We have witnessed with sincere and deep regret, a system of policy pursued by the General Government, from the Embargo of 1807, to the present time, tending most obviously, in our view, to the destruction of the Commerce of these States. We have not been indifferent spectators of this course of measures. Being inhabitants of the Atlantic Coast, we regard Commerce, as a great and essential interest. It is not only in itself a leading source, but it is most intimately bounden with all our other interests and occupations. Hubits, arising naturally from our local situation, and the nature of our soil and products, and now confirmed by the usage of near centuries, are not to be changed. We had the right of judging for ourselves, and have not considered to any Government the power of deciding for us, what pursuits and occupations, best comport with our interests, and our situation. What we asserted to the National Constitution, it was among others, (but none more important) reasons, to the end that our Commerce might be the better protected, and the further we endeavored to regard our right of transcribing the Seas, as sacred, (and it is to us an important one,) as the right of tilling the ground, we have supposed that we should never be deprived of the former, but for reasons, as we believe and important, as would equally justify the prohibition of the latter. An equality has nothing, and can now see nothing, either in the letter, or the spirit, of the National Compact, which makes it our duty, to acquiesce in a system, tending to compel us to abandon our natural and established pursuits. We regard the Constitution a "an Instrument of Negotiations, not of Change." We take its intention to have been, to protect, by the strong arm of the whole nation, the interests of each particular Section, and therefore to be without alarm and apprehension, that we perceived in the General Government a disposition to embarrass and restrain Commerce by repeated Restrictions, and to make War, by shutting our own ports. Still greater was our concern, when we heard ourselves almost declare, finally to resist from the State, and to provide for ourselves, their comforts and conveniencies of life, for which it would be necessary for it to look to a foreign Country.

We do not believe that in this we deem the language equally unconstitutional and arrogant; and it will be with infinite regret, mingled with other strong emotions, that we should perceive a stern and settled resolution in the General Government, to enforce this exhortation by the authority of Laws, and to accumulate upon us the calamities of War, a ponderous, and crushing System of Restriction, Non Importation, Non-Intercourse, and Embargo. The alarm excited by our minds by the severer and long continued "Restrictive System," is raised still higher, by the late Declaration of War against Great Britain, in extent which we believe, in the present defenceless circumstances of the country will be productive of evils of inscalculable magnitude.

We are not, Sir, among those, who feel an unmanly reluctance to the privations, or a nervous sensibility to the dangers of war.—Many of us had the honor of joining, by our humble efforts, in the establishment of our Independence, and of expending our lives, in more than one field of danger and blood in our country's service. We are ready to meet those scenes again, whenever it can be done for the vindication of our National honor, or the preservation of our essential rights, demands it. We shall not be more fearful than others to assert either distinction, in any cause in which distinction would be honorable.

If we could perceive that the present War was just; if we could perceive that our RIGHTS and LIBERTIES required it; if we could perceive that its A manifestation, by our wife, benefit, or impartial, could have carried with it clear ot it; if could perceive its expediency, and a reasonable hope of obtaining its proffered objects, if we could perceive those things, the dangers, and some measure scale to be horrible. It would grow tolerable, in the size, as its expediency should be made manifest. Its lives and bloody treasures would future, as its JUSTICE grew apparent.—Give us but to see that this war hath CLEAR JUSTICE, NECESSITY, and EXPEDIENCY in its favor, and we are ready to pour out our TREASURE, and our BLOOD in its profession. ADDRESS of the HOUSE of ASSEMBLY to the PEOPLE of UPPER CANADA.

ny similar habits, not merely eulogizing the implacable enemy of their parent state, but joining him in the war; and while pretending to nourish the purest principles of liberty, bowing the knee before the foe of all just and rational freedom, and supplicating his acceptance of tribute and adulation.

From this degrading picture, at which the Friends of Mankind and Posterity will weep, we turn with joy to you, many of whom have already risked your lives to maintain the Unity of the Empire—we are confident that the same spirit still animates your breasts and those of your children, that you still retain the same love for our excellent King, the same veneration for our free and happy Constitution that you exhibited during the American war. You preserved your loyal principles amidst the most dreadful political divisions and most implacable hostilities; you were not to be cajoled by those wicked and designing men who looked for private gratifications in the public ruin. Yours were not to be deceived by their flanders on the parent state. You felt no hardship, no cruel oppression You saw no examples of inhumanity and cruelty; there were imaginary evils invented for the most wicked purposes by those who fought for gain amidst slaughter & blood. You relished their influence, and you acted nobly. You were not indeed successful, but the attempt covers you with glory. When we picture to ourselves the sublime prospect which the world would have exhibited this day, had the population of the neighbouring States preferred like you, their filial love, we should not have now beheld the Continent of Europe groaning under the yoke of a sanguinary Tyrant, nor his satellites in America studiously imitating his ferocious example.

It is therefore from former experience that we look to you for the same patriotic principles, principles which enabled you to face death in his most dreadful a tire, principles which exalt human nature, and which have been warmly cherished by the most virtuous and renowned in every age; and surely when we are attacked by the same enemy who once already, aided by the mistaken lenity of our Mother Country and the misconduct of her Commanders, were able to drive us from our native homes and possessions to this Province, a people whose lands are manured with the blood of our friends and kinsmen, who drove our wives and children from their houses into the woods, or threw them into dungeons, & who now envy us the habitations which through the blessing of Providence the beneficence of our parent state and our own industry, we have gained from the wilderness; we are confident that you will display the same energy, and certainly with better hopes of success. Great Britain will not now consider Americans as perverse children who may be reclaim d, but as her most malignant foes. Her commanders will not, as formerly, temporize & attempt bonds of enemies by their misconduct and delay, but they will hasten to punish them with an the rigour of war.

Already have we the joy to remark, that the spirit of loyalty has burst forth in all its ancient splendour. The Militia in all parts of the Province have volunteered their services with acclamation, and displayed a degree of energy worthy of the British name. They do not forget the blessings and privileges which they enjoy under the protection and fostering care of the British empire, whose government is only felt in this country by acts of the purest justice, and most pleasing and efficacious benevolence. When men are called upon to defend every thing they hold precious, their wives and children, their friend possessions, they ought to be inspired with the noblest resolutions, and they will not be easily frightened with menaces, or conquered by force. And beholding as we do, the flame of patriotism burning from one end of the Canadas to the other, we cannot but entertain the most pleasing anticipations. Our enemies have indeed said, that they can subdue this country by a proclamation; but it is our parts to prove to them that they are sadly mistaken; that the population is determinately hostile, and that the few who might be otherwise inclined, will find it their safety & interest to be faithful.

For nothing is clearer than this, that if there be any person so base and degenerate as to join the enemy after having taken the Oath of Allegiance, he not only forfeits his property but his life. The British Government never will make peace with the American States, till full and ample indemnification has been received for all depredations committed in this country; nor will we permit a single traitor ever to return. Let those who have come from the neighbouring States consider this well, and assure themselves that as we are eager to reward loyalty and affection for the Government, so are we not flow in punishing treachery.

Innumerable attempts will be made by falsehood to detach you from your allegiance; for our enemies, in imitation of their European Master, trust more to treachery than to force; and they will, no doubt, make use of many of those lies, which unfortunately for the virtuous part of these States, & the peace and happiness of the world, had too much success during the American Rebellion.—They will tell you, that they are come to give you freedom—yes, the base slaves of the most contemptible faction that ever directed the affairs of any nation—the minions of the very sycophants who lick the dust from the feet of Buonaparte will tell you that they are come to communicate the blessings of liberty to this Province; but you have only to look at your situation, to put such hypocrites to confusion. In order to insure our prosperity and happiness, a constitution has been given us, modelled from that of our Parent State; not the hasty production of a day; but tiling out of the experience of centuries. A Governor standing in the place of his Majesty, a Legislative Council composed of a select number of the principal inhabitants of the Province, and the Representatives of the People lately chosen.—In the appointment of a Legislative Council, a reward is presented to those who shall deserve well of the public, & a foundation laid for an influence different from that which is produced by overgrown wealth. Honors are a cheaper and more effectual mode of remunerating valour, genius and singular attachment, than any sordid or pecuniary benefit.—They are such rewards as meet the feelings of the generous and noble minded, and they nourish that pure and exalted ambition which gives life and energy to public affairs, which rouse the most dignified principles of action, and extinguish that low grovelling policy which only aims at despicable gratifications.

If the real foundation of true liberty, and consequently of solid happiness, consists in being amenable only to the laws which we or our representatives ordain, then are we in possession of that liberty and that happiness, for this principle is fully recognized by our excellent constitution. Your House of Assembly are truly elected by the people—consequently all have a share in the government, because all have a vote in the election of those who make the laws. If these laws are not favourable to virtue—if they are not politic—if they are not clear and precise, we have no body to blame but ourselves, and we have the power of altering them.

The time for which our Representatives are chosen, has a view to the situation of the Province as well as to the state of the public mind This period is infinitely better than annual elections, because it gives the representatives time to comprehend the business for which they are sent, and enables them to bring to maturity regulations which require information from different parts of the country. The qualifications for becoming an elector are firm and moderate, every person may soon possess them, who is not convicted of felony, or who has not yet attained the legal age. Nor is any person excluded from becoming a representative except the public teachers of religion, and such as are not subjects of the King. Is not this constitution perfect above all others? In our laws and institutions there is so much wisdom, such an anxiety to keep the moral code always in view, such an attention to our feelings, such a regard to the preservation of our rights both in person and property, such a steady abhorrence of vice, and such a strict enforcement of virtue, in as far as it can become the object of public regulation, as merits on our parts, the most steady attachment; and in putting them in force there is, if possible, more to praise than in the laws themselves. If ever impartiality in the administration of justice was attained, we have certainly attained it. There is no interference on the part of government. The true interest of the rulers as well as of the people is known to depend upon the unfettered operation of the laws The Judges and Crown Officers select us from an honorable and liberal Profession; men whose minds are raised by their education, far above all narrow and sordid views, are appointed to put the laws in force.—When we behold these upright dispencers of justice without any temptation to the right or to the left, prepared by a long course of study for their awful and important functions; when we behold them heaping with the greatest candour and most invincible patience, not merely the causes between different subjects, but those between private citizens and their Sovereign, and instead of leaning to the rulers who appoint them, giving every proper facility to the prisoner, attending particularly to his defence, and even becoming of his counsel when he errs. Shall we not feel grateful to a government which promotes and sanctions so great uprightness, and which seeks so eagerly the happiness of its people. It is not enough that we be obedient subjects to such a government as this; we must be active in its defence against open enemies and internal foes. If there any person who is not conscious that he is completely master of his own conduct—that the quiet possession of his life, his person and property, and good name, are secured to him by the laws. Do we not feel that our Government is able, and not merely able, but careful to protect the rights of every individual, and to allow him as much liberty as is compatible with the rights of his fellow subjects; protecting him against all oppression, giving free scope to the exertion of his talents, and in every way contributing to his comfort and happiness. Such is a faint sketch indeed of the glorious constitution which we enjoy; and this we are called upon to exchange for the government of the United States; a government which has oppressed and impoverished its own people, and deprived them virtually, of all their valuable privileges. For how can liberty exist among a people where officers of state and representatives crouch to a bloody Tyrant. Be vigilant against such an enemy; the conteft is indeed awful and to be deplored; but of the event your representatives entertain no dread.

It is not necessary for us to examine the causes alledged by our enemies for this unjust and unnatural war, because an Address from the House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts, the most respectable in the Union, proves in he most satisfactory manner, that it is wanton and unprovoked, and is the climax of the various outrages previously committed against Great Britain. In this flatement they have been joined by the minority in Congress, whose exposition of the secret reasons of the war, and such a strict enforcement of virtue, in as far as it can become the object of public regulation, as merits on our parts, the most steady attachment; and in putting them in force there is, if possible, more to praise than in the laws themselves. REPEATED

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, August 29, 1812.

On Monday the 24 h inst. Maj. Gen. Brock arrived from Detroit at Fort George. On his approach to which, he was met by the principal Inhabitants of the Town and vicinity in carriages and on horseback, as a teſtimony of their reſpect for our gallant Chief, and of their ſenſe of the important ſervices he had rendered to the Province and his recent brilliant atchievement at Detroit. On his arrival at the Government Houſe, the General addreſſed the Gentlemen aſſembled, in a neat and appropriate ſpeech, thanking them for the mark of their eſteem thus conferred on him—praiſing the conduct of thoſe who had ſo gallantly followed him, and recommending an imitation of their honorable example, as the beſt defence of the Country. This addreſs was received with loud and repeated ſhouts of applauſe.

This a ſubject too pleaſing to be eaſily quitted, and we muſt be allowed to indulge in our remark on the reſult of our operations againſt the N. Weſtern Army, that we believe hiſtory does not furniſh an example of ſo complete a ſucceſs, gained by ſuch an inferior force, without any loſs.

Arrived on Thurſday night laſt in his Majeſty's armed ſchooner the Prince Regent, his Honor Major General Brock, accompanied by Major General Sheaffe and ſuite. We are happy to announce that his Honor ſeems to enjoy a ſtate of health that promiſes many future years of uſeful ſervice to his King and Country.

Yeſterday at one o'clock, the Magiſtrates, Gentlemen, and principal Inhabitants of the Town and Vicinity waited on His Honor, when the following addreſs was preſented:

Addreſs of Congratulation from the Inhabitants of the Town of York in Upper Canada, to Major-General Brock, President adminiſtering the Government of that Province, &c. &c. &c.

FILLED with gratitude to the Supreme Giver of all Victory, we haſten to congratulate your Honor on the late important ſucceſs which at Detroit hath Crowned his Majeſty's Arms.

The zeal, conduct and intrepidity of our Militia as well as of the Regular Forces, inſpire us with confidence.

It is with pleaſure as well as with pride that we diſcover determined courage, cool reſolution, and manly fortitude, in the conduct of all the Troops under your Command, which an Enemy more than twice their number did not dare to reſiſt.

We ſhould be happy to expreſs the high ſenſe which we entertain of the Commander of thoſe Troops, and of the important ſervices which He rendered his King and Country on that memorable occaſion, were it not that we know it is his wiſh, to deſerve praiſe rather than to receive it.

THOS. SCOTT,
Chairman.

To which His Honor was pleaſed to return the following anſwer.

I cannot but feel highly gratified by this expreſſion of your eſteem for myſelf; but, in juſtice to the brave Men at whoſe head I marched againſt the Enemy, I muſt beg leave to direct your attention to them as the proper objects of your gratitude—it was a confidence founded on their loyalty, zeal and valour that determined me to adopt the plan of operations which led to ſo fortunate a termination:—allow me to congratulate you, Gentlemen, on having ſent forth from among yourſelves, a large portion of that gallant Band—and that at ſuch a period, a ſpirit has manifeſted itſelf, on which you may confidently repoſe your hopes of future ſecurity. It will be a moſt pleaſing duty for me to report to our Sovereign a conduct ſo truly meritorious.

The Prince Regent after landing the General and ſuite, immediately ſailed for Kingſton. We underſtand that Capt. Glegg, A. D. C who embarked in her, is the bearer of diſpatches to His Excellency Sir George Prevoſt, &c. announcing the glorious intelligence of the ſurrender of Detroit and dependencies. We hope that this gallant officer will receive that reward to which his meritorious ſervices have ſo well entitled him. We alſo underſtand, that Capt. Glegg took with him, to be laid at the feet of His Royal Highneſs, the colours of the 4th Regiment of U States Infantry, behides many other ſtand taken at Detroit.

To the prompt and ſpirited Exertions of Mr. D. Tiers Merchant of this place, is to be aſcribed the apprehending of the Seltyclep'd Auguſtus Baron de Diemar and Mr. Stiles, two intereſting Perſonages, who eloped from Bed and Board alias the Common Gaol on Wednesday laſt.—We hope that equal alacrity may daying, with each of our Townſmen—when public duty requires it; we ſincerely regret that whilſt joining in this public duty, Doctor Stebbins was thrown from his horſe, and a compound fracture of his left arm and other perſonal hurts were the conſequence.

[DIED.]—On Thurſday laſt, Mr. KOCK Inn keeper near this Town.

IN SESSION.

BY order of the Magiſtrates, all perſons are forbid Stacking any Hay hereafter within the Limits of this Town—and Individuals are requeſted not to Bathe in front of it, unleſs before Sunriſe, or after Sunſet.

Militia General Order

Government House,
York, 25th May, 1812.

THE very satisfactory Report made to the President, by the Officers Commanding Corps, of the Spirit and Zeal manifested by the Men, in Volunteering their Services in the Flank Companies, has afforded His Honor the most lively gratification, and confirmed the opinion which he was always disposed to entertain of their determination to defend bravely, their Country, and in imitation of their veteran Fathers, evince by deeds, the ardent Loyalty they have so often professed.—Conduct so honorable and dignified, has not failed making a deep impress on on His Majesty's Provincial Government, and to encrease if possible, their anxious desire to contribute every thing in their power towards the comfort and happiness of the People.

With this view, they have humbly solicited His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, for his gracious permission to allot to the Wives and Children of such Soldiers, Militia and Mariners, who may be killed in the present Contest, a portion of the Waste Lands of the Crown; and to afford relief to such as may be disabled in the Service, for whom no provision is otherwise provided.

By Command of the President,

ÆNEAS SHAW,
Assistant General Militia.

ADDRESS of the HOUSE of ASSEMBLY to the PEOPLE of UPPER CANADA.

(Concluded from our last.)

These alterations render it easy for the Commander in Chief of the Province to call out any part, or in cases of necessity the whole of the Militia, subject while embodied, to the strictest discipline, that they may become truly formidable to the enemy. Your Representatives persuaded themselves, that the great majority of their Constituents were willing to make every sacrifice at such a time as this, and to endure a temporary privation of liberty, in order ultimately to preserve the whole. In providing for the defence of the Province, your Representatives did not hesitate to enact the severest punishment against those who refuse to march against the enemy, or who endeavour by their influence, to discourage and deter others. But as they apprehend more danger from the private machinations of their foes than their open attacks, it was necessary to restrain the liberty of those who were not immediately called into the field. Trusting more to treachery than open bostility, our enemies have already spread their emissaries through the country to seduce our fellow subjects from their allegiance, by promises as false as the principles on which they are founded. A law has therefore been enacted for the speedy detection of such emissaries and for their condign punishment on conviction; a law which it will not be easy to escape. In passing these different acts for the defence and preservation of the Province, your Representatives proceeded with all possible moderation. The exigency of the time would have perhaps justified them in adopting stronger measures; but they were not disposed to abridge the rights and privileges of the people, any further than was absolutely necessary. It did not escape them, that placed as we are, so near our enemies, bordering upon them through such an extensive line of country, connected with them by so many ties, and so many persons lately from the American States feeling among us, whose inclinations, tho' in the main good, would naturally lean against us, ordinary measures of caution were not sufficient. But trusting on the other hand, to the well tried loyalty of the great body of the people, to assist in the execution of the laws and in the detection of those doubtful characters and secret traitors, they have been induced to adopt the most lenient, which a due attention to the general safety would admit. Your Representatives finished their labours with placing in the hands of his Honor the President, all the public money that they could collect, in order to contribute as much as possible to the extraordinary expence which the War renders necessary, and they have the fullest confidence that it will be most faithfully applied. Having thus endeavoured to the best of their abilities, to provide for the welfare and safety of the Province, your Representatives take the liberty of reminding you, that the best laws are useless without the zealous co-operation of the people; unless you are prepared to undergo the greatest privations, and to make the severest sacrifices, all that your Representatives have done will be of no avail. Be ready then at all times to rally round the Royal Standard, and let those who are not called into service assist the families of those who are in the field. Be quick to discern, and prompt to seize upon all those who either by word or deed seek to stir or discourage that ardent Patriotism which at this moment animates all the inhabitants of this Province. Let your whole attention be applied to the defence of the Country and defeat of our Enemy. Inspired with this disposition, your Representatives are confident of success, for although they admit that the contest will be terrible and the hardships which you will have to suffer severe, yet the justice of our cause, and your gratitude and attachment to the illustrious Nation of which you form a part, will enable you to surmount them. And let no one deceive you with vain terrors concerning the new powers with which we have armed Government. The good and loyal will never perceive them, except in the greater security which they will give him, for they are placed in the hands of his Excellency General Brock, a Commander not less distinguished for his valour in the field than for his justice and humanity. In his wisdom and experience in war, your Representatives have the firmest reliance; and they rejoice that at such a crisis a General of so great abilities, and whose private merits gain the hearts of all who know him, should, through Divine Providence be placed at the head of this Government. Remember when you go forth to the combat, that you fight not for yourselves alone, but for the whole world. You are defeating the most formidable conspiracy against the civilization of man that ever was contrived; a conspiracy threatening greater barbarism and misery than followed the downfall of the Roman Empire—that now you have an opportunity of proving your attachment to our Parent State, that State which contends for the relief of oppressed nations, the last pillar of true liberty, and the last refuge of afflicted humanity.—Persevere as you have begun, in your strict obedience to the laws and your attention to military discipline; deem no sacrifice too costly which secures the enjoyment of our happy Constitution; follow with your Countrymen in Britain, the paths of virtue and glory, and like them, you shall triumph over your unprincipled foes.

ALLAN MAC LEAN,
Speaker.

MEMORIAL,

But we are confrained to say, that we cannot in conscience, ascribe the foregoing characteristicks, to the present war. We are not, Sir, the apologists of other Nations, nor will our voice ever be heard, to varnish wrongs inflicted either on the interest or honor of our Native Land. But we deem it necessary to avow, publickly, that a War, not only theirs justified, but as plain and visible as the light of Heaven, but that its object be without and clear, in order that every man may see it there; that they be great, in order that every man perceive their importance; that they be probably attainable, in order that every citizen may be encouraged to contribute for them. We are wholly mistaken if the causes alleged for the present War against England will bear the test of these principles.

"The Impressment of our Seamen, which forms the most plausible and popular of the alledged causes of war, we believe to have been the first fruit of great misrepresentation. We have as much sympathy, as others, for those who suffer under this abuse of power. We know there are instances of this abuse. We know that Native American Citizens, have been, in some cases, in too many cases impressed from American Merchant Ships, and compelled to serve on board British Ships of War. But the number of these cases has been extravagantly exaggerated. Every enquiry on the subject strengthens our conviction, that the reputed number bears little relation to the true number. We are among those whom instances of impressment, if they did actually exist to any considerable extent must be known. You we cannot find them out. Some of the Members of this meeting have been constantly employed in commercial pursuits and have had ships on the Ocean from the Peace of 1783 until the Ocean became unnavigable. Even us, by the Embargo of 18 7. and yet during all that time have never suffered the loss of one Native American Seaman, by impressment. Other Members of this meeting have, as masters of well sailing inhabited, as we, on the Seas, and have been visited hundreds of times by British ships of War, and never had an American seaman taken from them by impressment.

"The People of the neighbouring commonwealth, as we understand, have been as unable as ourselves to discover instances of impressment, in any degree equal to the alledged numbers. It is impossible, under these circumstances, for us to believe, that the evil of impressment does exist in the degree of enormity pretended. If so, many of our seafaring fellow citizens were actually in bondage, they must have been taken from the inhabitants of the Atlantic coast. They would be from among our brethren, sons, relations and friends. We should be acquainted with them, and their misfortunes. We should hear the cries of their wives and children, their parents and relatives, quite as soon as our fellow citizens of the South and the West.

"It is well worthy of notice, that the greatest apparent feelings on this subject of impressment, and the greatest opposition to war on this account, are entertained by the Representatives of those States which have no Seamen at all of their own; while those Sections of the community, in which more than three fourths of the mariners of the United States have their homes, are, by great majorities, against that war, amongst the professed objects of which, the release of impressed Seamen forms so principal a share.

"It is well known that England pretends to no right of impressing our Seamen. She disclaims, only, that she has a right to the service of her own subjects, in time of war, even though found serving on board the merchant ships of other nations. This claim we suppose to be neither unfounded, nor novel. It is recognized by the public law of Europe, and of the civilized world. Writers of the highest authority maintain, that the right belongs to all nations. For the same reason, say they, that the father of a family may demand the aid of his children to defend himself and his house, a Nation may call home her subjects for her defence and protection in time of war.

"But if this were not so, is our nation to plunge into a ruinous war, in order to settle a question of relative right, between the government of a foreign nation and the subjects of that government? Are we to fight the battles of British seamen? Nay more—are we to espouse their cause, in opposition to the cause of our own Native Mariners? Shall we condemn for the free and privileged admission of foreigners into our merchant service, and then by exclude the Seamen of New England from that service? Do we profess to be at war, for the purpose of our seamen's rights, when we condemn for a point, which if gained, will shut them out from the most lucrative part of their employment, and "fact like" their interests, that British and other foreign seamen may have equal privileges with themselves?"

Fatal indeed, would it be to important interests of the navigating States, if the consequence of this war would be, that the American flag shall give the American character to all who sail under it, and thus invite thousands of foreign seamen to enter into our service, and thrust aside our own native citizens.

But this evil of impressment, however great it may be, is at least not greater now, than it was in the time of Washington. That Great Man did not, however, deem it an evil to be remedied by war. Neither did it occur to President Adams, nor even to President Jefferson, that it would be wise or politic, for the purpose of attempting to rescue a very small portion of our seamen from captivity, to commence a war, which must inevitably, as this war will, ten times as many to a captivity as bad.

England has always professed a willingness to adjust this subject by amicable arrangement.—She has repeated ly called on us to do our part towards effecting such adjustment. She has reminded us of the facility—we may say the falsity, with which American Protections are obtained; of the frequent influences, in which Irishmen and others that cannot speak a word of our language, are found with American Protections in their pockets. She has explicitly and officially, off red to propose, by several laws, all impressments from American vessels, if the American Government would enact laws prohibiting American officers from granting Protections, or Certificates of Citizenship to British Subjects. She has also through her Minister, offered to restore every native seaman, that our Government could name, as being under impressment. For yet to proceeding the Declaration of War, our Government has been, in a manner, silent on this subject. Under an expectation (which had never been broken off) of an amicable arrangement, Government seems to make it a topic of complaint. When the arrangement was made with Mr. Erskine, the present administration the nieces did not consider any existing difficulties on the subject of impressment as insuperable obstacles to peace.

What is it, then, that hath since given to this subject a sudden and unusual importance? What is it, that hath so completely thrilled the voice of the friends of the seamen, and at the same time called into action such powerful sympathies in the bosom of strangers? What is it, that hath raised the voice, beyond the Western Mountains, to loud and clamorous for the protection of War, while the fathers and brethren, the friends and relatives, the wives and children of these very seamen—nay, even those seamen themselves deprecate this war, as the greatest calamity that could fall upon them?

The blockade, and the Orders in Council, the other causes of war, bear no better examination than the subject of impressment. The Blockade, now so grievous to be endured, we know was regarded, at the time it was laid, as a measure favorable to our interests. We know this, upon the express declaration of Mr. Munroe, then our Minister in England. We have his own words, that it should be regarded in a "favourable light," and that "it promised to be highly satisfactory to our Commercial Interests.

By what train of reasoning this favour is turned into an injury, and an injury of such magnitude as to justify a war, we are utterly at a loss to comprehend.

We are equally unsatisfied with the arguments used to prove that the Decrees of France were repealed in November, 1810, and that, thereupon which our departing from impartial policy, we are justified in undertaking to compel England, by War, to abandon her Orders in Council. Against such supposed repeal of the French Decrees we have the express declaration, of the French Government itself, as late as March, 1811, alleging that those Decrees did not exist. We have also, and daily evidence of their operation, in the destruction of our property, and some Members of this Meeting have conviction of the existence and operation of those Decrees, down to the very moment of our Declaration of War, which convictions being produced by great and repeated personal losses in the seizures, detentions, confiscations and burnings under those very Decrees, are not likely to be removed, by any ingenious comments on the terms of ambiguous, deceptive and fallacious instrument, like the Duke of Cadore's letter.

But this questionless now at rest. The recent appearance of the French Decrees, purporting to be dated April 28 1811, leaves no foothold for persistance and partiality longer to stand on. Those Decrees declare, that in consequence of measures adopted by our government against England in March 1811, the Decree of Berlin and Milan shall now be considered as having ceased to op rate, as against us, in November, 1810.—This proves beyond contradiction, that those Decrees were not repealed, at the time when our government adopted measures against England, founded upon their supposed repeal.

A more singular incongruity than is her manifest, never characterized the intercourse of Nations. In March, 1802, this government took measures against England because France had actually repealed her Decrees. Afterwards, in May 1811 France repealed her decrees, because our government had actually taken measures against England.

The conduct of France, in relation to the repeal of her Edicts, exhibits to our view a scene of the most contemptible fraud and juggling, that ever disgraced the Cabinet of any Nation.

The British Orders in Council, we are informed, are now revoked. We cannot but lament, that the declaration of War was forced and hurried, as if to put us beyond the benefit of favorable events. Every attempt at postponement was ineffectual, and the question was taken, at a moment, when perhaps a month's delay would have removed the principal ground of complaint, & severed the awful calamity.

As one of the complaints against England is of recent origin as this must all have been long in contemplation of government, it was reasonably expected, that if government intended War, it would have made adequate provision and preparation for that event. In this expectation we have been disappointed. The Nation is totally unprepared for War. We say totally unprepared; because the degree of preparation bears no definable relation to the magnitude of the occasion, or to the greatness of the interests which are at stake.

Without mentioning the situation of our inland Frontier, it is sufficient to advert to the exposed state of our Sea Coast, and Commerce. It is unheard of, and beyond imagination strange, in our opinion, that such great and important interests as the Navigation and Commerce of a whole Country, should be put to hazard,—nay, to certain loss—for want of the protection, which it was in the power,—and which we presume to say it was the duty of government to have afforded.

On the subject of Naval Defence, we do not see ourselves confined to the mere language of supplication. On that topic we do not address ourselves to the favor and clemency only, of any administration. We hold it to be our right to demand at the hand of the General Government, adequate protection to our lawful Commerce. When the Constitution empowered the Government to build and maintain a Navy, it was not supposed, that that provision would remain inoperative on parchment, and a dead letter. On the contrary, it was confidently expected that that Power would be exercised, a cheerful use of the power to levy and collect taxes. We consider protection as the correlative of allegiance; and we feel ourselves entitled to demand the adequate protection of the Government, in return for the taxes we pay, and the allegiance we owe.

