accounts from France through a special channel, by which it appears that a great shew of preparation is again making at all the principal ports in the channel, indicative of some speedy attempt at invasion, which the army was assured would not be delayed beyond three months after the coronation, and which should be preceded by the payment of all arrears, as also by a largess, the peculiar gift of the Emperor. Report states that the Emperor arrived at Boulogne on Monday last.

The dispatches with which Prince Gallitzin was charged by the cabinet of Petersburgh to the Emperor of Germany, contained proposals, it is said, for a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance, and stipulations for bringing 300,000 Russians into the field. This overture, we further understood, was strengthened by an offer, on the part of the British Government, of large pecuniary supplies. Negociations on this subject are still pending, and there is reason to believe that they will ultimately prove successful. It is certain that Austria is exerting every possible means to recruit and organize its army, and that great activity and labour are devoted to the improvement and provisionment of the fortifications on the frontiers.

Nine Hamburgh mails still continue due, their non arrival is the more to be regretted at the present moment, when the communications of this government with the northern powers are so important." We should think that the intelligence now on its way from St. Petersburgh, will decide whether we are to expect any material co-operation from Russia this campaign.

" Borders of the Main, Feb. 5.

"We are informed that the principal state of Swedish Pomerania, justly alarmed at the reports now in circulation, relative to the immediate conclusion of a treaty of alliance between Sweden and England, in consequence of which a body of Swedish troops, subsidized by Great Britain, are to be sent to that country, have made representations to the King upon the subject, informing him of the inconveniences which would necessarily result to their country, which in that event would be exposed to an invasion of the French troops stationed in the Electorate of Hanover; the more especially, as in such case, Prussia would no longer protect the neutrality of Swedish Pomerania." Upon this article, it is only necessary to observe, that it has never been in the contemplation of either power to employ the subsidized troops in England. Their services will be confined entirely to Continental operations.—The same pretended letter adds, that the Cabinets of Petersburgh and Berlin have demanded of the Court of London the restoration of the Spanish frigates, and a full indemnity for their cargoes. This statement, we believe, to be totally void of foundation.

March 15.

An American ship from the Texel, which arrived in Dover Roads yesterday afternoon, has brought the important intelligence of the sailing of the Dutch fleet from the Texel on Monday last. Previously to their sailing an embargo was laid on all merchantmen. It still continued after the fleet sailed; but the American and five other ships made their escape in the night.

March 18.

We have received Paris papers to the 9th.—The session of the Legislative Body was put an end to on the 8th, by a speech from one of the Government orators, M. de Segur. He expressed the Emperor's complete approbation of their conduct; dwelt upon the imposing ceremony of the coronation, rendered more august by the presence and participation of the Pope; alluded to the laws that had been passed during the session; to the excellent state of the finances; to the new conscription, and to the pacific overture to this country. Upon the conscript law he made the following remarks—" Whilst among our enemy every thing is in a state of fermentation and agitation, you have proved, by a law upon the conscription, that we do not stand in need of fresh efforts; and this new law differs only from the last, by a more just and moderate distribution relative to our coasts and maritime departments."—Upon the pacific overture he said, " It was at the moment in which a warrior almost always favoured by fortune, might so naturally have promised to himself fresh laurels, that silencing his passions, Napoleon modestly proposed peace to our enemies."

The Moniteur has not published any further details with respect to the capture of the Mediterranean convoy, and it does not appear that one of the captured ships has yet reached a French port; indeed we can know that the enemy exaggerated the numbers, and our prediction, that many would be found to have made their escape, has been verified.

The anger manifested by the Moniteur at the cool reception in which Bonaparte's fallacious overture of peace experienced in this country, and the fear which it expresses, left an English subsidy should be accepted by any of the Continental Powers, afford the best possible explanation of the state, and of the views of the French Government. They are worth volumes of idle reports from ill-informed travellers. They shew at once that France is completely baffled in her views of subjugating this country, and even more, that " England, single handed," is more than a match for her; they shew the changeable and shifting politics of the Usurper, that when he could not compass his end by open force, he endeavours to do it by fraud; by an offer of peace, or rather a truce which should induce us to disarm, and leave ourselves exposed to fresh manoeuvres. They confirm the wisdom of the late ministry in commencing the war, before our enemy had completed his preparations, and of the present, in declining to be duped by a pretended pacific overture.

By the Fly cutter, which arrived at Yarmouth on Friday last from the Texel, which place the left on Thursday, the Dutch fleet had made its first movement, two line of battle ships belonging to it having come down into the outer road.—This circumstance, no doubt, gave rise to the report brought by an American ship which put into Dover, that the Dutch squadron had actually put to sea.

Sweden has been obliged, by the remonstrances of Prussia, to decline the proffered subsidy from this country.

Portugal is stated to have purchased, with the concurrence of this country, the sufferance of France to remain neutral in the war, by a yearly subsidy of six millions of crusades.

Such was the activity of the Marine Department in Spain, that 12 ships of the line were completed for sea during the last month, and an equal number are to be equipped within the present month.

The Courts of Vienna and Petersburgh are decidedly hostile to the intended creation of a monarchy in Lombardy. Austria has remonstrated in strong terms against the change, as being contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty of Luneville, and we understand it is for the present deferred. Prussia has, on the contrary, recommended the measure, as tending to establish the tranquillity of that country, in so barring any views or claims which Austria may entertain in regard to it.

The French papers in an article which we published on Tuesday, stated, that the French Government would not undertake partial operations, but would strike several blows at us at once.

What will the enemy of the financial system of this country say, when we state, that, by the beneficial operation of the Sinking Fund, no less a sum than 1,668,920l. 13s. 4d. is at present applied, per quarter, to the reduction of the national debt, and that the sum already redeemed amounts to one hundred and thirteen million, five hundred and twenty-two thousand, three hundred and ninety three pounds sterling.

Came in the Spanish ship Sacra Familia, from Vera Cruz for Cadiz, laden with sugar, logwood, other goods, and 149,000 dollars and one box of gold; she was taken on the 16th ult. off the Western Islands by the Pallas, of 32 guns, captain Cochrane. The Pallas has also captured, and is coming home with the Spanish ship Fortuna, from Vera Cruz to Cadiz, laden with spices of all kinds, mahogany, logwood, &c. 432,000 dollars and two chests of gold images; captured off the Western Islands, on the 15th ult.

NEW YORK, April 30.

Mr. Smart, formerly of Drury-lane Theatre, has presented the Young Roscius with a Seal of Garrick, finely engraved, and a striking likeness.—The following is the admonitory note with which the present was accompanied:

" Young Gentleman,

"The fame of your talents has drawn an old fellow labourer in the theatric vineyard from his retirement, at a considerable distance, in a very advanced age; and he feels himself well rewarded for his trouble.

" May your success continue, and may you live to be an honor to the stage, and to your country.

" Let me recommend to you, strict attention to the moral duties, and to the cultivation of your mind, by the arts and Belles Lettres, without which, little improvement can be gained in your profession, much less in society.

" Accept from me a seal, a strong likeness of our great predecessor Garrick; when you are acquainted with his character, keep his virtues ever in your mind, and imitate his professional talents as far as possible."

Cast off thou, in this engraved proble trace,
The living likeness of the plastic face;
Would thy congenial spirit caught its fire,
His magic eye would fly where soul inspire.

London Paper.

From a St. Kitts (Basseterre) paper of April 9.

We are happy in being enabled to congratulate the Public, and the inhabitants of the British West Indies in general, on the arrival of our much wished for reinforcement, under the command of Rear Admiral Cochrane, and the consequent annihilation of the short lived superiority of the enemy in these seas: The inhabitants of this Island were seriously alarmed yesterday morning on the appearance of several ships of war to the southward, which, not having communicated with the shore, created a suspicion that they were the enemy. The militia assembled soon after the alarm was raised, and as the ships seemed to stand towards the Garrison of Brimstone Hill, they immediately prepared to proceed thither, and were actually on the way, when the cause of the alarm was made known by Capt. Jennings, of the Blanche privateer, who went from Nevis on board one of them, the Unicorn frigate, and was informed, that the squadron was that of Admiral Cochrane, consisting of six sail of the line, and three frigates. Expresses were immediately sent to all the militia with the above pleasing intelligence, when they returned to town. The squadron continued under a press of sail to the westward, in which direction four ships were seen from Brimstone Hill, which it was supposed they were in chase of.—The four ships here mentioned, are supposed to be armed merchantmen homeward bound from Demerara, as one which arrived here yesterday evening from the colony, for a load, sailed in company with four others homeward bound.

We have not learnt the names of all the ships of the above squadron, but the following are among them:—

St. George,	98 guns.
Northumberland,	74
Eagle,	74
Unicorn,	32

We have the pleasure of adding that the above squadron is only a part of the reinforcement arrived at Barbadoes, an equal force remained at that Island.

April 2.—On Friday last, two mail boats arrived here, one mail from St. Vincent and Granada, for the homeward bound Packet, the Princes Elizabeth, which has not yet called here. —The other brought the 1st February mail, the papers by which are down to the 9th of that month.

ALBANY, MAY 7.

A letter from St. Bartholomew to a gentleman in the Island of St. Kitts, mentions the arrival there of a vessel from Martinique, the captain of which an intelligent man, gave the following account: "An express has arrived from France, which says, that a war with that nation and America is inevitable. Bonaparte has officially demanded 30 millions of dollars, the amount of Coffee, &c. carried from St. Domingo to the continent."—

The St. Bartholomew paper of Saturday last, mentions the above intelligence as a report, with the addition that a similar demand will be made on the Danish Islands by the French Commanders in a few days.

It is known that the French squadron sailed from Martinique the 22d March; various accounts have been in circulation as to their destination, but almost all agree that they are gone to leeward.

Wilmington, (N. C.) April 9.

Capt. Oliver of the brig Polly, arrived here on Wednesday last, 19 days from Point Petre, Guadaloupe, informs that the French fleet which took Dominique, arrived at Basseterre, (Guad.) about the 4th March, with fourteen English ships richly laden, one of which was a Guineaman loaded with slaves; and having landed 2000 troops and sold their prizes, sailed from thence on the 9th.

Before Captain Oliver sailed, accounts were received that they had taken Montserat, Nevis, and St. Kitts, which they evacuated for the consideration of a large amount in specie, after having destroyed such of the English shipping as they did not deem worth carrying off.

While Capt. Oliver was at Point Petre, he says that 14 valuable prizes had been brought in, exclusive of those taken at Dominique, &c. and that some of them were part of the Cork fleet. One ship and cargo consisting of dry goods and provisions, sold for 150,000l. sterling; another of the prize ships had on board 550 pipes Madeira wine, and three large brigs were loaded with provisions and dry goods. One of the prize ships, an Indiaman, was fitting out as a privateer, she mounts 36 guns, and carries 350 men.

CAMELION.

THE following is a description of a Camelion, now exhibiting in New York, which arrived here, from Senegal, in the schooner Hope:

" This animal is a production of Africa, is 11 inches in length, his head near 2 inches; from thence to the beginning of the tail 4 and an half; the tail is 5 inches long, and the feet 2 and an half; the thickness of the body is different at times, as it can blow itself up and contract itself at pleasure. This swelling and contraction is not only of the back and belly, but of the legs and tail. Its subsistence is air; but sometimes is known to feed upon flies, one of which it is half an hour in swallowing. It possesses the power of changing to various colours, such as black, white, yellow, red.

Lover's Leap.—Not a hundred miles from Stapleton, the daughter of a farmer lately leaped from the window of the third story into the arms of a fine of Mars. Her lover, with all the softness which the passion inspires, had strewed the ground beneath the window with hay, and was hastening off with the fair burden unhurt, when he was seized by the leg by a yard dog, which made him " other wounds as deep tho' not to fatal." The family was alarmed by the noise, the bleeding lover discovered, and the fair fugitive returned to her parents.

[Liverpool paper.]

It has ever been the praise of England, that as the weaker sex are excused, more strictly perhaps, than in most other European countries, from all the walks of profit or honour, an equivalent is made to them by their being exempted from those more laborious offices, which are neither fitted to the weakness of their frames nor the delicacy of their habits and manners. Judge then how I was surprised to see a few days since, in a newspaper, an account of the yearly meeting of the Bath Agricultural Society, in which among the premiums given by that respectable and polite body for the year 18 5. I remarked the following—" For Women-ploughing."

It does not appear by the statement in the paper, whether the female is to guide the plough, or to be yoked to it. The latter, though novel here, would not be altogether unprecedented, since we are informed by a late writer, Mr. Barrow, in China, a country which does not yield in politeness even to Bath, it is not uncommon to see a husbandman plough with a woman and an ass yoked together.

Extract from the Encyclopedia.

A method to preserve fruit trees in blossom from the effects of frost.

" THE Chevalier de Bitrenberg of Prague, we are told, had discovered a method of effectually preserving trees in blossom from the fatal effects of those frosts which sometimes in the spring destroys the most promising hopes of a plentiful crop of fruit. This method is extremely simple. He surrounds the trunk of the tree in blossom with a wisp of straw or hemp. The end of this he sticks, by means of a hoop tied to it, in a vessel of spring water, at a little distance from the tree. One vessel will conveniently serve two trees; for the cord may be lengthened to, or shortened several, before its end is plunged into the water.

It is necessary that the vessel is placed in an open situation, and by no means shaded by the branches of the neighbouring trees, that the frost may produce all its effects on the water, by means of the cord communicating with it. This precaution is particularly necessary for those trees the flowers of which appear early at the same time as their leaves: which trees are peculiary exposed to the ravages of the frosts.

The proofs of its efficacy, which he had an opportunity of observing in the spring of 1787, were remarkably striking. Seven apricot espaliers in his garden began to blossom in the month of March. Fearing that they would suffer from the late frosts, he surrounded them with cords as above directed. In effect, pretty sharp frosts took place six or eight nights: the apricot trees in the neighbouring gardens were all frozen, and none of them produced any fruit, whilst each of the Chevalier's produced fruit in abundance, which came to the greatest perfection.

Lateſt Intelligence.

Conſtantinople, December 26.

Marſhal Brune, the French Ambaſſador, received laſt week the courier he expected from Paris, who brought him poſitive orders to leave Conſtantinople, if within the ſpace of four days after the receipt of the diſpatches, the Ottoman Porte ſhould not formally acknowledge the hereditary Emperor of France. He was at the ſame time directed to leave at Conſtantinople, as Charge d'Affaires, not M. Ruffin, but M. Pitrandieu, the Secretary of the French Legation. The Ambaſſador immediately communicated to the Turkiſh Miniſtry, the final deciſion; and as no ſatisfactory anſwer was tranſmitted to him within the time preſcribed, he left Conſtantinople on the 12th of this month, leaving there his lady and part of his ſuite. He had announced his departure to the foreign miniſter the evening before, as alſo the nomination of M. Pitrandieu.

Marſhal Brune lay the firſt night at a village about a league diſtant from Conſtantinople. The Porte ſent an interpreter after him, with a requeſt that he would wait four or five days before he continued his journey. The Ambaſſador conſented to give this new proof of condeſcenſion, in perſuaſion that the Porte, conſulting better and truer intereſt, would at length ſend a categorical declaration, and ſuch as he had required. But this declaration not arriving after this new delay of four days, the Marshal sent for his lady and all the persons he had left behind him, and continued his journey. The Porte has given orders to the officers of the escort to neglect nothing which may contribute to the security of Gen. Brune and his suite, and to procure them all possible accommodations and conveniences in their journey through the Ottoman Empire.

Frontiers of Italy, Jan. 29.

Nothing is talked of at Milan but the changes which are preparing in the government of that country, from the result of which the greatest hopes are entertained. The Italian Republic has always appeared to the greatest part of enlightened persons merely provisionary. It was distinctly felt, that the great change which has been effected in the government of France, must necessarily produce one likewise in that of the Republic, and that the Emperor of the French would not long remain the President of the Italian Republic. Every reasonable person would wish to see its place supplied by an independent and hereditary Monarchy; and it is generally expected that a Prince of the House of Bonaparte will be placed on this throne. Many political changes will probably be the consequence of this event.

Feb. 2.—On the 26th of January it was announced to the French garrison of (Italian) Verona, that the Emperor Napoleon, the Pope, and Prince Joseph, would arrive at Milan in the course of the month of February. The latter will be crowned King of Lombardy, and consecrated by the Pope. A great number of troops are on their march to be present at the event.

London, February 22.

Papers from Paris announce, that M. D. Rochefoucault has been nominated French Ambassador at Vienna; and general Junot, to Lisbon. The foreign Ambassadors is have presented letters of congratulation upon the birth of Prince Napoleon Louis.

Prince Murat has been appointed Grand Admiral of France.

March 1.

Bonaparte, it seems, has consented to the neutrality of Naples:—the ports of Sicily being no longer shut against English shipping. Our envoy still continues at Naples. The other Italian ports are shut.

The Irish Roman Catholic Committee, with their petition, have arrived in town. Mr. Pitt will be called upon to present and support it; if he refuses, Mr. Fox will be called upon.

St. Kitts, (Basseterre) May 1.

Attack on, Capture, and Evacuation of Rofeau, Dominique, by a Squadron from France.

The scene we have been so long used to, has at length varied, and the theatre of war suddenly transported from the great continent of Europe, to where our fancied security would never have placed it—the West Indies. On Tuesday evening, the sloop Endeavour, Captain Pallet, arrived express from Dominica, with notice from his Excellency General Prevost, of the invasion of that Island by a French Force, that the town of Roseau was captured, and that his Excellency had effected his retreat to the garrison at Prince Rupert's; which he was resolved to defend to the last extremity. The next morning, the mail boat (by which the first mail for January was received at the post office,) corroborated the above intelligence, the having had a narrow escape from falling into the hands of the enemy, as the captain had nearly got into Roseau, when he discovered the French flag flying at the fort.

This morning a gentleman arrived from that island, who was in the engagement, and obliged us with the following particulars, on the veracity of which our readers may rely:—On Friday last about five o'clock in the morning, an alarm was fired from fort Young, on the appearance of several heavy ships, which, at that time, were supposed to be British men of war, with some merchantmen under convoy. About two hours after day light, a shot having been fired from the fort, they hoisted the French Imperial colours, and proceeded to be five sail of French line of battle ships (one of which was called the Magnanime, of 120) three frigates, two brigs and a schooner, under the command of Admiral Missiessy. They immediately began to disembark, and a number of boats, filled with troops, pressing forward to effect a landing at Point Michelie, the militia grenadier company was ordered to march thither, to join a party of militia and regulars already stationed there, for the purpose of opposing them; but, on attempting to form a junction, found they were too late, the enemy having already effected a landing to the amount of 2500 men, under cover of an armed schooner, which soon received the farther assistance of the Magnanime and a brig, all of which fired successive broadsides at the Point, but without doing much damage. The enemy advanced, and about 10 o'clock were opposed by about two hundred of the militia and regulars with great firmness, until about half past three in the afternoon, when the firing ceasing a little, a small party of regulars, with the assistance of one six pounder, succeeded in forcing this body to re-embark. But about the time this division first landed at Point Mitchelle, a division of about equal force succeeded in effecting a landing at the lower end of the town, near Mount Daniel, under cover of a frigate and a brig:—the enemy at this point, were warmly received by a party of about 100 militia, who repulsed them several times, but continual reinforcements coming from the ships, they were overpowered and forced to retreat into the adjacent cane pieces, when the French were in complete possession of the town, which had been bombarded during the whole transaction, by two ships and a brig. General Prevost having observed from the Government house, the ineffectual resistance that could be made by his small party against such numbers as were continually pouring in from the ships, effected his retreat to Prince Rupert's whither he was followed by all the military that survived the action. Previous to his Excellency's departure for the garrison, he left the town to the care of George Metcalfe, Esq; President of the island, who soon after sent a flag on board the Magnanime, to propose to M. Le Grange, the military commander, a capitulation for the town, but he refused to accede to any other terms, than an unconditional surrender, by laying down their arms. On the return of the flag with this answer, the militia were marched to Morne Bruce, and forming a line, by order of Colonel Beach, their arms were piled, side belts delivered, and being marched to Roseau, were confined as prisoners of war in the court-house, until ten o'clock the ensuing morning, when they were released, and desired to change their dresses. During the engagement, unfortunately, the wadding from the guns at fort Young, set fire to several of the houses under it, which spread so rapidly, that, assisted by the confusion ever attendant on the bombardment of a place, every exertion the inhabitants could make use of, was found ineffectual to prevent the most valuable part of the town of Roseau, being reduced to ashes, to the utter ruin of its inhabitants. After the town was taken, a scene of riot and plunder consequently ensued, and two or three of the inhabitants were wantonly shot by the French soldiers, which conduct induced those that could do so, to make their escape into the country. As soon, however, as order was in some measure restored, sentinels were placed at different parts of the town, for the protection of its remaining inhabitants. The day following, they demanded a contribution of 6000l. sterling, threatening that if not paid by the next day, to enforce it by a general plunder:—the President and Council accordingly met, to take the demand into consideration, and compromised with the French commanders for the sum of 5,500l. sterling, which was paid them the morning following, after which tranquillity seemed to be again restored.—The same evening, they began to spike up the cannon, and throw all the ammunition into the sea, preparatory to their evacuation of Roseau, the next morning; about ten o'clock of which day, all the out posts and troops were called in, assembled on the beach, and re-embarked; and at 12 o'clock Gen. Le Grange left the Government House, with his suite, defired the French flag to be struck, and re-embarked also. In justice to this General (although an enemy,) we add, that the lady of General Prevost, was treated with every testimony of respect; and that on hearing the brutal conduct observed by his soldiery in this rapacity, he issued such orders, that two or three were shot in the act of plundering.

Our informant adds—"That a flag of truce had been forwarded on Monday to General Prevost, to demand the surrender of Prince Rupert's, that the answer returned by his Excellency, was—"He was waiting there with great impatience and would be happy to receive them." That a vessel arrived from Martinique on Wednesday, bringing the intelligence that advices had been received there, of an alarm having been fired at Barbadoes, on the appearance of a fleet of British men of war, said to be 20 sail—that the day he escaped from Dominica, intelligence had been received from Prince Rupert's, that the garrison held 1500 effective men, with provisions and water for six months, and that when he quitted, the enemy's fleet were all under weigh, bound for Prince Rupert's, as he presumed.

The loss sustained by the British on the above occasion, is we understand, of his Majesty's troops, Major Nun, wounded, and 7 or 8 rank and file killed and wounded.—Of the inhabitants, Mr. Veleaux, and two or three persons of colour, killed; Capt. George Atkinson, (militia) Rev. John Audain, Mr. Edward Harnson, and not many persons of colour, wounded.

An Account of a burning Well at Brosely in Shropshire.

At Brosely in 1731 was a well found which burned with great violence, but it has been lost many years. The proprietor in whose land it was, missing the profit he used to have by shewing it, applied his utmost endeavours to recover it; but all in vain till May last (1756) when attending to a rumbling noise under the ground, like what the former well made, though in a lower situation, and about thirty yards nearer to the river, he happened to hit upon it again.

That you may have some notion what it is, I will give you such an account of it as the cursory view I had will permit.

The well for four or five feet is six or seven feet wide; within that is another less hole of like depth dug in the clay, in the bottom whereof is placed a cylindric earthen vessel, of about four or five inches diameter at the mouth, having the bottom taken off, and the rider well fixed in the clay rammed close about it. Within the pot is a brown water, thick as puddle, continually forced up with a violent motion, beyond that of boiling water, and a rumbling hollow noise, rising or falling by fits five or six inches; but there was no appearance of any vapour rising; which perhaps might have been visible, had not the sun shone so bright.

Upon putting down a candle at the end of a stick, at about a quarter of a yard distance, it took fire, darting and flashing in a violent manner, for about half a yard high, much in the manner of spirits in a lamp, but with great agitation. The man said that a tea kettle had been made to boil in about nine minutes time, and that he had left it burning forty-eight hours together without any sensible diminution.

It was extinguished by putting a wet mop upon it, which must be kept there a small time; otherwise it would not go out. Upon the removal of the mop there succeeded a sulphurous smoak, lasting about a minute, and yet the water was very cold to the touch.

The well lies about thirty yards from the Severn, which, in that place, and for some miles both above and below, runs in a vale full 100 yards perpendicular below the level of the country on either side, which inclines down to the vale at an angle twenty or thirty degrees from the horizon, but somewhat more or less in different places, according as the place is more or less rocky.

The country consists of rock, stone, earth and clay; and as the river, which is very rapid, washes away the soft and loose parts, the next successively slip into the channel, so as by degrees and in time to affect the whole slope of the land; and as the inferior strata yield coal and iron ore, their fermentation may produce this vapour, and force it to ascend with violence through the chinks of the earth, and give the water the great motion it has. This might be obstructed in one place by the forementioned subsiding of the sloping bank, and might afterwards find vent in another, in like manner as happened at Scarborough a few years since.

When I was there eight years ago, the cylinder had been taken up, or otherwise destroyed; the well no longer appeared any thing else but a miry hole of clay. Other waters had been suffered to mix with those of the burning spring, which, though they considerably diminished the effect, did not however wholly destroy it; for upon the application of a piece of lighted paper, a stream of clear flame shot up from the well, which very much resembled that of a tea kettle lamp fed by spirits; but as we could not keep out the other water, the flame presently went out of it-self. I forget now to what cause they told us this shameful neglect was owing; whether to a contest between two rival claimants to the property, or whether the curiosity of the circumjacent inhabitants, &c. being fully gratified, it no longer attracted a concourse of visitants sufficient to reward the attention of the proprietor.—It were to be wished that some of the gentlemen in that neighbourhood (which I have now left many years) would give us the present state of this wonderful phoenomenon.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN,

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming purchasers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. And whereas certain persons notwithstanding such notice, do still continue to occupy and possess such Lands without any authority, licence or title derived from the Crown to the same; and being willing that these persons may have the fullest notice of their danger, and of the consequences of their conduct, and that they may not avail themselves of the unmerited forbearance of the Crown, by assuming or pretending to any right, claim, or title in, or to the Lands so illegally and unjustly occupied and possessed by them as aforesaid. I PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council thereof, hereby again give notice to, and warn such person or persons that do possess and occupy Lands therein without any licence, title or right whatever derived from the Crown, having heretofore to quit and remove from the same; it being the intent of the Executive Government of this Province to prevent and frustrate such illegal and fraudulent usurpations, so much as to support the claims of such individuals as are justly entitled to the enjoyment of his Majesty's bounty therein.

Latest Intelligence.

VIENNA, March 13.

On the 9th inst. a courier from the Elector of Wirtemberg arrived at the state chancery, and immediately after the Counsellor Baur who is here on the part of Wirtemberg States, was invested by the police, and on the 9th sent off to Stutgard, under the escort of two chasseurs, accompanied by a commissary of the police.

LONDON, March 21.

Early on Wednesday morning the whole of the Channel Fleet got under way from Torbay, and stood down the channel with a fine breeze at E. N. E.

Mr. Pitt last night described the outlines of his plan for the augmentation of our disposable force, by the most speedy reduction of the militia. The number of men to be thus obtained to be 19,000, leaving 30,000 as the amount of the militia establishment for England, and 8,000 for Scotland. The number of volunteers from each regiment is to be regulated by the amount of the quotas for each country. Lists are to be transmitted to the respective commanding officers, and if four fifths of the original number volunteer for the regular army, the country is to be freed from all further charge. In this case, the whole business is left to the commanding officer. If such a number should not, in the first instance, be obtained, the commanding officer is to divide his regiment into two equal parts, the one half is to be wholly exempted from the operation of the bill, and but of the remaining half, volunteers to the amount of four-fifths of the whole number are to be obtained.

On Wednesday Government sent orders to Gravesend, Portsmouth, and the Downs, to detain all China and Madras ships, which were ready to sail from these places, in order to embark troops on board of them. Ships of the largest size are to carry two hundred and forty men each, and the others two hundred, or less, according to their dimensions. The China ships are to disembark their troops at Madras. The whole number of troops sent out will be between four and five thousand.—The 69th regiment sailed from Spithead the 8th of March, in the fleet convoyed by his Majesty's ship Hindostan, for the same destination. These troops have been ordered to India in consequence of the unpleasant intelligence lately received from that quarter.

The following are the regiments which are going on the secret expedition, as it has been called, but which is generally believed to be destined for the Mediterranean:—Four troops of the 11th light dragoons, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Taylor; the 30th, 44th, 58th, 58th, and 81st regiments of infantry, from England; the 89th, 90th, and another regiment of infantry, from Ireland; several companies of artillery, engineers, ordnance, &c. General Sir James Craig is to be Commander in Chief. Under him, General Sir John Stuart, and two Brigadier Generals. Brigadier General Campbell, Adjutant General to the expedition; and Colonel Bunbury, Quarter-Master General. That the Mediterranean will probably be soon the scene of some enterprise, seems pretty evident, and there is no probable, the Russian auxiliaries will first be employed.

The expressions made use of last night by Mr. Pitt in the House of Commons, seem to hold out a hope that we shall soon have the co-operation of some of the Continental Powers.

Add to this, that more Russian troops according to letters by the Hamburgh mails, which arrived this day, are daily expected at Corfu.

We have received Paris Journals to the 17th, and Dutch papers of the 30th ult.

The latter contain the plan of the new constitution prescribed to Holland by Bonaparte. It is however, of little importance by what name or under what form Holland may be ruled, while a foreign state dictates every measure that is adopted. It will be seen that the Legislative Body is to be new modelled and the ancient title of "Their High Mightinesses" restored to it. Of the "High and Mighty Lords" there is to be nineteen; and the Executive Power is to be vested in the hands of the Pensionary, who of course will act as a kind of Vice-Roy to Bonaparte. Schimmelpenninck is the person appointed to fill this latter situation. He is to have a Council of State; the fleets and armies are to be at his disposal; he is charged with the supreme police, and is to have the sole direction of the Treasury.—Their High Mightinesses, in whose name he is to act, may approve or reject his plans but they must not alter them.

An article from Frankfort, of the 14th instant, has the following interesting particulars respecting what is stated to have lately passed between the courts of Berlin and Stockholm, with regard to the negociations carried on by Sweden and England:—

"The Court of Berlin, as has been already stated, has declared, that in case Sweden should conclude a subsidiary treaty with England, the Prussian forces would occupy Swedish Pomerania. M. de Brinckmann, the Swedish Minister at Berlin, transmitted, upon this subject, a letter, written in his Sovereign's own hand, to Mr. Hardenberg, the Prussian Minister. In that letter his Swedish Majesty declares that as a Swedish subject he did not think himself bound to give any account to other Powers of the alliance which he might think proper to conclude: that, in case any foreign troops should enter his territories they should be treated as enemies: and that, at the same time, he should claim the assistance of the Russian auxiliary troops, conformably to the treaty concluded with Russia, the 9th of Oct. 1799."

General Brune is arrived at Paris from Constantinople. According to letters from the latter city of the 25th of January, every exertion was making by the Ottoman Porte to place the army and navy on the best footing, and to provide for the regular pay of both. The navy is to be new modelled, on the plan of that of England.

A letter from Vienna of the 3d inst. in the papers of the same date, mentions that the Beys of Egypt have gained a decisive victory over the Arnauts, commanded by Mohammed Aly, within two days journey of Cairo. The Arnauts, though superior in numbers, are stated to have lost in this contest about 3000 men, killed and wounded. Ituzebin Bey attacked them in front, while they were flanked by Bordini Bey, and assailed in the rear by Elfi Bey.

The French Funds on the 15th were 59 f. 100.

Lord Gardner is appointed to the command of the Channel Fleet.

Flour is in large supply, and may be named 52s. per sack less. Sales of all articles appear at a general declension.

March, 26.

Government received information yesterday that his Majesty the King of Prussia has sent instructions to his Minister at Paris, to present an immediate remonstrance to the French government against the blockade of Lubeck, &c. to demand that the French troops occupying the passage to that city, shall be instantly withdrawn.

We have received the Moniteurs to the 19th inst. inclusive. The intelligence which they contain is of the highest importance. Bonaparte has been declared king of Italy. We were preparing for some great changes in the constitution of the Italian Republic; but we scarcely could have conceived, that in addition to the Imperial diadem of France, Napoleon would have exchanged his Iron with the weight of the regal crown of Italy.

Piombino has been erected into a principality, and the princess Elisa has been invested with the sovereignty of it, but as a fief to France. The ostensible motive for the erection of this new power in the heart of Italy, is to succour the French garrison in the island of Elba, and to provision it when necessary. This is one of the expedients to which Bonaparte has recourse for reducing the Mediterranean to that pacific state, without which he avows his determination not to make peace.

Our first accounts, which came foreign advices immediately contradicted, has been proved to be correct, and Bonaparte has added the title of King of Italy to that of Emperor of France. The Italian Consulta of State, and the Deputation of the Italian Republic headed by the Vice-President Melzi, proceeded in great state to the Tuileries on the 18th where Bonaparte received them seated on his Throne, and surrounded by the Princes of his House, and the Great Officers of State.

M. Melzi then addressed him in a short speech, in which he pronounced a condemnation of the Constitution which had been given to the Italian Republic—a constitution which he considers as the mere creature and creature of circumstances too feeble to be permanent or respectable. He then read an Italian the resolution passed by the Consulta, in which, after declaring the Government of the Italian Republic an Hereditary Monarchy, on the same principles as those which constitute the Government of the French Empire, they declare Napoleon King of Italy, and the Throne hereditary in his direct and legitimate male descendants, natural or adoptive. They declare also that the Crown of Italy can only be united to the Crown of France in the person of and that no future Emperor of France shall at the same time be king of Italy. At the same time whilst they give him the right of resigning the crown and naming his successor during his life time, they express their opinion that he cannot make use of it without compromising the safety, integrity and independence of the state, so long as the French armies shall occupy the Kingdom of Naples, the Russian armies Corfu, and the British Malta, and so long as the peninsula of Italy shall be menaced with being made every moment the seat of battle of the greatest Powers in Europe.

Bonaparte accepting the proffered crown with great willingness reminded the Consulta of the benefits he had conferred on them, and acknowledging that the separation of the crowns of Italy and France might at present be fatal to the existence of the former, contented to keep the crown, till the moment should arrive in which he should be able to place it on a younger head, "who shall continue my work, and be ready to sacrifice himself to the happiness of the people, over whom Providence, the Constitution, and me will shall have called him to reign."

Reparing from this mockery at the Thuilleries to his Senate, Bonaparte was there harangued by M. Talleyrand, who, in much the same style as the Duke of Buckingham harangued Richard the Third, enumerated the reasons and arguments that should induce his Imperial Majesty to accept the Italian Crown.

His Italian Majesty is immediately to repair to Milan to be crowned, and to give a definite Constitution to his new Kingdom.

March 29.

General Sir James Craig, Sir John Stuart, and general Vernon, yesterday took leave of his Majesty, and will set off this day to assume their command in the secret expedition. General Tilson is also to serve in it, and brigadier-general Blake has been removed from the eastern to the south-western district to supply his place. If we may judge from the forward state of the preparations, the armament is upon the eve of sailing. Portsmouth is the principal point of rendezvous. The embarkation of the troops commenced there on Tuesday and finished this day. They will be conveyed by the Dragon, of 74 guns, in which ship Sir James Craig will hoist his flag.

Malta is still blockaded by the French squadron, consisting of four sail of the line, two frigates, and a brig. The garrison is in high spirits, and the inhabitants are ready to assist in the defence of the island.

Accounts from Italy by the last Hamburgh mail, confirm the report of a corps of 4000 Russians having sailed from Corfu, on board some British ships of war, on a secret expedition.

It is understood at Vienna that the Austrian government has received some accession of territory on the frontiers, as a compensation or equivalent for the new power which Bonaparte is about to acquire in Italy.

The Courier de Londres asserts that Sebastiani, who lately went to Holland, was accompanied by 60 dragoons, whose orders were to escort the King of Sweden who was then on his travels.

In the late great inundation of the Tiber, more than 500 persons lost their lives in the neighbourhood of Rome.

A few days ago about 800 of the Batilla came out of Boulogne harbour, and ranged themselves close under the batteries. As the evening, however, they retired.

On Tuesday the Register are to be opened in every city throughout the Batavian Republic, for inserting the names of the voters in favour of or against the intended Constitution. It is declared that all persons who may not wish to vote, are to be considered as having given their suffrages in favour of the new proposition.

A Stranger report was lately propagated at Vienna, it is said that a courier had passed through that city from the East Indies, with intelligence, that the Governor General had declared himself independent.

Spanish claims.—Government has officially notified to the proprietors in Scotch, creditors of Spain, that the money found in such Spanish ships as were detained before the declaration of war, shall be applied to the liquidation of made on their passage down Channel, will be joined by a strong corps from Plymouth. Two companies of the royal artillery, and the 18th regiment of foot, 750 rank and file, embarked at the latter place on Tuesday, on board nine transports. They are in the finest state of discipline, and went off in high spirits, accompanied with the acclamations of thousands of spectators who cheered them from the shore. The expedition is certainly destined for the Mediterranean.

Orders were last night sent from the admiralty to hasten the sailing of the above expedition as much as possible.

MARCH 30.

We have received Paris Journals to the 21st and Dutch Journals to the 29th.

The latter announces the confirmation, by the Legislative Body, of the proposals of the State Directory, respecting the new Constitution, and the mode of electing M. Schimmelpenninck, in consequence of his congé d'elire from Paris.—That grand pensionary in order to be chosen between the 9th and 16th of next month.

The Paris Gazettes mention the death of Admiral Bruix; and the approaching christening of the infant Napoleon Louis, by the hands of the Holy Father. The Sovereign Pontiff, it is said, will be allowed to re-cross the Alps, after this ceremony, and will pass the Easter week at Lyons, on his journey.

The Boulogne flotilla have again begun to venture into the outer Roads. On Wednesday about 250 of their gun boats and large prams made their appearance in the outer Roads, where they practised some manœuvres, but took care to keep under the protection of their batteries. There appears to be 1000 vessels of different sizes in Boulogne Harbor.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been pleased to order Lord Gardner to send out frigates to cruize for the Protection of the homeward bound Leeward Island fleet.

APRIL 1.

The whole of the troops destined for the Mediterranean, under the command of Sir James Craig, were embarked on Saturday and the expedition has probably by this time proceeded on its voyage. Among the corps employed in this important service are the 35th, 44th, 58th, 58th, 81st Regiments of Foot, and the 20th Light Dragoons. The 18th Royal Veteran Battalion is also embarked, but this corps is to be landed at Gibraltar, in order to reinforce the Garrison.

The troops under orders for the East Indies will also sail in the course of a few days. The Officers belonging to the corps destined for this service received orders on Saturday to join forthwith their respective regiments; and the most prompt exertions will be made to repair the losses we have recently sustained in those distant possessions. The Marquis Wellesley has not for some time past been on good terms with the Court of Directors, who, we understand have not received a single dispatch from his Lordship for the last six months.

Saturday letters were received down from the squadron off Ferrol, by the Malta, of 84 guns, arrived at Plymouth. The French and Spanish ships there reported to be in readiness for sea. The Malta has lately engaged with the batteries of the harbor, and so much damaged as to be obliged to return to refit.

Spain, &c.

Intelligence is hourly expected respecting the Brest fleet, as by the last accounts there was a probability of a partial action at last having brought on between it and our Channel fleet.

The accounts do not agree in every particular, in our readers will see by comparing the subjoined letters. They both bring down the intelligence to the same date, but the first says our vessels had been drawn off, while the other states, that when the accounts left the fleet, the Windsor Castle, of 98 guns, the van ship, was then actually engaged with the enemy.

We cannot reconcile those accounts: but by supposing, that the latter left the fleet at a later hour (though on the same day) than the former. We ought to add, that our Plymouth letter is from a gentleman who has the best means of being well informed, and whose communications we have generally found to be perfectly correct.

Extract of a letter from an Officer on board one of our frigates, dated the 30th ult. off Ushant.

"I dare say the papers have by this time given an account of the Brest fleet attempting to come out: the manner I will tell you. On Sunday morning last, a convoy was observed under the land, apparently bound to Brest, which, after being attacked by two of our brigs, took shelter under the battery of St. Mathew. Tuesday at day-break three sail were seen coming out of the harbor, as if to protect them in, when we immediately chased, and with our small squadron, viz. three frigates and two brigs, made them all take shelter under the batteries, of which we informed the admiral by a cutter, who sent us two line of battle ships, the Colossus and Bellerophon when we all got under weigh, and stood right in, with intent to cut them out, when the whole Brest fleet, viz. twenty one sail of the line, six frigates, and a brig, immediately got under weigh, and stood out. A grander sight you can hardly imagine. The cutter was again dispatched to our fleet, and half past four eighteen sail joined us, and every one expected, and indeed longed to begin, when the Admiral made a signal to haul off. The enemy was at anchor nearly within gun-shot of us. They have all returned into port.

This day we received French Journals to the 25th ult. and Dutch to the 29th ult. From the latter we learn by a letter from Madrid, that an attack is meditated against Gibraltar, in which the Spaniards expect to be aided by a secret understanding within the garrison.

Secret Expedition.—Several ships with troops for the expedition, sailed on Sunday from Portsmouth for the Isle of Wight.

It is reported, but we believe without foundation, that the secret expedition will be dispatched to the West Indies, instead of its original destination.

The military preparations on the part of Russia continue with increased activity, especially on the frontiers of Austria and Prussia.

It appears by accounts from Constantinople, that the Russians mean to establish themselves at Prussa, several frigates having arrived there, and sailed up the river.

It is reported at Paris, that General that demands it. It is intended to appoint two Commissioners, one by Government, and the other by the claimants, to investigate and decide upon the justice of the demands."

A variety of decrees have been issued by the Consuls to the people of Italy, on the subject of their new Government; all of which are replete with fulsome adulation on the genius and character of Bonaparte. One of these proclamations, after an explanation of the new measures about to be adopted, adds the following apostrophe:—"People of Italy, expand your hearts to hope and to exultation! War this moment commences the centre of your brilliant destinies! To what glory and prosperity ought you not to aspire! Your King will soon be amongst you; he will go less to ornament his august head with the crown, than to witness your wants, and to provide a definitive organization to secure your tranquillity."

A considerable number of letters were on Saturday received from Holland by a vessel which on Friday arrived at Gravesend. One from Rotterdam, dated on Tuesday, announces, that previous to the departure of the Russian General Winzingerode from Berlin, the King presented him with his picture on a snuff-box, set in diamonds. His Majesty likewise delivered to him, with his own hands, a letter which he had himself written to the emperor Alexander, containing the ultimatum of the Prussian Cabinet on the subjects which have lately been in discussion between the two Courts. Prussia, it is said, persists in her determination to oppose the military projects of Sweden, while Sweden has demanded the assistance of Russia by virtue of the first and third articles of the treaty of 1799, to vindicate her independence against the menaces of Prussia. There letters, in opposition to previous and more probable accounts, say, that Lubec continued on the 29th ult. to refuse the contributions demanded by France, and had applied to the Courts of Petersburgh, Berlin, and Vienna, for redress.

This morning a mail from Gottenburg and Lisbon arrived. By the former, Government has received dispatches from Petersburgh, which are said to contain positive assurances on the part of the Emperor Alexander, of an immediate and powerful co operation against France. Orders are stated to have been issued from the Russian war department to prepare for actual service a force little short of 180,000 men.

PLYMOUTH, April 3.

This day letters have been received from the Channel fleet, cruising off Brest, by which it appears, that on Saturday last, the French fleet, consisting of 21 sail of the line, five of which were three deckers, besides several very heavy frigates, were lying at anchor in Bertheaume Road, near Brest, and that great hopes were entertained that an action would be brought on between the two fleets, as the British were at that time near them; and when the account came away, the Windsor Castle, of 98 guns, captain Gould, which was the van ship of the fleet, was firing at the French ships from both sides. The wind was at that time strong westerly, so that if the French were, as usual, disposed to be very shy, they would endeavor to sneak again into Brest, as the wind favored such a purpose. We are hourly looking out for further accounts from them. The Hibernia, of 120 guns, and the Ajax, of 80 guns, sailed from hence on Monday last, and, no doubt, have reinforced the British ere this."

GOTTENBURGH, March 29.

Letters received from Lubeck, to day, confirm the accounts brought by last post, that French troops occupy all the villages round that city, and that not a wagon nor cart with goods is permitted to come out of it: the object of this, it is said, is to stop all English commodities.—Great fears are, however, entertained, that it is not the only one, but that contributions will also be demanded.

Lateſt Intelligence.

ST. DOMINGO, &c.

We have accounts from this interesting island, render it certain, that the black army has been defeated before the city of St. Domingo, and that its scattered divisions had retreated to the northern and western parts of the island. Letters from Cape Francois to the 19th April, state, that the fable Emperor, Dessalines, had arrived at the Cape; and that his followers had brought with them large quantities of Spanish plunder.

The above accounts also state, that Admiral Missiessy, with the Rochefort squadron, in readed by some transports, had landed about 3000 troops at Santa Domingo; since which nothing has been heard of the squadron in that quarter. The following, which are believed to be facts, may give some information of the active operations of this squadron. It sailed from Martinico about the 22d March, bound to Leeward, and was spoken on the 5th, 7th and 8th April, in from 21 to 23 degrees of N. latitude, and from 67 to 65 degrees of W. longitude; standing to the Northward and Eastward. From these facts, it now appears probable, that the squadron when it left Martinico shaped its course for St. Domingo—(a distance of about 600 miles)—where it is not improbable it arrived by the 25th of March;—tarried no longer than was necessary to land the troops—(probably at the east end of the island) and then made fail for Europe; on its paſſage to which it was ſpoken as above.

HAMBURGH, April 2.

"The various regiments lately drawn from the French coaſts of the Channel have received orders to re-occupy their former poſitions. Every officer and private abſent on furlough have been ordered to join their reſpective regiments, even though the leave of abſence ſhould not have expired. All the generals are alſo to repair to their reſpective ſtations on the coaſt. Maſſena is to have the chief command of the Army of England, Augereau that of Ireland, and Marmont that of Scotland."

LONDON, April 6.

The Breſt fleet, conſiſting of 21 ſail of the line and frigates, came out of Breſt, and anchored in Carmaret Bay, where they remained 24 hours, and then returned to their old ſtation. They appeared to have an expedition in view, ſome of them having hay bags on their quarters.

By a ſudden riſe of the waters of the Elbe, 90 villages have been inundated, and vaſt damage has been ſuffered. The miſery of the poor inhabitants defies deſcription.

Thirteen or fourteen houſes have lately been deſtroyed by fire in the commune of Crillon, and vaſt quantities of grain and hay have been deſtroyed.

NEW YORK, May 20.

The Editor of the Bahama Royal Gazette in his paper of the 3d inſt. informs us that the Captain of an American veſſel, which had been detained at Barracoa by a French privateer, arrived at Principe on the 17th ult. with the intelligence that a day or two previous to his having made the Windward Iſlands, he had been 36 hours in company with an Engliſh ſquadron, conſiſting of 25 ſail of the line, frigates, & brigs, deſtined for the Weſt Indies.

Letters received from Spain ſtate, that apprehenſions were entertained of a deſcent by the Britiſh on Ferrol—and that troops were arriving from the interior at that place.

REMARKABLE.

We are credibly informed, as incredible as it may appear, that a poor family from one of the Eaſtern States, lately paſſed through Albany, on their way to the Weſtern Country, for the purpoſe of cultivating an extenſive farm which had been given to them. This family conſiſted of a man, his wife and ſeventeen four ſons, twenty of whom were born at ten births. They had been married only 18 years. Our informant adds, that ſo great was the curioſity of the people in and about Albany, that hundreds crowded to ſee them—one gentleman preſented each of the ſons with ten dollars—and preſents of various kinds, were heaped upon them.

ALBANY, May 21.

Breſt fleet—Captain Trippe arrived at Charleſton the 6th inſt. in 17 days from St. Pierres, (Martinique.) He was informed at the Cuſtom Houſe the day he cleared out, that a brig had arrived at Trinity, in 25 days from Breſt, with information that the Breſt fleet, conſiſting of 22 ſail of the line with 25,000 troops on board, was out and had got clear of the channel—their deſtination unknown.

The laſt accounts received at Saint Pierres, of the Rochefort ſquadron, were, that they had gone into one of the brigand ports, on the ſouth ſide of St. Domingo, deſtroyed a number of American and other neutral veſſels, and hung their crews. A particular inſtance was ſtated of an armed ſhip belonging to Salem; the whole crew of which, with the exception of the cabin boy, whom they conſidered innocent, were put to death.

It was ſuppoſed that the fleet, after leaving St. Domingo, would proceed for Havanna.—N. Y. E. Poſt.

The following toaſt was lately given at a feaſt in London:

May Bonaparte's fleet and failors
Swim like the gate of Engliſh tailors.

New Settlement in the Archipelago.

The Hydriottes, and their iſland, are thus deſcribed by a Traveller, now upon a Tour through the Morea:

"The iſland of Hydra is nothing more than a barren rock, ſituated about three leagues South Weſt of the Peloponneſus. Its inhabitants, able ſeamen, do not endeavour to obtain thoſe things from their own ungrateful ſoil, which they can purchaſe at an eaſy rate in the neighbourhood. Till the campaign made by the Ruſſians in the Mediterranean, under Catharine, the Hydriottes, like the other Greeks, never extended their navigation beyond Egypt or the Black Sea. But when the Ruſſians abandoned their allies on the Greek Coaſt, ſeveral of the richeſt families, leaving the Morea to avoid the fury of the Turks, the veſſels of the Hydriottes were found extremely uſeful; and even the iſland of Hydra appeared to many, as the neareſt, and moſt ſecure place of refuge. The new colonies, however, were compelled to turn their thoughts to commerce, to procure a ſubſiſtence, and were excellently ſeconded by the abilities of the natives, as ſeamen. What is related of the Hydriotte barks, recalls to one's recollection the ſimplicity and good faith of ancient times. They know nothing of bills of lading; but bags of piaſters, merely diſtinguiſhed with the mark of the proprietor, even if they are not accompanied by letters of advice, are ſure to experience a ſafe and punctual delivery. There have even been inſtances of large ſums remaining untouched in their Captain's cabin, many months, for want of being claimed; and finally delivered without the leaſt deficiency. Theſe good qualities have neceſſarily extended the commerce of the Hydriottes; and, therefore, inſtead of being confined to the Archipelago, and the Black Sea, their veſſels are now to be ſeen in the ports of France and Italy; ſometimes even further northward, and in the American harbours. Lately the Hydriotte veſſels, for the purpoſe of refitting the Barbary corſairs, carry from 18 to 20 guns; their crews are from 35 to 60 or 90 men, with a few boys; but the former are generally under the age of 40. The owners content themſelves with the intereſt of their capitals and ſome other advantages, while the reſt of the profits are divided into two halves, one of them is appropriated to the Captain, and the other is divided in equal portions among the ſailors, not excluding the cabin boys. This, generally, enables the latter to ſupport a parent that may ſtand in need. The young men alſo marry very early, viz. at 18, and the females ſoon after 12, which in five years paſt has had a remarkable effect upon the population of the iſland.

"The manner in which the young lads are inſtructed in naval affairs is very remarkable:—From the moment they are able to diſtinguiſh a cape, a mole, or an iſland, they are taught to remember their appearances, bearings, &c. the very next time they come within ſight of any of thoſe objects they are examined with the utmoſt rigour, and woe to them whoſe memory is found deficient; they are, indeed, again reminded of the names of the objects forgotten, but every name then repeated is accompanied by a levere laſh with a whip.

"In the ſea voyages of the Hydriottes, they are remarked for their obſervance of the moſt rigid frugality—it is wine only that they then with to have in abundance; but having once arrived in port, they take care to conſume their reſerved proviſions in a very ſhort time; and for their ability in the ſupport of privations when they occur, theſe people in ſome meaſure reſemble the French.

"There is ſcarcely any ſcene of hilarity which exceeds the joyful return of theſe veſſels to their dear friends. It is, in fact, a general feaſt; and in this there is always ſome imitation of the manners of the people they viſited laſt. The ſciences alſo are regarded in their turn; the Hydriottes have lately eſtabliſhed ſchools for teaching the ancient Greek, the Italian and Geography.—They have alſo erected an exchange, which is alſo the ſeat of juſtice—and if the reſt of the modern Greeks were releaſed from the oppreſſion of the Turkiſh Government, there is little doubt but their progreſs in civiliſation would be equal if not ſuperior to theſe iſlanders."

There is living not a 100 miles from Stonehaven, a man who has practiſed a greater variety of the mechanical arts than any one perſon we remember to have heard of. He was originally bred a country blackſmith, and is known to have attained conſiderable proficiency in that line. Self taught, he ſoon became a profeſſed clock and watch maker. He has made ſome watches, and his clocks, of which he has furniſhed hundreds, are reckoned not inferior to any of thoſe manufactured in this country. He did not confine himſelf, however, to the movements only; for, as ſoon as it was completed, he formed the mahogany caſe; and this part of his workmanſhip would do credit to the regularly bred cabinet-maker. His genius next extended itſelf to muſical inſtruments; in the evenings of one winter, he made, for his amuſement, ſix or eight fiddles, of which the workmanſhip and varniſh were excellent, and the tones by no means deſpicable. One of them he conſtructed to play with eight ſtrings, two of each kind, and the effect, eſpecially in ſlow muſic, was very pleaſant. In his own family, he is occaſionally both taylor and ſhoe maker; and in the latter department he might vie with any of the moſt ſubſtantial ſons of Crispin. He lately purchaſed a ſmall bark, which, with the aſſiſtance of his ſon, a boy, he now navigates in the coal trade. He was at ſea in this bark during one of the laſt winter's ſtorms, and ſuppoſed to have finiſhed his career in Davy's Locker; but after ſome time, he was found ſnug in the harbour. About a month ago, his veſſel encountered another ſtorm, in which ſeveral planks were ſtove, and her ſtern demoliſhed. Here a new channel was opened for his multifarious ingenuity. He immediately ſet to work; and joining the old blackſmith to the ſhipcarpenter, forged bolts and ſhaped timber, and by the work of his own hands alone, has completed the neceſſary repairs. Had ſuch a genius been under the direction of proper judgment, there is reaſon to believe that it would have conducted its poſſeſſor to not a little renown. London paper, March 26.

The following Anecdote of a Britiſh Sailor is related in "Spiſbury's Picturesque Scenery in the Holy Land and Syria;" an amuſing and intereſting work lately publiſhed by the Surgeon who ſerved on board his Majeſty's ſhip Le Tigre, during the campaigns of 1799 and 1800.

"Daniel Bryan was an old ſeaman of Sir Sidney Smith's ſhip Le Tigre: he had made many repeated applications to be employed on ſhore during the ſiege of Acre; but being elderly and rather deaf, his requeſt was not acceded to. At the firſt ſtorming of the breach one of the French Generals fell: the Turks ſtruck off the head, ſtripped and mangled the body, and left it a prey to the dogs. Dan. frequently aſked his meſſmates, when they returned from the ſhore, why they had not buried him; but the only reply he received was, Go and do it yourſelf. He ſaid he would; and having at length obtained leave to go and ſee the town, he went aſhore with the ſurgeon. He provided a pick axe, ſhovel, and rope; and inſiſted to be let down from an embraſure cloſe to the breach. Some of his more juvenile companions offered to attend him: "No!" he replied, "you are too young to be ſhot yet; as for me, I am old and deaf, and my loſs would be no great matter." In the midſt of the firing he was lowered down; and his firſt difficulty, not a very trival one, was to drive away the dogs. The French then levelled their pieces at him; but a French officer, perceiving his intention, was ſeen to throw himſelf across the ranks. A dead ſolemn ſilence prevailed; and the worthy fellow conſigned the corps to its parent earth. He was then hoiſted into the town, and the hoſtile firing recommenced. A few days afterwards, Sir Sidney, having been informed of the circumſtance, ordered Dan. to be called into the cabin. "Well, Dan. I hear you have buried the French General."—"Yes your honor."—"Had you any body with you?"—"Yes your honor."—"Why, Mr. Spiſbury ſays you had not."—"But I had, your honor."—"Ah, who had you?"—"God Almighty, Sir."—"A very good aſſiſtant indeed! Give old Dan. a glaſs of groe."—"Thank your honor."—Dan. drank his groe, and left the cabin highly gratified. He is now a penſioner in the Royal Hoſpital at Greenwich."

A curious fact in Natural Hiſtory has been obſerved by Dr. Gabriel Anſelmi, Profeſſor of Anatomy at Turin. A Snake, called in Italy Serpe Nera, the Coluber Natrix of Linnaeus, is ſaid to be extremely fond of milk; and the country people even pretend that it makes its way into the dairies to gratify its inclination. They even aſſert, that it is ſometimes found entwined round the legs of cows, ſucking their teats with ſuch avidity as to draw blood when their milk is exhauſted. Of this fact, which by many had been conſidered as a popular tale, the Doctor had himſelf an opportunity of being an eye witneſs. "Walking, according to cuſtom (ſays he) one morning, on the road called the Park, bordered by paſtures, containing a great number of ſheep and horned cattle, I obſerved an old, but vigorous cow, ſeparate from the others, and lowing, with her head raiſed in the air, her ears erect, and ſhaking her tail. Surpriſed at the noiſe ſhe made, I ſeated myſelf on the banks of a ſtream, and followed her wherever ſhe went with my eyes. After running for ſome minutes, ſhe ſuddenly ſtopped in a ſequeſtered ſpot, and began to ruminate. Inquiſitive to diſcover the cauſe I went to the place. After going into a pond to drink, ſhe came out, and waited on the brink for a black ſnake, which crept from among the buſhes, and approaching her, entwined himſelf round her legs, and began to ſuck her milk. I obſerved this phenomenon two ſucceſſive days, without informing the herdſman. The third day I acquainted him with it, and he told me that the ſame thing had coſt him the loſs of the uproots of her calf, and that ſhe could not, without difficulty, be compelled to ſuffer it to ſuck. We took away the ſnake, which was killed. On the ſucceeding day the cow, after in vain waiting for her ſucking, ran about the meadow in ſuch a manner that the herdſman was obliged to ſhut her up." Dr. Anſelmi has diſcovered that if the teats of the cows be waſhed with a decoction of tobacco, the ravages of the ſame extraordinary depredators may be effectually prevented.

FROM A LONDON PAPER.

Boxing.—A match has been ſpoken of for ſome time paſt, and was ſuppoſed to be made up between Burke, who is ſo well known for his ill luck, but perſevering courage in fighting, and one Tom Crib, a young coal heaver. It is ſaid, however, that the friends of the former adviſed him to decline the conteſt, from a fear of his being ſubjected to a more powerful arm—that of the Law.—George Maddox, however, reſolved to take up the gauntlet, and enter the liſts with the youthful champion. Accordingly the parties muſtered a number of their friends yeſterday, and went to Wood Green, near Hornſey, accompanied alſo by ſeveral gentlemen amateurs. They ſet to about twelve o'clock. A black, who ſome time ſince fought Maddox, and was beat by him on Wimbledon Common, ſeconded the coal-heaver, and young Ryan was his bottle holder. Dick Hall was ſecond to his old friend Maddox, and Tom Jones was his principal aſſiſtant; but indeed Caleb Baldwin and ſeveral others of the oldeſt ſtanding in the pugiliſtic world did every thing in their power to aſſiſt the veteran, and try to make him win. Maddox was the favorite at the outſet, and continued ſo for the greater part of the battle, as all the pugiliſts of the Old School backed him. Crib was ſeconded by a number of the gentry vulgarly called Black Diamonds, as he always worked at the coal trade ſince he has been in London: a few gentlemen of ſkill, at leaſt in the theory of boxing, depended on the youthful conſtitution and weighty arm of Crib, and backed him, but they were too wiſe to lay odds.

For upwards of an hour and a half it could hardly be told which of the combatants was likely to be ſucceſsful. Though the coal-heaver made the moſt deſperate heavy body blows at Maddox, he evaded the force of the greater part of them; thus maneuvring, he frequently calculated to ſuch a nicety, that it was barely viſible that he received a blow. The falling was painfully exhauſting. Within the laſt 20 minutes Maddox cloſed up one of Crib's eyes completely. Maddox in a little time after cloſed up the other eye of his opponent. It was ſuppoſed by ſome that this muſt ſhortly terminate the battle; but the exertions of the black recovered the ſight of the firſt injured eye ſo completely, that Crib attacked the almoſt worn out veteran, and put an end to the battle by repeated heavy body blows at 5 minutes before two.

The rain fell in torrents during the whole time of the fight, and the ſpectators were ſo entirely ſoaked through with rain, that they are likely to pay dear for their day's amuſement in beholding this brutal exhibition.

The vapour ariſing from the cuſtom of making tallow with red hot tongues, practiſed in Scotland, to make candles, has been found efficacious to cauſe of malignant and epidemical fevers. Mr Reed, merchant, of Peterhead, was attacked by a fever, of which his brother died, and others fatally ſick. Finding, and his veins and arteries viſibly ſpreading the ſpecies of making candles was going on, and that ſhould reſtore his health. The ſmell of the burning tallow, effectual in ordinary caſes, was ineffectual for him, took away the ſickneſs and impreſſion on the nerves; when the tallowſh was over, his complaint recommenced, when he cauſed tallow to be again burned, and the effluvia again relieved him. By repeating this ſimple and extraordinary remedy for only days, he cured perfectly well.

THE ORPHAN.

O PRAY before your charity,
An orphan child entreats;
I'm cold and hungry, very ſick,
My only home the ſtreets—
Pray before your charity.

Think on the pangs my heart muſt feel,
Fatherleſs Mother dead;
Both gone to Heav'n, and left me here,
To beg my daily bread.
My Father went abroad to fight,
All danger he defy'd;
Till cover'd o'er with many a wound,
He ſank and bravely died.
My Mother ſoon did follow him,
And begg'd me to her breaſt;
But now ſhe's gone, no home have I,
My weary limbs to reſt.
Then pray before your charity,
An orphan child implores;
I'm cold and hungry, very ſick,
My only home the ſtreets—
Pray before your charity.

The following ſingularly intereſting narrative is copied from a late Greenock paper.

"On Sunday the 23d ult. a girl between 9 and 10 years of age, with her brother who was about 7 years old, returned from the head of Greenlaurel over the Strathlachlan mountains to their parents at Maclachlan Park.—They had not travelled far when a moſt violent ſnow ſtorm, accompanied with thunder and lightning, commenced, and continued but with very ſhort intervals during the two following nights and days. The ſnow in a ſhort time completely covered a path which leades across the mountains, ſo that the children wandered off the common track; and by the cloſe of day the boy was quite overcome by the fury of the ſtorm and the cold, expoſure to which the poor creatures lay down for the night, the girl doing her utmoſt to ſhelter her little brother. At ſun riſe day-light came ſhe rouſed the boy and prevailed on him to proceed. They wandered about in the mountains the whole of Sunday, entirely ignorant where they were, or in what direction they ſhould go, the boy frequently dropping down, exhauſted with hunger and fatigue.—The ſiſter ſays it was with much difficulty ſhe could keep him awake; but that ſhe herſelf did not cloſe her eyes during the three days and two nights they were on the mountains; that ſhe continually wept calling upon God's name. They paſſed Sunday night as the preceding; and were to work on Monday, that neither could not cry out, for the girl once ſaw a grown up brother of her's within a very ſhort diſtance, but ſhe found herſelf quite incapable to get up or call loud enough to be heard.

"On the Monday evening the poor creatures at the laſt gaſp were providentially diſcovered by one of the Strathlachlan people, who, to the number of 160, were the whole day in ſearch of them. The girl had a ham in her charge, of which her ſtarving brother often preſſed her to let him take a bite, but ſhe would not allow him to touch it, making him chew the heather, as ſhe herſelf did. All the way the girl carried a favorite pup about her neck, which ſhe thinks greatly helped to keep her and her brother alive during the nights, as it covered the neck and breaſt of both completely. When urged that the pup muſt have ſlept, the ſaid that she did not close her eyes the whole time, fearing much that the pup would eat the ham; the poor children are perfectly recovered from the hardship they underwent."

A striking example of Mutability and revolutionary abominations.—The apartment in the Pavillion of Flora, now fitted up as a private chapel for the Pope, was in 1792, the private chapel of the late unfortunate Queen of France. In 1793, Barrere, then of the bloody Committee of public safety, now a confidential adviser of Bonaparte, converted it into a bed chamber for his mistress, who represented the Goddess of Reason in the Church of Notre Dame, where the Pope lately crowned Bonaparte; and it was in 1795, the bed chamber of Madame Bonaparte, then the mistress of Barras.

LONDON, April 10.

A paper printed at Lemberg asserts, that a large Russian army is assembling in Volhynia, and that Russia and Sweden have agreed for a subsidy of five millions, to place 80,000 men at the disposal of this country. A great Russian army is to be sent to the Mediterranean. Rumour has swelled the amount to 150,000 men. We believe we may say, with confidence, after all the accounts of unfavourable advices having been received from Petersburg, are unfounded; they are far otherwise. It is said now too, that the politics of the Cabinet of Vienna have undergone a change favourable to this country—it would be surprising, after the events that have recently occurred, if they had not.

April 11.

Last night in the House of Commons Mr. Whitbread followed up the resolutions of Monday, with moving, an address to his Majesty to remove Lord Melville from all places of trust and emolument which he held during the pleasure of the crown.

After some debate, the motion was withdrawn, and the house voted that the resolutions of Monday should be laid before his Majesty, and that the same should be carried up by the whole House; and that it was also agreed that there should be no adjournment until this communication had been made.

Mr. Whitbread then gave notice, that after the holidays he would move, that inſtructions be given to the Attorney General to proſecute Lord Melville and Mr. Trotter, to make them account for their improper intromiſſions, with the public money.

Tueſday Mr. Pitt waited on his Majeſty at Windſor, to communicate the important reſult of the queſtion in the Houſe of Commons, and in conſequence thereof to tender Lord Viſcount Melville's reſignation. It was graciouſly received, and it is imagined that Mr. Pitt, in his preſent extremity, will recommend even Lord Caſtlereagh to the ſituation. Nothing, however, was ſettled laſt night. Mr. York is mentioned as likely to come into office. Mr. Canning yeſterday morning intimated to Mr. Trotter that he could no longer permit him to hold the place of Paymaſter of the Navy. At the ſame time Mr. Trotter had tendered his reſignation.

April 17.

The reſolutions paſſed by the houſe of Commons were preſented to his Majeſty yeſterday by the Speaker, and about thirty members; none of thoſe who, to give greater ſolemnity to the proceeding, had been ſo anxious and eager for their being preſented by the whole houſe, neither Mr. Fox, nor Mr. Windham, nor Mr. Whitbread, nor Mr. Gray, attending. The Speaker left the Houſe of Commons in ſtate a little before 4 o'clock. Upon being introduced to the King, who was ſeated on the throne: he informed his Majeſty that by the command of the Houſe of Commons, he was to preſent to his Majeſty, the reſolutions of that Houſe. He then read them aloud and preſented them to his Majeſty, who returned a moſt gracious anſwer; in which he thanked the Commons for their care and attention to the public intereſt, and expreſſed himſelf to be fully ſenſible of the importance of the reſolutions which they had preſented to him. The Speaker and members then withdrew. The Houſe of Commons had previouſly adjourned for a fortnight.

If the funds roſe on Tueſday in conſequence of the debate on the preceding day, which in the opinion of the ſpeculators juſtified a belief that the oppoſition would immediately come into power, and make overtures of peace to Bonaparte, it was natural to ſuppoſe that they would experience a depreſſion yeſterday, in conſequence of the debate of Wedneſday, which rendered it impoſſible any longer to entertain ſuch a belief. They did experience a depreſſion, which ſome attempted to attribute to the bad news received from the Weſt Indies. No intelligence whatever was received from that quarter, nor from any other part of the world.

It is ſaid that Lord Hawkeſbury is to ſucceed Lord Melville, as Firſt Lord of the Admiralty, and that Lord Harrowby ſucceeds to the Secretaryſhip of the Home Department.

April 17.

An Opinion of the French Plan.

The plan on which Bonaparte now chuſes to conduct the war, is, we think, ſufficiently apparent; and our Government, we truſt, will be prepared to meet the enemy on his new ſyſtem. He will venture out neither with his fleet nor his flotilla in the face of the Britiſh troops, nor in ſmall and detached ſquadrons can do us more eſſential miſchief by annoying us in different quarters, and diſtracting our attention. He has not in ſufficient numbers for any enterprize. He values them only as counters, with which he plays the grand game that is to make him maſter of the world. When he has detached them for a given purpoſe, he neither expects nor cares for their ſafety or their return: all his hopes ſtand upon it, that they may do the greateſt miſchief. With this view, we have not a doubt, Linois was diſpatched to the Eaſt Indies, even before the commencement of the war, but in the expectations of it. Upon the ſame principles the Rochefort ſquadron directed its courſe to the Weſt Indies. Bonaparte has no expectation of making any conqueſts there which he can retain; enough is done if he can diſtreſs our commerce, and arm the Blacks againſt us. In purſuance of the ſame policy, he will probably ſend a reinforcement to the Eaſt Indies; he will endeavour to land a force in Egypt; he will then make an attempt, or at leaſt a diverſion, in Ireland; and when we are wearied out with this varied and active warfare, the country drained of its regular troops, and deprived, perhaps, in part of its proteCting fleets, then the Boulogne flotilla (which has never been diminiſhed or diſbanded, but is increaſing every day) will ſeize a favourable opportunity of putting to ſea, and the grand attempt will be made. Such appear to us to be the preſent ſyſtem and projects of our inveterate enemy. In the mean time, we truſt that the nation and the volunteer force in particular, will not relax in their vigilance and activity. It is poſſible, that our laſt principal dependence for the defence of the country may be on the volunteers. We truſt they will remember the magnitude and importance of the cauſe they have undertaken, and embrace the opportunity which a favorable ſeaſon will afford, of becoming as perfect maſters as poſſible, of that diſcipline on which their own ſafety and that of the country will depend.

April 18.

It is reported by thoſe who pretend to be in the confidence of Miniſters, that the diſpatches which were received from St. Peterſburgh laſt Monday, contain the moſt ſatisfactory aſſurances of the complete failure of the various artifices employed by the French Government to detach the Emperor Alexander from the intereſts of this country. The principal articles of a treaty of alliance between his Majeſty and that Sovereign are ſaid to be already agreed upon; and on the ſame authority we are aſſured, that only a few points of detail remain to be adjuſted previous to a formal communication being made on this important ſubject to both houſes of Parliament. After repeated diſappointments which have been experienced, relative to the co operation of Ruſſia, the public cannot place much confidence in the promiſes made to them upon this occaſion.

April 22.

The expedition ſailed on the 20th inſt. from Portſmouth, under convoy of the Queen and the Dragon men of war.

Diſpatches were yeſterday received from Admiral Lord Gardner off Breſt, which ſtate, that the enemy had made ſome movements that indicated an intention of venturing to ſea the firſt favourable opportunity.

At Ferrol, a ſimilar diſpoſition appears to be manifeſted by the French and Spaniſh ſquadrons. The following intelligence is contained in a letter from an officer on board his Majeſty's ſhip Indefatigable, dated off Ferrol, April 21:

"Every opportunity that occurs, we make it our buſineſs to ſail in and off the harbour's mouth of Ferrol, to reconnoitre the French and Spaniſh ſquadrons lying there.—They conſiſt of ſix ſail of the line, two frigates, two ſloops and one brig, Spaniſh; and eight ſail of the line, French. At Corunna, there is one French frigate, making altogether 15 ſail of the line, 3 frigates, two ſloops and one brig.

"The French are already manned, and have a great number of troops on board, and are expected to ſail hourly. The Spaniards are not ſufficiently manned as yet.

"Yeſterday we boarded an American ſhip that had juſt come out from Ferrol, and the captain aſſured us that the French would in the courſe of a few days put to ſea, and that they were ſuppoſed to be deſtined for the Weſt Indies."

A cartel is arrived from Morlaix with the firſt priſoner from France that has been regularly exchanged ſince the commencement of the war. We ſuppoſe that Capt. Puget will now be ſuffered to proceed to Paris.

Reports are in circulation that Lucien Bonaparte had been arreſted in Italy by the Emperor's order; and ſome ſaid he was actually in the Temple at Paris.

The death of the late French Admiral Bruix, is ſaid to be occaſioned by grief for a blow in the face, given him by the Emperor at a private audience in the palace of the Thuilleries.

A reſpectable morning paper has publiſhed the following intelligence, which was communicated to the editor in a letter written by a gentleman in Yarmouth, and dated the 12th inſtant:

"Jean de St. Fauſt, who commanded and was taken on board L'Hounear ſchooner, by his Majeſty's ſloop of war Scorpion, Carteret, relates the following, which he declared to have taken place a few evenings prior to his quitting Paris.

"Bonaparte had commanded a play at the Theatre Francais, and in the uſual ſtyle of Sovereigns, he appeared there with a brilliant retinue, and a very numerous guard. The houſe overflowed in every part. He was ſeated in his box, and the curtain about to riſe, when an orange, apparently artificial, was thrown upon the ſtage; ſeveral voices exclaimed "Ouvrez Orange!" (open the Orange!) The cry was repeated and re-echoed in every part of the houſe.

"A principal actor came forward, and in compliance with the univerſal wiſh opened the orange, wherein he found a paper containing a 20 livre piece of gold coin. Several voices again exclaimed, "Liſez le papier! Liſez le papier!" Read the paper, read the paper. It was again repeated with like earneſtneſs and enthuſiaſm as before, the houſe reſounded in many parts with the tumultuous outcry. But before he complied, the cautious actor looked towards the Imperial Box, when Bonaparte fancying it might be ſome adulatory compliment to himſelf, he nodded aſſent. The houſe was ſilent as the grave; when the actor read aloud the following words:—

"Tetter le Corſe, prenez votre Louis!"

"Renounce the Corſican, and reſtore your"

"Louis."

"The rapturous burſt of applauſe which enſued from every part of the houſe on thoſe words being read, was not to be deſcribed—it appeared to rend the houſe. Bonaparte heard it as his knell, and quitting the Theatre, returned to his palace in the utmoſt confuſion and diſmay."

NEW YORK, June 1.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, dated April 24.

"Believing the brig Acorn, bound to Boſton, to be ſtill at Breſtem, I loſe no time in informing you that an official advice was received laſt night from Sir John Orde, that the Toulon fleet, (24 ſail, of which 18 of the line) had got into Cadiz—whether with the intention of making any ſtay, or coming out immediately in junction with the Spaniſh ſhips, is not known. When they firſt appeared, Sir John Orde's fleet were, it is ſaid, at an anchor, and the enemy to windward, but they did not offer to attack him, from which it is inferred their object is important. Sir John Orde's fleet conſiſted of 5 ſail of the line—they are now off Cape Eſpechiel. The Halcyon, brig of war, late this morning with the advice to England, the Waſhingham Packet to Ireland, Farrol and Breſt ſtations. If Nelſon comes down the Straits ſpeedily, the enemy may yet be overtaken, and beat; if not, their eſcape is almoſt certain. By advices from England, of the 2d inſt. it ſeems that the Breſt fleet were in Camaret Bay, watched by Sir Charles Cotton. Should they elude his vigilance and form a junction, we may expect great events in the ſummer. General Junot, the new French Miniſter, is arrived here."

June 3.

Diſpatches (ſays a Barbadoes paper of May 4) were yeſterday received here, brought by his Majeſty's ſhip Mercury, Capt. Bouverie, from Vice-Admiral Sir John Orde, dated his Majeſty's ſhip Glory, at ſea, April 20, 1805, communicating the important intelligence of the ſudden appearance off Cadiz of the Toulon fleet, conſiſting of from 20 to 24 ſail, eleven or twelve of them of the line, and the reſt heavy frigates.—This fleet, it appears, was, on the evening of the 9th, cloſe off Cadiz harbour, where one French ſhip of the line, and ſix or ſeven Spaniſh, were then ready to join them, and three or four more in about 24 hours. Whether any troops were on board theſe ſhips was not known, nor had the deſtination of this force, after its junction, been aſcertained; but it was judged to be the weſtward, and it was reported that the Spaniſh ſhips were bound to the Havanna.

The Mercury after delivering her diſpatches, immediately proceeded to the weſtward.

By a neutral this morning, from St. Bartholomews, we learn, that accounts had been recently received there from St. Domingo, via Porto Rico, ſtating that Maſſieus ſtill remained there, and was then actually blockaded by Rear Admiral Cockrane.

Capt. Henry, from Malaga, on the 13th of April, in lat. 35 31, long. 10 19, fell in with an Engliſh fleet of merchantmen of 33 ſail, from Gibraltar bound to England. Captain H. was boarded by a cutter brig, who informed him that the French fleet had paſſed Gibraltar and had got out of the Mediterranean, and that the Britiſh were in purſuit of them. A frigate had been diſpatched to the merchantmen to give them information of the French fleet being out.

Captain Brown, of the ſhip Juliana, from Cadiz, communicates the following intelligence for publication:

"At the time of my departure from Cadiz, the Eagle, a French 74, two French corvettes and two Spaniſh frigates, were ready for ſea; and eight ſail of the line were fitting out with all expedition. Troops were embarking daily, and a great quantity of ordnance, &c. had been taken in on board each ſhip. The general report was that they were deſtined for Spaniſh America, to garriſon the ſame of demarcation between the territories of Spain and the United States. This report was confirmed to me by one of the officers belonging to the fleet; who added that the French and Spaniſh ſhips had made a conſiderable interchange of officers.

"The uniform of the troops embarking is blue faced with red; a round hat turned up on one ſide, with a leather in it; the officers wear a ſuperfluity of gold lace.

"General Moreau was at Cadiz. He waits the arrival of his ſon from Paris, and intended to have come to N York in the Juliana. It is ſaid he has received orders to quit Spain immediately; and this ſudden and unlooked for intelligence had a very unfavourable effect on the health of his lady, who was learning the Spaniſh language with the expectation of being permitted to remain there.

"Gibraltar is tranquil, and has received a reinforcement of two thouſand troops from England. The Spaniards keep an army before it, but have attempted nothing.

"The Britiſh fleet, conſiſting of five ſhips of the line, a frigate, a brig, and a cutter, were conſtantly cruizing off the harbour, often cloſe in with its mouth, and ſometimes nearly within gun ſhot of the batteries.

"The men of war in the port of Cadiz conſiſted of St. Trinidad, of 130 guns; St. Anna, 112; Argonaut and St. Rafael, 80 each; Terrible, Glorious, Bahama, Fame, 74 each; America, Eſpagne, San. Leandro, 64; Curtille, 60; Madalena frigate, 34; and two other frigates, names unknown to me."

June 4.

Capt. Folger, arrived at Boſton, 35 days from Liſbon, brings intelligence of the eſcape of the French fleet out of Toulon. This news is confirmed by Capt. Trefethen, arrived at Portſmouth, who paſſed the Toulon fleet, on the 8th of April, 10 leagues eaſt of Gibraltar, and again on the 9th in the Gut, then ſteering weſt.

Admiral Cochrane's ſquadron arrived at Jamaica, April 20.

June 6.

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable merchant in Norfolk, to his friend in Philadelphia, dated May 28.

"I have a veſſel this moment from Dominique in 16 days. The captain ſays a frigate had arrived in 13 days from Gibraltar, with advice of the Toulon fleet having got into Cadiz.

"Other accounts mention that there were 35 ſail of the line in the different ports of Spain, in complete preparation.

"We lament the neceſſity of obſerving, that a moſt malignant fever prevailed in the interior cities of Spain, and that many perſons had died with the black vomit."

June 7.

When Captain Edwards left Madeira intelligence had been received there of the arrival of the Toulon fleet at Cadiz. They ſlipped by under cover of the night, notwithſtanding the blockading ſquadron, under Lord Nelſon lay off the port at the time. Several Britiſh ſhips of war were daily making their appearance at Madeira; and hoſtilities, it was expected, were on the eve of breaking out between Portugal and Great Britain.

A mechanic at Bombay has diſcovered a proceſs by which to extract iſinglaſs from the fine ſcale and ſhavings made in building a veſſel, in ſuch quantity as was ſufficient for her outfit.

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable gentleman reſiding at Kaſkaſkias, to his correſpondent in Marietta (Ohio) dated April 7.

"The Oſage Indians are likely to be cut up root and branch, by a confederacy of almoſt all the Indian nations of the weſt: already blood has been ſpilt; and large bodies of men are in motion to attack their country. Mr. Van Bibber with whom you are acquainted, has juſt returned from the Miſſouri.—He ſtates to me, that about ten days ſince, a body of about four hundred of the Sacks, croſſed at a French village, at which place he was; about fifty miles from the mouth of the river on their march to attack the Oſages.

Original Anecdote.—An honest Hibernian, who is an itinerant hawker (in New York) in what is called Ground Coffee, hawing the other day drank too much grog, came down on his beam-ends, and spilt the contents of his basket. His employer happening to catch him in this unfortunate situation, began to threaten him, saying, "You drunken rascal! you shall pay for every pound of Coffee you lose this hour—that's what you shall."—To be sure I and I will pay you," (lays honest Pat, "but the devil a bit of Coffee have I spilt; for pray, my dear! what else is this dainty rubbish, besides ground chesnut and rats dung?"

A NARRATIVE

OF THE

DREADFUL LOSS OF THE EARL OF ABERGAVENNY,

INDIAMAN,

Wrecked February 5, 1805, on the SHINGLES OFF THE ISLE OF PORTLAND.

"Again the plunges! hark! a second shock, Tears her strong bottom on the marble rock!"
FALCONER.

On Friday, February 1, 1805, sailed from Portsmouth, the Earl of Abergavenny East Indiaman, commanded by Capt. Wordsworth.

The ship was of the largest tonnage, being above 1500 tons burthen, and was destined to Bengal and China, having in company the Wexford, Royal George, Henry Addington and Bombay Castle, under convoy of His Majesty's Frigate Weymouth.

She was laden to Bengal with a most valuable cargo, having on board, on the Company's account, the value of 100,000l. and 150,000 ounces of silver on private account; besides goods to the value of half a million: the is supposed to be the richest ship that has sailed for India these several years past.

This ill fated ship was loaded with passengers, to an unprecedented degree; above forty sat down every day to dinner at the Captain's table; and above fourteen at the third mate's.

The weather proving unfavorable, and the wind ſtrong againſt them, induced them to run into Portland Roads. The Weymouth frigate ſeparated the very firſt night. The Wexford, Capt. Clarke, being the oldeſt Captain, and of courſe Commodore, made the ſignal for the ſhips that had pilots on board to run for port.

On Thurſday the 7th of February, at a quarter paſt ſix o'clock in the morning, Mr. Stuart, the Purſer of the Abergavenny, arrived at the Eaſt India Houſe with the melancholy intelligence of the loſs of the ſhip, by ſtriking on the Shingles, a dangerous ridge of Rocks, off the Bill of Portland. Intelligence was immediately given to Mr. Ramſey, the Secretary, who reſides at the India Houſe; and before ten o'clock all the avenues leading to the Secretary's office, were completely blocked up with enquirers on this unfortunate circumſtance. Mr. Stuart, the Purſer, was the firſt perſon who arrived at the Houſe, from the ſhip; after him, Mr. Taylor, a Cadet; and Mr. Gilpin, the fourth officer, from whom the following particulars of the melancholy loſs of this veſſel, and the principal part of her crew and paſſengers, were communicated to the Court of Directors:

The Abergavenny reached the entrance of Portland Roads, on the coaſt of Dorſetſhire, on Tueſday about noon, but not being at that time ſupplied with a pilot, ſhe waited a few hours till ſhe had got one.

About three P. M. having obtained one, ſhe bore up for Portland Roads. The weather had by this time, become tolerably moderate, and notwithſtanding a ſtrong ebb tide was ſetting in, no diſaſter was at this time apprehended. In a few minutes, however, the ſhip's company learned their dangerous ſituation, the ſhip having ſtruck on the Shingles, off the Bill of Portland, about two miles from the ſhore. Captain Wordſworth, and his Officers, were notwithſtanding, of opinion, that the ſhip might be got off without ſuſtaining any material damage, and accordingly no ſignal guns of diſtreſs were ordered to be fired.

Whilſt the ſhip was on the rock, the bell, by the motion kept tolling, as if ominous of their approaching fate, 'till the Captain ordered the clapper to be laſhed. What a dreadful moment muſt this have been to the unfortunate ſufferers; to have an awful eternity in view, and the bell, as though by inſtinct, tolling their departing knell.

About five P. M. things bore a ſtill more unfavorable aſpect; the carpenter announced that a conſiderable leak was diſcovered near the bottom of the chain pumps, which it was not in his power to ſtop, the water guſhed in ſo faſt. The pumps being all in readineſs were let a going, and a part of the crew endeavoured to bail her at the fore hatch, but all their attempts to keep the water under were in vain.

At ſix P. M. the inevitable loſs of the ſhip became more and more apparent; other leaks were diſcovered, the water had increaſed to a gale, and the ſevere beating of the veſſel upon the rocks, threatened immediate deſtruction. Captain Wordſworth and Officers were far from ſhrinking from the perils around them. They gave their orders with the greateſt firmneſs and coolneſs, and by their proper conduct, were enabled to preſerve ſubordination; which at ſuch a time, is not eaſily preſerved, as it too often happens that the crew, thinking that its all over with them, (to uſe their own phraſe,) generally attack the ſpirit room, where they intoxicate themſelves, and are in that miſerable ſtate, launched into eternity.

As the night advanced, the ſituation of all on board became ſhocking terrible; Miſs Evans, and ſeveral other paſſengers, entreated to be left on ſhore; but this was impoſſible. It was as much as all the ſhip's company could do to keep the veſſel afloat. In order to tempt the men to exert their utmoſt powers at the pumps, the officers ſtood by cheering them, and encouraging them, by giving them allowances of liquor.

At ſeven P. M. the ſhip's company being almoſt exhauſted, it was thought adviſeable to fire freſh ſignal guns, in hopes of obtaining boats from the ſhore, to ſave as many of the people on board as poſſible.

From that time till eight o'clock, the ſituation of all on board was dreadful in the extreme; it was impoſſible to ſave the ſhip, which was eventually ſinking faſt, and ſettling in the water. At eight P. M. the guns of diſtreſs were fired inceſſantly, for boats to come off to ſave the crew, paſſengers, and King's and Company's troops on board. The Purſer Mr. Stuart, was diſpatches in one of the ſhip's boats, with the papers and diſpatched in order to ſave them. The third Mate, Mr. Wordſworth, couſin of the Captain's accompanied the Purſer, with about ſix ſeamen. Thus were thoſe eight men ſnatched from the jaws of death, which were gaping to ſwallow them, and into which ſo many of their miſerable ſhipmates were ſoon after precipitated.

One boat came off from the ſhore, which took on board,

Mr. Evens, ſen. merchant, and his daughter.
Miſs Jackſon,
Mr. Routledge, and
Mr. Taylor, a Cadet, all paſſengers.
Mrs. Blair, companion to Miſs Evands, choſe, in ſpite of all intreaties, to remain on board; indeed, there were many who would have made the ſame choice, ſo little hope was there of the boat contending ſucceſsfully againſt the high ſea in ſo dark a night.

It was now about nine o'clock, and ſeveral boats were heard at a ſhort diſtance from the ſhip, but they rendered no aſſiſtance to the diſtreſſed people on board.

About ten P. M. the water had got above the orlop-deck, in ſpite of the moſt unremitting endeavours of the officers and crew, who behaved in the moſt cool, exemplary manner. In the mean time all on board were anxiouſly looking out for the boats from the ſhore.

As the ſhip was going down, the firſt Mate told the Captain ſhe would ſink in a moment—The Captain (looking in his face; and with a look, in which was ſtrongly depicted a true ſenſe of their dreadful ſituation) replied, "it cannot be prevented—God's will be done."—From that inſtant the Captain was motionleſs.

The dreadful criſis was now faſt approaching, every one on board ſeemed aſſured of his fate. At ten o'clock the ſhip was nearly full of water, and as ſhe began gradually to ſink, confuſion commenced on board. A number of ſailors begged ardently for more liquor, and when it was refuſed, they attacked the ſpirit-room, but were repulſed by their officers, who never once loſt ſight of their character, and continued to conduct themſelves with the utmoſt fortitude. One of them was ſtationed at the ſpirit room door, with a brace of piſtols, to guard againſt ſurpriſe, and there remained, even whilſt the ſhip was ſinking. A ſailor was extremely ſolicitous to obtain ſome liquor from him, ſaying, "It will be all as one an hour hence."—"Be that as it may," replied the officer, "let us die like men."

It is a circumſtance hardly to be accounted for, that in the midſt of all this diſtreſs, the ſhip's boats were never attempted to be hoiſted out.

When the paſſengers and crew were acquainted with their ſituation, they made ſeveral efforts to ſave their lives; ſome laid hold of pieces of the wreck, and committed themſelves to the mercy of the waves. A Mr. Forbes ſtripped off his cloathes, and being an excellent ſwimmer, plunged into the ſea, and was one of thoſe who was picked up by a boat from the ſhore.

A great number ran up the ſhrouds, to the tops of the maſts, and on the yards; and ſeveral got into the long boat, which floated when the ſhip went down, by which means they were reſcued from a watery grave.

And now, inſtruct on by deſtiny ſevere,
With horror fraught, the dreadful ſcene drew near!
The ſhip hangs hovering on the verge of death,
Hell yawns, rocks riſe, and breakers roar beneath!—
In vain ſtar! the ſacred theatre of your
Would arm the mind with philoſophic love;
In vain they'd reach us, at the laſt breath,
To ſmile ſtrong, amid the pangs of death.

At about eleven o'clock, a heavy ſea gave the veſſel a ſudden ſhock, and in inſtant the ſunk to the bottom in twelve fathoms water.

As the ſhip ſunk, Capt. Wordſworth was ſeen clinging to ſome ropes, and many who had climbed the ſhrouds, deſcended to ſave him, but to no effect. In this exertion Mr. Gilpin, the fourth Mate, was foremoſt; and thoſe who have arrived in town from the wreck, unanimouſly agree, that this gentleman's name deſerves to be written in letters of gold for his endeavours on this occaſion.

Thus in one moment were precipitated into the dreadful abyſs of death, about 300 unhappy victims, who, but a few hours before, perhaps, were

"Counting, on whole years of pleaſure here!"

When the ſhip ſunk, ſhe did not go down in the uſual way that veſſels do, by falling firſt upon her beam ends; this deviation was ſuppoſed to have ariſen from her being laden with treaſure and porcelain ware.

Many of thoſe unfortunate perſons who had ran up the ſhrouds for ſafety, were unable to ſuſtain the motion of the veſſel in going down, and met an untimely fate with their unfortunate companions below. Between eighty & ninety perſons, however, were ſtill able to maintain their ſituation, and were ultimately ſaved.

Their ſituation however was frightful beyond all poſſible deſcription; the ſwell of the ſea was dreadful, and every moment they perceived ſome friend floating around them for a while, then ſinking into the abyſs to riſe no more.

"Down on the vale of death, with diſmal cries,
The fated victims thundering roll their eyes,
In wild deſpair."

For ſome time after the veſſel had gone down, ſhe kept gradually ſinking deeper in the ſand, inſomuch, that ſeveral perſons were under the neceſſity of climbing higher up the maſts. The main maſt was eſtimated to be above the water about twenty-five feet, and the perſons aloft could plainly diſcover the end of the bowſprit.

Several boats were heard paddling about the wreck, at half paſt eleven o'clock, and although they were hailed by the unfortunate perſons on the ſhrouds and maſts they could not be prevailed upon to take them on ſhore. The reaſon which was afterwards aſſigned for this apparently inhuman conduct, was, that they were fearful that every perſon on board, being eager to ſave himſelf, the whole would attempt to jump in, overload the boats, and ſink them.

About twelve o'clock, a ſloop that had been attracted to the ſpot by the ſignal guns, came to an anchor cloſe to the ſhip, ſent a boat, and took off all the perſons we have mentioned as being above water, about twenty at a time and conveyed them to Weymouth, which was at about two miles diſtance.

So far were the people from crowding improperly into the boat, that they got off the ſhrouds one by one, and then only as they were called by the officers who were with them. When it was ſuppoſed that every perſon was about to depart for the laſt time, a perſon was obſerved nearly at the top of a maſt in the ſhrouds; he was called to, but did not anſwer; one of the officers, much to his credit, returned, and their found a man in an inanimate ſtate, anſing from the piercing cold weather. The officer brought him down on his back into the boat; The perſon proved to be Serjeant Hart. When they reached the ſhore every poſſible care was taken of him, but he is ſince dead.