We are, Sir, from principal and habits attached to the Union of the States. But our attachment is to the substance, and not to the form. It is to the good which this Union is capable of producing, and not to the evil, which is suffered unnaturally to grow out of it. If the time should ever arrive, when this Union shall be holden together by nothing but the authority of Law; when its incorporating vital principal shall become extinct; when its principal exercise shall consist in acts of power and authority, not of protection and beneficence; when it shall lose the strong bond which it has hitherto had in the public affections; and when, consequently, we shall be one, not in interest, and mutual regard, but in name and form only; We, Sir, shall look on that hour as the closing scene of our Country's prosperity.

We shrink from the separation of the States as an event fraught with incalculable evils, and it is among our strongest objections to the present course of measures, that they have, in our opinion a very dangerous and alarming bearing, on such an event. If a separation of the States ever should take place, it will be on some occasion, when one portion of the country undertakes to controul, to regulate, and to sacrifice the interests of another; when a small and heated Majority in the Government, taking counsel of their passions, and not of their reason, contemptuously disregarding the interests, and perhaps flopping the mouths, of a large and respectable Minority, shall by hasty, rash, and ruinous measures, threaten to destroy essential rights; and lay waste the most important interests.

It shall be our most fervent supplication to Heaven to avert, both the calamity on the occasion; and the government may be assured, that the tie that binds us to the Union, will never be broken by us.

But although we lament the present war, on all accounts, yet do we deprecate it, most of all, as we view it in as we fear, the harbinger of French Alliance. Our apprehensions on this head, are not unnatural. The United States and Napoleon Emperor and King, have now a common Enemy, and in some sort, a common cause. They wage war against England for objects, in some degree, the same. There has been, really or apparently, a series of remarkable coincidence in the two governments. Add to this the known character of the French Court for intrigue, circumvention, and perfidy, and the world will judge whether our fears are either groundless, or unwarrantable.

On the subject, on any French connexion, either close, or the mere tie may, we have made up our minds. We will in no event, assist in uniting the Republic of America with the Military Despotism of France. We will have no connexion with her principles, or her power. If her armed troops, under whatever name or character, should come here, we shall treat them as enemies. No pretence, domestic or foreign, shall ever compel us to connect our interests with those of the House of Corsica; or to yoke ourselves, to the triumphal Car of the Conqueror and the Tyrant of Continental Europe. In forming this Resolution, we have not been thoughtless of possible consequences. We have weighed them. We have reflected on the measures, which an adherence to this Resolution might hereafter occasion. We have considered the events which may grow out of it. In the full and undisguised view of these consequences, we have formed this our Resolution, and we affirm to you, Sir, and to the world, that it is deep, fixed, and unchangeable.

It only remains for us to express our consistent us convictions that the present course of measures will prove most prejudical and ruinous to the Country, and to supplicate the Government to adopt such a system as shall restore to us the blessings of Peace and of Commerce.

ALBANY, August 10.

On Saturday last arrived in this city, Colonel Baine, Adjt. General of the British forces in Lower Canada, accompanied by Major Clark, Aid-de-camp to Gen. Prevost, commanding the American troops on the Canada line. Immediately on his arrival he was introduced to Gen. Dearborn, at his head quarters, at Greenbush, with whom and his Excellency Govr. Tompkins, we are informed, he remained closeted till a late hour.—Report says, he came to communicate to the Commander in Chief of the American army, official information of the repeal of the Orders in Council, and that instructions had been sent out by the British Government to Mr. Foster to open negociations with our government on all the points in difference between the two nations; but that in consequence of Mr. Foster's having left the United States, the Governor General of Canada, proposed an armistice or cessation of arms, until the answer of the American government could be obtained to the overtures which would be made to it on the part of the British Court. What has been the result of the conference between General Dearborn and Col. Baine, we have not been able to learn—though we are led to believe, as most probable, that a partial armistice, and for a short period, has been concluded on.

Another report says: that Col. Baine was in possession of the instructions sent to Mr. Foster; and that he came to this city, with intention to proceed to the seat of government—but that permission to that effect could not be obtained from General Dearborn.

On Saturday evening a British Colonel arrived with despatches for General Dearborn.—The dispatches are said to be an official notice of the repeal of the Orders in Council, and also a proposition for an armistice.

A law has therefore been enacted for the speedy detection of such emissaries and for their condign punishment on conviction; a law which it will not be easy to escape. In passing these different acts for the defence and preservation of the Province, your Representatives proceeded with all possible moderation. The exigency of the time would have perhaps justified them in adopting stronger measures; but they were not disposed to abridge the rights and privileges of the people, any further than was absolutely necessary. It did not escape them, that placed as we are, so near our enemies, bordering upon them through such an extensive line of country, connected with them by so many ties, and so many persons lately from the American States settling among us, whose inclinations, tho' in the main good, would naturally lean against us, ordinary measures of caution were not sufficient. But trusting on the other hand, to the well tried loyalty of the great body of the people, to assist in the execution of the laws and in the detection of those doubtful characters and secret traitors, they have been induced to adopt the most lenient, which a due attention to the general safety would admit. Your Representatives finished their labours with placing in the hands of his Honor the President, all the public money that they could collect, in order to contribute as much as possible to the extraordinary expence which the War renders necessary, and they have the fullest confidence that it will be most faithfully applied. Having thus endeavoured to the best of their abilities, to provide for the welfare and safety of the Province, your Representatives take the liberty of reminding you, that the best laws are useless without the zealous co-operation of the people; unless you are prepared to undergo the greatest privations, and to make the severest sacrifices, all that your Representatives have done will be of no avail. Be ready then at all times to rally round the Royal Standard, and let those who are not called into service assist the families of those who are in the field. Be quick to discern, and prompt to seize upon all those who either by word or deed seek to stifle or discourage that ardent Patriotism which at this moment animates all the inhabitants of this Province: let your whole attention be applied to the defence of the Country and defeat of our Enemy. Inspired with this disposition, your Representatives are confident of success, for although they admit that the contest will be terrible and the hardships which you will have to suffer severe, yet the justice of our cause, and your gratitude and attachment to the illustrious Nation of which you form a part, will enable you to surmount them. And let no one deceive you with vain terrors concerning the new powers with which we have armed Government. The good and loyal will never perceive them, except in the greater security which they will give him, for they are placed in the hands of his Excellency General Brock, a Commander not less distinguished for his valour in the field than for his justice and humanity. In his wisdom and experience in war, your Representatives have the firmest reliance; and they rejoice that at such a crisis a General of so great abilities, and whose private merits gain the hearts of all who know him should, through Divine Providence be placed at the head of this Government. Remember when you go forth to the combat, that you fight not for yourselves alone, but for the whole world. You are defeating the most formidable conspiracy against the civilization of man that ever was contrived; a conspiracy threatening greater barbarism and misery than followed the downfall of the Roman Empire—that now you have an opportunity of proving your attachment to our Parent State, that State which contends for the relief of oppressed nations, the last pillar of true liberty, and the last refuge of afflicted humanity.—Persevere as you have begun, in your strict obedience to the laws and your attention to military discipline; deem no sacrifice too costly which secures the enjoyment of our happy Constitution; follow with your Countrymen in Britain, the paths of virtue and glory, and like them, you shall triumph over your unprincipled foes.

MEMORIAL,

But we are constrained to say, that we cannot in conscience, sacrifice the rights of our fellow citizens to the present war. We are not, Sir, the apologists of other Nations, nor will our voice ever be heard to vindicate wrongs inflicted on her at the interest or honor of our Native Land. But we deem it necessary to every justifiable War, not only that its purpose be as plain and visible as the light of Heaven, but that its objects be distinct and clear, in order that every man may see them; that they be great, in order that every man perceive their importance; that they be probable in order that every citizen may be encouraged to contend for them. We are wholly mistaken if the causes alleged for the present War against England will bear the test of these principles.

The Impressment of our Seamen, which forms the most plausible and popular of the alledged causes of war, we believe to have been the subject of great misrepresentation. We have as much sympathy, as others, for those who suffer under this abuse of power. We know there are instances of this abuse. We know that Native American Citizens, have been, in some cases, in too many cases impressed from American Merchant Ships, and compelled to serve on board British Ships of War. But the number of these cases has been extravagantly exaggerated. Every enquiry on the subject strengthens our conviction, that the reputed number bears little relation to the true number. We are almost the only those whom instances of impressment, if they did actually exist to any considerable extent must be known. We cannot find them out. Some of the Members of this meeting have been constantly employed in commercial pursuits and have had ships on the Ocean from the Peace of 1783 until the Ocean became unnavigable to us, by the Embargo of 18 7, and yet during all that time have never suffered the loss of one Native American Seaman, by impressment. Other Members of this meeting have, as masters of vessels long inhabited, as we, on the Seas, and have frequented hundreds of times by British ships of War, and never found an American Seaman taken from them by impressment.

The People of the neighbouring commonwealth, as we understand, have been as unable as ourselves to discover instances of impressment, in any degree equal to the alledged abuses. It is impossible, under these circumstances, for us to believe, that the evil of impressment does exist in the degree of enormity pretended. If so, many of our seafaring fellow citizens were actually in bondage, they must have been taken from the inhabitants of the Atlantic coast. They would be from among our brethren, sons, relations and friends. We should be acquainted with them, and their misfortunes. We should hear the cries of their wives and children, their parents and relatives, quite as soon as our fellow citizens of the South and the West.

It is well worthy of notice, that the greatest apparent feelings on this subject of impressment, and the greatest disposition to wage war on this account, are entertained by the Representatives of those States which have no Seamen at all of their own, and which have been out of the commonwealth, in which more than three fourths of the mariners of the United States have their homes, are, by great majorities, against that war, amongst the professed objects of which, the release of impressed Seamen forms so principal a share.

It is well known that England pretends to no right of impressing our Seamen. She insists, only, that she has a right to the service of her own subjects, in time of war, even though found serving on board the merchant ships of other nations. This claim we suppose to be neither unfounded, nor novel. It is recognized by the public law of Europe, and of the civilized world. Writers of the highest authority maintain, that the right belongs to all nations. For the same reason, say they, that the father of a family may demand the aid of his children to defend himself and his house, a Nation may call home her subjects to her defence and protection in time of war.

But if this were not so, is our nation to plunge into a ruinous war, in order to settle a question of relative right, between the government of a foreign nation and the subjects of that government? Are we to fight the battles of British seamen? Nay more—are we to espouse their cause, in opposition to the cause of our own Native Mariners? Shall we commend for the free and privileged admission of foreigners into our merchant service, and thereby exclude the Seamen of New England from that service? Do we profess to be at war, for the purpose of our seamen's rights, when we contend for a point, which if gained, will thrust them out from the most lucrative part of their employment, and "sacrifice their interests," that British and other foreign seamen may have equal privileges with themselves?"

Fatal indeed, would it be to important interests of the navigating States, if the consequence of this war would be, that the American flag shall give the American character to all who sail under it, and thus invite thousands of foreign seamen to enter into our service, and thrust aside our own native citizens.

But this evil of impressment, however great it may be, is at least not greater now, than it was in the time of Washington. That Great Man did not, however, deem it an evil to be remedied by war. Neither did it occur to President Adams, nor even to President Jefferson, that it would be wise or politic, for the purpose of attempting to rescue a very small portion of our seamen from captivity, to commence a war, which must inevitably, as this war will, ten times as many to a captivity as bad.

England has always professed a willingness to adjust this subject by amicable arrangement.—She has repeatedly called on us to do our part towards effecting such adjustment. She has reminded us of the facility we may say the felony, with which American Protections are obtained; of the frequent instances, in which Irishmen and others that cannot speak a word of our language, are found with American Protections in their pockets. She has expressly and officially, off red to provision, by several laws, all impediments from American vessels of the American Government would entail laws prohibiting American officers from granting Protections, or Certificates of Citizenship to British Subjects. She has also through her Minister, offered to restore every native seaman, that our Government could name, as being under impressment. For yet is preceding the Declaration of War, our Government has been, in a manner, fishing on this subject. Under an expectation (which had never been forsaken) of an amicable arrangement, Government seems to make it a topic of complaint. When the arrangement was made with Mr. Erskine, the present administration the nieves did not consider any existing difficulties on the subject of impressment as insuperable obstacles to peace.

What is it, then, that hath since given to this subject a sudden and unusual import now? What is it, that hath so completely fixed the voice of the friends of the seamen, and at the same time called into action such powerful sympathies in the bosom of strangers? What is it, that hath raised the voice, beyond the Western Mountains, to loud and clamorous lot their protection by War, whine the fathers and brethren, the friends and relatives, the wives and children of those very seamen—nay, even those men themselves deprecate this war, as the greatest calamity that could fall upon them?

The blockade, and the Orders in Council, the other causes of war, bear no better examination than the subject of impressment. The Blockade, now so grievous to be endured, we know was regarded, at the time it was laid, as a measure favorable to our interests. We know this, upon the express declaration of Mr. Munroe, then our Minister in England. We have his own words, that it should be regarded in a "favourable light," and that "it promised to be highly satisfactory to our Commercial interests.

By what train of reasoning is a favor turned into an injury, and an injury of such magnitude to justify a war, we are utterly at a loss to comprehend.

We are equally unsatisfied with the arguments used to prove that the Decrees of France were repealed in November, 18 , and that, therefore with out departing from impartial policy, we are justified in undertaking to compel England, by War, to abandon her Orders in Council. Against such supposed repeal of the French Decrees we have the express declaration, of the French Government itself, as late as March, 1812. alledging that those Decrees did not exist. We have also, and daily evidence of their operation, in the destruction of our property, and some Members of this Meeting have conviction of the existence and operation of those Decrees, down to the very moment of our Declaration of War, which convictions being produced by great and repeated personal losses in the seizures, detentions, confiscations and BURNINGS under those active Decrees, are not likely to be removed, by any ingenious comments on the terms of ambiguous, deceptive and fallacious instrument, like the Duke of Cadore's letter.

But this question is now at rest. The recent appearance of the French Decrees, purporting to be dated April 28 1811 leaves no foothold for persistance a partially longer to stand on That Decree declares, that in consequence of measures adopted by our government against England in March 1811. the Decree of Berlin and Milan shall now be considered as having ceased to op rate, as against us, in November, 1810.—This proves beyond contradiction, that those Decrees were not repealed, at the time when our government adopted measures against England, founded upon their supposed repeal.

A more singular incongruity than is her manifest, never characterized the intercourse of Nations. In March, 1811. this government took measures against England because France had actually repealed her Decrees. Afterwards, in May 1811 France repealed her decrees, because our government had actually taken measures against England.

The conduct of France, in relation to the repeal of her Edicts, exhibits to our view a scene of the most contemptible fraud and juggling, that ever disgraced the Court of any Nation.

The British Orders in Council, we are informed, are now revoked. We cannot but lament, that the declaration of War was forced and hurried, as if to put us beyond the benefit of favorable events. Every attempt at postponement was ineffectual, and the question was taken at a moment, when perhaps a month's delay would have removed the principal ground of complaint, & averted the awful calamity.

As none of the complaints against England are of recent origin; as they must have been long in the contemplation of government, it was reasonably expected, that if government intended War, it would have made adequate provision and preparation for that event. In this expectation we have been disappointed. The Nation is totally unprepared for War. We say totally unprepared; because the degree of preparation bears no definable relation to the magnitude of the occasion, or to the greatness of the interests which are at stake.

Without mentioning the situation of our inland Frontier, it is sufficient to advert to the exposed state of our Sea Coast, and Commerce. It is unheard of, and beyond imagination strange, in our opinion, that such great and important interests as the Navigation and Commerce of a whole Country, should be put to hazard,—nay, to certain loss—for want of the protection, which it was in the power, —and which we presume to say it was the duty of government to have afforded.

On the subject of Naval Defence, we do not see ourselves confined to the mere language of supplication. On that topic we do not address ourselves to the favor and clemency only, of any administration. We hold it to be our right to demand at the hand of the General Government, adequate protection to our lawful Commerce. When the Constitution empowered the Government to build and maintain a Navy, it was not supposed, that that provision would remain inoperative parchment, and a dead letter. Other Countries, was constantly excited that that Power would be extended, as Emergency as the power to levy and enforce it. We consider provision for the defence of every nation as the first object of its Government, and to do any thing else, would be a session on the land; and we shall as readily assent, to a practical construction of that instrument, which deprives us of the one, as to that which deprives us of the other.

When the Commercial and Navigating States surrendered to the General Government the riches of their Custom Houses, and thereby parted with the largest portion of their Revenue, leaving to themselves nothing to defray the expences of their own establishments, but an unpleasant resort to Direct Taxation, they had a right to expect, and they did expect, from the wisdom and justice of that Government, adequate and ample means of protection and defence. They entered into the Union under this full expectation. It was an expectation raised and excited, not only by the express words of the Constitution itself, but also by the declarations and assurances of those, who recommended its adoption.

It is not disrespectful to remind you, that a distinguished advocate for the Union of these States, urged the adoption of the Federal Constitution upon the inhabitants of the Atlantic Frontier in the following manner:—

"The palpable necessity of the power to provide and maintain a Navy, has protected that part of the Constitution, against the spirit of censure which has passed on other parts. It must be numbered among the greatest blessings of America, that has her Union will be the only source of her Maritime Strength, so this will be the principal source of her security against danger from abroad."

"To the inhabitants on the Atlantic Frontier are all of them deeply interested, in this provision for Naval protection, and if they have hitherto been suffered to sleep quietly in their beds; if their property has remained safe against the predatory spirit of licentious Adventurers; if their Maritime Towns have not yet been compelled to ransom themselves from the terrors of Conflagration, by yielding to the exactions of daring and sudden invaders, these instances of good fortune are not to be ascribed to the capacities of the existing government, (in 1788.)

The same distinguished gentleman, at a later period, gave to the people of this Nation a solemn and official pledge of his sentiments on this important subject, in his station as a leading Member of Congress, in the following emphatic manner.

I consider in acquisition of Maritime Strength essential to this country; should we be so unfortunate as to be engaged in War, what but this can defend our Towns and Cities upon the Sea coast? Or what but this can enable us to repel an invading Enemy?*

May we now, sir, be permitted to ask whether these hopes have been realized, and these assurances performed? Has this solemn pledge been redeemed? Does the present actual administration of the Constitution comport with those principles? Is a sufficient Navy provided and maintained? Is this Naval Protection on which the inhabitants of the Atlantic Frontier are so deeply interested, afforded to them? Can they now sleep quietly in their beds? Is their property now safe against the licentious spirit of predatory Adventurers? Are their Maritime Towns secure from the terrors of Conflagration, of the exactions of daring and sudden Invaders? We put these questions not merely to the wisdom and policy, but to the duty and the Conscience of our Government. Alas! it is notorious that we have not this Navy; we are not protected; we cannot be secure, or certain, that our Maritime Towns are not safe against invasion and burning: Our most interests are at the mercy of our Enemies, and we can do nothing but to fill, and feel the ills of thirty years of labour unindustry, impoverished, with the besom of destruction!

* Mr. Madison's Speech in Congress, 1798.

We are, Sir, from principal and habits attached to the Union of the States. But our attachment is to the usefulness, and not to the name. It is to the good which this Union is capable of producing, and not to the evil which is suffered unnaturally to grow out of it. If the time should ever arrive, when this Union shall be holden together by nothing but the authority of Law; when its incorporating vital principal shall become extinct; when its principal exercise shall consist in acts of power and authority, but of protection and beneficence; when it shall lose the strong bond which it has hitherto had in the public affections; and when, consequently, we shall be one, not in interest, and mutual regard, but in name and form only: We, Sir, shall look on that hour as the closing scene of our Country's prosperity.

We shrink from the separation of the States as an event fraught with incalculable evils, and it is among our strongest objections to the present course of measures, that they have, in our opinion a very dangerous and alarming bearing, on such an event. If a separation of the States ever should take place, it will be on some occasion, when one portion of the country undertakes to controul, to regulate, and to sacrifice the interest of another; when a small and heterogeneous majority in the Government, taking counsel of their passions, and not of their reason, contemptuously disregarding the interests, and perhaps flopping the mouths, of a large and respectable Minority, shall by hasty, rash, and ruinous measures, threaten to destroy essential rights; and lay waste the most important interests.

It shall be our most fervent supplication to Heaven to avert, both the event and the occasion; and the government may be assured, that the tie that binds us to the Union, will never be broken by us.

But although we lament the present war, on all accounts, yet do we deprecate it, most of all, as we view it, as we fear, the harbinger of French Alliance. Our apprehensions on this head, are not unnatural. The United States and Napoleon Emperor and King, have now a common enemy, and in some sort, a common cause. They wage war against England for objects, in some degree, the same. There has been, really or apparently, a series of remarkable coincidence in the two governments. Add to this the known character of the French Court for intrigue, circumvention, and perfidy, and the world will judge whether our fears are either groundless, or unwarrantable.

On the subject, on any French connexion, either close, or the more remote, we have made up our minds. We will in no event, aid in uniting the Republic of America with the Military Despotism of France. We will have no connexion with her principles, or her power. If her armed troops, under whatever name or character, should come here, we shall regard them as enemies. No pretence, domestic or foreign, shall ever compel us to connect our interests with those of the House of Corsica; or to yoke ourselves, to the triumphal Car of the Conqueror and the Tyrant of Continental Europe. In forming this Resolution, we have not been thoughtless of possible consequences. We have weighed them. We have reflected on the measures, which an adherence to this Resolution might hereafter occasion. We have considered the events which may grow out of it. In the full and undisguised view of these consequences, we have formed this our Resolution, and we affirm to you, Sir, and to the world, that it is deep, fixed, and unchangeable.

It only remains for us to express our consistent us convictions that the present course of measures will prove most prejudicial and ruinous to the Country, and to supplicate the Government to adopt such a system as shall restore to us the blessings of Peace and of Commerce.

ALBANY, August 10.

On Saturday last arrived in this city, Colonel Baine, Adjutant General of the British forces in Lower Canada, accompanied by Major Clark, Aid-de-camp to Gen. Prevost, commanding the American troops on the Canada line. Immediately on his arrival he was introduced to Gen. Dearborn, at his head quarters, at Greenbush, with whom and his Excellency Govr. Tompkins, we are informed, he remained closeted till a late hour.—Report says, he came to communicate to the Commander in Chief of the American army, official information of the repeal of the Orders in Council, and that instructions had been sent out by the British Government to Mr. Foster to open negociations with our government on all the points in difference between the two nations; but that in consequence of Mr. Foster's having left the United States, the Governor General of Canada, proposed an armistice or cessation of arms, until the answer of the American government could be obtained to the overtures which would be made to it on the part of the British Court. What has been the result of the conference between General Dearborn and Col. Baine, we have not been able to learn—though we are led to believe, as most probable, that a partial armistice, and for a short period, has been concluded on.

Another report says: that Col. Baine was in possession of the instructions sent to Mr. Foster; and that he came to this city, with intention to proceed to the seat of government—but that permission to that effect could not be obtained from General Dearborn.

The following is from the Albany Register of Tuesday:—

On Saturday evening a British Colonel arrived with despatches for General Dearborn.—The dispatches are said to be an official notice of the repeal of the Orders in Council, and also a proposition for an armistice.

Militia General Order

Government House,

York, 25th May, 1812.

THE very satisfactory Report made to the President, by the Officers Commanding Corps, of the Spirit and Zeal manifested by the Men, in Volunteering their Services in the Flank Companies, has afforded His Honor the most lively gratification, and confirmed the opinion which he was always disposed to entertain of their determination to defend bravely, their Country, and in imitation of their veteran Fathers, evince by deeds, the ardent Loyalty they have so often professed.—Conduct so honorable and dignified, has not failed making a deep impression on His Majesty's Provincial Government, and to encrease if possible, their anxious desire to contribute every thing in their power towards the comfort and happiness of the People.

With this view, they have humbly solicited His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, for his gracious permission to allot to the Wives and Children of such Soldiers, Militia and Mariners, who may be killed in the present Contest, a portion of the Waste Lands of the Crown; and to afford relief to such as may be disabled in the Service, for whom no provision is otherwise provided.

By Command of the President,
(Signed)
ÆNEAS SHAW,
Adjutant General Militia.

Late Intelligence

London, June 24.

We learn from the French coast that many troops were marching northward.—A body of 5000 marched from the coast last week; the whole are pressed forward with the greatest expedition.

An account has been received by the Donna Fularia, from Gibraltar, of a very brilliant and gallant exploit, which was performed in the harbour of Malaga a few days before she left Gibraltar. The boats of the Hyacinth of 20 guns, commanded by Capt. Ushel, and those of the Gosshawk, commanded by Captain James Lilburn, went into the harbour of Malaga, where they stormed and took possession of two small forts, the guns of which they spiked, and destroyed the ammunition, &c. The marines and seamen then returned to their boats, and proceeded to the attack of six privateers, and several other vessels which lay in the harbour, all laden with sundry articles, the produce of French plunder from the unfortunate inhabitants of Malaga, which they captured and brought away, notwithstanding the incessant fire kept up on them by the troops on shore. These vessels, with their cargoes, were all sent for Gibraltar and were entering the harbour when the vessel which brought the intelligence sailed thence. The loss in this gallant enterprise has been very great. Captain Lilburn, of the Gosshawk, and many of the crews of both vessels being killed, and several wounded.

Northern Powers.

"A vessel from the other side of the coast states, that a battle has been fought between the Russians and French, which lasted two days. The result is not stated, and we give the report without vouching in any manner for its authenticity. Three French regiments are said to have been cut to pieces."

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.

Late from Portugal.

Extract from the postscript of a letter received by a Gentleman of this city, dated Halifax, twelve o'clock, 27th July, 1812.

"The Acasta frigate arrived last night in nineteen days from Lisbon; the French were completely surrounded by the combined army. Lord Wellington declared his determination to be in Salamanca in ten day.—Marmont had made up his mind to cut his way through the combined armies.—Affairs appear to be approaching to a crisis in the peninsula."

Extract of a letter from Halifax, dated July 27.

"Our navy is gathering daily strength, several frigates have already join'd this station and a number more are daily looked for. The Acasta frigate arrived last night, she left Lisbon on the first instant. Flour was then worth 20 dollars per barrel at that market. She captured and brought in with her the privateer brig Curlew, belonging to Mr. Gray, mounting sixteen guns and 170 men, out from Boston nine days, and had taken nothing.—We have accounts of our squadron having destroyed about a dozen privateers. There are now in this harbour about twenty five sail of American vessels."

Accounts from Gottenburgh to June 14 state, that Bernadotte has got the army (30,000) and navy on a good footing, and that their wants are properly attended to.—Russia has offered to place 20,000 men at his dispofal. If he should act with Russia, and his views are the same, the rear of the French army will soon be attacked, and Napoleon tremble.

Accounts from Washington of a very late date, say, that Mr President Madison had been seized with a very severe fit of the dry gripes, on hearing of the surrender of Detroit; and exclaimed, "if he had the good fortune to get over it, he would never take French advice again!"

A letter from Portland, dated August 7, says, "the ship Rose of Philadelphia, has just arrived here in 44 days from Stockholm.—She is 560 tons burthen, and 500 tons iron. The general opinion at Stockholm and Gottenburgh was, that the differences between France and Russia would be adjusted.—This vessel has brought despatches for our government, and received news of war four days since from privateers and made this port for safety."

An arrival at Baltimore in a short passage from Cadiz, brings a report that Lord Wellington had entered Salamanca, and Marmont had retired to Valladolid.

Another report has reached us, said to be received at New Bedford, from Gibraltar, that a battle had been fought in Estramadura, between Gen Hill and the French, in which the English were victorious—that General Hill lost a leg in the engagement. The account is dated as late as June 29.

The British fleet which lately chased the Constitution, and captured the Nautilus, have, we are extremely sorry to learn, captured 150 American merchantmen.—New York Paper.

Letters from Savannah, state, that the volunteers who went to East Florida, in order to join those who call themselves patriots, had all returned.

Extracts from a Proclamation of Governor Griswold, of Connecticut.

"In pursuance of the usage of my predecessors in office in times of difficulty, I have caused the council to be twice convened since the declaration of war, in both instances to advise with them respecting the course to be pursued on certain requisitions of the national government through General Dearborne, for certain portions of the militia to be placed in the forts at New London and New Haven. The advice given in both cases met my entire approbation, and accordingly a compliance with the requisition has been by me refused.

"It is the high and solemn duty of the Chief Magistrate, according to his oath of office, to "maintain the lawful rights and privileges of this State, as a sovereign free and independent state."

"This duty forbade a compliance with a request that any of the citizen-soldiers of this state should be placed, under existing circumstances, in garrisons to perform the ordinary duty of soldiers. It is also the prerogative of the state to hold its militia for the maintenance of its lawful privileges, and never to permit them to be withdrawn from its authority, except in cases expressly mentioned in the constitution.

"No such case existing, the officers and soldiers have not been ordered from their farms and other occupations, and from their homes, into the service required. While it is to be regretted, that any difference of opinion existed as to the cases in which the militia might be demanded, it becomes my duty to obey the constitution of my country.

"In a state of things so novel as that which now exists—in the interesting crisis of war with a foreign nation, wherein the property, the security, the liberty, and the lives, of the people are jeopardized, a war which was opposed by so much talent, worth, and respectability in both houses of Congress, it might have been anticipated, that the justice and expediency of the measure would have been questioned and denied by many. Still no such state of things exists as to justify the idea of seeking redress except in a constitutional manner."

TO AMERICANS RESIDING IN CANADA.

His Excellency the Governor having generously sympathized with the delicate and embarrassed situation of American Residents in the Colony, by continuing to us the usual hospitalities of the Country, it is not unimportant to take a distinct view of the ground we occupy, and to define to ourselves beyond all possibility of mistake the duties which the Proclamation prescribes for our performance.

Whatever, or however arduous, may be these duties, a new motive to their punctual fulfilment is suggested to generous minds in reposing on the confidence which his Excellency and the constituted Authorities repose in their integrity. For there are at this moment many thousand Americans residing in the Province, comprising a considerable of its active population—who, it lay in principle, may do much to defeat the measures which Government is taking to secure the safety of the Colony.

The Proclamation contemplates two divisions of American gently accommodating possible, to the disposition of all—One consists of those who observe a positive fidelity to the King's Government are exempted from military service—the other of those who take the oath of general allegiance and bear arms.

With respect to the latter class, they become bona fide British subjects, and of course all their activity, energies, courage and patience are in requisition for the general good. With regard to the former class, their duties though not so prominent, are no less real and momentous.—As we presume the Government do not require of them, does it expect the flight of each citizen with an invading Army—it ought to be distinctly understood, and emphatically impressed upon the minds of our worthy fathers, as otherwise (if we may be found guilty of treason in Cummings the Quaker, who in the rebellion of 1745, in his zeal for the House of Hanover, and, "that no blood might spill by their hands," would not bear arms, yet, he did willingly drive an ammunition waggon—Let no American be seduced by any illegitimate subtility to lend the am [illegible] the most indirect assistance to his countrymen in arms. If any, in defiance of his obligations, should be hasty and wicked enough to do so, he is a traitor, and will have forfeited for himself, and probably for his Country-men, all claims to indulgence whatever. A flagitious act of desertion may involve thousands of Americans in ruin. We might appeal nothing better than to be rejected from the Province and all entitled to hereafter intended, as to asset emoluments without honour, gratitude or thanks.

There is probably a great variety of opinions entertained among us with respect to the merits of the dispute between Great Britain and the United States. While possibly some may think that the claims of Congress are just, others that both nations are in fault, but it is certain that far the greater number are of opinion that the blame rests altogether with the American Government—nor is it a small guarantee for the fidelity of the American Residents, that so large a majority are of this sentiment.

It may be considered as a new feature of national liberality to permit so considerable a body of foreigners to remain without bearing arms in a country now with which their own Government is at war.—His Excellency may be considered as original in this indulgence, and it entails upon us an obligation, which nothing but the most scrupulous and assailable on our part can discharge.

There are in all countries men, who little influenced by principles of honour and gratitude, are nevertheless bias'd by the nicest maxims of prudence. It is hoped that none of us come under this denomination. If there be any, it may be worth while to suggest an argument, of which General Brock has availed himself to secure the fidelity of some doubtful inhabitants in Upper Canada. The same spirit of justice (says he in his Proclamation) which will make every reasonable allowance for the unsuccessful efforts of zeal and loyalty, will not fail to punish the defalcation of principle. Every Canadian freeholder is by deliberate choice bound by the most solemn oaths to defend the Monarchy as well as his own property. To shrink from that engagement is a treason not to be forgiven. Let no man suppose that if this unexpected struggle His Majesty's arms should be compelled to yield to an overwhelming force, the Province will be eventually abandoned. The endearing relation of its first settlers, the intrinsic value of its commerce, and the pretensions of its powerful rival to possess the Canadas, are pledges that no peace will be effected by the United States and Great Britain and Ireland of which the restoration of their Provinces does not make the most prominent condition.

This motive, it is presumed, will not fail to afford him those delightful feelings which a brave soldier alone can enjoy:—what more flattering can we say of the gallant officers and men who followed him to the field, than that they proved themselves worthy of their General; willing at the risk of their lives to gather laurels to adorn his brow; inspired by no common motives, proud of the opportunity of defending their King and country, their families and friends, they now return to receive the well earned thanks of all who know them, nor can we forget to do justice to the faithful tribes of western Indians who have been co-operating with our army, they deserve that humane protection which Great Britain has ever afforded them, and convinced as they now are of the power of their protectors, they will henceforward be an impregnable barrier to all future incursions of our neighbours, whose boundary we trust will hereafter be limited to the East side of the Ohio—both policy and justice dictate this accession of territory for our future security, whilst we can enforce our wishes by that best defence of nations, viz: being terrible in arms to our foes.

September 5.

The important event of the capture of Detroit and consequent security of our interior, seems wholly to occupy the public mind, and diffuse universal joy:—It has not in the least, however, relaxed the exertions of the Commander in Chief, who, regardless of personal comfort, is now in the act of reviewing the whole line of our Frontiers; on Wednesday he sailed from this for Kingston, and from the winds that have since prevailed may be again expected here to night or early in the morning. A reinforcement of 400 regular troops of the 49th regiment have arrived within the last ten days, and as many more are expected to accompany Gen. Brock on his return.

THE ARMISTICE AT AN END.

Yesterday morning a flag of truce came across the river with a formal notification that Mr. Madison would not confirm the Armistice that had been agreed upon between Gen. Dearborn and Sir George Prevost, and consequently that the two countries may be considered actively to commence hostilities on Tuesday next—the official dispatch from Washington was dated the 22d August, at which time it was thought there, that Gen. Hull was marching through the upper country with flying colours, and no doubt, as they calculated, would be ready to co-operate with the American forces at Fort Niagara, &c.—these considerations were thought by Mr. Madison sufficient grounds to [illegible] the horrors of war upon his unfortunate countrymen, although the officer that brought over the above information actually stated, that "a mail had just been dispatched from the United States to Great Britain with a view of concluding a peace between the two nations."—But what will Mr. Madison say when he hears of General Hull and all his army being made prisoners?—will he expect again to renew the armistice? or rather may he expect to hear that the people of Upper Canada (enraged at this proof of his disposition to destroy them) will with one voice entreat their beloved General to allow them to disarm the inclinations of this bloodthirsty man by once more carrying the war into his own country, and destroying the military posts from Fort Niagara to Buck Rock.—On the head of this American Frenchman will therefore fall the guilt of all the calamities which necessarily will attend the inhabitants on the opposite side, and which may be appreciated in proportion as the mind can calculate the effect of an attack with 3000 soldiers and at least 700 Indians.

We learn with much satisfaction, and believe the authority to be good, that the French and Russians have had [illegible]ing in the minds of those [illegible] certainty of conquest, may feel no inclination to respect the restraints which Government has thot fit to impose [illegible] them. It is indeed hard to believe that there are any of this character among us. But if there be any such, let them learn that in case of the loss of the Colony to the Crown and its subsequent restoration, their prospects in it are blasted forever. Besides all this, something is not only due to the indulgence we actually enjoy in the Province, but something is likewise due to what we have enjoyed. Can any spot be named where Americans have thrived and grown rich more rapidly than in Canada? It may be readily conceded that the country has profited by their labours, without subtracting in the least from what we owe to Government for general protection, and the opportunities offered us for acquiring property. It is a Master's maxim Ubi peccunia, ibi patria. If Americans love money as much as they have the reputation of doing, those who have risen to opulence in Canada through the kindness and protection of the Government, ought to befriend the country which has been the theatre of their success.

It is true indeed that Americans have enjoyed no particular immunities and privileges in the Province. But it is equally true that the Government might have monopolized all the commerce of the colony, and as the native Canadian have no genius for trade, carried it on by a corporate company or dependant Agents, while the British Navy, triumphant in every sea, could have secured to the Province all the advantages of its commerce, whenever might conduct it.

Such are the sentiments which the occasion naturally suggests. Americans are called upon by every honorable motive to exhibit examples of loyalty and attachment to the Government which protects them. The Drama in which they are called to act is new to most, and some of its scenes may not be pleasant to many. But it is our bounden duty to shew an entire devotion to the King's service and zeal to defend the Province and to save it. To secure our best exertions we have tendered to the Government our oath of allegiance. To this oath, and to the duties it implies we must be constant, or our faith will be as proverbial as that of the Carthagenians.

AN AMERICAN.

—Montreal Courant.

KINGSTON [illegible]-8-29

This morning arrived at this port his Majesty's ships Royal George, Earl of Moira, and Prince Regent, with 400 American prisoners on board, and General Hull, late Commandant at Detroit.

NIAGARA, Aug. 22.

Capture of Detroit and Gen. Hull's Army.

We are happy to announce to the public the important intelligence of the capture of Detroit with General Hull and his army, on the 16th instant, together with the Adams vessel of war, and other naval force.

The following is the substance of an official communication, addressed to Colonel Myers upon the subject—the dispatches having been forwarded to his Excellency Sir George Prevoft.

On the night of the 12th inst. General Brock arrived at Amherstburg with a reinforcement of 400 men including militia and regulars, and immediately proceeded to make arrangements for advancing to Sandwich, which the enemy had evacuated a few days before.—On the evening of the 15th a fire was opened from our batteries and continued for an hour with great effect, and recommenced before day on the morning of the 16th from 3 mortars, one 18 pounder and two 12-pounders, at which time our troops crossed the river under cover of the Queen Charlotte & Hunter brig, at a point called the Spring Wells, about three miles below Detroit, preceded by a body of 600 Indians who were landed a mile lower down and marched through some thick woods with the intention of covering the left flank.—The landing was effected in good order without any opposition, the General being among the first boats.—Our army consisting of 700 men, advanced in column and took up a good position in line of about a mile and a half in front of Detroit—every preparation was instantly made for the assault of the fort at one of the salient angles, which would have taken place in a few minutes had not a white flag been perceived coming from the garrison, the bearer bringing proposals from the exterminating Gen. Hull, offering to surrender upon conditions which were soon dictated by General Hull's tent by Capt. Glegg and Col. M'Donnell, A. D. C. to Gen. Brock.—A detachment of Gen. Hull's army, of 400 men, under the command of Col. M'Arthur, who were on their return to the fort, were included in the capitulation.—The fruits of this achievement have been the capture of 1500 regulars and militia, and 25 pieces of ordnance and other valuable stores, artillery, &c. without the loss of one drop of British blood.—The Adams and other vessels will be immediately employed in sending down the prisoners to Fort Erie, &c.—Gen. Brock was to embark on the 17th in the evening, and Gen. Hull and the colors of the 4th U. States regiment accompany him—The firing from our batteries took effect the moment our guns opened, and one 12 pound shot killed four officers and a private at the same moment.—The Commandant of Michilimackinac was among the number, and is sent to Gen. Hull on his parole from our side not to serve during the war.

To pass over in silence this bold and gallant exploit we should consider criminal; whilst we lament and are free to confess our inability to do justice to the brave men who have so heroicaly upheld the British name and caused its banners to wave over the American Eagle, upon the walls of a strong fortress, garrisoned with four times the number of troops that invested it—an army that of itself might have been expected to overwhelm, in the open field, our little force employed on this service, but no—their cause was bad, and the name of Brock, terrible to their imagination;—the rapidity of his movements, his unexpected appearance, and his skilful and determined attack, appall'd and struck terror to their hearts, & they yielded to his superior genius. The forces of Gen. Hull had we know, already felt the severe effects of the British arms under the able dispositions of Col. Proctor, who in conjunction with the Indians has commenced a series of the most brilliant successes; it remained for the fortune of the brave Commander in Chief to give the finishing stroke to this happy beginning and the manner in which it has been done will rank him high among the heroes of his country, whilst the grateful tribute of public applause from the inhabitants of this happy Province await his return, and will not fail to afford him those delightful feelings which a brave soldier alone can enjoy:—what more flattering can we say of the gallant officers and men who followed him to the field, than that they proved themselves worthy of their General; willing at the risk of their lives to gather laurels to adorn his brow; inspired by no common motives, proud of the opportunity of defending their King and country, their families and friends, they now return to receive the well earned thanks of all who know them, nor can we forget to do justice to the faithful tribes of western Indians who have been co-operating with our army, they deserve that humane protection which Great Britain has ever afforded them, and convinced as they now are of the power of their protectors, they will henceforward be an impregnable barrier to all future incursions of our neighbours, whose boundary we trust will hereafter be limited to the East side of the Ohio—both policy and justice dictate this accession of territory for our future security, whilst we can enforce our wishes by that best defence of nations, viz: being terrible in arms to our foes.

September 5.

The important event of the capture of Detroit and consequent security of our interior, seems wholly to occupy the public mind, and diffuse universal joy:—It has not in the least, however, relaxed the exertions of the Commander in Chief, who, regardless of personal comfort, is now in the act of reviewing the whole line of our Frontiers; on Wednesday he sailed from this for Kingston, and from the winds that have since prevailed may be again expected here to night or early in the morning. A reinforcement of 400 regular troops of the 49th regiment have arrived within the last ten days, and as many more are expected to accompany Gen. Brock on his return.

THE ARMISTICE AT AN END.

Yesterday morning a flag of truce came across the river with a formal notification that Mr. Madison would not confirm the Armistice that had been agreed upon between Gen. Dearborn and Sir George Prevoft, and consequently that the two countries may be considered actively to commence hostilities on Tuesday next—the official dispatch from Washington was dated the 22d August, at which time it was thought there, that Gen. Hull was marching through the upper country with flying colours, and no doubt, as they calculated, would be ready to co-operate with the American forces at Fort Niagara, &c.—these considerations were thought by Mr. Madison sufficient grounds to [illegible] the horrors of war upon his unfortunate countrymen, although the officer that brought over the above information actually stated, that "a mail had just been dispatched from the United States to Great Britain with a view of concluding a peace between the two nations."—But what will Mr. Madison say when he hears of General Hull and all his army being made prisoners?—will he expect again to renew the armistice? or rather may he expect to hear that the people of Upper Canada (enraged at this proof of his disposition to destroy them) will with one voice entreat their beloved General to allow them to disarm the inclinations of this bloodthirsty man by once more carrying the war into his own country, and destroying the military posts from Fort Niagara to Buck Rock.—On the head of this American Frenchman will therefore fall the guilt of all the calamities which necessarily will attend the inhabitants on the opposite side, and which may be appreciated in proportion as the mind can calculate the effect of an attack with 3000 soldiers and at least 700 Indians.

We learn with much satisfaction, and believe the authority to be good, that the French and Russians have had

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, September 12, 1812.

We learn, that about four days ago, a report reached our side at the town of Queenston, to the following effect —Ten companies of men were ordered to march from Albany to the frontiers, to aid in invading us—they refused, the refusal led to a public affray in that city, which was a sanguinary one—the spirit spread to Schenectady and Utica, where similar scenes took place—the fleets in the three towns (from the number of dead bodies) are stated to have exhibited melancholy pictures of civil war and carnage—from circumstances we attach full credit to the report.

MR. EDITOR,

The declaration of war by the United States of America against Great Britain, has in numberless publications been deemed equally foolish and unjust; not indeed by publications composed by the subjects of that kingdom (for they consider the matter so obvious as to preclude discussion) but by the Americans themselves. The inhabitants of that country have many of them, felt the pernicious effects of that system of conduct adopted by their rulers—they have felt and they dare to complain.

The New Hampshire Memorial addressed to Mr. Madison, published in your paper, is a composition that would do honor to any country, whether we consider the strength of the reasoning which it contains, or the elegance of the language by which that reasoning is conveyed.

But my fellow countrymen, for I am a subject of Britain and an inhabitant of Canada, to point out the folly of America, who has been instigated by the wild enthusiasm of popularity, engendered by the corruption of its rulers, and kept alive by the lies of faction, is not the business of the present day—we are called upon to act not to speculate—the die is cast,—The Americans, but I recall the word, "Americans"—the President of the United States of America, whether guided by folly, corruption, or both, has had the honour in despite of the voice of the most respectable inhabitants of his country to declare to Britain—"I will have war—I will have no peace—I will not even enter into negociations with you for peace, what is it to me that you are a nation that has resisted the Tyrant of Europe, that has protected the oppressed, and supported the cause of liberty and of man.—War with Great Britain will promote the schemes of my ambition, it will gratify my revenge, it will please the fools of my party, and the strength of my party does not depend upon its wisdom, but upon its numbers. Besides I must go any lengths at present to please the Mob, no matter for the consequences—my election is at stake."

Such, fellow Countrymen, are the conclusions which may be drawn from the conduct of the Executive (to use that favourite expression) of the United States of America—their actions dictate their principles—they require to comment—he that runs may read.

PORTSMOUTH June 27.

On Tuesday Lord Cochrane had a long interview with Lord Melville, previous to his leaving town on a ſecret expedition.—Sun.

Several bomb veſſels have been for ſome time in preparation, which, it is ſaid, are to compoſe part of a force which is to be put under his Lordſhip's command.

Capt. Gordon, who was ſecretary to his R. H. the Duke of York, ſailed from hence on Wednesday, in the Fawn for Liſbon, being appointed deputy Quarter Maſter General in Portugal. The Fawn took out 400,000 dollars (the ſame which the Caſtor brought from Vera Cruz) for the pay ment of the troops.

A ſloop arrived from the River this morning, with 52 caſk iron water tanks which are to be ſtowed into his Majeſty's ſhip Minden. They hold two tons each; and the object is to find a ſubſtitute for the preſent mode of keeping and preſerving water on board of ſhips, and in a more compact form.

June 27.

The Cadiz papers of the 3d and 5th inſt. contain an account which we ſhall be happy to find confirmed, that on the 31ſt of laſt month, Ballaſteros, who had received a reinforcement of 2000 Britiſh troops, attacked the nephew of Soult a Barnes, & defeated him with great ſlaughter, killing, wounding, or making priſoners 5000 men. Eſpoz y Mina is ſaid to have gained ſeveral ſucceſſes, and to have taken a very rich convoy, bearing the Governor of Pampaluna, who had come out with 2000 men to protect it. The Governor loſt his life.

A private communication from Paris ſtates, that intelligence had been received there of the death of Lewis Bonaparte, the late King of Holland, who, we believe, was a very worthy, unoffending man. He is ſaid to have died at Graz in Stiria, about the middle of June; and to have bequeath ed to that town the little property of which he died poſſeſſed, in return for the friendly reception with which he had been there honoured.

An article from Peterſburgh of the 22d ult. contains the following important article of commercial information, relative to the admiſſion of colonial produce into the ports of Ruſſia:—

"The Government have allowed to be introduced into the ports of Libau, Riga, and Peterſburgh, and to be depoſited in the royal magazines, as well as thoſe of individuals, coffee, ſugar, ſpices, and other colonial produce, without paying duties, and even with draw from their warehouſes a third of ſuch merchandize, without their being ſubject to any duty.

June 30.

Another Anholt mail arrived laſt night, and ſtill we have no accounts of hoſtilities. The letters from St. Peterſburgh ſtate with confidence, that peace has been concluded with Turkey, and that the ratification of the Porte is daily expected. The Emperor is expected to return to his capital after the arrangements for the campaign are finally ſettled. We hear that Murat, King of Naples, has arrived at Dantzic, at the head of the French cavalry, which as we ſtated yeſterday, is rapidly extending over the ſea coaſt of the Baltic.

The proſpects of a friendly intercourſe between this country and Ruſſia are highly encouraging, as the private advices from Stockholm aſſure us "That the Ruſſian commandants at Riga, Revel, and Cronſtadt, had received orders for allowing the entry into thoſe ports of all veſſels, excepting thoſe of France, and for permitting all ſhips to ſail laden with wheat, barley, &c. for any friendly or neutral port under convoy of Swediſh or Engliſh ſhips of war. In conſequence of this reſolution which was communicated to Sir J. Saumarez by a merchant, the Engliſh Admiral immediately diſpatched a frigate for Riga."

July 3.

The Regulus is arrived from Liſbon with ſeveral tranſports. She ſailed on the 20th, four days later than the date of the laſt mail, and brings intelligence that the day before ſhe ſailed a courier had arrived from the army with information, that Lord Wellington was rapidly advancing into Spain; that on the 13th the advanced guard was within ten miles of Salamanca. The laſt diſpatch received by government from his Lordſhip was dated on the 10th. His head quarters were then at Fuente Guinaldo.

July 4.

It is reported that Joſeph Bonaparte and all the French at Madrid will immediately evacuate that city, and retire to the northward—that Lord Wellington will attack Marmont if he ventures to oppoſe his Lordſhip, whoſe intentions are ſaid to be to penetrate to the capital. But it is ſuppoſed to be more probable that all Spain South of the Ebro, is intended to be abandoned by the enemy, during the operations againſt Ruſſia.

The plan of operations adopted by the Ruſſians is purely defenſive. It is reported that Lord Cathcart is forthwith going to the head quarters of the Ruſſian army, inveſted with a commiſſion from the Britiſh Court.

July 8.

In ſome of the letters received from yeſterday by the Anholt mail from Sweden, it is ſtated that Bernadotte was anxiouſly awaiting the arrival there of General Moreau from America—that on his arrival he was to be inveſted with a chief command in the Swediſh army. This is ſaid to be the more probable, as Bernadotte and Moreau were, from an early period of life to the preſent time, on terms of the ſtricteſt intimacy.

July 9.

Liſbon papers reached us this morning to the 22d ult. their contents are extremely intereſting.

Lord Wellington had entered Salamanca on the 18th of June. On his approach the French retired to Toro, leaving two ſtrong buildings occupied by a few men, to impede the purſuit.

Marmont had transferred his head quarters to Talavera.

Letters from Cadiz received at Liſbon, report that the Britiſh had taken a convoy, conſiſting of near 50 ſail, near Barcelona.

War has been formally declared by France againſt Ruſſia.

GLASGOW, July 11.

With the deepeſt regret we mention that his Majeſty was on Monday laſt ſeized with paroxyſms of the moſt violent kind.—The accounts however of Tueſday, are favorable, his Majeſty having had ſeveral hours ſleep, and wakened much refreſhed.

The intelligence from the North of Europe is highly favourable.

By an Anholt mail which arrived on Tueſday, accounts are received, that Peace had been concluded between the Ruſſians and Turks. The Emperor Alexander ratified the treaty at Wilna, on the 20th of June. Ruſſia has given up her claims to certain diſtricts on the Pruth and Danube.——

Turkey on the other hand, agrees to put 50,000 of her troops at the disposal of Ruſſia, in caſe the ſhould be attacked by Auſtria, during the preſent diſpute with France.

The Ruſſian Ambaſſador at Stockholm, it is ſaid has received inſtructions from this Court, to ſettle with Mr. Thornton, all the differences that ſubſiſt between Great Britain and Ruſſia.

We are glad to obſerve, that a convoy of merchantmen had arrived at Liebau and Riga, and were received as friends.

CADIZ, July 9.

Official information has been received from Mr. Stuart, dated Liſbon, July 4, announcing the evacuation of Aſturias by the French General Bonnet, with loſs, among which was General Gauthier, killed: The advance of the Spaniſh army of Gallicia to St. Catharine, & the commencement of the ſiege of Aſtorga, in Leon; and the concentration of the guerilla force in Leon. He adds,

"The forts of Salamanca having reſiſted the attacks of the 23d in which General Bowes was killed, the artillery began to throw red hot ſhot on the evening of the 26th againſt the principal convent; the edifice was in a few hours ſet on fire and the commander offered to capitulate.

"Notwithſtanding various difficulties having ariſen, the ſmaller fort called St. Cayetano was taken by aſſault, and the other ſurrendered at diſcretion on the morning of the 27th. Seven hundred men which compoſed the garriſon are priſoners of war.

"Marſhal Marmont who advanced in the mean time to the Fountain of Sauto, and had manoeuvred with the intention of ſurrounding the right of the Allies, retrograded immediately by the road to Valladolid, retiring with all the forces which he had to the eaſt of Toro except a ſmall garriſon which he left at Zaptora. The head quarters of the Britiſh and Portugueſe army was at Palares on the 30th—that body under the command of D'Urban had paſſed the Eſla and preſented themſelves in front of Zamora on the 25th. On the 9th July the command of the Bay of Cadiz was reſigned to the Engliſh Admiral, by the Regency of Spain."

CIUDAD RODRIGO, June 27.

Marmont is entrenched three leagues from Salamanca, and has aſſembled near him 40,000 men, having taken many of them from his moſt important garriſons.

BADAJOZ, June 30.

Soult has again taken refuge in Seville. He had advanced to Zeira, but after reconnoitering the ſtrength and poſition of his enemy in Albuera, (a place which has but few charms for his recollection) and vicinity, he retired to Andaluſia. The Britiſh pickets are at St. Martha.

A preſent.—It is reported that Lady Madiſon has received from the Empreſs of France an elegant preſent, conſiſting of a caſket of jewels and an elegant lace dreſs. This we believe is ſubſtantially true, although it may be in ſome particulars as incorrect as the ſtatement we once made reſpecting a preſent from Bonaparte of two or three military hats to Col. Duane; which the Colonel ſaid was falſe, and I believe he backed the denial with an oath that he had never received a military hat from Bonaparte in his life. Duane was literal & correct, it was military caps only.—Eng. Pap.

Gentlemen who have arrived here from the States, report that the troops were about leaving Burlington for Plattſburgh; that it was ſaid General Dearborn would alſo ſoon be on from Albany to Plattſburgh with all the troops under his command, and that every veſſel and boat on Lake Champlain was in requiſition for the purpoſe of conveying military ſtores, &c.

We are informed, that on Thurſday afternoon a Flag of Truce arrived direct from Waſhington with diſpatches for his Excellency the Governor General, who is abſent on a tour through the diſtrict. The contents have not tranſpired.—Canadian Courant.

GENERAL ORDER.

Head Quarters, Montreal, Aug. 31, 1812.

It is with real regret that his Excellency the Governor General and Commander of the Forces announces to the troops under his command and to the public, the failure of an important arrangement lately entered into between Major General Dearborn, Commander in Chief of the Forces of the United States of America, and himſelf, for a ſuſpenſion of active hoſtilities, and which his Excellency had hoped might have ultimately terminated in an amicable ſettlement of the differences ſubſiſting between the two countries.

Captain Pinkney, aid-de-camp to Gen. Dearborn, arrived at 9 o'clock laſt night, being the bearer of diſpatches from the Commander in Chief of the American Forces, with the information that the Preſident of the United States of America had not thought proper to authorize a continuance of the proviſional meaſures entered into by his Excellency and Gen. Dearborn, through the Adjutant General, Col. Baynes, and that conſequently the armiſtice was to ceaſe in four days from the time of the communication reaching Montreal, & the poſts at Kingſton and Fort George. At the ſame time that his Excellency cannot but lament ſo unlooked for a deciſion upon the friendly propoſition made by him thro' General Dearborn to the Government of the United States, he truſts it will be matter of high ſatisfaction to all his Majeſty's ſubjects in this Province to know that he has uſed all the means in his power to prevent a further increaſe of the breach ſubſiſting between Great Britain and America, and to ward off from theſe Provinces the calamities of war, with which they are threatened. In the ſame ſpirit of conciliation which has uniformly influenced his Majeſty's Miniſters in the late negociations with the Government of the United States, His Excellency availed himſelf of the earlieſt opportunity of communicating to the Commander in Chief of the American Forces, the diſpatches he had received from Mr. Foſter, at Halifax, containing the intentions of his Majeſty's government reſpecting the repeal of the Orders in Council; and as his Excellency could not doubt but that this conciliatory meaſure removing the alledged principal ground of difference between Great Britain and America, and which had been transmitted to the government of the United States thro' Mr. Baker, late Secretary of Legation at Waſhington, would be met by a ſimilar diſpoſition on their part, he ſubmitted to Gen. Dearborn the propriety of a ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities until the determination of the Preſident ſhould be made known upon the ſubject. The ready acquieſcence of that officer in this propoſal, excepting as far as it re ted to Gen. Hull, who was acting under the immediate orders of the executive government of America and the orders immediately iſſued by him ſtrongly manifeſted his friendly diſpoſition on the occaſion, and led to a reaſonable expectation that his Government would not fail to approve of his conduct, and to confirm the armiſtice he had entered into. In this expectation his Excellency has been diſappointed, and the American Government by refuſing to continue the ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities, though with the certain evidence before them of the actual repeal of the Orders in Council, has proclaimed in language not to be miſunderſtood, that other objects independent of thoſe held out to the American people as the grounds of the war, were originally in their contemplation. That the conqueſt of the Canadas, either for the purpoſe of extending their own territories or of, gratifying their deſire of annoying and embarraſſing Great Britain, was one amongſt others of theſe objects, cannot be doubted.—The invaſion of the Upper Province undertaken ſo immediately after the declaration of war, ſhews in the ſtrongeſt manner how fully they had prepared themſelves for that event and how highly they had flattered themſelves with finding it an eaſy conqueſt from the ſuppoſed weakneſs of the force oppoſed to them, and the ſpirit of diſaffection which they had previouſly endeavoured to excite amongſt its inhabitants. Foiled as they have been in this attempt, by the valour and united efforts of the regular forces, militia and Indians of the Province, under the command of their diſtinguiſhed leader, their whole army with its General captured, and their only remaining fortreſs and poſt in the adjoining territory wreſted from them, it is not to be doubted but that the American government will keenly feel this diſappointment of their hopes, & conſequently endeavour to avail themſelves of the ſurrender of Detroit, to term it an invaſion of their country, and to make it a ground for calling up on the militia to march to the Frontiers for the conqueſt of the Canadas. A pretext ſo weak and unfounded, though it may deceive ſome, will not fail to be received in its proper light by others, and it will be immediately perceived by thoſe who will give themſelves the trouble to reflect upon the ſubject that the purſuit of an invading army into their own territory is but a natural conſequence of the firſt invaſion and the capture of the place to which they may retire for ſafety, a meaſure indiſpenſably neceſſary for the ſecurity and protection of the country originally attacked.

Under all theſe circumſtances ſo ſtrongly indicative of the moderation forbearance and true ſpirit of conciliation manifeſted on the part of his Majeſty's government towards the United States of America and of their determined hoſtility to Great Britain, his Excellency the Commander of the forces truſts that the troops, regulars and militia, under his command, as well as all his Majeſty's other ſubjects in this part of his dominions, animated with ſentiments of juſt indignation at the extraordinary pretenſions of the enemy and their unwarrantable views of conqueſt upon the Canadas, will be prepared to repel with firmneſs, and with that invincible ſpirit and true Britiſh courage which has ſo gloriouſly manifeſted itſelf in Upper Canada, in the total defeat and capture of the invading foe, any further attempt the enemy may have the temerity to make. His Excellency looks with confidence, under the protection of Divine Providence, to the confirmed diſcipline of his Majeſty's troops, and to the zeal loyalty and courage of all deſcriptions of perſons in theſe Provinces, as a certain pledge of the ſame glorious reſult.

EDWARD BAYNES,
Adjutant General.

KINGSTON, September 5, 1812.

Yeſterday his Hon. General Brock was waited upon by the Magiſtrates, Clergymen, Officers of Militia and others in a body, who preſented him with the following Addreſs:—

To his Honor ISAAC BROCK, Eſq. Preſident, adminiſtering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General commanding his Majeſty's Forces in the ſaid Province.

May it pleaſe your Honor,

We the Magiſtrates, Officers of Militia and others, inhabitants of the town of Kingſton, beg leave to congratulate you on your arrival, and to offer you that tribute of applauſe and admiration which the late important conqueſt of Detroit muſt every where excite.—That army which was to look down all oppoſition, that General whoſe Proclamation denounced extermination to his oppoſers, were unable to withſtand your judicious and intrepid operations, and ſubmitted to the terms which you were pleaſed to dictate.—The confidence which your conduct and talents, they eminently diſplayed, have diffuſed through his Majeſty's ſubjects in this Province, will, we truſt, be ſhewn by a general emulation of the ſpirited conduct of the reſt of our fellow ſubjects who had the honor of ſharing in your toils, and participating in your ſucceſs; a ſucceſs ſo extraordinary, and ſo rapidly achieved, that poſterity will perhaps regard it as a fiction of the Hiſtorian that you prorogued your Parliament at York on the 5th day of Auguſt, and that after encountering every obſtacle from roads and weather, you were on the 16th maſter of the Fortreſs of Detroit, defended by thirty three pieces of cannon and an army of two thouſand five hundred men, which laid down their arms before your gallant band of leſs than half that number.