The ſloop that came from the ſhore, after having taken moſt of the people from the tops, was ſcudding with all the ſail ſhe could carry for the ſhore, when Mr. BAGGOT, the chief officer of the Earl of Abergavenny, was diſcovered cloſe aſtern of the ſhip. The ſloop immediately lay to for him; but this noble-ſpirited young man, although he had a rope in his hand, quitted his hold, and, diſregarding his own ſafety, plunged after Mrs. Blair, an unfortunate fellow paſſenger, whom he perceived floating at ſome diſtance. He ſucceeded in coming up with her, and ſuſtained her above water, while he ſwam towards the ſloop; but juſt as he was on the point of reaching it, a terrible ſwell came on, and his ſtrength being totally exhauſted, he ſunk and never roſe again.

The unfortunate Mrs. Blair ſunk after him, and this generous and gallant youth thus periſhed in vain.

Not a ſingle article of property, which we have mentioned before as being of immenſe value, was ſaved, except the diſpatches and ſome valuable prints, which had been ſent out to General Lake.

The boats that took the people from the tops carried them to Weymouth, where they received the moſt liberal and humane attention from Mr. Welton, a reſpectable Merchant of that town. The Eaſt India Company will not fail to reward him as he deſerves.

When the Abergavenny left Portſmouth, the firſt and third mates were on ſhore, and paid forty guineas for a boat, to enable them to overtake this ill fated ſhip.

The exertions of Cornet Burgoyne and the officers, were moſt exemplarily gallant; they did all that human nature could do, in ſo trying a moment, at the hazard of their lives.

Cornet Burgoyne, of the 8th Dragoons, has, by loſing his baggage, ſuſtained a loſs of fifteen hundred pounds value.

At eleven o'clock Thurſday morning, he appeared in the paſſages of the India Houſe. He was inſtantly ſurrounded by the anxious friends of the ſeveral perſons who had embarked in the Earl of Abergavenny. We are happy to ſtate, that this Gentleman, though ſo ſeverely afflicted from this misfortune as to loſe the uſe of his right leg, was yet able to give every ſatisfaction required to the friends of the parties; and, from him and the other Officers who arrived at the India Houſe, the Secretary was enabled to iſſue the following liſt of perſons ſaved from the wreck:—

27 Officers.
69 Seamen.
Drowned.
27 Paſſengers.

The Captain and 3 other Officers Drowned, in all 300, including crew, ſoldiers, Chinamen, and four Portugueſe.

The crew conſiſted of 160 men, and there were between 50 & 60 paſſengers; the reſt were recruits for his Majeſty's and the Country's ſervice; about 30 Chinamen were on board.

The Greyhound and Rover cutters have been engaged to prevent the wreck from being plundered. Great hopes are entertained that part of the cargo may yet be ſaved, and one of the Company's Maſter Attendants left town on Friday, the 8th of February, to aſcertain whether any efforts to that purpoſe would be attended with ſucceſs.

Her jib boom is nearly all above water; her poop ſuppoſed to be about twenty feet under water; but, by the obſervations which have been made, it is aſcertained, that her decks had not been blown up, and that ſhe remained exactly as ſhe ſank. Several bodies have been floated aſhore at Weymouth.

It was ſuppoſed that the ſhip's bottom had not been beaten in ſo fully under the pumps, and that, therefore, they could not work with effect. During the two hours the paſſengers remained in the tops, the ſhip had gradually ſunk ſeven feet, from whence it was ſuppoſed, that ſhe had ſtruck upon a mud bank.

It is an extraordinary fact, that Capt. Wordſworth from a dreadful preſentiment, which often is the forerunner of ſome great misfortune, felt ſuch an unaccountable depreſſion of ſpirits, that he could not be perſuaded to go through the uſual ceremony of taking leave of the Court of Directors on the day appointed, and it was not until the Wedneſday following, which was ſpecially fixed for that purpoſe, that he yielded to the wiſhes of his friends, and reluctantly attended the Court. He had been two voyages as Commander, and expected that his third voyage would make his fortune. He has left a wife and large family to deplore his loſs.

He was a man of remarkable mild manners; and of ſo temperate a diſpoſition, that he was known among his ſhip-mates, by the appellation of the "Philoſopher." It may be juſtly ſaid of him, that

The' train'd in boiſterous elements, his mind
Was yet by fate humanity refined.
Each joy of wedlock love at home he knew;
Abroad confeſſes the father of his crew:
Brave, liberal, juſt! the calm domeſtic ſcene
Had o'er his temper breath'd a gay ſerene.

LONDON PARAGRAPHS.

The wreck of the Earl of Abergavenny Eaſt Indiaman, has been ſurveyed, and the intended attempt to weigh her, will, it is believed, prove ſucceſsful. The following are ſome additional particulars relative to the loſs of the veſſel:—

"The ſpar deck of the ſhip is come up, and with it many light goods, and trunks containing money and papers of importance, which have been fortunately ſecured for the owners.

"Capt. Forbes and three privates, taken from the wreck in a benumbed ſtate, and put into the hold of a ſmall veſſel, with as many as ſhe could ſtow, to be conveyed to Weymouth, died in gaining the ſhore, though at a diſtance of no more then two miles; all of whom, together with Serjeant Hunt, who died the ſame day, were buried with military honors, attended by their ſurviving companions, and hundreds of ſpectators. Another Serjeant, who ſurvived, had his arm ſhockingly lacerated by his wife, who being with him in the ſhip's rigging, in the laſt agonies of life, bit her huſband in the arm, and when ſhe fell, never more to riſe, tore with her mouth, and bore away part of it.

"————Webber, (a Somerſhire lad) the captain's carpenter or joiner, had a miraculous eſcape; he was waſhed overboard when the ſhip went down, and at the ſame time with the ſhip's launch, having in it a cow and ſome ſheep; after ſwimming ſome time, on ſeeing this boat, he fortunately gained it, and got therein among the cattle, from whence he was taken ſome time afterwards."

FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

War in India.—It appears by the papers laid before the Houſe of Commons, reſpecting the preſent war in India, that Holkar cruelly murdered captain Vickers, Todd, and Ryan, three Britiſh officers in his employ, merely becauſe they had expreſſed a determination to return to the Britiſh ſervice. The heads of theſe unfortunate gentlemen were ſevered from their bodies, and expoſed on pikes, and the bodies forbidden to be buried. He pretended that they had carried on a traiterous correſpondence with Gen. Lake, which the latter expreſſly denies.

Theſe papers alſo develope the cauſes of the war now exiſting in India; which appears according to theſe papers to be as follows:—

Jeſhwunt Rao Holkar, with whom we are now at war, is not the legitimate heir of the Holkar family; but has, by violence and uſurpation, poſſeſſed himſelf of the dominions of the lawful repreſentative of the family, Cathee Rao Holkar. Jeſhwunt, however, has made himſelf one of the moſt powerful Princes in India, and has raiſed an army which is far greater than all the dominions that ever belonged to the Holkar family would be able to maintain. The only reſource upon which he calculated for ſupporting ſuch an army, was the plunder of the ſurrounding nations, and the tribute that he could extort from them.—He had already driven his lawful ſovereign, the Peſhwa, from his capital of Poonah, when the Britiſh Government found themſelves obliged to interfere and protect the Peſhwa.—Holkar then fell back for a while, and appeared neutral during the war between the Company and Scindiah. In the courſe of that war, however, the Britiſh arms met with the moſt brilliant ſucceſs; and many of the native powers, whom Holkar had been in the habit of plundering, put themſelves under the protection and alliance of the company. The Governor General then owed thoſe nations the protection of the Engliſh power. He ſignified to Holkar, over and over again that although the influence he had juſtly obtained with the Peishwa would entitle him to demand the restoration of Cashee Rio Holkar to his territories, yet he did not wish to interfere in this point, or to dispute his title to the territories of which he was now master; but that he would not suffer the allies of the Company to be invaded or plundered, and that the continuance of peace depended upon his confining himself to his own dominions; and as the war has been his own choice, he must take the consequences of it.

This plain flatement sufficiently proves the justice and necessity of the war in India. No one can contend, that the India Company ought to permit Holkar to plunder their Allies, merely for the purpose of keeping an immense army to threaten their possessions. Had Holkar accepted their offer and confined himself to his own frontiers, he would have been less formidable, but he would have been much more secure. As he has chosen war, the Government of India has expressed their intention of reducing him to his original insignificance, and restoring to their possessions those Princes of his family, which he has driven out.

We shall conclude these remarks with one general observation, which applies to most of our late wars in India. So far from the British Government interfering against the legitimate Sovereigns of that country, it has constantly supported and protected them. Our quarrel with the Mahrattas, terminated in the restoration of our ally the Peishwa, to his lawful rank and dignity, as the acknowledged head of the Mahratta nation.

Our quarrel with Scindiah had a still more brilliant termination. We rescued from the severest oppression, and from imprisonment the antient family of the Moguls, and seated them again on the throne of Delhi. In so doing we have discharged the debt of gratitude due to that Family. When the Mogul family were in their prosperity, and masters of India, they gave our East India Company the Soubawhip of Bengal; and when, by the course of events they had fallen to the lowest state of adversity, the East India Company restored them again to the throne of their ancestors and nobly repaid all former obligations.

From a London paper.

Among the many executions which take place in England, few inſtances, perhaps, occur, in which the awful depravity of human nature is ſo ſtrikingly exhibited, as in the following detailed in a London print of the 2d March:

Execution of Hardened villains!—Yeſterday morning, Richard Haywood, for cutting and maiming Benjamin Chriſtry; and John Tennant, for a burglary in the houſe of Robert Shawe, Eſq. were executed before the debtor's door in the Old Bailey, purſuant to their ſentence.

The former of theſe miſerable men, ever ſince ſentence of death was paſſed upon him, had behaved with unexampled depravity. He never attempted to deny his guilt, but, on the contrary, ſeemed to exult in it, and often regretted that he had not done a deed more deſerving of death. It was his conſtant boaſt that he would, on the ſcaffold, ſurpaſs the notorious Aberſhaw, in evincing his contempt of death; and he conſtantly endeavored to inſtill into the mind of his fellow-ſufferer, thoſe diabolical principles which he had embibed himſelf.

On Thurſday night, when Allport, the undertaker, was about to remove him to his cell, he drew out a claſp knife, which he had concealed about him, and with horrid imprecations threatened his life. The Keepers came gaved with him until he had put away the knife, when he feized and chained him to the wall, not allowing him a larger range than three inches. This feverity produced no effect; he was continually imprecating curfes on all thofe who had been the means of bringing him to punifhment. The chaplain's offer to aflift him in his devotions in the cell, he rejected with fcorn.

At an early hour yefterday morning, both the prifoners being allowed to walk in the prefs yard, Dr. Ford again importuned Haywood to pray, when the mifguided wretch called him by every opprobrious name he could think of. He never once feemed to contemplate his fituation, but employed the time he was permitted to ftay in the yard, in exhorting his companion to game. Tennant betrayed no violence, notwithftanding it was evident that he was greatly influenced by the advice of his companion, and apparently his thoughts were altogether occupied by religion.

At the fuggeftion of Mr. Holdfworth the city Marihal, he made fome alteration on his drefs. This officer finding his advice attended to in this inftance, entreated him no longer to follow the evil counfel of Haywood, but to employ the moments he had left in a chriftian-like manner. Tennant fhed tears, fhewed fome contrition, and fuffered the Ordinary to attend him to the fcaffold. When the time for quitting the court yard arrived, Haywood called to a friend who was prefent to deliver him a bundle he had in his hand, out of which he took an old jacket, and a pair of old fhoes, and put them on. "Thus," fays he, "will I defeat the prophecies of my enemies: — They often faid I would die in my coat and fhoes, and I am determined to die in neither." Being told it was time to be conducted to the fcaffold, he cheerfully attended the fummons, having firft eat fome bread and cheefe, and drank a quantity of coffee. Before however, he departed, he called out in a loud voice to the perfons, who were looking through the windows at him, "farewell, my lads, I am juft a going off, God blefs you." "We are forry for you," replied the perfons. "I want none of your pity," rejoined Haywood, "keep your fniveling till it be your own turn."—Immediately on his arrival upon the fcaffold, he gave the mob three cheers, introducing each with a "Hip ho!"—Whilft the cord was preparing he continued hallooing to the mob. It was found neceffary, before the ufual time, to put the cap over his eyes, befides a filk handkerchief by the way of bandage, that his attention might be entirely abftracted from the fpectators.

Dr. Ford continued in prayer with Tennant, who liftened to him, but did not join with him. Juft as the noofe was placed round his neck, he emphatically exclaimed, "Lord have mercy upon me." Haywood muttered fome words in reply, which were not perfectly underftood, but were fuppofed to be faid to Tennant by way of reproach. He then gave another halloo, and kicked off his fhoes among the fpectators, many of whom were deeply affected at the obduracy of his conduct. Soon afterwards the platform dropped.

LONDON PARAGRAPHS.

A new life boat, on a very fuperior conftruction, was launched lately at Dover, while the wind and the furf were fo high that no other boat could venture out to fea. At certain times fhe appeared completely loft between the billows which immediately after fhe mounted with furprifing agility. In the midft of the ftorm, her fails were managed with the greateft eafe. After going out a confiderable diftance, fhe returned to fhore, and ran upon the beach without fuftaining the fmalleft injury. She is called a Crab.

[London Paper.]

At Lord Somerville's late fhew of cattle, &c. Mr. Tubbs exhibited two fine large white pigs of his breed. A peculiarity in thefe pigs is highly deferving of notice—it is Mr. Tubb's practice to fhave off with a razor, or fharp knife, the griftle on the top of the nofes of his pigs when they are young, which foon heals over; but the pig is thereby rendered incapable of that rooting or turning up of the ground, which farmers find fo deftructive to their fward land.

Married on Sunday fen'night, at a country church, near Barnfley, Mr. THOMAS LISTER, to ANN MCKON. The ceremony took place during devine fervice, in confequence of a gentleman beckoning to the clergyman with his finger, which was returned by the fame motion; he then left the pulpit and his fermon unfinifhed, to the great furprife of the congregation. The clergyman was informed in a low tone, that there was a couple wanted to be married; who replied it could not be done that day, they muft come to-morrow; "Then, fir," faid the gentleman, "they fhall go to Bradford;" at length however the parties were married, and the clergyman returned to conclude his fermon, and made a long apology to his hearers for detaining them fo long.

At Halefworth, laft week, a ludicrous accident occurred. At a grocer's auction, which was held in a fhop over a cellar filled with cafks of oil, the floor fuddenly fell in, and precipitated above fifty perfons to the bottom, many of whom fell perpendicularly into the cafks, while others, by the accidental difhicing of the cocks, were completely foaked by the oleaginous fluid. The auctioneer, having taken his ftation, in a corner, was the only perfon who efcaped the fall. Lon. Pap.

Dreadful Cafualty.—One night laft week, an unfortunate man, who was before deeply intoxicated with liquor, gained admittance into a public houfe, near Cork, and having drank an additional half pint of whifkey, fat down by the kitchen fire, from whence it was found impoffible to remove him. The owner of the houfe humanely fuffered him to remain there during the night; but, on coming down early the next morning to look after his ftrange guefl, he found that the wretched man, during his ftate of inebriety, had actually burned his leg off, nor did he awake till the fire approached the pan of his knee! —The reader will be glad to hear that the leg was—a wooden one!

The following anecdote is from a late Dutch paper, under the Paris head.

There has lately arrived here a very celebrated actrefs, diftinguifhed for her beauty, but much more refpected for a character of unimpeachable virtue. A wealthy Englifhman, captivated by her qualities, wrote her this very whimfical letter:

"Madam, I underftand you are determined to preferve, by good conduct, the purity of your reputation. I take the liberty to applaud your refolution and encourage you to perfeverance. So long as you continue in this determination, calculate on 50*l* fterling a month, the firft payment of which I enclofe you. But fhould you alter your opinion, I hope you will remember me favorably, and in that cafe 100*l*. a month are at your fervice."

Unfortunate Adventure in High Life.—An event has lately taken place in high life, which whilft it occupies the attention and engroffes the converfation of the whole of the faflionable world, has excited the aftonifhment of every individual acquainted with the parties. The circumftance is as follows:—It is soundly aflerted, and the report is generally credited, that a certain lady of diftinguifhed rank has lately loft at the Faro Bank of a titled dame, a fum of money little fhort of half a million fterling. Even family connexions are faid to be by this unfortunate affair fo deeply involved, that the carriages, horfes and fervants, are all upon the wing, i. e. the former fhortly to be configned to the hammer, and the latter difcharged. The whole of the tranfaction, and the motives which produced it, appear fo inexplicable, that time only can develope the feeming myftery. Although a bond is faid to have been given for the amount of the fum loft, yet the hufband is advifed to litigate the matter.

One of Selvin's Conceits has been completely realized in Paris. As the facetious Gentleman was one day walking the ftreets of London, he met a number of Chimney Sweep's Boys fantaftically dreffed out, to whom he pulled off his hat, and bowed moft refpectfully. Being queftioned as to this fingular conduct, he replied, "we have heard much lately of the Majefty of the People, and thefe undoubtedly, muft be Princes of the Blood."

GIBRALTAR, March 11.

This famous Calpe, one of the pillars of Hercules, has in it fomething majeftic. It is twelve hundred feet high, and its fummit is conftantly buried in the clouds. The town of Gibraltar is fituated at the bottom of this mountain. On a view of this peninfula, which is only one mile broad and two in length, it may be perceived that nature has rendered it impregnable towards the eaft, and that art has done the fame in every other quarter, by planting batteries in the rock. Conidering the dryneft of the foil, one is aftonifhed to fee it furrounded on every fide with gardens and orchards. The Engliih have forced nature to bring forth whatever they pleafe, infomuch that the earth now produces oranges and potatoes in common with figs, lettuce, &c. Colonel Green has procured earth from Portugal, in order to make a garden, which coft him immenfe fums, and which is without doubt the fineft in the place.

The houfes are fmall, but commodioufly built; and the fhops are fitted up in the Engliih ftyle. The town is lively; for it is inhabited only by foldiers, and every body knows that foldiers are never dull. The garrifon conlifts of nine regiments, compoling a body of five thoufand men. They are all very neat; they are exercifed every day, and the moft rigid difcipline is kept up amongft them. Notwithftanding the difficulty of making an efcape, two fenties lately deferted from Europa Point.

The officers are never ill-; when not engaged in military duty, their time is divided between the pleafures of the table and of play. Sometimes they amufe themfelves in fifhing or coafting on the neutral grounds.

Attracted by the allurement of gain, there are here about two thoufand Genoefe, Spaniards, Portuguefe and Engliih, who exercife various trades. There are likewife two thoufand Jews, almoft all from Barbary, fome of whom retain the dreis of the country; and as thefe people are by no means held in contempt in this place, it is to them a land of promife.

The coin chiefly current here is Spanifh. Provifions are very dear. Port and Sherry are the only wines that can be procured at a reafonable price.

A few days ago I faw a Jewifh marriage.—On the eve of the wedding day, the betrothed lady appeared in public in a hall hired for the purpofe: fhe was veiled, and attended by an old rabbi; and on her arrival, the populace fet up fuch fhouts of joy, that it was found neceffary to fend half of them away. After remaining leated for fome minutes on the throne (the name given to a feat covered with damafk, at the foot of which was a cufhion of the fame ftuff) an old woman took off her veil, and immediately afterwards coffee and fweetmeats were ferved up. Next day the bride and bridegroom went again at the fame hour to the fame place. The bride refumed her former feat, the rabbi and the bridegroom ftanding up before her. On the forehead of the latter, was a fcrool of parchment, on which were inferibed the ten commandments; and his fhoulders and breaft were covered with a large band of white filk. He poured fome white wine into a glafs prefented to him by the rabbi; and the latter, after finging a Hebrew hymn, which the fpectators repeated, drank a little of the liquor, and then offered it to the bridegroom, who after tafting it, let the glafs fall into a filver bafon, by way of precaution againft all forts of magic; he then laid hold of the bride's right hand, and put the wedding ring on her fore finger. The rabbi read the contract, containing leveral articles, among which were the two following: "That the hufband fhould not take his wife into foreign parts without her conlent; and that fhould the parties wifh for leparation, the party firft propoling it fhould be obliged to pay the other eight hundred piaftres;" which leems intended to render a divorce more difficult. After reading the contract, the married lady took off her veil, the rabbi and the hufband then drank again, and all the company withdrew. Directly over the head of the bride was a handkerchief lufpended from the ceiling, containing, as was told, fome pieces of money, intended to ferve as an auipicious omen.

The bride wore falfe hair, according to the cuftom of the Jews of the country, which does not allow married women to wear their own hair. What leems moft extraordinary in thefe marriages is, that the hufband, after enjoying the firft fruits of marriage, abftains for a week from the nuptial bed, or for a whole fortnight, if he has married for the fecond time.

BOSTON, May 21.

Though the accounts from England have been fomewhat contradictory, it leems to be moft probable that Great Britan will have, at laft, to contend with the Corfican Defpot fingle handed. And what then? Diverting as is this lolitary oppofition to that monftrous power, which has galled or fubjugated every other government in Europe, ENGLAND CAN MAINTAIN HER GROUND AGAINST FRANCE FOREVER, and will exift a proud monument of Liberty and Independence; while the kingdoms, empires and republicks of the continent will make fur obfcure figures on the Imperial efcutcheon of Napoleon I.

PROPHECIES.

To the Editor of the Mercantile Advertiler.

SIR,

According to the prediction of St. Cezaire, who in the year 1600 was bifhop of Arles, in the province of Languedoc, great events were to take place between the years 1800 and 1869. Part of them have been ure of accomplifhed. He fays, "There fhall be war; a peace of fhort continuance; fome partial events in both hemifpheres; an almoft general contention amongft the crowned heads; fore fcourges, as fire, fhipwreck, earthquakes, inundation, famine, plague, &c. God in his wrath will punifh mankind, but will preferve his chofen to repeople the world. A new order of things will take place, and continue for a thoufand years. Men will then relapse into a ftate of impiety, and be one of jects on whom the Divine Wrath will be poured out."

In the year 1796 a member of Britifh Parliament predicted before the whole houfe many events which were to happen to Europe, broke of the troubles which afterwards broke out in Ireland, and prophecied its preiervation.

Miss Labrouffe, who was born in the city of Libourne, in France, foretold the Revolution, the re-eftablifhment of religion, and the tranquility which took place at the beginning of the prefent century.

Nostradamus, a French aftrologer, who wrote in the year 1500, predicted the deftruction of the altar and the throne. He fays, in one of his prophecies, "Between the figns of the Virgin and the Balance fhall come a chief to reign in France," and we now witneis its fulfilment. It is well known to every body that the conftellation of the Virgin governs from the 22d of Auguft to the 22d of September, on which day until the 22d of October it is fucceeded by that of the Balance; and during this latter month Bonaparte (now Emperor) arrived in France from Egypt. It appears to me that he is defignated in the Apocalypfe and in the Viiions of Daniel by the name of "the great Beaft with ten horns, which fhall deftroy many kingdoms, and fhall fubdue the leopard." It is evident to me that he has been placed on the throne of France to execute the decrees of Heaven. X.

OHIO.

MARIETTA, May 9.

The following was communicated to me by a gentleman whole veracity may be depended on, and who was knowing to the tranlaction herein mentioned.

"A gentleman by the name of Bennett, and a companion, a fhort time fince travelled from Zinefville (in Ohio) to Wheeling (in Virginia) on Zane's road, fo called. They had with them a little horfe, on which they carried about one thoufand dollars in filver. It appears that two men had followed them for fome time, with an intent to rob them, but never got an opportunity of putting their deligns in execution, until they had got within two miles of Newellown. It feems farther, that the travellers were warned of the threatened danger. The robbers, by accident, got paft the travellers, and enquiring very particularly after fome perfons answering in defcription to the travellers, infomuch that the landlord ftrongly fufpected them.—The robbers had not been gone two hours from the tavern before the travellers came along. The landlord expreffed his fears and fufpicions, acquainted Bennett and his companion to arm themfelves, and fuggefted the propriety of fome perfon accompanying them to Newellown; but they did not apprehend any danger. They provided themfelves with hickory clubs and proceeded on their journey: they had not proceeded far, before they were attacked by two men, with blackened faces, and ordered to furrender their money. One of thefe men had a gun, which he levelled at the breaft of Bennett, who was leading the horfe; the other had a tomahawk—fome words paffed, but Bennett difcovering that the villain was refolute and determined and that his life was in danger, reached out the bridle to the robber, who held the gun, hoping that he would take hold of it, by which action, the direction of the gun would have been altered; in which cafe he intended to fpring in upon him, and wreft the gun from his hands; but the robber was upon his guard—he commanded Bennett to lead the horfe into a certain deep hollow, which lay off the road, threatening to fhoot him if he did not; Bennett conjecturing that the robber meant to murder him when he got him there, threw the bridle from him with violence, faying, "I'll be damd if I go there," and took to his heels.

The horfe being accuftomed to follow his maiter through the wood, took after him full fpeed; the robber with the gun took after the horfe; and the robber with the tomahawk, who had taken the other traveller, and was keeping him in cuftody, feeing the horfe and money flying off, deferted his charge and took after the reft. Bennett and the horfe won the race; they came to a houfe in about a mile, at the fight of which the robbers retreated; and what was remarkable, the laddle bags which contained the money, and which hung loofe over the faddle, did not fall off, although the horfe courfed it over very bad race ground thickly covered with trees, logs, briih, &c. and ran rapidly conlidering the weight he carried.

The next day one of the robbers was apprehended and committed to gaol, where, in conlequence of a fentence of court, he is to have the pleafure of carrying two years free of expence.

POSTSCRIPT.

PLYMOUTH, May 7.

Last evening arrived here the Danish brig Justitia, from Charante. She brings an account of the sailing of two French line of battle ships from Rochefort, on the 1st inst. they were full of troops, having been three days employed in embarking them, previous to their leaving that port. Their destination is not known, one of them is a new ship, lately launched at Rochefort.

May 12.

This morning arrived here the following ships from the Channel Fleet: Dreadnought, of 98 guns; Temeraire, 98; Illustrious, 74; Minotaur, 74; Mars, 74; Ramillies, 74; and Bellerophon, 74. The rest of the fleet, consisting of twenty sail of the line, are gone to Torbay; they are come in to victual, and the utmost exertions are now making to get them ready for sea: a great number of soldiers are employed to assist in loading the lighters with stores, which are to be dispatched immediately for Torbay. The frigates attached to the fleet are left off Brest, to watch the motions of the French fleet, who, no doubt, will take the first opportunity that offers, for putting to sea.

LONDON, May 10.

"ITALY, APRIL 16.—We are now assured that the fleet of Lord Nelson has returned from Egypt to the neighbourhood of Toulon. On the 12th inst. a fleet was seen near Porto Maurizio, on the Genoese coast, which was supposed to be English.

"Some English regiments are expected at Malta."

Advices were received at the Admiralty from Lord Gardner yesterday. The fleet under his Lordship's command consisted of twenty eight sail of the line; the enemy were at single anchor in Breast water, completely prepared for sea. The actual amount of their forces is not stated, but it is supposed to be from 21 to 25 sail of the line.

The French, it is believed, have 14,000 choice troops on board, and our force will consist of 8000 of our best men. The 8th, 42d, and 91st, it is said, are allo to form a part of the expedition, but it is not yet known to a certainty if this will be the case. The troops in Ireland commenced their march to Cork on the 4th of May.

May 11.

On Thursday last, about three o'clock a special messenger arrived at the Secretary of State's office, with the treaty that has been so long negociating with the court of Russia, sealed and signed in due form. This treaty is offensive and defensive, and some of the Northern Powers either are, or soon will be, parties to it. The public may now consider the war as only in its commencement.

Count Worongow, the Russian Ambassador at this court, also received dispatches on Thursday, brought by a Russian Courier, of the same nature as those alluded to above.

May 14.

It is yet undecided whether any detachment from the Channel fleet has been sent in pursuit of the combined squadron; but we understand that Government have determined to send out such strong reinforcements to the commander in chief as may enable him to dispatch a number of vessels according to the exigency of any unforeseen and pressing occasion. The press, which is now carried with the greatest activity on the River, and in the out ports, will be continued until every ship of the line either fit for service, or being equipped in a short time, shall have been completely manned.

The order for an embargo at this port was announced from the Custom House last Thursday, on which day, and during the whole week, the press gangs have been indefatigable in their exertions. Persons of all professions, as well as seamen, have been occasionally taken though many have been released on proper application having been made on their behalf. In the early part of the week about forty Irishmen, just landed from a Dublin Packet, and who were proceeding up the country in search of employment, were pressed, and taken on board the tender. Since that however, most of them have been liberated.

The sailing of two French sail of the line from Rochefort, is confirmed by official dispatches.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN,

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given, they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming partakers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. And whereas certain persons notwithstanding such notice, do still continue to occupy and possess such Lands without any authority, licence or title derived from the Crown to the same: and being willing that these persons may have the fullest notice of their danger, and of the consequences of their conduct, and that they may not avail themselves of the unmerited forbearance of the Crown, by assuming or pretending to any right, claim, or title in, or to the Lands so illegally and unjustly occupied and possessed by them as aforesaid. I PETER HUNTER Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the said Province, do, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council thereof, hereby again give notice to, and warn such person or persons that do possess and occupy Lands therein without any licence, title or right whatever derived from the Crown, having ever been obtained for such Lands, forthwith to quit and remove from the same; it being the intent of the Executive Government of this Province to prevent and frustrate such illegal and fraudulent usurpations, as well as to support the claims of such individuals as are justly entitled to the enjoyment of his Majesty's bounty therein.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this eleventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five, and in the forty-fifth year of his Majesty's reign.

Latest Intelligence.

From the Calcutta Gazette, Nov. 27.

FORT WILLIAM, Dec. 7, 1804.

A dispatch, of which the following is a copy, was received this evening, by his Excellency the Most Noble the Governor General, from his Excellency the Commander in Chief.

To his Excellency the Most Noble the Marquis Wellesley, Governor General, &c.

MY LORD,

The inclosed note has just conveyed to me the afflicting intelligence of the death of the gallant Major General Frater, in consequence of the several wounds he received in the ever memorable action of the 13th Nov. Your Lordship will partake in my feelings of sincere sorrow for the loss of an esteemed friend and a brave officer; and his country will mourn the death of an hero to whom she is indebted for the most signal service. His plan of attacking the enemy in the glorious battle of Derg evinces the highest military genius, his mode of carrying this into effect displays the greatest judgment and sagacity, and his conduct at the head of his army proves the most deliberate courage and determined resolution.

Advancing in front of his troops, his example animated them to the arduous enterprize. He continued to encourage them long after he had fallen, and his voice impelled them, till a complete and glorious victory crowned and rewarded his exertions.

In lamenting the loss of this brave officer, I have the consoling reflection, that his memory will remain dear in the breast of every soldier: that this splendid example will animate to future deeds of heroism; and that his fame and glory will be consecrated and preserved by a grateful and admiring country.

The remains of poor Major General Fraser were interred at Muttra, on the evening of the 25th, and the last sad honors due to his rank were paid by part of that army which he so lately led to victory and to glory. I have the honor to be, (Signed) G. LAKE.

Muttra, Nov. 21, 1804, 7 o'clock, P. M.

SIR,

With the most sincere sorrow I feel myself obliged to communicate the melancholy intelligence of my much lamented friend the General's death; he has been for several days sinking from not being able to retain nourishment on his stomach, and a mortification took place, and terminated fatally this evening. Every attention that medical assistance could afford has been shewn to him, and the unwearied attention of a most affectionate son, who is now unable to write.

(Signed) WM. MENZIES.

To Lieut. Gen. Lake.

DOVER, April 25.

This day arrived his Majesty's ship Leda, commanded by Robert Honeyman, Esq; from off Boulogne, having on the 24th, sustained some damage in her hull, sails and rigging, in an action with a division of the enemy's flotilla, consisting of 36 sail, on their passage from Dunkirk to Ostend, which the (with her squadron) intercepted under the strong batteries of Cape Grinez, and after a close action of three hours, succeeded in capturing seven of them, having part of the 51st and 61st demi-brigades, having for commanders two of Bonaparte's Legion of Honor. We are happy to state that although the squadron experienced some damage in their hulls, &c. there were none killed and but one slightly wounded during that long and arduous conteft.

It being judged expedient from the situation of the remainder of the division, that a strict observation should be kept upon them during the ensuing night, two of our squadron were ordered to watch their motions, when at day light, it was discovered that two of the enemy were endeavouring (under the protection of their batteries) to escape to Calais; when Lieut. Price, of his Majesty's brig Archer with his usual vigilance, pursued and captured them, although aided by several pieces of flying artillery, as well as heavy ordnance mounted on all parts of the shore. One of the last mentioned vessels was commanded by Commodore Nouy, (a Capt. in the Dutch navy) chief de division.

The Archer brig has also arrived in the Downs with her prizes.

LONDON, April 29.

BRITISH FLEET.

Off Brest, and ready to join 26 sail of the line; off Ferrol and Lisbon 12, with Lord Nelson, and gone to Jamaica 15, in Beerhaven Bay 5—in a l 58 ships of the line, of which there are 15 of 120, and 98 guns each.

French, Spanish and Dutch fleets on the home station, ready for sea and sitting.—In Brest harbour 24 sail of the line; in Rochefort and L'Orient (all French) 4; in Ferrol and Corunna (French, Spanish and Dutch) 13; in Toulon and Cadiz, 26—in all 67 sail of the line.

After all the bold assertions, the undoubted facts, and the conclusive reasoning—after the triumph and exultation which pervaded all the ranks of Opposition yesterday—which opened to them the brilliant prospect of getting into power; we have to state, and we desire to be conceived by the public as not speaking without authority—that there is no foundation whatever for the rumour of Lord Sidmouth's, Lord Buckinghamshire, or Mr. Vansittart's resignation—and that no change has taken place, or is likely to take place in the Cabinet.—[Cour. May 1.

We are at length enabled to lay before our readers authentic information respecting the French fleet which escaped from Toulon. It consisted, as we before stated, of 11 sail of the line, 7 frigates and two corvettes; they passed the Straits of Gibraltar on the 9th ult. and immediately bore up for Cadiz before which Sir John Orde was cruizing. When Sir John first received intelligence of their approach, his squadron was busy in overhauling their rigging, and had their top-masts struck, and their yards down to have it all new set; but such was the dispatch used to put the squadron in a state to meet the enemy, that in four hours it was in perfect order. The French Admiral did not, however, think it advisable to attack Sir John Orde, notwithstanding his great superiority of force, for the British squadron only consisted of six sail of the line and two frigates, and had also the disadvantage of being incumbered with transports. The French fleet stood directly into Cadiz, where it remained when the last dispatches were sent off. It will be seen by our Plymouth letter, that the Sirius frigate, Capt. Prowse, which had arrived at that port from Sir John Orde, brought intelligence of Lord Nelson having passed the Straits in pursuit of the French fleet, and of his having arrived before Cadiz. Although we have no authority to confirm this report, yet we think it very probable; there can be little doubt but Lord Nelson was very soon informed of the sailing of the French fleet, and we have very strong reason to believe that they had not above two or three days start of him. If it be true that Lord Nelson has arrived before Cadiz, and that the blockade of that port has been renewed by the united British squadron, the enemy will be placed in a most distressing situation; for the scarcity of provisions, particularly bread, has been very great at Cadiz, and the arrival of so large a fleet, with a numerous body of troops on board, will of course greatly increase the calamity.

The following article relative to the Toulon squadron, was yesterday posted at Lloyd's:—

"A letter has been received at the Admiralty from Lord Gardner, inclosing a copy of one from Vice Admiral Sir John Orde, to his Majesty's Minister at Lisbon. It appears that on the afternoon of the 9th inst. the Toulon squadron stood close to the harbour of Cadiz, and had nearly brought the Vice Admiral to action."

First Lord of the Admiralty.

In the House of Commons the 29th inst. Mr. Creevy rose for the purpose of putting a question to his Majesty's Ministers. Three weeks shall have elapsed to morrow since the resignation of Lord Melville, and yet no successor has been appointed. He wished to know who was to succeed to that important office, as under all the circumstances of the country, and considering the forward state of the enemy's fleets, it was extremely desirable that a person should be appointed, adequate to the exigency of the times, and the arduous duties of that high office.

Mr. Pitt said he had no difficulty in answering the honorable gentleman's question; the appointment had taken place, and would be mentioned in the Gazette of to morrow; and the successor to that Noble Lord was one who fully answered the description of the honorable gentleman, and would be satisfactory to the wishes of the nation.

After having sat down, the right honorable gentleman mentioned Sir Charles Middleton.

The Commons have directed a civil prosecution to be commenced against Lord Melville and Mr. Trotter, for the profits of public monies entrusted to them.

On the 14th ult. just as the House of Commons received the usual summons to attend the Commission in the Upper House, it was intimated that his Majesty would be ready to receive, at four o'clock, the resolutions respecting Lord Melville, at St. James's Palace. From the earliness of the hour, and the shortness of the notice, not more than half a dozen Members were in full dress.

A circumstance has come to our knowledge, which induces us to suppose that any extraordinary ceremony was not expected by his Majesty. We are assured that his Majesty, when receiving the resignation of Lord Melville, tendered by Mr. Pitt, was graciously pleased to say, "that notwithstanding the clamour that had been raised against that Nobleman, he trusted his faithful commons would soon see reason to express an opinion that his Lordship had acquitted himself with the utmost anxiety for the welfare and salvation of the British Empire." This communication has been made to us from good authority. It is the more remarkable, as a belief generally prevailed that the Noble Personage in question had lost ground in the Royal favour.

Lord Melville's resignation was accompanied by a long explanatory letter, to which a certain Personage returned a very kind as well as gracious answer.

The Cork Mercantile Chronicle, of Wednesday the 10th inst. contains the following extraordinary article:—

"We are sorry to be informed, that a dispatch had arrived at the Castle of Dublin on Monday evening, stating the capture of transports with the 15th, 90th, and 96th regiments on board, and a part of the convoy. This news is understood to have left the West Indies the 9th of March."

It is an undoubted and well known fact, that Bonaparte proposed to surrender all the Irish Emigrants to the English Government, on condition they would act a similar part by the Bourbon Family, and the French Emigrants in England; but that the offer was rejected with indignation.

Sir Charles Middleton, Bart. has been appointed to succeed Lord Melville, as first Lord of the Admiralty. Sir Charles being an officer of first rate talents, of great experience, and distinguished gallantry, his appointment to such an elevated situation cannot fail of affording very great satisfaction. He will be called to the house of Peers by the title of Lord Baron of Kent.

The Spanish ship Asia, ———, from Lima to Cadiz, having on board three hundred thousand dollars, bags of silver, and some ingots of gold, with a valuable cargo of drugs, &c. has been captured by some of our cruizers, and arrived at Falmouth.

NEW YORK, June 19.

On Sunday last arrived at the Lazaretto, Philadelphia, the brig Molly, Wheldon, from Basseterre, Guadaloupe, sailed the 6th May, by special permission of Gen. Ernouf, who laid a general embargo the 22d, in consequence of the arrival at Basseterre of the French schooner La Fid, of 6 guns, with dispatches from Fort Royal, Martinique, announcing the entry into that port of the united French and Spanish squadrons, from Cadiz, as follows:—twelve French ships of the line, 6 frigates, and 5 sloops of war—6 Spanish ships of the line, 4 frigates and several transports, with 18,000 troops on board, five thousand of them Spanish. The fleet under the command of Vice Admiral Villeneuve and Admiral Gravina; the army under General Lauriston (a creole of Pondicherry) first aid de camp to his Imperial Majesty Napoleon.

On the 24th, the Cornelia and l'Hauteur frigates of 44 guns each, arrived from Fort Royal with General Lauriston, who after an interview with Gen. Ernouf, re imbarked the same evening to Martinique. On the morning of the 25th, great preparations commenced to embark mortars, artillery, bombs, &c. together with 2000 grenadiers and artificers, part of the garrison, to join the army at Fort Royal.

It was reported at Guadaloupe, that Trinidad would be the first object of the combined forces. They also reported the Brest fleet was out, destined for Jamaica.

The British sloop of war Saillante, of 28 guns, was captured off Martinique by a frigate of the fleet.

Since the Toulon fleet has been at sea an extraordinary bustle has prevailed at Boulogne, as if the Grand Fleet of bomb boats and gun boats, were about to depart from port.—Dispatches from Lord Nelson, dated in the Mediterranean, were received in England on the 9th of May. The dates of the dispatches are not mentioned.—On the 10th of May 8000 troops were embarking in England for the West Indies.—A body of French troops have recently entered Spain, to co-operate in an attack on Gibraltar.

Baltimore, June 15.

The ship on board of which was the Lady of Jerome Bonaparte, on her arrival at Amsterdam from Lisbon, had a strong guard placed on board of her, and the Dutch Pilots, who conducted the vessel from the Texel, were imprisoned. Such are the measures thought necessary to evince displeasure at a marriage which conferred honor on a Bonaparte.

Cooperstown, June 6.

The unhappy ARNOLD was on Tuesday last, indicted, and convicted, at the circuit court held in this place by his honor chief justice Kent, of the murder of Betty Van Amburgh, an orphan, by whipping her, in such an unjustifiable and barbarous manner as to occasion her death.

Judge Kent after an impressive address to the prisoner, passed sentence on him, viz. "You are to be taken from hence to the place of confinement, and from thence to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck until you are dead—and the Lord have mercy on your soul."

Yesterday the honorable court fixed the time of his execution to Friday the 19th day of July next, between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and two o'clock in the afternoon.

The trial occupied about five hours and an half, and the jury were about two hours deliberating on their verdict.

☞ Arnold convicted of murder, has put an end to his life by means of laudanum.

CANANDAIGUA, June 18.

At a late court of oyer and terminer, and gool delivery, in and for the county of Ontario, Peter Shaver, of Rhinebeck, was convicted of the MURDER of his sister; sentenced to death; to be executed on Friday, the 19th of July next.

FIRE AT DETROIT.—The western mail carrier brings us the sad intelligence delivered to him by a gentleman immediately from Detroit, that that town, the garrison, &c. a few days before had been reduced to ashes. But two buildings had escaped the destruction. The gentleman says it was attributed to the carelessness of a person who entered a stable with a lighted segar. It being in the day time the loss of light stores, goods, &c. both of the public and individuals, was less than could have been expected from so general a calamity. We hope before our next to receive a more particular account.

The publication of cases of cruelty may be a matter of doubtful policy; but, when the offender has been suffered to escape almost with impunity, it becomes due to Justice to place him upon public record, as an object of horror and detestation.

At the April Court of Quarter Sessions, 1805, of the county of Northampton, SAMUEL DEPUI, of the borough of Easton, was indicted for an assault and battery, on his apprentice, Elizabeth Palmer, about twelve years of age. The indictment set forth, specially, the circumstances that were afterwards given in evidence. The defendant submitted the case let out in the bill, by pleading Guilty, and submitting to the Court.

It appeared in evidence, from different witnesses, that in the course of last winter, remarkable for its severity, Samuel Depui, had tied this child up by her heels, so that her head just touched the ground and in that posture had beaten her most severely, until she was all bloody: That he had taken her to the necessary, and compelled her to eat human excrement: That in the coldest time of the winter he had poured snow and water upon her in her bed; That he had stripped her naked, and tied her in the morning in an open garret into which the snow had drifted, and kept her thus there until night; That he had lacerated her back until it was raw and bloody, and then compelled this wretched infant to rub the wounds with pepper and lime: And, at another time, had beaten her in the same manner, and then put her into a bed which he had strewed with lime: That he had shut her up at night in a stable without shoes or stockings until her feet were frozen.

When this monster was called upon to answer these charges, he did not pretend to deny one of the facts above stated: but endeavoured to palliate them, by saying, some chesnuts and a few apples had been missing, which he suspected this girl had taken; that he had sent her with cold victuals to the cellar, and some of it was missing; that sometimes she would not answer when she was called, but lay there as not hear; and that he would have to call her two or three times to table to eat.

THIS is a candid and literal statement of the whole case, taken in writing at the time. The public indignation was highly excited and incensed, and an exemplary punishment was eagerly looked for, especially as the Court delicated on the offence in the strongest terms. When to the astonishment of every body, this sentence was pronounced:—That Samuel Depui should pay a fine of fifteen dollars—be imprisoned for ten days and give security for his good behaviour for one year, in the sum of fifty dollars.

As this Court has paſſed much more ſeverer judgments, in caſes of common aſſault and battery, it was difficult to ſay, in the concluſion, whether Samuel Depui, or the Court, was moſt the object of public diſſatisfaction.

It was underſtood the Preſident of the Court, was deſirous of inflicting a more exemplary punihment.

We are happy, however, to ſtate, that the Court thought proper to remove this unfortunate child from her mercileſs maſter.

MR. JUSTICE HARDINGE'S ADDRESS

To Mary Morgan, (aged about 18 years) found guilty of the Wilful Murder of her Baſtard Child, on Thurſday, April 11th, of ſtrangling her infant child, and who was executed on Saturday the 13th.

"Mary Morgan—upon evidence which leaves not a ſhade of doubt in the mind, you are convicted of murdering your child, a new born infant of your own ſex, the offspring of your ſecret and vicious love; murdering it with a knife ſelected as the inſtrument of a purpoſe deliberately formed, before its deſtined victim came into the world.

"Your hatred of this innocent little ſufferer could not have been your motive. It never offended you and therefore was no object of reſentment. It is true, that if the child had lived, it would have proved your crime in its birth; and your ſhame would have been the conſequence of that proof. But was this a reaſon to kill and murder it? If its firſt cries to you (its natural parent) for ſuſtenance and care, made it by force your living accuſer, could this be a reaſon to both theſe cries and life that breath (of the unconſcious witneſs againſt you) with a knife that nearly ſevered the head from the neck? Had it lived, you might have loſt your place; you might have loſt other places; you might have ſunk into poverty as well as into ſhame; but was this a reaſon to kill an infant? Was it a reaſon to acquire a falſe character, with a guilty conſcience upon your pillow, and cries of the murdered infant at your ear? When did this fear of ſhame and poverty begin? Was it an obſtacle in the way of your criminal intercourſe with your lover? No; when you had criminal pleaſures to enjoy, you had no fear of riſk. When theſe paſſions were ſatiated, and theſe pleaſures were acculers to their bitter fruit, then you became ſuch a coward, that you ſacrificed your infant's life, the peace and intereſt of your ſoul here and hereafter, to the new born fear. Alas! how dreadful are the landing places of guilt, when it aſcends in its progreſs! You began with incontinence, criminal in itſelf, but full of complicated peril in its tendency to wiſe crimes. Your next guilt was a maſk to the world in the concealment of your pregnancy, which (beſides the vicious art of the impoſture) was dangerous to the child you had conceived. Your laſt crime was the murder of the child inflicted by yourſelf.

"Guilt is always a coward; guilt like yours prompts the offender to accuſe herſelf, and prove her crime by evidence of the fact in a moment of deſpair, fear or ſurpriſe. Madneſs like this comes too late; it is the effect & the doom of guilt, it is no ſhelter for it.—You have no plea of ſudden impulſe to this act (not that any ſuch plea could avail you, if in fact it exiſted;) your's was a deliberate murder—the implement of the death's wound obtained, and let apart for its deſtined office and victim; had you eſcaped, many other guilt (in ſlaughters and ſlight as you have been,) would have been encouraged by that eſcape to commit your crime, with hopes of your impunity; the merciful fate of your example will ſave them. Deliberate acts like theſe, very often eſcape from puniſhment; merciful juries, merciful rules of law, and merciful judges, give numerous occaſions to that impunity; if it is a defect, I hope it will never be repaired: but the ſame judges, are firm to their truſt in a caſe like yours. The life that you have deſtroyed, loſt its natural parent when you were its executioner, for guilt of your own. It found a Parent in Heaven: there is not a more ſacred object of that parent's love, (whoſe children we all of us are) than a new born child, created in his image.—Its blood is like that of Abel; it cries from the earth, and its complaint is noted in Heaven. What your inducement was to ſacrifice this pledge of your love, and your crime, we have no means to aſcertain, your conſcience knows it well; but we are able to know that it muſt have been ſelfiſh and cruel.

"I have talked to you hitherto, as a judge, preparing and bound by his painful office to inflict the penalty of death upon his convicted priſoner before him: but look up to me! I can give you comfort, and can tell you—without impairing the weight of your doom in this world, that you can turn away your eyes to the Judge of us all whoſe mercy has no limits, and whom no ſinner can implore in vain, if the tears of penitence and remorſe are deep and ſincere. You muſt have expected your fate; and I hope in God, that you have prepared yourſelf by a new made heart, for a better world, having made all the human atonement in your power upon earth. To cut off a young creature like you, in the morning of life's day, (for it is little more than a day to the oldeſt of us all,) is an affliction thrown upon me, which I have no power to deſcribe, or to bear, ſo well as perhaps I ſhould. You muſt not think we are cruel: it is to ſave other infants like yours, and many other girls like you, from the pit into which you have fallen: your ſentence and your death is mercy to them! if you have repented of your impious crime it is mercy to yourſelf. Had you eſcaped your mind and con. ſcience would, or might have been ſo depraved that mercy, winged as it is, could not reach it in time. You have had the tears and prayers of all around you, in your abſorrence of your crime, we have not left our compaſſion for your fate, nor our zealous hope that you will find mercy at the judgement ſeat of a forgiving interceſſor, who died for you that is, who died, that penitent ſinners, though blood, ſhould be reſcued from the doom they had incurred, and ſhould expatiate their pollutions in the atonement of his blood.

"You have murdered that human creature who, of all others upon earth, had the moſt effecting right as well as claim, to your mercy and your love. The offspring of your own guilt, and guilt entailed in ſome degree by the ſhame of its deſcent. At your wild and youthful age, undiſciplined, I fear, as well as unenlightened; and with ſuch early habits and depraved felicity dulgence, it is not probable that a religion like that of the New Teſtament, which breathes in every page of it love to infants, could have been impreſſed upon your mind.

"But the God of nature has written a book, which "he that runs may read." You have read the book, and the letters of it were ſtampt upon your feelings at your birth. It was a law written upon the living and glowing tablets of the heart, which told you, how unjuſt it was to puniſh the offſpring of your guilt—for the life you had forced upon it by that guilt alone, you ſhould have exerted every moment of your own in atoning, by redoubled attention to a daughter ſo born, for the calamity of ſuch a birth. Inſtead of bracing yourſelf to this atonement, you were deaf to her infant cries, and you averted the reputation of them with a murdering hand.

"In this choice of difficulties—in this conflict of balances, what is it you have done? You have encountered the peril of detection and of puniſhment, by a death of ſhame, as the murderer of your child. You have taken the chance of dying impenitent, or with a conſcience ill prepared for ſo awful a change as from this life into the judgements of eternity. You have taken the chance—had you eſcaped from human detection, had you impoſed upon the world ever ſo well—of lingering torments upon the rack of life a felt accuſed and felt accurſt.

"Thus it is that one guilt produces another eſpecially in your ſex, when gendered into its criminal intercourſe with ours. The natural delicacy and modeſty of the female character ſhrinks all its progreſs in guilt, and a ſucceſſion of accumulated crimes are generated by the fear (if not by the ſenſe) of ſhame. At laſt the energies of the mind are half buried in the confuſion of ſhifted expedients to eſcape from the importunate eye of the world; but there is another eye—"about the path and bed," from which no darkneſs can ſeclude, and from which "no ſecrets are hid." That eye never is cloſed, and brings to light guilt like yours in a manner for which the ſagacity of human conjecture deſpairs to account.

"I am now to paſs upon you the awful ſentence of your legal, your juſt, your inevitable doom in this world. —There be delivered the ſentence in a very impreſſive manner, and proceeded thus;]

"You have heard the ſentence, and the imperious will of the Law. It effects your body alone; your ſoul it cannot reach—it is in the hands of your God. May that Fountain of infinite love ſhew mercy to it, when it ſhall appear before him upon the day of its final judgement.—May it there be acquitted and bleſt!"

GLEANINGS FROM LATE PAPERS

The following extraordinary circumſtance is ſaid to have taken place in this city within theſe few days. The watchman placed on the dock-yards and cellars of a merchant of the firſt eminence had frequently complained that his watch was diſturbed by the appearance of ſeveral ghaſtly figures, dreſſed in black, accompanying a coffin, and forming a funeral proceſſion, in all the fable diſplay of ſupernatural horrors. A Gentleman, to whom the affair was related, ſuſpecting ſome diſhonorable trick which this device was meant to conceal, ſtood watch with ſome friends a few nights ſince, when, about two in the morning, they were ſurpriſed to ſee the ſame dreadful proceſſion advance from one of the lanes, but, being no way intimidated, they ruſhed among the fable crew. The coffin flew open, and diſcovered the mangled carcaſe of an enormous pig! which had been ſent from the ſlaughter houſe the preceding evening, and which thoſe fable ſpirits, no doubt, intended for many a jubilation meal. The artifice diſcovered, we have not heard what means were taken to puniſh the offending parties, though we hope, they will be efficient, and in proportion to their daring artifice.

The naturaliſts are requeſted to explain, if they can, two ſingular phenomena that have occurred in two adjoining communes of Nioſt, in the one (Coulonge) ſituated on the North Eaſt, the women are frequently brought to bed of two or three children at a time, but which are unhappily ſubject to imbecility; in the other (Fontenoy,) ſituated to the South, are born as many children dead and dumb. Of 27 children, divided among four families, of whom the fathers and mothers are well conditioned, there are ſeven afflicted with this infirmity. (French Paper.

DIED.] In England, John Burges, carpenter, aged 104 years. In the courſe of his very long life he never had any illneſs till the preceding Saturday; he continued to work till that day, at churning, and making thoſe pegs. This extraordinary man alſo retained his faculties till within a few hours of his death.

Near Ruelagh, Ireland, Mrs. Bridget Kavanagh, at the advanced age of 118 years, who left four ſons, the eldeſt of whom is near 100 years of age.

Of a few days illneſs, at Autrim Caſtle, the Right Hon. Clothworthy, Earl of Maſſerene, aged 62—a nobleman poſſeſſed of many great and good qualities, amongſt others he was a good landlord, a kind maſter, a ſincere friend, than whom no man was more attached to his king and country, which he ſtrongly evinced when he, at the head of his own yeomanry corps, defended the town of Antrim, on the memorable day in June 1798, againſt ſeveral thouſand rebels.

The late earl of Maſſerene was liberated from the priſon of the Grand Chatelet at Paris, by the Revolution, in the month of June 1789, after being confined upwards of 18 years. During this time he had laid a plan for his eſcape, but was detected as he was entering his carriage, and ſent into one of the deepeſt dungeons of the Chatelet, where he remained without light, without bed, and was fed only on bread and water. Previous to his confinement, he had figured very conſpicuouſly in the walk of faſhion; and after his liberation his valor was eminently exerted in the defence of the liberty of his native land. His loſdſhip's whole hiſtory exhibits a ſtriking picture of the viciſſitudes of human life.—Belfaſt paper.

Lately at Arkenoy, County Galway, Ireland, after a ſhort illneſs, Mr. Dennis Cootobee, of Ballandangan, aged 117; a truly honeſt man. He retained his faculties to the laſt, and until two days previous to his death he never remembered to have any complaint or ſickneſs whatever (tooth ache only excepted;) three weeks before his death, he walked from his houſe to Galway, and back the ſame day, which is twenty-ſix miles. He could, to the laſt, read the ſmalleſt print without glaſſes, which he never accuſtomed himſelf to, with as much eaſe as a boy of fifteen. It has been acknowledged by the moſt intelligent men in Ireland, that, for the preſent age, he was the moſt experienced farmer, and the brighteſt genius for the improvement of agriculture: it is upwards of 70 years ſince he propagated that moſt uſeful article the Black Potatoe: he was married ſeven times, and when married laſt he was 93 years old; by his wives he had 48 children; he had likewiſe 296 grand children, and 25 great grand children, the oldeſt of whom is four years old; his own youngeſt ſon (by his laſt wife) is about eighteen years old.

The annual conſumption of eatables and drinkables in Paris, amounts to 26,000,000 pounds of bread, 75,000 oxen, 16,000 cows, 103,000 calves, 222,000 ſheep, 458,576 pigs, 21,487 muids of oats, 8,500 do. beer, 6,000 of cider, wine unknown, 100 quintals of ſea fiſh, 400,000 francs worth of brandy. There are upwards of 3,000 coffee houſes in Paris. The quantity of coffee conſumed in this city would be worth aſcertaining, ſince the manufacturing girls, domeſtic and matrons, all breakfaſt on it.

Remarkable Perſonage.

Don Jose Cordero Peniota, arrived in town laſt week from Portugal, on a viſit to the Portugueſe Ambaſſador. This gentleman is 87 years of age, and 28 inches in height, elegantly formed. He will be preſented to his Majeſty and the Royal Family by his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Suſſex, to whom he had the honor of being known at Liſbon. The Portugueſe Ambaſſador's Charge D'Affaires ſaties the Don creſt on his hand, and carries him about the houſe, and wraps him in a Spaniſh mantle, whilſt he conveys him from his Excellency's hall that brings him at his apartments in Hanover-ſtreet, Hanover ſquare. It is ſaid he is as accompliſhed as his appearance is prepoſſeſſing. [Lon. pap. April 8.

TANKEY PHRASES.

As ſound as a nut, o'er the plain,
I at late whiſtled, vibrated full of glee;
A ſtranger to ſorrow and pain,
As happy as happy could be.

As ſtrong as a partridge I grew
My hair being lighter than rye;
My ſlumbers were calmer than dew—
My body was ſtouter than pork.

Thus happy I hop'd I ſhould paſs,
Blith as greaſe down the throats of ſome;
But gladneſs are brittle as glaſs
Although as a ſkittle ſharper ſtone.

Jemima, the pride of the vale,
Like a top ſtately danc'd over the plains;
With every the ladies weep pale—
With wonder ſtood gaping the ſwains.

She ſmil'd like a bugbear of chipp—
As tall as a bay pole her bow—
As ſweet as maſſaffes her lips—
As bright as a diamond her eyes.

Admiring, I gaz'd on each charm,
My pranks that would trouble ſo ſoon,
And thought not of danger nor harm,
Any more than a man in the moon.

But now to my ſorrow I find,
Her heart is as hard as a brick;
To my paſſion forever unkind,
Although of love I'm as full as a tick.

I ſought her affection to win,
In hopes of obtaining relief,
Till I like a butcher grew thin,
And ſhe like a haddock grew deaf.

I am was as fat as a doe,
And playſome and ſpry as a cat—
But now I'm as daft as a Jew,
And lean and as weak as a rat.

Unleſs the unpitying fates,
With paſſion ſo urbane ſhall even her,
As certain as death, or, as rates,
I ſoon ſhall be dead as a hammer.

Meſſrs. Printers,

Having ſuffered greatly by inſects deſtroying the plants in my garden, and particularly cucumbers, and having alſo learned a remedy for the evil, you are requeſted to publiſh the following for the benefit of the public:

Laſt year I was more unfortunate than common in the loſs of my cucumber plants, three ſucceſſive crops having been wholly cut off. But towards the end of June, having heard that ſpirits of Turpentine would preſerve them, I planted feed the fourth time, as ſoon as the plants begun to get forward I procured the ſpirit and mixed it with about the ſame quantity of water, with which I lightly touched the ground round the plants; and the conſequence was that neither bugs nor worms moleſted the vines, and my crop of cucumbers was as good as any I ever had. An Old Farmer.

From the Litchfield Monitor.

Mr. Printer,

I would beg leave, through the medium of your paper, to ſolicit my brother Farmers to make uſe of their Aſhes on their Corn Land, inſtead of ſelling them to the merchants for 12 cents a buſhel. I will warrant them 35 cents a buſhel, clear of all expence, if rightly managed.

The method is this: When your corn firſt comes out of the ground, put one half pint of aſhes around a hill; if your aſhes are not good put on the more. In converſation with a venerable old gentleman on the ſubject, he aſſured me that he had made uſe of aſhes in this way for many years paſt, and had never failed of having one buſhel of corn extraordinary for a buſhel of aſhes.—It is the opinion of ſome men that half a pint of good aſhes is rather too much for a hill, but this muſt be left to the diſcretion of the Farmer. I am ſenſible it is not cuſtomary to pay much attention to what we read in newſpapers; but my brother Farmers, let us try one buſhel this year, and if it has the deſired effect, we ſhall be rewarded for our trouble, and can well afford to try the experiment another year. A Farmer.

Cure for the Ague.—Oil of Amber is ſtrongly recommended for the Ague. When the fit is coming on, nine drops are to be taken in a little tea; the quantity is to be increaſed two drops morning and evening, and to be continued till the complaint is removed, which generally happens in eight or ten days.

THE DROPSY CURED.

A perſon who was prodigiouſly fwelled with this diſorder, put a large cup full of bohea tea in a teapot, ſteeped it, drank the liquor by degrees, and eat all the tea leaves, in the courſe of the forenoon. The ſame experiment was repeated in the afternoon, and for the two ſucceeding days. On the ſecond day the water began to decreaſe by natural evacuations, and on the third day it was totally diſſipated.

Method of deſtroying caterpillars on trees.

Take a chafing diſh with lighted charcoal, and placing it under the branches that are loaded with caterpillars, throw ſome pinches of brimſtone upon the coals. The vapour of the ſulphur, which is death to theſe inſects will not only deſtroy all that are on the tree, but prevent it from being infected with them afterwards. A pound of ſulphur will clear as many trees as grow on ſeveral acres. The method has been ſucceſsfully tried in France. In the Journal "d'Economique," the following is ſaid to be infallible againſt caterpillars feeding on cabbage, and perhaps may be equally ſerviceable againſt thoſe that infeſt other vegetables. Sow with hemp, all the borders of the ground where you intend to plant your cabbage; and although the neighbourhood is infeſted with caterpillars, the ſpace incloſed by the hemp will be perfectly free, not one of the vermin will approach it.

AN unprincipled debtor being informed by his friend, that one of his creditors wiſhed to receive the intereſt, as he could not obtain the principal, he replied with more wit than honeſty, that it was not his intereſt, to pay the principal, nor his principle, to pay the intereſt.

AN alehouſe girl took it into her head to be chatechiſed at church. The Parſon aſked her what was her name. "La, Sir," ſaid ſhe; "how now can you pretend not to know my name, when you come to our houſe to offen and try ten times in an evening." "Nay you ſlut, bring us another full pot, and then."

Chief of Brigands.—A person, long the terror of the country, of the name of Ailton, was lately killed near Mans. In the reign of the Robespierre he was President of a Revolutionary Committee; under the Directory, a Police Commissary and, for the two first years of Bonaparte's Consulate, a Sub-Prefect; but, convicted of rape, and suspected of murder, he was dismissed. He has since been, for forgery, upon the galleys, from which he escaped, and became a Chief of Brigands. Under pain of having their houses burned, and their property plundered, he forced his inhabits ants of villages to pay him a regular and monthly contribution, in money and provisions. In Several engagements he had when purfued repulfed the gens d'armes. At laft, being betrayed, twelve of them thought to furprife him in a hut, his retreat; but he had the precaution to undermine it, and therefore blew himfelf up, together with the gens d'armes who came to arreft him; of whom nine died on the fpot, and three are lingering without hope of recovery. In the neighborhood no lefs than fourteen young women have declared themfelves in a ftate of pregnancy by him, among whom are two, his own fiflers. No female, who was unfortunate enough to be fixed on by him, dared to refufe obeying his requifition; as, within thefe laft fix months, two who had refufed his commands, had been ftabbed by him, one of them by the fide of her father and mother. Five of his accomplices are now before the Special Tribunal of the department of the Main.

In the work, entitled, A Key to the Phenomena of Nature, a French writer, Chevrel Deffaudrais, aflures us, that, for fix thoufand years, mankind have been crawling about, without knowing it, on the back of an animal. This animal which lives, eats, drinks, and digefts; which thinks, walks, and tranfpires; which has members and organs of fpeech; this wonderful animal is—the Earth. Thus and thus only, can hurricanes, tempefts, the eruptions of volcanoes, &c. be accounted for. If any one doubt it, let him read the work of this new Naturalift. "If every thing upon the earth is animated (he urges) why fhould not the earth itfelf likewife be fo? the earth to which we are indebted for our fupport. If life be neceffary for the growth of hair in man, how can the earth without the fame faculty, produce grafs in the fields, and trees in the foreft? the procefs with hair and with grafs is the fame. The former are rooted in our fkin, and the latter in the fkin of the animal Earth, humus. The nurfe takes food, which fhe gives back liquefied to the child. Does not the Earth do the fame, in order to furnifh the nurfe with vegitables, which fhe converts into milk? Does it not imbibe particles of air and water, which it appropriates to the plant? As life is abfolutely neceffary for thefe functions, the earth which fulfils them muft of neceffity be alive and organized in the fame manner as animals. Are not correfponding phenomena, refults and objects, proof of the fame nature, organs and properties? The earth muft, however, be provided with much ftronger organs than a woman, her procedure through the fame being on a much more extenfive fcale."

London Paper.

Extract from an Order of Council of the Lieutenant Governor and Council of Trinidad, dated Council Chamber March 21, 1805.

"The French commanders, it appears, feek not conquefl but contribution or deviaflation. Their warfare, like that of the old buccaneers and pirates, is directed againft the purfes and properties of individuals of the britifh nation in the Weft-Indies, not againft its government. If His Majefty hath occafionally ordered the thunder of the britifh navy to be employed againft the feaports of France, it hath been to deftroy hoftile armaments, fitting out in thefe ports with the avowed purpofe of carrying ferocious hoftility into the heart of his Empire—The peaceable ports of France have not been molefted: nor hath Sir Samuel Hood, commanding His Majefty's forces in the Weft Indies, ever hitherto exercifed his longheld maritime fuperiority, to annoy defencelefs towns or villages; on the contrary, the planters and merchants of the french fettlements have had quiet communications, coaft-wife, in their droghers and fmall craft, under his protection."

EXPLOSION MACHINERY.—The moft formidable engine of this defcription perhaps ever conftructed, was that ufed to deftroy the bridge of boats at the fiege of Antwerp, in 1585, which an author of that period ftates to have been a fhip, ftrongly timbered, containing a vault or arch of ftone and mortar, filled with 200 barrels of powder, over which are placed large ftones of all forms, cannon-fhot, iron chains, &c. fufficient to deftroy a whole city, that were exploded by a fecret fufee, contrived fo as not to fet fire to the charge till the veffel came to contact with the bridge, which it blew to atoms.

Melancholy Relation.—The fubftance of the following was communicated by a gentleman of refpectability and one of the Jury of inquifition.

In Hollis lived a family by the name of Kendrick, three in number; an old lady, aged 73, a daughter aged 40, and a fon about 30. The fon has for feveral years paft difcovered fymptoms of infanity; but had generally been able to conduct his bufinefs, with propriety, and when well was fober and regular in his deportment. But, a few days before the late fad cataftrophe, fmptoms more alarming appeared. The neighbors, who were informed of it, repeatedly called, and made his fituation the fubject of converfation with his mother and fifter, who, though feeble of his derangement, were unwilling any thing fhould be mentioned to him, or that it fhould be generally known. This reluctance in them undoubtedly arofe from the fevere fufferings the family had before experienced, in confequence of infanity; it having prematurely terminated the life of the father and two fons, not a great while fince. The mother and fifter, doted on this remaining fon and brother, perhaps to a fault; and were therefore unwilling his failings fhould be made public. Things thus remained until the 22nd April inft. Early in the morning of this day two of the neighbors called on the family, to make inquiries, and lend their affiftance. They found the young man much as he had been for feveral days before: and, after attending to fome concerns in the family, retired. About 9 o'clock and no more than two hours after they left the houfe, the young man came into the houfe of a near neighbor, his hands red with blood, and requefted him to go with him to their houfe; for his mother, he faid was dead, and his fifter nearly fo. Accordingly feveral neighbors immediately repaired thither, and found what he had faid was indeed an awful reality. The old lady was dead on the floor, and mangled in a manner too fhocking to relate. The daughter was fitting in a chair near her, in a fituation if poffible, ftill more deplorable; being cut and bruifed on her head and different parts of her body, with not lefs than twenty wounds. Medical aid was immediately called, and every affiftance rendered but the furvived only about fix hours, and expired; not being able to communicate any thing to thofe about her. Various inftruments were found in the room bloody, which it is fuppofed were ufed in this tragic fcene, fuch as the leg of a chair, a hammer, a pair of tongs, which were broken in the affray, &c. The coroners inquefl were all agreed that the awful tragedy was committed by the unhappy man; and that he was an infane and deftracted perfon.

To defcribe the horror of the fcene would be too much for the finer feelings of nature. But we would leave the fact on record, as a folemn warning againft allowing infane and diftracted perfons the priviledge of doing mifchief, by permitting them to go at liberty. The funeral was attended on Wednefday, by a very numerous concourfe of people, when a folemn and well adapted fermon was deliverrd by the Rev. Mr. Smith, from II Kings viii 13.

John Pennel Kendrick, the unhappy man, was on Tuefday laft committed to the gaol in this town. His fituation is indeed wretched; although diftracted, he at times appears concious of what he had done. He refufes to wear any of the clothes he had on when the deed was committed; becaufe he fays they were ftained with innocent blood. From his appearance he probably will not live long; but while he does, muft be an object of pity and compaffion.—Cabinet

Vaccination gains ground rapidly in France. The Bifhops, the prefects, and all public functionaries are very active in carrying into effect the decree of the minifter for its encouragement, infomuch, that 67,676 individuals have been fuccefsfully vaccinated within the fpace of fix months, and the variolous infection has conftderably declined.

DIED.—In England, Sir Richard Pearfon, Kent. Lieutenant-Governor of Greenwich Hofpital, who diftinguifhed himfelf in the American war, in a gallant action of feven hours in the Serapis frigate, againft Paul Jones, in the Bon Homme Richard.

INGENUITY OF THE SPIDER.

T. A. KNIGHT, Efq. of Herefordfhire, has, in a treatife on the culture of the Apple and Pear, introduced the following anecdote concerning this curious animal—"I have frequently placed a fpider on a fmall upright ftick, whofe bafe was furrounded by water, to obferve its moft fingular mode of efcape. After having difcovered that ordinary means of retreat are cut off, it afcends the point of the ftick, and ftanding nearly on its head, ejects its web, which the wind readily carries off to fome contagious object. Along this the fagacious infect effects his efcape; not, however until it has previoufly afcertained by feveral exertions of its whole ftrength that its web is properly attached at the oppofite end. I do not know that this inftance of the fagacity of the fpider has been noticed by any cutomological writer, and I infert it here in confequence of having feen in fome periodical publication, a very enormous account of the original of the fpider's threads which are obferved to pafs from one tree or bufh to another in dewy mornings."—London paper.

QUEBEC, June 8 h.

CANADIAN FENCIBLE INFANTRY.

Lieutenant Colonel SHANE and fe veral Officers of the Canadian Fencibles have arrived with intent to commence raifing men immediately, and, as the regiment takes the name of the Province, and is commanded by Officers well known for their intelligence and refpectability, there is little doubt but that a preferrence will be given to the corps, and that it will be foon formed.

July 16th.

Yefterday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, was felt, in this town, a guft of wind, from the weftward, attended with heavy rain, hail, thunder and lightening. The hail ftones were, in general, of the fize of piftol balls. With them fell fome pieces of fquare, round and oval ice. Some of them about an inch and a quarter in length, by about three fourths to nine tenths of an inch in breadth, and a quarter of an inch in thickne's. The writer of this paragraph had in his poffeffion, for more than a quarter of an hour, a piece of the largeft dimenfions defcribed; The windows of moft buildings, particularly elevated ones, expofed to the weft, fuffered confiderable damage. About 100 panes of glafs are fhattered and cracked in the Caftle of Saint Lewis, the churches and court houfe have fuffered confiderably, the windows of feveral dwelling houfes have alfo been much injured. The leaves of large plants in the gardens, are perforated and torn, as if by grape fhot, and the tops of tender flowers, fuch as balfamines, entirely beat off.

MISCELLANEOUS.

OBSERVATIONS AND HINTS.

AN elegant young woman, long accuftomed to a train of coxcombs, will expect fimilar attentions from her husband, and feel her mind mortified when fhe finds herfelf treated as a mere woman. From the frivolity of her mind, fhe is not poffeffed of that modeft dignity fo eflential to command the eftcem of her partner;—hence bickerings, jealoufies, and often mutual infidelity, terminated by feparation.

Good fenfe is as much fuperior to the levity of wit, as the light of the fun is to the momentary glare of a meteor; and an accomplifhed female mind is infinitely more eftimable in the eyes of reflecting men, than thofe exhibitions of feminine charms obtruded on our fancy by fafhion. Such beautiful creatures as glide along the ftreets, decorated in fhowy apparel, may amufe the paffenger; but would he wifh to fee his wife in the loofe attire of a woman of the town?—Then let us difcountenance this violation of public decency, and endeavour to perfuade the fair fex, that modefty and purity of manners are true ornaments that render their beauty at once amiable and eftimable.

Singular Act of Heroifm in a PLANTER, with the bold and enterprizing Spirit of his HORSE, as related by Mr. de FAGES, Capt. in the French Navy, in his Travels round the World in the years 1767, 1771.

A violent gale of wind fetting in from north north weft, a veffel in the road dragged her anchors, was forced upon the rocks and bulged; and while the greater part of the crew fell in her eclate facrifice to the waves, the remainder were feen from the fhore ftruggling for their lives by clinging to different pieces of the wreck. The fea ran dreadfully high, and broke over the failors with fuch amazing force, that no boat who ever would venture off to their affiftance. Meanwhile a planter, confiderably advanced in life, had come from his farm to be a fpectator of the fhipwreck; his heart was melted at the fight of the unhappy feamen; but knowing the bold and enterprizing fpirit of his horfe, and his particular excellence as a fwimmer, he inftantly determined to make a defperate effort for their prefervation. He alighted, and blew a little brandy into his horfe's noftrils, often again tearing himfelf from in his fondnefs, he inftantly rufhed into the midft of the breakers. At firft both difappeared; but it was not long before they floated on the furface, and fwam to the wreck; when taking with him two men, each of whom held by one of his boots, he brought them fafe to fhore. This perilous experiment he repeated no lefs than feven times, and faved fourteen lives to the public; but on his return the eighth time, his horfe being much fatigued, and meeting a moft formidable wave, he loft his footing, and was overwhelmed in a moment. The horfe fwam fafe to land, but his gallant rider alas, was no more!

THE BELLS OF OSTEND.

From a recent publication of the Rev. W. LISLE BOWLES.

NO, I never till life and its fhadows fhall end,
Can forget the fweet founds of the Bells of Oftend!
The day fet in darknefs, the wind it blew loud,
And rung as it paft it, through rich murm'ring fhroud,*
My forehead was wet with the fpume of the fpray;
My heart figh'd in fecret for thofe far away!
When flowly the morning advanc'd from the eaft,
The toil and the moile of the tempeft was ceas'd;
The peal, from a land I no'er faw, feem'd to fay,
"Let the ftranger forget ev'ry forrow to day!"
And I never, 'till life and its fhadows fhall end,
Can forget the fweet founds of the Bells at Oftend.
Yet the fhort-liv'd elation was mingled with pain—
I thought of thofe I left, I thought on her fair one I gave,
I thought of the kifs, the laft kifs which I gave,
And a tear of regret ftole down the wave:
I thought of the fchemes fond affection had plann'd,
Of the green, of the hawthorn, of my native land—
But ftill the fweet founds as they fwell'd on the air,
Seem'd tidings of pleafure, tho' mournful to bear;
And I never, 'till life and its fhadows fhall end,
Can forget the fweet founds of the Bells at Oftend!

ANECDOTE.

Captain Chriftie, an Irifh Officer, who ferved with confiderable credit in America, had the misfortune to be dreadfully wounded in one of the battles there. As he lay on the ground, an unfortunate foldier, who was near him, and was alfo much wounded, made a terrible howling, when he exclaimed, "D—n your eyes, what do you make fuch a noife for, do you think nobody is killed but yourfelf."

A Gentleman who lately dined with fome of his friends, being willing to rally two that fat near him, ex fumed, "Well, how pretty I am fix'd between two tailors!"—"I perceive you," replied a wag who fat oppofite, "but they ought not to be ridiculed; for they appear to be young in bufinefs, and fo very poor, that they keep but one goofe between them."

Three Attornies who were returning from London to their country habitations, overtook a cattel, and, as they were in a jovial humor, they afked him in a farcaftic manner the queftion, why his forehead's horfe was fo fat, while the reſt were to lean?"—"Yes," replied the carter (who knew them) "becauſe my foremoſt horſe is an attorney, and the other his clients."

ANECDOTE OF A JURYMAN.

It was remarkable of a citizen of Dublin, that with the moſt inflexible honeſty of opinion, he had a ſtrong ſhare of ſingular opinions, that whoever he ſat upon as a juror in queſtions of the exciſe laws, libel, or other [illegible] he conſtantly entertained [illegible] the law and juſtice of the caſe different from thoſe laid down by the judge, and taken up by his brother jurymen; but he as conſtantly perſevered in his notions, until he brought them all over. One of the judges aſked him one day how he came to be ſo forward, and to give the court ſo much trouble: "My lord," ſaid he with the utmoſt gravity, "it has been always my misfortune to be on a jury with eleven obſtinate men."

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, May 23.

It is with extreme regret we have to inform our readers of the capture of the greateſt part of the outward bound convoy for Newfoundland. The particulars of this event are given in the following letter which was received in town yeſterday.—

"CORK, May 21.—I am concerned to inform you, that the Newfoundland fleet, which ſailed hence 9th inſtant, with convoy, being met by a French frigate, were all either burnt or captured; two of them were taken by the Topaze and Roſaria, off the north weſt coaſt of Ireland. A Spaniſh corvette of 22 guns, has been taken by the Topaze. She had captured the Young William, of London, capt. Young, from Cork to Waterford, with ſpirits and potter."

The Britiſh papers continue to mention that Novoſiltzoff, a Ruſſian Envoy, has been ſent to Italy, to propoſe to the French Emperor a plan of a general pacification. If this is ſo, it ſeems already diſcovers conſiderable anxiety for peace in Alexander to ſend an Agent from Ruſſia to Italy to hunt up Bonaparte, to induce him to put an end to the war.

The following is an official account of the number of deaths at Gibraltar, during the preſence of the epidemic fever there laſt fall:

Officers	54
Soldiers	864
Soldiers' wives and Children	164
Inhabitants	4864

LONDON, May 29.

A letter received yesterday from Cork, says that that city had been thrown into such alarm in consequence of an express having arrived there with orders for every armed vessel to put to sea with the greatest expedition, and sail to the westward; from which it was inferred that the enemy had been seen in considerable force in that quarter.

May 30.

Dispatches were received last night at the Admiralty from Admiral Lord Gardner, dated the 22d inst. stating, that on the 11th his Majesty's ship La Loire, in lat. 43. 44. long. 20. 48. W. fell in with five sail of the line and three frigates (supposed from the West-Indies) standing to the eastward. She proceeded to communicate the intelligence to the squadron off Ferrol, and Vice-Admiral Sir Robert Calder immediately went in pursuit, but not getting sight of them, he thinks they have effected their return to a port in France.

The Channel fleet was left all well on Sunday last. Lord Gardner has divided it into two detachments, one of which cruizes as the in shore squadron, and the other as the out.

The two sail of the line which we announced sometime ago as having slipped out of Rochefort, are gone to the West Indies. They had about 1300 troops on board.

It has been conjectured, in consequence of a letter received yesterday from Malaga, that Lord Nelson has passed the Streights, and blockaded Cadiz. The notification mentioned in this letter was, as we have every reason to believe, in consequence of the official notice in our Gazette. We have intelligence from Cadiz of the 30th ult. which takes not the least notice of any squadron being off that port, and we have not heard that any official intelligence has been received of Lord Nelson's having passed the Streights.

The more we reflect upon the designs of the French, upon which the curious Intercepted Correspondence lately published, has thrown such strong light, the more are we convinced, that an attack upon our Indian settlements, is one of their great objects. Some private letters received within a day or two from France, strengthen our opinion. They state in positive terms, that in a certain latitude the combined fleets were to seperate, and that seven sail of the line were to be detached to the East-Indies with 5000 troops on board.—Courier.

NEW-YORK, May 28.

President Nott's Address.—We have just received the following "Address, delivered to the Candidates for the Baccalaureate in Union College, at the Anniversary Commencement, May 1st, 1805, by Eliphalet Nott, President of the College."—We cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of presenting this elegant Address to our readers. No apology is believed necessary for giving it to great a portion of our paper. Indeed those readers who have seen Mr. Nott's Discourse to the Society for the relief of Widows and Orphans, in Albany, or his Eulogium on Hamilton, would not excuse us, were we to omit to give the Address at full length.

Young Gentlemen,

This day closes your collegiate life. You have continued the term, and completed the course, of studies prescribed in this institution. You have received its honors, and are now to go forth adventurers, unsuspecting perhaps, and certainly inexperienced, into a fascinating but illusive world, where honor flaunts in factitious trappings; where wealth displays dispelling charms, and pleasure spreads her impoisoned banquets. And that too, at a period when the passions are most ungovernable—when the fancy is most vivid—when the blood flows rapidly through the veins, and the pulse of life beats high. Already does the opening scene brighten as you approach it, and happiness, smiling, but deceitful, passes before your eyes and beckons you to her embrace.

Called to address you, at this affecting crisis, and for the last time, had I, like the patriarchs of the East, a blessing at my dispofal, how gladly should I bestow it. But I have not; and can therefore only add, to the solicitude which I feel my counsel and my prayers.

Permit me to advise you then, Young Gentlemen, when you leave this seminary, and, even after you shall have chosen a profession, and entered on the business of life, still to consider yourselves only learners. Your acquirements here, though respectable, are the first rudiments merely of an education which must be hereafter pursued and completed.—In the acquisition of knowledge, you are never to be stationary, but always progressive. Nature has no where said to man, pressing forward in the career of intellectual glory, "Hitherto shalt thou come but no further." Under GOD, therefore, it depends upon yourselves to say, how great—how wise—how useful you will be. Men of moderate talents, by a course of patient application, have often risen to the highest eminence, and standing far above where the momentary sallies of uncultivated genius ever reach, have plucked from the lofty cliff its deathless laurel. Indeed, to the stature of the mind, no boundary is set. —Your bodies originally from the earth soon reach their greatest elevation, and bend downwards again towards that earth out of which they were taken. But the inner man; that sublime, that rational, that immortal inhabitant, which pervades your bosoms, if sedulously fostered, will expand and elevate itself, till touching the earth it can look above the clouds and reach beyond the stars.

Go then, and emulous to excel in whatever is splendid, magnanimous and great; with Newton, span the heavens, and numberand measure the orbs which decorate them—With Locke, analyze the human mind—With Boyle, examin the regions of organic nature. In one word, go; and with the great, and the wise, and the good, of all nations, and all ages, ponder the mysteries of Infinite Wisdom, and trace the Everlasting in his word, and in his works. A wide and unbounded prospect, spreads itself before you: in every point of which, DIVINITY shines conspicuous, and on which ever side you turn your enraptured eyes, surrounded with uncreated majesty, and seen in the light of his own glory, GOD appears. He leades the way before you, and sheds radiance on his path, that you may follow him.

Control and subjugate your passions. Originally, order prevaded human nature. The bosom of man was calm—his countenance serene. Reason sat enthroned in his heart, and to her controul and passions were subjected.—But the days of innocence are past, and with them has also past the reign of reason. Phrenzy ensues. He, who was once calm and rational, is now blind and impetuous. A rebellious influence impels him. Consequences are disregarded, and madly pressing forward to the object of desire, he exclaims, "My honor, my property, my pleasure;" but is never heard to say, "my religion, my duty, my salvation."

While reason maintained her empire, the passions were a genial flame, imparting warmth to the system, and gently accelerating the circulation of the blood. But, that empire subverted, they kindle into a VESUVIUS, burning to its centre, and pouring out on every side, its desolating lava. The passions, said an inspired Apostle, war against the soul: And the same Apostle who said this, commands you to overcome them.

Cultivate and cherish the sympathie of your nature. These thoughts blighted by the apostacy, still retain the hints of faded loveliness, and when sanctified in the heart, and unfolded in the life, even of fallen man, they possess a resistless charm, and furnish some faint idea of what he must have been in a state of innocence.

For the exercise of these sympathies, in all the paths of life, you will meet with pitiable objects, who will present their miseries to your eye, and address the moving eloquence of sorrow to your heart. Always listen to this eloquence; always pity this misery, and, if possible, relieve it. Yes, Young Gentlemen, whatever seas you may navigate, or to whatever part of the habitable world you may travel, carry with you your humanity. Even there divide your morsel with the destitute; advocate the cause of the oppressed; to the fatherless be a father, and cover the shivering limbs of the naked with your mantle. Even there, soothe the disconsolate, sympathise with the mourner, brighten the countenance bedimed with sorrow, and, like the GOD of mercy, shed happiness around you, and banish misery before you.

In all your intercourse with mankind rigidly practice justice, and scrupulously adhere to truth; other duties vary with varying circumstances. What would be liberality in one man would be parsimony in another. What would be valor on one occasion would be temerity on another. But truth and justice are immutable and eternal principles; always sacred and always applicable. In no circumstance however urgent, or crises however awful, can there be an aberration for the one or a dereliction of the other without sin. With respect to every thing else, be accomodating, but here be unyielding and invincible. Rather carry your integrity to the dungeon or the scaffold, than receive in exchange for it liberty and life.—Should you ever be called upon to make your election between these extremes, do not hesitate. It is better prematurely to be sent to heaven in honor, than, having lingered on the earth, at last to sink to hell in infamy. In every situation a dishonest man is detestable, and a liar is still more so.

I have often, Young Gentlemen, recommended to you, a sacred adherence to truth.—I would on this occasion repeat the recommendation, that I may fix it the more indelibly on your hearts. Believe me, when I tell you, that on this article you can never be too scrupulous.

Truth, is one of the first attributes of Deity. It is the boundary which seperates vice from virtue—The line, which divides heaven from hell. It is the chain which binds the man of integrety to the throne of GOD, and like the GOD to whose throne it binds him till this chain is diffolved, his word may be relied on. Suspended on this, your property, your reputation, your life are safe. But against the malice of a liar, their is no security. He can be bound by nothing. His soul is already repulsed to a returnless distance from that Divinity, a sense of whose presence is the security of virtue. He has fundered the last of those moral ligaments which bind a mortal to his duty. And having done so, through the extended region of fraud and falsehood, without a bond to check, or a limit to confine him, the dreaded enemy of innocence, he ranges; whose lips pollute even truth itself as it passes through them, and whose breath, like the cadaverous mists of Hades, blasts, and soils, and poisons as it touches.

Finally, cherish and practice religion. Man has been called, in distinction from the inferior orders of creation, a religious being, and justly so called. For though his hopes and fears may be repressed, and the moral feelings of his heart stifled for a season, nature, like a torrent, which has been obstructed, will brake forth and sweep away, those frail works which skepticism may have erected to divert its course.

There is something so repulsive in naked infidelity, that the mind approaches it with reluctance, it rinks back from it with horror, and is never settled 'till it rests on positive religion.

I am aware that that spirit of devotion, that sense of guilt and dread of punishment, which pervades the human mind, have been attributed to either the force of habit or the influence of superstition. Let the appeal be made to human nature. To the position of irreligionists on this article, human nature itself furnishes the most satisfactory refutation. Religion is a first principle of man. It shoots up from the very seat of life, it cleaves to the human constitution by a thousand figaments, it entwines around human nature and sends to the very bottom of the heart its venetrating tendrils. It cannot therefore be exterminated.—The experiment has again and again been tried, and the result has always proved worthy of the rash attempt.

Young as you are, you have witnessed, with a view of this extermination, the most desperate efforts. But just now, a formidable host of infuriated infidels were assembled. You heard them openly adjure their GOD. You saw them wreaking their vengeance on religion. For a season they triumphed. Before them, every sacred institution disappeared—every consecrated monument fell to dust.—The fervors of nature were extinguished, and the lip of devotion palsied by their approach. With one hand, they seized the thunders of the heavens, and with the other smote HIS throne who inhabited them. It seemed to crumble at the stroke—Mounting its fancied ruins, BLASPHEMY wave its terrific sceptre, and impiously looked up to those eternal brights where the Deity resides, exclaimed, "VICTORIA!"

Where now are those dreaded enemies of our religion? They have vanished from the sight. They were—but are seen no more.—Nor have the consequences of their exertions been more abiding. A great nation indeed, delivered from the restraints of moral obligation, and enfranchised with all the liberties of infidelity, were proclaimed FREE. But have they continued so? No; their minds patently recoiled from the dismal waste which skepticism had opened before them, and the cheerless darkness it had spread around them. —They suddenly arrested their step. They retraced, in sadness and sorrow, the paths which they had trodden. They consecrated again, the temples they had defiled: they rebuilt, the altar they had demolished: they sighed for the return of that religion they had banished, and spontaneously promised submission to its reign.

What are we to infer from this? That religion is congenial to human nature—that it is inseparable from it. A nation may be seduced into skepticism, but it cannot be continued in it. Why, I would ask, religion existed in the world in ages which are past—why does it exist now—why will it exist in ages to come? Is it because Kings have ordained, and Priests defended it? No; but because GOD formed man to be religious. Its great and eternal principles, are inscribed on his heart; they are inscribed, in characters which are indelible; nor can the violence of infidelity blot them out. Obscured indeed they may be by the influence of sin, and remain not legible during the rage of passion. But a calm ensues: the calm of reason, or the night of adversity, from the midst of whose darkness a light arises which renders the before our eyes the altar and the victim—the LAMB of GOD, which taketh away the sins of the world.

The introduction of CHRISTIANITY, was called the coming of the Kingdom of heaven. No terms could have been more appropriate;—for though it manifested the mercy, and from it caught the spirit of the heavens. The moral gloom which shrouded the nations, receded before it. The temples of superstition and of cruelty, consecrated by its entrance, became the asylum of the wretched, and refounded with their anthems of grace.

Most benign has been the influence of Christianity, and were it cordially received, and universally submitted to, war would cease; injustice be banished, and primeval happiness revisit the earth. Every inhabitant, pleased with his situation, resigned to his lot, and full of the hopes of heaven, would pass agreeably through life, and meet death without a sigh.

Is the morality of the Gospel preeminently excellent? So is its object pre-eminently glorious. Philosophy, confines its views to this world principally. It endeavours to fatisfy man with the groveling joys of earth, till he returns to that dust out of which he was taken. Christianity, takes a nobler flight. His course is directed towards immortality. Thither the conducts her votary, and never forsakes him, till, having introducted him into the society of angels, she fixes his eternal residence, among the spirits of the just.

Philosophy, can only have a sigh, a longing sigh, after immortality. Eternity is to her an unknown vast, over which the soars on conjecture's trembling wing. Above—beneath—around —is an unfathomable void; and doubt, uncertainty, or dispair, are the result of all her enquiries.

Christianity, on the other hand, having furnished all necessary information concerning life, with firm and unfaultering step, crosses death's narrow isthmus, and boldly launches forth into that dread futurity which borders on it. Her path is marked with glory. The once dark, dreary region brightens as she paffes over it. —Faith follows where she advances; till reaching the summit of everlasting hills, an unknown scene, endless varieties of loveliness and beauty, presents itself, over which the ravished eye wanders, without a cloud to dim or a limit to obstruct its sight. In the midst of this scene, (rendered luminous by the glory which covers it, the city—the palace—the THRONE of GOD appears. Trees of life wave their ambrofial tops around it; rivers of salvation issue from beneath it. Before it, angels touch their harps of sweet melody, and saints, in sweet response, breathe forth to the listening heavens their grateful songs. The breezes of Paradise waft the symphony, and the bending sky directs it to the earth. The redeemed of the LORD, catch the distant sound, and feel a sudden rapture. 'Tis the voice of departed Friendship—friendship, the loss of which they mourn upon the earth, but which they are now allured will be restored in the heavens: from whence no one is heard to say, "Fear not ye, death cannot injure you; the grave shall not confine you; through its chill mansion, GRACE will conduct you up to glory. We wait your arrival—make haste, come away." All this christianity will do for you. It will do more than this; consecrates the sepulchre, into which your bodies, already touched by death, will presently defcend. There, mouldered into duft, your flefh fhall reft in HOPE. Not will the feafon of its humiliation laft for ever. Chriftianity faithful to her truft, appears for its redemption. She approaches, and ftands before the tomb: She ftreaches out her fceptre and fmites the fepulchre.—Its moft grown covering rends afunder. She cries to the filent inhabitants within it.—Her energizing voice echoes along the cold, damp vaults of death, renovating fkin and bones, and duft, and putrefaction. —Corruption, puts on incorruption, and mortality immotality. Her former habitation, thus refined and fublimated by the refurrection, the exulting fons re-enter, and thencefoith the meafure of her joy is full.