Kingſton, Sept. 4, 1812.

To which his Honor was pleaſed to make the following Reply:—

Nothing but the confidence which the admirable conduct of the York and Lincoln regiments of Militia excited, could have induced me to undertake an expedition ſuch as lately terminated ſo much to the advantage of the country.

I have reaſon, from the reports made to me by the officers ſtationed at Kingſton, to rely with equal confidence on the diſcipline and gallantry of the Militia of this Diſtrict.—It is with the higheſt ſatisfaction, I underſtand, that in the midſt of unavoidable privations and fatigue, they bear in mind, that the cauſe in which they are engaged, involves their deareſt intereſts and the happineſs of their families.

Gentlemen, believe me ſenſible of this mark of your eſteem.

L O N D O N, July 21.

Dispatches have been received from Lord Wellington, of which the following is the Official Bulletin.

"Dispatches from Lord Wellington, dated June 30, are received. He was then at Fuenta La Peno, nearly 50 miles in advance from Salamanca, on the road to Valladolid. His Lordship's advanced guard had daily skirmishes with the rear of Marmont's army which was in full retreat.

July 28.—A messenger from Admiral Sawyer reached London July 26, and announced the attack on the Belvidera—but did not furnish a copy of the declaration of war.

The Jamaica fleet, under the Thetis, arrived in England July 24, and the East India fleet, under the Phaeton.

The French Gen. Puthippon has escaped from England, and an attempt was made to carry Sarrazin to France.

Accounts from Lisbon are to July 14. General Hill had advanced from Badajoz to Lucrena. Lord Wellington had advanced his head quarters to Toro. Marmont was concentrating his forces at Valadolid, and it is said the British advanced posts were within two leagues of it. Marmont lost 500 men in crossing the Douro. Accounts from Oporto are to July 18.

Several skirmishes are reported to have taken place between the Russians and the French. The former are said to have fallen back, destroying the country as they retreated, agreeably to a previous determination. The French are said to have halted for want of provisions.

A general embargo was laid in Swedish ports July 18, on account, as it is said, of a want of transports to convey troops.

France and Prussia have made a defensive treaty.—Austria and France have formed a treaty offensive and defensive; and Austria is marching an army to assist against the Russians.

On the 6th of July, an English 64 commanded by Capt. Stewart, having procured a Danish pilot, came into the harbour of Ahkers, 40 miles East of Christianland, and destroyed a sunk, after a severe engagement, the Danish frigate Naiard, killed 241 of her crew, and 180 escaped on shore. He also captured the brig Ran; which was retaken by the gun boats, and brought to Christianand.—Captain Stewart demanded her, but was refused.

From the Glasgow Courier of July 30.

On the 28th of June, the Diet of Warsaw proclaimed the re establishment of the kingdom of Poland, including the Polish provinces possessed by Russia. They put themselves under the protection of Bonaparte, of whom Poland declares herself to be the ally. The whole is the result of French influence and intrigue.

On the other hand, the Anholt mail furnishes the following proclamation of the Governor of Riga.

"Inhabitants of Riga! the enemy is already on the frontiers of the empire, and Riga is exposed to danger; but let not the future be regarded with dismay, at the same time that strength and valour protect our walls, true patriotism, the distinguishing characteristic of its inhabitants, promises security with us. But, to establish this conviction, let unanimity, mutual confidence, and cordial co-operation be our law—a law to which every true citizen will subscribe with equal cheerfulness and bravery. My determination to fulfil all difficulties must depend, for its success on your assistance. Accordingly I call upon you, with the most implicit confidence, to exert every resource, and strain every nerve, in defence of the town, and in that of your property and homes: and cheerfully to obey every requisition that may be required to render that defence successful; and I wish you will never compel me to resort to the authority vested in me for that purpose.

July 1, 1812. VAN ESSEN."

The proclamation is followed by an animated address of Baron de Tolli, minister at war, to the soldiers of the army of the west.

Admiral Martin is at Riga, assisting the governor in strengthening and improving the fortifications. He was received there with the greatest respect and attention. He is a most active and intelligent officer.

Lord Cathcart was on the point of embarking for Petersburgh.

Commodore Rogers has arrived in Boston. In the account of his cruize, and after giving the account of the action with the Belvidera, he says,

"The squadron afterwards pursued the Jamaica fleet, but owing to uncommonly foggy weather, missed them, although at times very near."

The squadron has been off the English Channel, along the coast of France Spain and Portugal, within 30 miles of the Rock of Lisbon—then made Madeira Island—then off Cape Finisterre—then back to the Banks—and by Nova Scotia to Boston.

Many of the seamen of the squadron are sick with the fever. Several had died. About 120 English prisoners are on board.

FORTS WAYNE AND DEARBORN ALSO TAKEN.

Extract of a letter from a respectable Gentleman in Cincinnati, to another in Philadelphia, dated August 25.

"Dreadful news has just arrived by express. The British on the 16th inst. captured General Hull's army in Detroit, without his firing a gun. He was under the necessity of capitulating.—The Indians immediately made a sally on Fort Wayne and took it. All is confusion and bustle here. Cincinnati has lost nearly 2000, some of them the best citizens we had. This moment 2000 troops from Kentucky have arrived here on their march to reinforce Gen. Hull, but they are too late."

Extract of a letter from Fort Wayne, dated August 19.

"I have the mortification to announce to you the destruction of Captain Heald and his company, on their retreat from Fort Dearborne to this place. It happened on the morning of the 15th instant, by an army of Indians, of about five or six hundred, consisting of the following tribes, Ottoways, Chippaways, Winnebagoes Kickapoos, Momomonies, and some Pottawatomies. Captain Wells who went to assist Capt. Heald on his retreat is among the number killed. We cannot learn that any escaped. But it is stated, that Captain Heald, Mr. Kingsland some women, are made prisoners. The particulars of the action I omit till another express."

Extract of a letter dated New Orleans, August 4.

"The Negroes up the coast have begun to kill their masters, and the Indians within 30 miles, are killing all before them. Numbers have taken refuge on board the gun-boats on the Lake."

KINGSTON, Sept. 19.

On the 16th a brigade of boats under convoy of two companies of the Newfoundland Regiment and a detachment of the 49th and of the Veterans, were attacked by the Americans about twelve miles below Johnstown.—By accounts received from Prescot yesterday morning, it appears that the attack terminated neither to the honor nor advantage of the assailants. They had two large Durham boats filled with men, one of them with a six-pounder on board, and two smaller boats.—A private of the 49th regiment was killed by a cannon ball, and a private of the Newfoundland Regiment and three of the militia were slightly wounded. We took from the Americans one of their Durham boats, and they had above twenty men killed and wounded. The whole of our boats arrived at Prescot on the morning of the 17th and by the gallantry of our troops and militia the enemy have been completely foiled in a deliberate and well concerted attempt to intercept and cut them off.

In this encounter the Militia appear to have taken a most active part. Their zeal and courage are indeed conspicuous on every occasion; and from one extremity of the Province to the other, they have given to the enemy the most satisfactory proofs that their courage and loyalty are not to be exhausted by the speeches of Mr. Potter, or the proclamation of Gen. Hull.

September 26.

On Monday last a party from Gravelly Point, consisting of about 150 riflemen, under the command of a Captain Forsyth, landed at Cannoque, and attacked the militia stationed there about 50 in number, who after some resistance, were compelled to retire.—The Americans took some arms and ammunition that were deposited there, and burnt a small store in which were a few barrels of flour and a small quantity of beef, and carried away provisions for the militia that were sick in hospital, and a dragoon, whom they intercepted on his way to this place, to give notice of their attack.

Their behaviour at Col. Stone's was truly disgraceful. They fired into his house and wounded Mrs. Stone, who was the only person in it. They broke open and ransacked his trunks, & had his bedding and other articles carried down to the shore with an intention of carrying them off with them; but this was prevented by their officers.

On this occasion four of the militia were wounded, and one of the American rifle men was killed. The number wounded is not known.

It unfortunately happened that Captain Schofield and Lieut. Bradish with 12 men of the detachment at Cananoque were here at the time, by which means that station was deprived of the assistance of these two excellent officers.

As soon as intelligence of this attack was conveyed to Kingston, a detachment of troops and militia under the command of Col. Nichol, who volunteered his services, were dispatched to intercept the invaders; but they had retired. The detachment however landed on Tuesday morning on the American shore, at a place called Brown's Point, where the Americans usually keep a strong guard, which had probably retired to the woods on their approach, as they saw nobody. They found a large block house begun and in some forwardness. This they burnt together with the materials provided for finishing it. They destroyed a large Durham boat and several smaller ones, and returned in the afternoon, regretting that they had not met with Capt. Forsyth and his redoubted riflemen.—Kingston Gazette.

ISAAC BROCK, Esquire, President, administering the Government of the Province of Upper-Canada, and Major General commanding His Majesty's Forces within the same.

To all Persons to whom these Presents shall come——GREETING.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me by the Indians residing at the Grand River, within this Province, in a Speech addressed in Public Council, to His Majesty's Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, that many White People are settled on the Indian Land in the County of Haldimand, without due Authority, or Licence from any Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of this Province: And whereas by Law, all White Persons are forbidden to establish themselves, or reside in any Indian Village or Country within this Province, without such Licence, under a Penalty for the first Offence, of Ten Pounds, and for the second and every other subsequent offence, of Twenty Pounds—I have thought proper, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Executive Council, for the affairs of this Province, to issue this Proclamation, to the intent that no person may pretend ignorance of the Law which subjects his contravention to such penalties; and further to declare, that the Law will be henceforth rigidly enforced against all persons who shall, after the publication hereof, continue to reside in the Indian Villages and Countries within this Province without due Licence. And whereas it is further represented to me, that among the White People resident upon the Indian Lands, there are divers to whom it may be expedient to grant Licences to remain, all persons desirous to obtain such Licences, are hereby required to Report themselves to the Honble WILLIAM CLAUS, His Majesty's Deputy Superintendant General of Indian Affairs, together with the circumstances of time, place and condition of their respective residences.

Latest Intelligence.

GREAT BATTLE IN SPAIN

LONDON, August 6.

Capt. Blacquier of the navy, has arrived at the Admiralty with satisfying intelligence of the defeat of the French army under Marmont.

The intelligence brought by Capt. Blacquier was received by Sir Home Popham, now on the coast of Spain, from the South Governor of Gijon, on the 29th ult.

The Spanish governor transmits to Sir Home Popham a copy of the following short dispatch from the Earl of Wellington himself to the Spanish General Santocildes.

Garden above the Tormes, July 23-5 in the morning.

"General—I wrote you yesterday morning, and I now do it with the pleasure of acquainting you that we have beat Marmont, who is retreating rapidly, apparently on Alba de Tormes, and we are pursuing him. I trust you will there proceed to conclude the operations concerted between us.

(Signed)

"WELLINGTON."

BULLETIN.

Issued at Salamanca the day after the Great Battle, and communicated by Sir Home Popham:—

"Field of Battle, near Salamanca, July 23, 1812.

"The French army under Marmont was completely defeated yesterday by that of the allies, under General Lord Wellington, Duke of Ciudad Rodrigo, in the fields of Salamanca, on the left of the Tormes, near the Arrapelo, after seven hours continual fighting, during which the allies displayed prodigies of valour.

"The enemy was dislodged from all his advantageous positions, and left all the artillery which he had posted on them. His loss in killed, wounded and prisoners cannot be less than ten or twelve thousand—four thousand prisoners have been brought in. General Bonnet is wounded, and a prisoner. Marmont retreated at night by Alba.

"The field of battle for two leagues is covered with dead bodies—Among them is the Colonel of the 101st regiment. The Eighth there is not great. The Portuguese loss but few, and the Spanish little trifling, in all not more than two thousand five hundred."

LONDON, July 30.

This day the Parliament was prorogued to the 15th November, previous to which the Lord Chancellor read the following Message from the Prince Regent.

MESSAGE.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

In terminating the business of the session, his Royal Highness has expressed his deep concern and sorrow at the continuance of the King's unfortunate indisposition.

While his Royal Highness also regrets the interruption in the public business, in consequence of an event which his Royal Highness must ever deplore, he has no more the zeal and affiduity with which you have discharged your arduous duties as deserving his warmest acknowledgements.

His Royal Highness has to express his thanks for the assurance you have given him, by which he has been enabled to continue in a vigorous manner his co-operations with the brave and loyal nations of the Peninsula. His Royal Highness cordially participates in your expression of his thanks for the gallantry and zeal displayed by Earl Wellington and the brave army under his command in the capture of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz.

His Royal Highness confidently trusts that the conspicuous talents of Earl Wellington, combined with the unabated zeal of the inhabitants of Spain and Portugal, will ultimately produce a termination of the conteft, confiftent with the beft interefts of Europe.

The renewal of the war in the North of Europe, affords additional proofs of the little reliance that can be placed upon the treaties obtained even by the moft abject fubmiffion to the uſurpation and tyranny of the French government.

His Royal Highness hopes, therefore, that you will enable him to add to Ruſſia, in her present conteft, that co-operation which may be confiftent with the engagements of his Royal Highness to other powers.

His Royal Highness views with regret, the hoſtile attitude all timely America towards this country. His Royal Highness is not without hopes, however, that relations of peace and amity between the two nations will be reſtored. But if America ſhall ſtill perſevere in her unwarrantable pretenſions, his Royal Highness fully relies in receiving that aſſiſtance from the liberality and wiſdom of Parliament which will enable him to maintain the dignity and beſt intereſts of the empire.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

His Royal Highneſs, while he expreſſes his thanks for the liberal ſupplies which you have voted for the ſervice of the year, laments the neceſſity of impoſing additional burdens; but he truſts that the application, in the proſecution of the preſent conteſt, will be attended with the happieſt reſults.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

His Royal Highneſs deeply laments the diſturbances that have taken place in ſome of the manufacturing diſtricts; but his Royal Highneſs acknowledges his deep ſenſe of the diligence with which you have inveſtigated the cauſes.

His Royal Highneſs alſo highly approves of the ſalutary meaſures which you have adopted in order to prevent the increaſe of theſe diſturbances, and to bring the offenders to juſtice.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

His Royal Highneſs truſts, that on your return to your ſeveral counties, you will inculcate obedience to the laws, and a due regard to that admirable conſtitution upon which the glory and the happineſs of the empire have ſo long & ſo ſucceſsfully depended.

We announced yeſterday that His Majeſty's ſhips Magnificent, Rota and Vanguard, had arrived at Plymouth, from the coaſt of Spain, which they left on Thurſday laſt, bringing a confirmation of Lord Wellington's victory. The ſhips of theſe veſſels ſtate that in the glorious affair of Salamanca, the enemy's artillery was carried by ſome deſperate charges. Our inimitable cavalry, who had excellent ground for their exertions, and bore down every thing oppoſed to them, like an overwhelming torrent. Towards the end of the affair, the enemy declined the combat in every part of the line, and ſought ſafety in retreat. The Spaniſh cavalry under Sanchez, came up to the ſeveral charges with great gallantry. In addition to what we have already ſtated reſpecting the evacuation of St. Andero by the enemy, we underſtand that a party of 70 French made over and fought the proteſtants of the Eighth. It was thought that many others diſperſed on various parts of the coaſt would gladly follow the example, to avoid being captured and delivered by the Guerillas.

BOSTON, September 18.

It is a fearful thing ſays the Alexandria Gazette, to "commit the cauſe to the GOD of HOSTS"—to come into action with clean hands!—Such was our taſkers at the commencement of this conteſt, to "keep the faſcination from the accurſed thing" into which we ſhould be plunged by an unnatural war with our own kindred, our own children and our own brothers and ſiſters. But to ſuch rulers what could avail the voice of reaſon or morality, when the Conſcript is goading behind, and "a goodly Babylonian garment, &

SATURDAY, October 17, 1812

A short Statement of the Victory obtained at Queenston.

On the 13th of this month a most glorious victory took place at Queenston over the enemy; landing with the flower of their army said to consist of about 1500 men they obtained a temporary, and but a temporary possession of that post. Our forces, though a handful, compared with those of the enemy, were not intimidated by numbers, but bravely resisted, like men who had a King and a Country to defend.

General Brock watchful, as he was brave, loon appeared in the midst of his faithful troops, ever obedient to his call, and whom he loved with the affection of a Father; but alas! whilst collecting, arranging, forming, and cheering his brave followers, that great commander gloriously fell when preparing for victory. " Push on brave York Volunteers," being then near him, they were the last words of the dying Hero.—Inhabitants of Upper Canada, in the Day of Battle remember BROCK.

Nor let us forget to lament the untimely fate of the young, the affectionate, and the brave Lieut. Col. John Macdonnel, who received a mortal wound about the same time with his beloved General—attached to him from affection, his constant follower in every danger, this amiable youth is now buried with him in the same grave.—

But let not our gratitude and praise be withheld from the living, many good, many brave do still remain to defend us.

Major General Sheaffe immediately after the death of M. General Brock succeeded to the command, and proved himself worthy to fill that important, tho' difficult and dangerous situation in which he was placed. Being reinforced by troops (including a body of Indians) from Fort George, General Sheaffe succeeded by a most judicious movement, in gaining the flank and rear of the enemy; by this time, succours having arrived from Chippawa, the General advanced with about seven hundred men in all, and after a most spirited and obstinate engagement, totally defeated the enemy.

Unable to resist or escape from the British arms, about 900 American furrendered prisoners of war the refidue of their army (perhaps with a few exceptions) was either killed or drowned in the river. It is fuppofed that we, including troops of every defcription, have loft about thirty men, and that there on our fide about fixty men wounded.

To mention thofe who have diftinguifhed themfelves on this great occafion, would be to repeat the name of every perfon who was in action. Suffice it to fay, that every one behaved in a manner worthy of the caufe for which he fought, and of the General under whom he ferved.

To GENERAL BROCK, A GARLAND.

O tell me, ye Spirits well vers'd in old ftory,
Wifhe ages equals this to the Britifh in glory?
Where'er they appear on the land or the ocean,
Their foes are beheld in a trembling commotion.
When our Nelsons and Moores, great props of their nations,
And by death Abercrombies were swep. from the ftation,
The fun rung a ditty with much exultation,
And thought to get clear of their pale confternation

How foolish the hope, now heroes were rifing,
To check in its budding their darkard rejoicing.
See Wellefley victorious, for new laurels glowing,
And near him behold gen'rous Grame of Balgowan

Let Vimeira, Bonaro, and proud Talavera,
Name da, Barrosa and red Albuera
Teach Frenchmen no longer their follies to fhout,
For the race of our heroes shall never run out.

Ah, Ah, cry the Freath these facts may be true,
But here with more cunning our aims we pursue,
We flatter, we swagger, we fawn, cog, and lie,
And tho' ftealing ourselves, we raise the first cry.

While their Heroes at home are oppofing the French
Well fhatters the Canada from them to wrench;
No troops have they ready our progress to ftop,
And their Chiefs are perhaps of a different crop

Thus runs provocation, to plunder John Bull
Wise Madison orders redoubtable Hull,
This measure he thinks will give Britain a fhock,
But in planning he makes no allowance for BROCK

This little mifake in his firft calculation
Soon turns to deftruction the wicked invafion;
For the Britifh affembling made Hull become scamper,
Who saw they were likely to give him a damper

The Freath are filled with moft gloomy emotion
To fight for Detroit they lose every notion;
But each to his quarter now turns in whisper'and a flow fhall we escape from this terrible BROCK

They hoift the White Flag with trembling fenfations,
For former demerits produce sad corrodings;
They yield, and our Chief gives immediate direction
Their effects and their persons to hold in protection

Thou, fixteenth of Auguft, fhall raise admiration,
And not be productive of proud emulation,
The Troops and Militia fhall ne'er be forgot,
Who fcars thince the number when marfhall'd BROCK.

When the trophies fhall reach our high-minded nation,
With transports they'll read the brilliant narration,
Whilft the Regent fhall quickly unlock
To fhower their rich treasures on gen'rous BROCK

The Wellefleys and Grames too famous in ftory,
Will hail our great Hero, their Partner in glory,
Delighting to add gallant BROCK to their numb
For Envy true merit dare never encumbet

To capture an army that counts three to one,
A fortress and ftore, hardly losing a man,
Will long be remember'd a capital ftroke
And quoted uniquely " THE GLORY OF BROCK

MR. EDITOR.

Pleafe infert the following wreath in tribute to the Memory of our late lamented Chieftain.

WHY dern usurper with insatiate fawn—
Seize on the Chief his Country ill could spare
Tha great Defender of our righteous cau e,
Tain country's weal his firft, his lafting care!

Tha firft of glories ftill the Warrior fo'd;
His breaft herein fhall ever hold dear,
Birth in the battles ranks he e'er aspir'd,
His generous bosom view'd no danger near!

Over fields of carnage long the Hero ftrode,
Nor sought a fame but such as virtue yields!
Tears cease to flow, now like a Demigod
He moves majeftic o'er Elyfian fields!

Him Heaven a while to grateful Britons lent
And bids but now for their third Loan strive,

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, Auguſt 4th.

The private letters from St. Petersburgh announce the capture of the Prince of Wirtemburgh, with 4000 of his troops. The people were full of confidence in the reſult of the war. The voluntary contributions had gone on with great liberality, and among others the following were officially announced: 150,000 ducats, and a large quantity of flour, from the Prince Surnom: three millions of rubles from the Counſellor Offoff; and from the imperial city of Moſcow, the noble and patriotic offering of an army of 80,000 men armed and equipped for the field. With this force, and this reſolution, we have no ſerious fear from the effect of the French attack; and can have little doubt, that, when the hour of ſtruggle fairly comes, it will be met gallantly. In the mean time, we have no knowledge that any thing, except affairs of poſts had occurred. The Ruſſian force in the neighbourhood of Riga was concentrating, and the Governor was making vigorous preparations for a ſiege, with the aſſiſtance of the Britiſh officers in the harbour; but, to our lateſt intelligence, no corps of the enemy had appeared in ſufficient ſtrength to authenticate the report of a battle. The army under Macdonald according to the moſt recent accounts which had reached the Town, was advancing towards Riga, and the Ruſſians would probably fight him before he began the ſiege.

We are glad to learn that the vintage of Portugal is of greater promiſe than it has been for the laſt thirty years, and the corn crop is likely to be equally abundant. The Inhabitants will enjoy the advantage of being this year able to reap it in ſecurity.

Auguſt 4.—Yeſterday Admiral Sir John Warren arrived in town from his reſidence at Nottingham, and had a long conference with Lord Melville at the Admiralty. This gallant officer has been appointed commander of the ſquadron which is to ſail immediately for the coaſt of America.

The Prince of Wales, 98 guns; San Domingo, 74; Juno, 38; Porcupine, 24; Mutine and Curlew, ſloops of war, are all ordered to be fitted for foreign ſervice, at Portſmouth, with all poſſible expedition. They are ſuppoſed to be deſtined for the American ſeas.

Strong reinforcements continue to be ſent off to our Weſt India iſlands, in the event of any ſudden enterprize being undertaken by the Americans. Several tranſports have been ordered round to the iſle of Wight to receive theſe reinforcements on board, and will ſail the inſtant the men are embarked.

Government has iſſued the following official communication on the ſubject of American Licences:

"All licences granted to American veſſels muſt be exhibited to the Marſhal of the Admiralty Court, in Doctor's Commons, to be endorſed by him before the veſſel will be permitted to depart.

"The veſſels at the out ports cannot depart until the licences have been endorſed by the Marſhal, and muſt be ſent to London for that purpoſe, and in time to be returned to allow veſſels to depart before the 15th of Auguſt."

GENERAL BALLESTEROS.

This intereſting Spaniſh General entered Malaga the 14th July, the French having evacuated it, and continued there until the 16th, when he was quartered near Cartouna. The French General Leval had previouſly made a demonſtration of retreating to Beville to join Soult, when he ſuddenly took the direction of Gibraltar, and by forced marches appeared with 6 or 700 foot and 3 or 4 horſe near St. Roche, and effectually cut off General Balleſteros's communication with Gibraltar. The latter has about 7 or 800 good troops with him, but is hemmed in by 18000 French; and will have to exerciſe great talents to extricate himſelf.

AMERICA.

The declaration of war by America against Great Britain, brought from Halifax by the Julius ... up of war, excited considerable sensation in this town yesterday, among all classes of merchants; but the intelligence neither affected the funds nor American produce.

Yesterday a flotilla of American vessels cleared out or otherwise, in the nature of an embargo, was ordered, in consequence, as we understand, of a representation from Boston to the House, recommending to ... Ministers such a measure.

July 31.—Government at a late hour yesterday, came to the resolution of issuing orders and instructions to all the respective commanders in Chief, at home and abroad, to detain and send in all American vessels whatever. An embargo was laid this morning upon all American vessels in our ports.

We understand that licences are to be issued to permit neutral vessels, with provisions, to proceed from the United States to the ports of Cadiz and Lisbon, whether on American account or otherwise.

August 7.—Some particulars which have transpired through the medium of the Malta mail, which arrived yesterday, incline us to think that the grand expedition lately collected in the Mediterranean, is not destined for Catalonia in the first instance.—Toulon, and the environs of Cadiz have been both mentioned as objects of attack; at the latter place and French continue to annoy the inhabitants most formidably by means of their new invented shells.

The French General Leval with 6000 infantry and 600 horse, was in sight of Gibraltar on the 22d ult. with the view of making a desperate effort to cut off the communication between Gibraltar and Malta. In this case Ballasteros would be liable to a great interruption in his further progress along the shore of Grenada.

A letter dated Castro, August 1, from a Military Officer of distinction, attached to the expedition under Sir Hope Popham, has the following postscript:—

"You have heard of Lord Wellington's victory. We have had a Te Deum and a feu de joie here on the occasion this day. The Spaniards are all exultation. Lord Wellington, in addition to his present Spanish title of Duke of Ciudad Rodrigo, should have the high dignity of Principe de la Guerra, in contradiction to Godoy's title of Principe de la Paz. This would be no much the more just and acceptable, as Lord Wellington has opened a direct road to the deliverance of Spain by his victories, and above all, by this last and greatest: while Godoy paved the way for its subjugation by his peace, which was made the ground of his creation."

At last, notwithstanding all our wishes to maintain peace, we witnessed an incessant repetition of open outrages, which compelled us to arm and to assemble our troops; though still, while we could flatter ourselves with the hope of reconciliation, we remained within the confines of our empire, and without violating peace, were prepared for defence. All these moderate and pacific measures could not lecure to us the tranquility of which we were desirous. The French Emperor, by an attack upon our troops at Kowno, has already commenced war, and consequently nothing further remains for us, but, while we invoke the aid of the Sovereign of the Universe, he Author and Defender of Truth, to place our force in opposition to the force of the enemy. DEMOCRATIC PATRIOTISM.

The Governor of the State of Virginia,

To the Patriotic Citizens of Richmond!

The character of your country has received a wound in the surrender of General Hull! Our brethren of the Frontier are exposed to the tomahawk of the Savage. A prompt exertion must be made to cure the one and repel the other. Fifteen hundred Virginians are called upon to unite with the Army of the West in the holy cause of their country. (for whose accommodation within four days) two hundred and fifty tents and fifteen hundred knapsacks are wanting. To your patriotism and particularly to that of the Ladies, I appeal and ask for all the aid you can furnish to further their completion.

Those who are willing to promote this desirable object, will signify to me without a moment's delay, the number of hands they can furnish. Compensation will be made to those who wish it. Every room in the Capitol not otherwise engaged, will be opened for the accommodation of those who may attend. Such a prefet continuing at home will have their portions of work sent to them.

All persons conversant with the cutting and making Tents will confer a favor by attending and rendering their aid.

CONSCRIPTS.

The first detachment from our militia received orders, the day after election, to prepare for marching—and they have since marched.

Had these Conscripts been called for one day, or one week sooner, it is believed it would have opened some blind eyes, and unfixed some deaf ears; and that it would have completely turned the tables on the advocates of war. This evil was toreseen and prudently avoided. For as D. Shaw said, last fall, they were trembling for their cause. "Herod was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him."

But because their leaders carefully kept the fuspect out of sight till after election, they hollered themselves to be decei ved—they began to flatter themselves, that they should not be called on to march—that bracing was only to try their spunk—and that volunteering was only for fun.

Election is over—and they have marched for Canada!—The most of them, indeed, with heavy hearts;—especially since they begin to believe in Hull's disaffection;—and they now begin to inquire, very seriously, whether "the Constitution says any thing about the militia's marching into Canada!"

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1812.

Major General SHEAFFE, arrived here on the night of the 2d Instant, to take the Oaths of Office as President, and the following ADDRESSES were presented to him—the first by the Honble. the Executive Council, and the second by a deputation for the purpose.

To Major-General SHEAFFE, Commanding His Majesty's Forces in Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

SIR,

WE His Majesty's Executive Council of Upper Canada, take the earliest opportunity of congratulating you on the Victory obtained at Queenston by His Majesty's Arms. Called upon to take the Supreme Command, by the most afflicting and melancholy event, the happy effect of the coolness, intrepidity and judgment which you displayed in that eminent situation, the Inhabitants of this Province do now feel, and will ever most gratefully remember. —Such a commencement, leads us to look to the future with confidence and hope, and to counsider what is past, as but a presage of what is to come.

But while thus thankful for the mercies which it has pleased Providence to bestow; we should be wanting in our duty to the Province, to ourselves, and to you, if we did not check a Tear over the Ashes of our late much lamented Commander —Words cannot express what we feel —His Bravery in the field as a General—Gentleness, Humanity and Kindness in private Life; and, above all, the love of his King and his Country, were the distinguishing marks of his Character. —May Britain never want such Defenders, and may we in our respective stations, ever profit by such an Example.

We pow, under Providence, look up to you, Sir, for protection, hoping that by your wise and vigorous efforts, we may be enabled finally to result and triumph over our enemies.

THOS. SCOTT.

To which His Honor was pleased to make the following Reply:

Gentlemen of the Honorable the Executive Council.

PLEASE to accept my warmest thanks for this Address—the Victory that has recently crowned our efforts, is, under Providence, chiefly to be ascribed to the zeal, valour, and good conduct of the Troops of every description, at the head of which I was placed by an event that we cannot too much deplore. —Many consecutive years the professional companion of my predecessor, no one can better know than myself, the eminent, as well as engaging qualities that so justly entitled him to the tribute of public regret, and of private sorrow —his ability, his energy of character, his ardent Zeal for His Majesty's Service, and for the public good, peculiarly fitted him as such a person at this, for the arduous situation which he filled—that it has devolved on me, but makes me more poignantly feel the twofold loss that is inflicted: —— we will be my endeavour to discharge the duties thus assigned to me, we look with zeal and fidelity, and I trust, that the Almighty disposer of events will look down with an eye of favour, on our exertions for the defence of this Province, and crown them with success.

A TRIBUTE OF PRAISE.

Which the most poignant grief is exerting every bosom and affecting every heart with real anguish, for the great public loss we all have too much cause to deplore—let the effusion of an individual be poured out in lamenting that he can now no longer be blest with observing a companion of so much manly worth. To Dignity of character, and long tried Heroic valour, was added an unabated Zeal for his Country's cause.

His patience, his fortitude and determined, unabated perseverance in surmounting those innumerable difficulties, which, in a very short period of time, arose to quick succession in a tumultuous manner, as it were, to impede his career in the path of glory, have we also witnessed with admiration! Neither must we silently pass over the ardour of his tried friend, his real aid, the judicious and brave LT. COL. The golden opportunity attempting such virtues, though, alas but for a season, must excite in our minds as it has done in the bosom of the Gallant, the aspiring youth M'DONELL, (who now no more) to aim with him at that meed so ardently, & repeatedly given reminiscent to ancient RANGS.

To His Honor ROGER HALE SHEAFFE, Preside... Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces within the same.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOR,

WE, the Magistrates and Inhabitants of the Town of York, beg leave to condole with your Honor on the Death of our most Gallant and beloved Commander General BROCK.——We are sensible that the feelings of private friendship unite with the Public loss in suggesting your Honor's grief on this unfortunate event. Yet the sorrow universally manifested, must afford your Honor a melancholy pleasure, because it is a pledge of the excellent dispositions of those whom your Honor is now called upon to command

But while we lament that the Day of Battle was closed on its commencement, we should be most ungrateful to Providence, as well as to your Honor, were we not to confess with exultation, that it was a joyful day for Upper Canada, and glorious to the British Name

How fortunate for us that your Honor was near to assume the Command, and by your consummate skill to change a partial defeat into the most brilliant victory

Permit us to congratulate your Honor on entering upon the Civil Administration, to declare our firmest confidence in your wisdom and valour, and our determination to support your exertions in defence of our King, our Laws and Liberties, to the utmost of our power.

It is a blessing for which we can never be sufficiently thankful, that at such a moment, the Person who succeeds to the Command of the Forces and the Government of the Province, should be so intimately acquainted with our local situation, and commence with an exploit that covers him with glory.

To which His Honor was pleased to make the following Reply.

Gentlemen, Inhabitants of York and its Vicinity.

IT is with unmingled emotions of sorrow, and of pride, that I receive your affecting Address — with you I grieve that the Province has lost at such a period, a Chief who had ever in confidence by the wisdom, energy, and success with which he had employed the means placed at his disposal for its defence, and I cannot but feel proud that in being elevated to the situation which he so ably filled, that I am assured of succeeding, too, to the possession of that confidence — my best efforts will not be wanting to justify it be my fate!" It is human nature, and I cling to it! After what I have written, you will understand that an invasion is to take place.—Every thing is in preparation for crossing at Queenston to take the enemy's strong place on the Hill and then to proceed to Fort George; it is to take place to-night and it is now three o'clock; I have but little time from preparing the men to devote to writing—an attempt was made night before last—all the Regulars from the Garrison marched up to the Camp at Lewistown with an idea of crossing, but it was defeated in consequence of trusting to a Militia Lieut. to bring a boat loaded with oars for to row the other boats across.—A part of the United S. Troops were detached in the morning in order to prepare for crossing, and the rest were marched up after 12 o'clock P. M.—it had been raining during the afternoon, and the roads were very bad and the night very dark, and the rain continued to pour down hard and cold, the Troops suffered—this I witnessed from being placed to bring up the rear, where all that had been sick would fall back when we arrived at Lewistown—One mile from the Camp we met our fellow soldiers that marched in the morning just marching down to the river to cross—it was intended for them to cross and us to follow and support them.—We built up a fire to warm our soldiers expecting to hear from the party that crossed about day, then to cross immediately; but before that time the unfortunate news came that they were unable to cross—we immediately returned to the Garrison. Had it not been for one man's negligence it is probable this would have been written from Canada or not at all.——My dear friend you retort my words in such a manner as almost, to me, makes my character appear under the form of a boaster—character I so heartily detest, that I cannot reconcile myself to the idea of having any part of it attached to me.—No, my dear Seneca, altho' I have endeavoured to fortify my mind so as to be able to act with courage and resolution, and do honor to myself, family, friends and country; yet do not think I wish to have the circumstance of meeting danger with perfect indifference.—I cannot refrain from feeling melancholy at the idea of seeing so many brave spirits bleed; but this night we try it.—You labour under a great mistake respecting the number of troops here—there are not five thousand on the lines.—One thousand cross to-night.—On Saturday last a considerable of an action took place at Black Rock, about Defeat of the French in Russia.

For the recent forcefs obtained against the Enemy, you are indebted to the loyal and brave spirit of the Militia, aided by the valour of His Majesty's Troops and of the auxiliary Indians, from the future exertions of which the most fortunate results to this Province may be anticipated.

LONDON, August 21.

We can now account for the delay of the transmission of French Bulletins to this Country. The last received was dated on the 25th of last month. The French have had no favorable intelligence to announce; Since the date of the last Bulletin, they have been worsted in every encounter with the Russians.

On the 25th ultimo, they attacked Bagation's rear guard, but were repulsed with the loss of 8000 men.

On the same day they attacked the main Russian Army, but were defeated with the loss of 6000 men.

On the 30th and 31st, Oudinot attacked the Russians, but was beat with great slaughter, having 5000 killed and wounded, 3000 taken prisoners, besides baggage and ammunition. This is a most favorable outset.

"GOTTENBURGH, Aug. 15.

"On the 25th ult. the French attacked the advanced guard of General Bagration, but were driven back with the loss of 8000 men. On the same day the main Russian army was attacked and equally successful, the French being repulsed with the loss of 6000 men. On the 30th and 31st ult. a French corps, under the command of Oudinot, attacked the Russians under the command of General Oiterman, and were repulsed with great slaughter, leaving 3000 prisoners, 2 pieces of cannon, and a great quantity of baggage: their loss is killed is estimated at 5000 men.

"The greatest activity prevails in preparing the intended expedition; its destination is supposed to be Holstein, Pomerania, or some part of the Prussian Waste."

The above is from Gottenburgh papers.

The official accounts are of the most flattering nature. Prince Bragation having joined the main army, the whole were retiring in the greatest order to Smolensky; in addition to Bagation's success, General Barklay de Tolli had gained advantages over Davoust; and Oudinot's corps having advanced beyond the Dwina, Gen Wittgenstein had attacked and completely defeated him, and taken above 3000 prisoners, and driven him back above 60 miles.

At the departure of the courier, the Russians had made 3000 prisoners and taken two pieces of cannon, and were continuing in pursuit of the enemy.

There had been a mutiny among the seamen on board the French fleet at Toulon, which was attributed to the Italian sailors. It seems they intended to carry off some of the ships. One ship of the line was lost in consequence of the disturbance, and 4 or 500 seamen escaped to the English. Since then the ships at Toulon have been dismantled.

A Portuguese paper brought by this vessel is said to contain the particulars of Lord Wellington's continued success.

A NECESSARY HINT TO THE LADIES.

The Muse's tranquil shades beneath,
From busy theme [illegible], I breathe,
No more the fate [illegible] swear to wear,
Dear, lovely Woman claims my verse.
Ye fair, who beauty justly prize,
And in the Mirror turn your eyes,
With glowing pleasure ev'ry hour,
Exulting in your Sov'reign power,
To triumph in the vermeil glow,
That youth and happy days bestow;
To practise o'er to-morrows wiles
Of radiant looks and pensive smiles:
To teach the ringlets where to play,
That o'er the lovely forehead stray,
The braid coronal proudly deck,
Or lightly shade the snowy neck?
The Virgin—but, beware
My Muse [illegible] her description dare,
With bold unhallow'd gaze, to rove
Beneath the mystic veil of love.
Ye Maids, my serious tale attend,
And own the poet for your friend:
What, though you prize in show and dressing,
A husband's a substantial blessing.
Near Kendall, in a neat abode,
Sequester'd from the dusty road
There liv'd—I do not exactly know
How many years it was ago,
A widow, who, at fifty, found
Old age upon her gaining ground;
Her sight grew dim; from day to day,
She felt her appetite decay;
A whizzing deafness stopt her ears;
Yet still she struggled with her fears;
But, when a palsy seiz'd her tongue,
A weight upon her spirits hung,
For she was sure that fatal sign
Foretold a woman's last decline!
Fearing to leave alone her daughter,
To wed she earnestly besought her.
The lovely Dora, young and gay,
In blooming beauty's aperture May,
While ev'ry morn bestow'd a flower,
Could, at a glance, their traits discover.
Instructed, in Lavater's School,
To love and hate by settled rule,
She, by their features, could detect
Each hypocrite of ev'ry sect;
By form of eye brows could foretell,
Who'd act the husband ill or well;
In broad brow'd countenance could find
The symbol of an empty mind;
In deep blue eye and pointed chin,
Could reckon ev'ry spendthrift sin;
And prove the owner void of grace,
By aid of his immortal face;
Red hair a cruel Soul display'd;
The dusky hue, a knave betray'd;
A thrifty suitor woo'd her pelf;
The handsome, only liv'd himself;
The vice of play in this she fear'd,
Too light and fickle that appear'd;
This silent to person; that too frail;
An income or a nose too small;
In chess, or crimes like these, detected,
Her lovers were with scorn rejected.
The Matron and experience'd dame,
Would strongly her daughter blame?
And quaver out some ancient saying,
"The danger of a maid's delaying?"
Then warmly would the matter push,
"What signifies a bird in bush?
"One caught—good woman understand
"Is worth a hundred out of hand!"
"Dear Dora cry'd one day she told
"Unto the Hedge in yonder mead,
The straightest switch from thence to chuse
But all your best discretion use;
At yonder Elm your search commence,
Success will best approve your sense;
Reject not without hesitation,
And chuse with due deliberation;
For, mark me, where you once refuse,
You must not turn again to chuse."
The maid reply'd "By yonder stile
I'll go and stay no more a while,
You may fix out my Tea to-coal;
Thank Heav'n! I'm not so great a fool
Nor yet, I think, so very blind,
But what you want I'll quickly find."
Then, breathing Sweets, with spirits gay,
Light o'er the turf the nymph away,
Soon pass'd the stile, the Elm beside,
A tall, straight switch at once she spied;
She stretch'd her hand but, hesitating,
And unwisely deliberating,
The* maid averse to loiter long,
"To chuse so quickly might be wrong:
Mamma was fond her flay might fret her
But further on she saw a better,
To that she flew but found when near
It did not quite so straight appear:
One, farther still, she saw and then
She found herself deceived again.
"I was odd but with more crooked bent
They grew, the farther on the went:
At ev'ry step, now, more perplex'd,
She oft look'd back asham'd and vex'd,
Through apprehension of the worst,
Regretting that she left the first;
And, chusing none, when all were pass'd
Return'd without a switch at last.
Ye Maids! now her you was cold!
And sick Mamma ev'n ill could scold;
But having fully pass'd her view,
This moral from the fact she drew:
"There is a tide—I hate delays—
"In Man affects or Maiden's days—
"He might have said in Woman's too—
"And, if he had 'twere full as true—
"That should be taken at the flood,
"Or neither ev'r come to good.
"Dear Dora, as you could not find
"In you a switch to please your mind,
"So, I'm afraid, your curious eye
"May pass the crowd of lovers by,
"Remember youth not long will tarry,
"And you may one day wish to marry,
"You then may for a husband sigh,
"When maids turn will pass you by.
She cease'd the maid with frowns replied—
The wise old dame soon after dy'd.
The years roll'd on; Dorinda, Gay,
In pleasure laugh'd the years away;
Still graver grown and somewhat mellow,
She vow'd to please some charming fellow;
At forty, rather in a hafte,
Resolv'd no more her youth to waste;
The tender ironick sex's her head,
And she was fix'd at once to wed;
But, strange alas no lover offer'd,
Where crowds to all their Vows had proffer'd.
The years roll'd on, Dorinda sad,
With hope delay'd grew almost mad:
Dame scandal whisper'd that she swore
To trust Lavater's rules no more.
Paints, Pastes, Powders, Cosmetics,
She bounty us'd her charms to fix;
Call'd ev'ry fashion to her aid,
And, ev'ry rage of mode display'd;
But ne'er with nature strove in vain,
Though all disguise the fact was plain,
This dreadful truth her mirror told,
"You once were young you now are old."
Time thins her bloom, and in defpair,
She saw him thin her changing hair;
Grown fretful, pale, and discontented,
She bitterly the past repented,
And having cost her squeamish pride,
To Footman John became a bride;
Oh think ye fair when youth is gone
What poor old maids endure at last;
Neglect not then in beauty's prime,
To chuse a proper switch in time.

* Milton and Shakespear is a proof that the old Lady's memory has, in some degree participated in the failure of her other powers.

GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1812.

We understand by Letters of good authority from Niagara, that on the morning of the 28th ult. about 2 o'clock, the Enemy effected a landing opposite to ——— Island, below Fort Erie, that in the dark they got possession of a Battery and spiked an 18 pounder.

Before a reinforcement could arrive, Lieutenant King who commanded the Royal Artillery in that quarter, was wounded and made Prisoner, as also thirty-six Men of the 49th and Militia.—At the first alarm, reinforcements from all quarters proceeded to the spot with the utmost alacrity, and at day break Lieut. Col. Bishop who commands in that District, found himself supported by a detachment of 80 men of the 49th Regiment under Major Ormsby from Fort Erie, a body of Indians under Major Givens, a detachment of the Norfolk Militia under Capt Bostwick, and several Companies of the Lincoln Militia under Major Hatt, and soon after a further reinforcement of Lincoln Militia under Lieut. Colonel Clark; when the enemy retired in confusion, having dismounted two pieces of Field Artillery, burned two or three Houses and leaving prisoners with us, Capt. King, [illegible]. D. C. to the American Commander in Chief and about 40 men.——The loss on their side is computed at about 120 men, on ours at 80 of all descriptions killed, wounded and missing

It appears that a second Division of the Enemy made a show of landing the same day, but were repulsed and returned with some loss to their own shore. During that and the next day, the Batteries and Guns were refitted and the whole line put in a perfect state of defence.—As a last effort General Smyth the American Commander in Chief of the Army of the Lake, embarked in 118 Boats, his whole force consisting of 6000 men, in whose presence he summoned Fort Erie to surrender, but not receiving the desired answer, he relanded his Troops on their own shore. This measure is reported to have been attended with consequences fatal to his army. The whole of his Militia Volunteers destroyed their ammunition and disembodied themselves. The Regular Troops became clamorous, and it is confidently asserted, fired upon their General and wounded his Aid de-Camp; that in the confusion which ensued, several Houses were destroyed in the village of Buffaloe, and that in short his army was completely disorganized.

It must afford infinite satisfaction to every Loyal Bosom, that on every occasion, the Militia of the Province has distinguished itself with an alacrity and spirit worthy of Veteran Troops.—Indeed the Officers Commanding at the various points assailed by the Enemy on the Lines between Fort Erie and Fort George, at Kingston and Johnstown, uniformly testify to this gratifying truth.

Such is the advantage of a good cause,—ours animates all classes with alacrity zeal and courage, the Enemy's, disgusts their Militia and unnerves their Regular Force.

The Editor cannot forbear, in this last instance, where a new opportunity was afforded our Militia of evincing afresh, their Loyal Heroism—to congratulate his readers and his fellow subjects on the occasion.——The brief Address of the immortal Nelson to his Gallant Sailors, seems acted upon in this Province, and every man (as was confidently expected) does his DUTY.

Gen. HULL'S Official Account.

From the National Intelligencer of Saturday 19th Septr.

Yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Lieut. Anderson of the United States Army, reached this city, bearer of despatches from Brig. Gen. Wm. Hull, to the department of War, of which the following copies have been detained for publication;

Montreal, 8th Septr. 1812.

SIR,

The enclosed despatches was prepared on my arrival at Fort George, and it was my intention to have forwarded it from that place by Major Witherell, of the Michigan Volunteers. I made application to the Commanding Officer, of that post, and was refused; he stating that he was not authorized, and General Brock was then at York. We were immediately embarked for this place, and Major Witherell obtained liberty at Kingston to go home on parole.

This is the first opportunity I have had to forward the despatches.

The fourth United States' Regiment is destined for Quebec, with a part of the 18. —The whole consist of a little over three hundred.

Sir George Prevost, without any request on my part, has offered to take my parole, and permit me to proceed to the States.

Lieut. Anderson, of the 8th Regiment is the bearer of my despatches. He was formerly a Lieut. in the Artillery, and resigned his Commission on account of his being appointed Marshal of the Territory of Michigan. During the campaign he has had a command in the Artillery; and I recommend him to you as a valuable officer.

He is particularly acquainted with the state of things previous and at the time the capitulation took place. He will be able to give you correct information on any point, about which you may think proper to enquire.

I am, very respectfully, your most obd't servant,
W. HULL.

M. N. Wm. EUSTIS,
Sec'y of the War Department.

Fort George, August 26, 1812.

SIR,

Enclosed are the articles of capitulation, by which the Fort of Detroit has been surrendered to Major General Brock, commanding his Britannic Majesty's forces in Upper Canada, and by which the troops have become prisoners of War. My situation at present forbids me from detailing the particular causes which have led to this unfortunate event. I will, however, generally observe, that after the surrender of Michilimackinac, almost every tribe and nation of Indians, excepting a part of the Miamies and Delewares, north from beyond Lake Superior, west from beyond the Mississippi, south from Ohio and Wabash, and east from every part of Upper Canada, and from all the intermediate country, joined in open hostility under the British standard, against the army I commanded, contrary to the most solemn assurances of a large portion of them to remain neutral; even the Ottawa Chiefs from Arbercroich, who formed the delegation at Washington, the last Summer, in whose friendship I know you had great confidence, are among the hostile tribes, and several of them distinguished leaders. Among the vast number of chiefs who led the hostile bands, Tecumseh, Maxplot, Logan, Walk in the water Split log, &c. are considered the principals.—This numerous assemblage of savages, under the entire influence and direction of the British commander, enabled him totally to obstruct the only communication which I had with my country. The communication had been opened from the settlements in the State of Ohio, two hundred miles through a wilderness, by the fatigues of the army, which I marched to the frontier of Detroit. The body of the Lake being commanded by the British armed ships, and the shores and rivers by gunboats, the army was totally deprived of all communication by water. On this extensive road it depended for transportation of provisions, military stores, medicine, clothing, and every other supply, on pack horses—all its operations were successful until the arrival at Detroit, and in a few days it passed into the enemy's country, and all opposition seemed to fall before it. One month it remained in possession of this country, and it was fed from its resources. In different directions, detachments penetrated fifty miles into the settled part of the Province, and the inhabitants seemed satisfied with the change of situation, which appeared to be taking place—the Militia from Amherstburg were daily deserting, and the whole country, under the controul of the army was looking for protection. The Indians in general at first appeared to be neutralized, and determined to take no part in the contest. The fort of Amherstburg was eighteen miles below my encampment. Not a single cannon or mortar was on wheel suitable to carry before that place. I consulted my officers, whether it was expedient to make an attempt on it with the bayonet alone, without cannon, to make a break in the first instance. The council I called was of opinion it was not. The greatest industry was exerted in making preparation, and it was not until the 7th of August that two 24 pounders, and three howitzers were prepared. It was then my intention to have proceeded on the enterprize. While the operations of the army were delayed by these preparations, the clouds of adversity had been for some time and seemed still thickly to be gathering around me. The surrender of Michilimackinac opened the northern hives of Indians, and they were swarming down in every direction. Reinforcements from Niagara had arrived at Amherstburg under the command of Colonel Proctor. The desertion of the militia ceased. Besides the reinforcement that came by water, I received information of a very large number under the command of Major Chambers, on the river La Trench, with four field pieces, and collecting the militia on his route, evidently designed for Amherstburg; and had in addition to this combination and encrease of force, contrary to all my expectations, Wandots, Chippawas, Ottowas, Pottawatamies, Munsees, Delewares, &c. with whom I had the most friendly intercourse, at once pulled over to Amherstburg, and accepted the tomahawk and scalping knife. There being now a vast number of Indians at the British post, they were sent to the river Heron, Brownstown, and Maruseeg—to intercept my communication. To open this communication, I detached Maj. Vanhorne of the Ohio Volunteers with two hundred men to proceed as far as the river Raisin, under an expectation he would be met by Capt. Brush with one hundred and fifty men, volunteers from the State of Ohio, and a quantity of provision for the army.—An ambuscade was formed at Brownstown, and Maj. Vanhorne's detachment defeated and returned to camp without effecting the object of the expedition.

In my letter of the 7 h inst. you have the particulars of that transaction, with a return of killed and wounded. Under this sudden and unexpected change of things, and having received an express from Gen. Hull, commanding on the Niagara river, by which it appeared that there was no prospect of any co-operation from that quarter, and that two senior officers of artillery having stated to me an opinion that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to pass the Turkey river and river Aux Canard, with the 24 pounders, and that they could not be transported by water, as the Queen Charlotte, which carried eighteen 24 pounders, lay in the river Detroit above the mouth of the river Aux Cannard; and as it appeared necessary to open the communication to the river Raisin and the Miami, I found myself compelled to suspend the operations against Amherstburg, and concentrate the main force of the army at Detroit. Fully intending at that time, after the communication was open, to cross the river, and pursue the object at Amherstburg, and strongly desirous of continuing protection to a very large number of inhabitants of Upper Canada, who had voluntarily accepted it under my Proclamation, I established a fortress on the banks of the river, a little below Detroit, calculated for a garrison of three hundred men. On the evening of the 7 h, and morning of the 8th inst. the army, excepting the garrison of 250 infantry, a corps of artillerists, all under the command of Major Denny of the Ohio volunteers, re crossed the river, and encamped at Detroit. In pursuance of the object of opening the communication, on which I considered the existence of the army depending, a detachment of six hundred men, under the command of Lieut. Col. Miller, was immediately ordered.—Early in the morning of the 9th, this detachment, and the memorable battle which was fought at Maguago, which reflects the highest honor on the American arms, I refer you to my letter of the 13th August, instant, a duplicate of which is enclosed, marked G. Nothing, however but honor was acquired by this victory; and it is a painful consideration, that the blood of twenty five gallant men could only open the communication as far as the point of their bayonets extended. The necessity of the sick and wounded, and a very severe storm of rain, rendered their return to camp indispensibly necessary for their own comfort. Capt. Bruth, with his small detachment, and the provisions being still at the river Raisin, and in a situation to be destroyed by the Savages, on the 13 h inst. in the evening, I permitted Colonels M'Arthur and Cass to select from their regiment 400 of their most effective men, and proceed an upper route through the woods which I had sent an express to Capt. Brush to take, and has directed the militia of the river Raisin to accompany him as a reinforcement. The force of the enemy continually encreasing, and the necessity of opening the communication, and acting on the defensive, becoming more apparent, I had previous to detaching Colonels M'Arthur and Cass on the 11th inst. evacuated and destroyed the fort on the opposite bank. On the 13th inst. in the evening, General Brock arrived at Amherstburg about the hour Colonels M'Arthur and Cass marched, of which, at that time, I had received no information. On the 15th I received a summons from him to surrender fort Detroit, of which the paper marked A is a copy. My answer is marked B. At this time I had received no information from Colonels M'Arthur and Cass. An express was immediately sent strongly escorted with orders for them to return. On the 15th, as soon as General Brock received my letter, his batteries opened on the town and fort, and continued until evening. In the evening all the British ships of war came nearly as far up the river as Bloudwick three miles below Detroit. At day light on the 16 h (at which time I had received no information from Colonels M'Arthur and Cass, my expresses, sent the evening before, and in the night, having been prevented from passing the numerous bodies of Indians) the cannonade recommenced, and in a short time I received information that the British army and Indians, were landing below the Spring Wells, under the cover of their ships of war. At this time the whole effective force at my disposal at Detroit, did not exceed 800 men. Being new troops, and unaccustomed to a camp life; having performed a laborous march; having been engaged in a number of battles and skirmishes, in which many had fallen, and more had received wounds, in addition to which a large number being sick, and unprovided with medicine, and the comforts necessary for their situation, are the general causes by which the strength of the army was thus reduced. The fort at this time was filled with women, children and the old and decrepid people of the town and country; they were unsafe in the town, as it was entirely open and exposed to the enemy's batteries. Back of the fort, above or below it, there was no safety for them on account of the Indians. In the first instance the enemy's fire was principally directed against our batteries; towards the close, it was directed against the fort alone, and almost every shot and shell had their effect.

It now became necessary either to fight the enemy in the field; collect the whole force in the fort; or propose terms of capitulation. I could not have carried in to the field more than 600 men, and left any adequate force in the fort. There were landed at that time of the enemy, a regular force of much more than that number, & twice the number of Indians. Considering this great inequality of force, I did not think it expedient to adopt the first measure. The second must have been attended with a great sacrifice of blood, and no possible advantage, because the conteft could not be open sustained more than a day for the want of powder, and but a very few days for the want of provisions. In addition to this, Colonels M'Arthur and Cass would have been in a most hazardous situation. I feared nothing but the last alternative. I have dared to adopt it, I well knew the high responsibility of the measure, and I take the whole of it on myself. It was dictated by a sense of duty and a full conviction of its expediency. The bands of savages which had then joined the British force were numerous beyond any former example. Their numbers have since encreased, and the history of the barbarians of the north of Europe does not furnish examples of more greedy violence than these savages have exhibited. A large portion of the gallant officers and men I commanded would cheerfully have contested until the last cartridge had been expended, and the bayonets worn to the sockets. I could not consent to the useless sacrifice of such brave men, when I knew it was impossible for me to sustain my situation. It was impossible in the nature of things that an army could have been furnished with the necessary supplies of provisions, military stores, clothing and comforts for the sick, on pack horles, through the wilderness of 200 miles filled with hostile savages. It was impossible, sir, that this little army, worn down by fatigues, by sickness, by wounds and deaths could have fupported itself not only against the collected force of all the northern nations of Indians; but against the United strength of Upper Canada, whose population consists of more than twenty times the number contained in the territory of Michigan, aided by the principal part of the regular forces in the Province and the wealth and influence of the North West and other trading establishments among the Indians, which have in their employment and under their entire controul more than 2000 white men.—Before I close this despatch it is a duty I owe my respectable allociates in command, Colonels M'Arthur, Finley, Cass, and Lieut. Colonel Miller, to express my obligations to them for the prompt and judicious manner they have performed their respective duties. If aught has taken place during the campaign which is honorable to the army, those officers are entitled to a large share of it. If the last act should be disapproved, no part of the censure belongs to them. I have likewise to express my obligation to Gen. Taylor, who has performed the duty of Quarter-Master General, for his great exertions in procuring every thing in his department which was possible to furnish for convenience of the army; likewise to Brigade Major Jessup for the correct and punctual manner in which he has discharged his duty; and to the army generally for their exertion, and the zeal they have manifested for the public interest.

The death of Dr. Foster soon after he arrived at Detroit was a severe misfortune to the army; it was ensreased by the capture of the Cheshage packet, by which the medicine and hospital stores were lost. He was commencing the best arrangements in the department of which he was the principal with the very small means he possessed. I was likewise deprived of the necessary services of Captain Partridge by sickness, the only officer of the corps of engineers attached to the army. All the officers and men have gone to their respective homes, excepting the 4th United States' regiment, and a small part of the 1st. and Captain Dyson's company of artillery.

Captain Dyson's company was left at Amherstburg, and the others are in the proportions—they amount to about three hundred and forty. I have only to solicit an investigation of my conduct as early as my situation, and the state of things will admit; and to add the further request, that the Government will not be unmindful of my associates in captivity, and the families of those brave men who have fallen in the contest.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your most obedient servant.

W. HULL, Brig. Gen.
Commanding the North Western Army of the U. States.

Hon. W. EUSTIS, &c. &c.

Letter of Col. CASS, of the Army late under the command of Brigadier General Hull, to the Secretary of War.

"SIR,

Having been ordered on to this place by Col. M'Arthur, for the purpose of communicating to the government, such information as might relate to the late expedition lately commanded by Gen. Hull and its disastrous result, as might enable them correctly to appreciate the conduct of the officers and men, and to investigate the causes which produced so foul a blast upon the national character, I have the honor to submit to your consideration the following statement:—

When the army under my command was ordered to Canada, it landed with an ardent zeal and stimulated with the hope of conquest. No enemy appeared within view of us, and but an immediate and vigorous attack has been again urged upon Major Muir, it would doubtless, have fallen an easy victory. I know General Hull afterwards declared he regretted this attack has not been made, and he had every reason to believe success would have crowned his efforts. The reason given for delaying our operations, was to mount our heavy cannon, and the staff of the Canadian Militia came and reported to us that an abundant supply of provisions would be furnished in the course of three weeks, the cannon were mounted, the ammunition fixed and every preparation made for an immediate embarkment at the close. At a council at which were present all the field officers, and which was held two days before our preparations were completed, it was unanimously agreed to make an immediate attempt to accomplish the object of the expedition. It by waiting two days we could have the service of our heavy artillery, it was agreed it was, if not, it was determined to go without it and attempt the place by storm. This opinion appeared to correspond with the views of the General, and the day was appointed for commencing our march. He declared to me, that he conducted himself pledged to lead the army to Malden. The ammunition was packed in the waggons; the cannons were embarked on board the floating batteries, and every requisite article was prepared. The spirit and zeal, the ardor and animation displayed by the officers and men, on hearing the near accomplishment of their wishes, was a sure and sacred pledge that in the hour of trial they would not be found wanting in their duty to their country and themselves. But a change of measures to oppolition to the wishes and opinions of all the officers, was adopted by the General. The plan of attacking Malden was abandoned, and instead of acting offensively, we drove up our camp, evacuated Canada, and re-crossed the river in the night, without even the shadow of an enemy to oppose us. We left to the tender mercy of the enemy the miserable Canadians who had joined us, and the protection we afforded them was but a passport to vengeance. Fort Detroit was also evacuated and destroyed and we precipitated the late confidence which a series of timidity, irresolute and indecisive measures had left in the commanding officer.