Here thought and language fail me. Infpiration itfelf defcribes the glories of futurity by declaring them indifcribable. Eye hath not feen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive, the things which are prepared for the people of GOD.—What ideas are thefe! How muft the foul exult at the profpect, and fwell with the amazing conception!

As Chriftianity exhibits the moft enrapturing motives to the practice of virtue, fo it urges the moft tremendous conffderations to deter from vice. She declares, folemnly and irrevocably declares, "That the wages of fin are DEATH." And to enforce her declaration, points to the concluding fcene of nature: when, amidft a departing heaven and a diffolving world, the SON OF MAN fhall deicend, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of GOD, to be glorified in his faints and take vengeance on his enemies!

Such is the gofpel—and here I reft my obfervations—at this affecting crifis, my beloved pupils, THE GOSPEL I deliver you. It is the moft [illegible] gift; and I folemnly adjur you, to preferve it inviolate forever To whatever part of GOD's creation you may wander, carry this with you. Confult it in profperity; refort to it in trouble; fhield yourfelves with it in danger, and reft your fainting head on it in death.

More efficacious than the fabled ring of——it confecrates its keeper; preferves his life, and eternizes his memory. While you prize and preferve this gift, which I now entruft to you, your happinefs is fecure. The world may be convulfed around you, the elements diffolve, and the heavens depart, ftill your happinefs is fecure——but fhould you ever, in an hour of rafhnefs, be tempted to caft it from you; remember, that with it, you caft away SALVATION. This gone——all is loft! Immortality is loft——and loft alfo is the foul which might otherwife have inherited and enjoyed it—Under thefe impreffions, go forth into the world—and may GOD go with you.

Committing you to his care, and with a heart full of of parental felicitude for your welfare, I bid you an affectionate and final FAREWELL.

SAVANNAH July 13.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at St. Mary's, to the Editors of this paper, dated July 6. "At this moment is paffing this place, on the oppofite fhore, the fchr. Matilda, late French privateer, captured by the Cambrian frigate, capt. Bradford, and manned by her with 100 picked men, for the purpofe of cutting out two prizes, and the privateer which captured them. The Spaniards are prepared, and in a little time, I prefume, an action will commence—they are not now diftant more than fix miles. The Cambrian has captured another French or Spanifh privateer."

By capt. Chadwick, of the fchr. Hannah, arrived here yefterday from St. Mary's, we have been favored with an account of an engagement which took place on Saturday laft, at Rofe Bluff, between a fchr. fitted out by the Cambrian frigate, for the purpofe of cutting out from their moorings on the Spanifh fhore, the veffels referred to in the above extract of a letter. The fchr. fitted out by the Britifh frigate, was captured by her from the French about two weeks fince, after a chafe of 28 hours, between Charleffon and Tibee bar, mounting eighteen 9 pounders, and carrying 120 men. She appeared aground off St. Mary's at 3 o'clock, and came to—and at 4 got under weigh again, and failed up the river to commence the attack, which took place about 5. The engagement lasted near an hour, when three boats were manner by the British schooner to board the privateer, which they effected and retook the ship, brig and privateer. The English had four men killed and ten wounded. The Lieutenant received a shot through his jaw and in one of his thighs, but was not thought in a dangerous state. On the part of the Spaniards five were killed, and fifteen made prisoners, the remainder jumped overboard and swam to the shore. Among the former, were captain, Hooper, the commander of the privateer, and capt. John Randoloph, late of this city.

WILMINGTON, N. C. July 9.

The schooner Orange, capt. Pratt, arrived here on the 7th instant, in 7 days from St. Thomas.

Our correspondent at that island observes, under date of June 28—"You have no doubt heard of the arrival of the fleets in the West Indies, both French and English. Although the English have yet done nothing, the French have captured the whole of the Antigua and St. Kitts or Surinam fleets of valuable merchantmen, and their convoys, (four frigates and four sloops of war) and sent them to Guadaloupe, wither they have all safely arrived. There are now at Guadaloupe 32 sail of those prizes not yet sold."

By the sloop Venus, capt. Pratt, we have received a file of Charlestoo papers to the 17th inst. inclusive, from which we have made the following extracts:

CHARLESTOWN, July 15.

A letter received by a gentleman in this city from a respectable character in Santo Domingo, dated the 25th of June, states that it was reported there, that the French and Spanish fleets had taken the Cape and Port au Prince; and that the Brigands had retreated to the mountains with great loss, without burning these cities.

NEW YORK, July 20.

Capt. Burdick arrived here from Charleston informs, that a report prevailed at that city, that the British frigate Leander had a few days before sent her boats up the River St. Mary's, and retook a ship and a brig which had been captured a short time before by a Spanish privateer, supposed to be that which made the above captures.

The Navy of Great Britain.

As the fleets of France, and her colonies Spain and Batavia, have not only manifested a desire to risk an encounter with the British, but have actually thrown themselves into the way most likely to prove their relative powers, it may not be impertinent, at this time, to give our readers some idea of the British naval force. Some days ago, while offering a conjecture on the probable design of Bonaparte in sending out the late and present detachments, we stated that, in November, the British fleet, in commission, amounted to about 70 ships of the line: we mentioned this number from memory, and we have not had any means of ascertaining its correctness. We are now able to ascertain the strength of that navy on the first of April, 1805—viz.

Total Navy of the United Kingdom 933

As the distribution of this enormous force has been much changed since the above date, it would be of no use to mention it. For instance, the number of vessels then stated to be in the West Indies (generally) is only four ships of the line, sixteen frigates, and fifty-one sloops, &c.—We hope however, to be in a short time able to ascertain its distribution on the first of May, which will enable us to determine at least the force on the home stations at that period.

BLACK TROOPS.

The British West India Islands are defended, as well as cultivated by blacks. —There are in the islands eight regiments of troops, whose ranks are filled with Africans, though officered by Europeans. "In every service," says an account from Dominica, "they have been engaged in during the last and present war, their behaviour has gained commendation. In the late attacks of the troops from the Rochefort squadron they shared the laurels of one of the bravest British regiments, (the 46th) and it is owing to them in an eminent degree, that the British flag now flies at Dominica. Yet these are troops whom West India prejudice would fain have disbanded!—these are men who, as some tell us, are fit only to be driven like horses, and sunk for ever in the most abject and brutalizing bondage!"

Russian Discipline.—No army in Europe equals the Russians, in the resemblance it bears to a machine moved by the word of command. An amusing instance of this is given in a French work which was published some time ago. It occurred when the Empress Elizabeth was carrying on war against the King of Prussia. The army being then on the frontiers of Germany, a small picquet was placed at some distance from the Camp, with the view of watching the motions of the Prussian troops. The soldiers employed in this service were supplied with provisions for 24 hours. The enemy however came on unexpectedly from a different quarter, and a battle ensued, which entirely drove from the mind of the commander all thoughts of his picquet. Some days after, however, he recollected the circumstance, and caused enquiries to be made through the army, if any one had seen or heard of it. The answers were all in the negative, upon which a messenger was dispatched to the place where they had been stationed. There accordingly they were found, fixed to the spot, and reduced to the last extremity of hunger, but never thinking of moving. On being asked why, when their provisions failed, they had not returned to the camp? They were astonished at the question. They had no orders.

From a late London Paper.

Encouragement of virtue.—On the first of May last according to annual custom, under the will of a Mr. Raine, formerly a brewer in London, six Maidens, who had obtained the age of 22, educated at his alylum, and bringing testimonials of their good moral character, met to draw lots for the prize of 100l. sterling, as a marriage portion; when the lot fell on a young woman, who had discovered that the object of her choice was undeserving of her affection, the marriage did not take place, but it did not preclude her further choice, agreeably to the will of the deceased donor. The intended husband must be a mechanic of the parish of St. George, and neither a soldier, sailor, nor waterman." To what better use can the overgrown rich devise the surplus of their wealth, than the above?

Upon the expected death of the king of Spain in 1759, the Duke of Newcastle, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, gave orders to his servants, that if any messenger arrived by express even if it was at midnight, he should be instantly introduced to him. Pending this order, a man on horseback, knocking furiously at the outer gate, about three o'clock in the morning, he was instantly admitted, and brought up to the Duke's bed chamber. "Well, my good friend," says the Duke (putting on his stockings, and surveying the man splashed all over with mud from top to toe) "you must have rode hard?"—"Most damnably! never once slept during the whole journey."—"But you're sure he's dead?"—"Oh! most certainly."—"Ah! poor man, he's got out of a troublesome world at last.—Pray when did you leave Madrid?"—"Madrid!" says the man in amaze; "Lord! your Grace, I never was there in my life."—"And where the devil else did you come from?"—"Why from Richmond in Yorkshire, your Grace, and am come express to acquaint you of the death of Sam Dickinson, the exciseman, whose place you know your Grace promised me at the last election, the moment the breath was out of his body."

The Duke had great bustle and appearance of business in his manner—always in a hurry, and generally indiscreet, though quick in his conversation. It was this manner that induced the late Dowager Lady Townshend to say of him, "That he always put her in mind of a man that lost two hours in the morning, and was looking for them the rest of the day."

Egyptian Wheat.—A pound of this grain having been lately sent by Mr. W. Moore, of Dublin, as a present to Mr. Jefferson, the following account, taken from a late English paper, will shew its produce, and the estimation in which it is held in England. "Mr. Showler of Lincoln, three years ago, planted 25 grains of this wheat. The second year's produce was to bushels. This year he reaped upwards of forty quarters, part of which, the last week, he sold at 5 guineas per quarter.

From an Eastern Paper.

ON THE DREAD OF THUNDER.

Beasts discover a consciousness of danger at the approach of thunder tempest; they leave their food; and their looks and postures betray symptoms of fear and amazement. But birds sheltered from the fatal bolts by their feathers are fearless. While the thunder roars and the dark and heavy cloud is moving on towards them, they are often seen in a playful frolicksome mood. Both are guided by an unerring instinct. Beasts are sometimes struck dead by the lightning; they are in real danger; and have, therefore, reason to fear. But lightning, which has power to rive the strongest oaks and even the hardest rocks, seldom, if ever, passes between the feathers, and pierces the bodies of birds. The latter, as if conscious of their safety, and, at the same time, exhilirated by the change of air, that begins to be purified and sweetened by exhalations from the gathering clouds, discover marks of glee: and they have indeed real cause for their expressive marks of joy.

Man, exalted by reason, and still more by religion, should in this, as in all other respects, act a higher part than the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air. A thunder tempest presents one of the sublimest scenes in nature; and its sublimity is blended with a degree of awfulness proportionate to which thoughtless, and much more a frolicksome levity, during such a scene, though becoming birds, would be highly unbecoming men and women. On the other hand, they should not discover the stupid amazement, nor the frantick fright of beasts.

Thunder and lightning are necessary agents in the grand operations of nature:—they are "Ministers of good" to mankind, and their general tendency is to save life rather than to destroy it. By killing noxious vapours and clarifying and sweetening the air, they render it wholesome and prevent the spread of pestilence and other mortal diseases. For one person, destroyed by lightning, thousands and hundreds of thousands, would be destroyed by poisons and mortal contagions in the atmosphere, if this powerful instrument to cleanse it were never used.

The fear arising from thunder storms should therefore be in a manner, lost in gratitude for the general good, which they occasion: and parents instead of terring before their children, on such occasions, an example of consternation, and wild affright, which would tend to render them miserable through life, should endeavor to fortify their minds by arguments drawn from reason, philosophy and religion.

Dr. Franklin, when a child, found the long graces used by his father very disagreeable.—One day, after the winter's provisions had been salted: "I think, father," said Benjamin, "if you bid grace over the whole cask, once for all, it would be a vast saving of time."

In Turkey, if a Butcher sells short weight, or stinking meat, for the first offence his meat is all given to the poor; he is tied to a post all day in the sun, a piece of stinking meat is hung close to his nose; besides, he is sentenced to pay a sum of money. For the second offence, he undergoes a severe corporal punishment, and pays a heavy fine; and for the third offence, he is put to death.

If a Baker sells short weight, or bad bread, for the first offence his bread is given to the poor, and he is nailed to his door, sometimes by one ear, sometimes by two, for the space of twenty four hours. For the second offence, his bread is given to the poor, and he receives two or three bastinadoes on his feet, sometimes on his back, afterwards they put his head through a hole in a large board loaded with lead, and force him to walk through the principal streets, until he is almost exhausted; if he survives this, and commits a third offence, he is beheaded.

SARAH, dutchess of Marlborough, was accustomed to make an annual feast to which she invited all her relations. At one of these family meetings she drank all their healths, adding, "what a glorious sight it is to see such a number of branches flourishing from one root:"—but observing Jack Spencer laugh, insisted, on knowing what occasioned his mirth, and promised to forgive him, be it what it would—"Why then, madam," said he, "I was thinking how much more all the branches would flourish, if the old root was under ground."

This remark so much irritated her, that she turned him out of the house, and ordered him never to enter her doors more. He soon after made his entre through one of the parlour windows, and made his peace.

One of the famed Literati, a country sculptor, was ordered to engrave on a tombstone the following words:

"A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband."

But the stone being small, he engraved on it,

"A virtuous woman is a 1/10 to her husband"

A Melancholy affair took place on the 24th ult. in Robeson county, North Carolina. A runaway African Negro of John M'Neill, Esq. of Lumberton, called at the house of Mr. Wm. Harrison, and in his absence took from it a gun which was hanging ready loaded with 20 buck shot, he nevertheless took down a shot bag, and put in a more shot, and then went off into an adjoining Swamp. When Mr. Harrison returned home, on being informed of the circumstance, he collected a couple of neighbours, who, with their guns, went with him in search of the Negro. They soon found him sitting under a tree, and being within a few feet of him, Mr. Harrison called to the Negro to remain where he was, or he would shoot him. The Negro instantaneously fired at Mr. Harrison, and the enormous load of the gun went through his body; and what is wonderful, he made a step, fired at the negro and shot him in the neck, so that both fell & died in a few minutes. The two neighbours of Mr. Harrison both fired at the negro, the one killed him and the other lodged some small shot in his side, but Mr. Harrison's shot had proved mortal. Mr. Harrison was a respectable citizen, and has left behind him a wife and four young children.

MADAM TALIEN.

THE celebrated Madam Talien—one of the most graceful and accomplished, at the same time, most meretricious women of France is, once more, about to take a new name.—She was some time since divorced from Talien; and then married to M. de Fontenoy;—from whom (he has lately been divorced; and is for a —— time to be led to the altar, by M. de Cavamagni; contrary to the wishes of all his family.—She has for many years supported an elegant style of living, at Paris; and her house has been the asylum of genius and wretchedness. She complains loudly of the ingratitude of the Emperor and Empress of France. When Bonaparte was in disgrace, after the affair of Vendom, he was dependant on Madam Talien for even necessaries; and when the Empress Josephine, was the friend of Barras, she was on the most intimate terms with Madam T. whom they have recently treated with cold neglect.

FROM THE COLUMBIAN CENTINEL.

DOES the bosom cease to glow,
Melt the lyre in silence lie—
Does the heart beat languid?—No—
Friendship's flame can never die.
Never will it quit the breast;
Where it once has been a guest.
Dance the spirits nimbly round
Does life's current lightly flow?
At the visit sprightly bound
Beats the heart responsive?—No.
When our dearest hopes are cross'd,
Music's magic power is lost.
Is the bosom sear'd in snow
Are its bell emotions chill'd?
Does it cease to vibrate?—No.
'Tis alone by sorrow kill'd.
But death's stern hand must first be took,
Before it can be cold to thee.

GOOD sense is as much superior to the levity of wit, as the light of the sun is to the momentary glare of a meteor; and an accomplished female mind is infinitely more estimable in the eyes of reflecting men, than those exhibitions of feminine charms obtruded on our fancy by fashion. Such beautiful creatures as glide along the streets, decorated in showy apparel, may amuse the passenger; but would he wish to see his wife in the loose attire of a woman of the town?—Then let us discountenance this violation of public decency, and endeavour to persuade the fair sex, that modesty and purity of manners are true ornaments that render their beauty at once amiable and estimable.

CATHOLIC RELIGION. The adjourned debate on this interesting subject took place in the house of lords on the 18th May. The earl of Buckingham, the archbishop of Canterbury, the lord chancellor, and others, spoke against the motion: lords Suffolk, Hutchinson, Moira, &c. in favor of the petition. Lord Grenville made a very able rep y to all the arguments adduced against his motion. With regret, though not with disappointment, we state the result of the debate. Contents, 49—non contents, 178—majority against the catholics 129.

The catholic question being the order of the day in the house of commons the same day, the petition was read to the house on the motion of Mr. Fox. As the topic which, on this occasion, demanded his attention, was of the deepest importance, for the speech which he delivered possessed the highest excellence. "I rise, (says Mr. Fox) on the present occasion, with no inconsiderable degree of anxiety, in bringing before the house a measure of so much importance, and pregnant with so many great and eventful consequences, distant or immediate; in a degree, indeed, as to exceed in magnitude any measure which it ever has fallen to my lot to submit to the consideration of parliament." Mr. Grattan (from Ireland) delivered a bold and energetic (tho' maiden) speech in support of the motion. Dr. Duigenan (also from Ireland) spoke in warm terms against the petition. Next day the debates were resumed, and after many able speeches on both sides, the house divided on Mr. Fox's motion —ayes 125—noes 337—majority 212.

Thus has fallen to the ground one of the most important questions that could occupy the attention of the British Parliament.

WHEREAS, the House of William Berczy Esq. was broken open some time during the Night of the 14th instant, and the same ransacked from one end to the other.—This is to give Notice, that whoever shall lodge an information, so that the offender, or offenders, may be brought to justice, shall upon conviction thereof, receive Twenty Dollars. THE SINGULAR HISTORY OF A PEASANT OF SYRIA.

A Peasant, near Damascus, in the year that the locusts covered the plains of Syria, to supply the urgent necessities of his family, was daily obliged to sell his implements of labour. Whilst he was chapening some corn, he heard tell of the succeſſes of Mourat Bey, who, after vanquishing his enemies, had entered Grand Cairo in triumph. They painted the size, character and origin of this warrior. They related the manner he has arisen from the state of slavery to his present greatneſs.

The astonished countryman knew him to be one of his sons, carried off from him at eleven years old. A ray of hope revived in his breast. He lost no time in conveying to his family the provisions he had purchased, recounts what he had learnt, and determines to set out for Egypt. His wife and children bathed him with their tears, offering up their prayers for his safe return. He went to the port of Alexandria where he embarked and landed at Damietta.

A son who had quitted the religion of his forefathers to Mahometism, and who saw himself incircled with all the splendor of the moſt brilliant fortune, is it likely he will acknowledge him? This idea hung heavy upon his heart. On the other hand, the desire of securing his family from the horrors of a famine, the hopes of recovering a child, whose loſs he had long bewailed, supported his courage, and animated him to continue his journey.

He enters the capital and repairs to the palace of Mourat Bey. He presents himself to the prince's attendants and desires permission to speak to him. He urges, he ardently solicits an audience, his dress and his whole appearance, which bespoke poverty and misfortune were not calculated to obtain what he sought for; but his age, that age so much respected in the east, pleaded in his favour.

One of the officers informed Mourat Bey, that a wretched old man desired to speak to him. "Let him enter," says he. The peasant advances with trembling steps on the rich carpet which covered the hall of the divan, and approaches the Bey, who was reclining on a sopha, embroidered with silk and gold. The various feelings which oppressed his mind deprived him of utterance. Recollecting at length the child that had been stolen from him, and the voice of nature getting the better of his fears, he throws himself at his feet, and embracing his knees, he cries out,—"You are my child." The Bey raises him up, and endeavours to recollect him, and on a further explanation finding him to be his father, he seats him by his side, and loads him with caresses.

After the tenderest effusions of the heart, the old man painted to him the deplorable situation in which he had left his mother and his brethren. The prince proposed to him to send for them to Egypt and make them partake of his riches and his power, provided they would embrace Mahometism.

The generous old Christian had foreseen this proposal, and fearing lest young people might be dazzled with it, had not suffered one of his children to accompany him. He stedfastly rejected therefore this offer of his son, and had courage even to remonstrate with him on his change of religion.

Mourat Bey, seeing that his father remained inflexible, and that the distress his family was in, demanded immediate succour, ordered him a large sum of money, and sent him back to Syria with a small vessel laden with corn.

The happy countryman returned as soon as possible to the plains of Damascus. His arrival banished misery and tears from his rural dwelling, and restored joy, comfort and happiness.

A Caution against making too much haste to be Rich.

A Miller had comfortably supported his family for many years, by the profits of a grist mill; and in the course of honest industry, he led a contented life until (unhappily for his repose) a neighbour of his chanced to find a large treasure that had been hidden in the earth. This incident poisoned the miller's peace and made him as restless as a fish out of water. "Must I (tho't he) drudge daily at my mill for a bare livelihood, while neighbour Goodluck has made his fortune in a trice, and is strutting and riding about in his fine carriage?" From that time, the miller when he rose up and when he lay down was constantly thinking of money hidden in the earth; at length he dreamed that a large pot of money was buried under one corner of his mill. He awaked in raptures, but wanted to have the dream repeated, that so he might know for certainty that there was no deception in it.—Every thing happened according to his wishes; for the very next night he was visited in his sleep with the same golden dream.—The thing was now made certain.—The miller rose early in the morning, and after a violent struggle, having removed a large and heavy stone that lay under that particular corner of the mill to which his fortunate dream had directed, and then striking with an iron bar, he plainly heard the pot ring.—Striking again, the MONEY itself refounded clear and distinct to his imagination.—There was now a full demonstration of his success. He hastens to call his wife and to obtain her help in lifting out the treasure.—"Wife, (said he, (while tears of joy glistened in his eyes) "wife lay aside your spinning wheel, you will never need to use THAT, nor to touch your finger to a distaff any more—I have found a large pot of money! it is under the great corner stone of my mill, come along with me and help me to take it out."

She hastily arose, and they ran both together to the fortunate place—where—not a pot of money was seen; but the mill itself, undermined in digging for the money, having toppled over, was beheld laying in ruins: and in the loss of the mill, the daily support of the family was destroyed. Reader, do you smile at the miller's folly? Look around in this country and you will find thousands like him, who quitting the small, but certain gains of honest industry, to grasp imaginary riches, have plunged themselves and their families into poverty and wretchedness.

Anecdote of Alexander Pope.

An instance of the personal humility and elegant mode by which this celebrated author attracted and repressed the asperity of observation, by making himself at once the cause of, and excuse for, supposed neglect, has been mentioned to me from unquestionable authority, namely, that of the person in whose favour he disqualified himself.

Mrs. Greville, a lady of considerable fashion, and well known in the higher circles of those days for her taste and accomplishments, resided near Twickenham, and had the good fortune to attract the attention of Mr. Pope. He called upon her one morning; she was dressing. He did not send up his name; but the young lady that was her companion, to the interrogatories of Mrs. G. respecting her visitor, replied, that he was a little man, mean in his appearance, and shabby in his dress.

Satisfied with this description, Mrs. G. finished dressing with great composure; and when this operation was performed to her satisfaction, descended to the parlor, where the first object that struck her eyes was a man universally celebrated, and from whom a visit was deemed, even by the highest rank of society, so peculiar an honor, that she could scarcely believe that she saw before her Mr. Pope.

Shocked at the solecism in politeness of which she had been guilty, Mrs. G. conceived, that the only chance she had for an excuse was to turn it off upon her companion, whom she rated for not having with more accuracy described the gentleman who had called, as to this inadvertence she attributed the cause why she had suffered Mr. Pope, whose genius she so much admired, and whose visit she esteemed such a particular honor, to attend her leisure.

Mr. Pope, with a smile, interfered, by saying, that, "he was at all times happy to attend the commands of so fair a lady; therefore to wait was a duty, rather than inconvenience; and he was sure she had no reason to be angry with the young gentlewoman, as it was from her too accurate description of the visitor that he was suffered to continue alone a moment. The fault, Madam, be assured, was not in her negligence, but in my conformation, and perhaps a little in my disregard to appearance; and let me tell you, my good lady, that these, though faults, are very wholesome admonitions, for while, more truly than the reflections of a mirror, they shew us how our figures strike the eyes of others, they warn us to pay more respect to the opinion of the world, and our situation in it, than to neglect even an indifferent person, when it may be a little amended by a trifling attention to so trifling a thing as dress.

ANECDOTE OF THE PRESENT LORD HOWE.

His Lordship, during the last war, was told one night when at sea, that the ship was on fire near the powder-room—"If that be the case," said his lordship coolly, proceeding at the same time, with much deliberation, to put on his clothes, "we shall soon hear a further report of the matter."—Away, however, flew the terrified officer, who brought the intelligence, and soon returned, panting, to say that "his lordship need not be afraid, as the fire was extinguished."—"I never was yet afraid in my life, sir," was the reply, looking the lieutenant full in the face. "Pray how does a man feel when he is afraid?—I do not ask you how he looks."

Antiquities and Curiosities

In the Dutchess of Portland's Museum—and the price they sold at.

A lock of the hair of Mary Queen of France, daughter of Henry VII. taken from her corpse at St. Edmund's Bury, 1784, by the late Sir J. Cullum, Baronet; sold for six guineas.

A cameo of the head of Augustus Cæsar, upon a remarkable fine onyx, the head white, upon a jacinth ground, the workmanship of superlative excellence. It was found at Malta.—Sold to Mr. Jones for 225 guineas.

The head of Jupiter Serapis, cut out of green basaltes, a most inimitable piece of sculpture, of Egyptian workmanship, from the Barberini cabinet at Rome. It is said to have been the identical urn which contained the ashes of the Roman Emperor Alexander Severus and his mother Mammea, which was deposited in the earth about the year 235 after Christ, and was dug up by order of Pope Barberini, named Urban VIII. between the years 1623 and 1644. The materials of which it is composed emulate an onyx, the ground a rich transparent dark amethystine colour, and the snowy figures which adorn it are in bas relief, on workmanship above all encomium, and such as cannot but excite in us the highest idea of the arts of the ancients. Its demensions are nine inches and three quarters high, and twenty one inches and three quarters in circumference. Sold to the Duke of Marlborough for 980 guineas.

Eighteen drawings of Hollar's in one lot, sold for 20 guineas.

Two miniatures of Sir W. Raleigh and his son capt. Walter Raleigh, sold for 44l.

A portrait of the Dutchess de la Valiere, by Petitot, 84l.

Queen Elizabeth's little Prayer Book, containing six prayers composed by her Majesty, and written by her own hand in the neatest and most beautiful manner on vellum; two in English, the other four in Latin, Greek, Italian and French. On the inside of the cover her own portrait, and that of the Duke d'Alencon, the binding black shagreen with enamelled clasps, and in the centre of each a ruby. Bought by Mr. Glover for 100 guineas.

At the late Assizes for Norwich, (England,) a case was tried in which the matter in dispute was a horse, sold for 45l. and a verdict was given for the plaintiff in 52l. damages. The plaintiff and his friends exulted greatly at their success, but their pleasure was but transitory, for, upon the taxation of costs, the plaintiff's attorney's bill, which amounted to 207l. 18s. 2d. was reduced to 100l. leaving the winner to pay 107l. 18s. 2d. and the loser 100l.

During the popedom of Boniface, a pilgrim was introduced to him, as being a remarkable resemblance both in face and figure. The Pope, looking at him asked him "If his mother had not been at Rome;" no, holy father, answered he, but my father has.

That noble mansion and fine estate, Fisherwick Park, in the county of Stafford, the residence of Lord Spencer Chichester, was sold yesterday, at Garraway's Coffee House, by Mr. Robins, of Warwick street, for 143,000l. to a gentleman, we understand, in the potatoe trade.

QUEBEC, June 8th.

Tuesday last the anniversary of His Majesty's birth day, was ushered in with unusual expectation, not so much from the ordinary ceremonies, or an extraordinary military appearance, as from the known intention of LADY MILNES to present Colours to Col. Hale's battalion of British militia. At an early hour a great concourse of spectators assembled on the grand parade. For a short time the weather was very unfavorable, but it soon cleared up to the no small satisfaction of all descriptions of persons. By 9 o'clock the troops and militia volunteers, with all the officers of Col. Hale's battalion, were on the parade, under arms, forming a square, in three battalions. When in line the right was formed by two flank companies of the 6th, and the detachment, in garrison, of the 49th regiment: the left by the 41st regiment, and the center by the volunteers. The right and left of the line were flanked by detachments of the R. Artillery, with each two field pieces; and the right and left of the volunteers by two other detachments of the militia volunteer Artillery, also with two field pieces to each detachment.

At 10 o'clock, previously to which there had been a Levee at the castle, LADY MILNES entered the square, attended by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in the militia uniform and a numerous suite of ladies and gentlemen. Her ladyship's head-dress was ornamented with an appropriate plumage, coquelicot and black, answering to the militia uniform. The heads of Mrs. Hale and Mrs. Ryland who accompanied her, were decorated in the same stile, Col. Dechambault was the bearer of the colours. Her ladyship was received by the troops and volunteers, with military honors. Being arrived in front of the volunteers, the Colours were consecrated by the Rev. Mr. E. C. Wright, with the following prayer.

"O LORD GOD the protector of all them that put their trust in thee, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy, be pleased graciously to look down upon these thy servants this day assembled in arms; prosper their honorable exertions for the good of their Country, preserve amongst them a zeal for thy holy religion, a firm attachment to the person and government of their Sovereign, and a due sense of the inestimable advantages they enjoy under the best of Constitutions—bless O Lord these men whom patriotic ardour has prompted to step forward in these times of peril. May these Standards about to be presented, be the bond of their Union and the centre of their power! And should an ambitious and implacable foe attempt to disturb that tranquility which this Province has happily enjoyed for years, may they stand a wall of fire around these banners, and prove to him that their liberties, civil and religious, are too valuable to be forfeited but with life.—We praise thee O God that thou hast, during a period of unparalleled anarchy and confusion, extended thy protecting arm as well over the Mother Country as this her remote Colony, and permitted us to continue a free and independent nation. We also magnify thy holy name that thou hast vouchsafed to us a return of this auspicious day which gav birth to the best of Sovereigns, continue O Lord thy Almighty protection to him, give him health and length of days, and grant that there may not be wanting one of his illustrious line to reign gloriously over a loyal people to remotest generations.—To thee O Almighty God are these Colours now dedicated, in full confidence that they never will be unfurled for the purposes of faction, ambition, or aggression,—but for the defence of thy most holy religion, for the security of our families, our laws and liberties, for the protection of every thing which as Christians and men we hold most dear."

LADY MILNES then presented the Colours to Col. Hale, whom she addressed in the following words:

"I put these Colours into your hands in the fullest trust and confidence that you will never part with them but with your lives—I am highly gratified in being the person to present to you so sacred a depositi; and as the Quebec Militia has formerly given such honorable proofs of loyalty and patriotism, I shall only, in the most earnest manner, entreat you to keep the year 1775 ever in your minds; and may Almighty God bless your laudable endeavours, to emulate so bright an example."

To which Col. Hale made answer.

"We receive Madam, with pride and with gratitude, the Splended Colours Your Ladyship has the goodness to present to us: We receive them as a very flattering token of the confidence reposed in our loyalty; and we will gallantly defend them, whenever the occasion may present itself.

"The year 1775 is already engraven upon most of the ornaments of our uniform: We now see it upon our Colours; and the memorial will make a deeper impression from your Ladyship's animating exhortation.

"I have only to add, that if any thing were wanting to enhance the value of a gift we so highly prize, it would be found in the gracious manner of the hand that bestows it."

After the Junior Officers had retired with the Colours, Col. Hale addressed the Battalion as follows:

"Gentlemen and volunteers,

"In receiving your Colours from the Lieutenant Governor's Lady, I have endeavoured to express the gratitude you must feel for so handsome a present: I have professed to her Ladyship, that you receive them as a flattering mark of the confidence placed in your loyalty, and that you will bravely defend them, whenever the occasion shall call upon you.

"In saying this, I am convinced that I have said no more than is already ratified in the mind of every man that I am now addressing; and I am equally convinced, that my profession will be as pointedly fulfilled in his person, whenever trial shall be made.

"The Colours must be considered as those of the whole Battalion; but it is justice to add, that to you who have voluntarily attained this martial appearance, by sacrifices to laudable, both pecuniary and personal, the rest of the Battalion owe the singular and proud distinction of obtaining the first Colours ever displayed by Militia in Canada."

The solemnity and grandeur of the scene, whilst deeply impressive, must have had an highly animating effect. It was a scene unparalleled in this country. The dignified appearance of Lady Milnes, of whose figure too much cannot be said, greatly aided the impression. If any thing be wanting to the revival of that spirit which the great author of Reflections on the French Revolution considered, and bitterly, though beautifully deplored as irretrievably lost, such scenes as the one we witnessed, on this occasion, must infallibly produce the effect.

After this ceremony the troops and volunteers marched out to the field, on the plains, where they formed in line. After the arrival of His Excellency, attended by Col. Brock, the Commandant; the field officers and other gentlemen; the Artillery and the three battalions fired, separately, the volleys, in honor of the day. It was generally admitted that the militia volunteers were as regular, correct and steady, in their exercise, evolutions and firings, as the troops of the line. At 12 o'clock a royal salute was fired from the grand battery; and at one o'clock by His Majesty's ship Uranie.

Between 70 and 80 officers and privates of the volunteers dined together, at the Union Tavern, where they spent the afternoon with the greatest hilarity and harmony.

The evening was concluded by a ball and supper at the Castle.

The invitation to the country at large, and the parents in particular, produced a moft refpectable meeting, among whom were the Rev. James S. Rudd, the Rev. Mr. Bethune, the Rev. Mr. Mc. Donell, Mr. Juftice Powell, the Solicitor General, Colonel Mc. Donell, Glengary Houfe, &c. &c.

The Students underwent in their different claffes a rigid examination, as well at the inftance of the gentlemen of learning who attended, as of the Rev. Preceptor, in the following order:—The Latin Claffics, Arithmetic, Book-keeping, Elements of Mathematics, Elements of Geography, of Natural and Civil Hiftory. The boys acquitted themfelves with great credit, neither is it eafy to declare in which branch of learning they fucceeded beft. The whole was interfperfed with different pieces of poetry and profe, many of the moft humorous caft compofed for the occafion. Among the reft the annexed lines were introduced by way of prologue. The flourifhing ftate of this infant feminary cannot fail of exciting the moft lively fatisfaction to this rifing country, more efpecially as it holds out to our view a profpect of education on the moft liberal fcale for the fucceeding race, independent of foreign aid.

When haughty Rome with boaftful triumph faw
A proftrate world fubmiffive to her law,
The courtly Flaccus feigning patriot fire
To pleafe Auguftus ftrung his tuneful lyre,
And taught the youth with more than Pindar's force
To celebrate their country's brilliant courfe,
And lift their guiltlefs hands in artful pray'r
To beg for Rome the God's indulgent care,
O glorious Sun, the youth were heard to fay,
Great fource of light, and monarch of the day!
Grant as thy golden car triumphant rolls
Through endlefs times, and circles both the poles,
That Rome may peerlefs meet your fav'ring eye
The arbiterefs of all below the fky.
Shall pamper'd Roman youth to nobly pray
To birds their country fan'ning to decay,
Which vainly deck'd with fplendid trophies won
Already groan'd beneath a treach'rous fon,
Behold her freedom loft, her glory fled,
The worn the death, recoiling on her head.
And fhall not Britifh youth with ardour glow
To hurl deftruction on their country's foe
Their happy ifle, which free herfelf difdains
To crufh a conquer'd foe with galling chains,
And dares a purple tyrant's fchemes withftand,
While paffive Europe bows at his command.
Yes! naught by you who ftemm'd the ruin'rous flood
Of Parricidal war in fields of blood,
The patriot flame is kindling in our hearts
Which manly fenfe, and joy imparts,
O, that our ftarves a proper ftrength could boaft,
Away we'd fly to meet the Gallic hoft.
But fince true public fpirit is refus'd
By knowledge bright the med'cine of the mind,
We yet muft haunt the fhades where fcience roves
And thofe bright paths which virtue's voice approves,
That when our fires their glorious race have run
We may defend our freedom nobly won.
Thus with the theme my fancy flies away
To Britain's fhores, but ftill it bids me ftay.

* Many of the gentlemen prefent, had diftinguifhed themfelves by their loyalty and courage in the American war.

That here I ftand, fubdued by my pain,
To ufeful knowledge younger than in years
To create indulgent candour's gen'rous toil
To calm my fears that ftamer round our breaft.
They bid me ftay to fave the fal'tring tongue,
Remember manly fhame becomes the young,
To fhroud our ftiff utterels which all deplore,
We never met the public eye before.
What fhall we promife for your vifit'd fmiles,
The fmiling hope, the fole'mer of our toils?
We promife when this day again comes round
That now like new fledg'd birds we fkim the ground
With gath'ring ftrength to wing a bolder flight,
And reach the realms of pl'afuring light.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN,

GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice iſſued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the adminiſtration of Mr. Preſident Ruſſell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongſt other things ſignified to ſuch Perſons, as had ſettled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title ſo to do; that if after warning given, they ſhould neglect or refuſe to remove from the ſaid Lands, they ſhould be proſecuted according to Law, and be diſqualified from becoming partakers of his Majeſty's Bounty in any part of this Province. Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, May 21.

Pruſſia and Sweden.—By private letters from Berlin, in which entire confidence may be placed; we find that a very ſerious miſunderſtanding has ariſen between that court and the King of Sweden. It has been even reported the Pruſſian troops will ſhortly ſet down before Stralſund, but no queſtion ſeems to be entertained that all intercourſe has ceaſed between the two Sovereigns. M. Terrach, his Pruſſian Majeſty's Plenipotentiary at Stockholm, will be recalled without delay; and the Swediſh Miniſter, Brinckmann, is about to withdraw from Berlin. Theſe extraordinary events will, doubt leſs be accounted for by various conjectures and aſſertions. The public may rely upon it, that the true cauſe is the vigorous and honourable meaſures adopted by the King of Sweden, in conſequence of the Pruſſian monarch's having accepted the newly inſtituted order of the Legion of Honor from the impure hands of Bonaparte. Upon the firſt official intelligence of an occurrence ſo little honourable to Sovereigns, Guſtavus the Fourth, without heſitation, diſpatched a miſſive to Berlin, returning the order of the Black Eagle to the King of Pruſſia, with the declaration "that he could no longer wear the order of a Prince who wore that of Bonaparte!"

The crew of the Endymione frigate were paid 213l. 14s. per man, prize money, on Tueſday laſt. They have to receive upwards of 300l. more per man.

DUBLIN, May 15.

An expreſs arrival in town this day from Cork, with the important intelligence that a frigate has arrived there with diſpatches from Lord N——ſh to the Port Admiral, ſtating that his Lordſhip was approaching the Iriſh coaſt in conſequence of his having aſcertained that the French and Spaniſh ſquadrons were deſtined to attack this country. Upon this intelligence being received at Cork, two regiments which had embarked there for foreign ſervice were inſtantly re landed.

LONDON, May 30.

Some intelligence has at length been received reſpecting the Toulon fleet. A letter from an officer on board the Bienheim, Rear-Admiral Sir T. Troubbridge, dated at Sea, in lat. 41. 1, N. long. 21, 30 W. May 7, fays ;

" His Majefty's fhip Immortalite, Captain Owen, has juft informed us, that the faw the Toulon fleet a few days ago, off Madeira ; Our fleet conflfts of 22 fail of Eaft Indiamen, which carry from 40 to 64 guns, befides the Blenheim and Greyhound frigate. The French expected us to touch at Madeira, which we have not done, though we will not go one inch out of the way for them."

Letters received in town from Lifbon mention the trial of an Italian, a native of Genoa, for attempting to kill the Marquis De Cievagion. He was found guilty, and the fentence was that he fhould be drawn in quarters by four horfes, have his hands chopped off, and his remains afterwards burnt to athes. That this fentence was carried into execution on the 6th inft. The mifcreant has been for fome time in that city under pretence of learning to paint, and it appeared had acted in concert with three men, who were to place a box of gunpowder under the feat of the Marquis's ftage coach, (one of the villains being the Marquis's coachman.) The box was fo contrived as to contain a match, which fhould burn fome time before it would fet fire to the powder.

Sir WILLIAM FULTENEY, Bart. died yefterday, at two o'clock at his houfe in Picadilly. He had been in a very dangerous ftate for feveral days paft, and underwent a furgical operation, which ended in a mortification, and occafioned his death.

Sir William married within thefe two or three years, but has left no if fue. By his death there is a vacancy in the repreſentation for Shrewsbury.

JUNE, 7.

Extract of a letter from Milan dated May 12, 1805.

Many perfons think that Bonaparte is much diſſatisfied with the Emperor of Germany, and with the King of Naples, and that the French troops collected in the country are not merely for a fhow. According to the beft information 25,000 Frenchmen are encamped near Marengo, under Lafnes, 32,000 occupy Lombardy and Mantua, under Jourdan. Menou commands 12,000 in Piedmont ; and St. Cyr 16,000 in the kingdom of Naples. Round the coaft of Genoa and Tufcany, and in the Papal Territory are quartered 20,000 men ; and the regular Italian troops amount to 25,000. On the other hand, Auſtria, has a cordon of troops in Tyrol, and in the cidevant Venetian States, fuppofed to amount to 16,000 men, daily augmented by the arrival of new corps from the Hereditary States ; and the Ruſſian and Engliſh forces in the Mediterranean are calculated upwards of 20,000 men. The vicinity of fo many and numerous armies cauſe alarms and ſpeculation not favorable to the deſires of wiſhes for peace, though the general opinion is, that this year will paſs over before any blows are ſtruck on the Continent.

The city of Stralfund, which is now made a depot for Engliſh merchandize, is a large fortified place in Swediſh Pomerania, with a convenient port. It is ſituated in the Eaſtern part of the Baltic Sea, near the entrance of the Gulph of Lubeck, its territories bordering on Mecklenburgh to the Weſt, and Pruſſian Pomerania on the Eaſt. It is well placed for interior communication with the Northern parts of Germany, being near the entrance of the Oder and other large rivers that fall into the Baltic.

Sir W. Pulteney's will had not been found laſt night. A meſſenger has been ſent off to Scotland, in the hope of finding it there ; and the funeral is ſuſpended until the return of the meſſenger, as the family have reaſon to expect that ſome directions were made in his laſt teſtament reſpecting the place of interment of the deceaſed.

Lady Pulteney's jointure proves to be no more than 1500l. per annum for life, and that in bar of dower.

JUNE 8.

Gottenburg, May 27.

" I have heard to day from good authority, that the Court of Peterſburgh have at length entirely broken with France, and that war is determined upon in conjunction with England and Sweden. It is generally believed that the two couriers who go by the packet, which is now ready to ſail, carry with them the treaty between England and Ruſſia, in which this country is included. A Ruſſian fleet is expected to paſs this place very ſoon, and a Ruſſian army to be employed in Pomerania."

JUNE 10.

To-morrow's debate in the Commons on Mr. Whitbread's motion for the impeachment of Lord Viſcount Melville, will call forth all the great energies of that Aſſembly. No public queſtion, perhaps ever excited a livelier intereſt in the public mind, than that which now preſſes for final diſcuſſion. Government in reſiſting the motion, calculate upon a conſiderable majority ; but this muſt materially depend on the collateral aid or oppoſition, which may be derived from the partizans of Lord Sidmouth, and Mr. Wilberforce. Reſpecting the former, two counter reports prevailed yeſterday ; the one " that his lordſhip meant to ſupport Mr. Pitt, on the ground that the puniſhment of Lord Melville has already been proportioned to his offence ;" the other " that he and the Miniſter had ſeparated on ill terms laſt Saturday, becauſe Mr. Pitt would not concede to his Lordſhip's opinion, the political, as well as moral neceſſity of an Impeachment." Which of theſe be the fact, we do not pretend to know ; but the motion of to-morrow night will decide it.

The Cork fleet, reſpecting which ſome apprehenſions were entertained, we are happy to find, has arrived in ſafety at Jamaica.

ALBANY, July 9.

Antigua taken.—A letter received in town laſt evening from St. Thomas's, dated June the 10th, ſtates, that the combined fleet then conſiſted of thirty-two ſail, one half of which went againſt and captured Antigua. It adds, that the harbour of St. Thomas was crowded with veſſels of every deſcription from Antigua, waiting till the ſtorm had ſubſided.—Balt. Telegraph.

NEW YORK, July 27.

We learn, that Capt. Murray, in La Franchiſe frigate, of 36 guns, 2 other frigate, two brigs and four ſchooners, have been blockading Curracoa. Four days previous to the ſailing of our informant, (July 8) they made a deſcent on the Curracoa Bay, to windward of the iſland, landed 180 men, cannonaded the fort, and were repulſed, with the loſs of one 18-pound carronade, 20 muſkets, and three priſoners. The expedition then ſailed to leeward, and landed their ſick and wounded, amounting to 70 men. The Britiſh have taken poſſeſſion of the whole leeward part of the iſland, from the Weſt end, within 20 miles of the town. It was ſaid, the Governor of Curracoa had declared he would not ſurrender the town to the Britiſh ; but would rather bury himſelf in its ruins. The next accounts which will be received, will be of the ſurrender of this Governor and town.

We are further informed, that Gen. Ferrand, at the city of Santo Domingo, was in daily expectation of another attack from the Emperor Deſſalines, and that he had made preparations to give him a warm reception.

Accounts from St. Domingo ſtate, that Deſſalines, the black Emperor, had loſt nearly one half of his army, in conſequence of the wells and ſprings in the vicinity of his camps, having been poiſoned by his enemies.

July 29.

French Fleet. A letter juſt received from a gentleman of this city, dated Bordeaux Road, June 5th, 1805, ſays, " The French fleet, ſuppoſed to have gone to the Weſt Indies, lies ſnug at this moment in Rochefort harbour."

July 30.

The Board of Health of Philadelphia, by their Proclamation, ſtuck up through the city laſt Saturday, have ordered all veſſels from New-Haven, to perform quarantine, on account of the Yellow-Fever being in that port.

There was 27 deaths in Philadelphia from the 20th to the 27th inſt. Of theſe 21 were adults.

AUGUST, 5.

Captain Conner, of the ſchr. Nancy, arrived at Charleſton, on the 23d inſt. in 18 days from St. John's (Ant.) ſtates, " that the day before he ſailed, a Boſton ſchr. arrived at that place, which had three days before fallen in with the combined fleet, beating to windward, and the next day fell in with Admiral Nelſon, in full chace, ſteering the ſame courſe, and within 20 hours fair of the enemy. Lord Nelſon has been 18 days in chace, and by calculation had gained twenty miles a day on the combined fleet. The fleet of Weſt Indiamen, reported to have been burnt by the French, had all arrived at Guadaloupe."

The houſe of Reinhards, at Amſterdam, has juſt failed for four tons of gold, or 400,000 guilders ; this circumſtance has had a temporary influence over commercial affairs.

Auguſt 8.

A letter of the 10th June, received by the ſhip Otis, from a reſpectable gentleman in London, to his friend in Philadelphia, ſtates, that a negociation was then pending between Great Britain and France, and that different opinions were entertained of the reſult ; the writer himſelf did not think it would be productive of peace.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

GUILDHALL SESSIONS.

CHILD STEALING.

Mary Brown alias Mary Moody was tried on Monday, upon an indictment charging her with ſtealing an infant-child, twenty two days old, from its mother, in the Workhouſe of St. Andrew's. The public will, no doubt, remember the trial of this priſoner at the Old Bailey for the ſame offence, where a flaw appeared in the indictment, and the preſent indictment was preferred by the pariſh officers of St. Andrew's.

Mary Johnſton, the mother of the child, ſtated, that the priſoner came to her on the 16th of Auguſt, 1802, and aſked her if ſhe would take a wet nurſe's place, and that if ſhe would, ſhe would recommend her to a lady who wanted ſuch a perſon. The priſoner came again the next day about ſix o'clock in the evening, and ſaid that the Lady wiſhed very much to ſee her child ; on which the proſecutor deſcribed herſelf as being too weak to go out, the having lain in but three weeks. The priſoner entreated her to truſt her with her child, who ſtated that ſhe would be very careful of it, ſhe being with child herſelf. This propoſal was readily agreed to, from the genteel appearance of the priſoner. The priſoner went away with the child, and left the mother two half-crowns, and ſhe had never ſeen or heard of her infant ſince. She ſaw the priſoner again in June 1803. She was poſitive as to the priſoner being the ſame perſon, and deſcribed the dreſs ſhe had on. Thoſe circumſtances were corroborated by Mrs. Bennet, miſtreſs of the workhouſe, and the ſervant who introduced her to the houſe-keeper. The priſoner did not employ counſel, but aſked the witneſſes queſtions concerning her dreſs. She poſitively denied the facts, and called on a woman named Murray to prove that ſhe was never out of her company on 16th of Auguſt, the day mentioned for her firſt appearance with Mrs Johnſton.

Mrs. Murray declared that ſhe lodged in the ſame houſe with the priſoner, on Collegehill, and that ſhe was never from her company on the 16th and 17th of Auguſt ; but confeſſed that the priſoner had abruptly left her company in Cheapſide, and was abſent till ten o'clock.

She was found guilty. The ſentence was deferred until next ſeſſion, in order to give her an opportunity of reſtoring the child to its parent. The Recorder obſerved, that if ſhe did not throw a light on the ſubject before that time, the might rely on a very ſevere puniſhment—The Court was immenſely crowded at the trial, amongſt which were many ladies.

To the Editor of the Quebec Mercury.

SIR,

OLD men, you know, are fond of telling ſtories, and inclofed I ſend you one, which perhaps may divert ſome of your readers, but it was a hundred to one I had not lighted my pipe with it. I found it amongſt ſome old waſte papers, which I keep in reſerve by themſelves for that purpoſe, twiſted up like a corkſcrew, or a ſtick of barly ſugar ; but happening to ſpy the word judge on the outſide, I was curious enough to ſee the contents, which are at your ſervice. I leave your readers to gueſs at the moral of it ; for a moral to it there certainly is, or the writer would not have been ſo minutely particular in every circumſtance, or have written it in ſo fair a hand.

" Some fifty years ago, there was a certain Judge, before whom a cauſe was tried at a country aſſize, and when the counſel roſe up to open his brief, one of the jury prevented his going on, by aſking leave of his lordſhip to ſtep out of court, juſt to make water ; upon which, ſaid the judge, (very gravely unfolding his noſe,) " I tell thee what, man, I remember a caſe in the old year books ſimilar to this, where a jury man was under the like diſtreſs, and he applied to the judge of aſſize for the like purpoſe. The judge of aſſize, after conſulting with the gentlemen of the bar, was of opinion that the man might go out of court, for a minute or two, attended by a proper officer.—(Here the juryman betrayed ſymptoms of uneaſineſs.) I remember too, continued his lordſhip, another caſe of the like nature, where a juryman was under the like ſituation, and he likewiſe applied to the judge of Niſi prius for leave to go out. The judge of Niſi prius, upon reflecting the former precedent, was of opinion the man might go out of court, for a minute or two, attended by a proper officer ; (Here the juryman began to make very faces) afterwards, continued the judge, when my Lord Coke was chief juſtice (I find it recorded in the long quinto of Edward the IVth) and the whole four judges were ſitting—friend—doſt thou hear what I ſay—(call ſilence, crye—what impudent fellow is that yonder without a wig.—How durſt you come into this court without a wig.—ſirrah,—who are you ?—turn him out—I won't, while I have the honor of ſitting here, ſee the court made a bear-garden)—I ſay, when all the four judges were ſitting, there was a juryman in the ſame diſtreſs, and he applied for leave to go out, when the whole court after ſolemn argument at the bar, and mature deliberation of the bench, unanimouſly and ſeriatim delivered it as their firm opinion, that the man might go out of court for a minute or two, attended by a proper officer—Open the bar there. But remember you are not to"—Here the juryman could hold no longer.—My Lord, ſaid he—I won't give your lordſhip the trouble to cite any more authorities,—for I have been—d my breeches already."

Barbarack, in his comment at the bottom of the paper, obſerves, that this accident could not have been fatal to the honeſt man, had not the breeches been borrowed ; but that being the caſe, and the lender refuſed to take them again, a law ſuit was commenced, which ruined the juryman and all his family.—A ſad effect of procraſtination in courts, cauſes, and matters at law.

ELEGANT PHILOSOPHICAL BANQUET.

AT DR. LETTSOM'S VILLA.

[From Dr. Hawes, London, to Dr. Fothergill, Philadelphia.]

" Wedneſday, July 25, 1804.

" A rural treat was this evening given by Dr. Lettſom, at Grove-hill, Camberwell, which well deſerves recording. About 8 o'clock a ſuite of ſeven rooms was opened for the reception of a numerous aſſemblage of viſitors ; who, for about ſix hours, without the aid either of muſic, ſinging, or cards, were very highly delighted. In this happy groupe were many of the firſt characters in law, phyſic and divinity : men of the firſt eminence of various deſcriptions from the city ; diſtinguiſhed philoſophers, and firſt rate philanthropiſts ; above all an aſſemblage of females, particularly remarkable for genuine beauty and unaffected elegance of dreſs. The uncommonly curious variety of the Dr's. valuable Muſeum ; the ſplendid collection of books in Natural Hiſtory, and other expenſive works of taſte and ſcience, the well ſtored conſervatory of native and exotic plants ; all thrown open for the gratification of his friends, left not a moment for ennui. About 12 o'clock was thrown open a room which reflected the higheſt credit on the elegant taſte of its deſigner, and included all the charms of the much fumed Elyſium. It was 72 feet long and 30 wide, and was erected in the garden purpoſely for this entertainment. The floor was entirely covered with carpeting ; and the ceiling was excluded from the view by a judicious arrangement of boughs freſhly ſeparated from their parent trees and ſhrubs and an ingenious ſprinkling of variegated lamps. The full grown magnificent orange trees had the appearance of ſupporters to the roof ; and the tables were filled with every thing deſirable to the fight or to the palate ; ſtrawberries ſtill growing on the living plants, iced creams of every ſort and flavour, rich jellies, confectionary of the moſt ingenious devices, many of the articles meloſing well adapted mottos ; to other more ſubſtantial diſhes of ham, veal, beef, &c. &c. were added, ſuch an abundance of every delicacy, as left nothing either to be wiſhed or deſired. At the entrance of the room, was a figure of Minerva holding a banner of white ſilk fringed with gold, on which was neatly printed this addreſs :

" AD AMICUS.

From Eaſt to Weſt, from South to North,
We've cull'd our treaſure in matcheſs worth ;
And hither welcome are ye come,
Without the aid of cards or drum ;
With mild philoſophy we'll pleaſe ye,
And try by magic to deceive ye ;
Each copious ſource of ancient lore
We'll lay before you to explore ;
And nature's gifts of various kind,
To gratify the inquiring mind
Such our endeavours are to ſhew,
How much ſo friends like you, we owe ;
But, as the mind's moſt fitteſt wear
The body cannot fail to ſhare,
Freely, we pray, its ſtrength recruit,
Nor ſpare our cakes, our wine, or fruit."

On a table particularly dedicated to the beauties of the Vernal ſeaſon :

" Here void of art, fee nature's hand beſtows
The ripening produce of the faithful year.
Behold, the ſwelling fruit, the budding roſe,
The freſheſt hue of vernal bloom appears."

On another temple emblematic of the natural effects of winter :

Let not my icicle roof, or ſnow drifted floor,
The near approach of my good friends forbid,
But the rather invite them to come to my door
And ſee if ought there be in my pow'rs bid.
Though my winterly looks appear frozen and cold,
And the ices are in which here I aſſord ;
Yet judge of their flavor nor your candour withhold,
But ſay to your taſtes, which beſt does accord ;
Whether Strawberry, Raſpberry, Cherry, or Pine,
When with pure country cream, they their juices combine

By two in the morning the immenſe number of carriages had cleared off, and the happy family were left to the contemplation of the rational pleaſure they had afforded to more than eight hundred gueſts."

From reading the above account, I am induced to imagine that the deſcription of a rural feſtival ſo unique in its kind, ſo ſplendid in its decorations, and exhibiting ſo much claſſical taſte and ingenuity, may prove entertaining to our literary and convivial friends not leſs on this, than on the other ſide of the Atlantic.

On Profane Swearing and Perjury.

PROFANE SWEARING, eſpecially taking the name of God in vain, is a moſt deſtructive vice, and a vice I am ſorry to ſay it, that the generality of people are very often guilty of. Would a man but reflect, he never could ſo far forget his duty to his Creator as to addict himſelf to it. It is a ſin of a moſt heinous nature, and which the Almighty has ſo expreſsly forbidden as to make a very pointed and expreſs Commandment againſt it, viz. " Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain ; for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain." And again, our bleſſed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, expressly forbids it in the following precept: "Swear not at all, neither by Heaven, for it is God's throne, nor by the Earth, for it is his foorstool, &c." How then can a man excuse himself for a breach of such positive commandments. It is also a most unprofitable vice, from which we can neither derive advantage nor pleasure: it is an ungentlemanly vice, if I may make so free with this class as to call it so; and the reason I do, is, that in the fashionable world there are many vices sanctioned, such as gaming at cards, and dice, carrying two faces, and many others too tedious to mention. But this vice of profane swearing is certainly banished the polite circles, and a man that calls himself a gentleman, is looked upon as an ill bred fellow who is guilty of it. In short, it is a vice of a most detestable nature, and he who is guilty of it, as sure as he lives, is possessed by the devil and in the high road to destruction; therefore my good friends, let us leave it off, and if we cannot in every respect become gentlemen, let us at least in this.

False swearing, or perjury, has also, I am exceedingly sorry to say, taken too deep a root amongst us. Good God, when I consider the dreadful tendency of this crime, it makes me shudder to think that any man can possibly be guilty of it. A crime that may deprive a fellow-creature of his life, his property, every thing that is dear to him.—What kind of a conscience must that wretch have that is guilty of it? He surely must be possessed by a legion of devils, and hell must inevitably be his portion hereafter; and if the fumes of liquor, which such debased characters constantly keep their brain on fire of hell with, did not prevent reflection, their consciences would be a very hell here. GREETING.

WHEREAS by a Notice issued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the administration of Mr. President Russell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongst other things signified to such Persons, as had settled upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title so to do; that if after warning given, they should neglect or refuse to remove from the said Lands, they should be prosecuted according to Law, and be disqualified from becoming partakers of his Majesty's Bounty in any part of this Province. Lateſt Intelligence.

MADRID, April 13.

We learn from Algiers, that on the 8th ult. the Dey, about ten o'clock in the morning, being seated on a stone, by the fortification, about two miles from the city, and quite alone, was attacked by four well armed Turks. He was fired upon twice, and received ten wounds from their sabres, by which he lost two fingers of his left hand. The assassins have been apprehended. The Dey was conveyed to his palace. He is at present out of danger—one of the balls fortunately fell upon a purse the Dey had in his pocket covering his left breast. This attempt to murder the Dey is ascribed to the dearness of all sorts of provision, and which he had neglected to remedy.

LONDON, May 20.

The Hamburgh mail due previous to that which arrived on Saturday, was received yesterday. It contains of course little intelligence entitled to attention. Private letters brought by the former repeat, with increase of confidence, the rumours of negociation between France and Russia, for the restoration of general tranquility; but, while we notice these reports, we think it our duty to warn the public that they should be received with the greatest caution. One of them goes so far as to state the following as the grounds or basis on which Bonaparte is willing to enter into negociation:

"I. The full recognition of his titles of Emperor of the French and King of Italy.

"II. The solemn guarantee of Great Britain and Russia to maintain himself and his family in the hereditary possession of his dignities and dominions.

"III. The unequivocal resignation, on the part of the Princes of the House of Bourbon, of all rights and claims to the sovereignty of France, and

"IV. He engages in return to leave Malta in possession of England—and to cede to the Emperor Alexander and his heirs, the sovereignty of the Republic of the seven Islands."

There is certainly nothing improbable in the three first articles; but in order to give credit to the last, we must believe that Bonaparte is willing to retract the official declaration which he has published to Europe, that the treaty of Amiens alone can satisfy him.

Malta, we think, he never will, while he has a chance of success in the profecution of hoftilities, conſent to yield up to Great Britain.—Whether we conſider its relation with reſpect to his new kingdom of Italy, or to his favorite object, the poſſeſſion of Egypt, it forms a point in negociation which he will not give up but in the hour of defeat and diſmay.

The Dey of Algiers is ſaid to have declared war againſt Spain.

It appears that Government are contracting for an immenſe quantity of ſhipping for the conveyance of Ruſſian troops.—A propoſal has, it is ſaid, been made in the north of England for forty thouſand tons.

Admiralty Office, June 8.

Copy of a letter from the Hon. Captain Boyle, of his Majeſty's ſhip Seahorſe, to Vice Admiral Viſcount Nelſon.

His Majeſty's ſhip Seahorſe, Gibraltar Bay, May 8, 1805.

My Lord,

On the 4th inſt. I learnt that a Spaniſh convoy was on this coaſt to the weſtward of Carthagena, chiefly loaded on Government account, with gunpowder, ordnance, and naval ſtores for the gun boats at Malaga, Ceuta, and Algeziras. Conceiving the deſtruction of the ſame of conſequence, I kept cloſe along ſhore, with the hope of falling in with them, and effecting my wiſhes; at two P. M. they were diſcovered from the maſt-head; at five I obſerved them haul into St. Pedro, an anchorage to the eaſtward of Cape de Gatte, under the protection of a fort, two armed ſchooners, and three gun and mortar launches, where I determined to attempt to deſtroy them; the veſſel of greateſt conſequence to get out, was an ordnance brig, loaded with one thouſand one hundred quintals of powder, and various other ſtores, commanded by Don Juan Terragut, Maſter in the Spaniſh navy; and which was effected by Lieut. Downie, firſt of the Seahorſe, in a ſix-oared cutter, in the moſt gallant and well judged manner, whoſe conduct on this, as well as every other occaſion I feel it my duty to mention to your Lordſhip as that of a moſt zealous officer, and I beg leave to add, that the Lieut. aſſures me he met with every poſſible aſſiſtance from Mr. Thos. Napper, midſhipman, who accompanied him in a four oared boat. The Seahorſe during the time kept up a quick and well directed fire on the fort, gun veſſels and convoy; and have every reaſon to believe I had ſunk one of the gun launches; and damaged and ſunk ſeveral others of the convoy. Night coming on, with light winds, the main-top gallant maſts, ſails, braces, bow lines, ſhot away, I felt it imprudent any longer to attempt the deſtruction of the whole by expoſing the ſhip to the well directed fire of the gun-veſſels, which latterly ſtruck her every ſhot. For the exertions on this occaſion, of Lieut. Ogle Moore, Lieut. Charles Brown, who had not received his confirmed commiſſion, Mr. Spratt, Maſter, Lieut. Clarke of the Royal Marines, Lieutenant Hagemeiſter, of the Ruſſian navy, I feel ſeverally indebted; and indeed I ſhould do injuſtice to every other officer and man on board did I not mention them in the ſame manner. It would give me greater ſatisfaction could I inform your Lordſhip we met with no loſs on this ſervice; however I feel that ſuſtained in having only one ſeaman killed, as trifling, conſidering the well-directed fire in ſo many different directions of the enemy. Truſting that my proceedings will meet your Lordſhip's approbation, I am, &c.

C. BOYLE.

The Gazette alſo contains an account of the capture of a ſmall Spaniſh privateer, off Oporto, by his Majeſty's ſloop Avon.

STATE OF IRELAND.

The Cork Chronicle, a few days ſince contained the following ſtrong remarks on ſome late wanton reports on this ſubject:

"A powerful army, a numerous local force, and a loyal nation, are ready to cruſh any attempts that any deſcription of enemies may make; and thoſe who would inſinuate the contrary ought to ſhow in the firſt place, the fallacy of thoſe calculations, before they preſume to excite apprehenſions at home and abroad, by miſtatements, in their import libels, not leſs upon the people than upon their Government.

"The Iriſh nation are united in heart and ſentiment, as they will be in the nature of things in every other conceivable condition, reſpect and circumſtance; and let their amalgamation, as a people, in utter identity of pretenſion and privilege as well as of common prejudice, take place when it may, be that ſooner or later, thoſe who fear it will not go into treaſon to prevent, nor thoſe who wiſh it become rebels to cauſe its accellerations.—The Iriſh nation have not become enamoured of foreign deſpotiſm—they do not pant for the military yoke of France—and they do not wiſh to exchange the illuſtrious houſe of Brunſwick, for one of thoſe tawdry adventurers, who are ready to pounce upon the throne that invaſion or the wickedneſs of treaſon may leave vacant; they would fight to a man to avert ſo ignominious and abominable a revolution. They wiſh to enjoy the only ſyſtem of practical freedom on earth, the Conſtitution of Great Britain; and out of that noble enjoyment to ſee ſpring up amongſt them its moral prudence—peace, proſperity, morals, and liberty.

"Nobody raves to ſuch a pitch as to expect thoſe high and paramount conceſſions from a rabble of French mercenaries, enliſted, regimented, and recruited by ſlavery and crimes; and why durſt any man libel the public ſo, as to ſignify that the people of Ireland are mad enough to be abandoned to ſuch expectancies? The imputation is groſs and unfounded, and ſhould the day of probation ever arrive, when the bravery and patriotiſm of Iriſhmen will be called upon to proteſt their country, and to refute the inveteracies of long practiſed calumny, they will ſhew in a common triumph over the invader, the injuſtice of their ſlanderers, and they will ſhew in their poſterity, that if their miſfortunes were cauſed by their diſunion, their redemption to honor, happineſs and fame, has been earned and will be preſerved by their unanimity."

FRANCE.

The vigilance of the Government in France, and the fear which univerſally prevails among the people, render it difficult, if not impoſſible to gain any accurate account of the internal ſituation of that unhappy country, oppreſſed as it is by a foreign uſurper, and his numerous hordes of official ſpies and military ruffians. The following, however, is given as an authentic ſtatement by a Gentleman who is ſaid to have left Bourdeaux about the middle of laſt month, in a neutral veſſel. According to this gentleman's account the Iriſh Legion, or, as it is called in France, the Corps of Iriſh guides, was at Bourdeaux when he ſailed. It is a kind of ſkeleton regiment, compoſed entirely of officers, to be filled up with privates upon its arrival in Ireland. They are allowed the pay of French officers of equal rank, which is punctually paid, while Government is greatly in arrear even to the moſt favorite regiments of the native army. This ſkeleton corps, or, more properly, Congregation of Officers, ſomething reſembles Stephano's kingdom in the Tempeſt, all kings and viceroys. They have ſplit into two factions called the O'Connor and the Emmett parties, and many duels have been fought by individuals of theſe contending factions. Young Evans, late of the county of Dublin, is among the number of Iriſh at Bourdeaux, and lately married a French woman.—Dr. M'Nevin has followed Counſellor Emmett to America, although he received a ſtrong encouragement to ſettle in that city, and follow his profeſſion of a phyſician.

The taxes in France are enormous, and have increaſed 25 per cent. this year. If a perſon aſks by what law this augmentation has been made, or to what the riſe is owing, no explanation or ſatisfaction is given. The aſſeſſment at which the party is rated, is ſhewn to him, and he is told it muſt be paid, and that he has no right to inquire further about it.

The Emperor is univerſally deteſted; but, ſupported by power upon one ſide, and fear upon the other, little doubt is entertained of the ſtability of his Government, the expences of which even in the civil department, are exceſſive: but ſuch a ſyſtem of eſpionage is maintained, that the ſlighteſt expreſſion of diſcontent cannot for a day eſcape detection and puniſhment. The priſons of France are all full. Perſons are taken up, diſappear, and are heard of no more, as their friends dare not make enquiry into their fate. The whole empire is diſarmed, and no perſon except a proved friend and ſupporter of the Government is allowed to keep even a fowling piece, for his amuſement in the field, or any ſort of arms, for the defence of his houſe againſt robbers. Even if he were allowed fire arms, they would be of no uſe, for gunpowder is prohibited to be ſold, and the perſon, in whoſe poſſeſſion any is found, is liable to a heavy fine. The whole trade of Bordeaux is carried on in American bottoms, and has been ſo much reduced by the war and the revolution, it is conſidered the moſt diſaffected part of France.—The Municipality, notwithſtanding, lately ſent an invitation to Buonaparte, requeſting the honor of a viſit upon his return from Italy. He anſwered, that if circumſtances would permit, he would be happy to ſee his good city of Bordeaux. On the 10th of May, however, a ſecond anſwer arrived, in which he ſtated, that he could not have the pleaſure.—Beef, mutton, and veal, were at an average price, about 7 1-2d. per lb. at Bordeaux.—Brandy is very cheap. The gentleman from whom we received this information adds, that he had been at Bordeaux once before, about four years ago. At that time the dreſs of the inhabitants was the moſt filthy and ſqualid imaginable. They are now running into the oppoſite extreme of the old ſchool, and in converſation, Citizen has univerſally given way to Monſieur.

June 12.

Yeſterday being the day fixed for the motion for an impeachment againſt Lord Viſcount Melville, a great crowd aſſembled, at an early hour in the avenues of the Houſe of Commons. At twelve the doors were opened, and a ſevere preſſure enſued. The gallery, of courſe, was filled in a few minutes. In the early part of the day an opinion prevailed, that M. Whitbread would open the debate; but about three o'clock it was ſaid, that Lord Viſcount Melville would be previouſly heard in his defence. This excited a great degree of expectation, and a great number of perſons crowded into the lower lobby, and alſo lined the ſtairs to the gallery of the Houſe, which commands a view of the lobby, through which Lord Viſcount Melville was to paſs.——About half paſt four, his Lordſhip entered the lobby, and paſſed into the Secretary's room, on the left hand. The Houſe was at this time engaged in private buſineſs. Shortly after five, the Speaker read a letter from Lord Viſcount Melville, requeſting to be admitted into the body of the Houſe, to be heard in his defence. The honorable Robert Dundas Saunders, his Lordſhip's ſon, then moved, that his Lordſhip be called in; which being agreed to the Speaker deſired Mr. Colman, the Serjeant at Arms, to take the Mace, and conduct Lord Viſcount Melville into the Houſe. In the mean time, Mr. Bellamy, the principal meſſenger, brought in a ſquare arm chair, and placed it within the body of the Houſe, within the bar, on the left hand ſide.—The Serjeant at Arms then took up the mace, and having waved it three times, went out of the Houſe, and took his ſtation outſide, in the lobby, in front of the door of the Houſe, and alſo oppoſite the door of the Treaſury room. Mr. Heard, one of the meſſengers, had previouſly thrown open the folding doors of the latter apartment, and Lord Viſcount Melville, being informed by him, that the Houſe requeſted his attendance, his Lordſhip came out, and walked uncovered into the Houſe, attended by the Serjeant and Mace.—His Lordſhip was dreſſed in black and wore a cloſe buckled wig powdered. He bowed three times as he approached, and, on coming within the bar, the Speaker, who wore his hat on all the time, addreſſing him, ſaid, "My Lord Melville, there is a chair for your Lordſhip." His Lordſhip then ſat down, and put on his hat. There was a loud murmur in the Houſe on his coming in. As ſoon as it ſubſided, which was in leſs than two minutes, his Lordſhip aroſe, and taking off his hat, he laid it upon the ſeat of the chair, and upon the hat ſeveral papers. His Lordſhip then ſtanding at the back of the chair, commenced his ſpeech, in the courſe of which, he frequently refreſhed his memory from the papers before him. His Lordſhip ſpoke for two hours and a quarter. His manner was firm and impreſſive; and he did not, even in the part of it where he appealed to the feelings appear the leaſt ſhaken. The moment he had concluded, he took up his papers deliberately, one by one, and having put his hat under his arm, made a bow to the Speaker and withdrew, attended by the Serjeant, who, during the whole of the ſpeech, remained ſtanding on the right hand ſide of his Lordſhip, but at the diſtance of a few yards, with the mace reſting upon the ground, and his hand upon it. The Houſe was uncommonly crowded. Not fewer than three hundred members were preſent.

Lord Viſcount Melville's ſpeech will be read with intereſt. Upon the ſubject of the 20,000l. and other ſums of the public money received by him and not applied to naval purpoſes, his Lordſhip poſitively declared, that "private honor, perſonal convenience" muſt prevent him from ever giving any account of them.

Accounts from Paris to the 31ſt are received. The Moniteur aſſerts that Sir James Craig's expedition was compelled to quit the Tagus, in conſequence of the French and Spaniſh Ambaſſador threatening to leave Liſbon, if the armament was ſuffered to remain. It is certain that ſuch remonſtrances were made, and there is little doubt that the Portugueſe Government urged Sir James to haſten his departure; but it is not likely that any menaces were uſed, as ſtated in the Moniteur. The French official Journal likewiſe ſtates that the Carthagena fleet had conveyed troops, &c. to Minorca. This may be true, though the whole article has an air of ridicule, from the abſurd ſtatement, that the Carthagena fleet, of eight ſail, had chaſed Lord Nelſon's of eleven.

It is poſitively ſtated that Mr. Novoſeltzoff's paſſports were, immediately on their being applied for, ſent off from Milan. Mr. Novoſeltzoff is expected in Paris about the middle of June. Letters from Holland ſay, that it is generally believed that a negociation for a general peace, which both Ruſſia and Pruſſia are anxious to effect, will ſoon take place.—We do not think much reliance ſhould be placed on theſe ſtatements, even as to the fact of a negociation taking place. As to the probability of peace, the Dutch merchants know no more than the meaneſt ſhopkeeper in London.

The Nile Lugger reconnoitered the Charente, on the 27th ult. and found in Rochefort, one ſhip of three decks, five two deckers, three frigates, two brigs, and ſeveral gun boats.

In Ferrol the enemy has twelve ſhips of the line, beſides frigates, which are watched by Sir Robert Calder with ſix ſhips of the line only.

Our ſhips at Breſt are in daily expectation of their coming out, as they have 27,000 troops on board, and their ſhips of the line appear full of men.

June 13.

Extract of a private letter from an officer on board one of his Majeſty's ſhips in the Downs, dated June 10—"We have 13 ſail of the line here now, the North Sea ſquadron being ordered round; and we expect five ſail more from the Weſtward: I believe it is expected that the combined fleets is coming North about. By every cruiſer that comes in I learn, that the French appear in all their ports ready for a push out, and moſt of the officers are of opinion they certainly will do it ſhortly, as their preparations with their ſhipping are different from what they have been before."

We yeſterday received a letter from an officer on board one of the tranſports in the Cove of Cork, in the expedition under Sir Eyre Coote. It ſays, "this morning, June 5th, the troops were brigaded as follows:—The 1ſt, or Highland brigade, conſiſting of the 71ſt, 72d, 93d, and Buffs, under the command of General M'Farlane. The ſecond, 8th, 24th and 83d, with artillery, under Gen. Balfour.—The third Brigade, of the 32d, 38th and 52d, under the command of Gen. Montreſor. The 89th regiment is to form a detached corps, under the command of Lieut. Col. Lord Blayney. I have not yet learned who is to command the artillery, or ſtaff corps. General Drummond is ſecond in command under Sir Eyre Coote. The troops are in good health and are landed every day to keep them ſo. Our deſtination is not yet known, but it is ſuppoſed we are going upon ſome remote and deſperate expedition, and not to the Weſt-Indies; for all the married officers are ordered to ſend their wives on ſhore immediately, and the tranſports are to be furniſhed with proviſions for ſix months."

The Moniteur contains the following article:

"Since the Engliſh call the late operations of our ſquadron in the Weſt Indies plunder, it is but juſt they ſhould know that this plunder will not be over ſo ſoon as they think.—We flatter ourſelves even that ere a week has paſſed over our heads, intelligence from every part of the world will announce to the Engliſh commerce other events of the like nature.

Of the movements, operations, and deſtination of the different ſquadrons at ſea, the Moniteur affords us no information; it merely ſays, in a dry blunt note upon ſome of the Engliſh papers, that "in a month we ſhall hear where the combined ſquadrons are gone;"—we hope the firſt intelligence we receive from Lord Nelſon after having come up with them.

The miſſion of M. Novoſeltzoff occaſions much of the attention of the Paris Journaliſts, and an article from Hamburgh, in one of them, ſays, that a congreſs for a general peace is to be held at Bruſſels; that Novoſeltzoff and the Pruſſian Miniſter are to mediate for Great Britain, and that the part of Oſtend is to be opened to carry on the Diplomatic Correſpondence with England.

The Paris papers of the 8th ſtate, that the Arch Treaſurer ſet off for Milan the day before, preceded by the Finance Miniſter.—"The departure of theſe two grand functionaries, afford us room to believe, that Paris will be much longer deprived of the preſence of its Sovereign, than was ſuppoſed. It is believed that the affairs of Genoa will keep his Majeſty much longer in Italy; it is proved beſides, that he is expected at the Camp of Caſtiglione, where he will remain a fortnight, and that he is afterwards to reſide for ſome time at Bologna."

The Falcon ſloop arrived yeſterday at Portſmouth, from off Havre, having received ſome damage in an action with ſome French gun brigs. Sixteen of them came out of Havre, in open day;—The Falcon, Chiffrone, and Sparke engaged them for ſome time; four of them are ſaid to have been driven aſhore; the reſt of them eſcaped into Fecamp. They came out in conſequence of poſitive orders to collect to the eaſtward.

A letter from Vienna of the 28th ult. ſays, that a conſiderable alarm prevails there in conſequence of the determination of the Court to increaſe the military peace eſtabliſhment, and form numerous camps, and that the ſtate paper has experienced a conſiderable depreciation from the alarm of war.

Saturday in the Court of King's Bench the papers and reports of the naval commiſſioners, and of the ſelect committee of the Houſe of commons, as ſar as applicable to Lord Viſcount Melville were depoſited in the hands of the Croſs officers, preparatory to their drawing out the informations.

Our foreign news for laft week, have been inconfiderable. Ruffia, by accounts down to a late date in May, appears ſtill to proſecute moſt ſtrenuouſly, the extenſion of her power on the Black Sea. The internal improvement of the empire advances at this time more rapidly than ever. The Georgians, Mingrelians, Circaſſians, and thoſe other barbarous tribes which deſolate and infeſt the regions between the Ruſſians and Perſian empires, are about to be ſubdued, reſtrained and civilized. The Emperor Alexander ſeems to incline to peace with France, yet prepares for war.—Sweden, ſpeaking in ſome ſort the very voice of Ruſſia, declares againſt Bonaparte, with a ſpirit and firmneſs, ſecond only to thoſe of Britain.——Denmark is ſilent, on account of the vicinity of the French troops, or for other reaſons, but will not ultimately reſiſt the influence of Ruſſia and Sweden—Pruſſia ſtill maintains a doubtful part, cautious, but ſcarcely honorable, and certainly remote from ſublime and manly wiſdom —The Turkiſh government acting, like Sweden, under Ruſſian influence, has boldly ſet the menaces of Bonaparte at defiance—Auſtria heſitates, maintains a threatening poſture and aſpect, and to wreſt from Pruſſia, the pride of being umpire in the preſent conteſt—Portugal is ſtill ſecure in a ſort of neutrality, by the prudence of its Government, by the readineſs of its contributions, by the danger leſt Ruſſia ſhould take arms, and Spain revolt, as ſoon as the Portugueſe were actually attacked. —We ſhould not be ſurpriſed to learn, that Bonaparte had offered to ſacrifice all his other pretenſions in an offer of peace upon terms which ſhould procure the general recognition of his powers and titles as Emperor of France and King of Italy.—But, ſhould he obtain this much—he will ſoon demand even ten times more.

WHEREAS by a Notice iſſued by the Executive Government of this Province, under the adminiſtration of Mr. Preſident Ruſſell, on the eighth day of July 1799, it was, amongſt other things ſignified to ſuch Perſons, as had reſorted upon Lands belonging to the Crown in this Province, without having obtained any authority, licence, or title ſo to do; that if after warning given, they ſhould neglect or refuſe to remove from the ſaid Lands, they ſhould be proſecuted according to Law, and be diſqualified from becoming partakers of his Majeſty's Bounty in any part of this Province. Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, May 8.

The Marquis of Lanſdown.—This noble and diſtinguiſhed perſon departed this life yeſterday morning. Of a lineage yielding to not many in thoſe relations which conſtitute the general pride of families, this Nobleman appears from his outſet in life to have contemplated the doing juſtice to his birth by purſuits and ſtudies ſuitable to its dignity. He began in the army, and, under Prince Ferdinand of Brunſwick, had a ſhare in the danger and the honors of the ſeven years war. The activity of his mind, ſoon directed him to courſes which are commonly ſuppoſed to require a greater power of intellect, as well as a wider compaſs of mental cultivation. The Noble Marquis, then Earl of Shelburne, at ſo early a period as the King's acceſſion to the Throne, was made a Lord of Trade; at which time he could be only 25 years old. In the rapid changes of Adminiſtration, which marked the firſt ſix years of this eventful reign, the Earl of Shelburne was neither idle nor undiſtinguiſhed; and he made himſelf ſo conſiderable a feature in the politics of the country that he was appointed to the high office of Secretary of State, near 40 years ſince, namely, in 1766, in the Miniſtry of the Duke of Grafton. In this diſtinguiſhed office he continued for near two years, till his Colleagues, at the inſtance of the French Miniſter, the Duke De Choiſeul, were induced to diſown him—in the affair of Corſica. The Noble Earl, ſoon after, appeared among the Principals of Oppoſition; with whom he continued a zealous co-operator, until the famous change of Miniſtry in 1782, when he and Mr. Fox were made Joint Secretaries of State. On the death of the Marquis of Rockingham, he ſucceeded to the Premierſhip, as firſt Lord of the Treaſury, and introduced Mr. Pitt to office as Chancellor of the Exchequer; but this Adminiſtration was brought about the Peace of 1782, was not of long duration, having been obliged to give way to the Coalition Miniſtry of Lord North and Mr. Fox. His Lordſhip was conſidered a deep politician, but his ſtate of health has not for a conſiderable time permitted him to take an active part in the buſineſs of politics.

He was Marquis of Lanſdown, Earl of Wycombe, and Viſcount Calne, and Calnstone, Lord Wycombe, Earl of Shelburne, Viscount Fitz Maurice, and Baron Dunkerrin, Irish honors. K. G. Succeeded his father, May 1761. Born, 1737. Married, Feb. 3, 1765. Sophia, daughter of John, Earl of Granville, and by her who died in 1771, he had issue, John Henry, Earl of Wycombe, born, December 6, 1765; William died in Jan. 27, 1778. His Lordship married, secondly, July 19 1779. Louisa Fitzpatrick, sister to the Earl of Upper Ossory, by whom, who died Aug. 7. 1789, he had Henry, born July, 1780; a daughter born Dec. 8, 1781; died an infant.—His Lordship is succeeded by his eldest son, the Earl of Wycombe.

The Marquis of Lansdown's extensive entailed estates, both in England and Ireland amounting to more than 35,000l. per annum, devolve on his eldest son, Lord Wycombe, now Marquis of Lansdown; but 10,000l. per annum, and nearly 100,000l. in specie, are willed to his other son Lord Henry Petty.

May 14.

The following article, which appeared in the Times, in Feb. 1800, is reinserted as containing lessons, worthy, at this time, of being conned and attended to:—

THE CARDINAL OF YORK.

"Few Princes (says Voltaire, speaking of James II. were more unhappy than James; and there is no instance in history, of any family being unfortunate for so great a length of time. The first of his ancestors that bore the name of James, and was King of Scotland, after being detained prisoner in England eighteen years, was assassinated by the hands of his own subjects. James II. his son, was killed at nineteen years of age.—James III. after being imprisoned by his subjects, was slain by the rebels in an engagement.—James IV. perished in a battle, which he lost.—James V. in the persuasion that his nobles and generals had betrayed him, died of immoderate grief, seven days before the birth of the unfortunate Mary, after losing two sons in one day.—Mary Stuart, his daughter, driven from her throne, and a fugitive in England, after having languished eighteen years in prison, was condemned to death by English judges, and lost her head on a scaffold!—Charles I. grandson of Mary, King of England and Scotland, was sold by the Scotch, sentenced to death by the English, and died on a scaffold before the eyes of the people.—James his son the seventh of the name in Scotland, and the second in England, abandoned his three kingdoms, and died a fugitive at St. Germain's.—His son, in attempting to regain the throne of his ancestors, only brought his friends under the hands of the executioner. Charles Edward, the grandson of James II. made the same attempt, with no better success, and escaped under difficulties almost incredible. If any thing (adds Voltaire) could justify those who believe in an unavoidable fatality, it would be the continued succession of misfortunes which have befallen the House of Stuart during the space of above 300 years."

If Voltaire had lived to this day, he might have witnessed the same severity of fortune in the instance of the only survivor of that unfortunate house, with whom the direct male branch will be extinct.

The Cardinal of York, the brother of Charles Edward, early dedicated himself to a life congenial with the habits of his mind. Placid, humane, and temperate, he sought consolation for the misfortunes of his predecessors, in a scrupulous observance of the duties of his religion, apparently secured, in his retirement, from the storms and vicissitudes but too often attendant upon political life. The malign influence of the star, which had so strongly marked the fate of so many of his illustrious ancestors was not exhausted; and it was peculiarly reserved for the Cardinal of York to be exposed to the shafts of adversity, at a period of life when least able to struggle with misfortunes. At the advanced age of seventy-five, he is driven from his episcopal residence; his houses sacked; his property confiscated; and constrained to seek his personal safety in flight, upon the seas, under every aggravated circumstance that could affect his health and fortune!

It is unnecessary to renew our comments on the gracious act which has already been announced in favour of the Cardinal of York. It was reserved for Great Britain to sooth the malevolence of his fortunes; and we trust the beneficence of the Sovereign will be recognized in Parliament, as a lasting memorial of an event which forms an interesting epoch in the annals of our country.

Original Letters from the Cardinal of York to Sir John Cox Hippisley, Bart. written in the Conclave.

"Your letters fully convince me of the cordial interest you take in all that regards my person, and am happy to acknowledge that principally I owe to your friendly efforts, and to those of your friends, the succour generously granted, to relieve the extreme necessities into which I have been driven by the present dismal circumstances. I cannot sufficiently express, how sensible I am to your good heart, and write these few lines in the first place to contest to you these my most sincere and grateful sentiments, and then to inform you that by means of Mr. Oakley, an English gentleman arrived here last week, I have received a letter from Ld. Minto from Vienna, advising me that he had orders from his Court to remit to me at present the sum of 2000l. sterling; and that in the month of July next, I may again draw, if I desire it, for another equal sum. The letter is written in so extremely genteel and obliging a manner, and with expressions of singular regard and confideration for me, that, I assure you, excited in me the most particular and lively sentiments, not only of satisfaction for the delicacy with which the affair has been managed, but also of gratitude for the generosity with which it has been provided for my necessity. I have answered Lord Minto's letter, and gave it, Saturday last, to Mr. Oakly, who was to send it by that evening's post to Vienna; and have written in a manner that I hope will be to his Lordship's satisfaction. I own to you that the succour granted to me could not be more timely; for without it, it would have been impossible for me to subsist, on account of the absolutely irreparable loss of all my income, the very funds being also destroyed; so that I would otherwise have been reduced, for the short remainder of my life, to languish in misery and indigence. I would not lose a moment's time to apprize you of all this, and am very certain that your experimented good heart will find proper means to make known in an energetical and proper manner these sentiments of my grateful acknowledgment.—The signal obligations I am under to Mr. Andrew Stuart for all that he has, with so much cordiality, in this occasion, done to assist me, renders it for me indispensable to desire that you may return him my most sincere thanks, assuring him that his health and welfare, interests me extremely; and that I have, with great pleasure, received from Gen Acton the genealogical history of our family, which he was so kind as to send me, and hope that he will, from that gentleman, have already received my thanks, for so valuable a proof of his attention for me. In the last place, if you think proper, & an occasion should offer itself, I beg you make known to the other gentlemen also, who have co-operated, my most grateful acknowledgments: with which, my dear Sir John, with all my heart I embrace you.

"DEAR SIR JOHN,

"I have not words to explain the deep impression your very obliging letter of March 31, made on me. Your and Mr. Andrew Stewart's most friendly and warm exertions in my behalf; the humane and benevolent conduct of your Ministers; your gracious Sovereign's noble and spontaneous generosity, the continuance of which, you certify me, depends on my need of it, were all ideas which crowded together on my mind, and filled me with most lively sensations of tenderness and heartfelt gratitude. What return can I make to so many, and so signal proofs of disinterested benevolence? Dear Sir John, I confess I am at a loss how to express my feelings, I am sure, however, and very happy that your good heart will make you fully conceive the sentiments of mine, and induce you to make known, in an adequate and convenient manner, to all in whom you shall think proper, for me, my most sincere acknowledgments.

"With pleasure I have presented your compliments to the Cardinals and other persons you mention: who all return you their sincere thanks: the Canon, in particular, now Monsignier, being also a domestic prelate to his Holiness, begs you be persuaded of his constant respect and attachment to you.

"My wishes would be completely satisfied, should I have the pleasure, as I most earnestly desire, to see you again at Frascati, and be able to assure you, by word of mouth, of my most sincere esteem, and affectionate indelible gratitude.

LONDON, June 21.

Report now states, that the French expedition has for its object, first to seize the Brazils; secondly, to occupy the Cape of Good Hope, ceded by France to the Dutch; thirdly to take by surprize the Island of St. Helena, which is well known not to be fortified with a completeness adequate to its importance.—Masters of the Brazils, the Cape of Good Hope, and St. Helena, as well as of the Isle of France, they would possess the keys to all our East India possessions, and the half-way boules, if one may use the expression, of our Indian Commerce.

There was a report yesterday that Government had received intelligence of another Spanish squadron of six sail of the line having escaped from Cadiz previous to the blockade being renewed.

June 22.

On Wednesday the following message was delivered to the Commons, and a similar communication was made to the Lords.

GEORGE REX.

His Majesty thinks proper to acquaint the House of Commons, that the communications which have taken place and are still depending between his Majesty and some of the continent, have not yet been brought to such a point as to enable his Majesty to lay the result of them before the House, or to enter into any further explanation with the French Government, consistently with the sentiments expressed by his Majesty at the opening of the present session. But his Majesty conceives, that it may be of essential importance, that he should have it in his power to avail himself of any favorable conjunction for giving effect to such a concert with other powers, as may afford the best means of resisting the inordinate ambition of France, and may be most likely to lead to a termination of the present contest on grounds consistent with the permanent safety and interest of his Majesty's dominions, and the security and independence of Europe. His Majesty therefore recommends it to the House of Commons to consider of making provision for enabling his Majesty to take such measures, and enter into such engagements, as the exigencies of affairs may require.

June 25.

Lord Sidmouth, (Mr. Addington) is reported to have resigned his office of President of the Council. Those connected with him, or are allied to him by political friendship, of course will follow his example. On the cause and consequences we at present forbear to comment.

June 29.

Intelligence is said to have reached Government, of the determination of Austria to co-operate in a decisive and vigorous manner against France, in consequence of the consolidation of the Ligurian Republic with the Empire of Bonaparte, who is stated, on receiving a dispatch at Milan from Vienna, to have declared, that as Francis seemed tired of the Emperial Crown, he should take the first opportunity of adding to it his own.—Those who circulate, and those who give credit to such abfured rumours, are equally contemptible.

The total of the effective strength of the British army on the 1st of May last, was 21,452 cavalry, 130,332 infantry, and 78,794 militia.

July 2.

The Prussian Monarch (by a note through Baron Haidenbei, has avowed his resolution to prevent the subsidiary treaty with Great-Britain, for 25,000 Swedish troops being carried into effect.

The articles of impeachment against Lord Melville were ordered to be printed on the 4th of July, and to be taken into consideration on the 9th.—There are eight specific charges; five of them amount to 84,000l. deficiency; the other three regard the supposed violation of the law in drawing the naval money, &c.

July 5.

We can assure our readers, from the most respectable and unquestioned authority, that the Earl of Buckinghamshire, Lord Sidmouth, and Mr. Vansittart have resigned the offices they held in the Administration.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.

Received via Norfolk. Bridge Town Gazette Extraordinary. Four o'clock, Tuesday afternoon 23d July.