About the tenth of August, the enemy had a reinforcement of about 400 men. On the 13th the commanding officers of corps of the regiments (the fourth was absent) were informed through a medium which admitted of no doubt that the General has retired, that a capitulation would be necessary. They the same day received the letter of Major General Brock, and the proclamation of Major General Brock, and the proclamation of Major General Brock, and the proclamation the 14th, a detachment of 350 men from the regiments commanded by Col M'Arthur and myself, was ordered to march to the river Raisin, to effect the provisions which had some time remained there protected by a party under the command of Captain Brush.

On Saturday, the 15th about noon o'clock, a flag of truce arrived from Sandwich, bearing a summons from General Brock, for the surrender of the town and fort of Detroit, that he could no longer restrain the fury of the Savages To this an immediate and spirited refusal was returned. About four o'clock, their batteries began to play upon the town The fire was returned and continued without interruption and, with little effect till dark. Their shells were thrown till eleven o'clock.

At day light the firing on both sides recommenced; about the same time the enemy began to land troops, at the Spring Well, three miles below Detroit, protected by two or three armed vessels. Between 6 and 7 o'clock, they had effected their landing, and immediately took up their line of march. They moved in a close column of platoons twelve in front upon the bank of the river.

The fourth regiment was stationed in the fort; the Ohio Volunteers and a part of the Michigan militia, behind some pickets, in a situation in which the whole flank of the enemy would have been exposed. The residue of the Michigan militia were in the upper part of the town to resist the incursions of the savages. Two 24 pounders loaded with grape shot were posted upon a commanding eminence, ready to sweep the advancing column. In this situation the superiority of our position was apparent, and our troops in the eager expectation of victory, awaited the approach of the enemy. Not a sigh of discontent broke upon the ear: not a look of cowardice met the eye. Every man expected a proud day for his country; and each was anxious that his individual exertion should contribute to the general result.

When the head of the column arrived within about 500 yards of our fire, orders were received from Gen Hull for the whole to retreat to the Fort, and for the twenty-four pounders not to open upon the enemy. One universal burst of indignation was apparent upon the receipt of this order. Their whole conviction was the deliberate result of dispassionate examination of passing events, saw the folly and impropriety of crowding 1100 men into a citizen's work which 300 could fully man; and into which the fire and shells of the enemy were falling. The fort was in this manner filled; the men were directed to pile their arms, and scarcely was an opportunity afforded of moving. Shortly after a white flag was hung out upon the walls. A British officer rode up to enquire the cause. A communication passed between the commanding generals, which ended in the capitulation submitted to you. In entering into this capitulation, the general took counsel from his own feelings only. Not an officer was consulted. Not one anticipated a surrender, till he saw the white flag displayed. Even the women were indignant at the unexpected degradation of the American character, and all felt as they should have felt, but he who held in his hands the reins of authority.

Our morning report had that morning made our effective men present fit for duty 1060, without including 300 Michigan militia on duty. About dark on Saturday evening the detachment sent to escort the provisions arrived from Gen Hull to return with as much expedition as possible. About ten o'clock the next day they arrived within sight of Detroit. Having been heard of any resistance visible, they could have immediately advanced and attacked the rear of the enemy. The situation in which this detachment was placed, although the result of accident, was the best for annoying the enemy and cutting off his retreat that could have been fetched. With his troops enclosed between two fires and no hopes of falcons, it is hazarding little to say, that very few could have escaped.

I have been informed by Col. Finley, who saw the return of their quarter-master General the day after the surrender, that their whole force of every description white, red, and black, was 1330. They had 29 platoons, 12 in a platoon, of men dressed in uniform. Many of these were evidently Canadian Militia. The staff of their militia increased their white force to about 1500 men.—The number of their Indians could not be ascertained with any degree of precision; not many were visible.—And in the event of an attack upon the town and fort, it was a species of force which could have afforded no material advantage to the enemy.

In endeavouring to appreciate the motives and to investigate the causes, which led to an event so unexpected and dishonorable, it is impossible to find any solution in the relative strength of the contending parties, or in the measures of resistance in our power. That we were far superior to the enemy; that upon any ordinary principles of calculation, we would have defeated them, the wounded and indignant feelings of every man there will testify.

A few days before the surrender, I was informed by General Hull, we had 400 rounds of 24 pound shot fixed and about 100,000 cartridges made.

The state of our provisions has been generally understood.

On the day of the surrender was had fifteen days provisions of every kind on hand. Of meat there was plenty in the country and arrangements had been made for purchasing and grinding flour. It was calculated we could readily procure 3 month's provisions, independent of 150 barrels of flour, 1300 head of cattle which had been forwarded from the state of Ohio, and which remained at the river Raisin under Captain Brush within reach of the army.

But had we been totally destitute of provisions, our duty and our interest undoubtedly was to fight. The enemy invited us to meet him in the field.

By defeating him, the whole country would be open to us, and object of the expedition gloriously and successfully obtained. If we had been defeated we had nothing to do but to retreat to the fort, and make the best defence which circumstances and our situation rendered practicable. But basely to surrender without firing a gun—tamely to submit without raising a bayonet—ignominiously to pass in review before an enemy as inferior in the quality as in the number of his forces, were circumstances, which excited feelings of indignation more easily felt than described. To see the whole of our men flushed with the hope of victory, eagerly awaiting the approaching conflict, to see them afterwards dispirited, hopeless and desponding, at least 500 bleeding trails because they were not allowed to meet their country's foe, and to fight their country's battles, excited sensations, which no American has ever before had cause to feel, and which I trust in God will never again be felt, while one man remains to defend the standard of the Union.

I am expressly authorized to state, that Col. M'Arthur and Col. Findley and lieut. Col. Miller viewed this transaction in the light that I do. They know and feel, that no circumstance in our situation, none in that of the enemy, can excuse a capitulation so dishonorable and unjustifiable. This too is the universal sentiment among the troops, and I shall be surprised to learn, that there is one man, who thinks, it was necessary to sheath his sword, or to lay down his musket.

I was informed by General Hull the morning after the capitulation, that the British forces consisted of 800 regulars, and that he surrendered to prevent the effusion of human blood. That he magnified their force at force nearly five fold, there can be no doubt. Whether the philanthropic reason alligned by him is a sufficient justification for surrendering a fortified town, an army and a territory, is for the government to determine. Confident I am, that had the courage and conduct of the general been equal to the spirit and zeal of the troops, the event would have been brilliant and successful as it now is disgraceful and dishonorable.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, Auguſt 24.

Flag of Truce from America.

Intelligence of conſiderable importance was yeſterday received from the United States of America; a flag of truce (the Friends) having arrived at Portsmouth in 21 days from Norfolk, which we underſtand brings an announcement from the American Government, that in conſequence of the ſatisfactory nature of the communication made by Mr. Foſter previous to his ſailing from Halifax, they had determined on the ſuſpenſion of all hoſtilities with this country. We earneſtly hope that this ſtatement will prove to be correct; as if the communication made by Mr. Foſter before the actual revocation of the Orders in Council was known in America produced this effect, there can be no doubt that the knowledge of the revocation will put an end to the war. A council was held yeſterday by his Royal Highneſs the Prince Regent, at Carleton houſe, which, from its being extremely unuſual to hold a Council on a Sunday, was naturally attributed to the receipt of the above important intelligence from America. Colonel Hamilton, the Britiſh Conſul, and Captain Wilkinſon, of the Royal Navy, came paſſengers in the Friends. The diſpatches from America were brought to town yeſterday morning, and conveyed to Lord Bathurſt's houſe.

Plymouth Telegraph Office, Saturday, Aug. 22, 1 o'clock.

"We ſtop the preſs to announce the arrival of the Bloodhound gun-brig, Lieut. Bray, in twenty-ſeven days from Annapolis, with a Meſſenger bearing diſpatches for Government.

The Meſſenger mentioned above is Mr. Shaw; he arrived in London about 11 o'clock this morning. Nothing had tranſpired relative to the contents of the diſpatches when this paper was put to preſs.

A Liſbon mail arrived yeſterday with papers and letters to the 11th inſtant. It is ſtated that Suchet, on hearing of the defeat of Marmont, had ſet out to replace him in the command of the army, taking with him a reinforcement of 15000 men. Marmont in the mean time has died of his wounds. The Marquis of Wellington's head quarters remained at Cuellar, but a part of the army had been ſent forward to Aranda. It is, however, ſuppoſed that Joſeph has ſucceeded in forming a junction with the remains of Marmont's army. The Marquis of Wellington, it was underſtood, was waiting at Cuellar the arrival of a part of his force & of the artillery. Should Souchet be enabled to unite his 15000 men with the force which accompanies Joſeph and the remains of the defeated army, he may, perhaps, be inclined to try his fortune with our victorious General, hoping to ſucceed better than his brother Marſhal.

Diſpatches were alſo received yeſterday by Government from the Marquis of Wellington.

It is ſuppoſed that the French army now oppoſed to Lord Wellington, muſt amount to about 55,000 men, and the following is the manner in which this eſtimate is made up, viz. the remains of Marmont's army 26,000, the corps with Joſeph Bonaparte 14,000, and the reinforcement ſaid to be brought by Souchet 15,000.

Wingoe Sound, Aug. 10

Lord Cathcart arrived here on the 7th—Mr. Thornton, who is juſt returned from Zealand, ſailed again with Ld. Cathcart for Sweden, to make arrangements with the Crown Prince. The Sweediſh ſtore-ſhips ſailed yeſterday for the Sound, and the armament will be off in a few days. It is ſaid Bernadotte will be at Gottenburgh immediately. Lord Cathcart returns here to go up to Ruſſia. The Ruſſians are doing wonderfully well.

From the Whitehall Evening Poſt of Auguſt 26.

We have to ſtate, that intelligence of a more important nature than any yet received from the North, has arrived in town late this day, ſeveral hours after the arrival of the Gottenburgh mail. It is from Harwich whence it has been ſent by expreſs, and is to the following purport—that

On the 15th inſt. the Ruſſians, having received great reinforcements, repaſſed the Dwyna, and attacked a large body of the French army, near a ſmall place called Braſſau (not Breſlau) about 30 miles from Dinabourg. The battle was fought with the utmoſt fury and with doubtful advantage throughout nearly the whole of the day; but, towards the evening, Prince Bagration, with a vaſt force of cavalry, reached the field, and victory was then decided in favour of the Ruſſians; the French loſing 18,000 in killed and wounded, and 14,000 in priſoners.

It is added, that Bonaparte having received intelligence of the intended attack, had left his head quarters at Witepſk, and commanded the French in perſon.

The intelligence was received at Harwich in a letter from Gottenburgh, dated the 24th inſt. and ſays that the meſſenger Mills is on his way to England with the news. The Ruſſians are ſaid to have 11,000 killed.

We are ſorry we cannot add that Mills has arrived.

Ld. Wellington entered Madrid Aug. 12, the 14th Retiro ſurrendered with 1800 men, 22,000 ſtand of arms, 200 cannon, 3000 bls. powder, a large ſupply of cloathing, 8 months ſupply of wheat for the inhabitants of Madrid, and other valuable articles; Aſtorga capitulated on the 18th with 1000 priſoners, and ſeveral ſmaller garriſons have done the ſame.

Extract of a letter from Riga, Aug. 1.

"The deſtruction of our ſuburbs has been completed, and has occaſioned the utmoſt diſtreſs amongſt the inhabitants. The enemy is cloſe at hand, and we expect daily to be attacked. We are, however, well prepared. Our fortreſs is in the beſt ſtate of defence, and our garriſon conſiſts of 25,000 men, proviſioned for ſix months. The French have attempted thrice to paſs the Dwina, and were as often repulſed with great ſlaughter.

The Swedes are embarking troops. It is underſtood the Swedes are to embark in three diviſions of 10,000 men each. Tranſports here are all ready; Capt. Willoughby, of the navy, is gone to the Emperor of Ruſſia, preceded by Lord Cathcart.

Halifax, September 30.

On the 19th Auguſt, the San Domingo and Poiſtiers, fell in with the Duke of Malborough packet from Liſbon, which had ſailed on the 11th, and had on board diſpatches from Lord Wellington of the 4th—from her the following particulars are obtained:

"Marmont had died at Tudella of the wounds he received in the action of the 22d July, and the remnant of his army, under General Foy, was at Burgos on the 4th Aug.—Lord Wellington entered Valladolid on the 30th July, and on the 3d Aug. was at Cuellar—King Joſeph, who attempted to join Marmont's army with a conſiderable force, had been intercepted, and obliged to retreat from Segovia on the 4th Aug.—The fourth diviſion of the allied army was purſuing him—Lord Wellington's holſter was ſhot through and his boot grazed in the action of the 22d July—It was generally underſtood at Liſbon when the packet ſailed that the loſs of the French had been 22,000.

QUEBEC, October 25.

We underſtand, and with pleaſure we announce it to the public, that one of the government ſtore ſhips, lately arrived, brought 10,000 ſtand of arms

Official Account of the Battle of Queenston.

The National Intelligencer, received this morning, contains the following letters from Gen. Van Rensselaer to Gen. Dearborn, detailing the particulars of this dis afterous engagement. The General, at the time his letters were written, was unable to give the number of killed, wounded or prisoners. He represents the conflict as having been severe, and the loss as very considerable on both sides.

HEAD QUARTERS, LEWISTON,
October 14, 1812.

SIR—As the movements of the army under my command, since I had last the honor to address you on the 8th inst. have been of a very important character, producing consequences serious to many individuals; eftablishing facts actually connected with the interest of the fervice and the safety of the army; and as I ftand prominently responsible for some of these consequences. I beg leave to explain to you, fir, and through you to my country, the fituation and circumftances in which I have had to act, and the reasons and motives which governed me; and if the reluctance not all that might have been wished, it is such, that when the whole ground fhall be viewed, I fhall cheerfully submit myfelf to the judgment of my country.

In my letter of the 8 h inft. I apprized you that a crisis in the campaign was rapidly advancing; and that (to repeat the same words) "the blow muft soon be ftruck, or all the toil and expence of the campaign go for nothing; and worse than nothing, for the whole will be tinged with dishonor."

Under such impressions, I had on the 5th inft. written to Brigadier Gen. Smith, of the United States' forces, requesting an interview with him, Major General Hall, and the commandants of the United States' regiments, for the purpole of conferring upon the subject of fu ure operations. I wrote Maj. Gen. Hall to the same purport. On the 7th, I had received no answer from Gen. Smith; but in a note to me of the 10th, Gen. Hall mentioned that Gen. Smith had not yet agreed upon any day for the consultation.

In the mean time, the partial success of Lieut. Elliott, at Black Rock, (of which however, I have received no official information) began to excite a ftrong disposition in the troops to act. This was expressed to me through various channels in the form of an alternative; that they muft have orders to act; or, at all hazards, they would go home. I forbear here commenting upon the obvious consequences to me, personally, of longer withholding my orders under such circumftances.

I had a conference with ——— to the poffibility of getting fome perfon to pafs over to Canada and obtain correct information. On the morning of the 4 h, he wrote to me that he had procured the man who bore me letter to go over. Inftructions were given him; he paffed over—obtained such information as warranted an immediate attack. This was confidently communicated to several of my firft officers and produced great zeal to act; more especially as it might have a controuling effect upon the movements at Detroit, where it was supposed General Brock had gone with all the force he dared spare from the Niagara frontier. The beft preparations in my power were, therefore, made to dislodge the enemy from the Heights of Queenston, and poffefs ourfelves of the village where the troops might be sheltered from the inclemency of the weather.

Lieut. Col. Fenwick's flying Artillery, and a detachment of regular troops under his command, were ordered to be up in season from Fort Niagara. Orders were also sent to General Smyth to send down from Buffaloe, such detachment of his brigade as exifting circumftances in that vicinity might warrant. The attack was to have been made at 4 o'clock in the morning of the 12th by crofling over in boats from the Old Ferry oppolite the Heights—To avoid any embarraffment in croffing the river (which is here a fheet of violent eddies) fix, oriented boatmen were procured to take the boats from the landing below, to the place of embarkation. Lieut. Sim was considered the man of greateft fkill for this service. He went ahead, and in the extreme darkneis, paffed the intended place far up the river; and there, in moft extraordinary manner, faftened his boat to the fhore, and abandoned the detachment. In this front boat he had carried nearly every oar which was prepared for all the boats. In this agonizing dilemma, ftood officers and men, whole ardour had not been cooled by exposure through the night to one of the moft tremendous north eaft ftorms, which continued, unabated, for twenty-eight hours, and deluged the whole camp. The approach of day light extinguifhed every profpect of fuccefs, and the detachment returned to camp. Col. Van Rensselaer was to have commanded the detachment.

After this result, I hoped the patience of the troops would have continued until I could submit the plan suggested in my letter of the 8 h, that I might act under and in conformity to the opinion which might be then expreffed. But my hope was idle; the previously excited ardour feemed to have gained new heart from the late miscarriage—the brave were mortified to flop fhort of their object, and the timid thought laurels half won by an attempt.

On the morning of the 12th, such was the preffure upon me from all quarters, that I became fatisfied that my refusal to act might involve me in suspicion and the fervice in disgrace.

Viewing affairs at Buffaloe as yet unsettled, I had immediately countermanded the march of Gen. Smyth's brigade, upon the failure of the firft expedition; but having now determined to attack Queenston, I sent new orders to Gen. Smyth to march;—not with the view of his aid in the attack, for I considered the force detached sufficient, but to fupport the detachment fhould the conflict be obftinate and long continued.

Lieut. Col. Chriftie, who had juft arrived at the Four Mile Creek, had late in the night of the firft contemplated attack, gallantly offered me his own and his men's services, but he got my permiffion too late. He now again came forward; had a conference with Col. Van Rensselaer, and begged he might have the honor of a command in the expedition. The arrangement was made, Colonel Van Rensselaer was to command one column of 300 militia; and Lt. Col. Chriftie's column of the fame number of regular troops.

Every precaution was now adopted as to boats, and the moft confidential and experienced men to manage them. At an early hour in the night, Lieut. Col. Chriftie marched his detachment by the rear road, from Niagara to Camp. At 7 in the evening Lt. Col. Stranahan's regiment moved from Niagara Falls—at 8 o'clock, Mead's—and at nine, Lieut. Col. Blan's regiment marched from the same place. All were in Camp in good season.—Agreeably to my orders issued upon this occafion, the two columns were to pafs over together; and soon as the Heights fhould be carried, Lt. Col. Fenwick's flying artillery was to pafs over; then Maj. Mullany's detachment of regulars; and other troops to follow in order.

At dawn of day the boats were in readineis, and the troops commenced embarking, under the cover of a commanding battery mounting 2 eighteen pounders and 2 fixes. The movements were soon discovered, and a heavy fire of musketry was poured from the whole line of the Canada fhore. Our battery then opened to sweep the fhore; but it was, for fome minutes, too dark to direct much fire with safety. A fix pounder was now opened upon the boats from three different batteries—our battery returned their fires and occasionally threw grape upon the fhore, and was itself served with shells from a small mortar of the enemy's. Col. Scott, of the artillery, by haftening his march from Niagara Falls in the night, arrived in season to return the enemy's fire with a fix pounder.

The boats were somewhat embarraffed with the eddies, as well as with a shower of mot; but Col. Van Rensselaer, with about 100 men, foon effected his landing amidft a tremendous fire directed upon him from every point; but to the aftonifhment of all who witnefled the scene, this van of the column advanced flowly againft the fire. It was a serious misfortune to the van, and indeed to the whole expedition, that in a few minutes after landing Col. Van Rensselaer received four wounds; a ball paffed through his right thigh, entering just below his hip-bone—another fhot paffed through the fame thigh, a little below—the third through the calf of his leg—and a fourth carried his heel. This was quite a crisis in the expedition. Under so severe a fire it was difficult to form raw troops. By fome misunderstanding of the boatmen, Lieut. Col. Chriftie did not arrive until fome time after this, and was wounded in the hand in paffing the river. Col. Van Rensselaer was ftill able to ftand; and with great prefence of mind, ordered his officers to proceed with rapidity and ftorm the Fort. This fervice was gallantly performed, and the enemy driven down the hill in every direction. Soon after this both parties were considerably reinforced, and the conflict was renewed in various places—many of the enemy took fhelter behind a ftone guard-houfe, where a piece of ordnance was now briskly served. I ordered the fire of our battery directed upon the guard houfe; and it was fo effectually done that with 8 or 10 fhot the fire was silenced. The enemy then retreated behind a large stone houfe; but in a fhort time the route became general, and the enemy's fire was silenced except from a one gun battery, so far down the river as to be out of the reach of heavy ordnance, and our light pieces could not silence it. A number of boats now paffed over unannoyed, except from one unsilenced gun. For fome time after I had paffed over, the victory appeared complete; but in the expectation of further attacks, I was taking measures for fortifying my Camp immediately—the direction of this service I committed to Lt. Totten, of the engineers. But very foon the enemy were reinforced by 2 detachment of several hundred Indians from Chippawa —they commenced a furious attack; but were promptly met and routed by the rifle and bayonet. By this time perceived my troops were embarking very flowly. I paffed immediately over to accelerate their movements; but to my utter aftonifhment I found that at the very moment when complete victory was in our hands, the ardour of the unengaged troops had entirely subsided. I rode in all directions—urged men by every consideration to pafs over—but in vain. Lieut. Col. Bloom, who had been wounded in action, returned, mounted his horfe and rode through the Camp; as did also Judge Peck, who happened to be here, exhorting the companies to proceed—but all in vain.

At this time a large reinforcement from Fort George were discovered coming up the river. As the battery on the hill was considered an important check againft their ascending the Heights, measures were immediately taken to send them a freih supply of ammunition, as I had learnt there was only left 20 fhot for the 18 pounders. The reinforcements, however, obliqued to the right from the road, and formed a junction with the Indians in the rear of the heights. Finding to my infinite mortification, that no reinforcement would pafs over; seeing that another severe conflict muft foon commence; and knowing that the brave men on the heights were quite exhausted, and nearly out of ammunition, all I could do was to fend them a freih supply of cartridges. At this critical moment I dispatched a note to Gen. Wadsworth, acquainting him with our situation—leaving the course to be pursued much to his own judgment—with aflurance that if he thought beft to retreat, I would endeavor to fend as many boats as I could command, and cover his retreat by every fire I could safely make. But the boats were difpreffed—many of the boatmen had fled, panic ftruck—and but few got off. But my note could but little more than have reached Gen. W. about 4 o'clock, when a moft severe and obftinate conflict commenced and continued for about half an hour, with a tremendous fire of cannon, flying artillery and musketry. The enemy succeeded in repoffeffing their battery; and gaining advantage on every side, the brave men who had gained the victory, exhausted of ftrength and ammunition, and grieved at the unpardonable neglect of their fellow soldiers, gave up the conflict.

I can only add, that the victory was really won; but loft for the want of a fmall reinforcement. One third part of the idle men might have saved all.

I have been so preffed with the various duties of burying the dead, providing for the wounded, collecting the public property, negociating an exchange of prisoners, and all the concerns consequent of such a battle, that I have not been able to forward this despatch as early an hour as I could have wifhed. I fhall foon forward you another despatch in which I fhall endeavor to point out to you the conduct of fome moft gallant and deferving officers. But I cannot in juftice clofe this defpatch with out expreffing the very great obligation I am under to Brig. Gen. Wadsworth, Col. Van Rensselaer, Col. Scott, Lieut. Cols. Chriftie and Fenwick, and Captain Gibson. many others have also behaved moft gallantly. As I have reason to believe that many of our troops fled to the woods, with the hope of croffing the river, I have not been able to learn the probable number of killed, wounded and prisoners. The flaughter of our troops muft have been very considerable. And the enemy have suffered severely.

GENERAL BROCK is among their flain, and his aid de camp mortally wounded.

I have the honor to be, fir, with great refpect and consideration, your moft obedient fervant,

Major General.

From the Kingston Gazette Tuesday November 17th. 1812.

Early on Tuesday morning laft information was conveyed to Town that seven American veffels, full of men were approaching. At day light, the Troops and Militia were under Arms, and detachments were immediately fent to occupy the different avenues to the Town in order to give the enemy a proper reception, fhould they be disposed to land. The flying artillery were difpatched in advance of the Troops ——When they had paffed Collins's Bay, feveral fhots were fired by our gun boats at the nearest veffels, which they returned, but without effect on either fide.——At Everitt's point, one of our field pieces opened upon them, the fhot from which appeared to ftrike several times, and they thought it prudent to fheer further off. About two o'clock they approached the Town, and were fired at from all our Batteries. They opened and kept up a brisk fire in their turn upon the Royal-George and upon our batteries which was continued until after sunset, when the enemy hauled their wind and anchored under the four mile point, having done no other mifchief than killing one man on board the Royal-George. It is supposed that fome damage was done to their largeft veffel the Oneida, as some of our fhot from the Battery at Miffisague point were seen to ftrike her. On their way down the Bay of Quintie, in the morning, they burned a fmall fchooner belonging to Meffieurs B. Fairfield & Co

The alarm had been early communicated through the Country, and perfons of every age flocked into Town from every quarter, eager to repulse the invaders from our peaceful fhores. The veteran loyalists who had manifefted their zeal for their Sovereign during the American Rebellion, fhewed that age had not extinguifhed their ardour, and tho many of them had paffed that time of life when military fervice could not be legally required they fcorned exemption when their inveterate foes approached. Before night the Town was crowded with brave men, who infenfible to fatigue, were anxious only to grapple with the enemy; who, had they attempted to land, would have paid dearly for their temerity. The conduct of the Inhabitants of the Midland Diftrict on this occafion will be long remembered to their honor.

On Wednesday morning the American fleet got under way. After beating up towards the Lake for some time two bore away and failed down the River, keeping at a refpectful diftance from our batteries, which neverthelefs gave them a fhot in paffing——The other five, continued their progrefs. Early in the afternoon, another veffel appeared in sight which proved to be the Simcoe. She was chafed by the enemy, who fired upwards of fifty fhots at her; but fhe efcaped by the intrepidity and dexterity of her master and crew, not however, without receiving a fhot between wind and water, that muft have funk her had fhe been much farther from port.—In the Evening they were out of sight. Early on Saturday morning, the floop Elizabeth, Henry Murney, master and owner, which failed from York on Wednesday night, under convoy of the Earl of Moira, was taken by the Julia, one of the American Squadron.

Military line of Expreffes.—Capt. Morgan's Company of light Dragoons are to be employed on this fervice—each dragoon to be ftationed at the diftance of about 10 miles from each other, and to extend from the Head-Quarters at Greenbush to Niagara.

24 hours is the time calculated to be taken up in the transmitting dispatches from one post to the other—the distance about 323 miles. Gen. Dearborn's last despatches for Gen. Van Rensselaer, were sent by this line.

A gentleman who was at Mackinaw, at the time of its surrender, informs us, that Capt. Hanks, the American Commandant, on the morning of the capitulation, called together the principal inhabitants, for their advice, when he stated to them that the summons he had just received, contained the first intimation that had been given him of the declaration of war; "and that strange as it might appear, it was that day nine months since he had received a single line from his government either of instruction or orders."

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1812.

We have been favored with a New-York paper of 31st ult. from which we have extracted Van Rensselaer's official letter of his victory "really won but lost for want of a small reinforcement" at Queenston.——We forbear further to comment on the General's epistle than to say that he has modestly declined stating the number of his invading Forces, the number of killed wounded and made prisoners of them; and the amphibious welcome given to some of his armada.——The Gazette generally otherwise, contains lists of British captures from them—some clearances for Ports in amity with us—Governor Griswold's death (of Connecticut)—and a dominant burglary on the house of a peace withing Representative.——In our next, we anticipate matters of greater characteristic interest from that quarter, and some welcome tidings from our cruizers and squadrons on their coast.

Of our nearer concerns, it is necessary to say but little: The animated part and deep interest taken by us, aided by the first of Powers, and our operations directed by the brave and judicious Commander at our head, will as heretofore, lead us through the arduous contest with glory to ourselves, and crown our manly efforts with ultimate success

We have heard of the capture of 30 American Boats at Fort-Stoffer, by our people, but have not the particular detail.

Lateſt Intelligence.

A circumſtantial account of the conſpiracy plotted by Bonaparte to ſubject the Ruſſian Government.

The conſpiracy hatched up by Bonaparte againſt the Imperial family, and fortunately diſcovered through the interpoſition of Divine Providence, has liberated Ruſſia from the evils which threatened her, and is now the general topic of converſation.

Mr. Speranski the confidential Imperial Secretary, was raiſed to that high dignity through the ſpecial favor of the Emperor Alexander. Suſpicions had been entertained for a long time that Bonaparte maintained ſpies and agents at this Court, who communicated to him the ſecrets of State; what confirmed theſe ſuſpicions was the frequency with which, latterly, the couriers were ſent from Ruſſia to France, without their coming from France to Ruſſia. Prince Bagration, who commanded the army on the frontiers, formed a reſolution to detain a courier who was going to Paris with diſpatches for Bonaparte, ſealed with the very ſeal of the Emperor Alexander; he opened them without reſpecting the Imperial ſeal, and found that they contained a deſcription of the plan adopted for the enſuing campaign, and a circumſtantial account of the forces of Ruſſia, her military poſitions, depots, ſtorehouſes, and in a word, the reſources, means and diſpoſitions of our Government.

Prince Bagration ſent a courier immediately to St. Petersburgh with thoſe diſpatches aſking pardon of H. I. Majeſty for his audacity in daring to violate his ſeal, but in which he was excuſable, as was proved from the reſult.

The courier was desired to place the diſpatches in the Emperor's own hands—this was attended with conſiderable difficulty, but finally the meſſenger obſtinately inſiſting upon complying ſtrictly with his orders, and it being probable that a ſecond courier would arrive, adviſing the departure of the firſt they were under the neceſſity of letting him have access to the Emperor, and he delivered accordingly, his letters to him three hours after his arrival.

His Imperial Majeſty having learned by the contents of theſe deſpatches, that Mr. Speranski and his Secretary Magneſy, were the perſons who revealed to Bonaparte ſecrets of ſuch magnitude, he ſent for the former, and gave orders to the Prefect of the Police to ſeize and ſeal his papers, as likewiſe thoſe of Mr. Magneſy, and make the latter immediately depart for Siberia.

Whilſt they were executing the orders of the Emperor, Mr. Speranski arrived—being totally ignorant of what was going forward at the palace—H. I. Majeſty received him in his uſual manner, and told him that he was greatly chagrined that he ſhould have been betrayed by a friend, in whom he had repoſed the greateſt confidence—"How is it credible?" anſwered the Secretary "that any one could be a traitor to ſo good and magnanimous a Prince as your Majeſty" Well, replied the Emperor, "You are the friend of whom I ſpeak"—Mr. Speranski ſeeing himſelf, ſaying that it was a conſpiracy of the numerous enemies which his extraordinary elevation had raiſed him, that his imperial Majeſty never had a miniſter who ſerved him with more fidelity and zeal, and to pacify the malice of his rivals, he was diſpoſed to reſign.

At this moment H. I. M. was informed that the Secretary, at war deſired to have an interview with him, the Miniſter came to let him know that the plan approved by H. I. M. for the enſuing war with France was miſſing, that it was aſcertained that his aid de-camp had delivered it to Mr. Speranski, who had demanded it of him.

Alexander turning to his Cabinet, where Mr. Speranski was, reprimanded him anew, with this freſh proof of his guilt. The Secretary then confeſſed his crime and implored the clemency of his Sovereign, who as a laſt proof of his goodneſs and benignity, told him to chuſe either of the two alternatives, that of being tried by the documents and evidence which appeared againſt his conduct, or be baniſhed to Siberia.

Speranski, as was natural, preferred the latter and H. I. Majeſty ordered him to go home immediately, where he would find, that the neceſſary diſpoſitions had been taken to that effect.

Notwithſtanding the exterminating order Speranski inſtead of going home, directed his coachman to conduct him to Mr. Magneſy's houſe, but he had already departed for Siberia. Speranski then repaired to his own houſe where a coach was ready to conduct him to the ſame place. He went up to his room, and found that the Prefect of the Police was waiting for him; he paid him many compliments, apologizing for not having been there to receive him. The Prefect of the Police replied, that he could not ſpare the time for compliments, that he could not be ignorant of the motive of his viſit, and therefore to prepare himſelf without delay for the journey. He was permitted to take any thing with him but papers.

On examining his papers the affair aſſumed a new aſpect. A moſt horrid plot and conſpiracy was diſcovered. It appears their plan was to puſſeſs themſelves of the Emperor, and of the Grand Duke Conſtantine; to conduct them in the firſt place to France, then ſecure the reſt of the Imperial family, the principal perſonages and perſons in office that were not of the French party, diſorganize the government, and introduce anarchy and confuſion. The conſpirators were then to implore the aſſiſtance of Bonaparte to reſtore order, and in this manner to deliver up the Ruſſian Nation into his hands.

In conſequence of this diſcovery, orders were ſent to detain Mr. Speranski, and he was conducted to the Citadel at St. Petersburgh, to ſtand trial, to diſcover his accompices.

At this time Prince Bragration diſcovered two ſpies about his perſon, who confeſſed among other things that a courier had juſt paſſed with forged paſſports, whoſe miſſion was of the utmoſt importance, and was going to Tangaroff by a circuitous route.—The General gave orders to detain him, and he was accordingly taken. He is a Pole who ſpeaks the Ruſſian tongue very well, a colonel in the ſervice of France; he had a load of golden Ducats with him, and he was commiſſioned to bribe to muthy the Coſſacks and Tartar troops in the vicinity of Tobolſk, where the intention was to commence as ſoon as the troops took the field and whilſt the Emperor and his brother were in his army. It appears that Bonaparte had furniſhed for that and other objects upwards of 50,000 ducats in gold, (two millions and a half of dollars.)

Such is the plan of the revolution which Bonaparte has projected for our country and is ſimilar to the one he ſchemed four years ago to get poſſeſſion of Spain.

LISBON, Sept. 3.

Copy of a letter from Cadiz, dated Aug. 25.

With pleaſure I announce to you, that this unhappy city is finally liberated, after undergoing two months ſucceſſive cannonading and bombarding, which daily coſt the loſs of many lives and ruins.

About one o'clock A. M. the French began their retreat, deſtroying their batteries and ſpiking the guns, deſtroying all their great works which they had been erecting for two years and a half paſt.—We diſcovered ſome movements of confuſion in the enemy's lines; they received a reinforcement of 2000 cavalry laſt night, which are to cover their retreat, according to information received by perſons we can depend on. As ſoon as day dawned they appeared retreating towards Xeres, flattening their cavalry along the coaſt to prevent the allied troops from diſembarking. The firſt place they ſet on fire was St. Catherine, and continued on to the left; in all the batteries at Santipetri, the fight was hardeſt to ſee the flames of the redoubts, bridges, and the remnant of the fortifications, as likewiſe the continual diſcharge of the artillery, and the blowing up of the powder magazines. The city of Cadiz never witneſſed ſuch a ſcene of joy.

The Spaniſh flag is now flying at the forts of Matagorda, Fort Santa Rota and Trocadero. To the laſt place were embarked a number of workmen. The Engliſh head quarters will be this night at Porto Real, and the Spaniſh at —— where they will be joined by general Ballaſteros. It is reported that Villeneta has been taken by the army of General Maitland, and that no quarter has been given to the garriſon.

We are likewiſe informed by a letter from Carthagena, that the Engliſh troops which landed on the 10th, is much more numerous than was ſtated; a large number of infantry, 1,500 cavalry, which will be joined by 1,200 of the 3d army. Finally, on the 26th of Auguſt, Seville was evacuated by the French, leaving their king Joſeph at Madrid with a garriſon of 8000 or upwards. They have into Guadalquivir, a number of cannon, powder, ſalt and proviſions; they attempted to burn the bridge of Triano; they deſtroyed the powder factory, arſenal, &c. It was ſaid at Seville, that Soult was retreating towards the Morena, and others to Grenada, it was, however, uncertain.

On the 27th of Auguſt, at 9 A. M. the Spaniſh troops under the command of Gen. Oluz Mourgeon, marched into Seville, after a ſhort ſkirmiſh with the advanced guards of the enemy, which they attempted to defend. Six Spaniards were killed and 12 wounded, amongſt whom was an Engliſh colonel, the enemy's loſs was 150 killed and 200 wounded.

Other letters from Cadiz of the ſame date ſate, that orders were iſſued by the Regency, that a ſolemn Te Deum ſhould be ſung in conſequence of ſuch a favorable event having taken place.

HALIFAX, October 23.

The naval force on the Halifax ſtation conſiſts of two 74s, one 64, one 40 gun frigate, ſeven 38s, two 36s, one 32, two 20s, eleven 18s, two 16s, and five or ſix ſmaller veſſels.

Transports with the 92d Britiſh Regiment and other troops have arrived at Halifax, convoyed by the Leviathen of 74 guns, bearing Admiral Sir Rachan's flag.

MONTREAL, Novr. 14.

Lisbon dates have been received at N. York to 16th Sept. containing accounts that Lord Wellington with the 4th and 6th divisions of his army, had left Madrid in purſuit of the remnant of Marmont's army —that Gen. Hill was on the march to join Lord Wellington—that Soult, Suchet, and Marmont were making an effort to unite their forces, and that a general and deſperate battle was expected ſoon.

PHILADELPHIA, October 24.

Official accounts have been lately received from London, by the Chevalier de Onis, his Catholic Majeſty's Envoy Extraordinary and Miniſter Plenipotentiary, near the U. States, of a treaty of peace, friendſhip and alliance having been ſigned at St. Petersburgh, between the Ruſſian and Spaniſh governments, on the 20th of July laſt. A ſimilar treaty was to take place between the Spaniſh government and that of Sweden.

October 22.

Eight waggons loaded with ſpecie for the army, left this city yeſterday morning, under eſcort of a lieutenant's guard, for Plattsburgh.

CHILICOTHE, October 7.

The vanguard of the North Weſtern Army under Gen. Winchester, arrived ſome days ago from Fort Defiance. It was compoſed of Payne's brigade of Kentucky volunteers; Gerrard's troop of artillery and about 400 of the 17th regiment of regulars.—They advanced to within 3 miles of Fort Defiance—and there found, the 3000 Britiſh and Indians, with ſix piece of artillery, had fortified themſelves in the Fort. Winchester alſo fortified his camp, and waited for reinforcements.

This information is ſaid to have been communicated to Gen. Harriſon, at St. Mary's by expreſs. He immediately marched for Fort Defiance with 2000 mounted riflemen.—Fredonian.

The following extract from a letter from an officer in the army at Fort Wayne is quoted as confirmation of the above.

Extract of a letter dated Sept.

The laſt news gotten is, that a large body of Britiſh regulars and Indians, under the command of Tecumſeh (who is a Britiſh General in the Britiſh ſervice) were at Fort Defiance, on their way to reduce Fort Wayne, from thence to go to Vincennes for the ſame purpoſe.—Whether they had effected their purpoſe is not known.

General Harriſon mounted a waggon & delivered an attangue, in which he let forth the abſolute neceſſity of ſubordination among the military, and expreſſed his confidence of the ſtrength of the army now collected and collecting to reduce Malden & Detroit before Chriſtmas, which he was determined to effect.

INDIAN HOSTILITY.

The following is extracted from a letter from a gentleman of reſpectability at St. Mary's, dated October 3:—

We have juſt received a letter from Col. Smith's camp, on St. Johns, ſtating that Dr. Caldwell and Capt. Whittaker, had juſt arrived there from Col. Newman's quarters, who was at the lower Indian town with about 100 men, and ſtated, that on Sunday laſt, the Indians met Col. Newman, with about an equal number, in the pine woods, had an engagement; and that Newman had one killed and ſeven wounded. The Indians left ſeven dead on the field, and carried all they could away.

"About sun set, on the ſame day, the ſavages renewed the attack, with about duble the number, and fought until night.

"The two meſſengers above named, did not know the reſult, having been deſpatched that night to Col. Smith for men, horſes and proviſions, which were haſtening on.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in Washington, to his friend in this town, dated 16th inſt.

"In yours of the 13th inſt, you flatter yourſelf the times will be better, by reaſon of a peace between this country and Great Britain; you never was more out in your calculation than in this; for you may reſt aſſured that war, was declared thro' the influence of the French Miniſter, and it is ſaid here (as coming from the ſame Miniſter) that now War is declared, Mr. Madiſon CANNOT make peace without the conſent of Bonaparte, let the propoſals from G. Britain be ever ſo favorable to this country; and from the ſource I received this information, I have not the leaſt doubt of its being true."

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1812.

It is with much gratification that we witneſs the ſpirited manner with which the donation goes forward for our Volunteers—much praiſe is due to the benevolent heart in which the idea originated, and his perſonal exertions for its furtherance.—We will ſhortly be favored with a liſt of the generous donors names, which we ſhall publiſh as examples worthy of general imitation, as well as to ſhew the band of patriotic Heroes that their meritorious ſervices are properly appreciated by the community of which they are members.

The Editor after a haſty and impatient peruſal of Madiſon's Speech to Congreſs on the 4th inſt. retains the general ſubſtance which is briefly the following:—he begins by congratulating his country and complimenting Providence on the health, and abundant harveſts of the year:—he mentions the exiſtence of amicable relations with Ruſſia, and his expectation of others with Sweden etc.—he conſoles the Americans by candidly aſſerting that their veſſels in foreign trade are ſafely arrived in their own ports, and that the public revenue is tantamount to national exigencies;—he adverts with becoming ſang froid, to the non compliance of Connecticut and Maſſachuſetts with his Militia conſcription which he imputes to their miſunderſtanding the federal compact;—he forcibly recommends the neceſſity of new allurements to encourage more general enliſtments notwithſtanding the meaſure in which he deprecates the leeyone of ſtanding forces, yet who under his preſent circumſtances have become a neceſſary evil;—he ſpeaks in a lofty ſtrain of the atchievements of his marine, and that freſh ſhips are to be put in commiſſion;—he proudly holds out that a prominent feature of his policy was to obtain the command of our Canadian waters of demarcation;—that his firſt operations were to be directed to the ſubjugation of the "upper nor Canada"—he ſuggeſts the needed improvement of their Militia ſyſtem;—he mentions the reverſes his Forces have met with on our frontiers at caſual incidents inſeparable from the early contingencies of war, and that a military tribunal is to decide on the merits of Hull's ſurrender;—he founds the origin of Britiſh inſtruct with the Indians, and that horror upon horror marks every conſequent ſtep he wiſhes to impreſs an idea upon his country that even at Weſhington his ſenſibility wears the ground of the unſheathed ſword of Waſhington;—he glances in a curſory manner at ſympathetic ear from Algiers, and at French forbearance in a manner to excite alarm but, as mere matter of courſe;—he views Britiſh licenſes to trade with blockaded ports as diabolical, and he ſnubs the goods of his country to ſtarve the actors;—he is put to by rehearſing the burthen of the chief magiſtrate's ſong to generate a dread ſy enmity which will hurl Britain into ruin; and he declares that no peace can be made with her except on ſuch terms as America may preſcribe.

The Editor had but too hurried a peruſal of that Novel, yet of the firſt plate pretenſions he has hitherto met with, he thinks it the moſt intereſting in its ſtarched exception, unbounded as ſo elaſtic hoſtility to Britain, combining with indelible inſtruency to France, while (like a ſturdy beggar) magiſterially calling on the patriotism of the people for approbation and ſupport nearly ſurpaſſes credibility, yet ſuch is the fact.

Could a new inſtance of profanity excite his abſorbment, the Editor might have cauſe for a ſtoniſhment; to hear the chief Functionary of a people publicly invoking Dieine aid in the unmeaning ſtedding of human blood; the beſeeching it to proſper their efforts to haſten the downfal of a nation ſucceſsfully contending for whatever is dear to Chriſtendom. and imploring its bleſſings on ſelf deſtroying policy. is the moſt novel of novelties. Yet ſince atheism could gain proſelytes, it need not ſurprize that a Judas gaſping in his mane, ſhould fill retain ſome expedient partizans. The Editor forbears to give an opinion reſpecting the re election of ſuch a Ruler; yet knowing the American character as he knows it, he feels ſome indifference as to the reſult.—Too deeply already has his chivalrous policy wounded the intereſts of their Commonwealth, and as it bouſts of Freedom as its patrimony, the Editor anticipates with confidence that honeſt patriotism will ſtill ſave the Country, that it will prevent a ſecond elevation to that ſtate from which invariably an impoveriſhing policy has flown, and ruined thouſands of the people, and to aggravate the evil has laid the corner ſtone to the ruin of many thouſands more.— But a ſhort time can elapſe before it is to be hoped that a favorable change will take place; ſhou'd it not, a proportion of this weſtern Hemiſphere (ſtill new in a national point of view) will furniſh to the page of hiſtory and to future generations new food for intereſting enquiry and reflection.—— Added to the deadly blow his adminiſtration has dealt to the trading and conſequently to the agricultural intereſts of his country, he has effectually fettered all national enterprize and induſtry, has halved their public revenue and reduced their commerce to a paltry inland traffic. Under a government adminiſtered as theirs has latterly been, each member of the federal union feels a diſtinct wound inflicted on itſelf; this ſtate of things has produced ſhe natural conſequences; namely mutual jealouſies, ſeparate and jarring intereſts, the ſeeds of ultimate diſunion ſown, and an endleſs catalogue of vexatious evils.

Let us now look for a moment at the prominent conduct of England to America.—She has uniformly fostered her general intereſts. She has felt her relations with her of a reciprocal and family caſt, and has to the preſent ſtage of Mr. Madiſon's war upon her, exerciſed a degree of forbearance, which her known magnanimity and hopes of conciliation amply juſtify. Yet with ſuch inducements to amity and peace, England is offenſibly, the only power on which their rulers has openly declared war. The mode he has adopted of making war on the Spaniſh American provinces, is for him, preſently in character. An unprejudiced view of his meaſures begets ſome ſurpriſe, and it muſt be much increaſed to witneſs with what audacity he calls on the country for juſtification.—— The reflecting part of it feel poignantly his inſulting enmity veiled as it is in the ill-fitting garb of patriotiſm: yet, with ſoul deſigns ſo thinly diſguiſed, and with his prudency ſo near expiring, they view his objects with leſs concern, as he cannot but fail in their attainment. This ſubject generally, defeats all calm reſoning and the Editor indignantly drops it. He hopes ſhortly to recieve the Speech for publication; from its tenor, his readers will judge juſtly for themſelves.

We notice ſome vague accounts of battles and ſieges in the Michigan territory, (extracts from Am. papers) from them, we gather that ſome of their "national energies" are put in requiſition by our brigadier general Tecumſeh (as called by them) fighting for his country's ſoil and the exiſtence of their juſt claim, they will ſhou him an inflexible Guerilla, whoſe operations may influence the deſtinies of their "army of the Weſt"—and who may peſter their idolized Gen. Harriſon.

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1812.

We understand by Letters of good authority from Niagara, that on the morning of the 28th ult about 2 o'clock, the Enemy effected a landing opposite to Squaw Island, below Fort Erie, that in the dark they got possession of a Battery and spiked an 18 pounder.

Before a reinforcement could arrive, Lieutenant King who commanded the Royal Artillery in that quarter, was wounded and made Prisoner, as also thirty-six Men of the 49th and Militia. —At the first alarm, reinforcements from all quarters proceeded to the spot with the utmost alacrity, and at day break Lieut. Col. Bisshop who commands in that District, found himself supported by a detachment of 80 men of the 49th Regiment under Major Ormsby from Fort Erie, a body of Indians under Major Givens, a detachment of the Norfolk Militia under Capt. Bostwick, and several Companies of the Lincoln Militia under Major Hatt, and soon after a further reinforcement of Lincoln Militia under Lieut. Col. Clark; when the enemy retired in confusion, having dismounted a pieces of Field Artillery, burned two or three Houses and leaving prisoners with us, Capt. King, A. D. C. to the American Commander in Chief and about 40 men—The loss on their side is computed at about 120 men, on ours at 80 of all descriptions killed, wounded and missing

It appears that a second Division of the Enemy made a shew of landing the same day, but were repulsed and returned with some loss to their own shore. During that and the next day, the Batteries and Guns were reflored and the whole line put in a perfect state of defence.—As a last effort General Smyth the American Commander in Chief of the army of the Lake, embarked in 113 Boats, his whole force consisting of 6000 men, in whose presence he summoned Fort Erie to surrendes, but not receiving the desired answer, he relanded his Troops on their own shore. This measure is reported to have been attended with consequences fatal to his army. The whole of his Militia Volunteers destroyed their ammunition and disembodied themselves. The Regular Troops became clamorous, and it is confidently asserted, fired upon their General and wounded his Aid de Camp; that in the confusion which ensued, several Houses were destroyed in the village of Buffaloe, and that in short his army was completely disorganized.

It must afford infinite satisfaction to every Loyal Bosom, that on every occasion, the Militia of the Province has distinguished itself with an alacrity & spirit worthy of Veteran Troops. —Indeed the Officers Commanding at the various points affailed by the Enemy on the Lines between Fort Erie and Fort George, at Kingston and Johnstown, uniformly testify to this gratifying truth.

Such is the advantage of a good cause,—ours animates all classes with alacrity, zeal and courage, the Enemy's, disgust their Militia and unnerves their Regular Force.

The Editor cannot forbear, in this last instance, where a new opportunity was afforded our Militia of evincing afresh, their Loyal Heroism—to congratulate his readers and his fellow subjects on the occasion.—The brief Address of the immortal Nelson to his Gallant Sailors, seems acted upon in this Province, and every man (as was confidently expected) does his DUTY.

We now give to our readers the following interesting facts as collected from the evidence of two men in different situations, the one was an inhabitant of this Province who lately escaped from the United States, where he had been detained since the declaration of war; the other a Soldier in the American Army taken in the late attempt at Fort Erie.

COPY.

BILL SHERMAN a native of Rhode Island but a resident in Canada for the last 20 years, having his family settled in the Town of Burton: informs—that he quitted Upper Canada in April last, and in consequence of the War being declared, could not, although he repeatedly applied for it, obtain a permit to pass over.—He therefore took advantage of a favorable moment and made his escape in a Boat from Buffaloe Creek on the night of the 2d inst. (Dec.) He states that he thinks there are about 4000 Regular Troops, and have been as many Militia; but the latter had been much reduced of late. Deponent says, that great discontent prevails among the Troops. That on Tuesday last, 3000 men were embarked on board 113 Boats, that in a short time afterwards General Smyth ordered them out, which caused much ferment. General Smyth said he would explain further if they would meet him at Look's Tavern in Buffaloe, they accordingly did, when General Smyth told them, he could not depend upon the Militia, and had not Regular Troops sufficient. Indignant at this, they fired twice at the General and shot the belt from his Aid de Camp. The Militia and Volunteers then fired off all their ammunition, and disembodied themselves, that is, the greater part made off home. He states, that the sickness amongst them is dreadful; they are now dying from 6 to 10 daily, and it must increase; they complained of having no Hospital stores, or comforts. They are still under canvas, and have no Barracks to retire to—from what he heard, he does not think they will again try to cross this winter, but if they should he suspects John Miller's as the most likely place where the attempt will be made. There have been disturbances in Buffaloe, and in consequence thereof, the Editor of the Paper had ceased to publish the Gazette. He says also, that four men have been shot for desertion, that such has been the general feeling for the last four weeks, that unless a change takes place they will have fighting enough amongst themselves without crossing into Canada. He mentions that Col. Potter, the Chairman of the Committee for foreign relations was embarked with the Troops on Tuesday last, for the purpose of crossing over.

DAVID HARVEY, of the United States, a Prisoner, —— DEPOSETH,

That the Enemy had about 3000 Regular Troops one mile and a half in rear of Black Rock under Camp, at a place called Judge Granger's, where General Smyth, his aid de camp, and several Officers of rank lived. That their Camp is unhealthy—that they die from 8 to 12 daily. The Doctors say the disease is as bad as the plague. The Patients are ill taken with a pain in the head, and in a very few hours generally die. They are also afflicted with the Pleurisy, Dysentery, and Measles. He says in fact, there are very few well men among them.

They have expressed their discontent frequently, and once flacked their Arms, and swore they would go home, and if their officers resisted, they would put them to death. Whenever they can desert, they do. Four Deserters, and one man for mutiny have lately been shot at the Camp, which nearly raised a general Rebellion. At Buffaloe, in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, there have lately been the most alarming Riots, particularly in the latter State, where an Officer and some Soldiers were hacked and burnt to death. That the soldiers are not allowed to see a single paper, but he understood that the Federalists were endeavouring by violent measures to force the Democrats to make peace. They (the soldiers) were the other day called in to quell a severe disturbance at Buffaloe, where the people said, that they considered those on this side of the River as their friends, with whom they always wished to remain at peace. A Proclamation was lately issued by Gen. Smyth telling the soldiers what a disgraceful thing it would be, should England beat of their army being in a state of mutiny; and calling upon them to prevent so shameful a fact being spread abroad. He says that there are furnished from their Camp, 600 men which are stationed near Black Rock, and two divisions of 500 each back of Squaw Island for the protection of their Boats, and three 18 pounders placed on Batteries. About 150 men are in Schlosser, and 250 in Fort Niagara. These are also in the field on the road between Black Rock and Buffaloe 5 or 600 Militia who will not act. They have about 40 Boats fit to be used, and 6 or 8 Scows for carrying their Artillery. He says Capt. King, (Gen. Smyth's Aid de Camp taken by us on the 28th ult.) is considered a great leader, and more looked up to by the Soldiers, than their General. He says Capt. Ogilvie and several of them crossed over on the 28th ult. although on their parole of honor, and during their situation perilous retreated to their Boats, observing, should they be taken they would have their necks stretched. The army has received no pay for four months. It was expected there would be a Federal administration, and that the whole of the Soldiers were rejoicing at the prospect of peace with England. He says that Sergt. Heimbold now a prisoner, killed a Sergt. of the 49th Regiment, after he was wounded and a prisoner. He says further, that the Boats were fired into before they landed, and that upwards of thirty men were killed, and thrown into the River.

That they had more than 600 men crossed, near sixty had gone into the woods to avoid going back, on which Capt. King swore that more than half of their own army were Tories.

We may observe upon these two Depositions, that although one of the Informants mentions facts which the other has not probably an opportunity of learning, yet where they speak to the same circumstances, their testimonies very nearly agree. The sickness so dreadfully prevalent in the American camp cannot indeed be doubted, when we consider the miserable state of men exposed in canvas tents at this season of the year to the severity of the weather, with a scanty supply of these comforts which can alone render such a situation tolerable. Nor need the discontent of the army be a matter of surprize—not supported in their cause by any animating principle of right, nor from recent occurrences, very sanguine in their expectations of advantage, they can ill bear the inconveniencies of a service which are unnecessarily multiplied by the negligence of their officers and the improvident inattention of their Government. Supposing that account correct, which estimates their regular troops at 4000, and their militia at nearly an equal number, and making no abatement for the diminution of strength by meeting sickness, or indifference, still that would not constitute a force from which the Defenders of our Country need shrink with dismay.—But when we view the real state of things—when we contemplate our valiant Soldiery, our loyal and determined Militia, and our faithful and courageous Indians, we cannot be too hardy in defying the paltry and ridiculous attempt of an enemy whose acts, while they display the iniquity of their intentions, and the oppressive policy of their Government, at the same time abundantly prove how feeble and insufficient are their means of carrying their measures into effect. It must be owned that the exertions which a population so numerous as that of the United States of America might make if united, would be too formidable for the unaided resistance of this Province to withstand.

But the generosity of Great Britain will gratefully appreciate our conduct, and enable us by her assistance, to triumph over every exertion of a force which however strong in number, increasing disgust, and a total want of energy and vigor, are continually rendering more inefficient.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in Cornwall to his friend in this Town, dated 24th Nov. 1812.

MY DEAR SIR,

IT is with the greatest satisfaction that I inform you, that we have amply retaliated the capture of a company of the Voyageurs at St. Regis under the command of Capt. John Mc. Donell.—On the 22d instant a company of the Sharp Shooters (Mr. R a borough's) and a few recruits for the 49th, accompanied by Major Mc. Donell and Clarke, and Captain Gray of the Quarter Master General's Department, arrived at the Glengary House; there the design was formed of attacking the American post at Salmon River, for the purpose of carrying off the guard stationed at that place. Orders were sent immediately to Colonels Mc. Lean and Mc. Millan, to march to the Point with what force they could immediately collect. As our Flank Companies are at Prescott, Colonel Mc. Lean was obliged to call upon all that could be mustered in and about Cornwall, and to order some of the country Militia to guard this place during our absence. In the course of two hours about 250 men were collected at Glengary House, and about 11 o'clock at night the expedition set out. About one in the morning we landed at the road, a little below St. Regis, which leads to Salmon River. From this place, one hundred men under the command of Col. M'Lean, were sent to guard St. Regis, and to prevent any communication be ween that and the Americans. The rest, about 150, accompanied by 30 Indians, proceeded thro' the wood to the place of destination. The advanced guard, consisting of twelve men preceded the main body at a distance of about 60 paces.—Before we could arrive at the village of Salmon River, two bridges were to be crossed about a quarter of a mile apart, upon each of which we expected to meet with strong opposition. When we arrived within quarter of a mile of the first we halted, and the main body circled up with the advanced guard. A front was now formed as broad as the nature of the ground would admit of. The front rank advanced at double quick with charged bayonets, determined not to fire at the centries should they hail us. In this order, closely followed by the main body, we passed the first bridge, a little beyond which a centry fired without hailing. A volley from our front rank brought him down, three balls having passed through his body. When we had got half way over the second bridge another centry fired upon us in the same manner as the first, and met also with the same fate. Several shots were now fired at us from the windows, into which volleys were returned by our men. After searching almost every house in the village for the guard, we were informed that the Indians had given them intimation of our coming three hours previous to our arrival, and that they had thus themselves up in the Block house. We immediately drew up without the Block house, and sent one of the inhabitants to inform them that if they did not immediately surrender, we would destroy them and the whole village. They took the wisest plan and surrendered at discretion, to the number of forty men and seven officers, (a Captain and an Ensign.) After destroying their arms and ammunition store, we returned home, where we arrived early in the day. Three of the enemy were killed to our certain knowledge—the prisoners mention seven. Not a man of ours was hurt.

After arriving at the first bridge, the whole business was concluded in about fifteen minutes.—We all rushed on with Major Mc. Donell at the head of us. The Glengary Sharp shooters were in the second division, and the Indians in the rear. These last were of no other use to us than to halloo and make a most hideous noise.—Not a house was plundered, except some few things which were taken by the Indians, and which we could not prevent. None of the inhabitants were hurt, except those who fired upon us, nor were any made prisoners but the garrison. These men were taken on the same day of the month that our Voyageurs were taken at St. Regis, at the same hour in the morning, the same number were killed, and the same number of prisoners, so that the retaliation was complete.

To the EDITOR.

SIR,

General Smyth's Speech to his Army on the 17th ult. encouraging them to invade this Province, would have been considered remarkable for its violence, misrepresentations and falsehoods, had it been heard from the Tribune of the Jacobin Club, in the first paroxisms of the French revolution. But we are so much accustomed to harangues from the States composed of flagitious ingredients, that the grossest misstatements, the most ridiculous menaces, and the most glaring deviations from truth, have long ceased to excite any surprize. It is not therefore on account of such harangues or speech that I call the attention of your Readers to the General's oration; but for the discoveries it makes of the views of his Government, which certainly confers upon it unexpected importance. He begins with telling his Soldiers that they are about to cross the river to "conquer Canada."