"A report has just reached us, received by L'Eclair, King's schooner, from St. Kitts, in which has been communicated to Rear Admiral Cochrane, of the defeat of the Brest fleet by Admiral Gardner. This is stated to have been derived from Martinique, where it was communicated by a frigate in 22 days from France, and inferred in the Gazette of that island—and was confirmed by a corvette which arrived the day following, stating that Admiral Gardner had taken six sail and sunk 3 of the line. L'Eclair spoke an American vessel from Martinique, which corroborated these accounts; and added that it was generally believed at Martinique."

From the Norfolk Ledger, Aug. 5.

Just as this paper was put to press, arrived Capt. Haynes, in the schooner Paragon, 15 days from St. Bartholomews, from whom we learn the following particulars:—That the day before he sailed information was received at St. Bartholomews from Barbadoes, which acvited that a frigate had arrived at that island after a short passage from England with dispatches, which stated that the Brest fleet had put to sea, and that an enaggement had taken place between it and the British channel fleet, in which 6 ships of the line of the French were taken, 3 sunk, and the remainder returned to Brest in a shattered condition.

By letters from Bayonne, of the 6th of June, the following important news from the Isle de France, received by the vessel Gravin Van Chancios, is communicated; namely, that Admiral Linois has made himself master of 20 English ships, ten of which are said to belong to the East India Company.

Extract of a letter from Gibraltar Bay, dated June 16.

"The Spaniards it is said, have at Algesiras, on the opposite side of the Bay, 300 gun-boats and 30,000 troops ready to begin the siege of Gibraltar.—In the afternoon of yesterday the Spanish gun-boats got under weigh, and manœuvred a little; which occasioned the garrison at the rock to beat to arms and lay at quarters during the night."

AMHERST, July 16.

Lightning.—In no season have we had so frequent occasion to notice the severe effects of lightning as the present. In the thunder storm on Monday, the 8th inst. the lightning struck the house of Mr. ZARA THOMAS, in Claremont, and killed two of his sons—one about 18 years of age, the other about seven; and Mr. Thomas himself was considerably injured by the shock. The lightning, which entered the room, had the appearance of a ball of fire. Several persons, who were there it escaped injury.

But the most singular effects of lightning, that have come to our knowledge, was at Hillsborough, the day before-mentioned. It struck one of the chimnies of the Rev. Jonathan Barne's house and demolished the same to the roof; when it entered the house in various directions, destroyed several pots, unhinged the doors, broke considerable glass in the different windows, melted some pewter, unsoldered the tin ware, and left the house almost a perfect wreck. But what is most remarkable is, that a flat iron, which had been just set on the table, was melted as well as some candlesticks at no great distance; and the nails of several chests in the chambers was entirely drawn out; and all without the appearance of the effects of fire, except that some linen on the table with the flat-iron, was a little injured. No person was hurt.

On Wednesday se'nnight, (says a late London paper) as a fashionable was passing thro' Grosvenors-square, he had the good fortune to meet with an old sweetheart, whom he had left seven years before at Taunton, Devon. The robust son of Neptune, without explaining himself, caught the girl in his arms, and kissed her most unmercifully. The girl, quite frightened, called out for help, till the tar convinced her who he was, and of his determination to make her his wife. He told her he had just returned from India, with a plenty of shiners, and curse him if his poor Bet should not share them with him—It was in vain the girl begged to return to her master's house: she had, she said, something to deliver, and it would be necessary she should get her cloaths. Jack would listen to nothing; but immediately called a coach, and actually forced her into it, ordering the coachman to drive to "that place near St. Paul's, where they sold the article of marriage, and, if the church was open, he would complete the business before it was possible for an enemy to bear down upon him and deprive him of the prize he had taken. After it was all over, (he said) his little Bet should carry home her tea and sugar, and make her master a present of her wages for staying so long."

He repeated his orders to the coachman, who drove off to the no small diversion of the persons who witnessed this singular occurance.—The woman was by no means reluctant, and appeared as transported beyond the bounds of prudence as her eccentric lover.

FROM A FRENCH PAPER.

Mr. VANDILLE.

WAS the most remarkable man in Paris, both on account of his immense riches, and his extreme avarice. He lodged as far up as the roof would admit him, to avoid noise or visits; maintained one poor old woman to attend him in his garret; allowed her only seven sous per week, or a penny per diem. His usual diet was bread and milk; and for indulgence, some poor sour wine on Sunday; on which day he constantly gave one farthing to the poor being one shilling and a penny per annum; which he cast up, and, after his death, his extensive charity amounted to forty three shillings and four pence.

This prudent economist had been a magistrate or officer at Boulogne, from which obscurity he was promoted to Paris, for the reputation of his wealth, which he lent upon undeniable security to the public funds, not caring to trust individuals with his life and soul. While a magistrate at Boulogne, he maintained himself by taking upon him to be milk-taster general at the market; and from one to another filled his belly, and walled down his bread, at no expence of his own; not, doubtless, from any other principle than that of serving the public, and regulating the goodness of the milk! When he was called to Paris, knowing that stage vehicles were expensive, he determined to go thither on foot; and to avoid being robbed, he took care to export with himself neither more nor less than the considerable sum of three pence ſterling, to carry him one hundred and thirty miles; and with the greater facility to execute his plan of operation, he went in the quality of a poor prieſt, or mendicant, and, no doubt, gathered ſome few pence on the road, from ſuch pious and well-diſpoſed perſons of the country as were ſtrangers to him.

The great value a miſer annexes to a farthing, will make us leſs ſurpriſed at the infinite attachment he muſt have to a guinea, of which it is the ſeed, growing by gentle gradation, into pence ſhillings, pounds, thouſands, and ten thouſands; which made his worthy connoiſſeur ſay, "Take care of the farthings, and the pence and ſhillings will take care of themſelves; theſe lemma of wealth may be compared to ſeconds of time, which generate years, centuries, and even eternity itſelf."

When he became immenſely rich, being in the year 1735, worth ſeven or eight hundred thouſands, which he begot or multiplied on the body of a ſingle ſhilling, from the age of ſixteen to the age of ſeventy two, one day he heard a woodman going by in ſummer, at which ſeaſon they ſtock themſelves will fuel for the winter; he agreed with him at the loweſt rate poſſible, but ſtole from the poor man ſeveral logs, with which he loaded himſelf to his ſecret biding hole: and thus contrafted in that hot ſeaſon a fever: he then ſent for a ſurgeon, to bleed him, who aſking half a livre for the operation, was diſmiſſed: he then ſent for a poor barber, who undertook to open a vein for three pence a time; "But," ſays this worthy economiſt, "how often will it be requiſite to bleed?"—"Three times," ſaid he.—"And what quantity of blood do you intend to take?—"About eight ounces each time," anſwered the barber. "That will be nine pence; too much, too much," ſays the old miſer. "I am determined to go a cheaper way to work; take the whole quantity you deſign to take at three times, at one time, and that will ſave me ſix pence;" which being inſiſted on, he loſt twenty-four ounces of blood, and died in a few days, leaving all his vaſt treaſures to the King, whom he made his ſole heir. Thus he contracted his diſorder by pilfering, and his death by an unprecedented piece of parſimony.

SONG.

WE tars are all for fun and glee,
A hornpipe was my motion;
Time was I'd dance with any he,
That ſails the ſalt ſea ocean:
I'd rip the roll, the ſide, the rell,
Back, forward, in the middle,
And ruſh the pig, the toe and heel,
All going with the fiddle.

But one day toll'd a ſhot as rain
To chaſe the foe ſeverely;
A ſpinner queer'd my larboard gam,
And, damme, ſpoilt my dancing.

Well, I'm ſays I, no churliſh elf,
We meſſmates are all brothers;
Tho' I can't have no fun myſelf,
I may make fun for others.

A fiddle ſoon I made my own,
That girls and boys might caper;
Learnt, Rule Britannia, Bobbing Joan,
And grow'd a decent Scraper:

But juſt as I'd the knack on't got,
And did it pretty middling,
I loſt my elbow by a ſhot,
And, damme, ſpoilt my fiddling.

So ſometimes, as I turn'd my quid,
I got a knack of thinking,
As I ſhould be an invalid,
And then I took to drinking.

One day, call'd down my gun to man,
To tip it with the gravy;
I gave three cheers, and took the can,
To drink the BRITISH NAVY!

Before a ſingle drop I'd ſipt,
Or got it to my mouzzle,
A laugredge off my ſaddle whipt,
And, damme, ſpoilt the gwaſle.

So then I took to taking ſnuff
'Cauſe how my ſorrows doubled,
And pretty paſtime 'twas enough,
D'ye ſee, when I was troubled.

But Fortune, that miſchevous elf,
Still at ſome fun or other;
Not that I mind it for myſelf,
But juſt for Poll and Mother:

One day, while lying on a tack
To keep two ſpanking foes off,
A broadſide comes, caplues Jack,
And, damme, knocks my noſe off.

So in miſfortune's ſchool grown tough,
In this ſame ſort of knowledge;
Thinking, mayhap, I'd not enough,
They ſent me here to College.

And here we tell old tales and ſmoke,
And laugh while we are drinking,
Sailors, you know, will have their joke,
E'en though the ſhip was ſinking.

For I, while I get grog to drink
My wife, or friend, or King is,
'Twill be no eaſy thing, I think,
Damme, to ſpoil my ſinging.

LONDON, July 9.

We ſubjoin a letter from Plymouth, written by a moſt intelligent and reſpectable Friend, to whom we have often been in indebted for articles of intelligence on important occaſions, and which we always found to be correct:

"PLYMOUTH, July 7.—His Majeſty's ſhip Curieux, of 16 guns, Capt. Bettelworth arrived here this day, 2 P. M.—By her we have the very pleaſing accounts of the ſafe arrival in the Weſt-Indies of Lord Nelſon, early in June; The firſt iſland he made was Trinidad, which had not been diſturbed by the common enemy. Hearing nothing particular of the Combined Fleets, his Lordſhip ſailed for Barbadoes, where he found Admiral Cochrane, with his Majeſty's ſhips Spartiate and Northumberland, and from whom he learned that the French and Spaniards had, during their ſhort ſtay, buried 3000 troops; and, from the ſtate of the ſurvivors, they apprehended great difficulty in being able to return to France, for which country they had taken their departure. Lord Nelſon took the Spartiate and Northumberland with him as far as the N. end of Antigua, when he ordered them to return, conſidering his own force a match for the enemy.—This was on the 12th of June, at which time not a ſingle man was to be found on board his Lordſhip's fleet unfit for duty. At the ſame time that the Spartiate and Northumberland were detached from the fleet, the Curieux, by which we have received this intelligence, was diſpatched by his Lordſhip for England.

"On the fifth day after, viz. on the 19th of June, the Curieux came up with the Combined Fleet, and kept company ſome time, to try their rate of ſailing.—As her commander found they ſailed badly, and were miſerably handled, there ſeems no doubt but Lord Nelſon ſhould overtake them, probably by the 30th or 31ſt of June!

"The return, or rather attempt to return to Europe, is reduced to a certainty, and muſt brighten the hopes of our planters and the merchants connected with the Weſt Indies in this country."

Diſpatches to the above effect were received at the Admiralty at an early hour this morning. The news had diffuſed univerſal joy in the City, and ſtocks have riſen in conſequence.

Lord Nelſon's diſpatches are dated the 12th of June, at Antigua. His Lordſhip arrived at Barbadoes on the 4th, where he took 2000 troops on board. On the 8th the Combined Fleet paſſed Antigua on its return to Europe from Fort Royal, Martinique, where they left between three and four thouſand men ſick. The epidemical diſeaſe ſtill prevails in the enemy's ſhips. Lord Nelſon ſent off the Curieux on the 14th for England, and was himſelf in purſuit of the enemy. It was in lat. 22, N. long. 53, W. that the Curieux paſſed the combined fleet.

The enemy effected nothing by this expedition, except the capture of the Diamond Rock, the ſmall garriſon of which was obliged to ſurrender for want of water, not however without a gallant reſiſtance, in which the enemy loſt a number of men and three gun boats.

Extract from the Minutes,

DUBLIN, July 1.

Hamilton Rowan.——This morning, Mr. Hamilton Rowan appearing in the Court of King's Bench, the clerk of the crown having read the record of his outlawry, aſked him what he had to ſay, why judgment of death and execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him? Mr. Rowan, in reply, pleaded, that he was in Penſylvania, when he was outlawed; and that he had been inſtructed by his counſel that the outlawry was erroneous. After examining the writ, and error in point of fact was acknowledged, and the outlawry was reverſed. An indictment for treaſon was then read; to which Mr. Rowan pleaded his Majeſty's moſt gracious pardon; on which he was diſcharged.

Mr. Rowan having riſen from the kneeling poſition in which he heard the pardon read, thus addreſſed the court:

"When laſt I had the honor of appearing before this tribunal [ſeveral years, ago] I told your Lordſhip, I knew his Majeſty only by his wielding the force of the country, ſince that period, during my legal incapacity and abſence beyond ſeas, my wife and children have not only been unmoleſted, but protected; and in addition to thoſe favors, I am now indebted to the Royal Mercy for my life. I will neither my Lord, inſiſt upon the reſtitude of my intentions, nor the extent of my gratitude, leſt my conduct ſhould be attributed to baſe and unworthy motives: but I hope my future life will evince the ſincerity of thoſe feelings with which I am impreſſed, by ſuch unmerited proofs of his Majeſty's benefience."

To this addreſs the Chief Juſtice replied:

"Mr. Rowan from the ſentiments you have expreſſed, I have not a doubt but you will prove by your future conduct that his Majeſty's pardon has not been beſtowed on an unworthy object."

Mr. R wan then bowed to the court, and withdrew.

The Patriotic Fund Committee, at a ſpecial meeting, held at Lloyd's Coffee-houſe, have voted to Gen. Prevoſt, and the officers and men under his command, as a tribute of their conſideration for the gallant defence of Dominique, as follows:—To Gen. Prevoſt, a ſword value 100l. and a piece of plate value 200l.—To Major Nunn, a ſword value 50l. and a piece of plate value 100l.—A ſword and a piece of plate of the ſame value, to Capt. O'Connel.—The ſum of 100l. to Capt. C. Campbell, and the ſum of 40l. to each diſabled man, or who may have loſt a limb. 20l. to each man ſeverely wounded; and 10l. to every man ſlightly wounded; in which are included the militia of the iſland.

A very reſpectable Nobleman, Lord Milford, intends to bring a Bill into Parliament, for the better regulation of the driving of cattle, and including the puniſhment of hackney coachmen for cruel and barbarous conduct.

The more we reflect upon the the deſigns of the French, upon which the curious intercepted correſpondence lately publiſhed, has thrown ſuch ſtrong light, the more are we convinced, that an attack upon our Indian ſettlements, is one of their great objects. Some private letters received within a day or two from France, ſtrengthen our opinions. They ſtate in poſitive terms, that in a certain latitude the combined fleets were to ſeparate, and that ſeven ſail of the line were to be detached to the Eaſt Indies with 5000 troops on board.

Egypt.—The complete defeat of the Ottoman army in Egypt, has been communicated in official diſpatches of Feb. 5 tranſmitted to Conſtantinople. The immediate conſequence of the victory was a captulation ſigned by Hourſchid Pacha, the Turkiſh Governor of Egypt, ſurrendered to the Beys the poſſeſſion of Cairo.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A SINGULAR FACT.

In one of the ſhips of the fleet that ſailed lately from Falmouth for the Weſt-Indies went paſſengers a Lady and her ſeven Lap Dogs, for the paſſage of each of which ſhe paid thirty pounds, on the expreſs condition that they were to dine at the cabin table, and lap their wine afterwards! Yet theſe happy dogs do not engroſs the whole of their good lady's affection as ſhe has alſo in Jamaica forty cats and a huſband!!!

Repartee. When a gentleman took off his hat to a quaker.—"Friend, (ſaid he) ſhall I pull off my coat?"

Curious Diſpute.—In one ſtreet on Bolton-le Moor, there have lately been no fewer than 25 women in that advanced ſtate of pregnancy which required the ſpeedy aſſiſtance of the obſtetric tribe. About a week ago, two of theſe females were delivered of boys, in the ſame houſe, and within ſo ſhort a period, that the man-mid wife had ſcarcely time to perform his duty with the one, until he was called to aſſiſt the other. The two children were, during the confuſion, inadvertently put into one bed; the conſequence was, that nobody could afterwards aſcertain to which mother either belonged. Neither of the mothers could identify her own child, and both claimed the handſomeſt.

Laſt St. David's day, during divine ſervice at St. James's, Liverpool, a ſailor boy, going into church, put a half-a guinea into the plate: as it was ſuppoſed to be a miſtake, he was deſired by one of the truſtees of the Welch Charity to take back his half guinea, and throw his ſhilling. "No, replied the little tar, I was brought up in the ſchool, and give it with all my heart. [London Pap.]

ECONOMY.

A few days ſince, a publican at Horſham, after buffing a ſervant boy for attempting to light a candle by thruſting it into the fire, caught it out of the lad's hand, and at the ſame time took a piece of paper from his waiſtcoat, lit the candle with it, and threw the remainder into the grate, where it was inſtantly conſumed. When Bonniface's warmth was a little abated, he recollected that the piece of paper he had made uſe of to ſave his candle's end, was a ten pound Bank Note! [Lon. pap.

MEDICAL.

Believing the uſe of ſimples, (in preference to the violent remedies moſt frequently preſcribed by gentlemen of the faculty) to be much more ſalutary and beneficial; and particularly, better adapted to the finances of the poorer claſs of citizens; it becomes our duty to give circulation to every thing which has for its object the advancement of the deſired end. In the inſtances before us, we have proof, that after all the reſources of medicine have been exhauſted to no other effect than making the patient worſe, a reſource to ſimples have produced a rapid and radical cure, and that too in a very circumſcribed period.

In our laſt we inſerted a communication from Dr. Brevitt, of Baltimore, on the virtue of the leaves of common blackberry, in caſes of the dyſentery, or ſpring ſickneſs, in children, which he has aſcertained by practice—ſince which a publication has appeared, (ſigned a "Female," and which is ſubjoined) wherein it is ſtated, that the root of what is moſt commonly called dewberry, has proved in various inſtances, a mild and ſpeedy cure for the moſt violent dyſentery, even in the laſt ſtage. If the efficacy is actually ſuch as deſcribed by the communicant, (but have we reaſon to queſtion it) the diſcovery is of much conſequence to all heads of families, who beſt can judge of the feelings of others, by ideally placing themſelves in a like ſituation; and by reflecting, that a ſimilar misfortune may one day await them.—Wil. Mer.

FROM THE BALTIMORE AMERICAN.

MESSRS. PRENTIS AND FRAILEY,

With indeſcribable pleaſure I read Doctor Brevitt's obſervations on the blackberry leaf. I have long had an ardent deſire to publiſh to the world the virtues of the root of the ſame bearer. If he means the low running blackberry, by ſome called dewberry, I can add, as a further proof of its efficacy, that I was cured by it, of a violent dyſentery, after being abandoned by the moſt eminent phyſicians in N. York. My brother, who with anxious ſolicitude watched his apparently dying ſiſter, and hearing her complain (in a voice ſcarcely audible) of the cruelty of being abandoned by the faculty, replied, with joy illuminating his countenance, "I have this moment ſeen aſſected a ſovereign remedy, and one wherein the pride of the faculty was a little humbled. You are not ignorant, my dear ſiſter, that my youthful days were devoted to the ſervice of my country. There was a time in the army, when the dyſentery prevailed to ſuch a terrible degree, that nothing could be heard but the diſtreſs of the ſick, or the groans of the dying. The phyſicans tried their ſkill in vain. At length there paſſed by an old Squaw, who demanded to know the complaint. After being informed, the wept for the ignorance of the learned phyſician, and taking him by the hand, ſhewed him the low running blackberry, or dewberry, of the roots of which ſhe made a ſtrong decoction, or tea, and cauſed the patients to drink three teacups full, milk warm, and during the operation to drink plentifully of water, (it operates in this complaint as gentle purge.) All who drank of it recovered." Give me to drink of it alſo, I pray you, my brother ſaid, I. In haſte it was prepared, and in three hours after the taking of it the nature of the complaint was entirely changed, and I recovered after few days to the aſtoniſhment of all the neighborhood, who were in hourly expectation of my death.

Some time after, reſiding in Charleſton, South Carolina, a methodiſt miniſter called on me and informed me, with tears in his eyes that his little daughter lay very ſick with the dyſentery, and the more phyſic ſhe took, the worſe ſhe ſeemed to get; and he likewiſe added that he had buried a little daughter of the ſame age, and with the ſame complaint ſome years paſt. I preſcribed a tea-cupful of the ſtrong decoction of the root of the low blackberry, the effect was ſimilar to that taken by myſelf; ſhe recovered in a ſhort time, to the great joy of her worthy parents.

I reſided, afterward, in New England, and took a fancy to a charming little boy of one of my indigent neighbors, who indulged me with the company of the child frequently for days and weeks together, and having at one period miſſed him for a week, it led me par curioſity to enquire for him, when I was informed that he was buried that morning with one of his ſiſters, and that the third and only surviving child lay almost expiring with the same complaint the dysentery—I flew to the house of sorrow and death, in order to save one child if possible, when to my surprise I found my favorite boy still living, although very sick—his two little sisters had been buried that morning. I demanded of their mother who their physician was, and wether he pursued the same course of medicine with this child as with the two others who had died? She answered that he did to her certain knowledge. Does your child grow worse or better? It grows worse and worse, the same as the other children did, replied the mother. Why then, in the name of common sense, does he not try other means? I then demanded the situation of the two children previous to their death, and was told that they swelled very much, even to have the appearance of bursting. I then observed my little favorite more attentively, when I discovered his hands and feet were very much swelled. Shew me the medicine, said I, almost frantic with grief and fear.—When behold it was calomel! I concealed my feelings from the mother, but privately threw the calomel into the fire, for fear she should administer it during the time that I was gone in search of the physician. I could not find him; and as their was no time to be lost, I took the liberty to wrest the dear little boy from the jaws of death; without his leave, by giving him the strong tea made of the root of the running blackberry, and afterwards, a dole of gentle-physic, to carry off the effects of the calomel from the system, for which deed the quack has never forgiven me.

At another time, as I was journeying with my family, through a small village in New-England, I called at a house where there was a lad sick with the dysentery—I directed the mother to prepare the tea above, and give him two teacups full, which was done; and so pleasing and unexpected was the cure, that the lad was sent by his mother to return me thanks at my own house, in less than two weeks, although at the distance of six miles.

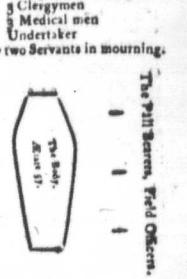
OBITUARY.

Yesterday at four o'clock, died His Excellency Lieut. General Peter Hunter, Lieut. Governor of Upper Canada and Commanding in Chief His Majesty's Forces in both the Canadas.



As an Officer, his Character was high and unsullied; and at this present moment his Death may be considered as a great Public loss. As Lieut Governor of Upper Canada, his loss will be severely felt: for by his unremitting attention and exertions, he has, in the course of a very few years, brought that Infant Colony to an unparallelled state of prosperity.

His remains will be interred on Sunday next, at one o'clock, with the Military Honours due to his Rank.

The Obsequies of General HUNTER were, this day, solemnized in a manner becoming his late rank and station.

During the procession, minute guns were fired; first one from the grand battery, and afterwards continued, by two guns, from the cavalier battery at the citadel. The body was received by the troops and militia, when they shouldered and presented arms, the music and drums playing the dead march. The head of the column was formed at the corner of Mr. B by's house, and continued round the grand parade to the door of the church. The corpse passed through the line of troops to the church, preceded by the bands of music. From the Church the procession proceeded to the place of inter-their arms reverted. After the service, at the place of interment, one round was fired slowly and distinctly by the eleven field pieces, followed by one round of small arms, by regiments; then a second round of artillery, followed in like manner by the small arms; and lastly, a third round of artillery, and a third round of small arms. On the commencing of the firing, at the burial ground, the minute guns ceased.

The attendance of the militia was in consequence of an offer of their services, as a mark of their respect to the deceased; which offer was accepted by Col. Bowes. The pall bearers were six field officers. The Mourners were

All the Officers, on duty, had hatbands and scarfs. The drums were covered with black cloth. The spectacle was altogether impressively solemn and sublime.

The colours at the citadel have been hoisted half mast high ever since the decease of the General. The officers are to appear at Church to-morrow in their scarfs and hatbands, and the troops to continue to mourn for a week. The Regimental canteens were ordered to be shut at 9 o'clock yesterday evening, not to be opened again till 12 o'clock on monday.

QUEBEC, July 27th.

On Saturday last, a Sergeant of the 6th Regt. was stabbed in the body, with a bayonet, by a corporal of the same Regiment. Great hopes are entertained of the Sergeant's recovery.

On Monday last, about 8 o'clock in the forenoon, Miss SOPHIA WILLS of Quebec and Miss PANET of l'Assomption, were walking in the woods, at Wood Land, the Seat of NICHOLAS MONTOUR, Esq. having missed their route, a number of inhabitants of the Parish of Pointe du Lac and some Indians from Three Rivers, searched the wood, when they were found, about six miles distant, at six o'clock on Tuesday morning, in good spirits.

Extract of a Letter from Montreal, dated 25th July, 1805.

"Melancholy accidents happen to some almost every day. Beginning with this month. A young man was cut down twice hanging himself: Mr. John Russel, on his way from Scotland, to this place, was knocked over board by the boom of the vessel, on Lake Champlain and drowned. W. Travis, of this place, on his way to Halifax, fell over board in the night time and was drowned. A young man of this place, in a fit of melancholy cut his throat about to o'clock at night, and got no assistance till next morning, he is in a fair way of recovery; another man was drowned in his well; and to finish with Sunday a boy was drowned in the river, while bathing. On Tuesday about six P. M. the steeple of the Hotel Dieu was struck with lightning, and caught fire, and continued burning till after 9 o'clock, without doing any other damage than burning the upper part of the steeple, almost down to the bell; happily for us there was a continual pour of rain almost the

The following Address was yesterday presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, by several Gentlemen of importance in the Society. We hear that the signatures were respectable and numerous.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY SIR ROBERT SHORE MILNES, BARONET, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Lower-Canada, &c. &c. &c.

"May it please your Excellency,

"We the inhabitants of the City of Quebec, could not hear but with a lively sense of regret that Your Excellency proposes to leave this Province in the course of a few days, if any thing could encrease our sensibility on this occasion it is the consideration that Your Excellency's health has been so much impaired in the exercise of your public duty as to render necessary a visit to your native country.

"It is now six years since your Excellency came to this Province, and a midst a war, the ravages of which have extended to the remotest parts of the Globe, and with an enemy, whose emissaries have town discord far and wide, have the inhabitants of Lower-Canada, under your Excellency's Administration enjoyed all the blessings of the most profound peace. Nor have these blessings been the effect of an accidental concurrence of circumstances, but are to be imputed to a wise, equitable and vigilant policy pervading at once every department of Your Excellency's Government.

"The Militia of this Country, so necessary for its defence, have by Your Excellency's exertions been organised, and taught the Military exercise in such a manner as to be rendered useful if their service should be required. Those of the Town have in a great part been cloathed, and so armed and disciplined as to present under Your auspices, a formidable barrier for the security of this Province against its enemies; Thus by Your Excellency's efforts a monument has been raised to shew that loyalty and public spirit exist in Canada, as well as in all other the dominions of our beloved Sovereign.

"We have only to express an unfeigned wish that Your Excellency, Lady Milnes and Family may have a prosperous voyage; and that Your Excellency may speedily return to Quebec with renewed Health, and resume the Government of this Province, in which more than two hundred and fifty thousand Inhabitants have already enjoyed, under Your Administration, an extent of rational Liberty and degree of happiness rarely to be found in other parts of the world.

We have the Honor to be with the most profound respect
SIR,
Your Excellency's most Faithful
And very humble Servants,

Quebec 30th July 1805.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following answer:

GENTLEMEN,

I return you my sincere Thanks for the assurances of your Esteem and regard conveyed in your present Address. It cannot but afford me the highest satisfaction to find, after a residence of six years amongst you, that my public conduct has been approved by so very respectable a proportion of the inhabitants of Quebec. I cannot omit this opportunity of noticing the alacrity so universally shewn by all Ranks of His Majesty's subjects in the city of Quebec in volunteering for the Militia service, and the mild the necessity unfortunately occurred that they would, in the face of the Enemy, realize the high expectations formed of them from their discipline and appearance.

Accept my grateful thanks for your kind wishes for myself and family and be assured that to hear of the prosperity and happiness of the inhabitants of Quebec will ever afford me the truest gratification.

After the stone was placed, the Reverend Mr. Spark, acting Grand Chaplain, pronounced the following Oration,

MY BRETHEREN

We have here met, in Masonic order, according to the ancient practice of the royal craft, to assist at the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a public Building, intended to serve for the accommodation of strangers, and which will also contribute to the ornament of the City, and to the convenience and recreation of the Inhabitants in general.

On this occasion we cannot but reflect with gratitude, on the kindness of Providence, and the protecting care of the parent state, which, at a time like the present, when the noise of war is heard in almost every other quarter of the globe, permit us to live in quietness, and to cultivate the arts of peace. Thanks are due also to the liberality and public spirit of those, who have so generously come forward, to encourage and promote this design, without any prospect, of private advantage, to the Legislature in like manner, who approving their intentions, have granted them an act of incorporation—and to the Committee, by whose skill and assiduity, the necessary arrangements have been made, and the work put in a way of being completed, to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

It is observed that the improvements of Architecture, in every country, generally keeps peace with the advancement of civilization and progress of science. In whatever country you meet with nothing but rude and artless structures, for the lodging and convenience of the Inhabitants, there you may expect also to find a rude and uncultivated state of Society. The gradual steps, by which society advances from barbarism to refinement, may be traced, with tolerable accuracy, in the improvement of their buildings.

When the Romans, at that time a polished nation, having learned the rudiments of science from the ancient Greek first visited the Island of Great Britain, they found the Inhabitants, as yet, ignorant of all that deserves the name of architecture. But in proportion as they emerged from barbarism, they also improved in the art of building; and the face of the country, no less than the manners of the people, soon began to evince the good effects of their intercourse with a more civilized Nation.—At the present day, Great Britain doth not yield to Greece or Rome, in the magnificence of her Buildings, or elegance of her architecture. The many stately edifices, which are there, in every quarter, to be seen, strike the beholder with the Ideas of national wealth and refinement. The traveller, who visits that country, requires no other evidence to satisfy him of the taste and genius of the people, and of the prosperity of the nation.

In this remote colony of the British Empire, we cannot pretend to emulate the Parent state, in any Art or refinement of Life; but under her auspices and fostering care, we may profit by her instructions and example. And it is with a degree of pride and satisfaction that we have to remark, that several Edifices, which have been lately erected in this province, and various works of public utility which have been undertaken and executed, indicate a degree of public spirit, highly auspicious to the posterity of the country, and which seems to promise a rapid progress of colonial improvement.

That our beloved Sovereign, whose paternal care and munificence extend to the remotest parts of his dominions, may yet long wield the sceptre over us, that our excellant constitution may be transmitted unimpaired to the latest prosperity, and that we, and all the subjects thereof, may be loyal and happy, is our earnest wish, and prayer, to the great architect of the universe.

We humbly beseech thee, O thou great Parent of nature, that, by the kindness of thy providence, we may be enabled to carry on and to finish the work, which is here begun, that thou might be graciously pleased to be a guard to this City, to preserve it from decay and ruin to the latest posterity. May this building now about to be failed, be the habitation of loyalty, of virtue and of happiness; may true hospitality, concord, and benevolence be ever found therein, with humanity and peace. Grant his, O Lord, we beseech thee, for the sake of Jesus Christ; to whom, with thee, and the holy spirit, be glory, and dominion, now and ever more. AMEN.

His Honor the President was accompanied by the gentlemen composing the Committee for managing the affairs of the Union Corporation, and, we may say, by an immense concourse of people assembled to witness the Ceremony, which was performed, throughout, with becomming dignity and decorum. In the afternoon the gentlemen of the Committee gave an elegant dinner, at Sturch's Tavern, to his Honor the President, the Field Officers of the Regiments in garrison, and several other Gentlemen. His Excellency General HUNTER, Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada, and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Forces in both Provinces, we understand, was invited, but we are sorry to say, that, from indisposition, he could not attend."

A singular suicide.—The following is as striking an instance of a deliberate act of desperation as we recollect to have met with. On Wednesday the 9th inst. a labourer of the name of Robitaille, of this city, borrowed a gun for the purpose, as he said, of killing a fox; when he went and dug a grave on the plains, near the defcent of Wolfe's Cove, made his coffin, placed the coffin in the grave, and himself in the coffin; where he contrived by fixing the muzzle to his breast, to shoot himself. It was not till some days after that he was found dead in the situation described. It is said that he was subject to fits of lunacy.

WAR-OFFICE, June 1, 1805.

35th, Regiment of foot, Lieutenant THOMAS EDGWORTH from the 6th foot, to be Captain of a Company, without purchase.

AN INTERESTING FACT.

Some years previous to the late revolution in France, when the nobility yet held their almost regal honors: a Mr. ——, a young Englishman of fortune, who was on his travels, and stopped in Paris, used to spend much of his time at the Hotel of the Marquis de Bouille. His hospitality, and personal accomplishments won far on the esteem of Mr. ——; and in one French family, even the heart of the most dissolute court in Europe, he beheld connubial happiness, connubial purity! the personal graces of the marchioness, though in the wane of forty years, yet gave lovelinefs to the sentiments of a mind that was only to be known to be adored. She was admired and esteemed by Mr. ——, as her husband was reverenced and loved. When this truly noble pair quitted Paris, for their Chateau in the country, they requested their guest speedily to follow them.

Mr. —— had been some weeks in Paris after the departure of his illustrious friends, and was preparing to comply with their wishes, when he received a letter from the Marquis, written in the utmost confternation and anguish of mind. He had loft the wife of his bofom—fhe was then lying dead in the caftle, after having endured the pains of a fhort but rapid illness—fhe was at peace; but for him, his grief muft be as eternal as his love."

This intelligence furprifed and afflicted Mr. ——, and eager to comfole his fuffering friend, he immediately fet off for the Chateau. When he arrived at the village, which lay at the foot of the hill on which the caftle was fituated, inftead of the ftillnefs of fympathetic forrow marking every countenance for one whofe inmoft foul was charity;—inftead of this decent tribute to the virtuous dead—the bells rang: and the peafants were aflembled, dancing, finging and exhibiting every feature of feftivity. Amazed and fhocked, he enquired what it meant? The general reply was—"the marchioness is come to life!"—Bewildered with a hope he hardly dared cherifh, he haftened to the chateau; and there was received with open arms by the happy Marquis. He led him to the chamber of his amiable wife; who thanked Mr. —— with tears of gratitude for the confolation his friendfhip had intended her lord. After the firft hurried obfervations were over, and Mr. —— felt his emotion fubfided to tranquility; he enquired the occafion of this blifsful change. The marchioness replied to him, nearly in the following terms.

"My illnefs was fudden and fo alarming, that the Marquis fummoned feveral phyficians to attend me. All their exertions feemed to fail, and they declared that there was no hope; but confented to remain in the room until I breathed my laft. I took leave of my family. And in bidding my husband adieu forever, a fudden convulfion feized me—and I appeared to expire in his arms. I fell back on my bed, pale and motionlefs; and he was torn by abfolute force from the apartment. The phyficians then advanced and looked at me, declared that I was dead. I was ftiff, and cold as marble, and laid in my fhroud upon my couch, to be ready for interment. For this part of my narration I am indebted to my women. In obedience to our religion, and in honor of my rank, the room was darkened, hung with black, and lighted with wax-lights; and the anthems of the dead were chanted morning and evening around my bed. At laft the day came, in which I was to be committed to the Earth. My husband, who had been detained from the light of my corpse, hearing I was to be removed, broke from his room, and flying to the door of my apartment, infifted upon feeing me once more. In vain he cuftened; his attendants, in obedience to the commands of the phyficians, held him faft—but his grief was ftronger than their ftrength; and with a udden exertion, he burft from their hold, and rufhing into the chamber; flung himfelf upon my bofom exclaiming—"My wife? my dear wife, they fhall not tear thee from me!"—At thofe words, I raifed myfelf, and clafped him into my arms—he fainted. By the aflifance of the faculty he foon recovered, and I was removed to a warm bed, which quickly reftored me to my former felf. What I have told you is extraordinary: but what I have yet to tell, ftill ftrikes me with horror. When I appeared to expire, I fuppofe I fwooned; for I have no recollection of any thing, until my fenfes feemed to awake at the ftrains of fine mufic.

I found myself ſtretched on my couch, unable to open my eyes, to move, or articulate a ſound. The voices of the ſiſters chilled me with dread. But when I heard them proceed for hours in the ſolemnity, and my women who ſat round me, diſcourſing of my death and intended burial—God knows what were my horrors! the conviction that I ſhould be buried alive, with all my ſenſes contemplating the ſcene, almoſt drove me mad; yet I was incapable of expreſſing, even by a ſign, that I exiſted. In this ſtate of diſtraction and terror was my mind, when I heard my huſband's voice at the door—when I heard his ſtruggles, his eloquent grief, O! my ſoul was torn with agony! It appeared ready to burſt from my body—but when my lord threw himſelf upon my breaſt, and in all the torture of anguiſh, called upon my name, and ſtrained me to his heart—it cauſed ſuch a tempeſt in my ſoul—ſuch a revolution in my whole frame, that I felt the will, and the next moment had the power, to graſp him in my arms, the reſt you already know."

Lately died at Lubec, a child, poſſeſſed of very extraordinary talents; at ten months old it is ſtated he ſpoke his mothers tongue; that at one year he knew the principle contents of the five Books of Moſes; that at 14 months he was completely maſter of the hiſtorical part of the New-Teſtament; that at two years and a half he ſpoke Latin and French with great facility, and died before he was four. His conſtitution it is added, was ſo uncommonly delicate, that he had been weaned but a ſhort time before his death. His father is an eminent merchant, named Keinitken.

ARITHMETICAL QUESTION.

A Student at one of our univerſities, ſome years ſince, by the name of Tucker, who was remarkable for large teeth; and another by the name of Green, whoſe noſe was not the leaſt prominent feature of his face, one day warmly diſputed the point of precedence in arithmetical knowledge. As the conteſt grew warmer, and was not likely ſoon to be compromiſed by themſelves, they agreed to refer the matter to the deciſion of a ſtudent in a claſs above them. In diſcloſing the diſpute to this arbitrator, they agreed that he ſhould propound a knotty queſtion, and the one who ſhould ſolve it with the moſt expedition, and, in his judgment, with moſt propriety, ſhould bear the palm. After conſiderable heſitation and unwillingneſs to comply on the part of the referee elect, and increaſing importunity of the diſputants, he propoſed the following very ingenious and keenly fatirical queſtion, which at once ended the conteſt.

"If Tucker's teeth three ſcore of beef
"Conſume in half an hour;
"I pray diſcloſe what chance Green's noſe
"Would Rund, if in their power!"

THE VILLAIN.—MAN.

BY A MOTHER TO HER INFANT DAUGHTER.

THY reſt is mild, my darling child,
Thy ſmiles bright, thy pillow ſmooth,
And ſweet the ſmile, that plays the while,
And dimples round thy coral mouth.

But not ſo mild, my darling child,
Will be thy reſt—it never can!
Ere'er you prove, like me, the love
And friendſhip of the villain,—man!

Yet by thy reſt, thy villans bleſt,
Bleſt, though with grief I ſigh ſincere,
Though oft their sighs, for the arts,
Oft mingle with thy milk a tear.

Ah! could my breaſt a bed of reſt
For ever be, that I might fan
In thine, thoſe fires that hear'n inſpires,
And ſhield thee from the villain,—man.

It makes me ſigh, to think that I
Could once have ſlept ſo ſound as thee,
And ſadly weep to think that ſleep
Shall never more my portion be.

To win my love thy father ſtrove,
And veil'd with ſeeming woe his plan;
But, ah! betray'd a ſtriſeleſs maid—
The villian! oh, the villain,—man.

And thus with art, child of my heart!
Will he diſſuſe the lying ſmile,
And call each prayer, the gods to hear,
And thy unpractis'd heart beguile.

Wait not to prove, child of my love!
Wait not his proffer'd vows to ſcan;
Be thine to fly, or you will ſigh,
And curſe, like me, the villain,—man.

To deſerts wild, my darling child!
Be thine with innocence to fly;
And like the buds that gem the woods,
Bloom only to the vernal ſky,

Soft ling'ring there, with tender care,
Thy mother's ſpirit oft ſhall fan
Thoſe holy fires, that hear'n inſpires,
And guard the from the villain,—man.

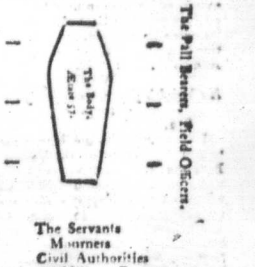
OBITUARY.

Yeſterday at four o'clock, died His Excellency Lieut. General Peter Hunter, Lieut. Governor of Upper Canada and Commanding in Chief His Majeſty's Forces in both the Canadas.



As an Officer, his Character was high and unſullied; and at this preſent moment his Death may be conſidered as a great Public loſs. As Lieut Governor of Upper Canada, his loſs will be ſeverely felt: for by his unremitting attention and exertions, he has, in the courſe of a very few years, brought that infant Colony to an unparallelled ſtate of proſperity.

His remains will be interred on Sunday next, at one o'clock, with the Military Honours due to his Rank.

The Obſequies of General HUNTER were, this day, ſolemnized in a manner becoming his late rank and ſtation.

During the proceſſion, minute guns were fired; firſt one from the grand battery, and afterwards continued, by two guns, from the cavalier battery, at the citadel. The body was received by the troops and militia, when they ſhouldered and preſented arms, the muſic and drums playing the dead march. The head of the column was formed at the corner of Mr. Black's houſe, and continued round the grand parade to the door of the church. The corpſe paſſed through the line of troops to the church, preceded by the bands of muſic. From the Church the proceſſion proceeded to the place of interment, the troops and militia having their arms reverted. After the service, at the place of interment, one round was fired slowly and distinctly by the eleven field pieces, followed by one round of small arms, by regiments; then a second round of artillery, followed in like manner by the small arms; and lastly, a third round of artillery, and a third round of small arms. On the commencing of the firing, at the burial ground, the minute guns ceased.

The attendance of the militia was in consequence of an offer of their services, as a mark of their respect to the deceased; which offer was accepted by Col. Bowes. The pall bearers were six field officers. The Mourners were

The Hon. Thomas Dunn, President of the Province.

Col. Bowes,	Col. Green,
Major Curry,	Major Robe,
Hon. Mr. Craigie,	Capt. Gomm,

Mr. William Green.

All the Officers, on duty, had hatbands and scarfs. The drums were covered with black cloth. The spectacle was altogether impressively solemn and sublime.

The colours at the citadel have been hoisted half mast high ever since the decease of the General. The officers are to appear at Church to-morrow in their scarfs and hatbands, and the troops to continue to mourn for a week. The Regimental canteens were ordered to be shut at 9 o'clock yesterday evening, not to be opened again till 12 o'clock on monday.

Latest Intelligence.

Admiralty Office, July 6, 1805.

Copy of a letter from Rear Admiral Drury, to William Marsden, Esq; dated on board the Trent, in Cork Harbour, June 29, 1805.

Sir—This morning arrived here his Majesty's ship Loire, bringing with her the Valiant, a formidable French privateer, which she captured four days ago, as related in Capt. Maitland's letter herewith enclosed, for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. I am, &c.

W. O'B. DRURY.

His Majesty's ship Loire at Sea, June 25, 1805.

Sir,

I have much pleasure in announcing to you the capture of the Valiant, of Bordeaux, a frigate privateer, carrying thirty guns, and two hundred and forty men, by his Majesty's ship under my command, in lat. 49 deg, 30 min. and long. 16 deg. 20 min. after a very hard chace of twelve hours; when nearly within gun shot, the Melampus and Brilliant hove in sight on the weather bow, which obliged her to bear up, and threw her into our hands about two hours sooner than she otherwise would have been. She is reckoned one of the most complete ships ever fitted out at Bordeaux, and is perfectly calculated to be taken into his Majesty's service, sails incomparably fast, carries twenty 18 pounders on her main deck, and 6 sixes (which she threw overboard in the chace) on her quarter deck. The Valiant had been twenty days from Bordeaux, was victualled and steered for a four month's cruize; the only capture she has made is the Lord Spencer, Halifax Packet.

I have the honor to be &c.

FRED. MAITLAND.

To Rear Admiral Drury, &c. &c. Cove.

LONDON, July 6.

Earl Camden is mentioned as Lord Sidmouth's successor in the Cabinet, and Mr. Yorke as Lord Camden's successor in the War Department.

The Earl of Buckinghamshire, we understand, has also resigned the post of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

July 8.

The following is, according to a private letter, the state of the naval preparations in the Dutch ports:

At Antwerp, building, 6 ships of the line, and 2 frigates.

At Amsterdam, 1 ship of 74 guns, just launched; 1 do. gone to the Texel.

At Rotterdam, 1 ship of 90 guns, to be launched in about 3 months, and 1 frigate of 32 guns.

In the Texel, 6 ships of the line, with several frigates; and from 40 to 50 transports, of from 400 to 500 tons burthen.

The manœuvres of the expedition army, in the Dutch camp at Zeyst, began on the 16th ult. in the presence of the French General, Marmont.

Madame Jerome Bonaparte was yesterday morning safely delivered of a son, at her residence in Park Place, Camberwell. Mr. Aveline, of Camberwell was the accoucheur.

Bonaparte is visiting his Italian fortresses. Mantua has been carefully inspected, and the additional works have been ordered to be completed as soon as possible. He is now gone to Genoa to receive the submission of a people who formerly were the Masters of that little Island that gives him birth.

A sharp debate took place in the House of Lords yesterday, upon the Duke of Athol's bill. Our readers know that this is one of the subjects upon which Mr. Pitt and the Addington party disagree. Lord Sidmouth and the Earl of Buckinghamshire no longer occupy the benches upon which the Cabinet Ministers usually sit, but seated themselves on one of the cross benches (a bench well adapted to, and generally referred for the opposition) where they continued during the whole debate—Lord Sidmouth, as will be seen by our Parliament Report, opposed the Duke of Athol's bill in a long speech, as did Lord Ellenborough.

In the House of Commons, the eight articles of impeachment were brought up, read and agreed to; after which Mr. Whitbread propoſed an additional article, which was read a first and second time, respecting the money paid from the Bank and Exchequer into the hands of Mr. Mark Sprott.

July 16.

Admiral Russell has arrived at Yarmouth with four sail of the line from the coast of Holland; and Admiral Douglas has arrived at Dungeness with part of his squadron from Boulogne.

The report of the capture of the Spanish line of battle ship is unfounded. The Carthagena fleet of 7 sail of the line, sailed on the 8th of June for Cadiz, but hearing of Admiral Collingwood's being off that port, they returned.

July 18.

A King's messenger, with dispatches for General Sir Eyre Coote, K. B. arrived at Cork on Friday last from London. It was expected that the general would immediately embark for Jamaica. Four regiments of infantry, it was understood, would accompany him—the 89th, 93d, 8th and 83d. The transports at Cove, not employed in this embarkation, were to return to Portsmouth. The 24th regiment was to disembark, and to do duty at Middleton.

The American ship Washington, from Montivedo to London, has been taken and carried into Jersey by the Vulture privateer.

July 24.

It is reported that the troops which went out with Gen. Craig have been landed at Malta. Gen. Craig who is vested with a discretionary command in the Mediterranean, remained behind at Gibraltar, but meant to follow the troops in a few days.

We have received Paris Journals to the 16th and Dutch to the 19th inst. inclusive. They announce that Admiral De Winter has hoisted his flag on board the Herstelle, in the Texel; that Bonaparte had arrived at Fontainbleau on the 12th; that M. Lucchesini has reached Paris; that M. Hatarive has received the reward of his civic labours in the Moniteur, by being appointed a councillor of state; and that the Americans have made a convention with the Bey of Tripoli.

PLYMOUTH, July 21.

Letters received from the Channel fleet dated the 17th inst. state that they were all well at that date, and that Cornwallis had made, as mentioned in yesterday's paper, a masterly disposition of his fleet. Directly on his receiving an account of the arrival of the Curieux's intelligence this day fortnight at this port, Cornwallis's fleet, leaving a squadron of observation off Brest, was extended from Ushant to Cape Finisterre, and if the enemy's fleet were seen in lat. 47, long. 18, W. as described, great hopes may be entertained of their being caught in a trap.

Dublin, July 20.

This day's mail arrived at 4 o'clock, and the London papers are barren of news from Lord Nelson, and the combined fleets.

From a Dublin Paper of July 20.

CORK, July 17.

An order was this day received at the Custom-house of this City, to lay under quarantine, or strictly to cut off from any communication with the shore, any ship or ships of the Combined fleet, which may be captured by any of his Majesty's ships of war, in the event of their being brought into any port of this district, as a disease of a very malignant nature is stated to prevail on board them. These instructions are general throughout the kingdom. It would appear from this precaution, that Government have a strong expectation of Lord Nelson's being able to overtake them, or that if they succeed in escaping him, they will be intercepted either collectively or dispersed, before they can arrive in a French or Spanish port. We shall most gladly contribute to their accommodations in any of our harbors, notwithstanding the prevalence of infection. The West India merchants should manifest the gratitude they feel for their tenderness towards the West Indies—and the respect which they entertain for British property there, whenever they arrive in our ports.

BOSTON, August 29.

Important and highly interesting Intelligence.

We understand by several Gentlemen, who left Salem yesterday afternoon, that the brig Bellisle, Captain Leach, has arrived at that place from Naples, bringing the important and highly gratifying intelligence of the capture of the city of Tripoli, by the forces under the Ex-Bashaw, (directed, we presume, by the intrepid spirit of our countryman General EATON) and that the American prisoners had been immediately released.

Several parcels of dispatches, directed to the President, and to the Heads of Departments, (received by this vessel) were lodged in the Post-Office last evening. They were noted to be of high importance, and ordered to be forwarded to the seat of government, without delay.

The following letters were received by the above arrival, and add some important particulars to the agreeable Intelligence above stated:

Extract of a letter from an American gentleman at Naples, dated June 15, 1805.

"Letters from Sicily mention, that advices had been received from our Commodore at Syracuse, informing of the release of the American Prisoners, and the Peace with Tripoli. This event is said to be altogether owing to the spirited conduct of Gen. Eaton. No particulars are mentioned; but it is supposed on the terms offered by America, as Eaton has previously taken Derna and Barquara."

Extract of a letter from Frederick Degen, Esq. to a gentleman in this town.

"Dated Naples, June 22, 1805.

"Commodore Barron has resigned the Command of the American Squadron, to Capt. Rodgers. He (Commodore Rodgers) wrote me on the 1st June, that Peace with the Bashaw of Tripoli was finally concluded; and that the terms were most advantageous and honorable to the United States. It appears, that Mr. Eaton's undertaking has been attended with success. Mr. Dyson wrote me from Syracuse, that previous to the conclusion of Peace General Eaton defeated the Bashaw's troops at Derna, and took possession of that town and Castle, but received himself, during the action, a musket shot through the arm."

The intelligence contained in the above letters, is derived from an official source; and announces the important fact that PEACE IS MADE WITH TRIPOLI & OUR COUNTRYMEN ARE FREE.

From Halifax, August 18.

"On the 16th inst. three line of battle ships arrived here—one of 98 guns and two 74's.—They belong to Admiral Cochran's squadron on the West India station, and were damaged at sea in a hurricane, which lasted 19 hours. The 98 gun ship was in great distress.

The total value of commodities imported last year into St. Petersburg, (Russia) have been found to amount to 217,286,000 roubles. Of this sum, 350,000 roubles were paid for drugs; 900,000 for wine; 826,000 for coffee.

The Humane Society of Philadelphia had caused a hand bill to be pasted on each of the pumps of the city, containing the following directions for preventing

SUDDEN DEATH.

FROM DRINKING COLD WATER, OR COLD LIQUORS of any kind in Warm weather.

1. Do not drink while you are warm.

2. Drink only a small quantity at once, and let it remain a short time in your mouth before you swallow it.

3. Grasp the vessel out of which you are about to drink, for a few moments with both your hands.

4. Wash your hands and face, and rinse your mouth with cold water before you drink.

If these precautions have been neglected, and the disorder incident to drinking the cold liquor hath been produced, give from 40 to 60 drops of liquid laudanum in spirits and water or warm drink of any kind.

If these should fail of giving relief, the same quantity may be repeated every twenty minutes until the pain and spasms abate.

N. B. The dose of Laudanum is calculated for a grown person, and must be smaller for a child.

Rights of Representation.—Some years ago, as a number of felons were carrying to the place of execution in London, several of them bawled out vociferously "Wilkes and Liberty!" A gentleman, passing by at the time, enquired what they had to do with Wilkes, seeing they were to be hanged in half an hour? "Ah! Sir," said one of them, "we with he were our Representative."

From Lewis's Comic Sketches.

Hogarth.—Mr. Hogarth used to tell a story of his being once in company with several artists, who were boasting of uncommon works each had executed. One in particular said, he had written a volume in folio with a single pen which he had mended 199 times. Another declared he had finished an Equestrian Statue with only a broken knife for a chisel, and a rolling pin for a mallet. A third stated, he had engraved a copper-plate with no other tool than a rusty nail. "I told them," said Hogarth, "that I once painted a Sacred History Piece with one colour, which was neither heightened nor lowered; making the back ground shades, &c. with one unaltered colour." The company expressed their astonishment, and begged he would relate the method of completing his performance. Hogarth thus informed them:

"I was sent for by a Sir Thomas Thornton, a man of singular disposition, to paint his stair-case with some sacred historical piece, applicable to a circumstance which happened to him once; which was his being at sea, when he was pursued and taken by some Algerine pirates. I asked him what he thought of the Egyptians pursuing the Children of Israel through the Red Sea?

"Egad," said Sir Thomas "a lucky thought. Well, my dear friend, begin it as soon as possible. But stay, stay! hold, hold!—What is your price? I always like to make a bargain with you gentlemen of the bruih."

"Dear Sir," answered Hogarth, "I can give no answer to that until I have finished. I shall not be unreasonable; you will pay me, I dare say, as an artist."

"Hey, egad, this you may depend on," said the Baronet; "stay, stay! hold, hold! I can't think of exceeding ten guineas."

Hogarth piqued to have his talents so undervalued, accepted the terms on condition that five of the ten pieces should be paid in advance. The five guineas were paid, and the painter desired to begin immediately.

Hogarth rose early the next morning and took with him some common red paint, with which single colour he covered the stair case from top to bottom. He then went to Sir Thomas's chamber, and knocked at the door. The awakened Knight asked—"Hey! Who's there."

"Hogarth," answered the painter.

"Well! what do you want?" said Sir Thomas.

"The job is done, Sir Thomas," said Hogarth.

"Done?" asked the other. "Hey the d—l! no sure! The stair-case done already! Hold, hey—stay, stay!—let me get on my morning gown—done—hey—what a week's work done in a—hey. Stay, stay!"

The knight hobbled out of his chamber as fast as his gouty legs would permit; and rubbing his eyes, cried out—

"What the d—l have we here?"

"The Red Sea, Sir," answered Hogarth.

"The Red Sea!" said the astonished knight.

"Hey! Stay, stay! Hold, hold!—But where the d—l are the Children of Israel?"

"They are all gone over," said the painter.

"They are all gone over, are they?"—Sir Thomas repeated—"Hey! stay, stay! hold, hold! but zounds, where are the Egyptians?"

"They are all drowned, Sir Thomas," said Hogarth, who was considerably pleased to have thus so properly chastised the illiberal treatment which he had received.

ANECDOTE.

At the time there was so great a rage for boxing matches, and the Sunday after the battle of Oldham, between Humphries and Mendoza, one of the lower order of preachers in that neighbourhood, addressed his barn-assembled audience, in the following, if not elegant, at least time-serving metaphor—"I dare say you'd all pay to see another boxing match between Humphries and Mendoza, yet you don't like to see a pitched battle between me and Belzebub; oh many a hard knock and many a cross buttock have I given the black bruiser, for your sakes.—Pull! do pull off those gay garments of Mammon, strike a straight blow and give the Devil a spiritual Black Eye! I'll be your bottle holder—I ask nothing but the door money, which I hope you'll not forget as you go out.

M. BEAUMONT, a prisoner in the castle of Friedrichshafen, at Copenhagen, has made five different kinds of paper from straw, four of which are white, and the other yellow. From the trials made of this paper, it appears to be equally fit for printing, with that in common use. The same man has likewise produced a specimen for bank-notes. The peculiar property of this invention consists in a coloured inscription, in the paper, and a coloured ornament round the border. Besides this, there is a stamp made in the paper, and a great number of other embellishments which resemble the impressions of engravings, and appear alike on both sides.

ANECDOTE.

A gentleman who was going to fight a duel, asked a friend of his who had won a considerable sum the night before, to be his second.

"My dear Sir (replied the gamester) I won fifteen hundred guineas last night, and shall cut but a poor figure to fight to day; but if you will apply to the person I got them of, he will fight like a devil, for he has not a farthing left."

ANECDOTE of the late Lord CHATHAM.—When the present lord Chat-hope was courting his first wife, (a daughter of lord Chatham,) the father found them one morning engaged in some friendly difference, which he wanted to know the reason of.

"Why, to tell you the truth, my lord," says lord S. "I can't get your daughter to fix the day of marriage, and as you have come in so opportunely, will you be so good as to settle it for us?" says he; "let me see, next Friday will be St. Thomas's day, the shortest day and the longest night—of course the propereft day to consummate a marriage." The lady blushed; and his lordship claimed and possessed the rewards of the arbitration.

A letter from the Hon. Admiral Cornwallis to Wm. Marſden, Eſq; dated Ville de Paris off Ushant, 28th July, 1805, encloſes the following diſpatch.

Prince of Wales, July 25, 1805.

SIR,

Yeſterday at noon, lat. 43 deg. 30 min. N. long. 11 deg. 17 min. I was favored with a view of the combined ſquadrons of France and Spain, conſiſting of 20 ſail of the line, alſo 3 large ſhips armed en flute, of about 50 guns each, with 5 frigates and 3 brigs: the force under my direction at this time conſiſting of 15 ſail of the line, two frigates, a cutter and lugger, I immediately ſtood towards the enemy with my ſquadron, making the needful ſignals for battle in the cloſeſt order: and on cleaning with them, I made the ſignals for attacking their centre. When I had reached their reſt, I tacked the ſquadron in ſucceſſion; this brought us cloſe up under their lee, and when our headmoſt ſhips reached their centre the enemy were tacking in ſucceſſion; this obliged me to make again the ſame manoeuvre, by which I brought to an action which laſted upwards of 4 hours, when I found it neceſſary to bring to the ſquadron to cover the two captured ſhips, whoſe names are in the margin. I have to obſerve the enemy had every advantage of wind and weather during the whole day. The weather had been foggy at times, a great part of the morning: and very ſoon after we had brought them to action, the fog was ſo very thick at intervals, that we could with great difficulty ſee the ſhip a-head or aſtern of us; this rendered it impoſſible to take the advantages of the enemy by ſignals I could have wiſhed to have done; had the weather been more favorable, I am led to believe the victory would have been more complete.—I have very great pleaſure in ſaying, every ſhip was conducted in the moſt maſterly ſtyle; and I beg leave here publicly to return every Captain, Officer and man whom I had the honor to command on that day, my moſt grateful thanks, for their conſpicuously gallant and very judicious good conduct.

The Hon. Capt. Gardner, of the Hero, led the van ſquadron in a moſt maſterly and officer-like manner, to whom I feel myſelf particularly indebted; as alſo to Capt. Cumming for his aſſiſtance during the action—incloſed is a liſt of the killed and wounded on board the different ſhips. If I may judge from the great ſlaughter on board the captured ſhips, the enemy muſt have ſuffered greatly. They are now in ſight to windward, and when I have ſecured the captured ſhips, and put the ſquadron to rights, I ſhall endeavour to avail myſelf of any opportunity that may offer to give you ſome further accounts of theſe combined ſquadrons.

I have the honor to be, &c.
R. CALDER.

Extract of a letter from an officer of admiral Calder's fquadron, dated on board his Majefty's ship Triumphant, at fea, July 31 1805.

"July 12, off Rochfort, arrived two brigs, with difpatches to our Admiral, to order him to quit his ftation & join the fleet under the command of Sir R. Calder, off Ferrol, with all poffible expedition.—We accordingly crowded all fail, and reached our deftination on the 15th, when we muftered, in all, fifteen fail of the line, two frigates, a lugger and cutter. On the 22d inft. in lat. 44 N. and long. 11, 32, W. Cape Finifterre bearing E. by S. diftant ninety miles.—At noon moderate breezes and very foggy weather; one of our lookout frigates difcovered a ftrange fleet in the W. S. W. quarter; made all fail in line of battle and clofe order in chafe, and found them to be the French and Spanifh combined fleets, confifting of thirty fail of fhips of war, twenty of which were of the line, feven frigates, two brigs and one regiftered fhip, laden with two hundred thoufand pounds in dollars; at five o'clock gave three hearty cheers in honor of the day, and commenced the action with the van fhips, four Spanifh and three French. We received the fire from nine of the enemy as we paffed along their line, only aided by the Barfleur. During the firft half hour the action became general, & very warm, and we fhould have fucceeded in cutting off four Spanifh fhips, had not fix of the French come to their affiftance juft in time, by which means they fruftrated our defign. You may judge of our activity, when I inform you, that we fired away four tons of powder, feventeen tons of fhot, and three tons of wadding, in all 32 broad fides.

"About nine o'clock the action ceafed, in confequence of the darknefs of the night, and I am happy to fay, at day light we had in our poffeffion two Spanifh fhips, one of them an 84 gun fhip, and the other a 74; befides this, we funk one of the French fhips called the Scipion, a new 74, and all hands perifhed. Both fleets, during the following day, were employed in repairing damages received in the action, the enemy to windward, within fix miles of us, in line of battle had fhewed no intention of renewing the action. We have fuftained much damage, having received 73 fhot on board, which difabled our main maft, bowsprit, fails and rigging. I am extremely forry to ftate the lofs of three valuable feamen, and one marine killed, eleven men wounded, three of them dangerouffly. The two fleets kept in ftgft of each other for two days afterwards.

"After the unfortunate Spaniards were difmafted, the Frenchmen fired feveral broadfides into them, which exafperated them fo much that when they got on board the Englifh fhips they gave us all their ftrength as well as thofe of the French, and informed us of all their proceedings, which I now communicate for your further information. On their return home, it was their intention to raife the blockade of Ferrol, from thence to proceed to Rochfort, and next to Ireland, fuppofing the Britifh fleet fhould have been able to get out to join them; but I am happy to fay we have rendered all their plans abortive."

Auguft 4.

Yefterday difpatches were received at the Admiralty from Sir R. Calder, dated on the 27th ult.—No communication of their contents was made at Lloyd's or to the Manfion Houfe; nor has more of them tranfpired than Sir R. Calder loft fight of the enemy on the 25th, when he fuppofed they were ftanding to the fouthward. It is added on the authority of letters from Plymouth, where the Nile lugger, which was the bearer of thefe difpatches, arrived on Thurfday, that Sir R. Calder was working up for Ferrol, to prevent the enemy from making that port; not doubting of their being met by Lord Nelfon or Admiral Collingwood, fhould they attempt to return to Cadiz or to the Mediterranean.

There is a letter in town from Sir R. Calder, of the fame date, in which he ftates that he was then between the enemy and the land, and fpeaks in very confident terms of being again able to bring them to action.

Auguft 5.

Accounts were received in London, that Lord Nelfon was off Cape St. Vincents on the 28th July. His Lordfhip was joined by Admiral Collingwood off Cadiz, but confidering his 11 fail of the line to be a full match for the combined fleet, he detached Admiral Collingwood to refume his ftation off Cadiz.

The Spanifh fhips St. Rafael & Firm, taken in the action with the combined fleets have arrived at Plymouth.

All the late letters and papers from Germany, are filled with accounts of the warlike preparations of Auftria.

A very important note from the Ruffian Minifter M. de Novoziltoff has been publifhed in the Hamburgh papers, through the influence of the Britifh Minifter at that place.

Bell's Weekly Meffenger of the 4th Aug. after alluding to fome former obfervations on the fubject of the Ruffian negociation, remarks:—"In a word, M. Novoziltoff is fled—Effugit, evafit, erupit! He left Berlin on the 19th June, and his departure is confidered as the fignal of mighty wars in Europe. He took leave with the ufual decorum of a retiring Envoy; he left a manifefto behind him, which is no contemptible proof of the talents and fpirit of the Court. It is an indictment of Bonaparte (properly fo called for the word Emperor is ftifled) in the face of all Europe, of having made fwindling profeffions of peace, and granting paffports to facilitate negociation, at the very time he was entraping Genoa into an act by which fhe was to extinguifh herfelf for ever, and laying a fnare for the fubjugation of every power in Italy."

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 16.

On Saturday evening arrived at this port, the fine faft failing fhip London Packet, Capt. M'Dougall, in 30 days from London—To Capt. M'Dougall's attention in procuring papers while at the Downs, we are indebted for London dates to the 10th Auguft, being 14 days later than any previous accounts. The contents of thefe papers are unufually intereffing; and forebode events of fuperior importance. The note of the Ruffian minifter, alleging as the motive of his recall, the aſſumption on the part of Bonaparte, of the title and and prerogatives of King of Italy, and his other acts of ambitious aggrandizement, evinces that Ruffia no longer remains an indifferent fpectator of the all-grafping policy of France. Bonaparte's reply to this note, is couched in terms of much afperity and irritation. "What," fays this document, "is then the Emperor of the French lowered to that degree of weaknefs, that he muft coolly liften to a Ruffian Commiffary calling him to an account for what he does in countries unknown to Ruffia, and with which fhe has no relations!" The note proceeds, through three columns, in a ſtrain of ardent indignation, in repelling the claim of Ruffia to any interference in the concerns alluded to in the Ruffian note; and concludes by declaring that Ruffia alone is an incompetent power to mediate between England and France.

Mr. Bowdoin, our minifter to Spain arrived in London the 30th July, and contemplated remaining in that country 3 or 4 months.

The King was enjoying improved health at Weymouth on the 30th July.

Admiral Miffiefſy, who commanded the Rochefort fquadron, had refigned, and retired to the country difgraced.

The Imperial Guards had arrived at Boulogne, and much buſtle and preparations was obſerved on both ſides.

LONDON, July 27.

Private letters from Paris ſtate, that Bonaparte returned from Italy ſooner than was expected, on account of ſome pretended plots diſcovered by Fouche, and ſome real diſcontent among the troops on the coaſt, whoſe pay was, until the 1ſt of July, three months behind hand. Though ſeveral examples of ſeverity have been ſhewn, the mutinous diſpoſition continued, and inſtead of abating, increaſed. This was particularly the caſe with the troops encamped near Breſt, under the command of Angereau. Laſt month the Irith Guides attached to that army preſented a petition for their pay to this general, and complained bitterly of their ſuffetings. The ſix perſons deputed to preſent the petition were immediately ſhot, and the whole corps ordered to be re organized. Some of the officers were broken, and others condemned to be tranſported to Cayenne. They were all ſucceeded by Frenchmen, with whom the Irith Guides are very diſſatiſfied. Two regiments of dragoons and four battalions of infantry, were, on account of their mutinous diſpoſition, ſent by Angereau to the interior, from whence the miniſter, Berthier, ordered them to Italy. It is reported at Paris, that when, on the 21ſt of June, Angereau ordered his army to embark on board the fleet under Gantheaume, the troops, to a man refuſed to obey, until their arrears due to them were acquitted. This occurrance, the good Pariſians are told, prevented Gantheaume from ſailing, and combating the inferior blockading ſquadron of the Engliſh. Talleyrand was expected back at Paris about the latter end of the preſent month.—They ſtill ſpeak of a congreſs during the winter.

Auguſt 9.

We are extremely happy to ſtate, that intelligence has at laſt arrived from Lord Nelſon, and intends to revive the hopes which have almoſt been extinguiſhed that his Lordſhip, after his great exertions and anxiety, would yet reap the glory of a complete victory over the enemy. On the 19th, or as other accounts ſay,, the 22d, he arrived at Gibraltar Bay. His Lordſhip having refreſhed his crew, and taken on board water and proviſions, again ſailed in queſt of the enemy, after aſcertaining that they had not paſſed the Streights. It was on the 26th that Sir R. Calder loſt ſight of the enemy, ſteering ſouth. A letter from on board the Thunderer ſays, that this happened in lat. 44. 22, long. 11.—The Liſbon Packet arrived at Falmouth, left Sta place on the 30th, on which time nothing had been heard of them. Had they intended going to Liſbon, we ſhould think by that time they might have made their appearance.—Vigo is a port where it is underſtood they would not find ſufficient accomodation and ſecurity. If then, they ſtood for Cadiz, we do not ſee any chance of their eſcape. Lord Nelſon would immediately concert meaſures with Admiral Collingwood, who, doubtleſs, by that time was appriſed by Sir R. Calder of the action. This would enable Lord Nelſon effectually to prevent the enemy's eſcape into Cadiz or the Mediterranean. Unleſs, therefore, the enemy ſhall have taken ſome new courſe quite different from what a fleet diſabled in fight can be ſuppoſed to have done, we think we may flatter ourſelves that a good account of them will yet be given. It has been ſaid that they might ſeparate, the Spaniards going to Vigo, the French to Rochefort, or ſome other port in the Channel. We ſhall forbear however, ſtating any more conjectures upon the courſe of the enemy, as conjecture muſt be ſo vague and unſatisfactory.

The diſpatches from Lord Nelſon were brought by the Pickle ſchooner. On the 30 ſhe ſaw a French ſquadron of three line of battle ſhips, and three frigates, which are ſuppoſed by ſome to be the whole, or part of thoſe that lately failed from L'Orient or Rochfort. This ſquadron was cruizing off Cape Finiſterre, where it is ſaid to have been ſince the 31ſt. Its object there it is not very eaſy to perceive. Some think it was to re-inforce the combined ſquadron, others to intercept the Oporto fleet. Our fleets, however, are ſo actively in motion in that quarter, that we ſhould not be ſurpriſed to hear of its being ſpeedily captured.

We yeſterday received Paris Journals to the 31ſt ult. and the Dutch to the 4th inſt.—The Moniteur in a curious paragraph mentions, that in conſequence of the arreſt of M. Proni, the French government had cauſed an Auſtrian Aulic Councellor to be arreſted at Paris, by way of retaliation; but intelligence being received that Mr. Proni was liberated, the Auſtrian councellor had been let at liberty too. It is probable that the Auſtrian Police at Venice had found out that whatever ground of ſuſpicion there was of M. Proni, who is a celebrated engineer, being ſent to make obſervations, there was not proof, and had diſcharged him; or perhaps Count Bellegarde, at whoſe interpoſition he was enlarged, had thought it imprudent to create any diſpute reſpecting a man of Proni's ſcientific character. The Auſtrian government, however, muſt relent the outrage committed in arreſting an Aulic Councellor, becauſe it ſeems to conteſt the right of other governments to arreſt Frenchmen who act improperly. We apprehend, however, that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, in time of peace M. Proni could not have been treated as a ſpy.

We do not think that this incident will of itſelf have any conſequence. It is manifeſt, indeed, that ill humour and ſuſpicion prevail on both ſides, which muſt very ſoon lead to open rupture, unleſs Auſtria, by ſubmiſſion and diſarming, condeſcend to allay Bonaparte's jealouſy. A very ſhort time will ſhew what we have to expect on the continent. Auſtria muſt with to temporiſe till her preparations are ripe, and the views of Ruſſia declared. And Bonaparte may perhaps be inclined to temporiſe till he tries the projekt of invaſion.

Theſe papers breathe the ſame note of preparation which has lately been revived. Nothing is talked of on the coaſt but invaſion, and though 2 years have elapſed in equipments, the activity which now prevails, ſeems as if it were but the commencement. On the other hand, the precautions of this government are redoubled. It was even ſaid yeſterday, that the troops were embarked, both at the Texel and Helvoet and that the expedition would put to ſea the firſt opportunity.—Bonaparte, from the ſtate of the continent, may be deſirous to ſtrike the blow; and as the harveſt approaches, he might hope ſtill farther to increaſe the embarraſſment of this country, by calling out the population to military duties at this time. It is certain that a general expectation now prevails that the attempt will not be deferred.

CANANDIGUA,

YELLOW FEVER.

New York. It appears that the Yellow Fever rages in the city of New-York with an alarming rapidity not before witneſſed, as will be perceived by the following paragraph from the New York Daily Advertiſer of the 12th inſt.—

THE PRESENT SCENE.

Perhaps at no former viſitation of the alarming epidemic was the ſpread of the fever more rapid, or the flight of the citizens more ſudden. Scarcely had the dread diſeaſe made its approach when it extended itſelf widely around the place of its firſt appearance, and ſoon penetrated into the interior of the city. Nor was the terror of the inhabitants leſs inſtant. Taught by painful experience the fatal nature of the epidemic, thoſe moſt immediately expoſed to its dangers, fled almoſt inſtantaneouſly from the ſeat of the diſeaſe. Anxious to proſecute their uſual purſuits, many of the citizens engaged houſes and ſtores in the vicinity of town, and particularly at Greenwich, ſo that the rents ſoon became enormous, indeed in ſome inſtances incredible. Soon the ſtreets and roads were covered with the goods and furniture of the fleeing inhabitants, and, both in and out of town, all was ſolicitude and buſtle. Others again who choſe a more diſtant retreat hurried away by water in every direction, ſo that in a day or two thouſands had diſappeared, and the moſt populous part of the city was left uninhabited.

And yet though ſafety was ſo generally ſought in flight, it was our lot not unfrequently to ſee the ſable and ſolitary hearſe ſlow moving to the manſions of the dead, while perhaps a ſingle mourner or two followed at an awful diſtance. With what anxiety have we ſeen the populace crowded around the health office to aſcertain who more of their fellow citizens had been ſeized by the dread diſtemper, and who more were numbered with the dead. But enough on the melancholy theme at preſent: it will recur but too frequently.

The following are the number of new caſes and deaths reported by the Board of Health from the 7th to the 11th inſt —

Sept. 7th,	4 new caſes,	1 death,
8th,	8 do.	10 do.
9th,	18 do.	2 do.
10th,	29 do.	3 do.
11th,	12 do.	8 do.

The Mayor of the city of Albany has iſſued a proclamation, prohibiting all veſſels from the city of New-York coming up to that city without being inſpected by and obtaining a permit from the Health Office, appointed for the purpoſe. The Board of Health of Boſton have prohibitted all intercourſe from the cities of New York and Philadelphia, during the prevalence of the fever. The Mayor Baltimore has adopted the ſame meaſure.

Extract of a letter from the Health Office, to a gentleman in New-York, dated Quarantine Ground, Sept. 7.

I moſt ſeriouſly and tenderly deplore the unfortunate ſituation of our city—what do people now ſay of the origin of the diſeaſe? You may ſtate for the information of thoſe who withed to be informed, that not a ſingle veſſel, on board of which a ſingle perſon has been ſick with fever of any kind, or on board of which any perſon has died with any diſeaſe, while in the Weſt-Indies, or on the voyage home, has ever gone up to the city, during this whole ſeaſon. This we know, and this we vouch for—and further ſtate, that all the caſes of fever that have come down as from this city, have been all people of and belonging to the city and unconnected with ſhipping, excepting one a ſailor who had no connection with any foul veſſel—there is not a ſhadow of proof or ſuſpicion that can attach to the Health Office, or to infected veſſels this ſeaſon. I am, &c. J. R. B. RODGERS.

Bite of a mad Dog.—Dr. de Moneta, formerly phyſician to the King of Poland, adviſes to cover the wound with freſh earth, or with ſnuff, to imbibe the ſaliva of the animal, and to waſh it with water. At the ſame time, warm half a pound of butter, in four times as much vinegar, and, when the wound is cleared, apply a compreſs of linen ſteeped in that mixture, and moiſten it very often with the ſame for nine days: after which, remove the compreſs, and cure the wound in the uſual way. During the time the vinegar is uſed outwardly, the patient muſt take it internally four times a day, in doſes of an ounce and a half of vinegar, warmed, with a little freſh butter; and his common drink for at leaſt 15 days muſt be pure water, with a little vinegar and juice of citron. Plethoric patients may be bleeded. Dr. de Moneta has uſed the ſame remedy againſt the bites of vipers, and always with ſucceſs. He has prevented the hydrophobia in more than 60 people.

For almoft every habit, however vile, mankind have an excufe; and the Poets have racked their invention to multiply thofe in favor of drinking:
One of the laft century faid he had five reafons for drinking, viz.
"Good wine—a friend—or being dry—
Or left he fhould be, by and by—
Or—any other reafon why."
But thefe excufes are not confined to the fons of fcience;—the daughters of fimplicity have them at their tongue's end as ready as other people, as the following ftanza will

THE ANGEL'S FACE.

Poor but he had John and Joan to board,
Plain folk in humble plight;
One only tankard crown'd their board,
And that was fill'd each night;

Along whofe inner bofom—ftretch'd
In pride of chubby grace—
Some rude engraver's hand had etch'd
An angel's cherub face.

John fwallow'd firft a moderate fup;
But Joan was not like John—
For when her lips once touch'd the cup,
She fwill'd till all was gone.

John often urg'd her to drink fair—
But fhe ne'er chang'd a jot;
She lov'd to fee the angel there,
And therefore drain'd the pot.

When John found all remonftrance vain,
Another card he play'd;
And where the angel ftood in plain,
He got a Fiend pourtray'd.

Joan faw the harns, Joan faw the tail,
Yet Joan as ftoutly quaff'd;
And ever, as fhe feiz'd her ale,
She clear'd it at a draught:

John ftar'd with wonder petrified,
Joan flood on his pate;
Alas! "why doft gaunle now," he cried,
"At this enormous rate?"

"John," fhe faid, "am I to blame?
I can't in confcience ftop;
For then 'twould be a burning fhame,
To leave the Fiend—a drop.

THE IRISH DRUMMER.

A TALE.

A foldier, fo at leaft the ftory goes,
It was in Ireland I believe,
Upon his back was fentenc'd to receive
Five hundred gentle cat-and-nine-tail blows;
Moft fagely Military Law providing
The lafh alone fhall fuffer for backfliding.

Whether his crime was great or fmall,
Or whether there was any crime at all,
Are facts which this deponent never knew;
But tho' uncertain whether juftly tried,
The man he knows was to the halberd tied,
And hopes his readers will believe fo too.

Suppofe him, then, faft to the halberd bound,
His poor companions ftanding filent round,
Anticipating ev'ry dreadful ftnack;
While Patrick Donovan, from Wicklow County,
Is juft preparing to beftow his bounty,
Or beat quick time upon his comrade's back.

Of ftoics much we read in tales of yore,
Of Zeno, Poffidonius, Epictetus,
Who unconcern'd the greateft torment bore,
Or elfe thefe ancient ftories ftrangely cheat us.
My hero was no ftoic, it is plain;
He could not fuffer torments and be dumb,
But roar'd before he felt the fmalleft pain,
As if ten ruffy nails had pierced his bum!

Not louder is the terror fpreading note
Which iffues from the hungry lions throat,
When o'er Numidian plains in fearch of prey,
He takes his cruel, life depoying way.
The firft two ftrokes, which made my hero jump,
Fell right acrofs the confines of his rump;
On which he piteoufly began to cry,
"Strike high! ftrike high! for mercy's fake ftrike high!"

Pat, of a mild, obliging difpofition,
Could not refufe to grant his friend's petition.
An Irifhman has got a tender heart,
And never likes to act a cruel part;
Pat gave a good example to beholders,
Add the next ftroke fell on his comrade's fhoulders!
Our fuff'ring hero now began to roar,
As loud, if not louder, than before;
At which Pat loft all patience, and exclaim'd,
While his Hibernian face with anger flam'd,
"The devil burn you! can't your tongue be ftill?
There is no pleafing you, ftrike where one will!"

SINGULAR STORY.

The following is related in a collection of letters aſcribed to the younger Lord Littleton.

"I obey your commands with ſome reluctance, in relating the ſtory of which you have heard ſo much, and to which your curioſity appears to be ſo broad awake. I do it unwillingly, becauſe ſuch hiſtories depend ſo much upon the manner in which they are related; and this, which I have told with ſuch forces, and to the midnight terrors of ſo many ſimple ſouls, will make but a forry figure in a written narration:—however, you ſhall have it.

"It was in the early part of ——'s life that he attended an hunting club at their ſport, when a ſtrong get of genteel appearance, and well mounted, joined the chace, and was obſerved to ride with a degree of courage and addreſs that called forth the utmoſt admiration of every one preſent. The beaſt he rode was of amazing powers; nothing ſtopped them—the hounds could never eſcape them; and the huntſman, who was left far behind, ſwore that the man and his horſe were both devils from hell. When the ſport was over, the company invited this extraordinary perſon to dinner. He accepted the invitation, and aſtoniſhed the company as much by the powers of his converſation and the elegance of his manners, as by his equeſtrian proweſs. He was an orator, a poet, a painter, a muſician, a lawyer, a divine—in ſhort, he was every thing, and the magic of his diſcourſe kept the drowſy ſportſmen awake long after their uſual hour. At length, however, wearied Nature could no more be charmed, and the company began to ſteal away by degrees to their repoſe. On his obſerving the ſociety diminiſh, he diſcovered manifeſt ſigns of uneaſineſs; he therefore gave new force to his ſpirits, and new charms to his converſation, in order to detain the remaining few ſome time longer.—This had ſome little effect—but the period could not be very long delayed when he was to be conducted to his chamber. The remains of the company retired all; but they had ſcarce cloſed their eyes, when the houſe was alarmed by the moſt terrible ſhrieks that were ever heard. Several perſons were awakened by the noiſe; but its continuance being ſhort, they concluded it to proceed from a dog who might be accidentally confined in ſome part of the houſe. They very ſoon, therefore, compoſed themſelves to ſleep, and were very ſoon awakened by ſhrieks and cries of ſtill greater terror than the former. Alarmed at what they heard, ſeveral of them rung their bells; and, when the ſervants came, they declared that the horrid ſounds proceeded from the ſtranger's chamber.—Some of the gentlemen immediately aroſe to inquire into this extraordinary diſturbance; and, while they were diſcuſſing themſelves for that purpoſe, deeper groans of deſpair, and ſhriller ſhrieks of agony, again aſtoniſhed and terrified them.

"After knocking ſome time at the ſtranger's chamber door, he anſwered them as one awakened from ſleep, declared he had heard no noiſe, and re-ther in an angry tone, desired he might not be again disturbed. Upon this they returned to one of their chambers, and had scarce begun to communicate their sentiments to each other, when their conversation was interrupted by a renewal of yells, screams, and shrieks, which, from the horror of them, seemed to issue from throats of damned and tortured spirits. They immediately followed the sounds, and traced them to the stranger's chamber (the door of which they instantly forced open) and found him upon his knees in bed, in the act of scourging himself with the most unrelenting severity, his body streaming with blood. On their seizing his hand to stop the stroke, he begged them, in the most wringing tone of voice, as an act of mercy, that they would retire, assuring them that the cause of their disturbance was over, and that in the morning he would acquaint them with the reason of the terrible cries they had heard, and the melancholy sight they saw. After a repetition of his entreaties, they retired; and in the morning some of them went to his chamber, but he was not there; and, on examining the bed they found it to be one gore of blood. Upon further enquiry, the groom said, that as soon as it was light, the gentleman came to the stable booted and spurred, desired his horse might be immediately saddled, and appeared to be extremely impatient till it was done, when he vaulted instantly into his saddle, and rode out of the yard in full speed. Servants were immediately dispatched into every part of the surrounding country, but not a single trace of him could be found; such a person had not been seen by any one, nor has he been since heard of.

The circumstances of this strange story were immediately committed to writing, and signed by every one who were witnesses to them, that the future credibility of any one who should think proper to relate them, might be duly supported. Among the subscribers to the truth of this history, are some of the first names of this country.—It would now, I believe, be improper to add any thing more than that "I am your's, &c."

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

He that is master of himself is king—Though his body should be in prison or in chains, his mind is free, and he exercises within himself a most noble sovereignty. On the other hand, the Monarch who glitters on his throne, & has power of life and death over a million of men, is himself a slave, if he submits his reason to the controul of passion and appetite.

Alexander, by common consent, has obtained the name of Great, because, forsooth, his sword had shed more blood than that of any other man. He was the great Butcher—not of herds and flocks, but of men. In reality, however, as to a most important point, he was Alexander the little. After all his conquests, he was a slave!—He was a miserable victim to drunkeness, and to violent anger; and, in the rage of passion, and inflamed by wine, he slew Clitus, his best friend and ablest general, with his own hand. The old philosopher was much more deserving of the title of great, who, when his servant had acted in a provoking manner towards him, said to the offender, "I would correct you, if I were not angry." No man is truly great who does not govern himself; nor is any man really little who uniformly and strictly maintains self-government.

Would you obtain the honor of a conqueror?—the field is open; conquer your own unruly passions and appetites, and lay those rebels prostrate at the feet of reason; It is a most noble conquest. Would you be a ruler?—govern yourself; be the commandant of your own garrison; this kind of authority (and it is in the power of every one to exercise it) is equally necessary, useful and honorable. Hence the wise man remarked, "he that ruleth his own spirit is better than the mighty.

VIRTUE.

To Females.—Virtue is a word of such general acceptance, that it includes all those qualities which adorn the mind, improve the character, and add dignity to human nature. The virtue to which I here allude is formed of so fine a texture, that the breath of surmise would taint it, and the blast of suspicion would become its destruction. Reputation is a female's choicest treasure; and it is necessary to guard it with unremitting care. Let your manners to the other sex be open and unaffected—free from prudery or familiarity.—Yet do not suppose that I wish to prevent your receiving those little attentions which are the effects of good nature, or the efforts of politeness;—but beware of suffering the slightest deviation from respect, or the most trifling infringement upon delicacy. As your conduct is liable to the severity of the morose, and the criticisms of the illiberal, how necessary is it that your actions should be submitted to the guidance of caution—that they may never become the food of slander or reproach. Do not imagine that I am endeavoring to rob the season of youth of those joys to which it is entitled: For I think the innocent cheerfulness of heart, which is the natural attendant on youth, one of its greatest ornaments. Yet in the midst of gaiety I would have you attend to caution; and surrounded by pleasure, be guided by propriety.

A FRIEND TO FEMALES.

SLANDER.

Few persons are exempt from the tongue of slander. Though the virtues of man obtain general encomium, yet some will always be found ready to discover flaws in his character. Lucien has illustrated this propensity in the following words: "There is no more effectual instrument of calumny than the love of novelty, which is natural to all mankind, joined to the disguit arising from satiety and a passion for the marvellous and incredible: add to this that we are all fond, I know not why, of listening to private suspicions which are whispered to us. I know many whose ears itch with calumny; as if their ears were tickled with a feather. No wonder that with such assistance the persuades all, especially where the is in no danger of being confronted. The calumniated, like a city taken by night, are slain in their sleep."

Mr. Roberts has given us a whimsical elucidation of the above remarks of Lucien: he says, "A certain widow, tho' pretty much advanced in life, had a mind to marry again. As her fortune was very large, she thought herself entitled to a young husband; and accordingly fixed her eyes upon a handsome youth, who had nothing but his personal recommendation to depend upon. She plainly perceived that there would be no difficulty on his part, but she dreaded the censure and ridicule of her neighbours. In this perplexity she communicated her wishes and alarms to a maiden sister, who lived in her house, and who possessed an uncommon share of shrewdness and address for all such occasions. Sister, says the amorous widow, "what think you of Leander? it is surely the picture of my late husband! Alas! I should never have yielded my heart but to this irresistible resemblance. What shall I do? for I am in a dreadful consternation about what my neighbours may say of me, being well acquainted with their malice and cruelty:—the purest love is not sheltered from their ill-natured ridicule. Were it not for that this dear young man should—but—" "How absurd is all this, my dear sister!" replied the other. "Follow your own inclinations, and don't tell me of such foolish fears. You will be sung, hooted, hallooed after, and chalked up for eight days;—on the ninth they will think no more of you than one thinks of a friend one has quitted for three months. That Als, which you see yonder, shall, if you please, impose silence on the whole parish about you, the morning after your nuptials." "That als!" "Yes, that als. Marry, I say, and leave the rest to me and the a's." The widow was easily persuaded, and the marriage was concluded, on the credit of the als. Dreadful outcry in the parish—rough music before their doors—not a soft thing could be heard from the mouth of either party, for the noise of kettles and frying pans. In the mean time the sister painted the als as green as a parrot; and out rushed the phænomenon, with a triumphant bray, into the midst of the crowd. In an instant every kettle and pan was mute, and every soul in the parish crouded round to strange a prodigy. "A green als! Good heavens, who could have believed it! Well, wonders will never cease. How surprising is nature in all her operations!" "I dreamed," cries an old woman, "of this very als a week ago. I am sure it betokeneth some bad to our town. A number of white mice appeared in the same manner just before the plague that happened in my youth." Such observations and exclamations as these took the place of the clamour about the new married couple. The green als lasted its eight days, and there was no more curiosity about the green als than there had been about the new married couple the moment the als appeared."

ON RAISING TURKIES.

The following curious method of raising Turkies to advantage, is translated from a Swedish book entitled Rural Economy.

Many of our housewives (says this ingenious author) have long despaired of success in rearing turkies, and complained that the profit rarely indemnifies them for their trouble and loss of time; whereas continues he, little more is to be done, than to plunge the chick into a vessel of cold water the very hour it is possible, but at least the very day it is hatched, forcing it to swallow one whole pepper corn; after which let it be returned to its mother. From that time it will become hardy, and fear the cold no more than a hen's chick. But it must be remembered that this useful species of fowls are also subject to one particular disorder, while they are young, which carries them off in a few days. When they begin to droop examine carefully the feathers on their rump, and you will find two or three whose quill part is filled with blood. Upon drawing these the chick recovers and after that requires no other care than what is commonly bestowed on poultry that range about the court yard.

The truth of these assertions is too well known to be denied; and as a convincing proof of the success it will be sufficient to mention that three parishes in Sweden have for many years used this method, and gained several hundred pounds by rearing and selling turkies.

GRAFTING APPLE TREES.

Take those trees whose stalks do not exceed an inch and an half in diameter, saw them off near the ground, and after preparing the stalk by paring off the tough surface, occasioned by the saw and splitting and clearing away the fibers, if there be any, set your scions; then raise a hill of clear earth, sufficient to cover well the stump, and to be 2 or 3 inches in depth around the scions; and nothing further is necessary, except placing stakes around them to prevent their injury from cattle. This method of grafting is attended with the following advantages:

1. Any lad of common ingenuity, who has learnt to make a pen, with a little shewing can perform it.

2. The scions inserted in this way seldom fail of living.

3. Their growth will be very rapid—they have been known to grow the height of four or five feet the first season where the soil is good.

4. The junction formed between the scion and the stalk in which they are inserted, will be as firm as though they were a natural growth.

5 Any apple tree that is a mere shrub will answer as good a purpose as the most thrifty, provided the stalk be clear from knots and winding, near the ground—and in this way, you may soon have the best of fruit from those trees which would otherwise be entirely useless.

This method of grafting may also be used to great advantage in a young nursery. But if you first transplant your trees, they must stand at least one year left you endanger their lives by the operation—In a forward spring, you may graft by the beginning of April, and it will answer till the bark begins to peal. But they are more apt to live before the buds are greatly expanded. It may be added, that the common method of grafting a limb of a tree will answer a good purpose, if the tree be small, and the limb which grows in a nearly horizontal direction, is in danger of breaking when it begins to bear, by the weight of the fruit. If you graft a limb, you must clear away the natural branches of the tree, if the scions succeed, or their progress will be so slow as to be sure of little or no service.

King William III had a Frenchman who took care of his Majesty's pointers, and whose business it was likewise to load and deliver his fowling pieces to the king. It happened, however, one day, that monsieur forgot to bring out any shot with him to the field. Not daring to confess his negligence to so passionate a man, and so eager a sportsman as the king, he gave his Majesty the gun charged only with powder. The King firing without effect, the cunning Frenchman shrugged up his shoulders, turned up his eyes, folded his hands, and extolling the king's skill in shooting, vowed he had never seen le Mayste miss his aim before in his life.

NATURAL HISTORY.

A Curious fact in Natural History has been observed by D. Gabriel Antonini, professor of Anatomy at Turin. A Snake, called in Italy Serpe Nottola (the Bulsher, Natrix of Linnæus, is said to be extremely fond of milk; and the country people even pretend that it makes its way into the dairies to gratify its inclination. They even affirm, that it is sometimes found entwined round the legs of cows, sucking their teats with such avidity as to draw blood when their milk is exhausted. Of this fact, which has many had been considered a popular tale, the Doctor has himself an opportunity of being an eye witness. "Walking, according to custom, (says he) one morning, on the road called the Park, bordered by pastures, containing a number of sheep and horned cattle, I observed an old but vigorous cow, seperate from the others, and lowing with her head raised in the air, her ears erect, and shaking her tail. Surprised at the noise she made, I feared myself on the bank of a stream, and followed her wherever she went with my eyes. After running some minutes, she suddenly stopped in a sequestered spot, and began to ruminate. Inquisitive to discover the cause, I went to the place. After going into a pond to drink, she came out and waited on the brink for a black snake, which crept from among the bushes, and approaching her, entwined himself round her legs, and began to suck her milk. I observed this phenomenon two successive days without informing the herdsman.—The third day I acquainted him with it, and he told me that for some time the cow kicked at the approach of her calf, and that she could not, without difficulty, be compelled to suffer it to suck. We took away the snake, which we killed. On the succeeding day the cow, after in vain waiting for her suckling, ran about the meadow in such a manner, that the herdman was obliged to shut her up." Dr. Antonini has discovered that if the teats of the cows be washed with a decoction of tobacco, the ravages of these extraordinary depredators may be effectually prevented.

LORD HALIFAX AND POPE.

WHEN I had finished the two or three first books of my translation of the Iliad, says Pope, that Lord desired to have the pleasure of hearing them read at his house, Addison, Congreve and Garth, were there at the reading. In four or five places, Lord Halifax stopt me very civilly, and with a speech each time, much of the same kind, "I beg your pardon, Mr. Pope; but there is something in that passage that does not quite please me. But so good as to mark the place, and consider a little at your leisure—I'm sure you can give it a better turn." I returned from Lord Halifax's with Dr. Garth, in his chariot; and as we were going along, was saying to the Doctor, that my Lord had laid me under a good deal of difficulty by such loose and general observations; that I had been thinking over the passages almost ever since, and could not guess at what it was that offended his Lordship in either of them. Garth laughed heartily at my embarrassment; said, I had not been long enough acquainted with Lord Halifax to know his way yet; that I need not puzzle myself about looking those places over and over, when I got home. "All you need do, (says he) is to leave them just as they are; call on Lord Halifax two or three months hence, thank him for his kind observations on the passages, and then read them to him as altered. I have known him much longer than you have, and will be answerable for the event." I followed his advice, wrote on Lord Halifax some time after; said I hoped he would find his objections to those passages removed;—read them to him exactly as they were at first; and his Lordship was extremely pleased with them, and cried out, Ay now they are perfectly right: nothing can be better.

Extraordinary Industry.—The account is given to the London Society for the Improvement of Arts, by a lieutenant of the navy, nearly in these terms:

I yesterday took a walk of about two miles, to satisfy myself respecting a remarkable instance of persevering and indefatigable industry, which I found as follows:

Twelve acres of barren downs had been taken from the common, seven or eight of which were in a high state of cultivation, and the remainder in a forward state of improvement. This space was divided into eight fields, seperated by 17 stone fences, put together in a masterly manner. The fields intersected with various drains, which empty themselves into the ditches that have been obliged to be dug round the margin of each field, both for this purpose, and in order to give greater height to the fences. On each side of every bank ditches are dug, and in the gateways ditches are made able to support a loaded cart, that the water may run freely off. The land produced in 18 s. ten Cornish bushels of barley, nine trusses of hay, two hogsheads of oats, and ten bushels of wheat, besides pasture for cattle.

This has been the labour of eighteen years, by one indefatigable man, who began it in the fiftieth year of his age. His dwelling-house and out-buildings, including the turf-walls of which they are compoied, the laying of the rafters, and the thatching, are all executed by himself, though he was only bred to husbandry.

This deserving character is William Pearce, near Helston, Cornwall, who, when he began his improvements, was possessed only of one mare, and the thilling per-day which he earned by hard labor. He has brought up seven children, of whom the sons volunteered into the service of their country; two were killed in the late war, and two were still employed in the same service when the account was received.

The society of arts awarded him their silver medal and fifteen guineas, as an encouragement of virtuous and distinguished industry.

[Pearce was equalled in astonishing industry by a printer who lived many years since in Connecticut. He published a weekly paper, for which he prepared the news, &c. set the types, and performed the press work; the papers, he carried round, or dispatched them by the mails; kept the accounts and collected the debts; without a single affidant old or young. In a word he did all the duties of editor, clerk, printer and "devil." So the story used to be told.]

PROVERB.

Giving presents to a woman to secure her love, is like filling a sieve with water.

FEMALE CURIOSITY.

A WORTHY 'squire, of sober life,
Has a contented boasting wife;
Of how the daily maids complains;
Herself the thought a very saint.
She lov'd to hand mankind with blame,
And on their errors build her fame.
Her favorite subject of dispute
Was Eve and the forbidden fruit
"Had I been Eve," she often cried,
"Man had not fall'n, not woman died;
I'd had kept the modern given,
Nor for an apple lost my Heaven;
To gratify my curious mind
I ne'er had ruin'd all mankind;
Nor from a vain desire to know,
Entail'd on all my race such woe."

The 'squire reply'd, "I fear 'tis true,
The same ill spirit lives in you;
Tempted alike, I dare believe,
You would have disobey'd like Eve."
The lady storm'd and still deny'd
Both curiosity and pride.

The 'Squire some future day at dinner,
Before'd to try his boasted sinner;
He griev'd such vanity puff'd her,
And thus in serious terms address'd her:
"Madam, the usual splendid feast
With which our wedding day is grac'd,
With you I must not share to-day,
For business summons me away.
O! all the dainties I've prepar'd,
I beg not any may be spar'd;
Indulge in every costly dish;
Enjoy, 'tis what I really wish;
Only observe one prohibition,
Nor think it a severe condition;
On one small dish which cover'd stands,
You must not dare to lay your hands;
Go—disobey not on your life,
Or henceforth you're no more my wife.

The treat was serv'd the 'squire was gone,
The murm'ring lady din'd alone;
She saw what e'er could grace a feast,
Or charm the eye, or please the taste;
But while she rang'd from this to that,
From vest'lian hamhich to turtle fat;
On one small dish the chance'd to light,
By a deep cover hid from sight:
"Oh! here it is—yet for me!
I must not taste, nay, dare not see;
Why place it there? or why lock'd
That I so much as lift the lid:
Prohibited of this to eat,
I care not for the sumptuous treat;
I wonder if 'tis fowl or fish,
To know what's there I merely wish.
I'll look—O no, I lose for ever,
If I'm betray'd, my husband's favor.
I own I think it vastly hard,
May, tyranny to be debarr'd.
John you may go—the wine's decanted,
I'll ring or call you when your'e wanted."
Now left alone, the waits no longer,
Temptation prefies more and stronger.
"I'll peep—the harm can ne'er be much,
For though I peep, I will not touch;
Why I'm forbid to lift this cover,
One glance will tell, and then 'tis over.
My husband's absent, so's John,
My peeping never can be known."
Trembling she yielded to her wish,
And rais'd the cover from the dish:
She flares—for lo! an open pye
From which fix living sparrows fly.
She calls, she screams, with wild surprife,
"Haste, John, and catch those birds," she cries.
John hears her not, but to crown her shame,
In at her call her husband came.
Sternly he frown'd, as thus he spoke:
"Thus is your vow'd allegiance broke!
Self ign'rance led you to believe
You did not share the fin of Eve,
Like her's how bleft was your condition!
How small my gentle prohibition!
Yet you, though fed with every dainty,
Sat pining in the midst of plenty:
This dish, thus fingled from the reft,
Of your obedience was the teft;
Your mind, unbroke by self-denial,
Could not sustain this slender trial;
Humility from hence be taught,
Learn candor to another's fault;
Go, know, like Eve, from this fad dinner,
You're both a vain and curious sinner."

A Woman singing ballads for money to bury her husband has given rise to the following

JEU D'ESPRIT:

FOR her husband deceas'd, Sally chaunts the sweet lay,
And saith 'tis a singular sorrow;
But I doubt, since the singe for a dead man, to day,
She'll cry for a live one to-morrow.

To BONAPARTE.

"The English are nothing but a Nation of shop keepers, &c." Vide Moniteur

When the Corsican Chief with a view to degrade;
Says, we're nothing but shopmen, and sneers at our trade;
Let none to the obvious assertion object,
Nor a charge contradict so extremely correct;
'Tis true, Bonaparte and we with you to know,
That the sum of our partnership's, One King and Co.
Tho' our profit rare productions to us you accuse,
And always keep hurt when we lend you a line,
Yet try us for once, we're quite ready to deal,
With a Capital stock of iron, iron and steel:
And a warehouse long open'd and constantly fill'd,
With the choicest of Articles most ably distill'd;
Not smuggled from France, out according to my lenite,
Of bad British proof, which we felt with a licence,
Should some of these articles prove to your liking,
We can shew you some others tho' not to drinking.
Perhaps you've a wish for our virgins and wives;
But there if we fail, we muft fell with our lives;
And as for our lives, Bonaparte I muft hear,

Lateſt Intelligence.

Vienna, July 17.

His royal highneſs, the archduke Charles is expected to ſet out immediately for Italy, accompanied by gen. Mack and monſieur de Fuſſbender. The union of the Genoeſe territory with France, and the new line of cuſtom houſes, which is to be eſtabliſhed along the frontier of the kingdom of Italy, will, it is feared, prove totally ſubverſive to the trade of Germany and Switzerland with theſe countries. The Swiſs government is well as that of Auſtria, is extremely diſſatisfied with the charge that have lately taken place in that quarter.

PLYMOUTH, Auguſt 8.

A ſloop is come up from Falmouth, by which is learnt that a packet arrived from Liſbon in ſeven days, and brings a report of a ſecond battle, and that one of the enemy's ſhips had taken fire and blew up. The Spaniſh priſoners ſay Villeneuve had ſent all his laſt failing cutters and convertes to the different French and Spaniſh ports, to appriſe the Port Admirals where he was, and in what latitude he might be ſpoken by any veſſels that could eſcape our blockading ſquadrons.

LONDON, Auguſt 10.

We have reaſon to believe that the intelligence lately received by government is ſuch as to create a firm perſuaſion that the enemy will immediately make an attempt to invade this kingdom; their preparations are complete, and in the Texel the troops deſtined for the expedition are actually embarked, with all the artillery and ſtores, and we have no doubt are only waiting for a favorable opportunity to put to ſea. It was indeed yeſterday poſitively aſſerted, that the Dutch fleet had failed; but we have aſcertained that the report was wholly unfounded. Admiral Ruſſel failed on Thurſday to relieve his ſtation off the Texel. At ſo important a criſis we are happy to be enabled to ſtate, that Government have adopted every meaſure which prudence could ſuggeſt to defeat the daring deſigns of the enemy. Of the reſult of ſuch an attempt we never entertained a doubt;—at the ſame time we ſhould be ſorry if confidence led to any relaxation in the neceſſary means of defence. It would be idle to deny that we have a moſt active and powerful enemy to contend againſt—that his means of attack are great beyond all example—and that his enmity to this country is implacable. Our confidence is founded not upon any contempt of the enemy, but upon a knowledge of the ſkill, diſcipline and courage of our fleets and armies, and upon the loyalty, unanimity, and bravery of the people of theſe kingdoms.

The following circular letter, was yeſterday ordered to be ſent to the commanders of the different Volunteer Corps through out the kingdom:

(CIRCULAR.)

"Sir, in conſequence of intelligence received by government, of the embarkation of large bodies of troops in Holland, of a fleet of men of war being ready to fail from thence, and of the increased preparations of the French at Boulogne, and its neighbourhood, I have received orders from his Royal Highness the commander in chief, to direct the General Officers, and Inspecting Field Officers attached to the Volunteer Corps, to give notice to these Corps, of the possibility of their being speedily called upon for service: and also to suspend all furloughs for working during the harvest till further orders. I have the honor to be, your most obedient, and most humble servant,

" HARRINGTON.

" General Commanding the London District."

The Spaniards have begun forming two camps before Gibraltar, about three miles distant: they have pitched upwards of 500 tents, and they seem to have about 5000 men in their camps.

Government expect, by the next arrival from the Continent, intelligence which will ultimately determine the question of Continental peace or war, and perhaps the duration of the present parliamentary recess.

Salem, Sept. 17.

Capt. Shillaber, from Leghorn, informs us, that on the 17th July, a brig arrived there from Algiers, and brought accounts of an insurrection at that place, and that the Dey had beheaded 400 Jews. One Jewish family made their escape in the brig.

A letter from capt. Williams, at Leghorn, to the Editor of the Salem Gazette, gives the following particulars of this event;

" Yesterday arrived here an Imperial brig, in five days from Algiers. She informs, that the country was in dreadful confusion—that the Bedouin Arabs said to be headed by a Frenchman, had revolted, and marched towards Algiers—that the Dey, on their approach, detached 700 troops to attack them, but these, after a desperate battle, were defeated, and cut off to a man—that the Arabs then rushed on to the city, which they successfully attacked, and had taken a principal fort—that another attempt had been made to assassinate the Dey, he having received several stabs, and said to be mortally wounded—that he had cut off 400 of the richest Jew's heads, and that the bloody work was still going on when the vessel left that place. There were at this time three vessels at Algiers, a Ragusian, an Imperialist, and a Swede, who all cut their cables, and run away from the port, permitting as many Jews to come as could get on board.—The brig that has now arrived has 100 on board, and it is expected the Swede has at least 200 more.—Such is the news at Leghorn.

" The Algerines have a squadron now at sea, consisting of seven sail; they passed in sight of this port 18 days since, and were off Civita Vecchia, 4 days since. They consist of a stout frigate of 44 guns, built at Algiers a few years since; another of 44 guns, taken from the Portuguese six months since; the Crefent, of 32 guns a present from the U. States; 2 polacres, lately purchased from the Greeks, one of which mounts 26 guns, the other 18; the fine brig Bulkaw, of 22 guns, a present also from the U. States; and a xebeck."

We have received the following account of the conflagration of Detroit from an authentic source. It will be read with deep interest by our readers.—Nat. Intel.

Conflagration of Detroit.

This event happened on the 11th of June last. The flames commenced about nine o'clock in the morning, and within four hours the whole town was laid in ashes. Only two or three buildings, of little value, situated in the borders, were preserved. About 300 edifices of all kinds were consumed, among which were nearly an hundred dwelling houses, the church, several stores, the citadel, with officers and soldiers barracks, contractor's stores, United States store, &c. &c. The new fort and barracks, called Fort Pernault, a little back of the town, were not greatly endangered, and the old blockhouse, at the south end escaped. In a word, all that space enclosed with picquets, and denominated the town, presents nothing but a heap of ruins, consisting of naked chimnies and cinders.

The rapidity of the destruction was perhaps unprecedented, but will not appear surprising to any one previously acquainted with the place. The buildings were mostly old, all of wood, and dry as tinder—extremely crouded together, on an area of about three acres—the streets very narrow (the widest not exceeding 20 feet) intersecting rectangularly at small distances—and every square completely covered with combustibles. This mode of building the town originated, not merely from want of taste in the ancient settlers, but from the necessity of defence in war, as this settlement has for a long time been a frontier, peculiarly exposed to danger from the natives, and far removed from the means of external succour.—It has been found necessary, till very lately, to keep the picquets enclosing the town in repair, besides being under protection of the cannon of an adjoining fort and blockhouse.—The town was furnished with but one engine, which, with the prompt assistance of the troops formerly stationed here, had been sufficient to extinguish occasional fires upon their first appearance; but at present the troops on this station are few, and the want of aid from that source was severely felt on the late occasion.

By what means the fire was kindled, whether by accident or design, is uncertain—there are various conjectures, but no decided opinion. It began in a stable near the United State's stores, on the S. W. quarter, a light breeze blowing from the south. Its progress against and athwart the wind was astonishing, but in the direction of it the blaze darted with nearly the celerity of lightning, and reached the opposite extremity of the town in a few moments. The fire in no part had diminished till the whole was in a blaze, and one immense mass of flame was presented to the eye, having the appearance of proceeding from but one building of vast extent. The streets became impassable as the fire progressed, being filled from side to side with an impenetrable column of smoke and flame which wafted by the current of air thro' the north and south streets, streamed to a great distance beyond the limits of the houses. To the distant spectator, and to the wretched inhabitants, who after a short lapse of time could be no more than the spectators, the scene was at once sublime and painful, exceeding in awful grandeur perhaps almost any spectacle of the kind which has happened since the world began.

It was fortunate that the catastrophe did not take place in the night, as there must have been a greater destruction of goods and effects, and unquestionably of some lives. No lives were lost, and but one person (a poor woman) was badly injured. Means have been taken to ascertain correctly the amount of losses in property, and progress has been made to as to place it beyond a doubt that they exceed 14,000 dollars probably approaching near 15,000. The conflagration took place at a time of day that the inhabitants were generally near their houses, and were enabled to save more of their movable effects than could have been expected in so short a time as was allowed them; great quantities however fell a sacrifice, and individuals, whose estates consisted in buildings, were in one day reduced from eligible circumstances to poverty.—There is no citizen but has suffered more or less. At present, the people are scattered up and down the settlement, crowding the houses even to overflowing, occupying hovels and every thing having the shape of an edifice, and several families are encamped in booths upon the public common and the highways.

The sufferings of the people in the ensuing winter must inevitably be great; we tremble to anticipate them. Hemmed on every side by the wilderness, in some directions interminably, and in others extending too great a distance to admit of being passed by an impoverished people, they are restricted to this settlement, narrow in its extent, with indifferent cultivations, and the houses in bad repair. Not a farm is cultivated one mile from the river bank nor a building erected. There the wilderness commences which extends to the western ocean. The settlement up and down the bank of the river is but a few miles in extent, and taken up by farmers, who have no room to spare in their dwellings and raise barely a sufficiency for the suppy of their own wants. The houseless sufferers have little time, and still less means, to provide new accommodations for themselves before the approach of the cold season. Provisions of every kind are at an excellively high price. Thus circumstanced, what can be before these miserable people but a winter of rigorous suffering: If credit and charity should furnish them with food, yet there cannot be shelter and covering sufficient for their comfort. Applications for relief are sent and sending to various parts of the United States, and of Canada, which it is hoped and believed will not be sent in vain. We have lively expectations, founded on the tried and known benevolence of the people of both countries towards their fellow-citizens in cases of similar calamity; and a more distressful case, it is presumed, has rarely been submitted to their benevolent consideration.

In a distant and remote point of view, the conflagration of this town may be considered not unlike that which has happened to some other towns, whose first construction was unfavorable to convenience and health—it may ultimately be beneficial altho' at present to highly afflicting and deplorable. A plan is already devised and applied to the former scite of the town, which by extending it, and widening the streets, giving them different directions, providing public squares, &c. it is conceived will promote the health and convenience of the inhabitants, as well as improve the beauty of the place. The plan is nearly that of the city of Washington.

Extract from the Journal of a Balloonist.

" PASSING a cloud, I put out my hand, and took a piece of it, and squeezed it like a sponge, and the water ran out. The sun went north about; but never set. At the distance of about fifty leagues above the earth, we saw a white bird sitting on the corner of a cloud. We took it to be one of Mahomet's Pigeons. If we had had a gun we could have shot it. Passing by the moon we saw a fellow selling lard at auction. He wished us to give a bid; but we told him, we had not come to buy lands in the moon. We came across a comet, but it was asleep. It looked like a tarapine; but had a tail like a fox.

We came near a hail bank; and filled a hat to bring down with us. The hail stones were about as large as a pigeon's egg.

A thousand miles above the earth we passed through a field of turkey buzzards. This would seem to be their region, and accounts for the circumstance, that no one has ever found a nest of one of these. These rookeries are out of sight in the atmosphere.

As we approached one of the heavenly bodies, it appeared like an island. We struck upon a planet, but Blanchard got out and pushed off the balloon. We supposed it to be Mercury, as we heard orators harranguing, and a multitude of tongues.

There was marriages going on in Venus, & in Mars we heard the drums beat.

In Juniter we heard swearing—Oh, Jupiter! by Jupiter! &c.

We meant to have a pull at one of Satan's rings, but were blown off the coast, and found ourselves in the latitude of Herschel. Provisions failing, we thought to shape our course towards the earth again.

The first thing we saw was the forest of Ardennes, which appeared like a shamrock. The Pyrenian mountains seemed like a bed of parsley; and the Atlantic ocean about as large as Loch Swilly.

Within about a furlong of the earth, Blanchard gave me the parachute, and I came down.

Anecdote of Voltaire.

MADAM DE TOLMOND said to Voltaire, " I think, Sir, that a philosopher should never write, but to endeavour to render mankind less wicked and unhappy, than they are. Now you go quite the contrary. You are always writing against that religion, which alone is able to restrain wickedness, and to afford us consolation under misfortunes." Voltaire was much struck, and excused himself by saying, that he wrote only for those who were of the same opinion with himself.

The omission of the article sometimes renders a sentence ludicrous. We read in a late London paper of the fasting of William Pitt—when the writer was giving an account of the loss of the William Pitt, a ship of that name. The fashion of economizing in words is sometimes carried to an obscure length.

" Better is the end of a thing, than the beginning thereof."

ASSUREDLY, says I, with a desponding face, when I dipt my pen into my ink-horn, and expected to bring up a sermon from the bottom. My little flock of readers expect that the pastor will make his weekly visitations; and yet I feel too languid to excurse far. I wish the task was finished; verily, verily, Solomon, whether you muttered it when building the temple, or thinking of your concubines, you never muttered more wisdom, than, better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof.

Without any invocation to the sons and daughters of indolence, for we all know what would be the language of that family, thou'd even the persevering and industrious be asked the question, they would refer the question to Solomon's works for an answer.

Beginning! continued I, is like Joshua Bunyan's hill, so difficult that it would embarrass even a christian to get fairly over.—Beginning! why is it the terror of school boys, and of pretty maids in her teens; it makes lawyers stammer and lovers timid. I haste to begin my sermon; and, quoth my grandmother, looking at her work, thro' her spectacles, I would rather foot ten pair of your blue stockings than begin one.

But of ending, how many fine sentences could I scribble, had I " the pen of a ready writer!" How exultingly the saint talks of " finishing the faith," how cheerfully the farmer swings his scythe, when hay making is done, and how briskly the bridegroom ascends three chamber flairs at once, when courtship is at an end. I married a good couple last week, and as usual, neglected the wedding sermon, till the eager twain came blushing into my study. When I joined their hands I felt their pulses beating high, through their white gloves, and saw eyes sparkle expressively, when I extemporized from " better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof."

One of my parishioners, a very industrious and thriving cobler, who supports a wife, " nine small children, and one at the breast," by his labour of leather, I know, " even from his boyish days." At fourteen he sung wicked ballads to his fellow apprentices, drank raw rum, in a frolic, out of the old shoes in the shop, and burnt the shoes of the customers. At twenty one three benevolent maidens complained of him to the 'squire, and he was obliged to pawn his freedom fuit, to indemnify the parish.—He next commenced a roaring blade, drank flip before breakfast, laid out his heel tap money in tobacco, and the tavern clock struck one, when he told his last negro story. At length he picked up Dr. Franklin's " Poor Richard," and found that this was not " The way to Wealth." He broke his mug, threw away his box, bought stock, earned money, kept it, and married. I stopped at his shop, a few mornings since, at sunrise to try on a pair of shoes. As soon as I heard the noise of fix, his journeymen's hammer's ceased, I could not forbear comparing the past with the present. Ah, faid I looking wistfully at his last and the waxed thread he was twining, and thinking that St. Gregory, St. Austin, and all the fathers of the church have punned, ah, mr. Crispin how much more profitable is your end than your beginning.

Paley an archdeacon of the church, and what is much better a worthy man, tells us in his book of philolophy, there is a great difference between beginning with a thousand pounds, and ending with a hundred, and the reverse. It is of much more import, therefore, if we mean to end well, that we should begin tolerably. I know no better way for a young man, than a piece of honesty, prudence, and industry; it is better than stock in the shop, or a thousand pounds from a rich father. If a man should take it into his head to begin with knavery and theft, it cannot be discarded, though the words of Solomon are against me, that there was ignominious ends, and if hemp grew in Jerusalem, he ought to know it, or if not, I proceed to inform him that a rope's end is one of the most painful terminations in life. Neither " better," nor best can be predicted of such an " end," even by the accuracy of his logic. 'Tis a vile end; and your trickish jockies, be not in such haste to put off your spavened hoffes, for double their worth, to the believing buyer. Lame as they are you may be willing to avoid yourselves of their imperfect speed, to convey you to the Genefee. Better that the lake fever should be your end, than the gallows.

When spirits are the victims of the east wind, when one of my agonizing head aches disturbs " the palace of the soul," when my small falary is scantily and grudgingly paid, or when remembrances of false friends, ingratitude preffes strongly upon me, I then read the third chapter of Job, and exclaim, better is the end of life than the beginning. Some there are, who are perpetually crowned with rofebuds of delight before they are withered—who " eat and drink, and enjoy the good of their labour," and then " rile up to play." To this class existence has abundant charms, and their airy fancies pleafed with the " beginning" of life's day, put far away the " end." But it may be made a very ferious question, whether the majority would not pronounce the words of the text as a creed. He who is poor or miserable, blind or naked, will certainly with for better accommodations, where he could be well paid, fed, and enjoy " perfect vifion." To such an unfortunate, such a fmoky house, as he inhabits, muft be offenfive; and if you convince his reason that in a " houfe not made with hands," more airy and gladfome apartments are prepared, his feelings will rejoice when his mortal leafe expires, and he will apply and believe the above quoted words of Solomon.

THE LAY PREACHER.

From Simple's Walks and Sketches at the Cape of Good Hope.

" In one of our morning walks about the town, obferving a confiderable crowd before the door of a houfe, my friend and I went up and enquired what was going forward, and were informed, that it was a public fale of all the effects of a colonift deceafed.—Scarcely had we joined the crowd, when the auctioneer mounted upon a chair and ftruck for fome time upon a round plate of brafs, as a fignal that the auction was going to begin. Immediately all was attention. Numbers of articles were put up and difpofed of; till, growing tired of the fcene, we were going away; a fhort paufe, however, and then a murmur in the aflembly, announced that fomething elfe than it ftes was going to be produced. We accordingly waited a moment, and foon faw a black man coming forward through the crowd; " Ah!" faid Charles, " they are going to difpofe of the family flaves, let us ftop a little longer."

" The firft that was put up was a ftout native of the Mozambique coaft. His look was fad and melancholy, his hands hanging down clafped together as if they were bound, and his eyes fixed upon the earth. When he heard that his lot was determined, and that he was fold for 600 rix dollars, he raifed his eyes up heavily to look for his new matter, and followed him out of the crowd without fpeaking a word; but we thought that his cheek was wet with tears, and perhaps we were right: for the purchaser told us with some expressions of compassion, that he had been a great favourite of his deceased friend. Many more were put up, the household of the deceased having been very numerous, but on the countenances of all of them, sorrow and the humiliation of slavery were the predominating features. At length an object was presented which almost made us weep; a mother was brought forward with a little girl of three years old clinging to her which they willed to tear from her, whilst she dreading the threats of her owners, feebly told her child to leave her, at the same time that she folded her arms round it. "Put them up together," said every voice; it was consented to, and the woman kissing her child and leading it by the hand, advanced to the spot appointed. Whilst they were bidding for her, she looked anxiously round in every countenance, as if imploring compassion. Her price was made up to seven hundred dollars, which the auctioneer repeated a long time without any body seeming willing to say more. "The man who has bought her and the child," said one who stood next to us, "has the reputation of being very cruel to his slaves." "Has he?" said Charles, whilst the blood rushed into his face, "but he has not got them yet." Seven hundred and ten, cried he, with a voice trembling with eagerness. Every body turned their eyes upon us, and the mother and the little child looked full in Charles's face. Seven hundred and twenty, said the man; thirty, cried Charles; fifty, said the other; eight hundred, said Charles: the man bit his lips; a long pause ensued, eight hundred and one, said a mild looking old man whose humanity I was well acquainted with, Charles drew back, and the poor slave was allotted to a mild master.

"When we had got into the street, I could not help remarking how lightly Charles walked along, and how his eyes glistened with the pleasing reflection of having done a good action. Every now and then also, he exclaimed to himself, "poor child! poor child! I have saved you some stripes, however," and then he would walk on so fast that I could scarcely keep up with him."

Wife, Children and Friends.

[This deservedly popular song is the production of Mr. SPENCER, son of the Duke of Marlborough. It has been the effect of electricity on the minds of Englishmen; and the Government has found it a valuable auxiliary for rousing the people to military enthusiasm, by placing before them, in three words, a summary of all their blessings, for which they are now contending.

WHEN the black-letter'd list to the gods was presented,
(The list of what Fate for each mortal intends,)
At the long string of his a kind Angel re-seated,
And flipp'd in three bleſſings—Wife, Children & Friends.

In vain sagry Lucifer swore he was cheated,
For justice divine could not compass its ends:
The scheme of man's fall, he maintain'd, was defeated,
For earth becomes heav'n, with—Wife, Children and Friends

If the flock of our bliſs is in ſtranger hands veſted,
The ſtands ill-ſecur'd ort in bankrupcy ſtands:
But the heart offers bliſs which are never proteſted,
When drawn on the firm of—Wife, Children and Friends.

The' valor ſhinglows in his life's waning eve,
The death-wounded tar, who his colour defends,
Drops a tear of regret, as he dying remembers
How Bleſt was his home with—Wife, Children and Friends

The ſoldier whoſe deeds live immortal in ſtory,
Whom duty to far diſtant latitudes ſends,
With tranſport would barter whole ages of glory
For one happy day with—Wife, Children and Friends.

Though ſpice breathing gales o'er his caravan hover,
And around him Arabia's whole fragrance deſcends,
The merchant ſtill thinks of the woodbines that cover
The bower where he ſat with—Wife, Children and Friends.

The day-ſpring of youth, ſtill unclouded by ſorrow,
Alone on itſelf for enjoyment depends;
But dim is the twilight of age, if it ſorrow
No warmth from the ſmiles of—Wife, Children and Friends.

Let the breath of renown ever freſhen and nourish
The laurels which o'er her dead favorite bends;
O'er him wave the willow, which only can flourish
When 'dew'd with the tears of—Wife, Children and Friends.

Let us drink!—for my ſong, growing graver and graver,
To ſubjects too ſolemn inſenſibly tends;
Let us drink!—pledge me high!—love and beauty will flavor
The glaſs which I fill to—Wife, Children and Friends.

And if, in the hope this fair iſland to plunder,
The tyrant of France to invade us pretends,
How his legions will think, when our arm'd freemen thunder
The war ſong of—BALTOWS, Wife, Children and Friends.

PRESIDENT.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith:—

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the fifteenth day of October, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—

GREETING:

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the seventeenth day of September last, We thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to Convoke our said Provincial Parliament to meet us on the FIFTEENTH day of this present month of October, at which time in our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear, but we taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you and each of you that on the twenty first day of November next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province of Upper Canada, and there to do as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

Lateſt Intelligence.

BERLIN, May 23.

The King's courier, who left Milan on the 13th inſt. arrived here on Wedneſday laſt, and brought with him the French paſſports for M. Novoſiltzoff. They were requeſted by our Court, and moſt readily granted by the Emperor Napoleon, and appearances indicate an underſtanding that may lead to the wiſhed for event of peace. Theſe paſſports, together with other diſpatches, were forwarded to St. Peterſburgh by the Ruſſian Collegiate Aſſeſſor, M. Bazenoff. M. Novoſiltzoff will probably reach Paris about the middle of June.

PLYMOUTH, July 3.

The Glory, 98, Rear Admiral Stirling, had joined the channel fleet from Spithead. Hon. Admiral Cornwallis was hourly expected out. The Barfleur 98 Capt. Martin, ſailed the 27 inſt. from off Rochefort, to relieve the Royal Sovereign, 110, Rear Admiral Bickerton, which is to ſail for England the moment the Barfleur joins the Ferrol ſquadron, under Rear Admiral Sir R. Calder. The whole fleet, in conſequence of the arrival of the Indefatigable 44 off Breſt, with the account of the enemy being at Martinique (which news ſhe obtained from the Mercury, 32, Hon. Captain Bouverie, homeward bound) are on the alert; and the Lady Warren, 32, Capt. M'Keller, arriving laſt Saturday, with ten victuallers from thence, Admiral Lord Gardiner ordered every ſhip to be compleated with proviſions, &c. for five months.

Letters from the fleet off Breſt, dated the 18th inſt. ſtate them being all well—enemy as uſual.

DUBLIN, June 28.

On Monday laſt five perſons who had been confined under Secretary's Warrants were liberated from Kilmainham priſon. It appears from the recent liberations from the Provoſt and Kilmainham priſons, that it has not a partial but a general clemency, which it is the intention of Government to extend to thoſe confined on ſuſpicion of State offences.

LONDON, June 10.

A regular exchange of priſoners is to be adopted immediately between this country and Spain, for which purpoſe cartels are to be eſtabliſhed. The appointment of Capt. Piget, as Agent for priſoners of war in France, is done away in conſequence of the refuſal of Buonaparte to grant the neceſſary paſſports.

14. The arrangement of the Weſtern ſquadrons, by the direction of the preſent Admiralty, is as follows:—21 ſail of the line off Breſt, Admiral Lord Gardiner.—5 ſail of the line on the Coaſt of Ireland, Admiral Drury.—7 ſail of the line off Rochefort, Admiral Graves.—9 ſail of the line off Ferrol, Admiral Calder.—9 ſail of the line off Cadiz, Admiral Collingwood.—15 ſail of the line of the Weſtern fleet, all highly fitted, equipped for any ſervice.

By the laſt Hamburgh mail, information was received, that the intervention of Ruſſia had ſucceeded in preventing the differences between Pruſſia and Sweden from proceeding to extremities, & inducing Pruſſia to deſiſt from urging her pretenſions to reſtrain Sweden from ſending what troops the might judge neceſſary into Swediſh Pomerania.

His Majeſty has declined his intended tour through Oxford and the ſeveral midland counties, on account of the late period at which Parliament is likely to be prorogued.

Sir J. Craig's expedition, it is now aſcertained, was deſtined againſt Minorca, but the enterpriſe, it is ſaid, has been abandoned, in conſequence of the place having been ſo ſtrengthened as to render the ſucceſs of any attempt with ſuch a force doubtful.

Lord St. Vincent received a letter from his Majeſty, deſiring to ſee him. On Sunday morning, as early as half paſt 4 o'clock, his Lordſhip left town for Windſor, in a poſtchaiſe and four horſes. Arriving at Windſor about a quarter before ſeven, Lord St. Vincent drove up to the Caſtle, and was immediately admitted to a conference with the King, which occupied a conſiderable ſpace of time. His Lordſhip did not return to town until Friday morning.

28. We have ſeen a letter from a Gentleman on the Continent, on whoſe information we place great reliance, which ſtates, that Bonaparte, after receiving at Milan a diſpatch from Vienna, exclaimed,—"Well, Francis II. is tired of the German Imperial Crown; it formerly belonged to Charlemagne—it ſhall be added to mine." This violent and intemperate language is ſo conſiſtent with the general character of the man, that we have no doubt of his having uſed it; but it ſhould be obſerved, that although upon theſe occaſions he expreſſes himſelf intemperately, he does not do it lightly, but generally betrays ſome projects that he has long been brooding over in his mind. It has been openly ſaid at Milan, by thoſe who are conſidered as the confidants & favourites of Bonaparte, that he intends to be crowned by the Pope, as Emperor of the Roman Empire, as ſoon as he has dictated the terms of peace at Vienna.

The Ordnance Board have ſignified to General Lloyd, who commands the artillery at Woolwich, that the warren at that place is no longer to bear that name, but to be from this time denominated the "Royal Arſenal."

Lord Melville's trial will, we believe take place in the Houſe of Lords, and will commence immediately after the opening of next ſeſſion of Parliament. This important ſubject will now undergo a full and ſolemn inveſtigation before the higheſt tribunal in this country, and therefore all further comments upon the merits of the caſe will not only be improper but illegal.

July 1 to 3. The Eugenie ſloop of war, with the Creſcent, of Hull, Capt. Radſton, under convoy, arrived at Goree on the Coaſt of Africa, on the 28th of March. Theſe veſſels ſailed with Mungo Park, Eſq. the celebrated African traveller, who is about to penetrate if poſſible, ſtill further into the interior of Africa. On their paſſage there they touched at the Iſland St. Jago, where Mr. Park purchaſed 44 aſſes for his journey; and the Creſcent was to ſail on the 6th of April from Goree up the Gambia with that Gentleman and 40 ſoldiers, who are to accompany him; after proceeding as far up the river as poſſible, the Creſcent was to land Mr. Park and his ſuite, and return to Goree, whence ſhe was expected to ſail with the Eugenie the latter end of the month for England.

The Gazette of Saturday contains the official diſpatches from Lord Lake, giving an account in detail of the capture of the Fort of Deeg, and the unſucceſsful attempt upon Bhurtpore.

The malignant hatred of the Corſican has purſued the unfortunate French emigrants to Hamburgh, the departure of all of whom from that city has been peremptorily inſiſted on by the French Miniſter there, under penalty of being ſeized and ſent to France to ſuffer ſevere puniſhment.

Spain has drawn ſuch copious ſupplies of corn from the Greek iſlands & other parts of the Mediterranean, that the price of grain has conſiderably lowered, they have alſo the proſpect of an abundant harveſt.

In Portugal alſo the weather has been unuſually favourable, and a plentiful harveſt is conſequently expected; except in the Province of Alemtejo, where a ſcarcity of corn was felt for ſowing, owing to the inroad made in that quarter by the Spaniſh troops, towards the cloſe of the late war.

The following is the preſent ſtate of the Britiſh naval force:

There are 982 ſhips in commiſſion. Of theſe 112 are of the line; 221 from 50 to 44 guns; 132 frigates; and 418 ſloops and ſmaller veſſels. The number of veſſels in the Britiſh Channel amounts to 178; in the Downs and North Seas 159; in the Weſt Indies & on the paſſage 65, among which 17 are of the line; and on the Jamaica ſtation two of the line, and 55 ſmaller veſſels; in the Eaſt Indies and on the paſſage 40, of which eight are of the line; in the Mediterranean 26, of which only one is of the line.

The actual return of the troops now ſerving abroad is 69,300 men; in January, 1804, they conſiſted only of 49,000 men.

In addition to the incorporation of Genoa, we are told that Lucca has applied to the new King of Italy for a Prince of his Houſe, and a new conſtitution. The French laws are alſo to be introduced at Parma and Placentia. The States of the Church and Naples will, we ſuppoſe, ſoon likewiſe be melted down in the new Italian crucible, and indeed it is already reported that Rome is to be made the capital of the kingdom of Italy.

The ſeaſonable rains which have fallen during the courſe of the preſent month have very much improved the growth of the Winter and Spring Corn; the Wheat crops univerſally look well and improve much.

Government are taking every poſſible means to diſcover perſons who were concerned in ſetting fire to the Laboratory, at Woolwich. The Board of Ordnance has offered a reward of 500l. A Proclamation from His Majeſty is likewiſe about to be iſſued, offering a free pardon to any concerned in this horrid tranſaction who will give information of the perſon who actually ſet the place on fire.

Yeſterday morning, the Swediſh and Ruſſian Ambaſſadors tranſacted buſineſs at Lord Mulgrave's Office. At one o'clock a Cabinet Council was held at his Lordſhip's Office, which was attended by the Lord Chancellor, Earls Camden and Weſtmorland, Viſcount Caſtlereagh, and Mr. Pitt.

Yeſterday, about twelve o'clock, His Majeſty arrived at the Queen's Houſe, from Windſor. His Majeſty was handed out of his Carriage by the Dukes of Glouceſter and Kent: The Princeſs of Wales, who had arrived a ſhort time before, had an interview with His Majeſty, in a ſhort time after, Mr. Phipps, the occuliſt, Dr. Heberdeen, and Mr. Dundaſs, of Richmond, viſited His Majeſty, and had a conſultation upon the ſtate of his eyes; and we underſtand the report to be, that they were better. We have the pleaſure to ſay, His Majeſty enjoys moſt excellent health.

A ſhort time before three o'clock His Majeſty held a Privy Council, which was attended by the Lord Chancellor, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Duke of Montroſe, Marquis of Hertford; Earls Winchelſea, Camden, Chatham, Weſtmorland; Viſcounts Sidmouth and Caſtlereagh; Lords Hawkeſbury and Harrowby, Sir Charles Morgan, and Mr. Pitt. Sir Stephen Cotterell and Mr. Faulkener attended the Council as Clerks.

Siege and Capitulation

OF THE DIAMOND ROCK, MARTINIQUE.

BRIDGTOWN, JUNE 5.

ON the evening of the 26th ultimo, two ſhips of the line, a frigate, and a ſchooner, with eleven gun boats in tow, ſailed from Fort Royal, Martinique, and ſtood to the ſouthward, under eaſy ſail; and on the 30th, beat to windward, and ſtretched into St. Ann's Bay where they hove to, and remained during the night. The next morning having caſt their boats off, the whole ſquadron bore down for the Diamond—the Berwick, of 74 guns, taking the lead. In half an hour they were cloſe down under the Rock, when Captain Morrice, (commander of the Diamond,) finding the lower works commanded by the enemy's ſhips, and a great number of troops embarked in the boats for landing, judged it proper not to remain in them, and a quarter before 8 retreated with his men to the upper lodgments. Soon after this the Berwick commenced the attack upon the works, and in a few minutes the whole ſquadron opened their fire, and the boats landed their troops under cover of it. The object was immediately to have taken their boats off after their landing, but they were fruſtrated in this, by the galling and heavy fire from the ſeamen above, which, obliged the enemy to quit them, leaving only three men in charge of each boat; the whole of theſe were killed, and three of their boats went adrift, two of which were ſtranded on the ſhore of Martinique, and the other drifted to ſea. The enemy, however, kept up a conſtant bombardment during the whole day, which the brave garriſon returned with a ſpirited and well directed fire of muſketry, which obliged the troops to take cover under the lodgments below. At the approach of night, Capt. Morrice placed his whole force, ſo as to prevent the enemy from getting poſſeſſion of the ladders during the darkneſs; and alſo checked their receiving ſome ſupplies, and this day they were much diſtreſſed for want of water; by an unequalled perſeverance and boldneſs, a party however went down in the face of the enemy, and under cover of twenty two men, ſucceeded in getting four breakers of water. The following night the garriſon continued to barrals the enemy, and at day light next morning, the 2d June, their fire upſet a boat which was attempting to land ſupplies for them, and killed the officer commanding; a very galling fire was however kept up by them from about 500 men who had, during the night, got under the Rock; and Capt. Morrice having in the afternoon examined into the ſtate of his ammunition, and finding it inſufficient to laſt even until night his people being exhauſted, without one drop of water, and not the leaſt proſpect of ſuccour, he deemed it a duty which he owed to his brave and gallant comrades, whoſe privations and ſufferings he had partaken of, not to ſacrifice their lives; and he ſent down, at four o'clock in the afternoon, a Lieutenant with a flag of truce to obtain terms of capitulation when the following were entered into:

1ſt. That the garriſon, with all its works, ſhall be delivered up entire.

2d. That the garriſon ſhall be allowed to march with their arms to the Queen's battery, with drums beating, and colors flying, and there lay down their arms.

3d. That all private property ſhall be ſecured to the officers and men.

4th. That the garriſon ſhall be ſent to Barbadoes, at the expenſe of the French nation, but not to ſerve until regularly exchanged.

5th. That the garriſon is capable of holding out a few days longer, and two hours given for an anſwer, when hoſtilities ſhall be recommenced.

When the officer went down with the capitulation, he found the enemy's troops to the amount of 1500 men, under arms, and La Fine ſchooner had juſt arrived with ſixty ſcaling ladders from Fort Royal, it being their intention to attempt the aſcent that night.

On the morning of the 3d, the garriſon marched from the ſummit of the Rock with the honours of war, and were embarked (the whole amounting only to 108, including Officers) on board the Berwick; and at two o'clock in the morning of the 4th, they were ſent on board La Fine, which ſailed direct for this iſland, where ſhe arrived on Thurſday laſt.

The unparalleled merit of Captain Morrice and his little band, cannot be better appreciated than by viewing the force which acted againſt them, and which they ſo gallantly oppoſed; it conſiſted of Le Phaeton 74, Commodore Caſſemont, Le Berwick 74—Le Sirene 40—and Le Argus brig 6—La Fine ſchooner, and eleven gun-boats, each mounting three heavy pieces of ordnance.

The loſs on the part of the enemy (according to their own admiſſion) amounted to 30 killed, and 40 wounded, on the Rock, beſides thoſe on ſhipboard.

ALBANY, Auguſt 15.

FIRE!—An alarming fire, at Woolwich arſenal (Eng.) on the 29th June, deſtroyed two long ranges of wooden ſtore houſes; and threatened the deſtruction of the Magazine, in which was between 2 and 300,000 barrels of powder. By great exertion it was ſaved; and the alarm excited by the danger ſubſided.

BOSTON, Auguſt. 20.

Auguſt 3, in lat. 22. long. 64. 45, was ſpoke an Engliſh fleet of merchantmen conſiſting of 370 ſail, for Europe, under convoy of 9 ſail of the line.

September 9.

Combined Fleets at Vigo.—Capt. Elwell, arrived here laſt evening, in 35 days from Liſbon, informs, that the day previous to his leaving, (Aug. 4) poſitive accounts were received at that place, that the French and Spaniſh combined fleets arrived at Vigo, a few days previous, ſafe and ſound!—An Engliſh frigate was lying at Liſbon at the time the news was received entirely ſtripped, but in eight hours ſhe was completely rigged and filled over the bar, to give the information to Lord Nelſon, who, but a few days before was at Tetuan Bay.

A letter received at New York, from a Mr. Hartford, of Darien, (Georgia) no date, ſays, "Intelligence has reached this place, that an Engliſh fleet of 9 ſail of the line, and frigates, &c. are at anchor in the mouth of St. John's river, and that their object is the conqueſt of Florida. The Spaniards are extremely alarmed, and all is buſtle and confuſion.

A letter from a gentleman in St. Mary's to his correſpondent at Savannah, dated the 6th Auguſt, ſays. "That four days ſince, 13 ſail of the line were ſeen off here, but of what nation not known."

The two foregoing paragraphs requite further confirmation.

HALIFAX, Aug. 8.

We are extremely ſorry to learn that his Majeſty's packets Queen Charlotte, Capt. Mudge, and Lord Charles Spencer, Capt. Cottelworth, were both captured on their paſſage from this place to Falmouth.

HALIFAX, Sept. 7.

By the Indus, 101 days from the Iſle of France, we learn, that H. M. S. Caroline of 38 guns, captured, on the 2d of April laſt, in the Bay of Bengal, after a very ſevere action, the French frigate La Peche, of 44 guns, commanded by Mons. Begaret.

The French Admiral Linois, with the Marengo of 80 guns, and the other ſhips of his ſquadron, was at the Iſle of France, when the Indus left it; cloſely watched by a Britiſh 74 gun ſhip, and two frigates.

QUEBEC, September 16,

The following copy of a written paper, brought from Halifax by Capt. Ferguſon, of the ſchooner Jane, was publiſhed in hand bills at this Office ſhortly after the arrival of that veſſel on Friday morning:

"HALIFAX, Auguſt 27th.

"News from England."—"A brig arrived in this port, at eight o'clock this afternoon, in twenty-nine days from Liverpool, informs that Lord Gardner had an engagement with the French fleet off Breſt; and had taken ſix ſhips of the line and ſunk three of the ſame."

"He likewiſe informs that the Cambrian frigate had a deſperate engagement with a French ſhip, the Ville de Paris, of 44 guns, off ſome of the Weſt-India Iſlands. She had diſpatches for the Combined fleet in the Weſt Indies; the Ville de Paris and diſpatches taken by the Cambrian, after a ſevere engagement with the loſs of a number of men on both ſides."

Since that time we have received no further information on the ſubject. We find however, that the paper was not handed to Capt. Ferguſon by an officer of the Centeur, as we then ſtated; but is the ſubſtance of the information Capt. Ferguſon received from an officer on board that ſhip; and it was written immediately after his return to his own veſſel.

There are apparent inaccuracies in this paper, which muſt have ſtruck every perſon of common information; but as the veſſel it ſtates to have arrived from Liverpool, muſt have brought later news than we have by any other conveyance, it is ſtill poſſible that the action alluded to may have taken place; and the ſailing of the enemy's ſquadron from Rochefort which according to the report under the Boſton head, muſt have taken place about the 22d July, renders it more probable, as we may conclude from thence that there was a general movement of the enemy's ſquadron about that time. We however conſider that the exiſtence of a report exactly ſimilar at New York, as early as the 14th Auguſt, has all along had the effect, with us, of diminiſhing our confidence in that under conſideration.

It will be ſeen, by the extracts in this days Gazette under the Boſton head, that hopes may be entertained of lord Nelſon's having come up with the enemies fleet from the Weſt-Indies. His Lordſhip had ſailed a-in to the weſtward from Gibraltar in purſuit of them before the 24th July; and they were ſeen on the twenty third of that month, nine degrees to the weſt of Ferrol; a diſtance, which would admit of the gallant Admiral being off that place about the ſame time as the enemy. The report of their having returned to the Weſt Indies, does not deſerve any credit. Some of the enemy's ſhips eſcaped out of the Ports of France or Spain may however have lately arrived in that quarter.

September, 28.

Capt. Doucett, who left Halifax the 7th inſtant, we are ſorry to ſay, brings no confirmation of Capt. Ferguſon's intelligence reſpecting the defeat of the Breſt fleet, he ſays he never heard a ſyllable on the ſubject. He ſailed 10 days after Capt. Ferguſon. The Halifax papers are totally ſilent on the ſubject, nor do any letters make mention of it.

SAWNEY AND BONAPARTE.

A DIALOGUE.

Sawney.—So Bonaparte, you ſay you're coming to Scotland.

Bon.—Yes; I mean to come to give you Liberty.

Sawney.—Liberty! I'll an ounce o' liberty is in France, an' if you are to gi'e it to us, you maun ſteal it frae ſome o'they body. The pooreſt man in Scotland has mair liberty than the beſt gentleman in France, if there be ony gentleman there now.

Bon.—Frenchmen are all Free.

Sawney.—If ye had nae told me that I wad na ha'e kent it. I tho' you could ſend them awa' in ſhip loads whan ye pleas'd.

Bon.—Poh, poh! that was a parcel of raſcals.

Sawney.—O but folk ſhou'd na be cal'd raſcals, till they'er pro'd raſcals. If ye come here, you may ca' us raſcals next, and then ſhip us off, and ſay Fare ye well Sawney.

Bon.—No, no, there is no treachery with Frenchmen, and I never break my word.

Sawney.—See I thought, but I read in the news about a man they ca'd Touſſaint, that came frae the Indies; The News ſaid the French were to be very good to him, and aſter a' he died in a Priſon.

Bon.—O Sawney you ſhould not believe your newſpapers; I'll ſend you the Moniteur—that's the paper you may believe. The man you ſpoke of was a raſcal, and wanted to take the Government of St. Domingo.

Sawney.—An' do you ca' him a raſcal for that: Faith I think if you took ane Government, he was right to take anither; and if he was a raſcal for that, faith I think there's a pair o'ye.—You'll excuſe me. (Here Sawney put his hand to his bonnet.)

Bon.—Come, come, Sawney, no more on that subject; my wish is to make all mankind happy and free.

Sawney.—De'il speed me if I believe ye.—What hae ye done to the Hollanders? They say ye hae sent your soldiers to live on the folk for nothing. Wha wad put up wi' that.

Bon.—No, no, Sawney I have given them liberty, and my soldiers are taking care of them.

Sawney.—De'il take sic liberty. Do you ca' it liberty to hae soldiers in folks houses to live on them for nothing.

Bon.—O, but they would differ among themselves.

Sawney.—An' what's that to you. I hae differ'd wi' my wife at times, but we' agreed again, and if one body had middled between us, they wad hae gotten fkaith and scorn frae us baith; and if I was the Hollanders, I wad do the same to you.

Bon.—O Sawney, Sawney, you have wrong opinions.

Sawney—De'il be on me but I think its common sense. I ne'er liste to read my mouth among ither folks kail.

Bon.—That may be your opinion, Sawney, but still I am determined to be in Britain, and shall pay a visit to Scotland.

Sawney.—Since you're sae plain, I'se be plain too. If ever ye send a Soldier to Scotland, De'il a ane o' them will be alive eight days after.—D'ye think we're like a parcel of Italian fidlers, to be frighten'd wi' you an' your pack?

Bon.—I'll send over my Invincibles, they'll make you tremble.

Sawney.—Invincibles! What come o' them ye sent to Egypt?—By my faith lad, ye was right to set aff before the Highland Watch ga'ed there. Did you ever see a Highlander?

Bon.—I have heard of them; but what will they do? I will send thousands against them.

Sawney.—Aye, ye may send tens o' thoufands; but they'll mak their heads flee aff as taft as they'd behead fybies.

Bon.—Sawney, ye speak very bold but you know I have conquered many countries, and will do the same with you.

Sawney.—You conquer us! It's mare than a' the flaves in France cou'd do. There's no' a man in a' Scotland but would fight to the laft drap o' his blood for the Land o' Cakes; and I'm sure I'm right, when I say the same for England. We hae a King we love, and a country we love, an' you'll speak of hurting our King, and taking our Country! I wonder what hads me frea kicking you, Gang hame and do your waift; I hae nae mair patience to speak to you.

Bon.—Well, Sawney, I'll come.

Sawney.—Come if you dare!.

Exit Bonaparte—Sawney solus—continues muttering!!

THE ORACLE.

YORK:—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2.

On Friday last the following Address from the Grand Jury of the Home District, was presented to the Honorable Justice Thorpe:

TO THE HONORABLE

JUSTICE THORPE.

WE the Grand Jury of the Home District, beg leave to return you our sincere acknowledgements for the most excellent Charge you were so good as to give us on this our first appearance before you on the Bench; a Charge delivered with such complacency and dignity, has excited in us the most lively sentations of satisfaction and pleasing prepossessions.

The energy and clearness with which you laid open to us our duties, has created in us a zeal and fervent desire to fulfil them, and must forcibly impress the Country at large, with that submission which they owe to those laws which are their protection, and the aiding and assisting those to whom the execution thereof is entrusted.

In a new Country like this, rapidly progressing in population, in improvement and prosperity, a Country where all ranks of Society should harmoniously unite for general and individual comfort and security, it has been afflicting to us to be under the imperious necessity of presenting to you at our first meeting, an indictment for riot and an assault on the legal constituted Civil Authority; but, we fervently hope, the clear explication of the Law, and the tender caution which you so impressively addressed to the Country, will prevent any, through the plea of ignorance or bad advice, from committing future outrage. And from the firmness we have witnessed in you, we rejoice in the anticipation of tranquillity from the effects thereof; confident that the Sword of the Law, while it protects the peaceable subject, will execute its just vengeance upon the Disturbers of the Public Repose.

WM. JARVIS, Foreman, for himself and fellows.

York, 30th October, 1805.

To which his Honor was pleased to return the following answer:

GENTLEMEN,

IN the discharge of my duty, to receive this kind, and truly flattering mark of your approbation is highly grateful.

A young Country particularly calls for care and attention; the bad habits of infancy, are the miseries of age: but nurtured by your energy and zeal, we will advance to maturity, laden with the blessings of Constitution and of Commerce; the best testimony of your services, the rich reward of your exertions.

As we love Liberty, we must uphold the Law, for liberty consists in freedom from all restraint, except such as established law imposes for the good of the Community; therefore, when the restraints of the law are overthrown, anarchy reigns, until the people in the lassitude of contention, succumb to tyranny, feeling the worst of governments better than none.

Be assured we will convince the public, we labor only for their happiness; disorder shall blushingly retreat to the barbarism from whence it sprung, leaving the sword of justice to rust in the scabbard, while the polish of tranquil civilization, will illumine the Province.

We must toil together in the vineyard, we must train, we must prune, the People will gather the fruit.

I have the honor to be,
Gentlemen,
Your obliged & very humble Servant
ROBERT THORPE.

Lateft Intelligence.

PARIS, July 19.

A young man has lately been arrefted at Senfis, who has been traverfing the country ftark naked. He has declared that being the eternal Father he will not wear any cloath ng.

We learn by way of Hamburgh, that there has been fome difpute between the Courts of Copenhagen and London refpecting fome Danifh prizes; but tho' the Court interefted itfelf in the fate of the proprietors of thefe veffels, the anfwer of that of London has not been fatisfactory, and the coolnefs between the two Courts ftill exifts.

July 22.

"At the Palace of Milan, June 7th, year 13, Napoleon, Emperor of the French, decrees as follows:

Art. 1. "All privateers, the two thirds of whofe crews are not natives of England or fubjects of a power hoftile to France, and are Frenchmen, Genoefe or Neapolitans, &c. fhall be conidered as pirates.

Art. 2. "The officers fhall be fhot, and the other perfons compofing the crew fhall be condemned to the galleys.

Art. 3. The minifter of marine is charged with the execution of this decree, which fhall be printed, publicly affixed, tranflated into all European languages, and tranfmitted to all French Commiffaries of Commercial Relations.

"NAPOLEON."

LONDON, Auguft 14.

The combined fleet, during their flight from the Weft Indies, compelled every veffel they met with to ftand on their courfe, and detained it a day or fometimes longer, in order to prevent information of their track being given to Lord Nelfon.

It is aflerted upon the authority of private letters, that a treaty of alliance has actually been figned by the Courts of St. James, Vienna, St. Petersburgh, Stockholm, and Conftantinople, in which it is ftipulated that the Ruffian army in the Mediterranean, which is to be augmented to 80,000 men, is to be taken into the pay of Great Britain.

A large American fhip, detained by the Bonetta floop of war, on fufpicion of having French property on board, was brought into the Downs, and reported to Admiral Hallowav, who immediately ordered a detachment of men from his fhip to take charge of her till the was infpected, with orders that none of her hatches fhould be uncovered.—They had not been long on board when they obferved the mate go below with a lighted candle. He was inftantly followed by three feamen of the Utrecht, who detected him in the act of fetting fire to fome gunpowder, which was prevented only by the feamen knocking the candle out of his hand. On fearching farther, they found the veffel was laden with 16,000 barrels of gunpowder. Had the mate fucceeded in his purpofe, the mifchief both to the men of war and merchantmen in the Downs, would have been incalculable. The fellow has been fent in irons on board the flag fhip, and all enquiry will be immediately inftituted into the cauſe of this diabolical attempt.

Auguſt 25.

Letters from our fleet off Breſt, dated ſo late as Sunday laſt, ſtate, that there is not a doubt of the ſquadron ſeen by the Naiad, off Ushant, having been that which eſcaped from Rochefort during the abſence of Admiral Stirling. We are ſorry to add, that it is ſaid the enemy have been able to return to Rochefort.

Auguſt. 19.

The Gazette of Saturday contains an order of Council for the prorogation of Parliament from the 22d inſt. to the 17th of October.

Yeſterday intelligence was received at the Admiralty, by the Telegraphe, that the Victory, Lord Nelſon, had arrived at Spithead about eight o'clock in the morning. The ſhip in which he came home is placed under quarantine, but permiſſion was given to his Lordſhip to come on ſhore.

Some further accounts from the coaſts were received yeſterday by government, which ſeem ſtill more, it is ſaid, to ſtrengthen the belief that the attempt of inva ſion will ſpeedily be made. —The troops continue embarked on board the fleet in the Texel. Their number is about 25,000.—Admiral Ruſſel being reinforced with two more ſhips of the line, has ſailed from Yarmouth Roads to proceed again to the Texel. The Boulogne ſquadron, however has returned to the Downs, but it will, no doubt, ſoon again reſume its ſtation.

A letter received by a reſpectable German houſe in this city, ſtates, that the enemy have actually paſſed the Rhine, and ſeized a quantity of Engliſh goods.

Auguſt, 24.

We have this day to announce the ſailing of the combined fleet. This event reſts upon the authority of the following bulletin poſted yeſterday at Lloyd's.

"ADMIRALTY OFFICE, Auguſt 23.

"Diſpatches from Admiral Cornwallis, dated the 19th inſt. received this morning, incloſe a report from Capt. Brace, of his Majeſty's ſhip Iris, of his having on the 13th, in the evening, ſeen the combined fleet of the enemy ourſide of Ferrol harbour—conſiſting of twenty nine ſail of the line, five frigates and three brigs—ſteering about W. N. W. and beating to windward. Capt. Brace ſuppoſes, from the confuſion they were in, that they muſt have come out of the harbour that evening.

Our expectations have certainly been much diſappointed by the quickneſs of the enemy's movements, which have deprived us of the advantages we muſt have otherwiſe gained by the blockade of ſo conſiderable a force in Ferrol harbor, nor is there, we apprehend, any probability that Sir Robert Calder will be able to overtake the ſhips which have thus ſucceeded in putting to ſea. His force conſiſting of twenty ſail of the line, is, no doubt, adequate to obtain a ſplendid victory; but as he did not ſail for Ferrol until the 17th, and the enemy's fleet was ſeen on the 13th in the evening, we fear the chance of gaining upon them, with the ſtart of at leaſt three days in their favor, is not conſiderable. It is evident, from the number which left Ferrol, that the veſſels damaged in the action, of the 22d, remained in port to repair their loſſes, and were replaced by thoſe which had been ſo long blockaded by Sir Robert Calder.

The conjectures hazarded with reſpect to their deſtination, are ſo numerous as thoſe formerly thrown out when the combined fleet ſailed, after their junction with the Spaniſh Admiral Gravina. To intercept the homeward bound Eaſt India and China fleet, to raiſe the blockade of Breſt, and to reliefe the expedition in the Texel, to effect a decent in Ireland, and to proceed to the Mediterranean, have been all mentioned as their object, and each has its adherents and ſupporters. The laſt we ſtrongly ſuſpect to be the real deſtination of the enemy. A ſuperiority of force in the Mediterranean muſt be an event of the higheſt importance to the French government; and ſhould intelligence of the departure of Lord Nelſon from theſe ſeas, and of his return to England, have reached Admiral Villeneuve, that circumſtance alone may have decided him to repaſs the Straits. He could on his voyage ſtrengthen his fleet very materially. At Cadiz there muſt have been ſeveral ſhips of the line ready for ſea, the Carthegena ſquadron, which has been out of port two or three times, would immediately join him on his appearance off that harbor, and he could draw from Toulon a few veſſels more, ſo as to have under his command a total force of upwards of 40 ſail of the line.

Any arguments advanced upon the courſe of which the enemy was ſeen ſteering by Captain Brace, muſt be very inconcluſive,—As they were obſerved in ſome confuſion, apparently refulting from their having juſt come out of the harbor, the courſe which they fteered at that particular inſtant muſt have been a matter of little importance. It is alſo highly probable that, in order to clear the coaſt, and gain an offing, they held the courſe deſcribed by Captain Brace.

With regard to a conjecture which has been ſtarted, that the Combined fleet had not entered Ferrol up to the 13th; it will be ſufficient to remark that Captain Brace is too experienced and intelligent an officer, not to be capable of aſcertaining the difference between the arrival of a fleet off a port, and its ſailing out of it.

A rumour prevailed laſt night, and this morning, that the Combined fleet were ſeen on the 14th by the Naiad frigate, nearly in the ſame poſition in which they were left by the Iris the preceeding day.

Yeſterday the Funds experienced a very conſiderable riſe, and various reaſons were aſſigned for the ſudden and favorable change which took place in the market. It was known early in the morning that Mr. Elſworthy, one of his Majeſty's meſſengers, had arrived at Lord Mulgrave's Office, in Downing-ſtreet, from Peterſburgh, and it was generally underſtood that his diſpatches were of a moſt ſatisfactory nature. But, in addition to this fact, there was a report that his Majeſty's miniſters, in conſequence of pacific overtures from Bonaparte, had thought it adviſeable, in concert with the cabinets of Peterſburgh, and Vienna, to propoſe to the French government the aſſembling of a general congreſs, to take into conſideration the intereſts of the different ſtates of Europe.

Lord Nelſon attended yeſterday morning at the Admiralty, where he had a long conference with Lord Barham. A great concourſe of people crowded about the place, anxious to ſee him.

Auguſt, 26.

The diſpatches brought laſt Friday by Mr. Elſworth, the Meſſenger, are now underſtood to be of the higheſt importance. They are ſtated to contain not only the ratification of the treaty between this country and the Emperor Alexander, but an account of the demand of Auſtria of the latter for aſſiſtance, and the determination of the Court of Peterſburgh to march a conſiderable army into the hereditary dominions, to co-operate againſt France. It is even mentioned in private letters, that 60,000 Ruſſian troops had, on the 30th ult. commenced their march for Brunn. The ſame accounts add, that his Pruſſian Majeſty has declared his unalterable reſolution to adhere to his favorite ſyſtem of neutrality, and that Ruſſia and Auſtria are not without hopes of prevailing upon him ultimately to join their confederacy againſt Bonaparte.

Government was occupied the whole of laſt week and is ſtill employed in taking up a great number of tranſports. They are probably intended for the conveyance of Ruſſian troops to the Mediterranean, or to any other point where their ſervices may be required; and we learn that a Ruſſian ſquadron, of ten ſail of the line, is ſhortly expected to co-operate with us in the North Seas The tranſports are to rendezvous at the Nore.

The moſt active exertions are making to reinforce our grand fleet, and Admiral Cornwallis will ſhortly have thirty ſail of the line, under his command, exclufive of the twenty diſpatched with Sir Robert Calder. Admiral Stirling ſailed on Saturday in the Glory, of 98 guns, from Plymouth, and five more line of battle ſhips were nearly ready to ſail from Cawſand Bay. At Portſmouth, the Victory, of 100, Bellona, Saturn, Hero, and Repulſe, of 74 guns, will ſail in the courſe of a few days. We underſtand that Lord Nelſon will proceed to Plymouth to hoiſt his flag on board the San Joſef, of 112 guns. His Lordſhip is to reſume his command in the Mediterranean, with unlimited orders.

The following letter, with which we were this morning favored from an experienced and intelligent officer belonging to our ſquadron off Boulogne, contains ſeveral intereſting particulars worthy of notice. It is dated New Romney, Auguſt 24.

"We arrived laſt evening from off Boulogne, where every thing remained ſtatu quo, except that about thirty of the enemy's veſſels under French colors formed a junction with the Boulogne flotilla on the 21ſt inſtant, from the eaſtward. Several neutrals which we have ſpoken corroborate each other in the report that eight line of battle ſhips are ready for ſea in the Texel, and 100 tranſports, with about 2000 cavalry already embarked. About 20,00 troops are alſo ready near Amſterdam and its vicinity. I really think a fleet ere a month is expired, will come up the Channel to give us a little glory, when, probably, the craft in Boulogne will attempt an invaſion. There are two or three difficulties however, that this attempt of theirs will moſt evidently have to contend with, be their attempt made when it may, to ſurmount which is not, thank God, exactly at their command. In the firſt place we have aſcertained that, with all their invention and cunning, they cannot bring out more than 900 veſſels from three harbors at Boulogne, at one tide, 300 from each; and there only at a ſpring tide. This is not one third of their number, and will be open to the attack of our ſquadron from the moment the ſecond diviſion of their flotilla begins to move out. Secondly—The tides are ſo various in the channel ſetting ſuch different ways, that it is impoſſible they can keep together; the attempt of keeping together will be the deſtruction of many of them; add to this the impoſſibility of their Landing on this ſhore the ſame tide. They muſt, therefore, in waiting the opportunity of landing, without a ſuperior naval force to protect them, run the riſk of total deſtruction ere they reach the Britiſh ſhores.

"I have been thus particular to give ſatisfaction to the numerous enquiries of our friends, and to ſhew you that every exertion and attention on the part of Government is exerted againſt the worſt conſequences. I aſſure you, that the ſquadron on this important poſt amounts to not leſs than ſeventy veſſels of war, of diffirent deſcriptions."

On Saturday the letters brought by the Gottenburgh Mail on Friday were delivered from the Poſt Office. The accounts of the defeat of the combined fleet had excited the moſt lively joy throughout Sweden. A Ruſſian corps, the force of which is variouſly ſtated, was, it is ſaid on the 30th July, on its march towards Auſtrian Poland.

INDIA INTELLIGENCE.

Auguſt. 18.

Official accounts of the progreſs of the war in India have been received to the 9th March, by the Belle packet. The ſubſtance of them is as follows:—Gen. Lake, under date Jan. 12, before Bhurtpore, ſtates that having made a breach, he attempted to ſtorm the place, but found the ditch ſo broad and deep, as to prevent his progreſs. His loſs on that occaſion was—Total, 2 Captains, 2 Captain Lieutenant, 15 Lieutenants, 87 Serjeants, 24 Corporals, 2 Drummers, and 233 Privates.—Natives, 6 Subadars, 5 Jemadars, 15 Havadars, 30 Naicks, 6 Drummers, 200 Sepoys, 3 Eheaſtees, 1 Tindal, 13 Laſcars, and 6 Bildars.

A letter of the 22d ſtates, that the enemy's cavalry having attacked a convoy of proviſions for the camp, about 5 cos from it, Capt. Walſh made a moſt gallant defence, until C. I. Don arrived with a reinforcement, when he attacked and totally routed the enemy, taking 40 ſtand of colours and 4 guns, with all their ſtores, &c.—Capt. Cordo of the 13th N. I. and Cornet Erſkine of the 1ſt N. C. were the only Officers wounded.—We had 2 privates killed and 20 wounded.

Gen. Lake, on the 20 Feb. made a 4th aſſault on Bhurtpore, and was again repulſed, owing again to the depth of water in the ditch—Our force was divided into three parties; one under Capt. Grant, ſucceeded in the ſervice aſſigned to it, and captured eleven of the enemy's guns. Another under Lt. Col. Don, which was to mount the breach, but unable to paſs the ditch, made a moſt gallant but ineffectual attempt to aſcend a high and ſteep baſtion; while the third party, under Lt. Col. Taylor, was from the miſtake of its guids, early expoſed to a deſtructive fire, and compelled to retreat.

On the 21ſt Feb. Gen. Lake made another aſſault with the whole of his European force, under the command of the Hon. Brig. Gen. Monſon.—Our troops commenced the attack with the utmoſt gallantry, and perſevered in it for a conſiderable length of time, with the moſt determined bravery, but their utmoſt exertions were not ſufficient to enable them to gain the top of the breach. The baſtion which was the point of attack was extremely ſteep, the reſiſtance oppoſed to them was vigorous, and as our men could only mount by ſmall parties, at a time, the advantages were great on the ſide of the enemy.—Diſcharges of grape, logs of wood, and pots filled with combuſtible materials, immediately knocked down thoſe who were aſcending and the whole party, after being engaged in an obſtinate conteſt for two hours, and ſuffering very ſevere loſs were obliged to relinquiſh the attempt and retire to our trenches.

The aggregate of our loſs before Bhurtpore, on the 9th March the date of Lord Lake's laſt diſpatches, compriſed in Killed and wounded, 1 Lieut. Col. 2 Majors, 20 Captains, 1 Capt. Lieutenant 45 Lieutenants, 21 Adjutants, 1 Cornet, 2 Enſigns, 1 Quarter-Maſter, 173 Petty officers, and 782 privates European—294 Native officers, and 382 Sepoys, &c.—in all 1205 men.

Auguſt 27.

We ſtop the preſs to announce the following intelligence, which was received at Lloyd's at half paſt 2 o'clock.

"Admiralty Office, Aug. 27.

"A letter from Lord Cornwallis, dated 22d inſt. ſtates, that on the preceding evening the Breſt fleet, conſiſting of 21 ſail of line of battle ſhips and four frigates, appeared ourſide of the harbour. The Admiral anchored the fleet off the Black Rocks, and in the morning endeavoured to bring the enemy, who were under way, to action; but when their headmoſt ſhip was within gun ſhot, ſhe fired a broadſide, and tacked; the reſt doing the ſame, took up their anchorage between the points at the entrance of Breſt.

"An attempt was made to cut off the ſternmoſt ſhips, but a heavy fire of ſhot and ſhells from the batteries prevented it."

A diſſolution of Parliament was again very ſtrongly reported yeſterday among the beſt informed adherents of Adminiſtration.

Bonaparte reviewed a diviſion of the army of England in the vicinity of Boulogne on the 12th, and continued at that place the following day.

DOVER, Aug. 17.

The brig Robert, which put in here ſome days ſince to take the Lady of Jerome Bonaparte, formerly Miſs Patterſon, to America, ſailed this afternoon for Baltimore, it being the intention of that Lady to winter in England.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 17.

Came in, John Bulkely, Moore, from Philadelphia for Amſterdam, detained by the Hero privateer.

BOSTON, Oct. 7.

Our files of London papers, received by the Galen, are to Aug. 18, four days later than before received, from which we have been enabled to make a few extracts of ſome conſiderable intereſt.

It appears from theſe accounts, that the Engliſh Government, in the Eaſt Indies, have experienced a ſeries of ill ſucceſs in their warfare againſt the numerous and powerful friends of Holkar particularly in his ſtrong hold at Bhurpore. Terms of peace had been offered to the Britiſh; but refuſed, on any other principle than that of an unconditional ſurrender. To this, it is ſaid, the Rajah who had with him, in the fortreſs, his family and treaſure, had declared his determination of blowing up the whole place, ſhould they obtain a holding there. To this account, however, it is added, "That previous to the ſailing of the Packet, which brought the late diſpatches from India, a new negociation was underſtood to have been opened; that ſeveral communications had been interchanged, and it was ſuppoſed that ſome kind of treaty would at length be concluded. It is indeed reported, that the diſpatches to the Court of Directors contain intelligence either of the actual termination of the war in India, or that there was every probability of its being ſpeedily brought to a concluſion.

On the ſubject of an immediate coaliſion between Auſtria, Ruſſia and England, much ſpeculation is made. The laſteſt intelligence from the Continent, ſtates the increaſing activity of Ruſſia, who is aſſembling a large body of troops at Corfu for the purpoſe of making a deſcent upon Italy, under the protection of the Britiſh fleet in that quarter, though under the pretext of maintaining an independent and late neutrality. The eſtabliſhment of this formidable coalition, uniting all the northern powers except Pruſſia and Denmark, will bring againſt France a mighty force infinitely more powerful, vigorous, and better concerted, than any of the former aſſociations under that name.

It is correctly aſcertained, that the Grand Signor is augmenting and organizing his army; and that the moſt friendly intercourſe exiſts between his Government and the Miniſters of Ruſſia and England.

In addition to the general and uniform opinion, which prevails in all parts of Europe, that an alliance of almoſt all the Northern Powers has been eſtabliſhed againſt France, we are enabled to relate, on the authority of a private letter, received here from a high ſource of reſpectability to London, that "a ſubſidy of 3,500,0001. in ſpecie, was then packing up at the Bank, deſtined principally for the Continent; but to what power was not publicly known."

Letters from Madrid ſtate, that the moſt active preparations are going on in all the ports of Spain. At Cadiz new ſhips of the line, one of 136 guns were ready for ſea.

Sir Sidney Smith has within theſe few days had ſeveral interviews with the Board of Admiralty. He is to be immediately employed in an important command.

The Britiſh have 72 ſail of the line in Europe, in ſervice or ready for ſervice.

A late return of the French troops ſtates them at near 500,000.

Died in England, Auguſt 26, his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Gloucester, brother to the King, aged 62.

ANECDOTE.

A YOUNG gentleman who had quarrelled with a lady to whom he paid his addreſſes, was ſo imprudent as to threaten that he would publiſh the letters that ſhe had written him. "That," ſhe replied, "would be really vexatious; for though I need not be aſhamed of their contents, I certainly ought to be aſhamed of their direction!"

Repartee.—When a gentleman took off his hat to a Quaker—"Friend, ſaid he, ſhall I pull off my coat?"

HALIFAX, Aug. 24.

Accounts from the West Indies were received by the late arrivals to the 31st ult.—But they no longer engage that attention, or excite that anxiety, so lately experienced, when the combined fleets were known to be in those seas. The ports and islands of the enemy can now only boast a frigate or two, and a few picaroonning privateers; except, we believe, one ship of the line at Saint Domingo.

The Assembly of Dominica have voted 1000l. sterl. for a sword and a service of plate to Maj. Gen. Prevost, for his gallant defence of that island in Feb. last:—A monument to be erected in memory of Maj. Nunn, who fell on that occasion—A sword of 100 guineas value to Maj. O'Connell—300l. sterl. for a service of plate for the Mess of his Majesty's 46th regt.—With the thanks of the House to the Major General, and all the Officers and men at that time under his command.

EXTRACT.

[The following piece of pleasantry, communicated in a letter from the poet, Cowper, to his friend Joseph Hill, Esq. was designed as a satire upon those "common law judgements, which, while they paid the utmost respect to the letter of a statute, have departed widely from the spirit of it, and, being governed entirely by the point of law have left equity, reason, and common sense behind them at an infinite distance,"] Edit. Bal.

Nose, Plaintiff.—Eyes, Defendant.

BETWEEN Nose and Eyes a fad contest arose,
The Spectacles fet them unhappily wrong;
The point in difpute was, as all the world knows,
To which the faid Spectacles ought to belong.

So the Tongue was the lawyer, and argued the cauſe
With a great deal of ſkill, and a wig full of learning,
While chief Baron Ear, fat to balance the laws,
So fam'd for his talents at nicely diſcerning.

In behalf of the Nofe, it will quickly appear,
And your Lordſhip, he ſaid, will undoubtedly find
That the Note has had Spectacles always in wear,
Which amounts to poſſeſſion, time out of mind.

Then holding the Spectacles up to the Court,
Your Lordſhip obſerves they are made with a ſtraddle,
As wide as the ridge of the Nofe is, in ſhort,
Deſign'd to ſit cloſe to it, juſt like a ſaddle.

Again, would your Lordſhip a moment ſuppoſe,
('Tis a caſe that has happen'd, and may be again)
That the viſage or countenance had not a Nofe,
Pray who would, or who could, wear Spectacles then?

On the whole it appears, and my argument ſhows,
With a reaſoning the Court will never condemn,
That the Spectacles plainly were made for the Nofe,
And the Nofe was as plainly intended for them.

Then ſtitting his face as a Lawyer knows how,
He pleaded again in behalf of the Eyes;
But what were his arguments few people know,
For the Court did not think they were equally wiſe.

So his Lordſhip decreed, with a grave ſolemn tone,
Deciſive and clear, without one if or but,
That whenever the Nofe put his Spectacles on,
By day-light, or candle-light—Eyes ſhould be ſhut.

CHARITY.

OH Charity! our helpleſs natures pride,
Thou friend to him who knows no friend beſide:
If there in morning's breath, or the ſweet gale
That ſteals o'er the tir'd pilgrim of the vale,
Cheering with fragrance freſh his weary ſtraits,
Aught like the incenſe of thy holy flame?
Is ought in all the heavens that adorn
The azure heaven, or purple lights of morn;
Is aught ſo fair in evening's lingering gleam,
As from thine eye the meek and penſive beam,
That falls like ſadder moon-light on the hill,
And diſtant grove, when the wide world is ſtill?
There are the ample views, that, unconfin'd,
Stretch to the utmoſt walks of human kind;
There is the ſpirit that, with wideſt plan,
Brother to brother binds, and man to man.

Lateſt Intelligence.

SEMLIN, July 10.

The Chriſtian inſurgents of Servia, have now colours and drums. They have in the chapel of their camp a bell weighing 70lbs. which has greatly increaſed the fury of the Turks againſt them. They celebrate Divine Service publicly, and have affixed tin croſſes on the belfries of their churches. Chriſtian families are every day arriving from Bulgaria and Albania, and ſome other Turkiſh provinces, who bring with them all they have, and join the inſurgents of Servia. The latter are continually becoming more formidable, and already extend to the lines of the Morea, which muſt neceſſarily ſoon produce the commencement of hoſtilities. So violent is the hatred of the two nations to each other, that the Turks cut off the noſes and ears of all the inſurgents that fall into their hands; and the inſurgents, by way of reprizal, cut off the right hands of all the Turks they take.

NAPLES, Aug. 3.

On the 28th of July, about 4 o'clock in the evening, we experienced a moſt violent earthquake. Its effects have been more terrible and univerſal than any one ſince the great earthquake of Calabria. In this city nearly 800 houſes have been deſtroyed, more than 4 ſo in ſome degree injured, and 40 churches ſhaken to their foundations. The number of people that have periſhed in the capital are comparatively few; but in ſome of the interior towns, that were totally levelled with the ground, the inhabitants have periſhed with hardly an exception. The little village of Iſernia, in the territory of Meſſina, is nothing but a heap of ruins, under which more than 1500 ſouls were buried. At Campo-Baſſo, and at Bojano, in the ſame province, a great number of the inhabitants were killed. Avellino, Monteforchio, Benevento and Averſa, have alſo ſuffered much. At St. Marien de Capoue, (anciently Capua), a whole company of cavalry were killed by the falling of the barracks. The upper apartments of Caſerta, are demoliſhed, and this beautiful palace is ſo much injured that its foundations are ſuppoſed to be weakened.

Letters from Ponille and Calabria, mention, that the earthquake was but ſlightly felt in thoſe provinces.

From the 7th of this month, Naples has preſented a moſt ſingular as well as terrible aſpect. All the inhabitants have deſerted their houſes, paſſing their days and nights in the public places, and in the roads in the neighbourhood of the city.—They have been obliged to ſleep all this time in carriages, or in the open air upon the ground. The terror with which every body is inſpired, is perhaps unreaſonable: but it is ſo, nevertheleſs certain, that if there had been another ſhock, the whole city muſt have been deſtroyed. The populace have been reſtrained within due bounds, in the midſt of ſo much confuſion; and too much praiſe cannot be beſtowed on the Duke of Alopli, Superintendant General of the Police, who has prevented the Lazzeni from committing any exceſſes.

LONDON, Aug. 19.

Lord Nelson arrived yesterday at Portsmouth, and will probably reach town this evening or early to-morrow. The Victory and Superb came into port with him; the remainder of his squadron joined Admiral Cornwallis on Thursday last. We regret to say, that his Lordship is but in indifferent health. The disappointment in not falling in with the enemy has preyed upon his gallant and enthusiastic spirit; but we trust a few weeks of repose will restore him to the service of his country.

Aug. 22.—Letters from Petersburgh of the 14th ult. received by a respectable mercantile house in this city, say that all English and Russian ships were then in a state of requisition, both at Petersburgh and Riga. This measure, as far as it related to English ships, was sanctioned by the British Ambassador to the Court of Russia, the avowed object of it being to provide the necessary conveyance of the Imperial troops destined to take possession of Swedish Pomerania, and for any future operations that may be concerted.

A Russian army of 118,000 men is said to be assembled at Dubno, in readiness to pass the frontiers at a very short notice.—Dubno is situated within about 20 miles of Austrian Galicia, and it was from that place the Russians under Suwarrow, commenced their march and operations against France in 1799.

Sweden has accepted that confidential alliance, in which the British Government wished to engage her young and high-spirited Monarch.

Two schuyts arrived at Harwich on Monday evening from Holland. One of them came direct from Rotterdam, which place she left on Sunday. She brings intelligence that French troops continue to pour in daily to the Helder, and that the most active and vigorous preparations are still carrying on for the menaced invasion of this country. The disaffection which was said to pervade the Batavian soldiers, is stated to have manifested itself in a greater degree among the sailors, who have positively refused to embark in the expedition. All their merchantmen are put in requisition, which, with other compulsory measures adopted by the French have occasioned the greatest disgust throughout Holland. They report also, that the French Commander did not consider it either safe or politic to enforce obedience on the part of the Dutch seamen, preferring rather a system of moderation to that of terror, hoping thereby to prevent insurrection which by a recourse to violent procedures, he was apprehensive might be excited.

By advices from the Channel fleet, we learn that Admiral Cotton, properly reinforced, has been ordered off Ferrol.

Two more ships belonging to Lord Nelson's fleet, the Belleisle and the Conqueror, have come into Plymouth to refit.—Sir Charles Cotton has now with him 20 sail of the line.

We are happy to say, that Lord Nelson looks remarkably well, and is expected to join his fleet in a few days off the North coast of Ireland, the place of its destination.

Admiral Stirling having relinquished the blockade of Rochefort, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday, with the Glory and Warrior line of battle ships.

By letters received this day from the Channel fleet, it appears that on Wednesday last the French fleet left Brest, and anchored in Camaret Bay. Our inshore squadron communicated the fact by signal to Admiral Cornwallis, who immediately led in the fleet to attack them. As soon as his intention was discovered, the French fleet got under weigh and scampered back to Brest; but they did not get in until 3 of the ships were completely mauled by a raking fire from some of the British ships. They were three in number inferior to Admiral Cornwallis, but the latter, under the present critical situation of the country, determined to try whether they were in earnest.

The British frigate Phenix, of 36 guns, has captured the French frigate Didon, of 44 guns and 300 men, after a severe action of 3 hours, on the 10th inst. in lat. 43, long. 12. The Didon sailed from Ferrol with the combined fleet, and had 150 men killed & wounded. The Phenix has been spoken, with her prize in tow.

The Emperor Napoleon arrived at Boulogne on the 3d inst. and the following day reviewed the infantry, which were drawn upon the beach, and extended from Cape D'Aspret as far as Cape Grinnez. The number of troops exceeded 112,000, and his Majesty was on horseback from 10 in the morning until 7 in the evening.

After a short stay at Boulogne, Bonaparte will proceed to Helvoetsluys and the Holder, to inspect the formidable preparations making at both those places.

It was thought that Bonaparte, on his visit to Holland, contemplated to receive in that country, the same honours he obtained in Italy. Switzerland, it was also said, would share the same fate.

The French and Italian troops in Upper Italy, are estimated at 70,000.

Intelligence had reached England, that the whole of the French coast, from Morlaix to Boulogne, is lined with troops for the avowed purpose of invading England; that the cannon, camp equipage, ammunition, &c. provided for the grand expedition, is beyond all example; and that the soldiers speak of the invasion in strains of rapture and enthusiasm. Some letters from the continent state, that the expedition was to have taken place early in August, but a squadron of men of war which was expected from Rochefort or Brest (more probably the combined French and Spanish fleet had not arrived, but was momently looked for. No doubt appeared to be entertained, throughout the whole of the armed coast, which stretches from Brest to the Texel, but that the invasion of England would be attempted, and that too immediately.

Such thorough and effectual measures of defence have been adopted in England, that the public spirit, instead of fearing, appears to court the embrace of its invading enemy.

The combined French and Spanish squadron, after being joined by seven ships of the line, supposed to be the L'Orient fleet, entered Ferrol on the 8th or 9th of August, with a force of 37 sail of the line. Admiral Calder, with his fleet of nine sail, having been forced to quit the blockade of that port joined Admiral Cornwallis on the eleventh.

The escape of the combined fleets appears to have caused a great degree of dissatisfaction in England. The battle though a victorious one, seems to have been below the hopes of that nation: murmurs begin to arise, and to grow louder by repeating. It is in fact stated, that the Court of Admiralty have judged it necessary to be made known, that no investigation of the conduct of Admiral Calder would take place, agreeably to the provisionary articles of war.

A dissolution of parliament was expected to take place in the course of last month.

BOSTON, October 11.

Capt. Boynton, who arrived yesterday from Bristol, sailed from that place on the 1st of Sept. and collected papers to the 29th Aug. but gave them to the commander of a British sloop of war, which he fell in with a few days since. Lord Nelson had arrived in England. Having had a communication with Gibraltar, he was subject to the quarantine regulations; but on giving assurance that his ship's crew was in perfect health, he was permitted to land; and was received with acclamations by the populace, as well at the place of landing, as wherever he was known on his way to London, and in that city. He left nine sail of his fleet with Admiral Cornwallis off Brest, on the 15th Aug. A respectable fleet was to be placed under the command of Lord Nelson, as a disposable squadron, to proceed wherever it might be required.

The preparations to repel the French should the invasion be attempted, were continued.

Lord Castlereagh has failed as a candidate in the election in Down county, Ireland.

Since preparing the above we have been favored by a respected friend with Bristol papers to Aug. 24, inclosed to him, and received by the ship United States. Extracts follow:

Peace in India.—The London "Oracle and True Briton," of Aug. 17, states, in positive terms, that a Peace advantageous to the British Government has been concluded in India.

On the 25th of June last, the first stone of a new exchange was laid at St. Petersburgh, by the Emperor! On that occasion a grand entertainment was given to the Emperor by the Russian merchants. The hall where the dinner was served up was decorated with the flags of all the European nations—except France.

The Emperor of the French is desirous of arranging his new establishment on the grandest possible scale. France he considers as his dwelling house and family mansion house, and his numerous enlargement of territory in Germany and the Low Countries are so many enclosures from the public commons. Italy is to be his villa for occasional spring and summer visits, whence he enjoys a wide view towards Turkey and Egypt; in the last of which he purposes, whenever "he can call the land his own," to erect a prospecthouse, commanding the interesting distant object of Madrass and Calcutta, and the whole Hindostan country. Spain and Portugal, and Etruria and Naples, &c. &c. are merely his surrounding tenantry. He wants Sweden very much for an ice-house. He has not, as yet, turned his Imperial mind to the erection of a Mausoleum. When he comes to England, he will, most probably, find there his Tomb, in which he may repose gloriously, in the midst of his gallant companions in arms.

The French Journal des Debats now bears the name of Journal de l'Empire. Debates, indeed, have long ceased to be the order of the day in France.

An unparalleled instance of the power of a horse, when assisted by art, was shown near Croydon, on Wednesday, the 24th ult. The Surrey iron railway being completed and opened for the carriage of goods all the way from Wandsworth to Merstham, a bet was made between two gentlemen, that a common horse would draw thirty tons, for six miles along the road, and that he should draw this weight from a dead pull, as well as turn it round the occasional windings of the road. The above day was fixed on for the trial, and a number of gentlemen assembled near Merstham to see this extraordinary triumph of art. Twelve waggons loaded with stones, (each waggon weighing above three tons,) were chained together, and a horse, taken promiscuously from the timber cart of Mr. Harwood, was yoked into the team. He started from the Fox public house, and drew the immense chain of waggons, with apparent ease, to near the turnpike road at Croydon, a distance of six miles, in an hour and forty-five minutes, which is nearly at the rate of four miles an hour. In the course of this time he stopped four times, to shew that it was not by the impetus of the descent that the power was acquired—and after each stoppage he drew off the chain of waggons from a dead test. Having gained his wager, Mr. Banker, the gentleman who laid the bet, directed four more loaded waggons to be added to the cavalcade, with which the same horse again set off with undiminished power; and still further, to shew the effect of the railway in facilitating motion, he directed the attending workmen, about fifty in number, to mount on the waggons, and the horse proceeded without the least distress, and in truth, there appeared to be scarcely any limitation to the power of his draught.—After the trial the waggons were taken to the weighing machine, and it appeared that the whole weight was as follows:—

	tons. c. q.
12 waggons first loaded together weighed	38 4 2
4 ditto afterwards attached	15 0 0
Supposed weight of labourers	2 0 0
Total,	55 6 2

GREAT IRISH FAIR.

BALLINASLOE FAIR.

The Clerk of the Fair's return of sheep at the late sales was as follows:—78,728; unsold 5,510; total in the park 84,229. The horned cattle amounted to 21,612, which were all disposed of in one day. There were a few peculiar circumstances, usually attendant on this great cattle mart of Ballinasloe, not generally known. The Clancurry's park are very skilfully kept in their almost numberless detachments by several chiefs of shepherds, with sticks, all without the use of a single dog.

Women, of whatever rank, are prohibited admission into either fair of sheep or cattle, on account of a disastrous occurrence many years past (both kind and stock being then exhibited together in the park) from the appearance of the red cloaks, at which the bullocks became so indignant, as it were by mutual antipathy, that they broke down a great part of the park wall, and extending their front in this wild career carried away other fences before them, to the great damage of the country for miles, and very considerable loss to the several proprietors of cattle. The flocks of sheep also formed en masse, and followed their horned leaders. From that period, if an unfortunate female strays into the park, a cry we believe unknown in Arcadia of "whore, whore," refounds from every quarter, until the fair offender flees the field.

The shepherds and attendants ranged with the various flocks on this occasion, generally amount to from 12 to 1500 men. Nothing can exceed the regularity of their conduct during the business of the fair; but that being over they seem to claim, as by prescription an inspiring libation of their favourite whiskey, and its indispensable consequence a row: with these genial rites, the last fair was daily closed. The shepherds who assembled at all the several public houses through the fair street, in proportion as they became whiskified, began brandishing their sticks, impatient for the signal of affray, about five o'clock, one of the most distinguished of this tribe of Pan sallied forth into the middle of the street and exclaimed aloud, "Blood and thunder who dare fruize?—Snuze." A knight of the Irish fleece no less valorous, instantly threw himself in front of the challenger, and as loudly replied—"By J—sus, I am the lad to fruize in your teeth!" Upon this the street was filled with uplifted sticks, and at it they set, regardless of whom they were smitten: till having a good belly-full of their favourite row, they left off by a kind of general consent and retired to their respective liquor houses to heal their wounds with never failing whisky. Fortunately no accident occurred beyond the customary return of broken heads and bloody noses.

London Paper.

ORIGINAL.

At a late funeral in the town of V—, after the Parson had performed the religious ceremonies and taken such refreshment as the house afforded, he departed, with a number of his parishioners to go to a neighbouring house. The ground was covered with ice, upon which, one of the company slipping, fell upon his back. The Parson turned towards him, and, thinking to joke him observed, "the wicked always stand upon slippery places." "If that be the case replied the other, I am one of the righteous, for I have fallen down."

EXTRACTS.

A variety of valuable antiquities have been discovered in Tuesby. Among which are, the busts of Anthalie and Anacreon, a large statue of Ceres, with a coin of Lysimacus, and some remarkable pillars. A Greek MS. containing a commentary of Nicephorus on the ancients and the ancient Greek church, was discovered at the same time, another building has been dug out from the lava, which buried the city of Pompeii. In it have been found in good preservation, vases, coins and musical instruments, a beautiful brazen statue, representing Hercules killing the hind on Mount Menalus, and several paintings in fresco. At the town of Alefole, near Florence, a beautiful amphitheatre has been discovered, and the greatest part of it cleared from the rubbish. It is supposed that it would contain at least 30,000 persons.

MAMMOTH TREE.

This remarkable Tree stands in the town of Jefferson, Cayuga county, on the land of John Swartwout, Marshal of the district of New York. It measures 47 and an half feet in circumference, and contains an hollow in which at least 17 men can march and stand in a circle. This enormous production of nature is said to be button-wood, and is supposed to have been the habitation of Indians and hunters a number of years ago. Being at first a natural hollow, the inside is probably somewhat improved by art, having one side open as a door, the largeness of the hollow is astonishing, making quite a large and commodious apartment. What renders this tree the more singular is, that it is still green and thrifty, and may continue growing larger for a number of years to come.

"How can you, my Lord, prefer punch to wine?"—"Because, my dear, it is so much like matrimony—such a compound of opposite qualities." "Aye my Lord, I am the weak part, I suppose." "No, my dear, you are the fairer, with a little of the acid, and no small proportion of the spirit."

Caution with respect to the violent treatment of CATS.

In the Memoirs of the Academy of Turin, vol. 6th, is found a very interesting communication of Mr. Rolli, entitled, 'Observations, Reflections and Experiments on the Bite of enraged Animals.' One of the most important facts contained in it, is, that Cats may by ill treatment be rendered mad, and without having been themselves bitten, may, by their bite produce the most violent Hydrophobia. He relates the following instances:

A young man was bit by a Cat in the leg; he suffered acute pain, for some time; this ceased, and he became well. Every method of preventative for hydrophobia was used, cautery, caustic, alkalies, blisters, &c.—all in vain: the 49th day the symptoms appeared, and the patient died with his teeth fixed in a piece of iron. It is remarkable that the Cat had only been rendered furious by being confined in a room and tormented.

A Cow feeder having remarked a cat often coming to steal the milk in his dairy, lay in wait for it, and attacked it with a hatchet. There was a considerable contest, until at last, the cat unable to avoid the approaching blow, leaped at the man and seized his chin, which there was no possibility of detaching it but by cutting off its head. The patient was carried to the hospital, and all the preventatives of hydrophobia, as cautery, purging, bleeding and mercurial salivation, applied. On the 26th day the fatal symptoms made their appearance; he experienced much difficulty in swallowing water, but this he overcame with great fortitude; the difficulty increased, the wound became bad; the patient grew furious, endeavoured to bite every one that came near him, was bound in chains, and immediately broke them in pieces—leaped from his bed ran up and down the hospital, attempting to bite all he met, till reaching the outer door in order to escape, he was seized with a shivering and fell down dead.

On dissection the appearances in both these cases were precisely similar to those of Hydrophobia.

The dreadful lesson taught by the cases here stated should be carefully kept in mind by all who are, from their tempers and habits of life, much exposed to the temptation of the necessity of using harsh methods with the most common of our domestic animals.

The last post from Naples, brought the distressing tidings of a terrible earthquake which has destroyed a whole town in the neighbourhood of that city, and by which 2,000 persons were supposed to have perished; and that the signs of further shocks continued, so that the greatest consternation and alarm prevailed in Naples, and the inhabitants had crowded on board the shipping from an apprehension that that city would be involved in the destruction: and the vessels from the fame apprehension, had thought it prudent to haul off from the mole, and drop down into the bay, to be more safe from its effects.

LITERARY SELECTIONS.

The following curious account of a pretended Dauphin of France is extracted from the Edinburgh Review of Kotzebue's Travels to Paris.

Jean Marie Hervagault is the son of a taylor at St. Lo, of a prepossessing figure and very like Louis XVI in the features of his face. He has no education, but great address. He is supposed to be a natural son of the Duke de Valentinois. In September 1795, he left his father's house, wandered about the country as a person of family seduced by the revolution, and procured every where a favourable reception. He then went to Cherbourg, where he was taken up as a vagrant, and visited in jail, and was extricated by his father, who found him possessed of money and jewels to a considerable amount. He once more eloped and finally absconded, sometimes as son of the Prince of Wirtemberg, sometimes as heir of the Duke d'Uzes. At last he passed for a relation of Louis XVI, and the Emperor Joseph, assumed woman's clothes, and said he had been sent to fulfil his real grant parents in England. He gained universal credit with persons of distinction; but was again imprisoned in Bayeux. His father once more relieved him, and has third time he landed. He now obtained money from different persons of rank, as a rich but unfortunate branch of the Montmorency family by and carried on his negotiations at Messrs. only eight leagues from Paris. At Chalons he was once imprisoned; and here he assumed a mark of grandeur and mystery, gave significant hints, and soon it was whispered about that he was the Dauphin, son of Louis XVI, who had not died at the time supposed. The jailor was the first dupe, and gave him money. The whole inhabitants of any rank of consequence at Chalons were deceived, became confidents of the secret, and advanced large sums of money. He kept a sumptuous table in prison, and was allowed to see all company. The police examined him rigidly; when he declared himself the son of a taylor at Bocé; as it to deceive them, and was let out after a trifling confinement. He was again imprisoned for two years at Vitré; but forcibly supported by his adherents at Chalons; and, on his liberation, received by them in triumph, had public entertainments in honor of his birth, and walked into the town over flowers strewed at his feet. He then was dissuaded from the town by the police; but wherever he went, he found friends and adherents among the higher orders, ready to sacrifice their whole fortunes in his cause, and to follow him as his servants about the country. In this way he went from one chateau to another; and at all was received with the highest pomp and veneration.

Hewas once at Rheims, (says our author) twice at Vitry le Francois, and often at different country seats where balls, concerts, and feasts of every kind were given in honor of him. At Vitry he was splendidly and conveniently lodged at the house of Madame de Rambecour, whose husband closely followed all his footsteps, waited upon him with the most attentive zeal, and served him like a valet.—On St. Louis's day, a superb fete was prepared for him, it being the feast of the Saint whose name he bore. The ladies sung songs composed in honor of him. In the confidential circles which he frequented, they always called him Mon Prince! His portrait was handed about as that of the Dauphin, and it was reported, that the Pope himself had imprinted a mark on his leg to know him again by. Finally, a letter was handed about from a bishop. In which this deluded prelate writes in expressions of the profoundest respect for this young vagabond, and, by his examples, convinced many who were still wavering in their belief. Already was a court formed round Louis XVII: he had immediately his favorites, and was going to nominate those who were to hold the great offices of his household. Many names of consequence were to be found among them. They all glowed with enthusiasm, and prepared to make the greatest sacrifices. Men of birth and rank deemed themselves fortunate in being able to perform the meanest drudgery of menial service for him. Misers turned spendthrifts, that they might have the honour of entertaining him. It was very natural, that such proceedings should not escape the eye of a vigilant police. Fouche was informed at Paris of all that was going on at Nitry; and a warrant put an end to the farce."

'But even when taken into custody, Hervagault conducted himself with a loftiness and dignity that struck all present with a kind of dubious awe. His most downcast confidants surrounded him with the most heartfelt reverence. One of them, highly moved, begged leave to embrace him; and the taylor's son negligently tendered his hand to kiss. The very first night of his incarceration, a most splendid feast was given at the prison, and he was most sumptuously served at all times.—The notary called him in prison Monseigneur, and was most graciously rewarded with the appellation of Mon petit page—Mon petit valet de chambre d'Antoine. Thus he acted his part dispassionately, and with an air of the utmost importance;—going to mass, a servant carried his prayerbook and cushion. He appointed a secretary, and made him sign in his name that of Louis Charles: At last the mayor was forced to debar the multitude from access, and to intercept the enormous supplies of wine and good cheer sent for his use.'—Vol. III. p. 50.

At last his offence was tried, and he was sentenced, in 1818, to be imprisoned four years at Orleans. He appeared to the court at Rheims; and, before the cause could be judged, a new actor appeared on the stage.—The aged bishop of V——, a man unusually venerated for his integrity, learning, and austerity of life, declared himself convinced that Hervagault was the real Dauphin; that he had found, on examining the surgeons who dissected the pretended Dauphin at the Temple, that, instead of a suppositious corple; came to h[illegible]s, and, by many interviews with him, was quite confirmed; sent large sums for his service; and give up every pursuit, even his holy functions, for his sake.—He aided all his interest at Paris to obtain a mitigation of his sentence—corresponded in ciphers with the leading men, to whom he meant to entrust the secret—and a plan was formed to marry Hervagault to a distant relation to the royal family, and to make levies of men for his service. The trial was then concluded, by confirming the original sentence in spite of the unanimous outcries of the populace. In prison he was again treated as before. No one deserted him. The bishop, in particular, formed a plan for his rescue on the road to Soissons, and being discovered, was arrested, but pardoned. He immediately, however, formed a new junto of partisans, and the government were obliged to send him off.

'In order (adds M. Kotzebue, p. 57.) to render it conceivable how so many persons of rank and knowledge should have suffered themselves to be made the dupes of this raw youngster, people ought themselves to have heard him tell his story. With great emotion, he would remember how Louis XVI, his father used to give him lessons in history and geography in the Temple. In the tone of the most ingenuous simplicity, he would talk of a little bitch called Fidele, of which Maria Antoinette his mother was very fond. The most minute details he described with infantile vivacity, nor did he forget that Simon his jailor used to wake him of nights, to convince him that he had not been carried off.'

Our author next adds his account of his adventures, which cannot fail to strike every one with admiration of this singular young man's genious for the finer species of imposture. It is too long for insertion; but the purpose of our abstract is answered. If we have shown the extent to which the best educated persons in France, not immediately connected with either the new or the old court, were worked upon; they continue still to believe in his being the real Dauphin.

'His narrative,' they say, 'bears the stamp of truth; and if the Dauphin has not been entirely sent out of the world, he will some time or other appear again, bring back the golden times into our fields, and promote to high honours his faithful adherents.' p. 74.

ON READING.

It is necessary not only to learn to read, but to love to read, while young; because a taste for reading is seldom acquired unless in early life. It usually springs more from habit than from nature; and from such a kind of habit too, as it is difficult and next to impossible to fix, after the season of youth is passed.

A love of books is a sort of acquired talent, that may be rendered a source of enjoyment, as well as a foundation for usefulness and respectability in society.—A reader of taste, who has a supply of proper books, can always have good company at hand. He is able to enjoy such vacant hours as are oppressive to others; and he has happily much fewer temptations to dissipation than usually befet persons, who, finding no pleasure in reading, know not how to pass away a leasure hour or a long evening, but in the bustle of a crowd. In short, a genuine lover of books has a peculiar source of innocent and rational enjoyment—an inlet to pleasure, of which other people have no conception.

Books are a wonderful solace, especially to old age. Life becomes a vacuity to old people who have no taste for reading. Bereft of most of the friends of their youth, and experiencing a destitution of enjoyment in many of the scenes which used to give them pleasure, they find that as the past has been vanity, the present is vexation of spirit. Their minds become forward and four, and they peevishly inquire, "What is the cause that the former times were better than these?" Their time for want of mental employment, hangs heavy upon them; and in the morning, they say, "when will it be evening"—in the evening, "when will it be morning."

Not to the virtuous old person who has a taste for books. While sensual desires fail, his relish for intellectual enjoyments increases.—His books, chiefly, are his company. They amuse, they sooth, they delight him; they light up a smile in his countenance, and aid in rendering him habitually contented and cheerful.

It is without all controversy, that, provided all other circumstances be equal, a bookish man has a greater sum of enjoyment than falls to the lot of one who has no taste for reading.—Along the journey of life, the former is daily plucking some fragrant flower, which the latter passed by unheeded; and especially when passing the vale of old age, the one finds therein many a diversified pleasing scene, while, to the other, the whole seems a dreary waste.

It is therefore important to inspire children with a love of books, not only for the sake of promoting their improvement in knowledge, and their usefulness in life, but also for the sake of multiplying their enjoyments.

I would not, however, advise any one to be a book worm. A person that should do nothing but read, would be a mere cypher in society. If one devotes to reading any part of the time which the evident calls of duty require for other purpoles, he is guilty of misspence of time.

It depends upon a great variety of circumstances, to determine how much time would be proper for every individual to spend in reading. Some persons are necessarily led to extensive reading from the nature of their callings; and others, though their business does not necessarily require so large an acquaintance with books, are enabled by their circumstances to turn a great portion of their time into this channel, without injuring their families or any of their social connections. Yet the great body of people are so much and so almost constantly engaged in the necessary business of their various occupations, that there is comparatively but little time left for books. There are very few, however, who might not, by early rising and other ways, so far redeem times as to afford an hour a day to reading: And even this, provided their books were well chofen) might, in the course of a considerable long life, raise them a valuable stock of knowledge as well as give them many rational pleasures.

Any one who would read to good purpole, muft think as well as read. The great advantage of reading is, that it affords materials for the mental exercise of the reader, and so enables him to unfold the faculties and expand the powers of his own mind. Whereas great readers who call into exercise no faculties of their minds, but their memories, are like great eaters who do not digeft their food: In the former instance there is brought on a mental, as in the latter, a corporal flatulence. A person, who merely reads and commits to memory, without employing the fubstance of what he reads, as tools (if may to fpeak) for his own mind to work with, might read to the age of Methuselah, and never be much the wiser. The heads of such readers resemble a lumber garret, ftuff'd full with useleis articles and with rubbish, all mixed and piled together in confusion.

FROM BELL'S WEEKLY MESSENGER.

A brief account of the Life and Literary Character of

ARTHUR MURPHY.

On Tuesday at Knightsbridge, in the 78th year of his age, died Arthur Murphy, a gentleman who had long held a diftinguished place in the literary world, as an author, and particularly as a dramatift, has fhone with no common luftre.—Mr. Murphy was the laft of that famous Literary Club, which was eftablished by Dr. Johnfon, at the Turk's Head, in the Strand, near fifty years ago; he was the school fellow, and friend to Burk through life, and intimately connected with that brilliant fociety of wits and writers, who upon the accefsion of his present Majefty, were in the zenith of their reputation. Mr. Murphy was of Irifh extraction, and educated at St. Omer's, where he diftinguifhed himself as an elegant Latin Scholar. In the year 1746 he came to England, and finding his circumftances not very affluent, he engaged as a clerk in a mercantile houfe; but diflliking the drudgery of book-keeping, he quitted his ftation, and took chambers in the Temple, where he commenced the ftudy of the law. Finding that his profeffion was not the perfect Cornucopia, or immediately crowned with honors and rewards, he applied himself to the prefs, and projected and began a periodical paper under, the title of The Gray's Inn Journal, at the time that Johnfon's Rambler was publifhing.—It was fuperficial and juvenile, and did not much fucceed; but produced for the author an acquaintance with Johnfon by a very fingular occurrence.

Murphy was one day in the country with his friend Foote, when fuddenly ftarting up after dinner, he faid that he muft leave him, in order to furnifh for his printer a number of the Gray's Inn Journal. Foote told him he might fhorten his labor, "for there is," faid he, "a very pretty Oriental tale in a French magazine, which I have in my pocket; fuppofe you tranflate it; you ate the firft and it will do your work no difcredit." Murphy gladly a quiefced, and the tranflation was difpatched to London and printed. But what was his furprize, upon his arrival in town, to find that this fame Oriental tale, tranflated from the French, had its original in a number of the Rambler—that he had been tranflating from a tranflation, and committing a piracy upon Johnfon. Nothing remained but an apology, to which, from the character of Johnfon, Murphy was fomewhat averfe; however, he called upon him, explained the circumftances of the miftake, and was received with the greateft good humour. This introduction laid the bafis of a friendfhip which fubfifted to the Doctor's death, and Murphy found means to acquire the obligation by introducing Johnfon, fome years after, to the family of the Thrales, to whom he was fo highly indebted for the comforts of the latter part of his life.

A few years elapfed, Murphy appeared as a writer for the ftage; his firft piece was The Apprentice, to which Garrick contributed an admirable prologue, which is now always fpoken before this latter piece was deservedly fucceeful; and has an originality and invention which never after appeared in any other of Murphy's works.

His Upholderer, built upon the number of the Tatler, was his next, which is likewife a valuable ftock piece. The year 1760 was remarkable for the appearance of three of the moft diftinguifhed dramatic works on the ftage; Colman's Jealous Wife and Murphy's Way to Keep Him were produced this year. The Way to Keep Him was very fucceeful, chiefly by the excellence of its moral and the purity of the dialogue, for the characters are not very ftrong or comprehenfive, and the wit and humour but thinly fcattered. From this period, he almoft annually contributed to the ftage.—His All in the Wrong, his Orphan of China, his Grecian Daughter, Know your own Mind, Citizen, Old Maid, &c. &c. appeared at diftant intervals. By the Grecian Daughter, his moft fuccefsful piece, he cleared upwards of a thoufand pounds.—It could not be omitted that Mr. Murphy once attempted the part of Othello on the ftage, which, Churchill's fevere lines upon him are well known:

> —Who but remembers—how all mufh,
> When in the Moor he chang'd his tooth to dark,
> When o'er the ftage he ftalk'd a thousand feet,
> And common fenfe ftood trembling at the door!

In one part of his life Murphy engaged as a public writer in defence of Lord North; he produced The Test and The Auditor, which, with the ufual uncertainty of exiftence common to political writings, have long gone to the tomb of the Capulets.

Upon his attempt to be called to the bar, Mr. Murphy was rejected by the focieties of the Temple and Gray's Inn, upon the plea that he had been upon the ftage; in Lincoln's Inn, however to the honor of the members, this illiberal objection was not fuffered to prevail, and Mr. Murphy was not only called to the bar, but was long a bencher of the fociety. As a lawyer he did not figure himself; he frequented the circuit, but obtained little bufinefs and yet lefs in the courts of Weftminfter.—Upon the great reftion of literary property, he raifed fome expectations by an able fpeech as counfel before parliament, but his career was obftructed by a variety of cauf[illegible] and he foon quitted the bar. Upon the renunciation of this profeffion he was appointed a commiffioner of bankrupts, and held the office till his death. Mr. Addington procured him a penfion of 200l. per annum, and the produce of his works contributed to the comforts of his old age.

Befides his dramatic pieces, Murphy obtained 600l. from the booksellers for an edition of Johnfon's works, with his life; and 400l. for the life of Fielding, and an edition of his works, with notes. His tranflation of Tacitus was his greateft production; the fcholars object to it as too paraphraftic, and in wanting the clofenefs and fimplicity of Gordon's tranflation; but it is deservedly prized by the general reader, and it is a good trade-book. This work was dedicated to Burke, a circumftance very honorable to Murphy, for he was told that the dedication was defired by a nobleman, who might have compenfated the favor in a very magnificent manner—before his death, Murphy completed an octavo edition of Tacitus.—His laft work was the life of Garrick, and affords ftrong proof of a decrepid genius: it contained little but trite relations, Theodore criticisms upon old plays, and reiterations of exhaufted anecdotes. It was much inferior to honeft Tom Davies' life of Garrick and notwithftanding the weight of Murphy's name, has not fuperceded it in the public opinion.

The general character of Murphy's genius was elegance and fuperficiality, the pilots of his plays, except the Apprentice, and Grecian Daughter, were all borrowed; he was a moft intrepid plagiarift and in fome refpects, a diftingenious one. His poetry, for he was a verfe maker, was terribly redolent; but his profe was polifhed and pure. He will not remain as an Englifh Claffic, though his pieces are likely to keep poffeffion of the ftage. He had been a gay and free liver in the early part of his life, and had no particular meafure of feriouf nefs at its clofe; but he was efteemed as an honeft, good man, and will be lamented by a large circle of his acquaintance.

From the London Monthly Magazine.

The caprice which has every period attended the adoption of furnames, abundantly accounts for the difficulty that feems to arife in reducing them to a fyftem. And no doubt, the remark will extend to Chriftian names.

In the Regifter of Spalding Priory, are feveral inftances of two fons of a man having one name, both of them living at the fame time. In one inftance they were both Williams; in another the name was Thomas; and, in a third cafe, there is an inftance of women's having three of his fons called Robert. It will alfo be recollected that the famous antiquary, John Leland, had a brother John who took care of him in his infancy.

At Moulton, one of the rectors belonging to Spalding Priory, the name of Conan, as a Chriftian one, was by no means uncommon. It was evidently introduced by the Earls of Bretagne, who had large property in the neighborhood.

In fome parts of Huntingdonfhire, in the middle age, Emecina was a common name; and at Bleechely, in Buckinghamfhire, thirty years ago, fcarcely any name was fo common among the women as Juliana.

In the early periods of Engliih hiftory, Mary, is a name that, I believe, occurs very feldom. The great veneration the bleffed Virgin was held in at that time of day, fufficiently accounts for its unfrequency; but Luther and Calvin, by degrading her, made the name more common.

In particular diftricts, the ruin of fafhion of a certain favorite name may be even yet obferved. John, however, is by far the moft common. But a late curate of St. Giles's, aflured me that he had chriftened no lefs than three children by the name of Bonaparte; and I have been juft told by a phyfician to one of our difpenfaries, that at the prefent moment, Rofina, Rofetta, and Euphemia, are all inhabitants of Drury lane.—The affectation of fine names by people of interior rank was well noticed by the late Mr. Bifhop, in the following epigram:

> Who wants a wife? I know three fifters gay,
> Not vulgar Margerys, Janes, or Joans are they;
> No—they have names enough to fill a tub—
> Miss Barbara Juliana Margaretta;
> Miss Leonora Caroline Jonetta;
> And Miss Joanna Seraphina—Grubb.

An uncommon action of a Dog.

At the feat of the late Earl of Litchfield (fays an author of reputation,) three miles from Blenheim, there is a portrait in the dining room of Sir Henry Lee, by Johnston, with that of a mastiff dog which saved his life. It seems a servant had formed the design of assassinating his master and robbing the house; but the night he had fixed on, the dog, which was never noticed by Sir Henery, for the first time followed him up stairs, got under his bed, and could not be got from thence by neither master nor man: in the dead of night, the same servant entered the room to execute his horrid design; but was instantly seized by the dog, and being secured confessed his intentions. These are ten quaint lines in the corner of the picture, which conclude thus:

But in my dog wherein I made no Boast,
I find more love than those I trusted most.

The officers belonging to the battalions who were employed on the recruiting ſervice, are ordered to join them immediately.

In this enumeration, we find materials for an expedition upon a very extenſive ſcale. Combining it with the breaking up of the camps at Boulogne, we may preſume that ſome great military enterprize are at hand. The preſumption, therefore is, that hoſtilities will immediately commence upon the Continent. In that event, the expedition now preparing in England, whatever be its immediate object, will operate as a powerful diverſion in favor of our Continental Allies. The invader will become the invaded, and all the boaſt and menace of the Corſican, will only recoil in diſgrace upon his own head. The particular enterprize in contemplation of the Engliſh government, we cannot be expected to know; nor, if knowing, to reveal.—There are many points between the Texel and the Gulph of Genoa, in which an Engliſh army may gather new laurels, and contribute its generous aid to the deliverance of Europe.

Nine ſail of the Eaſt India fleet have arrived ſafe. The remainder were parted with about a week ago, and are momently expected.

The Rochefort ſquadron returned to that port the firſt of September, after a ſhort cruize.

The King has been pleaſed to appoint the Duke of York, to be Colonel of the firſt repiment of Foot Guards, in the room of the Duke of Glouceſter deceaſed. The Duke of Cambridge, 5th ſon of his Majeſty, to be Colonel of the Coldſtream regiment of foot guards in the room of the Duke of York; and the Duke of Kent, 4 h ſon of his Majeſty, to be Field Marſhal of the forces.

It is reported that the Emperor of Germany in caſe of war, now inevitable, will take the field in perſon.—He will be accompanied by his brothers the Archduke Charles, and the Archduke John. The celebrated General Mack will alſo have an important command. Oppoſed to theſe will be the French Emperor in perſon, aſſiſted by Bernadotte, Angereaux, Maſſena, &c. but he will want a Moreau.

The viſit of Bonaparte to the coaſt was for the purpoſe of ſending off his troops towards Germany.

The language of Germany, tho' rather inconſiſtent with her conduct, is ſtill excuſable. She knows the policy of France; and though the ſtorm was inevitable, ſhe is not willing to commence hoſtilities until ſhe has a Ruſſian army at her elbow.

It is ſomewhat remarkable that the Paris papers, which a few days ſince chimed ſo muſically on the proſpects of peace, on the pacific diſpoſition of the Emperor of Germany, and the good underſtanding ſubſiſting between the two nations, ſhould all at once change their tone, and are now altogether warlike. Nothing is now heard but the din of warlike preparation, and the ſtudied exaggeration of all the accounts from Germany, as though there were a pretext wanting for ſome bold ſtroke which the Emperor Napoleon contemplates ſtriking.

Lord Nelſon's new appointment is, in ſome degree, unlimited; he is to act on emergencies according to the beſt of his judgment. He proceeds firſt to Cadiz, then to the Mediterranean over which his command extends. In certain operations he is to have the ſole diſpoſition & appointment of his favourite officers.

Several regiments are under orders for immediate embarkation; and veſſels are taken up to tranſport them to their deſtination:—Of them are the following, viz. King's Dragoon Guards, 4th dragoon guards; 4th, or Queen's own dragoons; 6th, or Enniſkillen dragoons; 7th, 10th, 18th, and 21ſt light dragoons; a detachment of the Royal Waggon Train; all the firſt battalions of the line, and a large party of artillery.

The cavalry will amount to 12,000 men.

CHARLESTON, October 14.

Yeſterday arrived the Britiſh ſloop of war Petrel, capt. Lamborge, and the American ſhip Two Friends, captain M'Neill, both from Kingſton, Jamaica. On Saturday, about one o'clock, off North Ediſto, the Petrel was engaged by the French privateer ſchooner, which has been cruizing off this port for ſome days paſt. The privateer ranalong-ſide, and attempted to board, when a broadſide from the Petrel was poured into her, which made a great havock among her crew.—The action laſted about twenty minutes, when the Frenchman wheered off, and ſet all ſail to eſcape.—The ſloup of war gave chaſe, which was continued for ſome hours, but by tacking and manoeuvering ſhe got the weather-gage of the ſhip and eſcaped. Lieutenant Maitland and one man, of the Petrel, were killed in the ſkirmiſh, and four men wounded—one of which ſuppoſed mortally. The remains of lieut. M. are now on board, When the privateer attempted to board, one Frenchman more forward than the reſt, ſprang into one of the port-holes, and is now a priſoner on board the Petrel.

The privateer is the Superb, capt. Dominique, the ſame that captured the brig Jane of Baltimore, a ſhort time ſince. They took the Petrel for a Guineaman, nor did they diſcover their miſtake till they had got along ſide.—When they found her to be a ſhip of war, one of the French officers attempted to haul down the privateer's colours but the Captain inſtantly blew out his brains. The privateer received much injury in the action, and her larboard bow beat in, and had a great number of her men killed and wounded.

From the Boſton Centinel of Oct. 25.

By ſeveral arrivals, yeſterday, we were favored with Dutch papers to the 1ſt, French papers to the 5th, London papers to the 8th, and Liverpool to the 9th Sept.—Several days later than before received. They contain the appearance at leaſt of highly intereſting intelligence.

WAR.—A long and bloody war was on the point of commencing between France, aſſiſted perhaps, by Pruſſia and Bivaria, on one ſide; and Ruſſia and Auſtria, backed by Great Britain and aided by Sweden, on the other. This event was placed beyond doubt.

The French army lately embodied near Boulogne; and the French and Dutch troops embarked in Holland, had actually debarked, and had marched towards the Rhine. A few diviſions were left at Boulogne; but every battalion had left the Texel. In every part of France, all the energy of war was in operation. The French funds had experienced a great fall.

Two Ruſſian armies were, it was confidently ſaid, on the march for Germany, and Auſtrian officers had actually been diſpatched to conduct them. The Ruſſian forces at Corfu were ready for immediate action.

The accounts from Auſtria are not explicit. One day they talk of peace and negociation; but on the next preſents us with whole columns of accounts of marching armies—new formed camps—the moſt efficient preparations for inſtant war; and the advance of vaſt bodies of veteran troops to the very frontiers of France and Italy.

There are reports that hoſtilities had commenced in Suabia, and that Venice had been taken by the French. Neither of them do we credit. Time had not been given the French to reach Suabia, or Venice. We doubt not, that theſe poſſeſſions of the Emperor of Germany will experience the firſt effects of the new war.

New expeditions were fitting out in England; and the expectation of invaſion was no more. No naval affair of conſequence, had taken place; and the blockades of Breſt and Cadiz were continued. The Engliſh had been extremely fortunate in the arrival of their colonial fleets.

The expedition at Malta, under Sir James Craig, was expected to ſail ſhortly, with 2000 of the garriſon; probably to join the Ruſſians at Corfu, to act againſt the French in Italy.

We have been pretty copious in our extracts from the papers; and have therefore abridged our uſual ſummary.

FROM FRANCE.—Capt. Blunt, arrived here yeſterday from Bourdeaux. Our correſpondent there, under the date of Sept. 5 ſays, "The laſt accounts from Boulogne ſtate, that the Emperor has detached one hundred thouſand men, towards the Rhine. A continental war ſeems unavoidable.

"The combined fleet of 34 men of war (including the Rochefort ſquadron) reached Cadiz in Auguſt.—It is preſumed they will enter the Mediterranean. Three ſail of the line from Toulon, and two or three from Genoa will join them. Sixty thouſand men are to be levied for the conſcription of the 14th year, which begins the 23d of Sept. next."

FROM HOLLAND.—Captain Parſons, from Amſterdam, confirms the intelligence of the debarkation of the French and Dutch troops in the Texel; and of their having marched towards Germany. All the talk was of a continental war.

A gentleman from Marblehead yeſterday, informs of the arrival there of ſchooner Hiram, Capt. Hooter, from Bilboa, 33 days; and that the Captain ſaw paſſed at Bilboa, an order forbidding Spanith privateers to moleſt American veſſels.

The Britiſh navy, in commiſſion, on the 1ſt September, was compoſed of 699 veſſels—of which 119 are of the line, 19 fifty gun ſhips, 140 frigates, and 412 ſloops.

In addition to our Foreign News, we extract the following from the Mercu-

Lateſt Intelligence.

PARIS, Aug. 29.

Letters from Naples, dated Aug. 2, eſtimate the damages in that city, by the late earthquake, at 84,600,000 francs. The following are extracted from returns made to the Government by commiſſioners.—In Iſernia the commotion was terrible, the ground opened and vomited forth flames, and 239 families were ſwallowed up.

In Caſtel Petroſo there periſhed 132 families,

Maſſino	84
Frefolone	393
St. Angelo in Coila	45
Barramilo	180
Cantilupo	142

Lorenzano and St. Angelo-in Lombardi, have been entirely deſtroyed.

A letter from Rome mentions the whole number of families which periſhed at 1750—that 11 villages were deſtroyed—and 4000 houſes at Naples more or leſs injured.

The Emperor has given Blanchard, the aeronaut, a penſion of twelve hundred livres.

LONDON, Auguſt 28.

The affair of the 22d, between Admiral Cornwallis, and the French fleet, was more ſerious than the Bulletin, publiſhed by Government, led us to ſuppoſe. The gallant Admiral himſelf, in the Ville de Paris, led the van, and had nearly cut off the French Rear Admiral. He was nobly ſupported by Sir R. Strachan, in the Caeſar, who requeſted permiſſion, by ſignal, to range next to him in the line. The other ſhips principaly engaged were, the Nomur, Captain, and Montague. The Captain had recently joined the fleet, and diſtinguiſhed herſelf very much. Her fire was the moſt tremendous ever witneſſed. She appeared an entire blaze. Part of a ſhell ſtruck Admiral Cornwallis upon the breaſt, but fortunately it did him no injury. The Caeſar had three men killed and ſeven wounded. The Ville de Paris and the Namur had ſeven wounded but none killed. They received ſeveral ſhot in their hulls and ſails. The French fleet only advanced juſt outſide of their batteries when the action commenced; yet, had they not tacked and ran back ſo ſoon, a general engagement muſt have enſued or ſeveral of them muſt have been taken. The enemy no doubt ſuffered ſeverely, as our fleet were enabled to take them. The Montague, captain Otway, followed cloſe in under their batteries, conſtantly exchanging ſhots with them.

The Didon frigate, which Capt. Baker ſo gallantly fought and defeated, is known to be one of the quickeſt ſailing veſſels in the French navy. It was the Didon that ſailed from L'Orient to Martinique in 26 days, with intelligence of Lord Nelſon's having paſſed the Straits, and on her return ſhe was diſpatched from Ferrol, on the day the combined fleets reached that port, in ſearch of freſh intelligence reſpecting the movements of our fleets. On this ſervice ſhe was met by the Phoenix and the ſharpneſs of the action that enſued, may be gathered from the numbers of her killed and wounded, which is ſtated at 160, while her antagoniſt had but 30. The Didon was moreover diſmaſted, and left in a moſt diſabled ſtate, which muſt retard the progreſs of the Phoenix that has her in tow. Indeed this circumſtance together with their being to near the combined ſquadrons, yeſterday gave riſe to ſome apprehenſions that both might fall into the hands of the enemy.

Death of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter.—It is with extreme concern we announce to the public this long expected event, which took place late on Sunday night. His Royal Highneſs has been laboring under a moſt ſevere indiſpoſition for a conſiderable time, which he has borne with exemplary patience and reſignation.—He was born November 24, 1743—married September 5, 1766, Maria, Counteſs Dowager Waldegrave, daughter of Sir Edward Walpole, K. B. by whom he has iſſue, Sophia-Matilda, born May 29, 1773, and William Frederic, born January 15, 1776. His Royal Highneſs was created Duke of Glouceſter on the 17th of November, 1764. He was of moſt unaffuming manners, amiable domeſtic character. His Royal highneſs was a liberal promoter of charitable and uſeful inſtitutions. He was the patron of the Free Maſons Charity, and of the Naval Aſylum, and Preſident of the London Hoſpital. He was his Majeſty's only remaining brother.—The Melancholy event of his diſſolution took place a few minutes before eleven o'clock, after ſeveral hours of excruciating pain. His Royal Highneſs receive the ſacrament in the morning. Her Royal Highneſs the Dutcheſs, Prince William and Princeſs Sophia, took their final leave of his highneſs after he had received the ſacrament. He was ſpeechleſs three hours before his death. His diſorder we underſtand was the ſtone.

LONDON, September 2.

STAR OFFICE.—We ſtop the preſs to announce the arrival of a ſecond expreſs at the Admiralty, with diſpatches ſtating that the Combined fleet, after arriving at Cadiz, had again put to ſea, following a northerly courſe. As we more than once had occaſion to notice, the courſe ſteered, on leaving ports, proves, nothing reſpecting the real deſtination of a fleet; it is in every caſe neceſſary, to gain an offing, and, beſides, a falſe courſe is often followed to deceive an adverſary, till darkneſs enables them to alter it with leſs chance of detection.

A Gottenburgh mail arrived this morning. It brings the following ſhort but important letter. If the latter part of it be correct, a ſerious miſunderſtanding muſt have taken place between the Courts of St. Peterſburgh and Berlin:

"St. Peterſburgh, Aug. 15.

"The greateſt warlike preparations are making in all parts of the Ruſſian Empire. A meſſenger left this city yeſterday for England, who it is reported, is the bearer of the treaty concluded between Ruſſia, Sweden and England. It is alſo ſaid that the Pruſſian miniſter will leave this capital to-day or to morrow. Mr. Nowzilzoff is not yet arrived."

Lord Kleth has returned from the Texel, in the Edger, of 74 guns. It is ſaid that there is leſs appearance than formerly of an intention on the part of the Dutch fleet to put to ſea.

The following is an exact copy of the orders iſſued by the gallant Admiral Cornwallis, at 11 o'clock on the evening preceding the late movement of the enemy in Breſt:

"MEMO.

"The Commander in Chief means to attack the enemy to-morrow morning, and will himſelf lead the line of battle in the Ville de Paris. Each ſhip is to attack or board that ſhip of the enemy which appears moſt advantageous for the general defeat of their fleet, and of bringing them out.

(Signed) "F. NUGENT.

"Ville de Paris, Aug. 21, 18—."

Admiralty Office, Sept. 3.

A letter has juſt been received from Capt. Burton, of the Goliah, dated Auguſt 18, informing of the capture, on the 16th. of La Torche, a French national corvette, of 18 guns, and 196 men, commanded by Capt. Duhen, having on board 52 of the late Blanche's crew. She was one of the ſquadron that deſtroyed the Blanche.

Diſpatches have been received from Adm. Collingwood, informing of the arrival of the combined fleet at Cadiz the 20th Aug. conſiſting of 28 ſail of the line. Sir Robert Calder and Admiral Cornwallis had been made acquainted with the fact.

Advices from Admiral Cornwallis, mention that a ſquadron of ten ſail of French ſhips (four of the line) had chaſed the Melampus frigate, on the 30th Aug. off the Penmarks. They are ſuppoſed to be the ſhips left at Vigo, and bound to L'Orient.

The homeward bound Jamaica fleet of 156 ſail, has arrived without the loſs of a ſingle ſhip, or at moſt but one.

Our letters from Falmouth ſtate that the homeward bound Eaſt India fleet were in ſight.

The Rochefort ſquadron it is ſaid, ſlipped into Breſt, when Cornwallis had hauled off to intercept the combined ſquadron.

Cowes, Sept. 3.

Arrived here this morning, the American ſhip Cordelia, Wall 800, from Alexandria, laden with tobacco. Sailed the American ſhip American, Taber, for Temmingen. The Lady Delaware tranſport, lately arrived here with recruits for the army depoſit, was taken poſſeſſion of at ſea, by about 50 of the recruits, but by the very reſolute and extraordinary exertions of the crew, were prevented, and the whole of them ſecured below until her arrival at this port. A General Court Martial is to be held on the mutineers this day.

LONDON, September 7.

Boulogne Army, &c.

The report of the breaking up of the camps at Boulogne, and of the diſmantling of the flotilla in that harbour, which we ſtated yeſterday, has obtained univerſal credit. For ſome time paſt, an inactivity has been obſerved to prevail in that quarter, that did not well accord with the menace of immediate invaſion; and a ſuſpicion began to prevail, that the attention of the enemy was diverted to ſome other object.

On Wedneſday all the flotilla were inſide the harbor; not one was outſide the pier—the heights were defended—not a tent nor a ſoldier was to be ſeen on them. Our Deal correſpondent adds, that the troops on board the flotilla were diſembarked on Tueſday and Wedneſday, and immediately began their march from the coaſt.

EXPEDITION.

We yeſterday ſtated that orders were received by the 5th, 42d, 43d, 52d, and 95th regiments, and the 4th and 6th, Inniſkillen dragoons, to prepare for embarkation for foreign ſervice. Similar orders from the war office were alſo received on Tueſday laſt at the head quarters in Canterbury, from the ſecretary at war, by the ſeveral undermentioned regiments:—King's Dragoon Guards; 4th Dragoon Guards; the Advertiser under the London head of Aug. 28.

A paper of this morning aſſerts in very poſitive terms, that the Britiſh army deſtined to act on the Continent, in conjunction with Auſtrian and Ruſſian forces, is to conſiſt of 50,000 effective men, men under the following commanders, &c.

Lieut. General His Royal Highneſs the Duke of Cumberland, Commander in Chief.

Lieut. General Sir James Pulteney to be ſecond in Command; and Major General His Royal Highneſs the Duke of Cambridge, to have the command of the Swediſh Army, with the German Auxiliaries to be thereunto attached.

We will be ſurprized indeed to find that ſuch an arrangement has taken place.

Private accounts from France ſtate that the French and Spaniſh fleets are to co-operate in the expedition againſt England; and that a ſquadron of five ſail of the line and four frigates, with ſeveral tranſports, are now ready for ſea at Toulon, having 10,000 troops on board. This force is ſuppoſed to be deſtined to attack the Ruſſians at Corfu.

There is a letter in the French papers dated, Madrid, which, if it be correct, ſhews that there has been an action in the Mediterranean between the Spaniſh fleet from Carthagena and a Britiſh ſquadron; probably the one commanded by Sir R. Bickerton, in which the former were defeated. It ſtates that information having been received by ſignal that ſome Engliſh ſhips were on the coaſt, Admiral Don Juan Martines ſailed with the fleet from Carthagena to intercept them; but after engaging them for ſome time, the fire of the Engliſh was ſo inceſſant, that the Spaniſh Admiral found it expedient to haul his wind, and return to port with all poſſible expedition.

Some time ago, a ſailor happened to be in a tavern in London, when the bells were ringing for church, aſked what it was for? For church anſwered the landlord. "I believe I'll go, replied the ſailor, but how muſt I behave?"—You muſt ſet down in the firſt vacant ſeat you ſee, and not ſpeak until it is out, or they will turn you out. He walked up the aiſle, leading to the pulpit, and ſeats himſelf along ſide of the clerk—who, as uſual, when the firſt part of ſervice was over, cried out amen. "Huſh! huſh! ſhipmate," whiſpered Jack, "or they'll turn us both out."

THE YOUNG ROSCIUS RIVALLED.

A few days ago we gave an account of a young Actreſs only ſeven years old, but half the age of the young Roſcius! who has lately appeared in Dublin, attracting crowded houſes, and aſtoniſhing the theatrical amateurs of that city. The Dublin Evening Poſt, received this morning, introduces the following lines upon her, by obſerving that they are written by "one of the beſt, as he is the moſt amiable of our modern Iriſh Poets, whoſe Perſian ſignature is known in every part of the empire, and whoſe lays have extended to the weſtern hemiſphere."

TO THE YOUNG PHENOMENON.

FAIR little form of Nature's moulding,
To charm all hearts, delight all eyes!
Aſhouth'd taſte, thy powers beholding,
Extols thy merits to the ſkies.

MELPOMENE, with ſolemn graces,
Thy intent mind has richly dreſt:
THALIA, too, mirth's magic traces
Upon thy countenance impreſt.

Could GARRICK from the grave ſurvey thee,
Treading, with fairy ſtep, the ſtage,
What joy he'd feel—what homage pay thee,
Thou little wonder of the age.

As rolling eyes extend thy figure,
May tarring health thy courſe attend—
Virtue and fame, and mental vigour,
Be thy companions to the end.

Lateſt Intelligence.

VIENNA, Aug. 20.

Our Sovereign has received a letter written with the French Emperor's own hand, which has occaſioned very important deliberations.

Auguſt, 24.

Our Court has received another Courier from Paris; and as the preparations for war are continued with redoubled activity ſince his arrival, it is concluded that the plan of mediation propoſed by our Court, is not accepted by the French Emperor.

A great number of Ruſſian troops, with a numerous artillery, have already marched through the Bukowina, to the ſouthern frontier of Poland.

LEIPSIC, Aug. 30.

Intelligence is received here, that two columns of Ruſſian troops, making together about 120,000 men, are actually arrived in Gallicia, and continuing their march to Moravia, and other Auſtrian provinces, to aſſiſt that power.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 1.

Things are aſſuming a more warlike appearance every day. The camps aſſembled at Minkenſdorf and in Bohemia, have now alſo received orders to break up and to join the camp at Linta nearer to the frontier, which will be exceeding ſtrong; they talk of 80 or 100,000 men.

PRUSSIA.

BERLIN Sept. 1.

The King of Pruſſia has given orders to eſtabliſh a ſufficient military force in Pomerania, to protect the frontier in that quarter from every attempt againſt his adopted ſyſtem of Neutrality.

There is much talk of a league of armed Neutrality, which, in the event of an actual rupture between France and Auſtria, will be eſtabliſhed between Pruſſia, Denmark, and ſome German Princes.

LONDON, Auguſt 28.

Confederacy againſt France.

Some private letters have within theſe few days been received from Paris, which ſtate, that ſcarcely a day has paſſed for ſome time back, in which a courier has not been diſpatched for Germany, or arrived from that country. Conferences have repeatly been held between Talleyrand and the Auſtrian, Pruſſian, and Bavarian Ambaſſadors. It is confidently ſaid, that the language of Talleyrand towards Count Cobentzel, approaches nearer to the tone and ſtyle formerly uſed in negociations between independent and civiliged ſtates. It is not, however, ſuppoſed that the Uſurper abſolutely fears a conteſt with Auſtria and Ruſſia excluſively, but that he has ſtrong reaſons for apprehending that the firſt cannon fired againſt the Emperor of Germany, will be the ſignal for the formation of a more extenſive confederation againſt France than in 1798.

Offers of the moſt tempting kind have, it is underſtood, been made to Pruſſia and Bavaria; but have not only been received with coldneſs, but declined with a firmneſs that was by no means expected; and hence it has been ſuppoſed, that Talleyrand has grounds for ſuſpecting that theſe States have actually entered into ſome ſecret engagements of a conditional nature, but which are certainly not very favorable to the view of France.—It is well known that great diſcontents prevail in Spain, as well as in Italy, Switzerland and Holland. But what is ſtill more alarming to the Uſurper, Moreau does not appear to be ſo entirely forgotten by the French armies as Bonaparte ſeemed to ſuppoſe; they pity the fall, and lament the diſgrace of a General whoſe military talents they revere; and they certainly begin to be weary of their preſent ſtate of incertitude; yet, notwithſtanding all theſe reaſons for reflection, if not for alarm, the Uſurper has 486,000 troops, according to the laſt quarterly report, completely armed and ready to march, and he perhaps would be ready to riſque a continental war. If he had commanders in whom he could abſolutely confide, and who poſſeſſed the confidence of the troops in general, but, except Jourdan and Bernadotte, whoſe Jacobinical fanaticiſm is well known, almoſt all his principal Generals are novi homines in the military annals of France, having, at the utmoſt, only headed diviſions and brigades.

Auguſt 29.

A report, to which much credit is attached, that Ruſſia, Auſtria and Sweden, have determined to demand an unequivocal declaration of his Pruſſian Majeſty of the part he means to take in the war, and in the event of his refuſing or of his adhering to his ſyſtem of neutrality, to march an army through his dominions, is unſupported by any ſatisfactory authority. It appears, on the contrary, to be directly oppoſite to every ſound principle of policy which ſhould regulate the conduct of the confederated powers. The marching an army by force through the Pruſſian territories would inevitably compel the cabinet of Berlin to join France with the whole of its ſtrength, while under all apparent circumſtances, the neutrality of Pruſſia muſt be a meaſure highly favorable to the ſucceſs of the intended operations of Bonaparte. It is not at all improbable that a formal explanation either has been, or will be ſhortly demanded of the King of Pruſſia; but we can diſcover no reaſon for thinking, ſhould he decline any explicit declaration, or communicate his reſolution to remain neutral, that therefore he will be forced to take part in the war. The threat itſelf would totally alienate Pruſſia from the common cauſe, if ſhe really wiſhes well to it, and the execution of it could only tend to render France, by the junction of the Pruſſian army, ſo very formidable, as to defy the greateſt poſſible efforts of the confederacy.

Lord Nelſon is immediately to reſume his command in the Mediterranean with increaſed powers. His Lordſhip's command is now to extend to Cadiz Bay.

Lord Gardner ſhortly returns to Ireland in the Topaze frigate, to reſume his command in that ſtation.

September 1.

It has been reported, that a neutral veſſel had arrived from Holland, with the intelligence that Auſtria had already declared war againſt France; and that a number of French troops who had been embarked in the Dutch ports, had, in conſequence of the hoſtile aſpect on the continent, been relanded, and marched to reinforce the army in Hanover. Though hoſtilities may be immediately expected, we are not inclined to believe that any certain account of their having commenced, or of war having been declared, has yet been received. Hoſtilities will, moſt likely, take place without any formal declaration of war.

It is a curious fact, that the natives of Owhyhee, where Capt. Cook loſt his life, have, ſince the æra of the well known voyage of Capt. Vancouver, made aſtoniſhing advances in dexterity and ſkill in our moſt uſeful European arts. Thamahama, the King, is another Peter the Great. Capt. Vancouver laid down the keel of his firſt veſſel in 1792. He is now maſter of more than twenty veſſels, ſome even copper bottomed, of different ſizes from 25 to 50 tons. He encourages Europeans to ſettle in the iſland provided they be induſtrious and acquainted with the arts which may be of uſe to him. He has a company of body guards, whom he makes to imitate the European diſcipline. He has a palace, built in the faſhion of Europe, of brick, with glaſs windows. His ſubjects have learned to make trading voyages as far as the northweſt coaſt of America. He has accumulated large ſtores of firearms, gun powder, hard ware, and cloth of different ſorts, more than he has occaſion to conſume. And it is a truth, however ſurpriſing it may appear, that he and his ſubjects already meditate a deſign of a trade with China, to be carried on in veſſels of their own conſtruction, navigated by their own people.—The population of Owhyhee, and the other Sandwich Iſles has increaſed conſiderably ſince they were firſt diſcovered. On the contrary, that of Otaheite has, in between 30 and 40 years, been diminiſhed, by diſſoluteneſs, idleneſs, child-murder, ſmall-pox and a certain odious diſorder, from 200,000 ſouls to little more than 5000!

Sept. 17.

Lord Nelſon ſailed on the 14th inſt. to join the fleet off Cadiz, which is to be augmented to 32 ſail. Calder, is to return to England.

Three frigates and two ſloops, intended for ſecret ſervice, have been ordered off Liſbon, under capt. Lobb.

A Copenhagen article of Aug. 27, ſtates, that a Ruſſian fleet of 13 ſhips, including 4 of the line, were coming down the Baltic, ſuppoſed to be deſtined for the Mediterranean.

A letter from an officer belonging to Admiral Ruſſell's fleet, off the Texel, dated Sept. 8, ſays—"The tranſports began on Saturday to diſembark their troops; they are now all on ſhore, and have marched into the interior for Nimeguen. Many of the tranſports have ſailed back for Amſterdam. Admiral De Winter has ſtruck his flag, and his ſhip's ſails are unbent; alſo the topſails of Admiral Rickert; ſo there is little probability of their making any attempt to come out."

The amount of property brought home on account of the E. I. Company, in the fleet juſt arrived, is nine million ſeven hundred thouſand pounds; the private property, trade and ſhips, about four million ſix hundred thouſand pounds; and the duty to Government, five million ſix hundred thouſand pounds.

The enumeration which we gave in our laſt of the regiments deſtined for foreign ſervice, was from official ſources; the number of regiments of Cavalry is 26; 8 of heavy Cavalry, and 18 of Dragoons; and 33 battalions of Infantry, containing a total force of 46,000 men. Conſiderable detachments of Engineers and Artillery are alſo under orders to embark in the expedition.

That part of the expedition which is to embark in the Downs, will embark this week. Embarkation orders have been already received by General Moore's brigade.

It is now ſaid, that Lord Cathcart will command the Cavalry, and Gen. Moore the Infantry, under one of the Royal Dukes, the Duke of York or the Duke of Kent.

The Britiſh frigate Lively, captain Hammond, for the capture of the four Spaniſh Frigates with Specie, has been awarded for her ſhare 200,000l. ſterling.

PIG HUNT.

MARGATE, (Eng.) July 31.

The long expected Pig Hunt took place yeſterday evening on the Strand, and afforded very high gratification to an immenſe concourſe of ſpectators. At ſix o'clock a flag was diſplayed on a ſtand erected for the occaſion, which quickly aſſembled the Swinith multitude, and crowded the pier, balconies, windows, and heights which command a view of the hunting ground, with our faſhionables. All was expectation and anxiety, till the waving of the flag communicated the grateful intelligence that the pig had arrived at Woods, and might be viewed for an hour. Huzza, buſtle, and confuſion immediately enſued. The ſtrong and the ſwift paid no regard to the feeble and ſlow, but made the beſt of their way in every direction. The gentlemen, however, were diſappointed, and the ladies only were admitted to take a peep at the little pig. Here it is neceſſary to obſerve, that this animal's pedigree can be traced from generations, even up to its illuſtrious anceſtors, ſent from the Eaſt Indies to Mr. Fox, when he did us the honor to live in our iſle. The breed is ſmall and ſlender, and particularly remarkable for having a tail ſtrait with a turn at its extremity. The curioſity of thoſe who wanted to get in was heightened by thoſe coming out, who conſtantly exclaimed, "O the ſweet pretty pig, what a little funny tail!" Eight o'clock at length arrived, when the multitude was formed into two ranks of conſiderable length and depth, with ſpace enough between them for twelve men, dreſſed in check ſhirts and white trowſers to purſue the pig, which was to be won by him who could hold the tail, well ſoaped, and give the animal a Somerſet caſt over his ſhoulder.

Acclamations of joy rent the air when the prize was led to the ground, and continued till it ſtarted, when the moſt boiſterous uproar commenced, and the ranks were broken. Such ſhouting, tumbling, crying and bawling, were never before ſeen or heard at Margate, but all to no effect, for the pig outſtripped the purſuers and made towards the water, as if on purpoſe to have hundreds rolling in the mud, and nearly ſuffocated by others, who could not help falling over them, ſo eager and ardent was the contention. Suddenly, however, it wheeled about, and darted through them, roſing and ſquaring at every effort to toſs it, but in vain, till a reſpectable blackſmith tried, and proved ſucceſsful.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

YORK, Aug. 24.

MRS. THORNTON'S MATCHES.

In conſequence of Mr. Bromford's declining to ride, Mrs. Thornton walked, or rather cantered, in a moſt excellent ſtyle, over the courſe, accompanied by Colonel Thornton, agreeable to the terms, of the Match, for four hundreds of Gotti Rotti, 20 ſtones, h. ft. and for 600 gs. pp. bet by Mrs. Thornton.

Afterwards commenced a match, in which the above lady was to ride two miles againſt Mr. Buckle, the Jockey, well known at Newmarket and other places of ſport, as a rider of the firſt celebrity. Mrs. Thornton appeared dreſſed for the conteſt, in a purple cap and waiſtcoat, nankeen coloured ſkirt, purple ſhoes, and embroidered ſtockings; ſhe was every way in health and ſpirits, and ſeemed eager for the deciſion of the match. Mr. Buckle was dreſſed in a blue cap, with blue bodied jacket and white ſleeves. Mrs. Thornton carried 9ſt. 6lb. and Mr. Buckle, 13ſt.—At half paſt three they ſtarted: Mrs. Thornton took the lead, which ſhe kept for ſome time; Mr. Buckle then put in trial his jockeyſhip, and paſſed the Lady, which he kept for only a few lengths, when Mrs. Thornton, by the moſt excellent, we may truly ſay—horſemanſhip—puſhed herſelf forwards, and came in a ſtyle far ſuperior to any thing of the kind we ever witneſſed, gaining her race by half a neck.

The manner of Mrs. Thornton's riding is certainly of the firſt deſcription; indeed her cloſe ſeat and perfect management of her horſe, her bold and ſteady jockeyſhip, amazed one of the moſt crouded courſes we have for a long time witneſſed; and on her winning, ſhe was hailed with the moſt reiterated ſhouts of congratulation.

Mrs. Thornton rode Louiſa, ſiſter to Kitt Devil, by Pegaſus, out of Nelly. Mr. Buckle rode Allegro, by Pegaſus, out of Allegranti's dam.

We have authority to ſtate, that if it was much againſt Mrs. Thornton's inclination to ride over the courſe for the match, had ſhe not been obliged to do ſo, agreeable to the conditions of the articles with Mr. Bromford.

A duel took place at Wurtzbourg, between the young Baron De Hart, Canon of the Cathedral, and a Bavarian Officer, of the name of Zandt, attended by very ſingular circumſtances. Young De Hart was playing at the Hotel of Bavaria with lieutenant Prince De Lowenſtein, lieutenat of the light horſe, Zandt, and M. Kleinemuetg, a native of Courland, and a ſtudent at law. In the midſt of the game Mr. De Hart reminded lieutenant Zandt that he owed him 13 crowns; the others anſwered, that he had diſcharged the debt. De Hart inſiſting in his aſſertion, Prince De Lowenſtein interfered, and ſaid, that a bullet, alone could terminate the difference. They agreed to fight, and the ſabre was choſen to decide the quarrel. The duel took place in the apartment of Prince Lowenſtein, who had provoked it.

The two adverſaries made 16 thruſts; Zandt received two ſlight wounds. The Prince exclaimed that it would be a ſhame for an officer to fight thus. They reſolved to continue the Combat, and, as the ſabres were blunted, they ſent for a cutler to renew the edge. In the interval, De Hart and Zandt aſſailed each other with ſo many invectives and opprobrious expreſſions, that it was clear that they muſt fight until one of them was killed. At the firſt thruſt Zandt was again wounded, but being animated by the Prince's voice, he fell to with redoubled vigor. At length, at the 31ſt aſſault the baron De Hart received a cut from the ſabre, which pierced the breaſt, and penetrated into the lungs. He died the next day, after ſuffering the greateſt agonies. Zandt has preſented, as well as his ſecond, the Prince De Lowenſtein, and Kleinemuetg, the ſecond to the unfortunate Hart. The latter is related to an illuſtrious and reſpectable family on the left bank of the Rhine.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.

Captain Coe, arrived at Norfolk from Bermuda, gives the following circumſtantial account of an enterprize of which the outlines only were given in the Mercantile Advertiſer of Monday:

"A government ſchooner of 14 guns compleatly fitted, and provitioned for a cruiſe of ſix months, was laying in the port of Saint Georges. On account of ſome circumſtance, it became neceſſary to put the maſter of a French privateer and about 45 of his men on board the ſchooner; they were not confined in irons, and only a corporal's guard put over them. The Officers of the ſchooner were moſtly on ſhore, and the Lieutenant commanding dined on more.—The maſter of the privateer took this occaſion to overpower the guard, whom he confined below, and then dreſſing himſelf in the uniform of the Lieutenant, and diſguiſing his men, he got the ſchooner under way, and effected the batteries without interruption, and giving three cheers when he turned the point out of reach of the guns, he proceeded on a cruiſe with a ſtronger veſſel than he had loſt, and one more completely fitted.

"The ſituation of the harbor, on account of the number of forts and cannon mounted in the different parts of the harbor, and the difficulty of the navigation of the channel, in ſome places not more than 200 feet wide, rendered this a hazardous undertaking in the open day. The Frenchmen owes, we underſtand, his ſucceſs to the ſtrict diſcipline of the guard having charge of a piece of cannon at one of the alarm poſts. One perſon only had diſcovered the Frenchman in this buſineſs, who went with all ſpeed to the guard and told them the circumſtances, requeſting them to fire and alarm the forts below; but this the guard refuſed, alledging that they were ordered never to fire, but by the orders of the Commandant or ſome before the Commandant could be found, the Frenchman was clear of the ports."

The following extraordinary inſtance of fecundity in an individual, is extracted from a recent publication in Dublin: Dennis Carrubie, of Athenrie, Ireland, died 1804, aged 117 years. He married 7 times, had 48 children; 308 grand children; 944 great grand children; 25 great great grand children; making a total of 1253 deſcendants!!

Deaths.—At Duffy-hall, Ireland, at the ſeat of Cæſar Colclough, Eſq. at the advanced age of 96, near 60 years of which he paſſed in the Colclough family, Owen Carrol, the celebrated Iriſh huntſman. Being originally a ſtranger, he had ſuch an inclination for hunting, that he always kept a horſe of his own, and hunted with the hounds of Cæſar Colclough for many years. During the rebellion in 1798, he and his family acted with uncommon fidelity to their employers; as one of his ſons, when the rebels, came down and remained to protect the houſe and property, and he never quitted his poſt. Another of his ſons brought off horſes and clothes to his maſter, at the riſk of his life, when he was informed where to find him; and during that period the old man buried a large quantity of plate, which he afterwards conveyed to a place of ſafety. Until the laſt year of his life he regularly went out with the hounds, and his voice retained its clearneſs and ſweetneſs. He was well known to every ſportſman in that part of Ireland; and Mr. Kelly, the late Judge, about his own age, made the laſt ſpent a day at Duffy Hall, for the purpoſe of loſing and hunting with a person he had heard so much of. At one period, his and his horse's age amounted to 106 years, and yet neither could be beat by the youngest sportsman. As the custom in Ireland is to attend funerals, for seventy years he never missed one within many miles.

At London, after a long and painful illness, the Bishop of Downe. He was the son of a dignitary of the church in Ireland, who sent him to Eaton school for his education. There he became acquainted with Mr. Fox, and an intimacy formed, which riper years cemented into the warmest friendship, and ceased but with the life of the Bishop. At an early age, he married a Miss Symmes, a lady as amiable as she was beautiful, and with whom he enjoyed the most enviable state of conjugal felicity. This amiable woman has now to mourn, with a numerous family, the best of fathers and husbands. He was a man of the most elegant and refined manners; a Statesman of the most independant principles; as a Scholar he had few equals.

Pugilism extraordinary.—A singular display of pugilism was yesterday afforded to a concourse of spectators, in Copenhagen Fields. Two porters, of the names of Wigmore and Johnson, having had a quarrel on Monday evening, at a public house in Tottenham-court-road, they agreed to settle the dispute by a fight, at the above mentioned spot. After they had contended together a quarter of an hour, Johnson was proclaimed the victor, without either skill or courage. The wife of the unsuccessful hero seconded her husband, and a second fight took place between her and a fellow of the name of Leveret, who had favored Johnson. They set to in great style, and the wife galled her opponent handsomely. She fought fourteen strait-forward rounds, and so completely disfigured the head of Leveret, that he yielded to her superior science in the pugilistic art, amidst the shouts of the mob. The second was by far the best fight, and the delicate lady challenged her husband's rival on the spot.—Lon. Pap.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 31.

NEW PLAN OF EDUCATION.

Last week, Mr. Lancaster, the ingenious author of the new plan of education established in the Borough, had the honor of being introduced to their Majesties, at Weymouth. The King having made himself thoroughly acquainted with the principles of the new scheme, by which thousands of children may at one and at the same time be taught reading, writing and arithmetic, at an expence inconceiveable small, his Majesty was pleased to express his anxious and paternal define that the benefits of the system might be extended to every part of his United Kingdoms, by the establishment of Schools on the plan of Mr. Lancaster. His Majesty subscribed 100l. for this purpose; the Queen subscribed 50l.; the five Princesses 10l. each, and the Duke of Kent 10l—making together 210l. which was transmitted to Mr. Lancaster, with an intimation that the same sum should be paid annually. We rejoice to find, that from this auspicious beginning considerable progress is already made, for several stations in the west of England were fixed on for the appointment of Schools; and Mr. Lancaster is to send youths who have been taught his method to superintend their outset.

YORK, 21ſt November, 1805.

LONDON, Aug. 20.

A combination among the journeymen clothiers of Leeds has taken place, no leſs than 400 having refuſed to work, in conſequence of a refuſal from their maſters to advance their wages.

COMBINED FLEET.

Six and twenty years are now elapſed ſince the combined fleets of France and Spain, amounting to 66 ſail of the line, 33 frigates and corvettes, appeared off Plymouth harbour, with 15,000 troops on board: they lay too on the 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th of Auguſt, in the Eaſt-down channel, without performing a ſingle action worthy of record, except taking the Ardent of 64. Captain Boteler, who gallantly fought three 74's and two frigates before he ſtruck, in ſight of the combined fleets. In the mean time the Cork convoy, of 100 ſail, paſſed within 3 leagues of the van diviſion of the enemy, without moleſtation, and ran into Plymouth ſound, Hamoaze, and Cutwater, without the loſs of a ſingle ſhip. The combined fleets, notwithſtanding their great ſuperiority, were offered battle for two days, by the gallant Admiral Hardy, who lay too off the Lizard for them on the 23d and 24th of Auguſt, with only 37 ſail of the line. The object of the enemy was to make a combined attack upon the citadel, arſenal, and dock-yard of Plymouth; but they were panic-ſtruck at the idea of being blocked up in the Sound by Admiral Hardy, whilſt they were landing the troops.

Account of the opening of the Coffin of EDWARD I. King of England.

From the London Courier, Aug. 30.

MR. EDITOR,

YOUR intention of the manner in which the body of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Gloucester, will be prepared for interment, is accurate as far as it goes. If you are diſpoſed to lay before your readers an account of the effect produced by the mode of preſervation, which, for many centuries, has been uſed upon the bodies of royal perſonages, the following lines will not be unacceptable to you. They are extracted from Sir Joſeph Ayloffe's account of the opening of the tomb of Edward the firſt, in Weſtminſter Abbey, four hundred and ſixty ſeven years after its interment; a narrative which I can never read without ſtrong emotions of awe, and melancholy admiration. After deſcribing the manner of opening the tomb and coffin, which was done with the utmoſt care, in the preſence of the Rev. Dr. Thomas, then Dean of Weſtminſter, of two of the Rev. Prebendaries, and of the Preſident of the Society of Antiquarians, the writer ſays.

"On lifting up the lid, the royal corpſe was found wrapped up within a large ſquare mantle of ſtrong, coarſe, and thick linen cloth, diapered, of a dull, pale, yellowiſh brown colour, and waxed on its under ſide.

"The head and face were entirely covered with a ſudarium or face cloth, of crimſon taffnet, the ſubſtance whereof was ſo much periſhed as to have a cobweb-like face, and the appearance of fine lint. The ſudarium was formed into three folds. When the folds of the external wrapper were thrown back, and the ſudarium removed, the corpſe was diſcovered, richly habited, adorned with inſigns of royalty, and almoſt entire, notwithſtanding the length of time it had been entombed. Its innermoſt covering ſeemed to have been a very fine cerecloth, dreſſed cloſe to every part of the body, and ſuperinduced with ſuch accuracy and exactneſs, that the fingers and thumbs of both the hands had each of them a ſeparate and diſtinct envelope of that material. The face, which had a ſimilar covering cloſely fitted thereto, retained its exact form, although part of the fleſh appeared to be ſomewhat waſted. It was a dark brown or chocolate colour, approaching to black, as were the hands and fingers. The chin and lips were entire, but without any beard; and a ſinking, or dip, between the chin and under lip, was very conſpicuous. Both the lips were prominent; the noſe ſhort as if ſhrunk; but the apertures of the noſtrils were viſible. There was an unuſual fall, or cavity, on that part of the bridge of the noſe which ſeparates the orbits of the eyes; and ſome globular ſubſtance, poſſibly the fleſhy part of the eye-balls, was moveable in their ſockets under the envelope. Below the chin, and under jaw, was lodged a quantity of black duſt, which had neither ſmell nor conſiſtence; but whether the ſame had been fleſh, or ſpices, could not be aſcertained. One of the joints of the middle finger of the right hand was looſe, but thoſe of the left hand were quite perfect. The corpſe, from the waiſt downward, was covered with a large piece of rich figured cloth of gold, which was looſe over the lower part of the thighs, legs and feet, and tucked down behind the ſoles of the latter. There did not remain any appearance of gloves; but on the back of each hand, and juſt below the knuckle of the middle finger lay a quatre foil of the metal as thoſe on the hoſe*. The feet, with their toes, ſoles and heels, ſeemed to be perfectly entire, but whether they have ſandals on them or not, is uncertain, as the cloth tucked over them was not removed. On meaſuring the body by a rod, quadrated into inches, divided into quarters, it appeared to be ſix feet and two inches in length."

View of Spain.—An article in a Cork paper received in London, communicates the following intelligence. It ſtates, "that at this moment the Spaniſh Monarchy ſhakes to its foundation. The ſeries of circumſtances which immediately rouſed all thoſe ſymptoms indicative of the approaching decadence of this ancient Monarchy, we cannot now develope for ſeveral reaſons; but we can aver that the utmoſt conſternation prevails in the Palace of Madrid, as well as in the Cabinet and Councils of the ſtate. The arrogance and tyranny of the Prince of Peace has rouſed the indignation of the higher orders, as well as ſome of the moſt ancient public inſtructions, acknowledged by the laws of Spain. He has had the temerity of interfere with the public juſtice of the country, by prevailing upon the king to ſuſpend the functions of the Supreme Council of Caſtile, that he had confirmed an appeal from a Provincial Tribunal, adverſe in its effects to one of his favourites, who was a party in the cauſe. The Council have addreſſed the King in terms becoming the ancient Spaniſh character; they have admoniſhed him of the conſequences of ſuch an untoward mediation; they have reminded him in bold and manly language, of the dependency of his predeceſſors upon the laws of Spain, and upon the determination of the Supreme Council of Caſtile in former times; and they have ſuggeſted the temerity of putting a daring favorite above the laws, and intimated the probable conſequences in times ſo eſpecially marked by ſuch viciſſitudes in human authority." "The Court is in diſmay," ſays our Correſpondent—"but ſullen and diſtruſtful—their meaſures are obſtinate in ſome reſpects and wavering in others. The Prince of Peace breathes vengeance; and the Supreme Council of Caſtile avows reſiſtance, & ſeems to be the popular party. The Provinces are ſo in diſorder; and the large cities are turbulent. Bonaparte has offered the King a large army to cruſh the ſpirit of rebellion, as it is called; and if the impotency of the Court accept the offer, Spain will be engulphed in his obvious project of extending the French Empire."

The Young Roſcius. (ſays a London paper,) has been followed at Newcaſtle with as much eagerneſs as in every other place where he has exerted his powers. The following is an account of the receipts of the Theatre on every night of his appearance——He commenced his engagement on Monday the 19th inſt.

Monday,	Douglas,	£147 19 6
Wedneſday,	Tancred,	139 11 6
Thurſday,	Hamlet,	110 19 6
Friday,	Achmet,	131 7 6
Saturday,	Douglas,	117 13 0

The Saturday's performance took place at Sunderland; and, according to his engagement with the Manager, his profits for the week were near 350l. Mrs. Stephen Kemble performed Sigiſmunda and Opheſia, with him; and the boy was, it ſeems, not a little gratified in playing with ſo excellent an actreſs.

Amuſing Invention.—The chef d'oeuvre of mechanics in the nick nack way, is a carriage made by Charles Etienne Louis Camus, Mechanic in Ordinary to Louis XV. and Author of a work entitled "Elemens de Mechanique." The following is a deſcription given by himſelf, of this little vehicle:

"The ſpace intended for this carriage to run, was the table of the Council of Verſailles. It was placed at the end oppoſite to where the arm-chair of the King ſtood. In an inſtant the carriage ſet off of itſelf; the horſes moved their limbs, raiſed them and walked forward, like other horſes. Arrived at the other extremity of the table, the coachman who held the reins, drew them ſo as to make them turn. The carriage proceeded thus the length of the table a ſecond time; but in turning round, the coachman paſſed between the ecrutoire of the King and the paper which was on the table; he found the ſpot preciſely oppoſite his Majeſty, and then ſtopped. Immediately the footman, who was behind the carriage, leaped off; a page, dreſſed en huzzard, alighted—ran to the door, and opened it; a lady deſcended from the carriage, advanced towards the King, made him a profound reverence, and preſented a petition, equally natural and graceful. She waited juſt long enough for an anſwer; during which interval the little page played with the door, which he opened and ſhut alternately.—Afterwards the lady, making a ſecond reverence to the King, aſcended her carriage, ſeating herſelf on that ſide from which ſhe could ſee his Majeſty. The huzzard ſhut the door, remounted his ſtep, and ſeated himſelf as before; the coachman gave a ſtroke of a whip to the horſes. The lacquey, who had not yet mounted, ran after the carriage, and leaped behind with much activity. The horſes turned a third time round the corner of the table, again made a tour, ſtill guided by the coachman, who whipped them from time to time. At laſt the carriage ſtopped of itſelf, in the ſame ſpot from whence it ſet out, as if it was about to enter the coach-houſe, after having finiſhed its journey.

A Gentleman Biſhop, who was alſo a temporal prince, being much addicted to ſwearing, was reproached by his confeſſor for the practice of a vice ſo peculiarly diſcreditful to an eccleſiaſtical character.—The prelate, however, excuſed himſelf by ſaying, that he ſwore "as a prince, and not as a biſhop." "All that may be very true, (replied the confeſſor) but I ſhould be very glad to know when the prince goes to the devil for ſwearing, what will become of the Biſhop?"

Oil of Olives, commonly called Sweet Oil.

This ſalutary medicine no family ought ever to be without. While perfectly harmleſs, it is extremely powerful in its effects. In burns or ſcalds, it is unequalled. Bathing the wounds often with it, and binding on a rag moiſtened with it, will very ſoon and certainly effect a cure. There are few if any more potent antidotes to poiſon. In caſes of bites by ſnakes or mad dogs, bathing the wounds continually with it, and taking ſome occaſionally internally, has never been known to fail to cure the perſon ſo bitten.

A new proceſs for watering hemp in two hours time, without injuring its quality, has been diſcovered by Mr. Belle of Amiens, and publiſhed by order of the miniſter of the interior. A quantity of green hemp equal to the forty-eighth part of the weight of the hemp to be ſteeped is diſſolved in water heated to the temperature of from 72 to 75 of Reaumur, or 200 of Fahrenheit. When the hemp is immerſed in the fluid, the veſſel is cloſed, and the fire extinguiſhed; and after continuing in a ſtate of maceration for two hours, the bundles are taken out and covered with a layer of ſtraw, ſo as to cool gradually without loſing their humidity. Next day they are ſpread on a floor, the bands puſhed to the top of the ſtem, and a heavy roller paſſed ſeveral times over them, in order to cruſh them, and diſpoſe the tow to be eaſily ſeparated from the reed, which is effected by beating. The weight of the hemp ſhould be to that of the water as 48 to 650; and after another proviſion that at each new immerſion, a quantity of ſoap water, is added to replace what was abſorbed by the preceding parcel.

A cow, the property of Mr. Thomas Bridſhaw, of Gauthorpe, in this year bringing up ſix calves; three of them were put to her the beginning of April, and were weaned July 17, and the other three put to her, which are in a very promiſing ſtate. The cow alſo brought up two calves laſt year.

The Chineſe phyſicans never preſcribe bleeding, but allay the heat of the blood by abſtinence, diet, and cooling herbs; ſaying, that if the pot boil too faſt, it is better to ſubduct the fuel than lade out the water.

The London papers mention that the Marquis of Wellſley, on his return to England from the Government of India, will have ſeveral charges againſt him exhibited to Parliament.

The French will perhaps pretend that the Combined Squadron was eager to attack us. The Spaniards certainly did fence firſt.

FROM THE UNITED STATES GAZETTE.

Man political-arithmetically conſidered.

Suppoſing the earth peopled with 1000,000,000 inhabitants, and allowing 33 years for a generation, it has been computed, that the deaths of each year amount to 30,000,000—of each day, to 82,135—of each hour, to 3,442 7 24.

But as the number of deaths is to the number of births, as 30 to 32, there are born every year, 36,000,000—every day, 98,569—every hour, 4,107 1 24.

If mankind had not been doomed to die, there would have been at preſent, about 173,000 billions of mortals on the earth; and in this caſe, there would ſtill have been 9110 ſquare feet of earth remaining for each man.

Reckoning only three generations during a century, and ſuppoſing at the ſame time, that the world has only exiſted 5700 years, there have been only 171 generations from the creation to our own time, 134 ſince the deluge, and 53 ſince the chriſtian æra; now as no family in Europe can trace its origin to the time of Charlemagne, it follows, that the moſt ancient houſes cannot reckon more than thirty generations, and very few, if any can go ſo far back; but ſuppoſing it to be the caſe, what is but 1000 years illuſtrious, againſt 4 3 0 years of obſcurity.

Out of every thouſand men, 28 die off annually. The number of inhabitants of a city or country is renewed nearly every 30 years.

Of 200 children, no more than one dies in the birth.

Of 100, one does not die during the mother's lying in.

Of 1000 infants, fed by means of the mother's milk, not ſo we 300 die; but of the ſame number reared by wet nurſes, 500 die. The mortality of children has augmented greatly during the preſent luxurious age: convulſions and teething kill the greater number of them.

The natural ſmall pox uſually carries off 8 in every 100 attacked by it; but of 300 inoculated, no more than one dies.

Among 3125 who die, it appears by the regiſters that there is only one perſon of 100 years of age.

More old men are to be found on elevated places, than on plains and vallies.

The proportion between the deaths of women and that of men, is as 100 to 108. The probable duration of female lives is 60; but at that period, the calculation is more favorable to them than to the males.

Married women live longer than maidens.

In the country the ſpring is the moſt fatal period, but in the cities it is the winter.

One half of thoſe who are born, die before they attain the age of ſeventeen.

The number of old men who die in cold weather, is to the number of thoſe who die in warm weather as 7 to 4.

According to the obſervation of Boerhaave, the moſt healthy children are born in the months of January, February and March.

The married women are to the unmarried in the ratio, of 9 to 3; and the married to the unmarried men, as 3 to 5. The number of twins born is to that of ſingle children, as 1 to 65 or 70.

The number of marriges is to that of the inhabitants of a country, as 175 to 1000.

In the country there are about 4 children produced by every marriage; in cities, there are but 35 in 10 marriages.

The men able to bear arms, form the 4th part of the inhabitants of a country.

MESSRS. HUDSON & GOODWIN,

The following Letter of an elderly man to his Nephew beginning buſineſs, I have peruſed in manuſcript, and copied for your paper. If you think it worthy of publication, I requeſt you to publiſh it.

DEAR NEPHEW,

As you are beginning buſineſs in trade, I am induced by perſonal affection and moſt ardent wiſhes for your welfare and proſperity, to offer you my advice. I well know that advice is ſeldom welcome: but to you I tender mine in confidence that it will be well received, in aſmuch as ſince the mournful period when it pleaſed heaven to bereave you of your excellent father, I have in a manner ſtood in that endearing relation towards you, and have hitherto received from you the conſtant tokens of filial gratitude and love.

In the firſt place, deal fairly and hold faſt integrity. Let no temptation of gain, on the one hand, nor any embar-nallments, on the other, ever lead you to step aside from the path of ſtrict honeſty. For aſide from the conſideration of a ſolemn reckoning hereafter, "honeſty is the beſt policy;" it is the ſureſt way to worldly thrift and proſperity.—But to honeſty there muſt be added a great degree of caution, leaſt you become a dupe to the arts of the knavith. Many a hopeful young man has been led, by the conſcious integrity of his own heart, to ſuch an overweening confidence in mankind, as rendered him an eaſy prey to cunning ſharpers and ſwindlers.

Unite care with diligence. Care preſerves what induſtry gains; but the man who attends to his buſineſs diligently, but not carefully, throws away with one hand what he gathers with the other. A man in buſineſs ſhould as much as poſſible, make uſe of his own eyes; at leaſt, he ſhould have a conſtant overſight of all his concerns; for if he leave this chiefly to others, it is ten to one, that he will ſoon find his circumſtances embarraſſed.

Endeavour to poſſeſs at all times a critical knowledge of your real circumſtances. For this purpoſe, and indeed in every reſpect, exact order or method in buſineſs is highly neceſſary. Men who do buſineſs without method, act in the dark; they plunge along at random, not knowing where they place their ſteps. They quickly find themſelves bewildered and embarraſſed; and there are many chances againſt them for one in their favor.

Prudently beware that your expenditures do not outrun your incomes. The ſtyle of living ſhould conform to one's perſonal circumſtances, and ſuch expenditures as can be well afforded by a man of fortune, might be inevitably deſtructive to him who has his fortune yet to make. "Money, ſays the old proverb, makes money. When you have got a little and carefully ſaved it, it is often eaſy to get more. The greateſt difficulty with a beginner, is to get that little." But if frugality does not ſtore up what induſtry acquires, there can be no increaſe of capital.

Take heed of overtrading. If you adventure, beyond your depth, if depending upon a fictitious capital, you extend your buſineſs very far beyond your real capital, the hazard of bankruptcy will be great. Indeed in this caſe you would hazard not only your own property, but that of your creditors; which is hardly reconcileable with honeſt principles. "When the profits of trade happen to be greater than ordinary, overtrading becomes a general error both among great and ſmall dealers," and a ſudden ſhift in the ſtate of commerce, (ſuch as frequently happens) produces general diſtreſs.

Reckon nothing your own, that you owe for; it is a depoſit placed in your hands by your creditors; which it would be fraudulent for you to uſe in ſuch a manner as to endanger their intereſts. Debts are ſacred; and every honeſt man will do his endeavours to diſcharge his bona fide debts with punctuality and honor.

Be ever cautious of running deeply into debt. Flattering projects of great gain in this way ſometimes occur, but they often prove deluſive, and leave the too raſh adventurer under an inſupportable load.

Beware of entangling yourſelf by imprudent ſuretiſhips. There are diverſ extracts in the ſacred volume againſt this kind of adventure; and its fatal conſequences have been often witneſſed in our own times and in almoſt all parts of this country. Eſpecially beware of dealing too largely in accommodation paper; for as in ſuch a caſe, you muſt borrow the names of others as endorſers, you would frequently find yourſelf under the neceſſity of lending your own name, in return, further than prudence could dictate.—And as a large number becomes linked together in this way, the failure of a few of them ſhocks the whole.

Perſuaded that you will take theſe friendly hints in good part, and give them their due weight in your mind and practice, I only add, my dear Nephew, the ſincere expreſſion of my ardent wiſhes that your honeſt and laudable efforts may be crowned with the divine bleſſing.

A MODERN TALE.

There was a man of Adam's race,
A man was he, indeed ſir;
Who tumbled down, upon his face,
Which cauſ'd his noſe to bleed, ſir.

His noſe it bled—it bled full ſore,
It bled an hour or two, ſir,
It bled an hour or two, or more;
Upon my word is true, ſir.

Meanwhile his friends, and neighbors dear,
Poſt-Haſte, for ſurgeons flew ſir;
They ſent for ſurgeons, far and near,
To ſtop the bloody vent, ſir.

The ſurgeons came, with look demure,
Each panting hard for breath, ſir,
Each puzzling hard, they came to cure,
The eaſe of life or death, ſir.

Doctor Grimalkus firſt came in,
With magic trackers arm'd, ſir,
He view'd the patient—gave a grin,
Which muſt have death diſarm'd ſir.

He ſtroke his noſe full oft, full well,
Still dropp'd full many a drop, ſir,
He ſtroke his noſe—but ſaid to tell,
The blood he could not ſtop, ſir.

With aloe—Silver next approach'd
Galvin, the blood to ſtill, ſir;
Doctor Grimalkus, he reproach'd,
Reproach'd for want of Skill, ſir.

With much parade,—parade and ſhew,
He ſtock'd the bleeding man ſir,—
But ſtill the fluent blood did flow,
The fluent blood ſtill ran, ſir.

Next came an host of patent quacks—
Of patent quacks a ſtuff, ſir,
Of patent noſtrums, in their backs,
They proudly diſplay their bluff, ſir,

Each patentee, with hopes elate,
His ſovereign cures did try, ſir—
But Each, alas! was "call'd too late,"
"The may maſh—ſurely die, ſir."

Upon his back, cold keys were laid—
Cold keys upon his back, ſir;
Until, at length, the blood was ſtay'd—
The blood at length, did ſtack, ſir.

An Iriſh paper very ſagaciouſly calculates the number of ſuicides in England during one week in the following manner:—

"One week's ſuicides in England, extracted from a London Weekly paper:—Hanged themſelves 3; ſhot himſelf 1; ſhot by accident 1; died by boxing 1: drowned by perſons unknown 1; drowned themſelves 3; killed by a horſe 1; cruſhed to death 1; cut their throats 2; dropped dead ſuddenly 2; child ſmothered 1—Total 17."

The Pariſian belles wear no ear rings in the morning, or have them ſo ſmall as not to be perceived. In the evening, except in very full dreſs, they wear ear-rings of a large circumference, reſembling a ſerpent in a circle, with an apple in its mouth: So that in looking on a well ſketched naked belle, one ſees at the ſame time, the woman, the ſerpent and the apple! and cannot avoid exclaiming "Thoſe Pariſians do indeed are the firſt women of the world."

Lateſt Intelligence.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.

By virtue of an order iſſuing from his Majeſty, 100,000 men have been directed to hold themſelves in readineſs to march.

A grand council of ſtate was held here the day before yeſterday, at which all the miniſters and the principal generals attended. For ſeveral days back couriers have been diſpatched to Saint Peterſburgh and Vienna.

The miniſter of ſtate and of the cabinet, Count de Haugwitz, is arrived in this capital. It is believed he will be ſent to Paris.

FRONTIERS OF RUSSIA, 28th Aug.

From the 30th July to the 12th Auguſt 49 veſſels of different nations arrived in the port of Cronſtadt, laden chiefly with foreign merchandize. In the ſame time 142 veſſels cleared out from that port, laden with territorial productions or articles manufactured in Ruſſia. Of theſe 82 were Engliſh and 12 Americans.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Aug. 28.

The troops of our garriſon, and the horſe and foot guards, making in the whole about ten thouſand men, marched from this city on the 23d inſtant. There remains here three battalions of foot guards for the ſervice of the winter palace and other public edifices.

The preſent ſituation of affairs, and above all the recent departure of the troops, have influenced the courſe of exchange. The ducat of Holland valued at 3 rubles 80 cop. is riſen to 4 rub. 50 cop. and the ſilver ruble has riſen from 85 cop. to 34.

We are aſſured that the Emperor will depart for Wilna about the 26th Sept.

Thirty thouſand men embarked here for Revel this day, in conſequence of the treaty entered into with Sweden. This body, under the order of Lieutenant General Tolſtoi, is deſtined, they ſay, for Swediſh Pomerania; but well informed politicians think that the King of Pruſſia will never conſent to it.

HAMBURGH, Sept. 12.

They write from Copenhagen, under date of the 7th, "The Ruſſian ſquadron which is expected here has not yet arrived, by which it is preſumed it has taken another direction."

His Majeſty the King of Pruſſia is now cauſing to be built on the Spea, a new ſtore which will be 300 feet in length, 100 in breadth, and 6x ſtories high. It will contain a quantity of grain ſufficient to provide for the whole capital during three years.

According to the lateſt accounts from Ruſſia, the merchant veſſels which had been freighted at Riga, by order of the government, for the tranſportation of troops, have been diſmiſſed, on account of its being almoſt impoſſible, in the preſent ſeaſon, to attempt any grand expedition by ſending theſe veſſels through the Baltic.

September 14.

M. de Knobleſdorff, major general in the ſervice of Pruſſia, arrived at Hanover in the night of the 9th inſt. and the following morning had a conference with Marſhal Bernadotte at Herrenhauſen.

STUTGARD, Sept. 15.

With the intelligence of the march of the Ruſſian troops, we have received the following news in letters from Lemberg in Gallicia, dated the 25th of Auguſt:

"Generals Strauch and Whyrotter, have been ſucceſſively ſent here by the court of Vienna to direct the march of the Ruſſians. Their army is divided into two bodies, one of which takes its route through our city by eaſtern Gallicia, and the other by the northern, towards Lublin and Cracow; the laſt body has not yet entered Gallicia. The firſt arrived on the 20th of Auguſt, at Brodt; it marches in ſix columns. It is confirmed that a third body of Ruſſian troops are actually concentrated at Wilna, in Lithuana, and is to be followed by ſeveral others. The court of Berlin having refuſed a paſſage through its ſtates, the corps of the army of Wilna will continue its march through Gallicia.

September 16.

The Auſtrians have already taken poſſeſſion of a great part of Bavaria. All the country ſituated between the Inn and the Iler is over-run with their troops. General Kienau, who commands the corps of the army which paſſed the Inn on the 8th September, is about to tranſfer his head quarters to Munich. The principal cities near the Danube or on the borders of the river, between Straubing, Paſſau, Landeſhut, Wilhoven and other places, have already an Auſtrian garriſon.

HANOVER, Sept. 19.

There has been publiſhed on the 13th inſt. an arrete of the executive commiſſion, to the following purport:

"By virtue of an order of the Marſhal of the Empire, the exportation of horſes out of the country is prohibited until it ſhall be otherwiſe ordered."

The whole French army is at preſent concentrated in the environs of Hanover, but its future deſtination is ſtill unknown. The garriſon of Harburg has been reinforced within a few days.

Marſhal Bernadotte arrived at Gottingen on the 7th inſt. to review the troops lately cantoned in that principality.

VIENNA, Sept. 9.

His Imperial and Royal Highneſs the Archduke John, ſets out this day for Inſpruc to preſide in the name of his Majeſty, over a Diet which is to be holden in Tyrol, and at which buſineſs relative to the preſent ſituation of affairs is to be diſcuſſed.

Upon the firſt news of the approach of the Ruſſian troops to the Auſtrian territory, the French Ambaſſador diſpatched a courier to Paris. Meanwhile that Miniſter does not yet make any preparations which indicate a ſpeedy departure.

The Auſtrians were to enter Auguſburg yeſterday. Their project is to advance through Suabia on the rear of La Foreſt Noire, and to occupy the poſitions which lead to the Val-de Rhin.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 11.

Our laſt letters are of the 3d of Sept. they give the news that on the 3d a general order of the day announced to the army that the new commanders of the troops have been officially nominated. It is therein ſaid, that the Emperor will repair in perſon to the army, having under him Gen. Mack and the Count de Grenville. His Majeſty will ſet off for Lintz on the 30 Sept. On the ſame day the Archduke and the other Generals are to repair to the armies in which they are employed. The Archduke Charles is appointed Commander in Chief of the Auſtrian army in Italy and in the Tyrol. The Archduke John, his brother, as his aſſiſtant in the command, and Baron de Zuch is to perform the functions of chief of the General Staff, a poſt which he has already occupied in the army of General Melas, under whom he ſerved in the battle of Marengo, where he was taken priſoner; the General Baron de Huffenburg is alſo to have a ſuperior poſt in the army of the Tyrol, under the orders of the Archduke Charles.

The chief command of the army in Upper Auſtria is given the Archduke Ferdinand, the ſon of the preſent Sovereign of Brifgaw and of the Artenru, couſin german to the Emperor. General Mayer is chief of the ſtaff of his army.

During the abſence of the Emperor, the Elector of Salzburg, his brother is charged with the direction of buſineſs.

September 14.

Letters from Vienna announce, that a part of the baggage of his Majeſty the Emperor and their Imperial and Royal Highneſſes the Archdukes, is already ſent off for the army. The Monarch will firſt repair to the camp of Wells.

AUGSBURGH, Sept. 20.

The deputation from the Senate, which had been ſent to Munich, the Auſtrian head quarters, is returned, and reports the pleaſing intelligence that the neutrality of our city, eſtabliſhed by ſolemn treaties, will be reſpected by the French Emperor. Poſts were this day erected on the frontiers of our little territory, bearing this inſcription:—"neutral territory of the free Imperial city of Auſburg."

FRIBURG, (in Brifgaw) Sept. 16.

On the 9th inſt. the Auſtrians croſſed the Inn at Burhauſen.—One column took the road to Mulndorf, and directed its march towards Landſhut, where it arrived on the 10th. No intelligence has yet been received of its further progreſs; but it is conjectured that it will march, or has already marched, towards Ingolſtadt, thence to proceed to Donawert, where it will take poſt.—The other column marched by the way of Waſſerbourg towards Munich. It is thought that its motion is to take the poſitions of Lalifhow and Fribourgh, upon the Lech, poſitions which it occupied in the laſt war. This army, deſignated, until its entrance into Bavaria, under the name of Army of the camp of Welns, and which appears to have now taken that of Army of the Rhine, will be commanded by the Archduke Ferdinand, having under his orders the Quarter Maſter General Mayer; but no other commander in chief directs it at this moment, and each column makes its movements according to particular orders. Its force appears to be between 45 and 50,000 men. Another body of troops of about 20,000 men, making a part of the army of Tyrol, is now at Brexentz under the command of General Huffenberg, having under him the Generals Rohan and Alpemont. This body, hitherto inactive, has juſt made a movement; two thouſand of the advanced guard have marched towards Ravenſbourg in Swabia; other corps are following them and are marching towards Ulm, under the orders of General Wrade; but the Auſtrians miſſed their blow, and General Wrade was able to retreat towards Franconia, and form his junction with the other Bavarian troops, which are already aſſembled there, or on their march thither, and which will then form an army of 40 or 50,000 men.

BASLE, Sept. 18.

We really believe in this country that it will be very difficult for the Helvetic confederation to maintain its neutrality in the new continental war which is about commencing.

The greateſt activity prevails in all the cantons for raiſing the quota of men deſtined to protect the armed neutrality and to occupy the frontiers. The grand councils of moſt of the cantons have been convoked to deliberate on the circular letter of the Landamman relative to this object, and to determine the number of troops of which it ſhall be compoſed.—The Landamman has given orders to draw the exact limits of Switzerland by the eſtabliſhment of poſts throughout all the country of the Griſons, from whence he will iſſue ſmall detachements to the frontiers of Tyrol, Voralberg and Italy.

PARIS, Sept. 21.

The official journal of this day announces that "the Emperor of Germany, without any previous negociation or explanation, and without a declaration of war, has invaded Bavaria. The Elector has retired to Wirtzburg, where the whole of the Bavarian army is aſſembled."

September 26.

Cardinal Feſch, our miniſter plenipotentiary at Rome, has preſented to the Holy Father, in the name of his Imperial and Royal Majeſty, eight magnificent pieces of tapeſtry repreſenting ſcenes from the New Teſtament, two ſuperb carpets of exquiſite workmanſhip, two chandiliers of the greateſt beauty, and a ſervice of plate for the table.

September 27.

Marſhal Maſſena, General in Chief of the army of Italy, arrived on the 10th of Fructidor at the head quarters of Villa France: the day following he viſited the fortifications of Mantua, and in the evening departed for Valleggio, where he will eſtabliſh his head quarters.

General Jourdan paſſed lately thro' Lyons without ſtopping, on his way from Italy to Paris.

STRASBURGH, Sept. 23.

Yeſterday the fine body of grenadiers of the army arrived here, and was billeted on the citizens. To day it was reviewed by Prince Murat and the other generals now here. They ſay it is to be under the orders of general Lafnes. Our neighbourhood is filled with an immenſe quantity of troops, both infantry and cavalry.

LONDON, Sept. 24.

Strong expectations were entertained at Hanover, that a corpſe of Pruſſian troops would ſhortly occupy that Electorate. It was nevertheleſs reported, that a conſiderable number of French troops were coming thither from Holland. Hanover was ſtill to furniſh 900 horſes and 300,000 francs.

Private letters from Berlin ſtate, "That M. Duroc propoſed to the King of Pruſſia to ſend auxiliary troops to the aſſiſtance of the French; and that the application was peremptorily refuſed; and his Majeſty has given orders for 70,000 of his troops to occupy Hanover, and that he is determined to remain neutral, if poſſible; but if he ſhould be preſſed, or obliged to take a part in the war, he would join the Allies againſt Bonaparte."

Intelligence of the commencement of hoſtilities in Italy may be daily expected. It was ſuppoſed that the Auſtrian army would croſs the Adige ſhortly after the arrival of the Archduke Charles to aſſume the command of it.

Duroc continued at Berlin ſo late as the 13th inſt. This intelligence in a letter from a Gentleman at Hamburg, to a reſpectable merchant in the city, in which he alſo ſtates, "That he had juſt arrived from Berlin, after paſſing the Electorate of Hanover, in which not a ſingle French ſoldier was to be ſeen. He alſo aſſerts it, as a poſitive fact, that ten thouſand Ruſſians had landed at Stralſund."

A letter from St. Mary's Sciſſy, puts us in poſſeſſion of the moſt recent accounts from our fleet before Breſt. It is date the 19th inſt. and ſays:

"This forenoon put in here the cutter Elizabeth and Phillis, of Penzance, left the Channel fleet laſt night at nine o'clock, about eight leagues ſouth of Uſhant, then about ſeventeen ſail of the line, five ſail having been diſpatched towards Ferrol. The French fleet were all ſnug in harbor, having made no further attempt to come out."

Notwithſtanding what has been ſtated in the newſpapers reſpecting the arrangements of the expedition, not a ſingle regiment has yet been appointed, nor have any orders been iſſued to the Royal Artillery relative thereto.

There are accounts from General Lake, ſome weeks ſubſequent to the date of the laſt of his diſpatches to the public. No freſh attack has been made on Bhurtpore.

General Gardner has ſucceeded Gen. Bowyer in the command of Nova Scotia and New Brunſwick.

A letter from Harlaem, of the 16th, ſays, that a new military conſcription has been ſecretly ordered, and is executing in France, comprehending all perſons capable of bearing arms, between the ages of 17 and 25, and from which neither artiſts nor profeſſors, or ſtudents of the ſciences, are exempt.

It is ſaid that the French Miniſter at Caſſel, after ſome unſucceſsful applications to the Electoral court, for the diſmiſſal of the Britiſh Miniſter, Mr. Taylor, early in Auguſt, declared that, unleſs the wiſhes of Bonaparte, on this head, were immediately complied with, a French army would enter Heſſia, and that Marſhal Bernadotte was already inſtructed on the ſubject. It is added, that the Elector returned a temperate, yet decided anſwer, and ſent off a courier to Berlin, to communicate the threat. On the return of the Meſſenger, the French agent was informed, that the Elector would not comply with the demand which had been made to him, and that ſhould a French army enter his dominions, he would not be wanting in energy or preparation to meet it. Mr. Taylor at the ſame time, received aſſurances of protection, and the moſt marked attention and civilities. We are further aſſured, that the King of Pruſſia, in the moſt unequivocal terms, expreſſed his diſapprobation of the conduct of the French Agent at Caſſel, and declared himſelf bound in honor and by treaty to ſupport Heſſia in the event of being attacked.

The fact of the Ruſſian troops having entered the Auſtrian territories, is placed beyond all doubt. The corps which entered Gallicia was commanded by Gen. Kutuſoff, and conſiſted of 80,000 men. Another army of 60,000 men was actually collected in the neighbourhood of Watſaw, we believe, under Marſeverin Mitchellon; and the headquarters of the third army, which was to be commanded by the emperor in perſon, were eſtabliſhed at Wilna, whither his Imperial Majeſty meant to proceed at the latter end of laſt month. To addition to theſe inſtances of extraordinary activity, there is reaſon to ſuppoſe that Ruſſia is determined to occupy Swediſh Pomerania.—30,000 men were to embark at St. Peterſburgh and Revel on the three laſt days of Auguſt; and M. Alopeus, the Ruſſian ambaſſador to the court of Stockholm, (brother to the ambaſſador at Berlin) has landed at Stralſund, accompanied by two Ruſſian Generals. As the Ruſſian troops will be landed in the Swediſh territories, under the terms, as it is ſaid, of a treaty of alliance, offenſive and defenſive, between the two Courts, the proviſions of which have probably been communicated to Pruſſia, any remonſtrance or oppoſition on the part of the Court of Berlin will require extreme delicacy or determination.

Whatever reſolution has been adopted by the Pruſſian Monarch, he ſeems to omit no precaution to enable him to meet with dignity and effect either alternative. The magnitude of his military preparations is fully equal to cauſe his neutrality to be reſpected, or to give him a conſiderable preponderance in the war, ſhould he engage in it. He has given orders for the eſtabliſhment of two armies of obſervation, the united force of which is from eighty to one hundred thouſand men.

If this formidable force is to be aſſembled for the purpoſe of ſecuring to a ſmall circle of Germany the advantages of neutrality, his Pruſſian Majeſty may well deſerve to be conſidered as one of the chief protectors of that conſtitution, which Bonaparte has been ſo intent upon undermining. He has invited Denmark, and the Electors of Saxony and Heſſe, to arm and join in the league. Having given ſuch intelligible intimations of her determination, it is probable that the 17,000 French, who are collected in the Gottingen country will not force a paſſage through the State of the Elector of Heſſe, as they were ſuppoſed to have intended. The aſſurance of protection from the court of Berlin to that State, which was on the point of being inſulted and devaſtated by the legions of Bonaparte, has already had the effect of reſtoring Mr. Taylor, the Engliſh Envoy, to the exercife of his functions at the Electoral court. We can conceive that these occasional interferences, on the part of Prussia, must be extremely mortifying to Bonaparte. What becomes of his avowed determination of excluding the Ministers of Great Britain from the Continent, if he is to be thus met and disconcerted, at every turn, by the magnanimous interposition of his Prussian Majesty? General Kalkreuth, who settled the terms for the evacuation of the French territories, in the campaign of 1792, by the Prussian troops, and who is at present Governor of Dantzic, has received notice to prepare for service.

We had yesterday an opportunity of seeing a letter from Amsterdam of the 18th instant, addressed to a respectable house in the city. It states, that an express has just arrived from Paris, with several letters from the merchants there, which, as the writer expresses himself, "takes away the last hopes of peace." The continental war is considered inevitable, and under this apprehension, large purchases have been made in this country, of such articles of merchandize as were most likely to be assisted by the event.

FALMOUTH, Sept. 21.—The armed brig. Paramatta, arrived at Falmouth on Tuesday last, with a mail and dispatches, in ten days from Lisbon. By her we learn, that Admiral Calder had arrived off Cadiz on the 29th of August, where he remained blockading the combined French and Spanish squadrons in that port. We are assured that these squadrons are in the greatest distress for the want of stores and provisions. Bread they have none; nor is there any to procure at Cadiz, where the greatest scarcity prevails even among the inhabitants. The British fleet, in the mean time, so strictly blockades the port, that no supplies can enter from the sea. Much jealousy and discontent consequently prevails between the French and Spanish officers; and this, perhaps, has given rise to the rumour which had reached us, said to be brought by the Paramata, that the Spaniards had withdrawn from their alliance with France, and declared against her. Admiral Villeneuve has been recalled to Paris, to have his conduct on the 22d July, investigated by a court martial. The Rochefort squadron, which lately took a cruize, with the probable intention of intercepting our homeward-bound convoys, has returned disappointed to port."

Letters from Cadiz of a still later date, confirm the above intelligence, and mention that grain has considerably advanced in price since the French arrived.

Letters from Madrid, of the 28th ult. prove the misery which the unfortunate Spaniards endure owing to their alliance with France. Payment in specie is stopped, and the merchants are unable to honour their bills when they become due. The paper termed Dinero, which has been always considered as cash, is now at three per cent. discount.

GIBRALTAR, Sept. 20.

We have been favored with a sight of a Spanish letter dated Vigo Bay, July 28th, and written by an officer of high rank in the Spanish division of the combined fleet. This letter the authenticity of which is undoubted, states, that the Spanish ships suffered very much, and would all have been taken, had it not been for the timely assistance given them by the Pluton, whose brave captain Colmas must be excepted from the general charge of cowardice so justly brought against the others—that the whole of the 22d passed in a state of uncertainty; and that it was not till late in the evening of that day, that Villeneuve sent notice to the several commanders, of his intention to renew the engagement on the morrow: a very material circumstance, which is in direct opposition to the assertion in the official accounts, "that the 22d was spent in unavailing exertions to overtake the English fleet"—that they heard at the same time, of the Firme and San Rafael having fallen into the hands of the enemy; though so late as the 29th, the commander in chief, "could not yet understand how these ships happened to be missing"—that the conduct of the French division in the action, was a disgrace to their nation; that they hurried the Spaniards into an engagement; and, after exposing them to the most imminent danger, left them to shift for themselves. (Here the writer confidently appeals to the French themselves to bear witness to the conduct of his countrymen, placed in the van, with six ships badly armed, of unequal strength, and the crews of which were exhausted by excessive labor, hunger, and thirst)—that the whole 130 boxes of coined silver, found on board a rich Spanish ship recaptured by the combined fleet, had been conveyed on board Villeneuve's flag-ship, as well as the remainder of her cargo—and finally that the French admiral was expected soon to be removed from his command, as one of the Emperor's aides de camp, who went with the fleet to give private account of its operation to his master, had written him word that the Spaniards alone had done their duty.

SIR SIDNEY SMITH'S GUNBOATS.

The one is called the Cancer, the other the Gemini. The Cancer is formed of a galley, about 42 feet in length, cut exactly in two, from stem to stern; those two parts are joined to the ends of five pieces of timber, which cross them and are made secure by braces of iron; upon those five beams is raised a platform, in the centre of which stands a three pounder, ready mounted, with ammunition, boxes &c. The wheels of this cannon stand in a groove, upon a sort of a frame work which runs out some feet beyond the bows, so that the moment the vessel is run ashore, the cannon can be landed, and instantly put in use. At the centre of each of the two extreme beams which join the two hall galleys, mark are fixed, each of which carries a large square sail, with proper rigging. A lore sail projects from a boom, which is fixed to the frame. There are four rudders, one to each extremity of the hall galley, two only of which are worked at a time, by a cord connected with a large one in the centre, and managed by a person on the platform. These rudders can be shipped or unshipped in a moment, and the hall galleys being equally sharp at both ends, the can be run backward or forward at pleasure. The hall galleys are decked, with eight holes cut along each, large enough to admit a man's body, to the mouth of each of which is fixed a canvas bag, painted so as to prevent the water penetrating, with a running string in the top; in these bags the fifteen men, who pull at the oar first themselves and tie them above their ships; this sufficiently lashes them to the boat, and prevents their being washed overboard. Besides these fifteen oars, and the other persons who manage the sails, &c. this vessel is capable of holding fifty soldiers. Her sides are entirely lined with cork, so that it is impossible to upset her; and in a heavy sea, it passes over her without doing any injury, except giving the men a wet jacket.

The other boat, the Gemini, is of the same construction, but much larger, with this difference—she is formed of two entire galleys, fastened together as the Cancer, with fifteen holes in each galley, for the rowers are inside the other; the fifteen outside men row with oars, while those of the inside are furnished with a sort of spade, in the shape of a paddle of an Indian dance, the blade made of iron; and a space is left between the platform and the galleys for the men to work those paddles. This instrument is useful also in clearing away the sand or gravel, to facilitate the landing of the cannon. The Gemini also carries a fig pounder, and a proportionate number of men more than the Cancer. These vessels when heaviest laden, draw only eighteen inches water.

Latest Intelligence.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 21.

India.—By the latest dispatches from Ulligurgur, we are informed that Holkar had taken the precaution to supply the magazines of Bhurtpoer with military and other stores, sufficient to maintain a siege of two years; perhaps this report has been exaggerated, and purposely disseminated by several deserters from the enemy's army. During the last attack of the English on the above fort, a number of old guns were brought for ward, on the first firing of which no less than five of them burst, killed 20 men, and wounded several others. The troops were struck with a sudden panic, and the artillery corps refused, for a moment to do their duty: Holkar flew to the spot, attended by the Killader, and harangued the garrison with great firmness and spirit. This measure had the desired effect, and the troops returned to the charge with redoubled vigor.—It is more than probable that this single circumstance contributed materially to the salvation of the place.

The fortress of Bhurtpoer is memorable for having been a place of refuge for the chieftains of the Deccan, in seasons of extraordinary trouble and distress. It was built by Cubaramana, a Jaut, of the Sewenee tribe, in the time of Aurungzebe, for an asylum for himself and family, after having plundered the rear of the Imperial army, on its march through the neighbouring country. Here a powerful banditti enlisting under his banners, he robbed such travellers as pelled, acquired incalculable wealth, remained a vertor to the country, and enjoyed his authority till the time of his death.

A favorite son of Holkar was killed in the last attack of the British on Bhurtpore;—the event has greatly affected Holkar, and had rendered him, when the account came away, incapable of public business. He has ordered a public ceremonial to be held annually to commemorate his loss.

One of the last French papers contains the following article, dated Algiers July 24:—"It is difficult to form an idea of the horrors of the dreadful sacking to which 15 or 18,000 Jews were given up during three or four hours. A general massacre, with the exception of women and children, was determined on by the troops. A number of ferocious soldiers rushed tumultuously from their barracks, each armed with a pistol and sabre; all the barbarous rabble of the town joined them; they were cheered by the exclamations of women, or rather furies, who crowded the streets and terraces. Fortunately it was Saturday, a Jewish festival, when but very few of that persuasion were abroad. But soon the soldiers burst open the doors of the houses; the riches which struck their view were the means of preserving the Hebrew nation; they discontinued the carnage to think only of plunder; the trinkets, with which the women were adorned, were torn from them and they were exposed to all kinds of outrage. The plunder then became general; ferocious cries were followed by a death like silence—the streets were filled with men and women, passing in all directions with their booty; and in the course of three hours there was not the house of a Jew which was not stripped to the bare walls."

Vice Admiral Rainer, just arrived from an eight years chief command in the East Indies, is so extremely corpulent, that it is with difficulty he feeds himself, and he sleeps always in an easy chair, instead of reclining on a bed, to prevent suffocation.

LONDON, Aug. 9.

The following miraculous circumstance took place on board his Majesty's ship Leopard, at Dungeness, on Monday last: One of the carpenter's crew, went down in the pump well to sound while the ship was pumping out, who was perceived by two others to have been longer down than necessary, and the light extinguished, one of them followed to find the cause, who also did not return, upon which the other attempted, but fortunately, finding himself suffocating, and the light he had with him put out by the confined air, returned with the greatest difficulty almost senseless, and gave the alarm to Mr. Abraham Preston, the Purser, and Mr. Dutton, the former of whom with a commendable spirit and determination to save his fellow creatures, descended (while the alarm to the whole ship was given by the latter,) and succeeded in raising the head of the first, apparently lifeless, sufferer from the water, and placing it on the keelson, when himself swooned away in the act; a man who followed him with a light fell down from the ladder like a stone on the top of the others. The alarm was now general, and every one anxious to give his assistance to the relief of his ship mate. Three more entered the well after the other, but did not return. It was now perceived to be foul air collected, and the best means thought to get the sufferers up was to tie a rope round one to descend, with another rope, and to hoist them up. The first who went down felt himself to well, that he untied himself, and tied it upon another, who was hoisted up; but when the rope was put again down, he was heard groaning in the other. All the scuttles had been opened, and wind sails by this time had been hoisted, when two more men descended, and succeeded in getting every one on deck. Of Mr. P. and the two first there appeared but little hopes of recovery; but from the attention of Capt. Ruggett and Mr. Buchan, the Surgeon, I am happy to say every one is restored to his duty in good health and spirits. Great praise is due to Mr. P.

QUEBEC, 28, October.

On Saturday morning, by an overflight of the Gunner, a 24lb. shot was fired from the Pallas frigate, it passed thro' the house of Mr. Forton, Blockmaker in the Cul de Sac, struck a stone out of the door frame of the house of Mr. W. Hamilton in Champlain Street, and after rebounding to the opposite side, it fell to the ground. Happily no damage was done but what may be repaired.

Yesterday, shortly after 3 o'clock P. M. the inhabitants round the Parade were alarmed by an unusual noise when, on looking out, they discovered the west end of the new Union coffee-house and assembly room in ruins. About a fourth part of the building had suddenly fallen. Fortunately it was Sunday and no workmen or other persons present. The walls were nearly finished. In addition to their having been run up in haste, the weather has been unfavorable to the drying of the mortar. The wags attribute the fall to certain neighbourly benedictions. Some damage is done to the premises of O. Perrault, Esquire.

DIED, of a cancer in his throat, Mr. Charles Bennet, upwards of forty years Organist of Truro church. This gentleman was reputably descended; but being in childhood deprived of his sight, by the bursting of a wooden gun, he was put under the tuition of the celebrated organist Stanly, with whom he continued seven years. He was soon after appointed organist of Truro; and during the earliest part of his life, taught his professional science thro' a great part of this his native country. His sprightly wit and convival temper made him a welcome visitor wheneve he went, and often has he "set the table in a roar." Although blind he delighted in amusements which would appear to give pleasure chiefly to the light. He was partial to horticulture; and so exquisite was his touch, that he could distinguish and describe all his flowers, and even the different weeds, which occasionally mixed them. Although he had reason to lament the effects of gun powder, yet he has been known to walk above a mile to hear fireworks let off, perfectly distinguishing between good and bad. He enjoyed a game at whist and played with skill and precision having previously marked his cards with a needle, so ingeniously, that the punctures were imperceptible to his associates; nor was he long in thus preparing the cards for his use.

He attended the Truro Theatre when honored by the performance of Mrs. Siddons. He scarcely ever failed to recollect any one whole voice he had once heard. He was the author of many musical compositions. Having a son a Lieutenant in the Navy, who was with Capt. Sir Edward Pelew and Captain Reynolds, in several of their engagements he employed his poetical talents in celebrating their achievements. His memory remained unimpaired to the last; and an infance of which, he recollected that a considerable sum of money was due to him from a person who had no security for it given which account he had it paid off immediately. He was ever punctual in his attendance at Church, and never allowed a slight illness, or any other consideration, to interfere with his public duty in that place.

THE STORY OF EPONINA.

THE following little history has in it something so peculiarly interesting and affecting, that it can scarcely be read without the most lively emotion.

During the struggles of Otho, Vitellius, and Vespasian, for the sovereignty of Rome, and in the unsettled state of the empire, Sabinus, a native of Langres, an ambitious and wealthy man, of high quality, put in his claim, among others, to the possession of the throne. Encouraged by his countrymen in this bold undertaking, he presumed, by casting an imputation on the chastity of his grandmother, to trace his lineage from Julius Cæsar. Having revolted against the Romans, he caused himself, by his followers, to be saluted emperor.

But his temerity and presumption quickly received a shock: his troops, who were defeated and scattered in all directions, betook themselves to flight; while, of those who fell into the hands of the pursuers, not one was spared.

In the heart of Gaul, Sabinus might have found safety, and his tenderness of his wife permitted him to seek it. Espoused to Eponina, a lady of admirable beauty and accomplishments, from whom he could not prevail upon himself to live at a distance, he retired from the field of battle to his country house. Having were called together his servants, and the remnant of his people, he informed them of his disaster, and of the miscarriage of his enterprize; while he declared to them his resolution of putting a voluntary period to his existence, to escape the tortures prepared for him by the victors and avoid the fate of his unfortunate companions. He proceeded to thank them for their services, after which he gave them a solemn discharge: he ordered fire to be set to his mansion, in which he shut himself up; and, of this stately edifice, in a few hours nothing remained but a heap of ashes and ruins.

The news of the catastrophe, being spread abroad, reached the ears of Eponina, who, during the preceding events, had remained at Rome. Her grief and despair on learning the fate of a husband whom she so dearly loved, and who had fallen a victim to his tenderness for her, were too poignant to be long supported. In vain her friends and acquaintance offered her consolation; their efforts to reconcile her to her fate served but to aggravate her distress. She determined to abstain nourishment, and to re-unite herself in the grave to him without whom the felt existence to be an intolerable burthen.

For three days she persevered in her resolution. On the fourth, Martial, a freeman, who had been a favorite domestic in the service of her husband, desired to be admitted by his mistress to a private conference, on affairs of the utmost importance.

In this interview, Eponina learned, with an emotion that had nearly shaken to annihilation her languid and deliberated resolve, that Sabinus, whom the so bitterly lamented, was still living, and concealed in a subterraneous cavern under the ruins of his house, where he waited with impatience to receive and embrace his beloved & faithful wife. This scheme had been concerted in confidence with two of his domestics, in whose attachment Sabinus entirely confided. It had been hitherto concealed from Eponina, that through her unaffected grief on the supposed death of her husband, greater credit might be given to a report on which his preservation entirely depended. To these welcome tidings Martial presumed to add his advice, that his lady should still preserve the external marks of sorrow, and conduct herself with the utmost art and precaution.

Eponina promised, with transport, to observe all that was required of her, however difficult might be the task of dissimulation: and to endure yet a short day, lest suspicion should be awakened, for the meeting the anticipated with so much tenderness and joy.

After eight devoted by a mutual anxiety, this affectionate pair could no longer sustain a separation. By the management of the faithful freeman, Eponina was conveyed in the darkness of the night to the retreat of her husband, and brought back, with equal secrecy, to her own house, before the dawning of the ensuing day. These visits were repeated with the same precautions, and with great peril, during seven months, till it was determined, as a plan which would be attended with less inconvenience, and even with less danger, that Sabinus should be conveyed by night to his own house, and kept concealed in a remote and private apartment. But this project, in its execution, was found to abound in unforeseen difficulties: the extensive household and numerous visitants of Eponina, who feared to change her manner of life, kept her in a continual terror of a discovery, and harrassed her mind with unsupportable inquietude. Sabinus was therefore again removed to his subterranean abode, whose darkness love illumined.

The intercourse between the husband and wife thus continued for nine years, during which interval the pregnancy of Eponina offered them at one time the most cruel alarm. But this interesting and amiable woman, by a painful but ingenious stratagem contrived to elude suspicion and verify inquiry. She prepared an ointment, which by its external application, produced a swelling of the limbs, and dropsical symptoms, and thus accounted for the enlargement of her shape. As the hour of her delivery drew near, she shut herself, under pretence of a visit to a distant province, in the cavern of her husband; where, without assistance, and suppressing her groans, she gave birth to twin sons, whom she nurtured and reared in this gloomy retreat.

Conjugal and maternal affection, thus united while time and impunity had in some measure allayed her fears, drew her more frequently to the place which contained the objects of her cares, till her absence gave rise to curiosity and suspicion. She was at length traced to the cavern of the ill-fated Sabinus, who, being seized and loaded with irons, was, with his wife and children, conveyed to Rome.

Eponina, distracted at the consequence of her imprudence, rushed into the presence of the emperor Vespasian and presenting to him her children, prostrated herself at his feet. With the eloquence of a wife and mother, she pleaded the cause of her husband, and after having extenuated his fault, in proceeding from the disorders of the times rather than from a personal ambition, from the calamities of civil war, and the evils of oppression, she thus proceeded to address the emperor: "But we have waited, Sir, till these boys shall be able to join to those of their mother their sighs and tears, in the hope of disarming your wrath by our united supplications. They come forth, as from a sepulchre, to implore your mercy, on the first day in which they have ever beheld the light. Let our sorrow, our misfortunes, and the sufferings we have already undergone, move you to compassion, and obtain from you the life a husband and a father." The spectators melted into tenderness and pity at the affecting spectacle, every heart was moved, every eye was moist, but that of a pitiless tyrant, deaf to the voice of Nature, and inaccessible to her claims.

In vain did this heroic and admirable woman humble herself before a monster, whose heart ambition had festered, inexorable in cruelty and firm in his resolves. To political security the rights of humanity were sacrificed, and the husband and the father coldly doomed to death.

Eponina, determined to share the fate of her husband, wiped away her tears and, assuming an air of intrepidity, thus addressed the emperor: "Be assured," said she, in a firm and dignified tone, "that I know how to contemn life. With Sabinus I have existed nine years in the bowels of the earth, with a delight and tranquility unrivalled by tyrants amidst the splendors of a throne: and with him I am ready to unite myself, in death, with no less cheerfulness and fortitude."

This act of ill-timed severity threw a stain upon the character and memory of Vespasian, whose temper in other respects had not been accounted sanguinary. The generous affection and heroism of Eponina were consecrated in the admiration of future ages.

St. Domingo.—The following is the mode of rearing Blood-hounds in Saint-a Domingo, and the manner of exercising them by the Chasseurs:—

The moment the blood hounds are taken from the dam they are confined in kennels, with iron bars to front, like the dens used by showmen for confining wild beasts, where they are sparingly fed on the blood and entrails of animals. As they grow up, their keepers frequently expose in the front of their cage a figure resembling a negro, male or female, and of the same colour and dress, the body of which contains the blood and entrails of beasts, which being occasionally suffered to gush out, the figure attracts the attention of the dogs as the source of their food. They are then gradually reduced in their meals, till they are almost famished, while the image is still more frequently exposed to their view; and when they struggle with redoubled ferocity against their confinement to come at their prey, the image is brought nearer at intervals, till at last it is abandoned to their hunger, and being of wicker work, is in an instant torn to pieces, and thus they receive at a copious meal. While they gorge themselves with this, the keeper and his colleagues caress and encourage them. By this execrable artifice, the white people at once ingratiate themselves with the dogs, and teach them to regard a negro as their proper prey.—As soon as the young dogs are thus well habituated, they are taken out to be exercised on living objects and are trained with great care, till they arrive at the necessary nicety, and exactness in the pursuit of the poor wretches they are doomed to destroy. The common use of the dogs in the Spanish islands, was in chase of runaway negroes in the mountains. When once they got scent of the object, they speedily run him down, and devoured him, unless he could evade the pursuit by climbing a tree, in which case the dogs remained at the foot of the tree yelping in the most hideous manner till their keepers arrived. If the victim was to be preserved for a public exhibition of a cruel punishment, the dogs were then muzzled. If the prisoner loaded with chains. On his neck was placed a collar with spikes inward, and hooks outward, the latter for the purpose of entangling him in the bushes if he attempted to escape. If the unhappy wretch proceeded faster than his guard, it was construed into an attempt to run from them, and he was given up to the dogs, who instantly devoured him. Not seldom, on a journey of considerable length, these causes were feigned by their keepers to relieve them of their prisoners; and the inhuman monster who perpetrated the act, received the reward of ten dollars from the colony, on making oath of his having destroyed his fellow creature. The keepers, in general, acquire an absolute command over these dogs; but while the French army used them in their late war against St. Domingo, while they had possession of the Cape, the dogs frequently broke loose in that neighbourhood, and children were devoured in the public way; and sometimes they surprised a harmless family of labourers (who had submitted and furnished the French themselves with necessaries) at their simple meal, tore the babe from the breast of its mother, and involved the whole party in one common and cruel death, and returned, when gorged, with their horrid jaws drenched with human blood! Even the delicate huts of the negroes have been broke open by these dreadful animals, and the sleeping inhabitants have shared a like miserable fate!

THE ORACLE.

YORK:—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16.

A Meeting of the Lieutenancy for the West Riding of the County of York, was held on the 25th inst. in Flamboro' West, at which all the Officers of the Battalion were present. Lateſt Intelligence.

GREENOCK, October 20.

The Hamburgh mail due on Wedneſday laſt, arrived on Friday. The following is the ſubſtance of the very intereſting intelligence communicated by it.

The French troops under Bernadotte and Marmont, with the Bavarian auxiliaries, marching apparently towards Bohemia, had turned ſuddenly round, and proceeded in three columns towards Nuenberg, Dunawert, and Ingolſtadt, with a view to turn the flank of the Auſtrians To reach his deſtination with the greater celerity, Gen. Bernadotte, acting by previous inſtructions, proceeded on his march through the Pruſſian territory of Anſpach. The Pruſſian Commandant proteſted, but in vain—Bernadotte alledged his poſitive orders—and the Pruſſians were forced to retire before a ſuperior force. This outrage was next day renewed by the paſſage of 20,000 Bavarians through the ſame territory, in a parallel line. Againſt this violation of neutrality, the Pruſſian miniſter at Anſpach alſo proteſted, and his diſpatches, narrating the tranſaction exciting the ſtrongeſt ſenſation at the Court of Berlin.—A Council of State was immediately held, and the reſult ſent off to the King. His Pruſſian Majeſty arriving the ſame evening at his capital, held a ſecond Council, after which diſpatches were ſent to the Generals in all parts of his dominions, and to all the Courts in Europe. Some private letters ſay that his Pruſſian Majeſty has, in conſequence, declared, "That he would allow a free paſſage to the Ruſſian troops through his dominions—and that he would not in any way oppoſe the entrance of the allied forces into Hanover." But ſhocking as it is, this is not the only act of violence and injuſtice which this mail enables us to record. The Uiturper has again violated the rights of the diplomatic character, and the law of nations, by iſſuing orders for the arreſt of two foreign Miniſters, their four Secretaries of Legation, and a Charge d'Affaires, at Stutgard?—orders given at the time when he was hoſpitably entertained at the palace of Louiſburgh, belonging to the Duke of Wurtemberg, whoſe capital he has ſo groſsly inſulted. Amongſt the perſons thus arreſted, with every circumſtance of nattineſs and publicity, were the Auſtrian and Ruſſian Miniſters. The whole were put into cloſe confinement.

The only intelligence from Italy by this mail is that the Auſtrian troops are concentered on the Adige; and the Archduke Charles has removed his headquarters from Padua to Vicenza.

The diſembarkation of 30,000 Ruſſians at Stralſund is fully confirmed. They are to be joined, in Pomerania, by 14,000 Swedes, and the junction of our German Legion will render them an effective force of more than 40,000 men.

Dutch papers of ſo late a date as the 13th inſt. were received on Saturday morning.—Some extracts from the Paris papers of the 11th are contained in theſe journals, by which we have the ſatisfaction to find, that the French are ſtill unable to boaſt of any greater ſucceſs in Germany, than the evacuation of three towns near Ulm; and even this ſcrigrave anxiety as a report. The Auſtrians are, in the mean time, concentrating their forces; without, however, abandoning any fortified place, or ſtrong poſt. The arrival of the Archduke will, it is hoped, ſoon enable them to enter upon a more brilliant career. To haſten this, no leſs than three thouſand waggons are employed upon the transportation of ſick and wounded, conſiſting of forty-four battalions of chaſſeurs ſeriously.

The Hamburgh papers are ſilent reſpecting the return of the French troops to Hanover, mentioned in our laſt. We however, are poſitive of the fact, and that the Emperor Napoleon, under which thoſe papers are printed, to conſider this as any retractation of the report.

The ſcarcity of money at Hamburgh is ſuch, that commercial diſcounts there, have inſtances to ten per cent, and ſome of the greateſt houſes are expected to ſtop payment.

October 23.

A Gottenburgh mail arrived on Sunday.—Its chief details thoſe movements of the Ruſſian armies, of which, from other ſources, we have been already informed. One letter, however, dated Stockholm, ſtates poſitively, that Sweden will not conſider the invaſion of any part of the Pruſſian territory as violated by the troops of either of the belligerent powers, the armies of his majeſty would be put in motion to chaſtiſe ſuch violation. It did not appear to be known at the time this letter was written, that the French had forced their March through the diſtrict of Anſpach.

A ſecret Expedition will, it is ſaid, leave this country in the courſe of the enſuing week. A detachment of the Guards is to ſail, it is ſaid, with the German Legion, the greater part of which has already embarked. It is alſo ſtated that Sir Sidney Smith is to have the naval command.

From the Quebec Mercury of N. 9. 4.

We have been favoted with the peruſal of late Glaſgow papers, from which we have ſelected the following paragraphs.

DEAL, Sept. 9.

Arrived the Uranie friguate, with 12 ſail of the homeward bound Quebec fleet under convoy; the reſt of which, conſiſting of 15 ſail, went into the weſtern ports. On board the Uranie was his Excellency Sir Robert Shore Milnes, late Governor of Quebec, his family and ſuite, paſſengers. Sir R. came on ſhore about ten o'clock this morning, and went to Croſs's hotel, where he at preſent remains. The Uranie ſailed from Quebec the beginning of Auguſt, and has had a very favourable paſſage.—The Lord Biſhop of Quebec came paſſenger in the Anne, Capt. Boyd, under convoy of the Uranie, and landed here this morning, and immediately took poſt chaiſe for London.

The Jamaica fleet arrived in the Downs this day. It conſiſted of one hundred and forty ſail.

LONDON, Sept. 9.

Government have received accounts of great deſertion having taken place in the French army in Italy, they have been ſo great, that the camp at Mirengo has been in conſequence broken up. Bands of 4 or 300 deſert at a time with their arms. Not that they deſert for the purpoſe of going over to Auſtria, but for the purpoſe of avoiding all military ſervice altogether. As the deſert in ſtrong bodies, the out-poſts and patroles are unable to reſiſt them, they haſten to the Alps and there ſeparate. The deſtruction of a continental war is deep and general throughout France.

The day before the Beſſey left Greenock, a ſhip arrived there with the maſters of eight veſſels that had been captured by a French privateer, chiefly in Lat. 58. long. 35. among them were the maſters of the Integrity and John, two of the Quebec fleet, under convoy of the Uranie, that left this in Aug. laſt. The Union, Tulloch, one of the ſame fleet, had arrived at Greenock.

A gentleman in the neighbourhood of Aberdeen, in thoſe gardens the caterpillar was beginning its ravages, has got rid of that deſtructive vermin by the following ſimple expedient.—He took the advantage of a rainy morning, when the leaves were wet, to ſprinkle the bulbes, eſpecially the young ſhoots and the under part of the bulbes, with fine ſand. The effect of this was, that theſe inſects, intangled with the ſand, which adhered to them, dropped off, feemingly in agony—and there has not ſince been the leaſt appearance of their coming again. If the weather ſhould be dry the bulbes ought to be well ſprinkled with a watering pot.

It is found that the beſt method of preſerving eggs conſiſts in plunging them, for two ſeconds in boiling water, —they may be then kept for many months, if depoſited in a cool place, or in ſalt.

An inſtance has lately been given by Mr. J. Heath, of Grocers' Hall Court, of a young gentleman in the laſt ſtage of the typhus fever being cured by the uſe of yeaſt.

Oil of Amber ſtrongly recommended for the Ague.—When the fit is on, 9 drops are to be taken in a little tea: the quantity is to be increaſed a drop morning and evening, and to be continued till the complaint is removed, which generally happens in eight or ten days.

At Lyons in France, is a newly invented knitting loom, by means of which four hundred threads are interwoven with the greateſt exactneſs, by merely turning a winch.

THE TRAVELLER.

During the ſummer of laſt year, occaſion—no matter what—called an honeſt Engliſh ſquire to take a journey to Peterſburg, Ruſſia.

Untravelled and unknowing, he provided himſelf with no paſſport—his buſineſs concerned himſelf alone, and what had foreign nations to do with him?

His route lay through the ſtates of different powers;—he landed in Holland—paſſed the uſual examination; but inſiſting that the affairs which bro't him there were of a private nature, he was queſtioned and detained a ſhort time; but appearing to be incapable of deſign, was at length permitted to purſue his journey.

To the officer of the guard who had detained him, he made frequent complaints of the loſs he might ſuſtain by delay;—the officer, after a long pauſe, ſlowly drew the pipe from his mouth, and emitting the ſmoke; "Mynheer," ſays he, "When you firſt ſet your foot on the land of the Seven United Provinces, you ſhould have declared you came hither on affairs of commerce," and replacing his pipe, relapſed into immoveable taciturnity.

Releaſed from his unſocial companion he the next day arrived at a French poſt, where the centinel of the advanced guard requeſted the honor of his perſmiſſion to paſs for his paſſport;—on his failing to produce any, he was entreated to pardon the liberty he took of conducting him to the commandant; but it was his duty, and he muſt, however reluctantly, perform it.

Monſieur le Commandant, received him with pompous politeneſs; he made the uſual inquiries, and our traveller, determined to avoid the error which had produced ſuch inconvenience, replied, "that commercial concerns drew him to the continent."

"Ma foi," ſays the commandant, "c'eſt un negociant, un bourgeois;—take him away to the guard-houſe, we will examine him to morrow—at preſent we muſt drefs for the Comedie; Allons."—Our traveller ſwore it was uncivil, and unfriendly, and ungenerous; five hundred Frenchmen might travel through Great Britain without a queſtion; they never queſtioned any ſtranger in Great Britain, nor ſtopped him—nor impriſoned him, nor guarded him.

"Monſieur," ſays the centinel, as he conducted him to the guard room, "you ſhould not have mentioned commerce to Monſieur le Commandant—no gentleman in France diſgraces himſelf with trade—we deſpiſe traffic. You ſhould have informed Monſieur le Commandant, that you entered the dominions of the King of the French, to improve in ſinging or in dancing, or in dreſſing; arms are the profeſſion of men of faſhion." He had the honor of paſſing the night with a French guard, and the next day was diſmiſſed.

Proceeding on his journey, he fell in with a detachment of German Chaſſeurs—they demanded his name, quality and buſineſs,—he came, he ſaid, to dance,—to ſing, and to dreſs. "He is a Frenchman," ſaid the corporal; "a ſpy," cries the ſergeant!—he was directed to mount behind a dragoon, and carried to the next Municipal town.

There he was ſoon diſcharged, but not without a word of advice. "We, Germans," ſaid the officer, "eat, drink, and ſmoke; theſe are our favourite employments,—and had you informed the dragoons you followed no other buſineſs, you would have ſaved them and yourſelf infinite trouble."

He ſoon approached the Pruſſian dominions, where his examination was ſtill more ſtrict;—and on anſwering that his only deſigns were to eat, and to drink, and to ſmoke,—"To eat! and to drink! and to ſmoke!" exclaimed the officer with aſtoniſhment, "Sir, you muſt be forwarded to Potſdam—there is the only buſineſs of mankind."

The King having learned the character of the traveller, ordered a paſſport to be made out for him, obſerving, 'It is an ignorant, an innocent Engliſhman! the Engliſh are unacquainted with military duties, ſo let him paſs on.'

Being arrived on the frontiers of Poland, he flattered himſelf his troubles were at an end; but he reckoned without his hoſt. 'Your buſineſs in Poland?' interrogated the officer. 'I really don't know, Sir.—' Not know your buſineſs, Sir,' returned the officer, 'I muſt conduct you to the Staroſt.'

'For the love of God,' ſays the wearied traveller, 'take pity on me; I have been impriſoned in Holland for being deſirous of keeping my own affairs to myſelf.

'I have been confined all night in a French guard houſe, for declaring myſelf a merchant.

'I have been compelled to ride ſeven miles behind a German dragoon, for profeſſing myſelf a man of pleaſure.

'I have been carried fifty miles a priſoner in Pruſſia, for owning my attachment to eaſe and good living.

'If you will have the goodneſs to let me know how I may render ſuch an account of myſelf as not to give offence, I ſhall ever conſider you as my friend and protector.'

The Editor of an Engliſh work lately publiſhed for the uſe of Farmers and Gardeners, by foretelling changes in the weather, &c. obſerves, that "When the Swallows fly high after their prey we think ourſelves ſure of a ſerene ſky; but when they fly low and brush the ſurface of the water with their wings, we judge that rain is not far off.

"When the Gnats collect themſelves before the ſetting of the ſun, and form a ſort of vortex, in the ſhape of a column, it announces fine weather.

"The earth, after a very long and abundant rain is ſometimes ſeen to be almoſt dry, and the roads quite free from dirt. This is a ſign that the rain has not altogether ceaſed; and denotes a continual efflux of electric matter, which being renewed, carries with it, in the form of a vapour, all the moiſture that falls on the earth.

"There is ſometimes a great deal of dirt after a moderate rain: this is a ſign of fine weather; becauſe it indicates that evaporation has ceaſed.

"There is no ſuner ſign of rain than two different currents of clouds, eſpecially if the under current flies faſt before the wind.—And if two ſuch currents appear in hot weather, they ſhew that a thunder ſtorm is gathering."

In wet and dry ſeaſons, the following rules are laid down:—"When there has been no ſtorm before or after the vernal equinox, the enſuing ſummer is generally dry, at leaſt five times in ſix.

"When a ſtorm happens from the eaſt, either on the 19th, 20th, or 21ſt of March, the ſucceeding ſummer is dry, four times in five.

"When a ſtorm ariſes on the 25th, 26th or 27th of March, and not before, in any point, the ſucceeding ſummer is wet four times in five.

"If there ſhould be a ſtorm at ſouth weſt, or weſt ſouth weſt, on the 19th, 20th, 21ſt or 22d, the ſucceeding ſummer is generally wet, five times in ſix. It rains leſs in March than in November, in the proportion of ſeven to twelve.

"It rains generally leſs in April than in October, in the proportion of one to two; and leſs in May than September, in the proportion of three to four.

"When it rains plentifully in May, it generally rains but little in September; and the contrary.

"Out of 41 years there will in general be 24 dry ſprings, ſix wet, and 13 variable ones; alſo 20 wet ſummers, 16 dry, and five variable ones, and probably 11 dry ſummers, 11 wet, and 19 variable ones.

"The quantity of rain which falls in nine ſucceſſive years is nearly equal to that which falls in the next following nine, and every 19th year is generally ſimilar. This ſimilarity was very ſtriking between the temperature of the years 1721, 1720, 1739, 1758, and 1777."

ADVICE.

WE ought to be willing and ſometimes forward to give advice to others relating to the affairs of life and conduct. In ſome caſes it is a ſolemn and unavoidable duty to counſel a friend, whether he deſires it or not. In travelling together the journey of life, we often have an opportunity to ſhow a perplexed proſpect the way out of his entanglement, and to ſtep up to him who has loſt his road and wants a guide ſaying, "this is the way, walk in it." By properly embracing ſuch occaſions, they particularly, whom abilities, attention or experience have made faithful judges of what is good and evil, ſafe and dangerous, will be inſtrumental, in many inſtances, or directing the ignorant and putting the miſtaken and deluded right. They will often do the greateſt ſervice to the young, whom by this method, they will reſcue from many a ſnare and ſave from many a pang.

There is indeed much ground for complaint that advice is generally thrown away.—Thoſe we would influence from decency perhaps conſent to hear us, and then do as they pleaſe: never diſpleaſing "that their feelings blunt their judgement and that the paſſions are then the moſt to be deſtrouded when they appear moſt reſponſible."

But the little effect of good advice is not always owing to the refractory diſpoſition of the receiver, but is often partly the conſequence of the impoſper motives and manner of the giver. It would ſpring from love and be guided by prudence. To ſhow ourſelves ſuperior or wiſdom, it is frequently offered—at unſuitable times, and in a haughty and provoking manner. We have ſeen thoſe who appear'd willing that their counſel ſhould not be followed, that they may afterwards triumph in publiſhing the conſequences of neglecting it. But if there are any ſincerely deſirous to be uſeful in this way and who will uſe, as much pains to perſuade others to act wiſely and virtuouſly as we are ready to do in bringing them over to ſerve our own intereſts, it is certain that much good may be done by judicious and friendly approof.—When our opinion is directly and ſucceſsfully aſked on a point of conſequence, it is both unjuſt and unkind to refuſe it, as it is to give it with an artful reſerve. When not aſked by thoſe who need it, the omiſſion may proceed from ignorance or timidity; from not knowing that they need it and not perceiving their fault or their danger. In ſuch a caſe we muſt not wait to be conſulted. "Not every by-ſtander indeed is authorized to intermeddle in other men's affairs and conduct." But they who know the circumſtances and poſſeſs weight muſt be cautioned againſt being too backward to this benevolent office, through fear of loſing labor or giving offence. A few words in ſome inſtances may prevent great miſchief; poſſibly ruin; and if they are ineffectual at firſt, there may be much room for hope and much encouragement for benevolence to perſevere. Where authority is joined to earneſtneſs and affection, there is ground to expect much ſucceſs. By rational inſtruction and unwearied perſuaſion a parent may acquire a controul over the heart of his child and lead it to virtue and to heaven. He may render his offspring a ſervice, in comparion with which wealth is a bauble. The poor man upon his dying pillow, who has fulfilled his duty, is able to ſay, "Al-ver and gold I had none, but such as I had, gave I unto my child, I have given you good counsel enforced by good example; I have taught you to obey the dictates of conscience and seek the favor of God." This reflection is a reviving cordial in this extremity of nature. May it be yours in the same awful hour.

IGNORANCE OF OURSELVES.

HOW strangely are we lanaered in this mortal state! We open our eyes, we employ our senses, and take notice of a thousand things around us; but we see and know almost nothing of ourselves. We are confessors indeed of our being, and therefore we are sure that we are; but what we are, lies deep in darkness. We see and feel these limbs, and this flesh of ours; we are acquainted at least with the outside of this animal machine, and sometimes call it ourselves, though philosophy and reason would rather lay it in our houses, or tabernacle, because we possess it or dwell in it; it is our engine, because we move and manage it at pleasure. But what is this brief which dwells in this tabernacle, which possesses this house, which moves and manages this engine and these limbs? Here we are much at a loss, and our thoughts generally run into some airy forms of being, some empty refinement upon sensible images, some thin rarified shape and subtile constitution. We know not this self of ours, which is conscious of its own existence, which feels to near a union of the flesh and limbs, and which knows a multitude of things within and without us. A furprising phænomenon in nature is this, that the soul of man, which ranges abroad through the heavens, and the earth, and the deep waters, and unfolds a thousand mysteries of nature, which penetrates the systems of stars and suns, worlds upon worlds, should be so unhappy a stranger at home, and not be able to tell what it is, or what it is made of.

And as we are ignorant what ourselves are in a natural sense, so as we are as little acquainted with ourselves in a moral respect. Self-love, and pride, and various passions, throw an everlasting cloud upon our own temper and conduct. Whether we have any lovely qualities in us or no, yet we fondly love ourselves, and then we readily believe all lovely qualities belong to us.

It is hard, exceeding hard, to convince a lover that his blemishes are to be found in the dear centre of his affections; but we are warm and zealous lovers of ourselves in all the ages of life. Youth is wild and licentious; but in riper years, we perfuade ourselves that we are only making a juft ufe of our liberty. In that fcene of folly we are light and vain, and let no bounds to the ironic humour; yet we fancy it is merely an innocent gaiety of heart, which belongs to the feelings of nature, and the blooming hours of life. In the age of manhood, a rugged or a haughty temper is angry and quarrelsome; the brisk and the peevish in order years, if not before, are ever kindling into paffion and refentment; but they all agree to pronounce their furious or frantic conduct a mere neceffary reproof of the indignities which were offered them by the world. Self-love is fruitful in fine names for its own iniquities. —Others are fordid and covetous to a ftonifhi degree, uncompaffionate and cruel to the miferable; and yet they take this vile practice to be only a juft exercife of frugality, and a careful care of their own houfhold. Thus every vice that belongs to us, is conftrued into a virtue, and if there are any fhadows or appearances of virtue upon us, thefe poor appearances and fhadows are magnified and reckoned into the divine qualities of an angel. We who pafs thefe juft cenfures on the follies of our acquaintance, perhaps approve the very fame things in ourselves, by the influence of the favourable partial principle of flattery and felf-kindnefs. So different is our judgement of the fame weaknefs when we fee them in ourfelves, from the fentence we pronounce upon them if we fee them in our neighbour.

Thus we begin to learn and practife early this art of felf-deceiving; we grow up to difguife it felf-ftarcely, and we live unknown to ourfelves. Happy for us, if our eyes are opened to behold the impofture before we go off the ftage; for fuch grofs miftakes will then be fatal, or at leaft extremely dangerous, when it is too late to correct them.

Teach me, O my Maker, the knowledge of myself; the moral or divine knowledge, which is neceffary to correct my errors, and to reduce my feet to the facred paths of virtue. Let me fee fo much of my folly, vice, and vanity, as to be fond of this wretched feif no longer. Let me grow fo out of love with myfelf, as to fly from myfelf, to the arms and mercy of my God. There mould and fafhion me alone thine own image in all the moral qualities of my love, and let me find in myfelf thofe divine features which will be ever beautiful in thy eyes! Grant me this bleffing, O Father of fpirits; nor I cannot reft till I feel and know myfelf made like thee. When this is found I can bear the reft of my ignorance with humble patience, till I put off this vail and drapcrie of flefh; I am yet to learn what ftrft of being my foul fhall I arrive at the world of jpirits.

ANCIENT LIVING.

Part of the Journal of the Celebrated ELIZABETH WOODVILLE, previous to her Marriage with Lord Grey, her ever after words Queen to Edward the IVth, and died in confinement at South-wark, under Henry the VIIth, in 1488. This was extracted from an ancient Manufcript, preserved in Drummond Caftle, and communicated to the public by Lady BURDETT.

"Monday morning.—Rofe at four o'clock, and helped Catherine to milk the cows; Rachael, the other dairy maid, having ficknefs her hand as fo bad a manner the night before. Made a poffet for Rachael, and gave Robin a penny to get himfelf from the apothecary.

"Six o'clock.—The buttock of beef too much boiled, and have a little of the fide.—Note—To talk to the cook about the firft fault, and to mend the fecond myfelf, by tapping a frefh cag of ale.

"Seven o'clock.—Went to walk with the Lady my mother in the court-yard: faid by mine and women; chid Roger feverely for expecting fome ill will at accounting to with brothers beer.

"Eight o'clock.—Went into the paddock behind the houfe, with my maid Dorothy; caught Thump, the little pouery myfelf, and rode a matter of an hour without bridle or bridle.

"Ten o'clock.—Went to dinner—John Grey a moft comely youth—but what is that to me? A virtuous maiden fhould be entirely under the direction of her parents. John can but little, and fhe is a great many tender looks at me—faid women would never be handfome in his opinion who were not good tempered. —I hope my temper is not intolerable, as thofe fmall fault with it, but Roger, and he is the moft obfervefly fawning man in our family—John Grey likes whom he will; my mouth are of a pretty good fize, I think; and my face is as black as jet, though I fay it; and John, if I miftake not, is of the fame opinion.

"Eleven o'clock.—Rofe from the table—the company all defirous of walking to the fields—John Grey would lift me over every ftile, and twice he fqueezed my hand with much vehemence.—I cannot fay I fhould have any objection to John Grey—he plays at prifon bafe as well as any of the country gentlemen; is remarkably dextrous in his pattents, my Lord and Lady, and never miffes Church on a Sunday.

"Three o'clock. Poor farmer Johnfon's houfe burnt down by accident firft.—John Grey propofed a fubfcription among the company for the reliefe of the farmer, and gave no lefs than four pounds with this benevolent fpeech.—Mem.—I never law him look fo comely as at that moment.

"Four o'clock.—Went to prayers.

"Six o'clock.—Fed the dogs and poultry.

"Seven o'clock.—Supper on the table: delayed till that hour on account of farmer Robinfon's misfortune.—Mem.—The goofe-pye too much baked, and the pork roafted to rags.

"Nine o'clock.—The company fall afleep; their late hours very difagreeable.—Loft my prayers a fecond time; John Grey diftracted my thoughts too much the laft time.—Felt afleep, and dreamed about John Grey.

A gentleman who had been commiffioned by his wife to make a purchafe for her at a milliner's, being accofted by a friend on his return, begged to be excufed from ftopping, as he had bought a bonnet for his wife "and was afraid the fafhion might change before he got home."

Lateſt Intelligence.

MADRID, September 15.

Admiral Gravina, who had given in his reſignation as commander, in conſequence of the differences which had taken place between him and Admiral Gravina, commander of the ſquadron at Ferrol, has not only reſumed the command, but has been appointed commander in chief of all the Spaniſh ſea forces united in Cadiz.

The following is an exact ſtatement of the maritime forces in the port of Cadiz:

1. Spaniſh ſquadron—Don Frederico Gravina commander in chief: the Prince of the Auſtrians of 120 guns; the Argonaut and the Neptune of 80; the Terrible, the Montanez, the Monarca, the St. John of Nepoſmiceno, the St. Auguſtine, the St. Aldephonſo, and the Francis d'Aſſize of 74; the St. Pulgerapio of 64; the frigate Flora of 44; the Corvette L'Indigadera of 24.

2. French ſquadron—Admiral Villeneuve, Commander in Chief: the Bouccentaure, the Formidable, the Neptune, and the Indomptable of 80 guns; L'Aigerivas, the Plato, the Mont Blanc, the Swiſſure, the Scipio, the Berwick, L'Intrepide, the L'Aigle, the Hero, the Furgueux, the Duguay, the Trouin, the L'Argonaute, the Terrible, and L'Achille, of 74; frigates, L'Hermoine, L'Hortenſe, La Cornelie, La Themis, and the Rhine of 40; brigs L'Argus et d'Observateur of 16 guns; the Curieux of 18.

LONDON, October 4.

The following Bulletin was this morning iſſued from the Admiralty, and poſted at Lloyd's.

Admiralty-Office, October 4.

"Extract from the log-book of his Majeſty's ſhip Haddock. Friday, Sept. 27, lat. 49, 8, long. 9, wind variable E. N. E. at half paſt two ſeveral guns fired in the N. W. at three obſerved his Majeſty's ſhip Calcutta, haul out of the convoy; at half paſt three a heavy cannonading commenced between the Calcutta and a very large ſhip; obſerved another ſhip coming up, firing her bow chaſers, and two more ſhips following her. At half paſt 4 obſerved the large ſhip to haul from the Calcutta and heave to. At dark ſpoke the Indus Indiaman, who informed me that the ſhip which engaged the Calcutta, was a large frigate, and the ſhips in chace of her were line of battle ſhips. At half paſt nine heard a very heavy cannonading in the S. W. ſuppoſed to be between the Calcutta and the enemy. At half paſt ten the firing ceaſed. At day light four ſail in ſight. At noon freſh breezes and cloudy; three ſtrange ſail in ſight. It is perfectly underſtood at the India Houſe, that none of the Calcutta's convoy were regular Indiamen.—They conſiſted, in all probably, of the Indus extra ſhip from Madras, and ſome South Sea Whalers and Swedes. When Admiral Rainier ſailed from St. Helena, he left the following veſſels there—the Indus; Maria Caroline (a Swede) from China; Alexana, from the South Seas; and a Dutch ſhip, priſe to the Calcutta.

October 5.

In addition to the Bulletin which we gave yeſterday, ſtrengthening his Majeſty's ſhip Calcutta and her convoy, we have now to communicate the following extract of the log book of the African South Sea Whaler, tranſmitted to the Admiralty:—

"Thurſday, the 26th Sept. lat. 40, 20, N. long. 8, 40, W. the Calcutta made a ſignal for a ſtrange fleet, and in the courſe of the day another for the enemy, and for the convoy to diſperſe. Obſerved a ſhip of the line and four frigates, with about twenty ſail of merchant ſhips, ſuppoſed to be Weſt India men, which they had captured. Two French frigates in chaſe of the African, coming up faſt, hauled to the windward.

"Friday 27th—French frigates ſtill in chaſe; at about 4 P. M. ſaw one of the enemy open her fire upon the Calcutta, which was returned from the fleet chaſe guns of the latter. Apprehend that the whole convoy, except ourſelves, fell into the enemy's hands. At ſun-ſet heard the report of many guns, and obſerved flaſhes in the W. S. W."

Upon this intereſting ſubject no official account has yet reached the Admiralty; but it is aſcertained, by diſpatches brought from Admiral Cornwallis, by the Adrian cutter, Lieut. Forbes, that on Friday ſe'nnight, a ſquadron had been ſent from the Channel fleet in queſt of the enemy. The morning of that day Rear Admiral Stirling, with five ſail of the line rejoined Admiral Cornwallis, after an unſucceſsful cruize in purſuit of the Rochefort ſquadron, which was known to be out a month. Such has been the anxiety of Admiral Cornwallis for the ſecurity of our trade, that when the Adrian left the fleet he had not a ſingle frigate with him, having diſpatched them all on the look-out for the enemy.

HALIFAX, November 19.

Arrived a ſmall ſchooner from Arichat, in twelve days:—we are ſorry to learn by this veſſel, that the ſhip Two Friends, with troops from Portſmouth for Quebec, was wrecked between Gabeouche and Louiſbourg Points (Cape Breton) on the night of the 22d ult. and that Enſign Avelyn, of the 41ſt regiment, one private of do. one private of the 100th regt. and one child were drowned.

NEW-YORK, December 7.

The Engliſh Eaſt and Weſt India convoys, of 140 ſail, with eight 54and 74 gun ſhips, 3 Frigates, 2 cutter brigs, and a number of tranſports, ſailed from Madeira on the 3d of October, in great haſte, with 12,000 troops on board, under the Command of Sir Home Popham and General Baird, on a ſecret expedition, ſuppoſed for the Cape of Good Hope, the Spaniſh Colonies in America, or for ſome other very important object.

By the arrival of the ſhip Ardent, Captain Croſthwaite, in 38 days from Greenock, we are furniſhed with London dates ſeveral days later than before received. We are unable this day to give more than a brief ſketch of the leading articles.

Hoſtilities had not commenced in Germany, nor had they in Italy on the 3d of Oct. which is the date of the laſt accounts from thence. The Auſtrian army is ſtated to amount to 140,000 men, whilſt that under Maſſena does not exceed 85,000.

The Auſtrians had collected their forces in the Adige, and were waiting the arrival of the Ruſſians.

The French and Bavarian army had violated the neutrality of the Pruſſian territory; and this circumſtance, it was ſuppoſed, would have the effect of inducing Pruſſia to join the coalition.

A letter received in Glaſgow from London, ſays, "I have this moment been informed by a gentleman (who ſays he had it from authority) that the king of Pruſſia had put Dutoc, the French Ambaſſador at Berlin, into confinement. If this be true, it is of importance."

Bonaparte has arreſted the Auſtrian and Ruſſian Miniſters, with their Secretaries of Legation, &c. at Stutgard.

The whole of the Eaſt India fleet, which it was reported, had been captured by the Rochefort ſquadron, have ſafely arrived in the Britiſh ports. The only veſſel loſt is the Calcutta, by whom the fleet was convoyed.

Peace is concluded in India between Lord Lake and the Rajah of Bhurtpore.

ALBANY, December 13.

By the arrival at Portland (Maine) of the ſhip Frederick, Capt. Moore, from Liverpool, and the ſhip Ardent, Capt. Croſthwaite, at New York, from Greenock, London dates to the 25th October are received—from which the following are ſelections.

SWABIA, Oct. 3.

On the 18 Oct. the firſt act of hoſtility took place at Valhingen, in the territory of Wertemburgh. An Auſtrian patrole of cavalry being ſurmounted by a French detachment to retire, and refuſing, were obliged to ſurrender priſoners.

MENTZ, Oct. 5.

In a few days, the ſix principal corps of the great army, which is rapidly advancing towards Swabia and Bavaria, in the direction of Newburgh and Ingolſtadt, will have formed a junction; they amount in the whole to 140,000.

It is reported to-day, that Count Philip Cobentzel has paſſed thro' Straſburgh, on his return from Paris.

The Electors of Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and Baden, have joined their troops to the French.

BERLIN, Oct. 8.

His Pruſſian Majeſty propoſes to ſet out in a few days, to comply with the requeſt of the Emperor of Ruſſia. The interview of the two Sovereigns was to be at Pulwi; but it appears that the departure of his Majeſty is deferred.

Major Hake is returned, and has brought to our Sovereign a letter, from the Emperor Alexander, in the handwriting of that Monarch.

ROVEREDO, Sept. 27.

The ſpirit of the Auſtrian army in Italy is excellent; the regiments have mutually ſworn to each other, not to retreat before the enemy; but to conquer or die.

Extract from a private letter, dated St. Peterſburgh, Sept. 24.

"On Thurſday laſt, the Emperor accompanied by the Prince Czartoriſky, Gen. Novoſhitzoff, &c. ſet off to join the army on the frontiers, (the place of rendezvous is Breſtlitoffeky) whither it is ſaid, the Britiſh and Auſtrian Miniſters will ſhortly follow. The Ruſſian army already marched amounts to 340,000 men, the army of reſerve conſiſts of 300,000, and a general recruiting has taken place, which is to produce 250,000 more.

PARIS, Oct. 6.

This day a meſſage ſent by expreſs from the Emperor, was read in the ſenate informing that he had appointed the Grand Electot Joſeph, (Bonaparte's brother) to preſide over the civil adminiſtration during his abſence.—The Senate voted thanks to the Emperor, and ſent a deputation to Joſeph Bonaparte expreſſive of their ſatisfaction at his nomination.

VIENNA, Oct. 2.

His Excellency Count Haugwitz, the Pruſſian Miniſter, arrived here on the 26th of Sept. It is known that the object of the journey of his Excellency is to maintain the tranquility of Europe, and to conciliate, by the means of mediation, the powers which are on the brink of a rupture. It is ſaid, that our court is much inclined to this reconciliation, under certain conditions, and eſpecially if ſecurity can be obtained.

It is believed that the Emperor will be preſent at the approaching interview between the Emperor Alexander, and the King of Pruſſia.

LONDON, Oct. 7.

The American brig Harry and Jane, which arrived at Falmouth on Wedneſday laſt from Senegal, reports that ſhe heard a heavy firing which continued ſeveral hours, on the morning of the 26th and the night of the 27th, in long. 22. This was near the time and place of the Calcutta's action.

October 21.

It is ſtated on the authority of private letters from Holland, that Pruſſia and Denmark have entered into a convention with Saxony, Heſſe and ſome of the ſmaller ſtates, for preventing the landing of all foreign troops upon the part of Germany, and their paſſage thro' their territories and dependencies.

A Ruſſian ſquadron, conſiſting of five ſhips of battle ſhips, paſſed the back of the Goodwin Sands yeſterday. They were probably on their way to Portſmouth.

The Secretary of State has directed that notice be given to America, Denmark, &c. that Britiſh veſſels captured by the enemy, and purchaſed by Americans, Danes, &c. cannot be admitted to enter into any of the ports of this kingdom.

According to letters from Liſbon, tranquility has been reſtored at Madrid, and ſome of the perſons who had been obliged to leave the capital were allowed to return.—The ſame letters add that the camp before Gibraltar has been conſiderably reinforced.

Some veſſels have cleared out for Hamburgh direct, in conſequence of the ſuſpenſion of the blockade of the Elbe.

The territory of Anſpach, which the French troops have invaded, ſo contrary to the faith hitherto invariably kept by Belligerent powers with Neutral States, is the Margraviate of that name, which the former King of Pruſſia purchaſed of his Highneſs the Margrave of Anſpach, now reſident in this country, for a life annuity of 400,000l. ſterling.

Extract of a letter received from St. Pierres, (Mart.) dated October 26.

"We yeſterday received the melancholy news of the capital town (Fortheres) of St Lucie, being entirely deſtroyed by fire——the loſs has been very great; the flames ſpread with ſo much fury and quickneſs, that moſt people loſt all their furniture, not even having their cloaths."

CURIOUS EXPERIMENT.

Deal, October 16.—On Monday morning Mr. Francis, who laſt year contrived the Expedition and manufactured the machines which Sir Home Popham ran among the enemy's fleets at Boulogne, arrived here from Dover; and a rumour was ſoon ſpread that he was going to make an experiment, to blow up a brig of 300 tons, with one of his new invented Catamarans. Curioſity was ſoon alive, and about four P. M. great crowds of people aſſembled on the beach, from Deal to Walmer Caſtle, oppoſite which the brig lay. A few ſeveral people working about her, and much movement of boats, but till dark the brig remained unhurt: and the people much diſappointed thinking the experiment had failed, very liberally curſed Mr. Francis, and his Catamarans. On Tueſday, however, about three P. M. he again appeared on the beach, where I and many a few, whilſt curioſity had not abated, were aſſembled; we followed him to the water's edge, oppoſite Walmer Caſtle, where he was met by a Lady, who, I was told, was Lady Esther Stanhope, and ſeveral others. After walking ſome time, he took a white pocket handkerchief to the end of his cane, and made a ſignal to the brig, which lay about half a mile from the ſhore; and immediately a long pendant quickly darted by the bow of the brig, and threw ſome thing into the water, which I preſume was the catamaran. Mr. Francis then threw his watch, and turning to the Lady, I heard him ſay, "fifteen minutes is her time." I was now all anxiety for the reſult, and held my watch, counting the minutes. In fifteen minutes the explaſion took place, not much louder than a ſmart gunpowder; an immenſe column of water and ſmoke was thrown up, which almoſt obſcured the veſſel; ſhe appeared to be lifted out of the water, and heeling to larboard, ſhe ſeparated in the middle, and the two ends immediately went to the bottom, in one minute nothing was to be ſeen as her laſt moments of diſtreſs wreck; the fight was the moſt awful and grand I ever witneſſed. She was riding at anchor, maſts bare, new painted, and ſeemingly prepared for a voyage; and as if by a craſh of nature, in one minute ſhe diſappeared and went to the bottom. The wreck was quickly ſurrounded by the boats of the cuſtoms, and I among others, went to view her remains. Her fore-caſtle and main deck were ſtaved in, ſhe was bilged coming in two, the planks of her deck and ſides were ſplit in a thouſand pieces, the fore maſt was broke in two, the main-maſt and pump were blown out of her, and the mizen topſail yard was blown up to the croſs-trees; her knees were torn from her ſides, and the beams of the deck broke in ſeveral pieces; in ſhort, it is impoſſible to deſcribe a more complete deſtruction of a veſſel, or a more dreadful craſh of materials. It was perhaps one of the moſt curious experiments which had been made in modern times, for who would not be convinced that the powder would ſpread its force on the water, which is moveable, and not paſs through the ſtrong-framed bottom of a veſſel! Why was the report a reaſoning from the explaſion ſo inconſiderable, when the effect was ſo great?

It is ſaid Mr. Francis is a celebrated foreigner who is coming to this country; he is a tall perſon man, about thirty, ſpeaks good Engliſh, with rather a German accent, and is perhaps a Hanoverian.

The following curious anecdote is taken from Scott's Minſtrelſy of the Scottiſh Border.

"A law ſuit, of importance to Lord Traquair, was to be decided in the Court of Seſſion; and there was every reaſon to believe, that the judgement would turn upon the voice of the preſiding judge, who has a caſting vote in caſe of an equal diviſion among his brethern. The opinion of the Preſident was unfavorable to Lord Traquair; and the point was, therefore, to keep him out of the way, when the queſtion ſhould be tried. In this dilemma, the Earl had recourſe to Chriſtie's Will, whole real name was William Armſtrong, who, at once, offered his ſervice to kidnap the Preſident. Upon due ſcrutiny, he found it was the judge's practice frequently to take the air on horſeback, on the ſands of Leith, without an attendant. In one of their excurſions, Chriſtie's Will, who had long watched his opportunity, ventured to accoſt the Preſident, and engage him in converſation. His addreſs and language were ſo amuſing, that he decoyed the Preſident into an unfrequented and ſurzy common, called the Frigate Wins, where, riding ſuddenly up to him, he pulled him from his horſe, muffled him in a large cloak, which he had provided, and rode off, with the luckleſs judge truſſed up behind him. Will croſſed the country with great expedition, by a by-path only known to perſons of his deſcription, and depoſited his weary and terrified burthen in an old caſtle, in Annandale, called the tower of Graham.* The judge's horſe being found, it was concluded he had thrown his rider into the ſea; his friends went into mourning and a ſucceſſor was appointed to his office. Meanwhile, the poor Preſident ſpent a heavy time in the vaults of the caſtle.

He was impriſoned for a day, receiving his food through an aperture in the wall, and never hearing the ſound of a human voice, ſave when a ſhepherd called his dog, by the name of Barry, and when a female domeſtic called upon Maudge, the cat. There he concluded were inveterate lords of ſpirits; for he believed himſelf to be in the dungeon of a ſorcerer. At length, after three months had elapſed, the law ſuit was decided in favor of Lord Traquair, and Will was directed to ſet the Preſident at liberty. Accordingly, he entered the vault at the dead of night, led the Preſident, muffled him once more in the cloak, without ſpeaking a ſingle word, and, uſing the ſame mode of tranſportation, conveyed him to Leith Sands, and ſet down the aſtoniſhed judge on the very ſpot where he had taken him up. The joy of his friends, and the leſs agreeable ſurpriſe of his ſucceſſor, may be eaſily conceived, when he appeared in court, to reclaim his office and honors. All embraced his own perſuaſion that he had been ſpirited away by witchcraft; nor could he himſelf be convinced, until many years afterwards, happening to travel into Annandale, his ears were ſtunned once more with the ſounds of Maudge and Barry—the only notes which had ſoothed his long confinement. This led to a diſcovery of the whole ſtory; but, in this diſorderly times it was only laughed at, as a fait de guerre."

Wild and ſtrange as this tradition may ſeem, there is little doubt of its foundation in fact. The judge, upon whoſe perſon this extraordinary ſtratagem was practiſed, was Sir Alexander Gibſon, Lord Durie, collector of the reports, well known in the Scottiſh law, under the title of Durie's Deciſions. He was advanced to the ſtation of an Ordinary Lord of Seſſion, 10th July, 1621, and died at his own houſe in Leith, July, 1646. Between theſe periods his whimſical adventure muſt have happened; a date which correſponds with that of the tradition.

SINGULAR FACT.

A few nights ago, a reſpectable inhabitant of Chunard, county of Meath, was alarmed in his bed by the whiſkers of a perſon apparently in diſtreſs. With a view to ſave, if poſſible, the life of a fellow creature, he haſtily aroſe, took his mouſquet, and endeavoured, by following the direction from whence the cries proceeded, to aſcertain the object in affliction. After ſome time, he arrived at a ditch, full of water, on the ſurface of which he perceived ſomething white; on taking hold of, and removing it to the bank of the ditch, he found himſelf in poſſeſſion of a young woman almoſt lifeleſs, her hands bound with a towe, and her feet with a table cloath; he then took her to his houſe, where the experienced the utmoſt humanity from his family, through whoſe unceaſing exertions ſhe recovered in the courſe of the day following: prayers, threats, or entreaties were uſed in vain to procure an explanation from her, as to the circumſtance which led to the ſingular ſituation in which ſhe was found. She remains obſtinate, and except in this particular, conducts herſelf with great propriety.

Eating Tea is ſaid to have been found to cure the Dropſy. A letter from the Governor of the Houſe of Induſtry, Farrington, Berks, (England) ſtates, that a woman, aged 62, under his care, has been perfectly cured of a dropſy, deemed incurable by the ſurgeon, by ſimply eating the leaves of boiled tea.

Last week David Price was committed to the Herefordshire Gaol, for breaking into the house of David Jones, of the parish of Michael church, Ekkley. The circumstances attending the apprehension of this man are rather curious: Mr. Jones returning home from Hereford, missed his watch from the mantle-piece and on finding his wife had not got it, they proceeded to inspect the house, when they discovered a window open, by which the depredator had gained admittance; Jones then desired his wife to go up stairs, and examine a large chest in their bed chamber, to ascertain whether any cloaths it contained had been taken out; she returned in a few minutes trembling, and informed him a man was in the chest, on which, with admirable prefence of mind, he instantly ran up stairs, followed by his wife, and getting on the lid of the chest, kept it down, whilst his wife placed upon it whatever things of weight presented themselves to her, and thus they kept watch over their prisoner till an opportunity occurred of apprehending him. During the time they were watching over their prisoner the friendly ticking of the watch informed them their property was safe, and the whole was found upon him.

☞ The judgment of the Court relative to the Question whether Lands in this Province are liable to be taken in execution for debt, will be delivered on Monday next.—As the decision of this question cannot fail of being interesting and satisfactory to the public at large, we infert this notice for their information.

[As the public curiosity has lately been confiderably excited by a report of Lord Nelson's having fallen in with, and obtained a victory over the combined French and Spanish fleet, with the loss of one line, we publish the following letter, with which we have been politely favoured, (dated 19th Dece.) received by a gentleman in Niagara—but according to our latest accounts of the position of this fleet, and considering the repeated reports of his Lordship's death, we cannot vouch for its authenticity, and are confequently difinclined to place any confidence in it. Our readers will, however, form their own opinion thereupon.]

"I haften to let you know that we have received direct information from Albany, that Lord Nellon has fallen in with the combined fleet, taken 19, funk 2, blew up 1, and 7 got away. Two Admirals (French) and one Spanish taken prifoners. Lord Nelfon was fhot with a mufket ball through the breaft, and killed. No other officer of diftinction on either fide was loft. It was feared that the feven fhips which made their efcape would come acrofs the captured fhips; if they did, it is certain many will be retaken, the captured fhips being in a very fhattered condition.—Lord Nelfon's fleet conffifted of twenty feven.

"The Eaftern mail is not arrived, and the news of courfe cannot go on until next week.—It was fp.ken of as certain in Albany."

Mercy the hand, the cruel heart would move

ANECDOTE OF FOOTE.

An eccentric Barber, fome years ago, opened a fhop under the walls of the King's Bench prifon. The windows being broken when he entered it, he mended them with paper, on which appeared "Shave for a penny," with the ufual invitations to cuftomers; and over his door was drawed the following poetry;

Here lives Jemmy Wright,
Shaves as well as any man in England,
Almoft—not quite.

FOOTE, (who loved any thing eccentric) faw thefe infcriptions, and hoping to extract fome wit from the author, whom he juftly concluded to be an odd character, he pulled off his hat and thrufting his head through a paper pane into the fhop, called out, "Is Jemmy Wright at home?" The Barber immediately forced his own head through another pane into the ftreet, and replied, "No, Sir, he has juft fopt out."—Foote laughed heartily, and gave the man a guinea.

A country girl lately riding paft a Turnpike Gate without paying tribute, the Tollman haited her and demanded his fee—the affed him by what authority he demanded half of her—he informed her his wife would convince her that the law allowed fix cents for a man and horfe.—Well, (replied the girl) this is a Woman and Horfe, therefore you have nothing to expect—and fhe rode off, leaving him to the laughter of the byftanders.

FROM A LATE LONDON MAGAZINE.

Cafe of a perfon who during twelve years was in a ſtate of complete lu-naria.

The following well-authenticated cafe is of ſo remarkable, one I imagine, of ſo ſingular a nature, that I even ſuſpect the faculty would find it difficult to give a name to it. Hiſtory has indeed recorded a curious ſtory concerning the Seven Sleepers, who awoke after having ſlept during many years, and then returning to their native city, found themſelves ſo many ſtrangers at home. In the cafe I lay before you you will ſee a man who during twelve years, appeared not to have exiſted; and though his eyes were open all that time, he had loſt their uſe, with the reſt of his ſenſes, till he as ſuddenly recovered the uſe of them.

This ſingular and terrible diſorder, in which the ſoul ſuddenly loſes the full exerciſe of its faculties, has I think, been called by phyſicians by the Greek name katochus. In this ſtrange diſorder the patient remains in the ſame poſition on of his members in which he happens to be when all his intellectual and corporeal powers have been ſuddenly interrupted. He remains with his eyes open, but without ſeeing; he has neither perception nor hearing during this ſtate; and frequently it is only a few drops of blood which produce theſe terrible effects, unleſs they occaſion ſudden death.

In the Memoirs of Stockholm, of October, 1764, Mr. Arvid Faxius has deſcribed the following caſe; and perhaps, being written in the Swediſh language, it may come with ſome novelty to your readers.

"Olaf Olufſon, a peaſant, in the parish of Rosneby, in the province of Bletting, now aged 41, had been a ſailor in his youth, was of a ſtrong conſtitution, and had once nearly periſhed in a ſtorm. He was ſeized with a fever in June, 1771, which appeared by pains in his body, great heats, and violent headache; he ſoon loſt his ſpeech, and ſhortly after, his internal and external ſenſes.

"About a month afterwards, the fever and heats abated; but he had become ſo lean during this malady, that it was difficult to diſcover in him a ſtefhy ſtate.—His body reſembled that of a ſkeleton covered by a ſlight ſkin.

"He remained lying on his back conſtantly, and immoveable; his hands on his breaſt, his legs ſtretched out, and his eyes generally cloſed. He paſſed eleven years in this helpleſs ſtate, till the ſummer of 1782. Except a little milk inſuſated between his lips, and ſometimes a ſpoonful of wine or brandy, and at the ſame time, a pinch of ſnuff, he abſolutely took no other food. No one can recollect, during all this time, that he ever expreſſed a wiſh for food. He could paſs over four days, and ſometimes a week, without taking milk. As he had neither fleſh nor fat, this conſtant poſition did not occaſion him any ulcers in his back.

"His brother, Anders Alufſon, ſhewed every fraternal affection for him, and, during theſe tedious and melancholy years, he fought every means to reſtore him to life, (for his preſent ſtate could ſcarcely be called life,) which the moſt tender friendſhip ſuggeſted. He boiled ſome plants, with which he fomented his head frequently. Olaf appeared to recover a certain degree of ſenſation, regain a little ſtrength, and ſeeming gradually reſtored, but he gave no mark of perception nor reaſoning. He appeared in a helpleſs ſtate, and full of alarm, in the preſence of any perſon.

"In this ſtate he remained a conſiderable time before he would taſte nouriſhment to be obſerved ſtepping out of his bed, which therefore, he generally did in the night, or when the family were out in the fields; then would he ſtraggle himſelf to the ſpot where he could take a little milk; but frequently, by the unexpected entrance of any one, he was ſeized with great trepidations, and conſequently remained ſtretched out on the ground without the leaſt capability of motion.—At length his brother, reſolved to make him quit his ſolitary abode would take him out, give him other nouriſhment (though he ever preferred milk,) among ſome ſtrengthening ſubſtances, bathed his head with cold water, by a ſpring at ſome diſtance from the houſe. Although the patient had recovered his hearing and feeling, he ſtill remained extremely feeble and meagre, without power of articulation, and with ſcarcely any trace of reaſon; habit, however, made him capable of going himſelf to draw water from the ſpring to bathe his head.

"Twelve years had paſſed ſince the commencement of this malady; and he aſſoniſhed the village when they ſaw him ſuddenly recover the uſe of his phyſical faculties. This happened on the 8th of Auguſt, 1783, when he returned with water, in the preſence of his brother, of his two ſiſters, and the ſervants, as they were preparing to riſe for church. It was then he was ſeized with ſhiverings, tremors in his arms and legs, and ſaid, in a hurrying voice, "Lord God! this is amazing! Where have I been all this time?"

"At this moment a vein in the crown of his head opened of itſelf, and there fell out about ſix drops of blood; another vein opened at the extremity of the right noſtril; another at the chin; and there ran, as it from both ears, nearly as much blood.

"Nearly about this time he recovered his ſpeech, ſpoke what he wiſhed, had his perfect underſtanding, called by their names all thoſe who were in or out of the houſe, and whom he had known before his malady, and was aſtoniſhed to find them grown ſo old; but he did not recognize one of thoſe whom he had not known before his diſcaſe, although they had appeared daily before him during its prolonged ſtate.

"Olaf conſidered this accident as a mere dream, without knowing whether it had laſted a long or a ſhort time. But what is more remarkable is, that he did not ſeem ſenſibly to have loſt his memory during theſe twelve years, and did not recollect any thing which has paſſed during his malady.

"The people of the houſe ſeating themſelves at table for ſupper, he deſired to read the ordinary prayers and grace, and he performed it without much heſitation. Some days after he deſired to perform his devotions, and according to the account of Dr. Henſchens, he appeared to have a perfect knowledge of the articles of his faith.

"The opening of the veins mentioned, which followed by ſlight ſcars on the crown of his head, as alſo on the noſe, and a red ſpot on his chin; the wound in the middle remained open a longer time, and the ſcar gave the noſe an obliquity it had not before.

"When the patient had recovered the uſe of his ſpeech, he ſpoke for ſome time with precipitation; but at the preſent moment in the moſt orderly manner.—His eyes appeared ſomewhat diſfigured; but that ariſes from his ſquinting.—In all other reſpects he is in good health, gains corpulency and performs his daily labors.

"Scarcely had Olaf Olufſon recovered his health, than I was informed of his extraordinary malady; but his ſingularity induced me to take the moſt minute and well authenticated information ere I laid it before the royal academy. Theſe details, therefore, are equally remarkable and true."

Such is the faſt, of which we ſhall no probably meet with a ſimilar caſe. However, the natural means by which the ſudden cure was accompliſhed, is not ſo inconceivable. Hippocrates had foreſeen the probability to head pains of an analogous kind, although not followed by that ſtate of ſtupor or abſolute inertia.

LONDON, Sept. 2.

A fight took place ſome days ſince in Wentworth ſtreet, Spital-fields, between two women of the town; a ſailor who witneſſed the conteſt was ſo pleaſed with the dexterity of one of the pugiliſts, that he offered to marry her provided the would accompany him to ſea; at the ſame time grounding to get a huſband for her antagoniſt. Jack had above 100l. in ſpecie money, and engaged a poſt chaiſe and four to convey his bride and his two fair companions to Portſmouth, followed by a chaiſe and pair, with a couple of fiddlers, whom he had hired for the trip.

September 12.

On Sunday laſt, a child, named Sufan Bullock, between two and three years old, fell out of a garret window, three ſtories high into the ſtreet of St. Lawrence, Norwich; when, extraordinary to relate, it was found not to have broken any of its limbs, and great hopes are entertained of its recovery.

NAPLES, Aug. 13.

MOUNT VESUVIUS.

Yeſterday (ſays a letter) at ten o'clock at night, the eruption of Veſuvius, of which the earthquake ſeemed to be the forerunner, took place.—We were going to viſit the crater, when the cries of the people, and a volume of flames informed us that the volcano had opened. The lava precipitated itſelf in three ſpecimens from the laſt peak of the Mountain, and took a direction towards the valley ſituated between the Torre del Greco and Torre del l'Annunziate, two towns of the ſea coaſt beyond Portici, and 7 or 8 miles from Naples.

"We let off immediately to ſee this wonderful and tremendous phenomenon nearer. From the place of our departure, we ſaw the whole courſe of the lava, which extended almoſt two miles from the crater to the houſes that join the two towns. The ſight was the moſt magnificently frightful that could be ſeen. I contemplated the cafcades of flames pouring from the top of the mountain and ſhuddered at ſeeing an immenſe torrent of fire ravage the fineſt fields, overthrow houſes, and deſtroy, in a few minutes, the hopes and reſources of a hundred families.

"A line of fire marked the profile of the mountain; a cloud of ſmoke, which ſeemed to ſend forth from time to time, flaſhes of lightening, hung over the ſcene, and the moon appeared to be pale.—Nothing can adequately deſcribe the grandeur of the ſcene or give an accurate idea of the horror of it. As we approached the ſpot ravaged by this river of hell, ruined inhabitants having quitted their houſes—deſerted families trying to ſave their furniture or proviſions, faſt and feeble refugees—an immenſe crowd of curious perſons, retreating ſtep by ſtep from the advancing lava, and teſtifying, by extraordinary cries, their wonder, fear, and pity—the frightful bellowing of the mountain, the frequent explaſions which burſt from the boſom of the torrents, the crackling of the trees devoured by the flames, the noiſe of the walls falling, and the lugubrious ſound of a bell, which the religious of the Camaldules, iſolated on a little hill, and ſurrounded by two torrents of fire, rang in their diſtreſs:—ſuch are the details of the frightful ſcene to which I was a witneſs.

"The moment we arrived, the lava was croſſing the great road below Torre del Greco. To ſee it better we got into a beautiful houſe on the road ſide—from the terrace we ſaw the fire at no more than fifteen paces from us—in a minute we deſcended, and twenty minutes afterwards there remained of the houſe but three large walls. Approached as near as the heat and flow of the current would permit me. I attempted at different times to burn the end of my handkerchief in it—I could only do it by tying it to my cane. The lava does not run in liquid waves; it reſembles an immence quantity of coals on fire, which an invincible ſtrength had heaped up and puſhed on with violence. When it met with a well, it collected to the height of ſeven or ten feet, burnt it and overthrew at once.

I ſaw ſome walls get red hot, like iron, and melt, if I may uſe the expreſſion, into the lava. In its greateſt ſpeed, and on a horizontal road, I reckoned that the torrent travelled at the rate of 18 inches a minute. Its ſmell reſembled that of iron red hot."

QUEBEC, December 9.

We hear that a Schooner, belonging to Capt. Doucet, was ſtranded, this week, between St. Thomas and Kamouraſka, on her voyage from Halifax. Fortunately ſhe was in ballaſt. She left Halifax the 29th Oct. ber, when, at the evening before four tranſports arrived there with troops.

The amount of property brought home on account of the E. I. Company in the fleet juſt arrived, £ 9,700,000; the private property, ſtore and ſhips, about £ 4,600,000; and the duty to Government, £ 3,600,000.

A REASONABLE WOMAN.

The following curious letter is taken from the Harleian collection of Manuſcripts, No. 7103, fol. 105.

LADY COMPTON TO HER HUSBAND.

My deare Life,

Now I have declared to you my mind for ſettling of your eſtate, I ſuppoſe that it were beſt for me to betrunk and confider within myſelf what allowance were meeteſt for me; for confider what care I ever had of your eſtate, and how reſpectfully I dealt with thoſe which, both by the laws of God, of nature, and civil policy, wit, religion government, and honeſty, you my deare are bound to.—I pray and beſeech you to grant to me, your kind and loving wife, the ſum of two thouſand ſix hundred pounds quarterly to be paid. Alſo I would, beſides that allowance, have ſix hundred pounds, to be paid quarterly for the performance of charitable works, and thoſe things I would not, neither will be accountable for. Alſo, I will have three horſes for my own ſaddle, that none ſhall dare to lend or borrow but you.—Alſo I would have two gentlewomen, left one ſhould be ſick; or have ſome other let paſs, becauſe it is an indecent thing for a gentlewoman to ſtand mumpling alone, when God had bleſſed their lord and lady with a great eſtate. Alſo, when I ride a hunting, or a hawking, or travel from one houſe to another, I will have them attending; ſo for either of thoſe ſaid women I muſt and will have for either of them a horſe. Alſo, I will have ſix or eight gentlemen; and I will have my two coaches, one lined with velvet to myſelf, with four very fair horſes, and a coach for my women lined with cloath and laced with gold; the other with ſcarlet, and laced with ſilver, with four good horſes. Alſo, I will have two coachmen, one for my own coach, and the other for my women. Alſo, at any time I travel, I will be allowed not only carriages, and ſpare horſes for me and my women, but I will have ſuch carriages as ſhall be fitting for all, orderly, not peſtering my things with my women, nor theirs with either chambermaids, nor theirs with waſh-maids.

Alſo for the loandreis, when I travel, I will have them ſent away before with the carriages to ſee all late. And the chambermaids I will have go before that the chamber may be ready, ſweet and clean. Alſo, for that it is indecent to croud up my ſelf with my gentlewomen in my coach, I will have him to have a convenient horſe to attend me, either in city or country. And I muſt have two footmen. And my deſire is that you deſtray all the charges for me. And for myſelf, beſides my yearly allowance, I would have twenty gowns of apparel, ſix of them excellent good ones, eight of them for the country, and ſix others of them very excellent good ones. Alſo I would have to put in my purſe, two thouſand and two hundred pounds, and ſo you to pay my debts. Alſo I would have ſix thouſand pounds to buy my jewels, and four thouſand to buy me a pearl chain.

Now ſeeing I have been, and am ſo reaſonable unto you, I pray you to find the children apparel, and their ſchooling, and all my ſervants, men and women, their wages. Alſo, I will have all my houſes furniſhed, and my lodging chambers to be ſuited with all ſuch furniture as is fit; as beds, ſtools, chairs, ſuitable cuſhions, carpets, ſilver warming pans, cupboards of plate, fair hangings, and ſuch like. So for my drawing chambers, in all houſes, I will have them delicately furniſhed, both with hangings, couch, canopy, glaſs, carpet, chairs, cuſhions, and all things thereunto belonging. Alſo my deſire is, that you would pay your debts, build up Aſhby houſe, and purchaſe lands ſend no money, as you love God, to the lord Chamberlain, who would have all, perhaps you life from you. Remember his ſon, my lord Walden, what entertainment he gave me, when you were at Tilt yard. If you were dead, he ſaid, he would be a huſband, a father, a brother, and ſaid he would marry me. I proteſt I grieve to ſee the poor man have ſo little wit and honeſty to uſe his friends ſo vilely.—Alſo he ſed me with untruths concerning the charter houſe; but that is the leaſt, he wiſhed much harm, you know him. God keep you and me from him, and any ſuch as he is! So now that I have declared to you what I would have, and what I would not have, I pray when you be an earl, to allow me two thouſand pounds more than I now deſire, and double attendance.

Your loving wife,

ELIZA COMPTON.

MISTAKE ON BOTH SIDES.

A TALE.

AMONG the giddy circles of faſhionable life, the youthful and gay lord Orwell ſhone conſpicuous. Eagerly formed, of an amiable diſpoſition, accompanied by the moſt pleaſing manners, which had received the higheſt polith of politeneſs, and diſtinguiſhed for his unaffected vivacity and genuine wit, he was the ſoul of every company in which he appeared. Endowments of this brilliant nature, it will naturally be ſuppoſed, rendered him a favorite with the fair ſex, who vied with each other in attempts to impoſe on him their chains, and lead him in triumph a willing captive.

But the female whoſe fair exterior was unanimated by underſtanding, or in whom levity and frivolity extinguiſhed good ſenſe, could make little impreſſion on the heart of Frederick Orwell. His natural diſcernment ſoon diſcovered whether vanity conſtituted the whole of the character, or whether real intelligence and merit were apparent through the exquiſite of modern manners.

His attention was attracted, his admiration excited, and his heart more ſenſibly affected that he was at firſt conſcious of, by the unrepulſed beauty, intelligent ſprightlineſs, and amiable manners of lady Anne Penthievre. The ſpark of love, which the firſt view of her had kindled in his boſom, was by frequently indulging in the pleaſure of her company fanned into a flame, and he ſoon found an opportunity of avowing to her the impreſſion ſhe had made on his heart. The unaffectedly modeſt and delicate, yet evidently favorable manner in which ſhe received his declaration, riveted his pleaſing chains, and from that time he became her acknowledged and approved ſuitor, and moſt ardent lover.

After having enjoyed for ſome time the unruffled tranquility of undiſtributed confidence in each other, the fiends Jealouſy injected a drop of her gall into each of their hearts, and rapid and tormenting were the effects of the hateful poiſon.

At a ſplendid ball given by a lady of diſtinction, and to which Lord Orwell and lady Penthievre were invited, the latter danced with a young nobleman of equally diſtinguiſhed by his perſonal accompliſhments, the ancient honors of his family and his extenſive eſtates. Her lover, whoſe eye was attentively fixed on them, though he perceived that his lordſhip was too aſſiduous to the beauties and elegant carriage of his partner; and that ſhe, in her turn, diſplayed too great a degree of gratification in having thus excited his attention. Not a little piqued at this, he in his turn, ſelected for his partner a young lady of great beauty, and retired to an immenſe diſtance, to whom he paid the moſt flattering attention, which he on her part ſeemed moſt willingly to receive. His behavior he rendered purpoſely ſo conſpicuous that it could not eſcape the notice of lady Anne; and the ſame evening a viſible coolneſs took place between them, though not a word was ſaid by either with reſpect to the tranſaction which had given each offence. They ſeparated without the leaſt explanation, and their buſy imaginations, brooding over what had paſſed, twiſted the trifling incidents which had given birth to their idle jealouſy into undeniable proofs of the ſuggeſtions of groundleſs ſuſpicion, and inſurmountable obſtacles of their union.

For two whole days the hearts of the lovers were a prey to acute pains which they had never broken before. At length lord Orwell found that he obtained not only ease, but that his sufferings was changed into ecstatic delight, by admitting the idea that he had been mistaken, and that his dearest Anne had not swerved in thought from her fidelity to him. He immediately started up, and hastened to the house of her aunt, with whom she resided. He puffed into the garden where she was sitting alone, indulging, in fact, the melancholy disposition of mind into which the rupture that had taken place between her and her lover had plunged her. The moment she saw him approaching, the first sensation of her heart was an exultation of joy, the expression of which however the check-ed, conceiving it more suitable to the dignity of her sex, and her conscious innocence, to treat with careless levity and disregard the man who could so readily admit suspicions which she esteemed derogatory to her honor, and so easily permit himself to take a mean revenge. She received him, therefore, with an air of the greatest indifference, which, however, it cost her not a little painful exertion to assume. Her careless manner and apparent levity, revived in the heart of lord Orwell all his former suspicions with redoubled force. He endeavored, at first, to answer her with equal levity and indifference, but in this attempt he failed. The mingling flames of love, and jealousy blazed too fiercely in his heart for him to resist their united power. Abruptly he assumed a serious air——

"I must," said he, "I must put an to this trifling. I wish to know what I am to think of what I lately saw. If rank and wealth have such superior attraction in your eyes, I am ready—I am willing—yes, I am willing to resign——"

"No apology, I entreat you," replied lady Anne, with a scornful smile, "If the fortune of an heiress be an object much preferable, you might certain at least from endeavouring to invent accusations which you know have no foundation."

"Madam," returned he "that insinuation is but a poor subterfuge. Let me have—and I think I am entitled to demand it of your candor,—let me have," added he, raising his voice, "an explicit declaration—and explanation."

"My lord," answered she, "this certainly, is language I cannot understand. I know not what I am to explain: at any rate, such an explanation as you seem to require is beneath me."

"My lady," rejoined he, "hastily turning round, and taking out his watch, "if you had been disposed to give it, I have not time to hear it; for now I recollect I have a particular engagement."

Thus saying, he made her a formal obeisance, and abruptly left her.

The rupture between these two mistaken lovers was now become wider than ever, and the difficulty of a reconciliation apparently much greater. Both, at the same time, secretly blamed themselves for the manner in which they had acted, that the had treated him with such affected levity and indifference, which did not accord with the real feelings of her heart; and he, that he had expected himself in a manner hasty and peremptory.

At length, the aunt of lady Anne, an elderly lady of the most friendly and generous disposition, discovered, from the melancholy and visible uneasiness of her niece, and the absence of lord Orwell, that there was some difference between the lovers. She questioned lady Anne on the subject, and was soon satisfied that the most groundless suspicions had misled to severe pains on two excellent hearts: and if a remedy were not timely employed, might separate forever two amiable persons who appeared born for each other. She accordingly sent for lord Orwell, and, in the presence of her niece, thus addressed him:—

"So, I find the common case has happened: you have quarrelled with one another you know not for what. But so it always is: you people of understanding when you are in love, have no more wit than the toothless country boys and girls. Here are nothing but mistakes on both sides, and faults on both sides. I am sure you love her, and I know she loves you; so take her hand, and be happy in defiance of jealousy and all her imps."

Lord Frederick gladly obeyed the advice of the good old lady, and took and ardently pressed the hand of lady Anne, who, bursting into tears, tiently and tenderly avowed the truth and warmth of her affections: while her lover, throwing himself at her feet, solicited her forgiveness for having once questioned her disinterested fidelity. Their mutual confidence in each other was never after disturbed by suspicion, either previous to or after their union for life, which soon took place; and their affectionate gratitude to the good old lady who had thus extricated them from their difficulties, and reconciled them by her candid and friendly interference, knew no bounds.

THE ORACLE.

YORK—SATURDAY, January 18, 1806.

The Judges of the Court of King's bench gave their opinion last Saturday, on the question thrown in the case of King Vs. Webster. Lands and Tenements holden in fee and common passage reside, for the payment of Debts, be fees under an Execution of the Crown?——

Mr. Justice Powell being of opinion that the writ ought to issue, and Mr. Thorpe against it—the Plaintiff took nothing by his motion. We observe Read that an appeal is intended to the King and Council. As the question involves matters of much in the United in the Commercial interest; a number of the most respectable persons in the Town and its vicinity, intended to hear the judgment of the Court, and Mr. Justice Thorpe on delivering the instrument, entered into the considerations at length, at large, and the experience of the Statutes, in a manner, which afforded the highest gratification to every admirer of the English language and the Law.

Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Solicitor General were Counsel for the writ issuing for the last at Leeds.

Mr. Weekes and Mr. Stewart against it.

We understand that the case will be reported by a gentleman of the bar.

I WOULD IF I COULD;

OR, CHLOE'S COMPLAINT.

HOW I'm perplex'd by two sad, in a thousand ways shapes,
They take of thole wares, and of trading of apes;
It every conclusion my heart I should not be their figure,
I was never at a loss to woo, had a maid mad not court.
Then why an I true a man in love I'm misbelieved?
By the head of my grandsire—I would if I could.
Young Dick Thicket say, when my slow-thing was broke,
Again made it fall with a laugh and a joke;
Oliver I expected for a beginning to lay,
But he just doff'd his hat, and wish'd me good day.
Then why an I true'd, that in love I'm misbelieved?
By the beard of my grandsire—I would if I could.

The wind but this morn blew me Southerly wind,
And our ships from St. Michael I reckoned a thousand;
I thought he'd be pleasant, but oh! he pounds,
He hung down his head, and wept—I such a wind,
Then why an I true'd, that in love I'm misbelieved?
By the beard of my grandsire—I would if I could.

The next will be Lent—nor our calendars show,
When maidens have leisure a courting to go,
For Fasting, or Whitsuntide, bring in the new-year,
And no more are we wooed to the ale and the beer,
In affairs of weddock I long to be schooled,
By the beard of my grandsire—I would if I could.

For parents who preach from the evils of life,
Soon find me the man who dares make me a wife;
The while he is combant, so him I'll be true,
Give him love for his love, do the best I can do?
In affairs of weddock I long to be schooled,
For by all that is modest—I would if I could.

When Hopkins, the Drury-line Prompter, once recommended a man to be engaged as a mechanic in preparing the scenery of an new pantomime, Garrick made the following objections to employing him; "1st, that man will never answer the purposes of the theatre, for in the first place he cannot make a moon. I would not give him three pence a piece for all the moons he shewed me to day. He's four ser., if possible, worse than I have given him directions about the clouds, and told him heavy clouds were never seen since the flood. Desire the carpenter to knock the rainbow to pieces, and nail up the blue sky for we cannot hang it up in our firmament.

POSTSCRIPT.

By the Neptune, which arrived here last evening in 35 days from Liverpool, the Editor of the Mercantile Advertiser has been favored with London papers and Lloyd's Lists to the 7th of November, and Liverpool papers to the 9th, inclusive.

They are principally occupied with the operations of the French and Austrian armies in Germany.

The intelligence of the defeat of the combined squadron before Cadiz, in which the gallant NELSON lost his life, is of so much importance, that we have almost excluded every other article news to lay before our readers the official details of this very interesting subject.

O. Marshal Bernadotte nothing further is known than that on the 19th of October he occupied a position between Munich and the Inn, the Austrians there being on their own side of that river. Bonaparte, with the whole of the army would join him about the 25th or 26th, when the further operations against the Austrians and Russians would be commenced.

The army of Italy, under Massena, passed the Adige on the 18th of October, after an action in which the Austrians had 1500 killed and as many taken prisoners. The report of Massena's defeat of the Archduke Charles was received in London by the way of Catalonia, and refled on no official authority.

LONDON, Nov. 7.

The vanguard of the second Russian army, amounting to 20,000 men, arrived at Bohemia the middle of last month, and there is every reason to believe, that a few days afterwards they formed a junction with the troops on the Inn. The remainder of the second Russian army might be expected to have wholly joined the troops on the Inn by the latter end of last month.

Captain Langford arrived at the Admiralty this afternoon, accompanied by a Russian officer, bringing with him most important dispatches from the Elbe.

These dispatches bring a treaty of alliance which has been concluded between this country and his Prussian Majesty, whose army of eighty thousand men was actually on its march against the common enemy, when the dispatches were sent off.

The Emperor of Russia had been to Berlin to hold a conference with his Prussian Majesty.

The same Emperor is hurrying to the scene of action, at the head of an army of fifty thousand men; and his Imperial brother of Germany is also marching at the head of another army.

Government yesterday morning received the interesting intelligence that the combined Russian and Prussian forces have entered Hanover, where every thing is again put upon its former footing. Six thousand French have thrown themselves into the fortress of Hamelin, where it is supposed they will be blockaded.

The number of Prussian troops which were to be assembled at the Hildesheim by the 26th ult. is stated in a letter from that place at 8,000 men; and the number of those which were to repair to the Provinces of Franconia at 50,000.

The Prussian troops on their march to Franconia and Westphalia are to be joined by 24,000 Saxons and 20,000 Hessians.

London Gazette Extraordinary.

Admiralty Office, Nov. 6.

Dispatches of which the following are copies, were received at the Admiralty this day at one o'clock A. M. from Vice Admiral Collingwood, Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels off Cadiz.

Euryalus, off Cape Trafalgar, Sir, [Oct. 22.

The ever to be lamented death of Vice-Admiral Lord Viscount Nelson, who, in the late conflict with the enemy, fell in the hour of victory, leaves to me the duty of informing my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that on the 19th instant, it was communicated to the Commander in Chief from the ships watching the motions of the enemy in Cadiz, that the combined fleet had put to sea, as they sailed with light winds westerly, his Lordship concluded their destination was the Mediterranean, and immediately made all sail for the Straights' entrance, with the British squadron, consisting of 27 ships, 3 of them 64's, when his Lordship was informed by Capt. Blackwood (whose vigilance in watching and giving notice of the enemy's movements, has been highly meritorious) that they had not yet passed the Straights.

—On Monday the 21st inftant, at day-light, when Cape Trafalgar bore E. by E. about seven leagues, the enemy was discovered five or seven miles to the eastward, the wind about west, and very light: the Commander in Chief immediately made the signal for the fleet to bear up in two columns, as they formed in order of sailing, a mode of attack his Lordship had previously directed, to avoid the inconvenience and delay in forming a line of battle in the usual manner.—The enemy's line consisted of 33 ships, (of which eighteen were French and fifteen Spanish) Commander in Chief Admiral Villeneuve; the Spaniards under the direction of Gravina, were, with their heads to the northward, and formed their line of battle with great closeness and correctness; but as the mode of attack was unusual, so the diversity of their line was new; it formed a crescent convening to lee-ward, for that, in leading down to their centre, it had both their van and rear abaft the beam, before the fire opened every alternate ship was about a cable's length to windward of her second a head and a stern, forming a kind of double line, and appeared, when on their beam, to leave a very little interval between them; and this without crowding their ships. Admiral Villeneuve main the Bucentaure in the centre, and the Prince of Asturias bore Gravina's flag in the rear: but the French and Spanish ships were mixed without any apparent regard to order of national squadron.

At the mode of our attack had been previously determined on, and communicated to the flag officers and Captains, few signals were necessary, and none were made, except to direct close order as the lines bore down.

The Commander in Chief in the Victory led the weather column, and the Royal Sovereign, which bore my flag, the lee.

The action began at twelve o'clock, by the leading ships of the columns breaking through the enemy's line, the Commander in Chief about the tenth ship from the van, the second in command about the 12th from the rear, leaving the van of the enemy unoccupied to the succeeding ships breaking through in all parts aftern of their leaders, and engaging the enemy at the muzzles of their guns; the conflict was severe; the enemy's ships were fought with a gallantry highly honorable to their officers, but the attack on them was irrefiftible, and it pleafed the Almighty Difpofer of all events to grant His Majefty's arms a complete and glorious victory. About three P. M. many of the enemy's fhips having ftruck their colours, their line gave way; Admiral Gravina, with ten fhips joining the van, got to leeward, fhod towards Cadiz. The five headmoft fhips in their van tacked, and ftanding to fouthward, to, windward of the Britifh line were engaged, & the fternmoft of them taken; the others went off, leaving to his Majefty's fquadron nineteen fhips of the line (of which two are firft rates, the Santifima Trinidad, and the Sant Anna) with 3 fine officers, viz. Admiral Villeneuve, the Commander in Chief; Don Ignatio Maria D'Aliva, Vice Admiral, and the Spanifh Rear Admiral Don Baltazar Hidalgo Cifuentes.

After fuch a victory it may appear unneceffary to enter into encomiums on the particular parts taken by the feveral commanders; the conclufion fays more on the fubject than I have language to expreis; the fpirit which animated all was the fame; when all exert themfelves gloriouffy in their Country's fervice, all deferve that their high merit fhould ftand recorded; and never was high merit more confpicuous than in the battle I have defcribed.

The Achille (a French 74) after having furrendered, by fome mifmanagement of the Frenchmen, took fire and blew up. 200 of her men were faved by the tenders.

A circumftance occurred during the action which fo ftrongly marks the invincible fpirit of Britifh feamen when engaging the enemies of their country, that I cannot refift the pleafure I have in making it known to their Lordfhips: The Temeraire was boarded by accident, or by defign, by a French fhip on one fide, and a Spaniard on the other; the conteft was vigorous, but in the end the combined enfigns were torn from the poop, and the Britifh hoifted in their places.

Such a battle could not be fought without fuftaining a great lofs of men. I have not only to lament in common with the Britifh Navy, and the Britifh Nation, in the fall of the Commander in Chief, the lofs of a hero, whofe name will be immortal, and his memory ever dear to his Country; but my heart is rent with the moft poignant grief for the death of a friend, to whom by many years intimacy, and a perfect knowledge of the virtues of his mind, which infpired ideas fuperior to the common race of men, I was bound by the ftrongeft ties of affection; a grief to which even the glorious occafion in which he fell does not bring the confolation which perhaps it ought—his Lordfhip received a mufket ball in his left breaft about the middle of the action, and fent an officer to me with his laft farewell, and foon after expired!

I have alfo to lament the lofs of thofe excellent officers, Captains Duff of the Mars, & Cooke of the Bellerophon; I have yet heard of none other.

I fear the number that have fallen will be found very great when the returns come to me; but it having blown a gale of wind ever fince the action, I have not yet had it in my power to collect any reports from the fhips.

The Royal Sovereign having loft her maft, except the tottering foremaft, I called the Euryalus to me while the action continued which fhip lying within hail, made my fignal, a fervice captain Blackwood performed with great attention; after the action I fhifted my flag to her that I might more eafily communicate my orders to, and collect the fhips, and towed the Royal Sovereign out to fea ward. The whole fleet were now in a very perilous fituation many difmafted; all fhattered in; thirteen fathoms water off the fhoals of Trafalgar, and when I made the fignal to prepare to anchor, few of the fhips had an anchor to let go, their cables being fhot; but the fame good Providence which aided us through fuch a day, preferved us in the night, by the wind fhifting a few points, and drifting the fhips off the land, except four of the captured difmafted fhips, which are now anchored off Trafalgar, and we hope will be fafe until thofe gales are over.

Having thus detailed the proceedings of the fleet on this occafion, I beg leave to congratulate their lordfhips on a victory, which, I hope, will add a ray to the glory of his Majefty's crown, and be attended with public benefit to our country.
—I am, &c.

GENERAL ORDERS.

Euryalus, October the 22d, 1805.

The ever to be lamented death of Lord Vifcount Nelfon, Duke of Bronte the Commander in Chief, who fell in the action of the 21ft, in the arms of victory, covered with glory, whofe memory will be ever dear to the Britifh navy, and the Britifh nation, whofe zeal for the honor of his King, and for the intereft of his country, will be ever held up as a fhining example for a Britifh feamen, leaves to me a duty to return my thanks to the Right honorable Rear Admiral, the Captains, Officers, Seamen, and detachments of Royal Marines, ferving on board his Majefty's fquadron now under my command, for their conduct, on that day; but where can I find language to expreis my fentiments of the valor and fkill which were difplayed by the officers, the feamen, and marines, in the battle with the enemy, where every individual appeared an hero, on whom the glory of his country depended; the attack was irrefiftible, and the iffue of it adds to the page of naval annals a brilliant inftance of what Britons can do, when their King and their country need their fervice:

To the Right honorable Rear Admiral the Earl of Northefk, to the Captains, Officers, and Seamen, and to the Officers, Non commiffioned Officers and Privates of the Royal Marines, I beg to give my fincere and hearty thanks for their highly meritorious conduct, both in the action, and in their zeal and activity in bringing the captured fhips out of the perilous fituation in which they were, after the furrender, among the fhoals of Trafalgar, in boifterous weather.

And I defire that the refpective Captains will be pleafed to communicate to the Officers, feamen, and royal marines, this public teftimony of my high approbation of their conduct, and my thanks for it.

(Signed)

C. COLLINGWOOD.

To the Right hon. Rear Admiral the Earl of Northefk, and the refpective Captains and Commanders.

GENERAL ORDER.

The Almighty God, whofe arm is ftrength, having of his great mercy been pleafed to crown the exertions of his Majefty's fleet with fuccefs, in giving them a complete victory over their enemies, on the 21ft of this month;—and that all praife and thankfgiving may be offered up to the throne of grace for the benefits to our country and to mankind;

I have thought proper, that a day fhould be appointed, of general humiliation before God, and thankfgiving for this his merciful goodnefs, imploring forgivenefs of fins, a continuation of his divine mercy, and his conftant aid to us, in the defence of our country's liberties and laws, without which the utmoft efforts of man are nought, I direct therefore that be appointed for this holy purpofe.

Given on board the Euryalus, off Cape Trafalgar, 22d October, 1805.

C. COLLINGWOOD.

To the refpective Captains and Commanders.

N. B. The fleet having been difperfed by a gale of wind, no day has yet been able to be appointed for the above purpofe.

Euryalus off Cadiz, Oct. 24, 1805.

In my letter of the 22d I detailed to you, for the information of my Lords Commiffioners of the Admiralty, the proceedings of his Majefty's fquadron on the day of the action, and that preceding it, fince which I have had a continued feries of misfortunes, but they are of a kind that human prudence could not poffibly provide againft, or my fkill prevent.

On the 22d in the morning a ftrong fouth-erly wind blew fqually weather, which however did not prevent the activity of the Officers and feamen of fuch fhips as were manageable from getting hold of many of the prizes (thirteen or fourteen) and towing them off to the weftward where I ordered them to rendezvous round the Royal Sovereign, in tow by the Neptune; but on the 23d the gale encreafed, and the fea ran fo high, that many of them broke the tow rope, and drifted far to leeward, before they were got hold of again, and fome of them taking advantage in the dark and boifterous night, got before the wind, and have perhaps drifted upon the fhore and funk; on the afternoon of that day the remnant of the combined fleet, ten fail of fhips, who had not been much engaged, ftood up to leeward of my fhattered and ftraggled charge, as if meaning to attack them, which obliged me to collect a force out of the leaft injured fhips, and to form to leeward for their defence: all this retarded the progrefs of the hulks, and the weather continuing, determined me to deftroy all the leeward moft that could be cleared of the men, confidering that keeping poffeffion of the fhips was a matter of little confequence compared with the falling again into the hands of the enemy; but even this was an arduous talk in the high fea which was running.

I hope, however, it has been accomplifhed to a conficerable extent; I entrufted it to fkilful officers, who would fpare no pains to execute what was poffible. The Captains of the Prince and Neptune, cleared the Trinadad and funk her. Captains Hope, Bayntun, and Malcolm, who joined the fleet this moment from Gibraltar, had the charge of deftroying four others. The Redoubtable funk aftern of the Swiftfure while in tow. The Santa Ann, I have no doubt, is funk, as her fide was almoft entirely beat in; and fuch the fhattered condition of the whole of them, that unlefs the weather moderates, I doubt whether I fhall be able to carry a fhip of them into port. I hope their Lordfhips will approve of what I (having only in confideration the deftruction of the enemy's fleet) have thought a meafure of abfolute neceffity.

I have taken Admiral Villeneuve into this fhip; Vice Admiral Don Aliva is dead. Whenever the temper of the weather will permit, and I can fpare a frigate (for there were only four in the action with the fleet, Euryalus, Sirius, Phœbe, & Naiad; the Melpomene joined the 22d. and the Eurydice and Scout the 23d,) I fhall collect the flag officers, and fend to England, with their flags, (if they do not all go to the bottom) to be at his Majefty's feet.

There were four thoufand troops embarked under the command of General Contamin, who was taken with Admiral Villeneuve in the Bucentare.—I am Sir, &c.

C. COLLINGWOOD.

We are enabled to add the following particulars refpecting the departed Hero, (Lord Nelfon.) When his Lordfhip found that by his fkilful manoeuvres he had placed the enemy in fuch a fituation that they could not avoid an engagement, he difplayed the utmoft animation, and his ufual confidence of victory; he faid to captain Hardy, and the other officers who furrounded him on the quarter deck, "Now they cannot efcape us; I think we fhall at leaft make fure of 20 of them. I fhall probably lofe a leg, but that will be purchafing a victory cheaply." About two hours before the clofe of the action, his Lordfhip received a wound in his fhoulder from a mufket ball which was fired from the tops of the Santiffima Trinidad, with which fhip fhe was clofely engaged. The ball penetrated his breaft, and he inftantly fell, he was immediately carried below, and the furgeons pronounced the wound mortal. His Lordfhip lived about an hour, during the whole of which time he remained perfectly collected, and difplayed the fame heroic magnanimity in his death that had marked his conduct in every action of his glorious life. A few minutes before he expired he ordered captain Hardy to be called to him: when the captain came, he afked him how many of the enemy's fhips had ftruck; the captain replied as nearly as he could afcertain, 15 fail of the line had ftruck their colours. His Lordfhip then, with that fervent piety which as ftrongly marked his character as fkill and courage, returned thanks to the Almighty; then turning to captain Hardy, he faid, "I know I am dying. I could have wifhed to furvive to breathe my laft upon Britifh ground, but the will of God be done." In a few moments he expired!!!

The following intereffing intelligence has been received from a refpectable gentleman, who arrived here on Saturday evening, in 41 days from Bordeaux. The day before this gentleman failed, private letters from Paris were received at Bordeaux, announcing, that (a few days fubfequent to the capitulation of Ulm, and the capture of Gen. Mack and his troops) the Ruffian army, having proceeded by forced marches, came up with the columns under the command of Prince Murat and Marfhal Bernadotte—that a fevere action enfued—that Murat and Bernadotte were both killed; as gener al officers either killed, feverely wounded, or taken prifoners; and the whole of the French troops defeated with immenfe flaughter.—Such was the information received at Bordeaux, and believed, by the beft informed gentlemen of that place.

The intelligence produced an immediate and confiderable effect on the funds at Bordeaux.

On a review of the intelligence received from Philadelphia, we find an article under the Frankfort head, (Oct. 15) ftating that the firft divifion of the Ruffian army, (conveyed in carriages) reached Quaim in Moravia on the 29th of September—that on the 4th of October they were near the frontiers of Lower Auftria—that they were preffing forward to the fcene of action, and that another divifion was following at fome diftance in the rear.

Among the important news received, an article under the head of Frankfort (Oct. 20) ftates that on the 12th of Oct. 45,000 Ruffians, under the command of general Kutufows, formed a junction with 20,000 Auftrians under general Kienmayer. The Junction is faid to have been formed on the Inn, whence they had fufficient time to march to Weifsheim, where (according to article from the vague of the 25th) Bernadotte was ftationed at that time.—Morning Chronicle.

Admiral Pocock's celebrated pickle for meat.

To 4 gallons of water add 1 lib. brown fugar, 2oz. falt-petre, boil them together in an iron pot or kettle, and fkim it repeatedly as long as any fcum rifes, then take off the pot and let ſtand till the liquor is cold. The meat being placed in the veffel meant to hold it, pour the cold pickle on it until it is covered, and put fomething on to keep it in the pickle, and thus keep it for family ufe. When it is intended to keep it for a length of time, the pickle muſt be boiled once in ſix weeks or two months at farthest, adding, during the boiling, a-lb ſugar and half a pound of ſalt, ſcumming as before directed. By this management the pickle will keep good 12 months, and is always ready for a freſh ſupply of meat.

An intereſting paper has been iſſued by Count Hardenburg, dated the 14th of Oct. on the ſubject of violation of the neutrality on the Pruſſian territory. It ſpeaks in ſevere terms of the unexpected meaſure of the forcible violation of the Pruſſian territory, and announces that precautions are to be taken for the future protection of the neutrality of the Pruſſian dominions.

Our Dover letter ſtates that a great number of veſſels are collecting there for the purpoſe, as it is ſuppoſed, of making an attack upon ſome of the enemy's ports.

We find the following important article under the Berlin head of Oct. 12, "It would certainly be doing the greateſt injuſtice to the juſt and generous character of our King, to ſuppoſe for a moment, that he would not oppoſe the audacious progreſs of the French."

The public rejoicings laſt night were partial—Lord Nelſon's death had impreſſed every heart with grief. At the theatres tributes were paid to his memory—there were but few illuminations—to night, we underſtand, there will be a general one.

November 8.

The junction of the Pruſſians with the Ruſſians, is fully confirmed by the Dutch Journals of the 4th inſtant. We have alſo received Paris papers to the 31ſt ult.

The intelligence from Berlin is of the moſt important nature. The political ſyſtem of the Pruſſian cabinet has undergone a complete change in the courſe of laſt month. Inſtead of placing her immenſe armies upon the war eſtabliſhment, merely to reſiſt the paſſage of a foreign force through her territories, and maintain her neutrality, Pruſſia has conceded full liberty of tranſit to the Ruſſian forces, and is marching her armies to Franconia, to the Banks of the Rhine and to the borders of the Bavarian republic.—Three armies, amounting in the whole to 150,000 men, are actually on their march for the ſeverel points we have mentioned. A fourth army of immenſe force, is aſſembled in Brandenburgh, to ſupport the three firſt. 24,000 Saxons and 20,000 Heſſians, are to be united to the armies on the march to Franconia and Weſtphalia.

FRANKFORT, Oct. 26.

The theatre of war being removed from the banks of the Iller to Bavaria, the uſual courſe of the mails has been reſumed, by which we have received letters direct from Ulm, which do not give a very favorable account of the Auſtrian Generals, and it appears there have been great diſagreements among them; in particular there has been a violent diſpute between the Archduke Ferdinand and Gen. Mack, becauſe the former wanted to quit Ulm and give battle to the enemy; but the General ſhewed his orders to the Prince, which placed the chief command entirely in his own hands, and he choſe to remain at Ulm, where his conduct became more incomprehenſible every day, eſpecially when it is obſerved, that on the 16th, being two days before he ſigned the capitulation, he iſſued the following order: "In the name of his Majeſty, I hold all Generals, Officers, and Subalterns, reſponſible upon their honour, duty, and welfare, not to mention the word SURRENDER, nor think of any thing elſe than the moſt vigorous defence; a defence which cannot be of long duration, as the van of the two great armies, Auſtrian and Ruſſian, will arrive in two days at Ulm to deliver us. If we ſhould fall ſhort of proviſions, we have ſtill 3,000 horſes left for our food. I ſhall be the firſt to eat horſe fleſh, and every man will be ready to join me, which I alſo expect of the good citizens to whom I repeat my promiſe, that they will be fully paid for all."

DEAL, Oct. 28.

We are ſtill in a ſtate of uncertainty reſpecting the expedition. Various conjectures are afloat. It is to-day ſaid, that the 4th regiment are to be diſembarked, and it is yet uncertain whether the Guards will go.

The German Legion are under ſailing orders, and will ſail as ſoon as the wind is fair.—Gen. Moore's brigade were under orders to join the armament and I am told, were actually on their march for Deal; but it is now ſaid, counter orders have been ſent down, and that the brigade has halted for the preſent.

King's meſſengers, are daily arriving, and all is hurry, buſtle, and uncertainty: the weather continues very boiſterous, and the tranſports ride hard—but as yet no damage has happened. We are in hopes of the weather moderating for at preſent, all intercourſe with the ſhipping is totally at a ſtand.

NEW-YORK, December 18.

As the publication of the Mercantile Advertiſer will be ſuſpended to morrow, (this day having been ſet apart by the Clergy and the Corporation, to be obſerved as a day of Humiliation, thankſgiving and prayer) we have "labored with all diligence" to preſent our readers at one view, a connected ſeries of the operations of the French army in Germany, from the date of the fifth bulletin (which was tranſlated for this paper a few days ago,) to the iſſuing of the tenth, which comprehends the laſt advices received from that quarter.

Theſe details will be found worthy the attention of the politician; of the news brought by the Neptune, they are ſecond in importance only to the gallant achievement before Cadiz.

We learn, from other ſources, that a ſecret expedition, conſiſting of the Coldſtream regiment, the 3d guards, the 4th or king's own, the 14th and 23d regiments, the 95th rifle corps, the German legion, and the artillery, ſailed from the Downs for the Continent on the 5th of November. The Duke of York, who was to have had the command, will join them in the ſpring; the Duke of Cumberland and Cambridge, Generals Burrard, Moore, and Lord Chatham, accompanied the troops as commanders of columns.

The advanced guard of the Ruſſian troops entered Boitzenburgh, on the Elbe, on the 27th of October; the Pruſſians entered Hanover on the day following.

The armies of Pruſſia, are diſpoſed into four diviſions; one of theſe, reinforced by 24,000 Saxons, and 20,000 Heſſians, is to cover the frontiers of Franconia; a ſecond has proceeded to Hildeſheim, a third is to march to the Rhine, and a fourth to remain in Brandenburgh. The Duke of Brunſwick, commands the army in Lower Saxony, which is to be joined by the Ruſſians, Swedes, and the Britiſh expedition above noticed. There is a probability that one of the Pruſſian armies will invade Holland; to defend which, French troops were on the point of marching into the republic.

The Dutch Miniſter quitted Hamburgh on the approach of the Ruſſians, and the French Miniſter was preparing to follow him.

Sir R. Strachan was off Finiſterre, and had intelligence that the Rochefort ſquadron had not got into port on the 30th October.

The Ottoman troops at Cairo have obtained a complete victory over the refractory beys; the heads of ſeven of them, in conformity with the uſual practice of Turkey, were publicly hung up on the gates of the ſeraglio at Conſtantinople, among whom was ſaid to be the celebrated Eſſi Bey.

THE MANAGERS appointed for the SUBSCRIPTION BALL on Monday Evening next, give notice that the Tickets will be drawn for by the Ladies, preciſely at a quarter after ſeven o'clock, from Number one to the actual number then preſent.

REMARKS on the Culture and Preparation of HEMP in CANADA: Communicated at the deſire of the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council for Trade and Foreign Plantations.

BY CHARLES TAYLOR, M. D. &c. &c. &c.

ON THE CHOICE OF SEED.

HEMP is produced from an Annual Plant called the Cannabis Sativa by Linneus. It riſes in height from Four to Eight Feet: It flouriſhes in Soil which is good, light, and moderately humid. Warm weather agrees with it, but not great heats.

In the culture of Hemp, the choice of Seed is an important object, it ſhould, if poſſible, be of the preceding year's growth; but on no account more than that of two years, as Hemp Seed has a ſingular tendency to grow rancid. To judge of its quality, take ſome of the Seed promiſcuouſly from the Heap, and with the fore Teeth cruſh the outward Shells and ſeparate them from the Kernel. If the Seed is good, the Kernel ſhould then be mild to the taſte, and in flavour reſemble the Hazel Nut.

The Huſk or Shell contains an eſſential Oil which communicates its taſte to the Kernel, if eaten along with it. If the Kernel taſtes rancid the Seed will not vegetate.

All the Seed, of which the ſhell is a pale white or pale green colour, is bad, and the Kernel not well grown. If the ſhell ſhines and is of a brown colour, it is a ſign that the Kernel is well formed, and proper Seed to ſow. If, in rubbing it betwixt the palms of the hands, the Hemp Seed does not break, but, on the contrary, the ſhell becomes more clear and bright, it is a good ſign. If it becomes dufty by rubbing, it is unfit for growth.

Hemp Seed is apt to ferment and heat, if packed in large quantities together on ſhip board. It will anſwer to pack it in old American Flour Caſks, or other packages not containing more than three hundred weight in each, but it will be ſafer if only half that weight is packed together.

I have been more particular in giving minute inſtructions in the choice of proper Seed, as it is an important point in the commencement of the undertaking; and without proper attention thereto, the attempt to grow Hemp is labour loſt. Much of the Hemp Seed ſold in England is kiln dried, which prevents its future vegetation.

ON THE CULTURE OF THE HEMP PLANT.

THE natural Soil on the banks of the Creeks and Rivers in Canada is ſuitable for the growth of Hemp. The land ſhould be previouſly loughed in the preceding Autumn, and twice in the following Spring, as ſoon as the froſts will permit, it ſhould then be harrowed extremely fine with iron toothed harrows, in order to leave the earth as well pulverized as poſſible. It ſhould then be levelled with a light buſh harrow, and ſown broad caſt, at the rate of two and a half buſhels of Seed per Arpent (about four fifths of an Engliſh ſtatute Acre.) The Seed ſhould be harrowed in immediately after being ſown, by a Harrow with ſmall iron teeth ſet pretty cloſe. In ſowing the Land, the Seed ſhould not be covered deep, otherwiſe it will not grow, but periſh. Great care ſhould be taken to prevent the Land being injured, by being treſpaſſed upon, or the Seed being deſtroyed by Birds before it is firmly rooted in the ground.

On the early trials of cultivating Hemp in Canada, it will be proper to ſow ſome by every Farmer, in ſmall incloſures near the Houſe, either in beds or in ridges of about four feet wide, with intervals of two feet between, to allow room to weed or pull the Hemp, when ripe, and to make the Farmers gradually acquainted with the properties of the Plant.

Hemp Seed ſhould be ſown in Canada as early in the month of May as the weather will permit; but if the weather is bad, the ſowing may be poſtponed 'till any time before the ſecond week in June. It has been ſuppoſed advantageous to allow the Hemp Seed to be laid upon a cloſe boarded Cellar floor, for two or three weeks previous to its being ſown, in order to prepare it to germinate ſooner. After the young Plants are juſt riſen above ground, they ſhould be carefully weeded; they will afterwards be ſufficiently luxuriant to prevent the growth of Weeds.

The Hemp Plants are of two kinds, Male and Female, which riſe promiſcuouſly. The male yields a Farina or Powdery matter; the Female bears the Seed; the production of good Seed depends upon this Farina being diffuſed by the air upon the Female Plants; its effects may be promoted by Artificial agitation, at the time when the Male Plants are plucked or drawn from the others, as hereafter mentioned.

The male Hemp Plants will be ready to pull about the ſecond week in Auguſt; their ripeneſs may be known from the duſty or powdery matter (Farina) they yield when ſhaken by the wind, or agitated with a ſtick, alſo from their leaves turning yellow, and their ſtems a white-iſh colour.

As the raiſing of a conſiderable quantity of Hemp Seed is at preſent of conſequence, I recommend the following plan to be adopted now for that purpoſe. It may be deviated from at a future period, when Seed becomes more plentiful there.

When the Male Hemp is well ripened, let the perſons who pull the Hemp, clear paſſages or alleys through the field of about two feet wide, and ſix feet diſtant from each other, by pulling up promiſcuouſly the male and female Hemp plants, which grow within the ſaid ſpaces; and let the Hemp thus plucked, be removed to other ground in the neighbourhood, and laid thereon ſtraight, about an inch thick. After it has been thus placed for two or three days expoſed to the Sunand Air, turn it, and let it lie a day or two more, then make it up in Bundles about the thickneſs of your thigh, by two legatures with ſome of the Hemp ſtalks; one of which ſhould be near the root ends, and the other at two thirds of the length of the bundle. In this ſtate you may either proceed to Water Steep it, as hereafter directed, or houſe it from rain, 'till a more convenient opportunity offers for the purpoſe.

I have before obſerved, that beds of the Hemp about ſix feet wide ſhould be left growing until an intermediate ſpace of two feet wide had been cleared, and the Hemp which grew thereon carried away, you muſt then proceed to pull up the male Hemp which was left growing amongſt the female Hemp on thoſe beds, taking care not to damage the female Hemp; but, on the contrary, leaving it to grow with as little injury as poſſible, until the ſeed is ripe. The male Hemp which was plucked out may be dried in the intermediate alleys above mentioned, and made up in bundles, as the former.

METHOD OF COLLECTING HEMP SEED.

THE female Hemp ſhould remain growing upon the Land 'till the Seed is fully ripe; the ſigns of which are the opening of the Pods wherein the ſeeds are lodged, ſo much that you may juſt perceive the ſeeds therein, they will have a brownish appearance. It may probably be the firſt or ſecond week in October before the female Hemp ſhould be pulled; it ſhould then be carefully drawn to avoid ſhedding the ſeed, and ſhould be laid on cloths in carrying, to prevent the ſeed being loſt in moving; it ſhould be bound up in ſmall bundles, and ſet to dry, with the root end downwards, in bunches made of three ſmall ſheaves, placed in a triangular form with the heads together, ſo as to ſupport each other.

Be careful not to looſe the ſeed, and when the bundles are dry, you ſhould have a wooden ſtool with a ſheet of blanket under it; by ſtriking the Hemp againſt the ſtool, you will beat out the beſt of the ſeed into the ſheet or blanket, breaking your Hemp as little as poſſible. After you have ſeparated the ſeed from the Hemp, either by beating it as above or by threſhing it ſubſequently, the ſeed ſhould be winnowed, and laid on a dry floor where there is a free current of air, turning it over repeatedly with a ſhovel to dry it, and to prevent fermentation.

I have been very minute in giving directions about preſerving the Seed, in order that it may be procured in Canada, without the neceſſity of ſupplies from England, and to avoid the risk of bad Seed being sent. I shall now return to the Relation of the method of preparing the Hemp, which had been previously plucked, and was ready for the water steep.

ON WATER STEEPING OR BOUISSAGE OF HEMP.

THE French recommend to cut off the roots and tops of the Hemp plants previous to this operation, which they say improves the quality of the remainder. For the water steep, the Hemp which had been previously dried and made up in bundles, as above directed, should be laid in a pond containing about five or six feet deep of water, and free from mud; the bundles of Hemp should be laid therein across each other, and close together, part of the heads one way and part the other, the whole covered with water and kept underneath it by stones, weights or levers, till properly steeped, which may be known by taking out a bundle and washing it; if the leaves come off freely, the fibres open and easily separate from the rind or stalk, it is in good order, if not, it must lie longer under careful observation, till ready.

IT will take a longer or shorter time in steeping according to the heat of the weather; for instance, six or seven days at the latter end of August; in September eight or ten, and in October or the beginning of November from twelve to twenty days, sooner or later, as the weather is naturally warm or cold.

IF convenience would admit that the pond of water in which the Hemp is steeped could be filled with water, or emptied at pleasure, it would be best to pile the Hemp therein dry; then to let the water upon it, to continue till it is properly steeped, afterwards to draw off the water, and when the Hemp is well drained take it out.

WHEN there is no convenience of a pond of water for steeping the Hemp, it may be managed in a brook or river, but there is danger in such case of its being carried away by the stream or damaged by the sand and mud.

THE Female Hemp, after seeding, requires a few days longer steeping than the other, owing to the thickness of the Rind, and the glutinous Substance being more adherent from its longer standing.

THE intent of the Process of water steeping, is by a gentle fermentation to separate the gummy and Mucilaginous matters from the Fibres of the Hemp, with which they are intermixed, and to occasion the Bark or Rind on the outside of the Fibres to be afterwards more easily detached by the Break.

WHEN the Hemp is found to be sufficiently steeped, the Bundles must be taken out one by one, and washed to separate the Filth and loose particles; it should then be set on the root ends to drain, the bands be untied, and the Hemp placed against a fence exposed to the sun and air, that it may be thoroughly dried.

ANOTHER mode of preparing Hemp after steeping, is to take it after washing, to a dry piece of ground, to open the bundles carefully, and spread the Hemp about two inches thick, it should remain about a week in this state, then be laid with care the other side uppermost, and in about eight days tied up in straight bundles and removed under cover till there is leisure time to break and swingle it.

IN Russia, Sweden and Livonia, where there is much snow, they ferment or steep the Hemp in winter in the snow, by spreading the Hemp (which had been previously dried) upon the first snow that falls, and leaving it there to be covered with other Falls of snow, until spring, when it is usually found to be sufficiently fermented, it is then collected into small Bundles ready for the Break. It appears to me that this mode would answer well in Canada, for the Female Hemp which has borne Seed, and save considerable trouble at that time of the year.

OF THE MANAGEMENT OF HEMP BY THE BREAK.

AFTER the Hemp has been washed and well dried from the water steep, it is fit for the break; if it has not been sufficiently dried in the open air, it may be done, by laying it carefully upon sticks placed across about four feet above a gentle fire; the Hemp may be laid thereon about six inches deep, and turned from time to time to be equally dried. In those countries where Hemp is grown in large quantities, wind and water Mills with particular machinery for the purpose are contrived, to break and prepare the Hemp in a more cheap and expeditious manner; but in a country where the preparation of Hemp is in its infancy, the most plain and simple methods must be first practised, and such machinery used as the Farmer can make in his own house. I have therefore added Drawings and Descriptions of such Implements as will answer the purpose in Canada, and at the least expence. In using the Hand Break, Fig. 1, the person employed takes in the left hand a handful of Hemp and in the other the upper jaw of the Break; the Hemp is laid across at B between the two jaws, and by raising and pressing down the upper jaw several times with great force upon the Hemp, it breaks the dry stems and rind, which contain the fibres of the Hemp. By this means the gummy matter and rind are made to quit the fibres, and the operation is continued 'till the whole handful be perfectly crushed by the machine; the Hemp is then stretched out on the ground or a table, and when about two pound weight is thus prepared, it is made into a parcel by doubling and twisting it slightly, and is then called a Head of Hemp, or undressed stuff. A woman may break from twenty to forty pounds weight of Hemp in this manner in one day.

ON SCUTCHING HEMP.

AFTER the Hemp has passed the Break, it must be Scutched in the following manner. As much Hemp must be taken in the left hand as can conveniently be held, and with the right hand having broken the straw of the Hemp, lay it over the edge of the Scutching Board, Fig. 5, with the root ends foremost; it must be beaten downwards with the Scutcher, Fig. 4, or Fig. 3, and the Hemp turned or winded with the left hand, as it is Scutched, 'till most of the straw and dirt is beat out. When that end is done, the other must be turned and Scutched in a similar manner; then that handful is laid aside and another proceeded with, 'till the whole is finished; the Hemp is then tied up in Bunches and laid in a place moderately dry until there is occasion to use it. The Intent of this operation is to beat out and detach the Rind and dirt previously loosened by the Break.

METHOD OF HECKLING OR HACKLING HEMP.

WHEN Hemp is intended for coarse yarn, it need only be heckled with a large tooth'd Heckle; but if for finer uses, it must be begun with a coarse Heckle, and afterwards passed through one or more finer ones, as occasion may require.

THE business of the Heckler consists in separating throughout the whole length the fibres of the Hemp which the Break and Scutcher have divided only in part. The teeth of the Heckles, see Fig. 6 and 7, are of iron with sharp points. The common coarse Heckle is about twenty one inches by seven, the teeth in the rows are about one and three-fourths of an inch asunder, and extending in height above nine and a half inches from the board in which they are fixed; they are placed in a quincunx order, so that the teeth of the second row are in the centre of the space of the first row. By drawing the Hemp through the Heckle, the teeth carry off a part of the gummy matter contained amongst the fibres of the Hemp in the form of dust, and by dividing the filaments separate entirely the heterogeneous matter contained amongst them. To effect this purpose, the Heckle being firmly screwed upon a plank or solid piece of timber, one side of which inclines from the workman, he takes a handful of the Hemp, see H. Fig. 6, which grasping in his right hand he draws through the Heckle, holding the other part of the Hemp in his left hand to prevent its being entangled. After one end of the Hemp is sufficiently heckled, the handful is reserved, and the same operation performed on the other.

(For the remainder see Supplement.)

REFERENCE TO THE ANNEXED ENGRAVING OF THE IMPLEMENTS USED IN THE PREPARATION OF HEMP.

FIG. 1. represents the Hand Break for Hemp with a portion of the Hemp Plant placed at B, supposed to be held by the left hand across the three under teeth or lower jaw of the Break, the two upper teeth and handle which are moveable on the hinges A A, are with the right hand quickly and often raised up and forced down upon the Hemp placed at B, which Hemp is frequently shifted and turned with the left hand; its rind is by this operation broken, and part thereof detached from the filaments.

Fig. a is a cross section of the two heads and jaws of the Break; C is the handle; D the two upper teeth; E the three lower teeth.

Fig. 3 and 4, represent two different kinds of Scutchers or implements for further clearing the Hemp from its dirt and rinds after it has passed the Breaker, the person who scutches the Hemp, holds the Hemp in the left hand, and lays part of it over the stock, or upright plank Fig. 5, fixed firm in the floor, and with the right hand strikes or scutches the Hemp with one of the Scutchers, either of which may be used for this purpose, but that of Fig. 3 gives a more regular and firm stroke; the wing F fixed upon the back of it equalizes the motion, prevents the Hemp from entangling on the Scutcher, and the space betwixt the hook I wing F and Scutcher G, is useful in straightening the Hemp by drawing the bunch occasionally through it.

Fig. 6 and 7 are two Heckles fixed firmly on a Bench before the workman, who strikes the Hemp H upon the iron teeth of the Heckle, and draws it through them to open the filaments.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

FROM accounts lately received from good Authority in Canada, it appears that an Acre of good Land in Corn will not yield half the profit to the Planter that the same Land will yield there in Hemp, and that Hemp may be grown successively on the same Land many years to advantage, when Corn will not. An Acre or two of Land it is agreed may be planted with Hemp on each Farm there, without interfering with other business. With respect to the quantity of Hemp raised on an Acre of Ground, it varies from six to twelve hundred weight, much depending on the quality of the Soil, and the manner of preparing it. A great part of the business is done at leisure, and when the time can best be spared. The consumption is certain, the present demand of Hemp for England being upwards of thirty thousand Tons per annum. His Majesty's Ministers are endeavouring to render the necessary facilities to the Inhabitants of Canada, by furnishing Hemp Seed, employing Agents to purchase, with ready Money, the Hemp when prepared for Sale, so that the necessary means are already taken to ensure success, in an Object of consequence to the Prosperity of Canada, and of immense importance to the United Empire.

Lateſt Intelligence.

From the New York Herald of Dec. 25.

The following account of the deſtruction of the combined French and Spaniſh fleet after the late engagement off Cadiz was received by Mr. Kirkpatrick, the American Conſul at Malaga, from his correſpondent at Cadiz, and brought here yeſterday by Captain Chew, from Gibraltar. From this ſtatement it will be ſeen that the Britiſh were unable to ſecure more than 14 of the enemies ſhips, although a much greater number ſtruck to them.—Eleven eſcaped.—Three daſhed on the rocks and were entirely loſt, together with moſt of their crews.—One was ſo crippled as to be unmanageable and was deſtroyed, and one blew up in the engagement.

An account of the Combined Fleets of France and Spain, that ſailed from Cadiz on the 19th and 20th of October, 1805, and fought the Britiſh Fleet on the 21ſt of the ſame month.

SPANISH SHIPS.

Principe d'Auſturias, 112 guns.—Returned to Cadiz Bay on the 21ſt Oct. very much damaged, and a great number killed and wounded—among the latter Admiral Gravina and his Major General Piſcano, however not dangerous; on the night of the 22d her mizen and main maſts were ſo crippled that they rolled overboard.

Santa Anna.—Struck to Admiral Collingwood, who manned her and took out her captain, Admiral Haba being wounded was left by his own choice on board; being entirely diſmaſted and ungovernable, ſhe fell ſo near the fort of Cadiz that ſhe was re-taken on the 23d by the ſquadron that went to ſea for that purpoſe, and brought into Cadiz harbour.

Bargo, 100 guns.—Was much damaged in the action, but came into port on the night of the 21ſt; on the 23d in the morning, ſhe got under way with ſeveral other ſhips, to retake the Santa Anna, which the Britiſh were towing off; and on the night of the 23d, not being able to make the port, ſhe anchored about ſix leagues diſtant, and it blowing very hard ſhe rolled her maſts (which were very much damaged) overboard; and was taken next morning by the Britiſh in ſight of Cadiz.

Monarca, San Juſto, and San Leandro.—All arrived at Cadiz on the night of the 21ſt, and next morning, the San Leandro, while at anchor in the mouth of the Bay, rolled away her main and mizen maſts.

San Francisco d'Aſſa.—Came in the night of the 22d, drifted aſhore in Cadiz Bay, near Fort St. Catalina, and is totally loſt; the part of the crew that was on board when ſhe went aſhore were ſaved, having an Engliſh prize officer and men on board.

Neptune.—Came in the morning of the 22d diſmaſted, and drifted aſhore on the night of the 23d near St. Catalina, and was totally loſt, crew ſaved, having an Engliſh prize officer and men on board.

San Juan Nepomiceno, San Ildephonſo, Argonauta, and Bahama.—All totally diſmaſted and ſunk in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh on the 22d.

Miſſing, though the tower gave notice of one more Spaniſh ſhip being in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, but do not mention her name, ſuppoſed to be the Santiſſima Trinidad, of 144 guns.

FRENCH SHIPS.

Pluton.—Came in the night of the 21ſt.

Algeſiras.—Came in the night of the 22d, having ſtruck to and been manned by the Engliſh, but being totally diſmaſted and ungovernable in the gale of the night, the Engliſh gave the command to the French on condition they ſhould not be priſoners of war; this ſhip had above 300 killed, and among them Admiral Magon.

——, totally diſmaſted, ſtruck to and was taken poſſeſſion of by the Engliſh, but ſtruck the ſhore and went to pieces near St. Peter, on the night of the 23d and every ſoul except about 25 are ſaid to have periſhed.

Swerapeille, Neptune and Hero, all came in on the night of the 21ſt much damaged, and are calling for ſuccour at the mouth of the Bay.

Le Achille. Blown up during the action, the major part of the crew ſaved.

L'Argonaute. Came in on the night of the 21ſt.

L'Aigle. Diſmaſted, and in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, but in diſtreſs near Tonne Gorda, ſaid to be got off and coming in.

Bucentaur. Admiral Villeneuve wounded, totally diſmaſted, and ſtruck to Nelſon. The Admiral and his Captain were put on board a frigate, and the ſhip manned by a lieutenant and eighty men. On the night of the 22d, the ſhip being totally diſmaſted, was blown by the violence of the wind towards the ſhore, and anchored near the Caſtle of St. Sebaſtian; next day about an hour after the people were taken out, the went down. Major General Prigny, who was left on board by Nelſon, is ſlightly wounded. At Cadiz, 400 men are reported killed on board this ſhip, and moſt of the officers wounded.

Intrepid, Redoubtable, Monte, Blanco, Dugaytouin, Formidable, Scipion, Berwick and Swiftſure. Theſe ſhips are miſſing, but as it is known that ſeveral of them had ſtruck to the Engliſh, it is ſuppoſed they are in their poſſeſſion.

A report however prevails, that Admiral Duquenond has eſcaped with four frigates.

The bodies of Admiral Magon and Captain Villigris are reported found, driven on the Playa between Cadiz and St. Patrick, where above 1000 bodies have been driven on ſhore. The whole beach is covered with the wrecks of ſhips.

The five frigates and brigs are returned without any material damage.

L'Aigle is ſaid to have got off and anchored in the Channel.

The arrival of the Britiſh Packet Manchester, Captain Davies, in 44 days from Falmouth, enables the Editors of the New York Gazette to give to their readers another IMPORTANT NAVAL VICTORY, by the Britiſh Admiral Strachan. There is no other news of moment. It was hourly expected, that the King of Pruſſia would join the Coalition.

LONDON GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY.

Admiralty Office, Nov. 11.

The letter, (and its encloſure) of which the following are copies, were received at this office laſt night, from captain now Rear Admiral) Sir Richard John Strachan, Bart. Commander of his Majeſty's ſhip the Cæſar, addreſſed to William Marſden, Eſq.

SIR, Cæſar, November 11.

The accompanying copy of a letter, addreſſed to the honorable Admiral Cornwallis, I requeſt you will be pleaſed to lay before the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, with my apology for the haſty manner in which it is written. I have the honor to be, &c.

R. J. STRACHAN.

Cæſar, Weſt of Rochefort, 264 miles, Nov. 4, Wind S. E.

SIR,

Being off Ferrol, working to the weſtward with the wind weſterly, on the evening of the 2d, we obſerved a frigate in the N. W. making ſignals. I made all ſail to join before the night, and followed by the ſhips named in the margin * we came up with her at eleven at night, and at the moment ſhe joined us, we ſaw ſix large ſhips near us. Captain Baker informed me he had been chaſed by the Rochefort ſquadron, then cloſe to leeward of us. We were delighted. I defired him to tell the captains of the ſhips of the line aſtern to follow me, as I meant to engage them directly; and immediately bore away in the Cæſar for the purpoſe, making all the ſignals I could to indicate our movements to our ſhips; the moon enabled to ſee the enemy in a line abreaſt, cloſely formed; but we loſt ſight of them when it ſet, and I was obliged to reduce our ſails, the Hero, Courageaux, and Æolus, being the only ſhips we could ſee.—We continued ſteering to the E. N. E. all night, and in the morning obſerved the Santa Margarita bear us; at nine we diſcovered the enemy of four ſail of the line at N. E. under all ſail.—We had alſo every ſoing ſet and came up with them laſt: in the evening, we obſerved three ſail aſtern; and the Phœnix ſpoke me at night. I found that active officer, Captain Baker, had delivered my orders, and I ſent him to aſſiſt the Santa Margarita in leading us up to the enemy.—At day light we were near them, and the Santa Margarita had begun in a very gallant manner to fire upon their rear, and was ſoon rejoined by the Phœnix.

A little before noon the French finding an action unavoidable began to take in their ſmall ſails, and form a line, bearing on the ſtarboard tack; we did the ſame, and I communicated my intentions by hailing to captains, "that I ſhould attack the centre and rear," and at noon began the battle; in a ſhort time the van ſhip of the enemy tacked, which almoſt made the action cloſe and general, the Namur joined ſoon after we tacked, which we did as ſoon as we could get the ſhips round, and I directed her by ſignal, to engage the van; at half paſt three the action ceaſed, the enemy fought to admiration, and not ſurrendering till their ſhips were unmanageable. I have returned thanks to the captains of the ſhips of the line, and the frigates, and they ſpeak in high terms of approbation of their reſpective officers and ſhips' companies. If any thing could add to the good opinion I had already formed of the officers and crew of the Cæſar, it is their gallant conduct in this day's battle. The enemy have ſuffered much, but our ſhips not more than is to be expected on theſe occaſions.—You may judge of my ſurpriſe, ſir, when I found the ſhips we had taken, were not the Rochefort ſquadron, but from Cadiz.

I have the honor to be, &c.

R. J STRACHAN.

Hon. W. Cornwallis, Admiral of the White, Commander in Chief, &c. &c. &c.

The Revolutionaire joined at the time the Namur did, but, with the reſt of our frigates, in conſequence of the French tacking, were to leeward of the enemy.

I do not know what is become of the Bellona, or the other two ſail we ſaw on the night of the 2d inſt.

The reports of damage, killed and wounded, have not been all received. The enemy have ſuffered much.

The London Courier of the 15th obſerves, "We ſtated yeſterday, that a TREATY of Offenſive and Defenſive Alliance had been concluded between Ruſſia and Pruſſia.—By this Treaty Pruſſia engages to make a COMMON CAUSE with England, Ruſſia and Auſtria, if Bonaparte does not accede to the terms of Peace which have been propoſed to him. The object of Duroc's miſſion to Berlin was to invite Pruſſia either to join France immediately, or in the event of her not joining her, to preſerve a ſtrict neutrality.—The firſt propoſition was immediately rejected. When Pruſſia evinced an intention of no longer remaining neutral, and tranſmitted a Note on the 14th ult. to the French miniſters La Foreſt and Duroc, Bonaparte in anſwer to that note demanded peremptorily, THAT PRUSSIA SHOULD IMMEDIATELY DECLARE FOR OR AGAINST HIM.—The King of Pruſſia inſtantly communicated this peremptory demand to the Emperor of Ruſſia, and the two Monarchs in concert returned an anſwer, in which they propoſed—

"That Naples ſhould be evacuated by the French troops; that the Treaty of Luneville ſhould be executed to its full extent; that Switzerland and Holland ſhould be declared Independent; and that the regal dignity of Italy be for ever ſeparated from the Imperial dignity of France.—If theſe propoſitions were acceded to, Ruſſia promiſed to evacuate Corfu; but if they were rejected, the Pruſſian army would commence its operations.

A letter from on board the Royal Sovereign, one of Nelſon's fleet, ſays,

"I write with Admiral Villeneuve at my elbow. He can ſcarcely yet credit his fate, and his deſpair and grief exceed any thing I ever ſaw."

Before the battle of Copenhagen there was recorded in the Britiſh Admiralty Annals one hundred and twenty two inſtances of honorable atchievements by Horatio Nelſon.

Further Extracts from London Papers received at this Office by the Neptune.

LONDON, November 7.

Our Readers have peruſed the moſt affecting account of the total defeat of the Combined Fleets, and the ever to be lamented death of Lord Nelſon, with thoſe mixed feelings of grief, gratitude any joy, which it is ſo well calculated to inſpire. We have ſome, intereſting particulars to add to it:

It has afforded much ſurpriſe, that the Combined Fleets ſhould have adopted the reſolution of putting to ſea, and it had been ſuppoſed, that nothing but a total want of proviſions could have induced them to hazard a battle with Lord Nelſon. The fact was not ſo—they had received orders to put to ſea the firſt opportunity that ſhould be afforded them by our fleet being weakened by detachments from it, or by ſtreſs of weather to quit the blockade of Cadiz. Their object was to make for the Mediterranean, to collect in their paſſage the Carthagena ſquadron, and to proceed to Toulon, where, being joined by the veſſels in that port, they would have formed a fleet of between 46 and 50 ſail of the line, with which it was their deſign to prevent, if poſſible, the ſailing of any expedition with Britiſh troops from Malta, or any expedition with Ruſſian troops from Corfu. Such is ſaid to have been their plan; and the courſe they were ſteering, and Vice Admiral Collingwood's diſpatches, juſtify us in giving credit to the aſſertion—The enemy heard of Admiral Louis having been diſpatched with ſeven ſail of the line to Tetuan Bay for proviſions and other neceſſaries, and they conceived that our fleet had been thereby diminiſhed to about 20 ſail of the line. It muſt not be imagined that his lordſhip remained directly off Cadiz with his fleet, or within ſight of the port. His great object was to induce them to come out. "Let them come out," he would ſometimes ſay—"My object is not to induce them by the diſplay of all my force to remain in port, but to do every thing in my power to tempt them to come out." In purſuance of this deſign, he never kept all his fleet before Cadiz.—This was the manner in which he ſtationed his fleet. The Eurydus frigate was within half a mile of the mouth of the harbour to watch the enemy's movements, and give him the earlieſt intelligence—Of the harbor, but at a greater diſtance, he had about ſeven or eight ſail of the line. He remained himſelf off Cape St. Mary's with the remainder of his fleet, and a line of frigates extended and communicated between him and the ſeven or eight ſail off Cadiz. The advantage of this plan was that he could receive ſupplies and reinforcements off Cape St. Mary's without the enemy's being informed of it, and thus they remained conſtantly ignorant of the real force under his command.—but being acquainted, as we have already ſaid, with the circumſtance of Admiral Louis having been diſpatched with ſeven ſail of the line, they conceived his force not to amount to more than 20 ſail of the line. Great praiſe is due to the admiralty for the active and vigorous exertions they had made to place Lord Nelſon's force in the beſt poſſible ſtate—the Combined fleets at Cadiz had in a more particular manner fixed their attention—they had ſtrong reaſons to ſuſpect what their intentions were. Juſt before they came out of port, his Lordſhip had been reinforced by three or four ſail of the line from home—of this, by Lord Nelſon's judicious conduct in ſtationing his fleet, the enemy were uninformed.

His Lordſhip had received from the Admiralty on the 1ſt and 2d of Oct. ſuch information, as induced him to believe that the enemy would ſoon put to ſea. He had arranged, before he left London to reſume the command of the fleet, a plan by which he would fight the enemy upon a new principle; it was, we underſtand, extremely ſimple, but it was no ſooner made known than it carried conviction to every naval officer; it afforded a compleat remedy for that ſo convenient ſyſtem, which requires a vaſt variety and frequent changes of ſignals. "I ſhall never diſturb my fleet," he ſaid, "in the day of battle with ſuperabundance of ſignals." On the 4th of October he ordered all captains on board the victory and laid before them his new plan. It was one of the peculiar features of Lord Nelſon's character to be able, by the clearneſs and preciſion of his plans, and orders to make every man underſtand him in an inſtant; the new plan carried immediate conviction to them.—They all exclaimed that it could not but be ſucceſsful. The laſt order given before the action, was a ſhort but comprehenſive one.—"England expects every man to do his duty." He determined himſelf to fight the Spaniſh Admiral's ſhip, the ſuperb Santiſſima Trinidada. It is worthy of remark, that he had before gained the higheſt honor in grapling with the Santiſſima Trinidada, in the action of the 14th of February, 1797, off Cape St. Vincent. She was the largeſt ſhip in the world, carried 136 guns, and had four decks. Lord Nelſon ordered his own ſhip to be carried alongſide his old acquaintance, as he called her, and ſhe was killed to her. How well the action was fought, how ſevere the conflict, Admiral Collingwood's excellent letter ſufficiently informs us. The enemy were engaged at the muzzle of their guns. Every one knows how full their ſhips are always of men—every 74 gun ſhip has about 900 men; the Santiſſima Trinidada had 1600, including a corps of troops, amongſt whom were ſome ſharp ſhooters. Captain Hardy, who law from the manner in which theſe ſharp ſhooters fired from the main top of the Santiſſima Trinidada into the Victory, that their object was to pick out the officers, and more particularly of courſe that greateſt of all heroes, repeatedly requeſted, as we ſtated yeſterday, Lord Nelſon to change his coat, which was decorated with the ſtars of the different orders or at leaſt to put on a great coat over it. The firſt that was killed near his Lordſhip, was his Secretary Mr. Scott—he was killed by a muſket ball which entered his head, and he fell dead inſtantly. The ſecond ſhot, a few minutes after, ſtruck his Lordſhip, and entering below his left ſhoulder, took a direction through his vital parts—he flaggered againſt the officer near him, and was immediately carried below. The ſurgeons were buſily employed upon the wounded—his Lordſhip deſired to take his turn. As ſoon as the ſurgeon examined the wound he ſaw it was mortal. The gallant hero had his eyes fixed attentively upon him—he ſaw the ſurgeon turn pale, and his countenance assume the deepest impression of grief—" it is mortal, I see," he said. The Surgeon did not, or could not speak. He desired to be placed upon a chair, and directed captain Hardy to attend him. He spoke no more of his wound, except when he first communicated to the captain the surgeon's conviction. He employed the short time he lived, about an hour, in dictating orders relative to the battle, in receiving reports, in enquiring what was the condition of the enemy, and what ships had struck. He had from the first thought that he should be wounded; but he spoke of the probability of it with his usual calmness. When he found just before the action that he had placed the enemy in such a situation that they could not avoid an engagement he displayed the utmost animation, and his usual confidence of victory; he said to captain Hardy, and the other officers who had surrounded him on the quarter deck, " now they cannot escape us; I think we shall at least make forty of them. I shall probably lose a leg, but that will be purchasing a victory cheaply." Even had the victory been purchased with that loss alone, it would not have been cheaply purchased, but how much greater a price has been paid for it. To the last moment of his precious life, he was able to give directions with the utmost calmness and precision. Like General Wolfe, breathing out his life on the heights of Abraham, he enquired " whether the enemy gave way?" He was gratified with the intelligence conveyed him almost every moment, that more of the enemy's ships had struck. As life ebbed fast away the number augmented. He was told that fifteen had struck; he seemed enraptured with the intelligence. The last that struck before his death was the superb Santissima Trinidada. When he heard that she had struck, he appeared convulsed with joy; he lived but a few moments afterwards. In his last moments, with that piety which had ever formed a distinguished feature of his character, he returned thanks to God that he had permitted him to die in the arms of victory. He desired his blessing to be conveyed to all who were the nearest to his heart, and whom he could have wished to have again embraced—" but the will of God be done." He laid his head upon the shoulder of Captain Hardy, who remained with him to the last, and in a few moments his gallant soul escaped for ever! Admiral Collingwood had previously received the account of his being mortally wounded—Lord Nelson had sent him his final instructions, his affectionate regard, and his last farewell. It was known too on board the Santissima Trinidada that he had been wounded; just after he received the wound, there was a general shout on board the Spanish ships. Of the engagement we have received some few more particulars—the French and Spaniards both fought desperately—the former seemed to wish to clear themselves from the imputation thrown upon them by the latter, after the action with Calder, of having wished to make the Spaniards bear the brunt of the battle. Admiral Gravina is said to have declared that he had been thrust forward in that action, but that he would this time make the French take an equal share—they did so, and both fought bravely. Many of our ships had two or more on them at a time.—The Temeraire was boarded by two ships at once; they pointed upon the quarter deck in great numbers, rushed to the flag staff, and tore down the colours. Our gallant tars were in the highest degree enraged—they immediately turned to—cleared the deck of every one of the enemy—most were killed, the rest were forced overboard—the colours were hoisted amidst loud huzzas, and the two ships which had boarded her, were forced in their turn to strike their colours.

ALBANY, Jan. 7.

The great naval action off Cadiz appears to have been accompanied by a circumstance unparalleled even in naval annals.—Of three Commanders in Chief, English, Spanish and French, Two were killed or died of their wounds and the THIRD made prisoner.

On the evening after the intelligence of Lord Nelson's victory and death were received in London, the following lines were spoken by Mr. Wroughton, on the Drury-lane theatre:

Is there a man, who this great triumph hears,
And with his transports does not mingle tears?
For tho' Britannia's flag victorious flies,
Who can refrain from grief when Nelson dies?
Stretch'd on his deck amid surrounding foes,
More Phœnix-like the gallant Chief expires;
Cover'd with trophies, let his ashes rest,
His memory lives in every Britith breast.
His dirge our groans, his monument our praise;
And whilst each tongue this grateful tribute pays,
His soul ascends to Heav'n in glory slaughter'd hosts attend.

THE ORACLE.

YORK:—SATURDAY, February 8, 1806.

Tueſday laſt the 4th inſtant being the day appointed by Proclamation for opening the Provincial Parliament; at twelve o'clock, his Honor the Preſident came in ſtate to the Upper Houſe of Legiſlature, and being ſeated on the Throne, commanded, by meſſage through the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, the attendance of the Houſe of Aſſembly, in the Legiſlative Council Chamber, and the Houſe of Aſſembly having attended accordingly, his Honor was pleaſed to open the Seſſion with the following gracious SPEECH to both Houſes of Parliament:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council,
And Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

BY the much lamented Death of Lieutenant Governor Hunter, the Adminiſtration of the Government of this Province hath devolved on me:—I moſt ſincerely condole with you on that melancholy event; his Faithful and meritorious Services to the Public, in this part of his Majeſty's Dominions, will be long felt and remembered. It ſhall be my endeavour to imitate and to follow his Example.

Since the laſt Seſſion of this Legiſlature, Commiſſioners have been appointed, for carrying into effect the Proviſions of an Act, for affording relief to thoſe Perſons, who may be entitled to claim Lands in this Province, as Heirs or Deviſees of the Nominees of the Crown to ſuch Lands; I make no doubt, by the exertions and abilities of thoſe Gentlemen, to whom that important Truſt is delegated, the Public will ſoon receive the moſt important Benefits from the Operation of that ſalutary Law.

I forbear on the preſent Occaſion to point out particular Objects for your Deliberations, being convinced, that your knowledge of the reſpective ſituations of his Majeſty's Subjects whom you here represent, will be the surest Guide to direct you, in the enacting of such Laws as may be necessary for their Security and Comfort, (as well as in the continuing of Laws heretofore enacted, but now about to expire, whose beneficial effects we have already felt and experienced.)

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have ordered the Public Accounts to be laid before you, not doubting, but that you will pay that attention in the examination of them, which the nature of the Subject requires.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,
And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

It is with the highest satisfaction, that I congratulate you on the great Naval Victory, which lately hath crowned with Success his Majesty's Arms; though our joy is not unmixed, as we have deeply to regret the loss of one of the bravest and most able Defenders of his King and of his Country.

May Great Britain, our Parent State, ever have such men to fight her Battles; and may she, by the Blessing of Providence, be enabled to defend herself and her widely extended Dominions, from the assaults of her Enemies, and transmit her Territories with her invaluable Constitution, unimpaired, to the latest posterity.

The following Addresses were presented to his Honor the President, in answer to his Honor's Speech at the opening of the present Session of the Provincial Parliament.

To His Honor ALEXANDER GRANT, Esquire, President Administering the Government, of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Honor,

WE his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the Legislative Council of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to Address your Honor, with our respectful Thanks for your Speech.

The late Lieutenant Governor Hunter's well known exertions to promote the welfare of this Province, will be long remembered with gratitude, and his death sincerely lamented by its inhabitants. We therefore fervently join your Honor, in our condolence on that melancholy event, and highly applaud your intentions, to imitate and follow so good an example.

The Act, for affording relief to the persons entitled to claim Lands in this Province, as Heirs or Devisees of the Nominees of the Crown to such Lands, has had our fullest approbation; and we are well assured that the Commissioners appointed to carry it into effect will exert their abilities to render its operation as beneficial to the Public as possible.

We beg leave to assure your Honor that the Legislative Council of this Province will not be wanting in zeal for its Prosperity, and in giving its assistance, to the enacting of such Laws as may appear to be still necessary for the security and comfort of the King's Subjects who dwell in it; and also to the continuing of those Laws heretofore enacted and about to expire, whose beneficial effects have been already felt and experienced by them.

With pleasure we reciprocate the congratulations of your Honor on the great Naval Victory which has lately crowned with success his Majesty's Arms. But while we thus exultingly join in expressing our joy; we equally lament that we have at the same time to regret the loss of that distinguished Officer, whose conspicuous Abilities and great Naval Skill, have closed a brilliant Career of the most eminent Services to his King and Country in adding this very splendid Triumph to their number. We also piously join your Honor in praying, that Great Britain, our Parent State, may not only ever have such Men to fight her Battles; but that she may by the Blessing of Providence, which has hitherto protected her, be enabled to defend her widely extended Dominions against the assaults of her Enemies, and transmit them with her invaluable Constitution, undiminished and unimpaired to the latest Posterity.

By Order of the House,
RICHARD CARTWRIGHT, Speaker.
Legislative Council Chamber, York,
the 5th day of February, 1806.

To which his Honor gave the following Answer:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Your respectful Address calls for my best thanks and acknowledgements; and I entertain the pleasing hope, that the Inhabitants of this Province will derive the greatest Benefits from your exertions and care.

To the Honorable ALEXANDER GRANT Esquire, President, Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Honor,

WE his Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons of Upper Canada in Parliament assembled, beg leave to present to you our gratulations on your accession to the Administration of the Government of this Province.

We affect not to describe to you the career in which distinguished virtue may display itself, in exercising the high prerogative of the Representative of a gracious and benevolent Sovereign; but we cherish the fond hope, that you, in your relation to Majesty, and from your experience in the public Concerns of this Country, will, in the Administration of the Government of it, preserve unsullied this important trust.

We derive much pleasure from being informed that the Act of the last Session of this Parliament, "for "affording relief to those persons "who may be entitled to claim "Lands in this Province as Heirs "or Devisees of the Nominees of "the Crown, in cases where no Pa-"tent hath issued for such Lands," will, in its operation, prove a salutary Law; as we feel impressed with the principle that the protection of the Subject and the security of his Property, ought to be legibly evinced in every act of legislation in which a regard to our happy Constitution can find either ascendency or support.

We shall with cheerful assiduity, devote our attention to the public Accounts, and shall feel ourselves happy in submitting to you such observations as may be deemed essential either in the retrenchment of the expenditure of the public money, or in devising the means of a more necessary application of them.

We feel more than ordinary pleasure in your Communication of his Majesty's late Naval Victory, and though we may much regret the fall of the illustrious Nelson in that Action, yet we cannot refrain from expressing in our sensations of joy:—May our Navy be permanent and its successes perpetual.

(Attest.)
DONALD MACLEAN,
Clk. Assbly.
Commons House of Assembly,
6th February, 1806.

To which His Honor was pleased to return the following Answer:

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I return you my best thanks for your respectful Address, and have no doubt, but, that your deliberations and exertions will effectually promote the happiness and prosperity of his Majesty's subjects in this Province.

OBITUARY.

DIED, on Thursday last the 6th inst. after a painful illness, DAVID BURNS Esquire, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the Province of Upper Canada. His remains will be interred to-morrow afternoon.

Latest Intelligence.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 3, 1805.

In consequence of the reports made by Adjutant General Oxvenen, the King has ordered the erection of lights with reflecting lamps for the direction of navigators in the Baltic.—Most of the ships which navigate the Baltic, having occasion to pass before Christianfoe, they run the risk of being wrecked off that place or the neighbouring islands. To prevent these misfortunes and to point out the course which ships ought to take, it has been thought proper to erect on the great tower of Christianfoe a light composed of nine reflecting lamps, the circuit of which may be made in three minutes; so that when the nine large lights are seen in the distance, it requires about 50 seconds to pass from one to another. The lights will disappear in the intervals, but may always be seen, unless the vessel be at too great a distance. These lights are to be placed at the height of ninety-two feet above the level of the sea. This elevation has been adopted to prevent this beacon from being mistaken for that which has stood for some years at the Southern point of the Isle of Bornholm, and in which the light is made by a cole of fire. This light is two hundred and seventy two feet above the level of the sea, and in clear weather may be distinctly seen five or six miles off at sea. The lights at Christianfoe will be displayed, for the first time, on the first of October, 1805, and will be kept up, conformable to the ordinance of the 21st March, 1705, and the proclamation of 1st Feb. 1799, that is to say, from Easter to Michaelmas, from one hour after sun-set to sun-rise, and in winter, from half an hour after sun-set to sun-rise.

LISBON, Sept. 20.

By letters from Cadiz we are informed of a most deadly animosity subsisting between the French & Spaniards, which is carried to lengths too shocking for the reflection of human nature; a night does not pass without the commission of some horrid outrage, which always terminates in the spilling of blood.—The origin of these misunderstandings is kept profoundly secret, but is said to be between the French admiral Villeneuve and Gravina. The latter has proffered his resignation, which the Spanish government has refused to accept; yet no means are taken to soften the existing quarrel, or put an end to the nightly broils which take place between the French and Spanish sailors, which has of late been extended to the inhabitants of the town, who are now engaged in the dispute, under a plea that the provisions for the town are kept for the support of the French navy, and that they in consequence will be starved.

In Madrid the disorders wear a still more dreadful appearance; the inhabitants are in arms, to whom the Swiss guards have been opposed and defeated, upwards of 600 persons have been killed and wounded in this conflict; the cause is attempted to be kept profoundly secret; but it has arisen from an edict lately passed under the sanction of the Prince of Peace, commanding all persons to receive in full payment, in lieu of money, the depreciated vales, a paper currency, which in the last war, was at a discount of 50 per cent.—This currency is the most unpopular in the kingdom of Spain, is always at a discount; and the people refuse to concur in the terms of the edict, which is the cause of a dispute which has at length occasioned this insurrection.

In consequence of this news, all intercourse by way of exchange between Lisbon and Madrid is at a stand; and all business between the two places lies for the present.

It is very currently reported here that Bonaparte has made another demand upon the government of this country, which if it is levied, must be complied with, rather than endanger the return of our present neutrality.—Eight millions of cruzados is said to be the extent of his demand, which in sterling money is 800,000l.

Whether this will ultimately turn out true or false, I have the mortification to inform you, that our bilheten, (the paper money of Portugal) are at this time at a discount of 20 per cent: which extraordinary depression is occasioned by the above report; for all the bilhetes are generally at a discount, it has not of late been greater than ten per cent.

GREENOCK, Oct. 23.

The Hamburgh Mail due on Wednesday last, arrived on Friday. The following is the substance of the very interesting intelligence communicated by it.

The French troops under Bernadotte and Marmont, with the Bavarian Auxiliaries, marching apparently towards Bohemia, had turned suddenly round, and proceeded in three columns towards Nienberg, Donawert and Ingolstadt with a view to turn the flank of the Austrians. To reach his destination with the greater celerity, General Bernadotte, acting by previous instructions, proceeded on his march through the Prussian territory of Anspach! The Prussian Commandant protested, but in vain—Bernadotte alledged his positive orders—and the Prussians were forced to retire before a superior force. This outrage was next day renewed by the passage of 20,000 Bavarians through the same territory, in a parallel line. Against this violation of neutrality, the Prussian Minister at Anspach also protested, and his dispatches, narrating the transaction, excited the strongest sensations at the Court of Berlin. A Council of State was immediately held, and the result sent off to the King. His Prussian Majesty arriving the same evening at his capital, held a second council, after which dispatches were sent to the Generals in all parts of his dominions, and to all the Courts of Europe. Some private letters say, that his Prussian Majesty has, in consequence declared, "he would allow a free passage to the Russian troops through his dominions—and that he would not, in any way, oppose the entrance of the allied forces into Hanover." But shocking as it is, this is not the only act of violence and injustice which this mail enables us to record. The Cyper has again violated the rights of the Diplomatic character, and the law of nations, by issuing orders for the arrest of two foreign ministers, their four secretaries of legation, and a Charge d'Affairs at Stutgard!—orders given at the time when he was hospitably entertained at the place of Louisburg, belonging to the Duke of Wurtemberg, whose capital he has so grossly insulted.—Amongst the persons thus arrested, with every circumstance of barbarity and publicity, were the Austrian and Russian ministers. The whole were put in close confinement.

LONDON, Oct. 12.

Last night Mr. Sewar left town, on his return to the Court of Berlin, with the answer of our Government to the important dispatch which he brought from thence about a week since; and which was undersood to relate to the occupation of Hanover.—Our expedition, consisting of the German Legion, and a body of artillery, is destined for Stralsund; but it cannot fail before the end of the next week.—Star.

Government we understand, announced to the Foreign Ministers yesterday, that the Elbe and the Weser are no longer blockaded.

This important event, which opens the communication with Germany and the markets of the North to our merchants, was announced by the following official notice, which was stuck up at Lloyd's.

"Downing-street, Oct. 9, 18 5.

"Information having been received of the removal of the French troops from the position which they occupied on the borders of the Elbe and Weser, his Majesty has pleased to direct that the blockade of the entrance of these rivers should be discontinued, and that his Majesty's ships of war which had been stationed at the mouths of them, should be withdrawn.

(Signed) "MULGRAVE."

Sun Office, three o'clock, P. M.

The Hamburgh mails of the 1st and 4th inst. are just arrived.

The junction of the Bavarian troops with the French appears to be confirmed, and it is stated that Bavaria will be put under a provisional Austrian Government.

A letter from Berlin, under date of October 1st, mentions the intended positions and Commanders of the different Prussian armies, and adds, that a Circular Note to his Prussian Majesty's Envoys, relative to those arrangements has been published, in which it is declared, that they have no other object than that of maintaining a perfect neutrality, against any power that might attempt its infraction.

Parliament is further prorogued to the 28th of November.

Lieut. Col. Layard, of the 54th regiment, arrived from Naples, charged with important dispatches to Government. He came from Lisbon, and the packet on its arrival at Falmouth, being put under quarantine, orders were given for its release that he might come to town. It is supposed that he brings the agreement upon which the King of Naples consents to the admission of a body of English and Russian troops to occupy both Naples and Messina as a protection against the common enemy. Ministers also received letters from Sir James Craig, at Malta, dated the 17th ult, but it is believed not of so late a date as those which they received by the last Hamburgh Mail, which stated that the troops were ready to embark for Naples.

The following is an extract of a private letter, dated Malta, 16. 18 5.—"We are all here in the greatest anxiety, having just received the most peremptory orders to hold ourselves in readiness for embarkation, without knowing where or whither we are going, on which the most rigid secrecy is preserved.—The General has desired all the officers to provide tents, there being none here in store for them.—All we can learn is, that we are going to a country very mountainous, very woody, and where we may present ourselves to meet the enemy a few hours after our landing. We are in high health and spirits, and never in better order for the pastime which awaits us. Our Commissary has also received orders to accompany us."

Extract of a letter from Charles Martin, Esq. Post-master at Waterford, Erie county, to a gentleman in Lancaster, Penn. dated Dec. 5.

"Judson and Isaac Farren are just returned from Detroit. They bring bad news from that place—that the Indians are gathering in force, and threaten Detroit with a second conflagration.

The people are in great alarm, and turning out to arms in every direction. If they had not come away the day they did, they would have been enrolled in the militia next day. This I suppose, is owing to the withdrawing of the troops, as there is now only part of a company of artillerists there, under captain Dixon."

The following intelligence is said to have been received in Philadelphia: that a body of eight hundred Indians had assembled near Detroit, on the British side of the Strait, and sent in a belt of Red and Black wampum to the commanding officer there. The militia have been called out, and it is feared that they are not adequate to the exigency."

Niagara Falls.—About twelve days since, a piece of the rock, which makes this cataract, about 40 feet wide, and extending from the western shore to and nearly across Goat Island, separated from the main rock, and tumbled into the river below. This happening in the day time, the inhabitants for some distance were for a moment alarmed by the noise occasioned by the falling of such a prodigious weight of rock. We understand, that the breach being perpendicular, and from the bottom to the top, the fall of water retains its former height and appearance.

FROM A LATE LIVERPOOL PAPER.

JOURNAL OF A WELCH CURATE.

Monday.—Received ten pounds from my rector, Dr. Snuff, being one half year's salary. Obliged to wait a long time before my admittance to the doctor, and even when admitted was never asked to sit down or refresh myself, though I had walked eleven miles.—Item. The doctor, himself, he could have no curacy filled for fifteen pounds a year.

Tuesday.—Paid nine pounds to seven different persons, but could not buy the second hand pair of black breeches, offered to me at a great bargain, by Cabbage the tailor, my wife wanting a petticoat above all things, and neither Polly nor Betsey having a shoe to go to church in.

Wednesday.—My wife bought a petticoat for herself and shoes for her two daughters; but unfortunately in coming home, dropped half a guinea to a beggar, which she had never before perceived in her pocket, and reduced all our cash in the world to half a crown.—Item. Child my poor woman for being affected at the misfortune, and tenderly advised her to rely on the goodness of God.

Thursday.—Received a note from the alehouse on the top of the hill, informing me that a gentleman wanted to speak with me on pressing business, went, and found it was an unfortunate member of a company of strolling players, who was gaoled for several pence he had pennes; in a struggle what to do—the baker, that we had paid him for on Tuesday, quarrelled with us in order to avoid giving any credit in future: and George Greedy, the butcher, letting word that he heard it whisper as how he intended to take a curate who would do parish duty at an inferior rate, and therefore, though he would do any thing to serve me, advised me to deal with Peter Pinpoint at the upper end of the town: mortifying beyond one these. But a want of humanity in my opinion, a want of justice; the father of the universe lends his clothing to us, with a view that we should relieve another in distress, and we consequently by no more than pay a debt, when we perform an act of benevolence—paid the stranger's reckoning out of the shilling in my pocket, and gave him the remainder to prosecute his journey.

Friday.—A very scanty dinner, and pre-ordered thereafore to be ill, that by avoiding to eat, I might leave something like enough for my poor wife and children. I told my wife what I had done with the shilling, the excellent creature, instead of blaming me for the action, filled the goodness of my heart and burst into tears.—Item. never to contradict her as long as I live; for the mind that can argue like hers, though it may deviate from the more rigid sentiments of prudence, is even amiable in its intentions, and in every light from the severity of economy, performs an act of virtue superior to the value of a kingdom.

Saturday.—Wrote a sermon, which on Sunday I preached at four different parish churches and came home excessively wearied, and excessively hungry—had more money than two pence half penny in the house—but see the goodness of God!—The strolling player whom I relieved was a man of fortune, who accidently heard that I was a humane as I was indigent, and from a generous eccentricity of temper, wanted to do me an essential piece of service. I had not been an hour at home when he came in, and declaring himself my friend, put a fifty pound note into my hand, and the next day presented me with a living of three hundred pounds a year.

LONDON, Sept. 9.
SURPRISING OCCURRENCE.

There is now a Cat at Edward Hodgson's, shoemaker, in Ovenhouse, China-lane, which, on Monday last killed, and ate two mice, and after catching and playing with a third that evening, the family were amazed next morning in finding it alive, and the cat fondling with it as with a kitten, which the still continues to do. On Thursday last she caught another, and took it to the place where the other was, both being alive. The same evening a third came to the cat and her nurlesies; but yesterday one of them was found dead, yet Grimalkin would not eat it. The other two are yet alive; and what is most extraordinary, if either of the mice are taken from the cat she looks anxiously after it, and when put down the mouse immediately runs to the cat, who apparently receives it with pleasure, lying down, putting her feet caressfully over them both, licks them, and sings them to sleep. The cat is about three years old, and had kittens three weeks ago, which were immediately drowned.

FROM THE BOSTON PALLADIUM.

Extracts from the "Travels of Humboldt and Bonpland, in South America, from 1799 to 1804.

"From Loxa they entered Peru by Ayavaca and Gouncabamba, travelling the high summit of the Andes, to proceed to the river Amazon. They had to pass thirty-five times, in the course of two days, the river Chamays, sometimes on a raft, and sometimes by fording. They saw the remains of the causeway of Ynga, which may be compared to the most beautiful causeway in France and Spain, and which proceeds on the porphyritic ridge of the Andes, from Cusco to Assoay, and is furnished with cambo (inns) and public fountains.

"They examined the mines of Haulguayoo, where native silver is found in large masses, at the height of 2000 toises above the level of the sea, in mines, some metalliferous veins of which contain petrified shells, and which with those of Huontajayo are the richest of Peru. From Caxamarca, celebrated by its thermal waters, and by the ruins of the palace of Atahuaspa, they descended to Truxillo, in the neighborhood of which are found vestiges of the immense Peruvian city of Manchiche, ornamented with pyramids in one of which was diſcovered, in the eighteenth century, hammered gold to the value of more than 130,000l. ſterling.

"On the weſtern declivity of the Andes, our travellers enjoyed, for the time, the ſtriking view of the Pacific Ocean; and of that long and narrow valley, the inhabitants of which are unacquainted with rain or thunder, and were, under a happy climate, the moſt abſolute power and moſt dangerous to man. The ocracy itſelf, ſeems to imitate the beneficence of nature.

"They were aſtoniſhed to find in Peru, at ſo immenſe a diſtance from Europe, the neweſt literary productions in chemiſtry, mathematics, and phyſiology; and they admired the great intellectual activity of a people, whom the Europeans accuſe of indolence and luxury.

"They had a favorable navigation of 30 days on the Pacific Ocean, to Acapulco, the weſtern port of the kingdom of New Spain, celebrated by the beauty of its baſon, which appears to have been cut out in the granite rocks by the violence of earthquakes; celebrated alſo by the wretchedneſs of its inhabitants, who ſee their millions of piaſtres embarked for the Philipines and China; and, unfortunately, celebrated by a climate as ſcorching as moral.

"After having occupied their attention with plants, the ſtate of the air, the hourly variations of the barometer, the phenomena of the magnet, and, in particular, the longitude of Acapulco, a port in which two able aſtronomers, Meſſrs. Elpiruſa and Galeano, had before made obſervations, our travellers ſet out for Mexico. They aſcended gradually from the ſcorching Valleys of Mexcala and Papagayo where the thermometer in the ſhade ſtood at 32 deg. of Reaumur, and where they paſſed the river on the fruit of the creſcentia pinnata, bound together by ropes of a gave, to the high table lands of Chilpantzingo, Tuchilotepec and Taſco.

"Having ſpent ſome time in the mine of Taſco, the oldeſt and formerly the richeſt in the kingdom, and having ſtudied the nature of thoſe ſilvery veins, which paſs from the hard calcareous rock to micaceous ſchiſt, and incloſe foliaceous gypſum, they aſcended, by Cuernavaca and the cold regions of Guchitlaqua, to the capital of Mexico. This city, which has 150,000 inhabitants, and ſtands on the ſcite of the old Tenochtitlad between the lakes of the Tezuco and Xochimilo which have decreaſed in ſize ſince the Spaniards, to leſſen the danger of inundations, have opened the mountains of Sincue, is interſected by broad ſtraight ſtreets. It ſtands in ſight of two ſnowy mountains, one of which is named Popocatepec; and of a volcano ſtill burning; and, at the height of 1,160 toiſes, enjoys a temperate and agreeable climate; it is ſurrounded by canals, walks bordered with trees, a multitude of Indian hamlets, and without doubt, may be compared to the braſt cities of Europe.

"After a ſtay of ſome months in the capital, our travellers viſited the celebrated mines of Moran and Real del Monte, where the vein of La Biſcayna has given millions of piaſtres to the Count de Regla; they examined the obſidian ſtones of Oyumel, which form a ſtrata in the pearl ſtone and prophyry, and ſerved as knives to the ancient Mexicans.

"On their return from their excurſion to Alman in July, 1803, they undertook another to the northern part of the kingdom. At firſt they directed their reſearches to Huehuetoca, where at the expence of ſix millions of piaſtres, an aperture has been formed in the mountain of Sincoe, to drain off the waters from the valley of Mexico to the river Montezuma. They then paſſed Queretaro, by Salamanca and the fertile plains of Yrapuato to Guanaxuato, a town which contains 50,000 inhabitants; it is ſituated in a narrow defile, and celebrated by its mines, which are of far greater conſequence than thoſe of Potoſi.

"The mine of Count de Valenciana, which has given birth to a conſiderable town on a hill, which thirty years ago ſcarcely afforded paſture to goats, is already 1,840 feet in perpendicular depth. It is the deepeſt and richeſt in the world; the annual profit of the proprietors having never been leſs than three millions of livres, and it ſometimes amounts to five or ſix.