Behold the United States of America fighting for conquest—that Government which has uniformly professed peaceable intentions, which has declared in the face of the world, that it never would wage offensive war, and that the greatest necessity only should induce it to arm even in its own defence. These professions have been too much credited by distant nations; but the best informed inhabitants of this Province have been long convinced of their falsehood and have known from unquestionable proofs, that our enemies aspire to the absolute command of the Western, as their Master, Buonaparte, does of the Eastern Continent, not indeed by open war (to which they have been goaded by France,) but by secret treachery. Now the British Colonies being the greatest obstacle to this plan of aggrandizement, first claimed their attention, and being forced by their Ally to declare war, they commence with attacking them. The present Rulers of the States have anxiously endeavoured to conceal their unbottomed projects, because a most respectable portion of the nation are not disposed to go to war at Buonaparte's nod, or to enlarge a territory already too extensive. It was necessary therefore to contrive means of hoodwinking the people, and of touching their fury against Great Britain, to such a pitch as to make them approve of the most hostile measures. For this purpose the mob are inflamed on the subject of naval rights and daide to believe that the British were capturing and destroying, while they were protecting American vessels. They are informed that Great Britain has no right to her own seamen when they walk the deck of one of their vessels, but that their flag shall annihilate all kinds of deception and treachery. The Rulers of the States knew that these offensible reasons were false or worse; but they answered their purpose, and they were aware that nothing could be more ridiculous than to go to war, not to protect their own, but in order to detain British seamen; but things were not yet ripe for them to reveal the true cause of their enmity to Great Britain. The Orders in Council became another offensible reason for hostilities, and had great effect in inflaming the multitude; but no sooner are they repealed than forgotten. Mr. Madison and his friends were waiting for the success of their armies, before the true cause of the war should be announced; but poor General Smyth, not aware of this artifice, and of their solicitude to conceal it, proclaimed to the world in his proclamation, that conquest is the object and not defence. To tell the truth is a virtue which often accompanies brutal Violence, and renders the free of rage less pernicious, by warning us of our danger. He will be exclaimed by his superiors for making this discovery, because it is impossible to retract it. In concluding it to him thro' though that he would not mention it before the subjugation of Canada was compleated, and then they would have proclaimed it themselves; but the poor General was not sufficiently trained to the rules of the Washington Cabinet, the first of which is an abjuration of truth, or rather not sufficiently master of his own passions. In this they have far outstripped their friends the French, who mix some truth with their falsehoods, to make them more palatable; but our neighbours have not the genius necessary for this combination, and therefore deception, gross deception, best suits their capacity.

But the communicative General proceeds to tell us, that we are not only to be conquered, but annexed to the States.—Not as a State, for that would be against their constitution, but as a vanquished Province.—What have our brave Militia to expect from such conquerors? The great Gen. Smyth, for our first Governor, who promises not to plunder the peaceable inhabitants of more than imperious necessity demands.

But this necessity requires lands for those who want them, cattle, household furniture, merchandize of all kinds, for the bandittie rowding state of activity of every thing.—And least the words imperious necessity though appear too limited, he tells his Soldiers that, though he forbids private plundering, whatever is booty, by the usages of war, shall be theirs.

The worthy General prohibits secret plundering, that his own share may not be diminished. He and his officers are afraid that they shall lose their part of the spoil, if the men are allowed to secure it clandestinely—it is therefore ordered that all shall be collected in one mass, and then a just division will take place. Behold, people of Canada, what you have to look for from these robbers! The French plunder their enemies, but they do it with some kind of civility, and never insult them by threatening it before they are conquered.

The Speech next calumniates the Loyal Inhabitants of this Province, by calling them vassals of a tyrannical Government which holds them in bondage. This was Hull's language at Detroit; but he was taught that these Vassals were as superior to his Freemen, as the British Government is superior to the Mobocracy of the United States.

But we ought neither to be surprized nor offended that the wrath of our enemies an especially of so fertile a Gentleman as General Smyth, should expend itself in the most violent expressions, for they have had more illustrations enough to put more patient people into a rage.

The General proceeds to offer his Soldiers two hundred dollars for each horse belonging to the horse artillery taken from the enemy. He might have offered ten thousand without any dread of their being claimed.

He next offers forty dollars for the scalps of an Indian Warrior, that is for his arms and scalp. It is a certain fact, that the scalp taken this war was taken by the Americans at Detroit—a great number of these are armed with tomahawks and scalping knives, imitate the mode of Indian warfare, and far outstrip the Savages in their cruelty towards a flying enemy.

This measure will only demonstrate to the Indians the implacable hostility of the Americans to them, and that the object of this insidious Government in respect to them, is their utter devastation. With the other parts of this Speech we have less connexion. The General tells his soldiers, that our Regular Troops are old and helpless—his is intolerable bold lie, even for an American General, after the found drubbings that these old, decrepid Regulars, aided by our brave Militia, have given to people when he counted three to one. He reminds the soldiers that their arms are longer than those of the British, their courage had need of excitement, and the General discovers a new stimulus—he calls them heroes notwithstanding their repeated defeats; but perhaps the word hero in the American Dictionary signifies coward, for this singular Nation love to be opposite in all things. The little light given by the inhabitants of Canada, and the revenge they have taken on their invaders for their presumption, must have taught the Junto at Washington, notwithstanding the boastings of poor Gen. Smyth, that they were something out in their calculations. They do not find this a Florida, we are not to be deceived by their lies, or corrupted by their emissaries. And if they trust much longer to our forbearance, they may find themselves woefully disappointed. Hitherto we have been satisfied with repelling invasion, we have made no inroads into the enemy's country, because we were willing to demonstrate, by our unexampled forbearance, our reluctance to the war. But the day of retribution is fast approaching—the measure of our forbearance is filled up.

Yet the President of the United States and his friends to Office appear to me objects of pity—they are the tools of a fevered malice, and I will so far give them credit as to believe, that, with their present experience, they would not sell themselves to the French tyrant, but that they are sold to demonstrable. They allow themselves to be treated with less ceremony than a Virginia or South Sea Negro. They cast their eyes to the village of their fellow citizens.—They examine his orders against Great Britain with the most scrupulous exactness. Now had they not received the wages of iniquity, they never would have submitted to such repeated insults. When they received their bribes they were not sufficiently acquainted with their new Master, and although they wished to possess themselves of this Country, they were not disposed to contend for it in war—it suited their views better to undermine it gradually by treachery. In the mean time they supported the non-intercourse was as much as Bonaparte would expect; but they had taken the gold and the tyrant being incensable, sent the Embargo. This measure was adopted as received from Paris, tho' with reluctance, for Mr. Madison, &c. knew that the people were not yet ripe. The Government was sold, but the Nation had some spirit left, and demanded the repeal of the Embargo, with a vehemence that became irresistible. The tyrant enraged—he would be pleased with no half measures; he would not wait the operation of treachery; nothing less than immediate war would satisfy him.

He ceased, it is said, a list of those who had taken bribes, to be made ready for publication. The French Ambassador had it ever their heads with the letters and documents that prove the influence the President's Message in June, and the declaration of war. The President commenced hostilities with less hesitation, because he was made to believe by Gen. Hull and Gen. Porter, that these Provinces were ripe for a revolt, and had been corrupted by their neighborhood; he therefore sends Troops with much exultation to take possession, who find nothing but death or captivity—rewards which will always await the invaders of Canada.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and
House of Representatives,

On our present meeting it is my first duty to invite your attention to the Providential favors which our Country has experienced in the unusual degree of Health enjoyed by its inhabitants and the rich abundance with which the Earth has rewarded the labors bestowed upon it. In the successful cultivation of other branches of industry, and in the progress of general improvements favorable to the national prosperity, there is full occasion, also for our mutual congratulations and thankfulness.

With these blessings are mercifully mingling the pressures and vicissitudes incidental to the state of war, into which the United States have been forced by the perfidy and violence of a foreign power, in its system of injustice and aggression.

Previously to the declaration, it was deemed proper, as a measure of precaution and of forecast, that a considerable force should be placed in the Michigan Territory, with a general view to its security, and to the event of war, to such operations as the Upper part of Canada as would insure either the hostile influence of Great Britain over the savage tribes at the command of the Lake, on which that part of Canada borders, and maintain sovereignty to assume with such forces as might be most conveniently employed against other parts. Brigadier General Hull was charged with this provisional service, having distinctly recommended a body of troops composed of regulars and volunteers from the State of Ohio. Having reached his destination after his knowledge of the war, by effecting a requisition of any authority to act offensively, he passed into the neighboring territory of the enemy with a prospect of easy and victorious progress. The expedition nevertheless terminated unfortunately :— not only in a retreat, to the town and fort of Detroit, but in the surrender of both, and of the gallant corps commanded by that officer. The causes of this painful reverse will be investigated by a military tribunal.

A distinguishing feature in the operations which preceded and followed this adverse event, is the use made by our enemy of the merciless savages under their influence. Would not humanity shudder at the unbridled indulgence of their recommended peace and promoted civilization among that wretched portion of the human race ; and was making exertions to dissuade them from taking either side in the war the enemy has not scrupled to call to his aid those ruthless ferocity, armed with the horrors of these unfortunate scenes, and of the still greater horrors of those yet to come. In this outrage against the laws of humane war, and against the feelings sacred to humanity, the British commander cannot plead the excuse of retaliation, for it is committed in the face of our example. They cannot but regret it, by calling it a seal de mere against them in arms ; for it embraces the most shocking barbarities of defenceless females. Nor can it be pretended that they are not answerable for the atrocities perpetrated since the savages are employed with a knowledge, and even with menaces that their fury could not be controuled. Such is the spectacle which the deputed authorities of a nation, boasting its religion and morality, have not been refrained from presenting to an enlightened age and misfortune at Detroit was not, however, without a concurring effect. It was found by the gallant prisoners, that the national spirit rifes according to the pressure of the foes of so important pull and the brave men that surrendered with it, inspired every where new valour and determination. To the State and difficult part of the Union it was no longer known, than every citizen was ready to fly with arms to protect his brethren against the blood thirsty savages let loose by the enemy, and an extensive frontier, and to convert a partial calamity into a source of invigorated efforts.

This patriotic zeal, which it was necessary rather to limit than to excite, has embodied an ample force from the States of Kentucky and Ohio, and from parts of Pennsylvania and Virginia. It is pursued, with the addition of a few regulars, under the command of Brigadier General Harrison, who possesses the entire confidence of his fellow soldiers, among whom are citizens, some of whom volunteers in the ranks, not less distinguished by their practical fortitude, than by their personal merits. The greater portion of this force is proceeding on its destination, towards the Michigan territory, having succeeded in relieving an important frontier post, and in several incidental operations against hostile tribes of savages, rendered insupressive by the subserviency into which they had been reduced by the enemy, a reduction the more cruel, as it could not fail to impose a necessity of precautionary severity against those who yielded to it.

At a recent date, an attack was made on a part of the enemy near Niagara, by a detachment of regular and other forces, under the command of Major General Van Rensselaer, of the Militia of the State of New-York. The attack, it appears, was ordered in conformity with the ardour of the troops, who executed it with distinguished gallantry, and were for a time victorious ; but not receiving the expected support, they were compelled to yield to reinforcements of British regulars and savages. Our loss has been considerable, and is to be lamented. That of the enemy, less ascertained, will be the more felt, as it includes among the killed, the commanding General, who was Governor of the Province ; and was animated by veteran troops, from unexperienced soldiers, who most daily improve in the duties of the field.

On reputation of gaining the command of the Lakes by the invasion of Canada from Detroit, having been disappointed, measures were instantly taken to provide an equal force for operation to that of the enemy. From the ardour and activity of the officer charged with this object, every thing that can be done may be expected. Should the present season not admit of complete success, the progress made will enfure for the next a naval ascendency, more in effential to our permanent peace with, and control over the savages.

Among the incidents relating to the operations of war, I am constrained to advert to the refusal of the Governors of Massachusetts and Connecticut, to furnish the required detachments of Militia towards the defence of the maritime frontier.

The refusal was founded on a novel and unfortunate exposition of the provisions of the constitution, relating to the Militia. The correspondences which will be laid before you, contain the requisite information on the subject. It is obvious, that if the authority of the United States to call into service and command the Militia for the Public defence, can be thus fruitrated even in a state of declared war, and of colorie under an apprehension of invasion preceding war, they are not our nation for the purpose most of an imposing, and that the public safety may have no other reliance, than on those large and permanent military establishments which are forbidden by the principles of our free government and against the necessity of which the Militia was provided as a conftitutional substitute.

On the coast, and on the ocean, the war has been as successful as circumstances inseparable from inferiority forces could render it. Our system of public defence and private adventure, by their activity, and where there was occasion, by their intrepidity, have made the enemy sensible of a difference between a state of security and of captivity, and the long, calm element on them to their fear. Our trade with little exception, has lately reached our ports—having been much favored by the judicious regulations pursued by a spirit of our fellow citizens, under the command of Commodore Rogers. And to the influence in which skill and bravery were more particularly tried with those of the enemy, the American flag had an auspicious triumph.—The frigate Constitution, commanded by Capt. Hull, after a chafe and short engagement completely disabled and captured a British frigate ; gaining for that officer and all on board, a praise which cannot be too liberally bestowed ; not merely for the prompt and cool direction of commanding talents, while giving to courage its highest character, and to the force applied its full effect, proved that more could have been done in a case still requiring more.

Anxious to abridge the evils from which a state of war cannot be exempt. I call no time after it was declared to convey to the British Government the terms on which its progress might be arrested, without awaiting the delays of a formal & final pacification. And our charge d'affairs at London was instructed in the same time, authorized to agree to an armistice founded upon them. Their terms required, that the Orders in Council should be repealed as they affect the U. States, and that a revival of blockades, violating the acknowledged rules ; that there should be an immediate discharge of American seamen from British ships ; and a Rep part to impel them from American ships, with an understanding that an exclusion of the seamen of each nation from the ships of the other should be stipulated ; and that the armistice should be improved into a definitive one by a comprehensive adjustment of depending controversies.

Although a repeal of the orders susceptible of explanation, meeting the views of this Government, had taken place before the pacific advance was communicated to Britain, the advance was declined from an avowed repugnance to a suspension of the practice of the impressment during the armistice, and without any intimation that this arrangement with respect to seamen would be accepted. Whether the subsequent communication from this government affording an occasion for reconsidering the subject on the part of Great Britain, will be viewed in a more favorable light or received in a more accommodating spirit, remains to be known. It would be unwise to relax our measures on any refpect, on a presumption of such result. The documents from the department of State, which relate to the subject, will give a view also of the propositions for an armistice which have been received here, nor of those from the sub-ordinate officers of Halifax and in Canada, the other from the British government. Acting through Admiral Warren ;—and of the grounds upon which neither of them could be accepted. Our affairs with France remain the same as when they were referred to the last date. The only intervening occurrence meriting attention is the promulgation of a French Decree, purporting it to be a definitive repeal of the Berlin and Milan Decrees. This proceeding, which made the ground of the repeal of the British Orders in Council, is rendered by the time and manner of it, liable to many objections.

The last communications from our special Minister to Denmark afford further proofs of the good effects of his mission and of the amicable dispositions of the Danish government.

From Russia we have the satisfaction to receive assurances of continued friendship ; and that it will not be affected by the ruptures between the United States and Great Britain. Sweden also profeffes sentiments favorable to the fubfifting harmony.

With the Barbary powers, excepting that of Algiers, our affairs remain on the ordinary footing. The unfavorable accounts reaching with that regency has suddenly, and without any apparent cause, been converted into a state of friendship.

The spirit and strength of this nation are, nevertheless equal to the support of all its rights, and to carry it through all its trials. They can be met in that confidence.—Above all we have the inestimable consolation of knowing that the worst to which we are actually engaged is neither a war of ambition or vain glory ; that it is waged, and in violation of the rights of others, but in the maintenance of our own ; that it was preceded by a patience without example, under the wrongs accumulating without end ; and that it was finally not declared until every hope of averting it was extinguished, by the transfer of the British sceptre into new hands coinging to former counsels ; and until declarations were reiterated to the last hour, through the British navy here, that the hoftile edicts against our commercial rights, and our maritime independence would not be repealed, without violating the obligation of Great Britain to the other powers as well as to her own interests.

To have to ask under such circumstances, from manly resolution, would have been a degradation shocking our feelings, and proved fatal to the hopes of our posterity.

We have not, and have attempted the magnificent legacy to our children, but for future generations. It would have unfavourably, that on the occasion, which forms still less attractive than in the other. And although patriotism alone has been into the field for invaluable services, whole classes of citizens who can afford the sacrifice, can reasonably be expected to yield to the impulse.

It will merit consideration also, whether an auxiliary to the security of our frontiers, corps may not be advantageously organized, with a reftriction of their services to particular districts convenient to them. And whether the local and occasional services of marines and others in the seaport towns under a similar organization, would not be proper addition to the means of their defence.

I recommend a provision for an increase of the general officers of the army, the deficiency of which has been illustrated by the number and influence of separate commands which the courfe of the war and the advantage of the service required.

And I cannot prefs too ftrongly on the earliest attention of the legislature the importance of the recognition of the ftaff eftablishment ; with a view to remove unnecessary difficulty and confuse the relations and responsibility of its several departments. That there is room for improvements which will eminently promote both economy and fuccefs, is what appertains to the army and to the war, is equally manifested by the examples of other countries, and by the experience of our own.

A revision of the Militia laws for the purpofe of rendering them more fyftematic, and better adapting them to the emergencies of the war, is at this time particularly desirable.

Of the additional ships authorized to be fitted for service, we will be the [illegible] ready to launch in order to give the requisite appropriations for the purchase of materials for the greater part have been applied to that object, [illegible] be contained with the balance.

The enterprising spirit which has characterized our naval officers, and even its fuccefs both in restraining infults and depredations on our coafts, and to reprifals on the enemy, will not fail to recommend an enlargement of it. There being reafon to believe that the act prohibiting the acceptance of British licenses, is not a sufficient guard against the use of them for purposes favorable to the interests and views of the enemy ; further provisions on that subject are highly important. Not just itfs fo, that penal enactments should be provided for cases of corrupt and perfidious intercourse with the enemy, not amounting to treafon, nor yet embraced by any ftatutory provisions.

A considerable number of American veffels which were in England when the revocation of the Orders in Council took place, were laden with British manufactures, under an erroneous impreffion that the non importation act would immediately cease to operate, and have arrived in the U. States. It did not appear to exercise, on unforeseen sales of such magnitude, the ordinary powers vefted in the treasury department to mitigate forfeitures, without previously affording to Congress an opportunity of making on the subject such provisions as they may think proper. In their conduct they will doubtless equally consult what is due to equitable considerations and to the public interest.

I lay receipts into the treasury during the year ending on the 30th sept. inft, have exceeded 11 millions of dollars ; which have been sufficients to defray all the demands of the treasury to that day, including a necessitary reimbursement of near three millions of the principal of the public debt. In their receipts is included a sum of near 5,830,000 dollars, received on account of the loans of 16 millions ; the whole sum actually obtained on account of the 11 millions dollars, the residue of which being receivable subsequent to the 30th of sept. inft, will, together with the current revenue enable us to defray all the expences of this year.

The duties on the late unexpected importations of British Manufactures, will render the revenue of the ensuing year more productive than could have been anticipated.

The situation of our country, fellow citizens, is not without its difficulties ; though it abounds in animating considerations, of which the view here prefented at our preliminary resources is an example. With more than one nation, we have serious and unsettled controversies, and with which the habits of war, are at war.

Y-sterday morning, at three o'clock, they fired upon our advanced picket, near the river L. Cole in Osel Town ; they had about 300 regulars under Col. Pike, and wounded by their fire, five of their own men, we had none hurt. They came out, it is said, to advance in a greater body last night, but we have not yet heard that they have done so. I can assure you that the only apprehension here, is that they will not come. The force we have opposed to them, is so well disciplined, so admirably disposed, and above all, so well commanded, that no one entertains a doubt or apprehension of the result. The local militia are flocking in from all quarters, and are most enthusiastic in the cause.

"We have a division of the army here ; a second is at L. Prairie, under Colonel Baynes ; a third is in advance at Acadie, under Col. Murray ; and the fourth is again in advance of them, under Col. de Salaberry.

"A prisoner has just been brought in. He was one of the enemy's advanced guard, under Col. Pike. He says that after they had fired upon our picket, being themselves fired upon by some Indians, under Captain M'Kay, they were thrown into confusion and fired on each other. He lay wounded in the woods until he was found by the Indians. A deserter has also come in, who says that they had 45 or 50 killed & wounded. From his account of their force, they do not amount to 800, and he represents them as very sickly and very discontented at remaining so long under arms."

By the Montreal mail, last evening, information through private letters, has been received, that a reconnoitring party of the enemy, about 4 or 500 men, (a secret Spartan band) under Col. Pike, had advanced from Chateauguay Town, on Friday last, and that about 3 o'clock in the morning, was fired upon near the river La Cole, by one of our pickets, composed of a few Voyageurs and Indians, commanded by Captain M'Kay, when the enemy were thrown into confusion, dispersed and fled upon each other.

One of the party who was taken by the Indians, represents them loss to be 5 killed and several wounded ; but a deserter afterwards brought in, who left Chateauguay Town on Friday evening, states that Colonel Pike's party had returned to the great discomfiture, having left 4 men in killed, and wounded by themselves.—None of our men were loft.

Correspondence between J. B. Warren and the Secretary of the Navy.

Halifax. N. S. Sept. 30th

Sir—The departure of Mr. Foster from America, has devolved upon me the charge of making known to you, for the information of the government of the U. States, the sentiments entertained by his Royal Highness the Prince Regent upon the existing relations of the two countries.

You will observe, from the enclosed copy of an order in council, bearing date the 23d June, 1812, that the ifsue of council of the 7th January, 1807 and the 26th of April, 1809, are said to exist nearly at the same time that the government of the U. States declared war against his Majesty.

Immediately on the receipt of this declaration in London, the order in council, of which a copy is herewith enclosed to you, was issued on the 31st of July, for the emargo and detention of all American ships.

Under these circumstances, I am commanded to propose to your government the immediate cessation of hostilities between the two countries, and I shall be happy to be the instrument of bringing about a reconciliation, so interesting and beneficial to America and Great Britain.

I therefore propose to you, that the government of the United States of America shall instantly recall their letters of marque and reprisal against British ships, together with all orders and instructions for any acts of hostility whatever against the territories of his Majesty or the property or persons of his subjects—with the understanding, that immediately on my receiving from you an official assurance to that effect, I shall instruct all the officers under my command to desist from corresponding measures of war against the ships and property of the U. States, and, that I shall transmit without delay, corresponding intelligence to the several parts of the world where hostilities may have commenced. The British commanders in which will be required to discontinue hostilities from the receipt of such notice.

Should the American government accede to the above proposal for terminating hostilities, I am authorized to arrange with you for the revocation of the laws which direct the commerce and ships of war of Great Britain from harbours and waters of the U. States—I desist of which revocation within such reasonable periods as may be agreed upon, you will observe by the order of the 23d June, the date in question of January, 1807, and April, 1809 are to be revived.

The officer who conveys this letter to the American coast has received my orders to put to sea immediately upon the delivery of his dispatch to the competent authority—and I earnestly recommend that no time may be loft in communicating to me the decision of your government, as induced as I feel that it cannot but be of a nature to lead to a speedy termination of the present differences.

The flag of truce which you may charge with the reply will find one of my cruizers at Sandy hook, ten days after the landing of his dispatch, which I have ordered to call there with a flag of truce for that purpose.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, Sir, your most obedient and most faithful humble servt.

J. BOROUGH WARREN.

Admiral of the Blue and Commander in Chief, &c.

Mr Munroe to Mr J. B. Warren.

Department of State, 28th 27 1812.

Sir—I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 30th ult. and to submit it to the consideration of the President.

It appears that you are authorized to propose a cessation of hostilities between the U. States and G. Britain, on the ground of the repeal of the orders in council, and in case the proposition is accepted to take the measures, in concert with this government to carry it into effect on both sides.

You state also, that you have in charge at that event, to enter into an arrangement with the government of the U. S. for the laws which interdict the ships of war and the commerce of G. B. from the harbours and waters of the U. S. And you may state, that if the proposition is not acceded to, the orders to be issued (repealed conditionally by that of the 23d of June last) will be revived against the commerce of the U. States.

I am instructed to inform you, that it will be very satisfactory to the President to meet the British government in such arrangements as may terminate without delay the hostilities which now exist between the U. S. and G. B. on conditions honorable to both nations.

At the moment of the declaration of war the President gave a signal proof of the attachment of the United States to peace. Instructions were given at that early period to the late charge des affaires of the U. States at London, to propose to the British Government an armistice on conditions which it was presumed would be satisfactory. It has been seen with regret, that the propositions made by Mr. Monroe, particularly in regard to the important interest of impressment, was rejected, and that none was offered, through that channel, as a basis on which hostilities might cease.

As your government has authorized you to propose a cessation of hostilities, and is doubtless aware of the important and salutary effect which a satisfactory adjustment of this difference cannot fail to have on the future relations between the two countries, I indulge the hope that it has ere this, given you full power for the purpose. Experience has sufficiently evinced that no peace can be durable unless this object is provided for. It is presumed, therefore, that it is equally the interest of both countries to adjust it at this time.

Without further discussing questions of right, the President is desirous to provide a remedy for the evils complained of on both sides. The claim of the British government is to take from the merchant vessels of other countries British subjects. In the practice, the commanders of British ships of war often take from the merchant vessels of the U. States American citizens. If the U. States prohibit the employment of British subjects in their service, and enforce the prohibition by suitable regulations and penalties, the motive for the practice is taken away. It is in this mode that the President is willing to accommodate this important controversy with the British government, and it cannot be conceived on what ground the arrangement can be refused.

A suspension of the practice of impressments, pending the armistice, seems to be a necessary consequence. It cannot be presumed, while the parties are engaged in a negociation to adjust amicably this important difference, that the U. States would admit the right to acquiesce in the practice of the opposite party; or that G. Britain would be unwilling to refrain her subjects from a practice which would have the highest tendency to defeat the negociation. It is presumable that both parties would enter into the negociation with a sincere desire to give it effect. For this purpose it is necessary that a clear and distinct understanding be first obtained between them, of the accommodation which each is prepared to make. If the British government is willing to suspend the practice of impressment from American vessels, on consideration that the U. States will exclude British seamen from their service, the regulations by which the compromise should be carried into effect would be solely the object of negociation. The armistice would be of short duration. If the parties agreed, peace would be the result. If the negociation failed, each would be restored to its former state, and to all its pre-emptions, by recurring to war.

Lord Castlereagh, in his note to Mr. Russell, seems to have supposed, that, had the British government accepted the propositions made to it, Great Britain would have suspended indefinitely the exercise of a right, on the mere assurance of this government that a law would be afterwards passed to prohibit the employment of British seamen in the service of the U. States and that of G. Britain would have no agency in the regulation to give effect to the proposition. Such an idea was not in the contemplation of this government nor is it to be reasonably inferred from Mr. Russell's note—left, however, by posterity such an inference might be drawn from the instructions to Mr. R. and anxious that there should be no misunderstanding in the sale, subsequent instructions were given to Mr. R. with a view to obviate every objection of the kind alluded to. As they bear date on the 27th of July and were forwarded by the British Packet Althea it is more than probable that they may have been received and acted upon.

I am happy to explain to you thus fully the views of my government on this important subject. The President desires that the war which exists between our countries should be terminated on such conditions as may secure a solid and durable peace. To accomplish this great object it is necessary that the interest of impressment be satisfactorily arranged. He is willing that Great Britain should be secured against the evils of which she complains. He seeks on the other hand that the citizens of the U. States should be protected against a practice which while it degrades the nation, deprives them of their rights as hereon, takes them by force from their families and their country into a foreign service, to fight the battles of a foreign power, perhaps against their own kindred and country.

I abstain from entering in this communication into other grounds of difference. The orders in council having been repealed (with a reservation not impairing a corresponding right on the part of the United States,) and no illegal blockades now instituted in their stead, and an unwillingness being obtained on the subject of impressment in a mode herein proposed, the President is willing to agree to a cessation of hostilities, with a view to arrange by treaty, in a more efficient and simple manner, and to the satisfaction of both parties very other subject of controversy.

I will only add that if there be no objection to an accommodation of the difference relating to impressment in the manner proposed other than the suspension of the British claim to impressment during the armistice, there can be none in proceeding without the least delay, to an immediate cessation and arrangement of an article on that subject. This great question being so satisfactorily adjusted, there would be no obstacle either to an armistice of any other duration or to the most convenient and expeditious mode of negociating a general pacification.

I have the honor, &c.

His Excellency the Commander of the Forces has received from the acting Deputy Quarter Master General Captain Gray, a report of an attack upon the American Post on the Salmon River near St. Regis, on the morning of the 23d instant by a force, consisting of a detachment of the Royal Artillery, 49th regiment, and Glengarry Light Infantry, amounting to 70 rank and file, under Major Clark, on their route to join their respective corps, and detachments, of nearly similar strength, from the Cornwall and Glengary Militia, the whole under the command of L. Col. McMillan —his service has been promoted in an essential degree by Lt. Colonel M'Lean of Glengary, who superintended the embarkation of the Militia.—

The attack was conducted with great judgment, alertness and spirit.—The enemy fled to a Block House for protection, but being completely surrounded, 1 captain, 2 subalterns, and 47 men, which composed the Garrison of this Post, surrendered prisoners of war.—Four batteaux and 57 stand of arms were taken.

In rendering that praise which is due to the spirit and good order with which this service has been performed.—His Excellency has the greatest satisfaction in noticing the moderation and discipline displayed by the troops, by confining themselves to a just and ample retaliation for the attack upon a company of the Voyageurs at St. Regis ;—and respecting the persons and property of the Inhabitants which the events of war had placed at their discretion.—

REMARKS on Mr. MADISON'S SPEECH.

The colouring given to events and circumstances is such as might be expected from such a quarter.

The general charge against Great Britain, of forcing the American government into war, by its system of injustice and aggression, has been so often refuted, not only by British but American pens, that it would be a mere waste of time to enter into the question. Certain it is that the present situation of Great Britain is not of a nature to make it desirable for her to seek new enemies ; if then any acts of hers have a tendency to provoke hostility from a power with which it is unquestionably her interest to live in peace, it follows as an unavoidable inference, that any acts of hers, offensive to such a power, must have their existence in a firm conviction of their absolute necessity. But, this is not the only consideration. If Great Britain to be intimidated into the relinquishment of all the points she previously maintained, the moment the American government declares war ? Could a great nation so lessen her dignity ? It ought not to be expected or hoped, Honor forbids it.

The accusation against our commanders, of calling in the Indians as auxiliaries to act against the Americans, has been properly and ably answered by the regretted chief lately lost to the Upper Province. Can the Americans suppose that the British commanders, in these Provinces would suffer the Canadas to be wrested from the crown of Great Britain, if that evil could be averted by calling in the aid of auxiliaries who have a common cause with them ? If the mode of defence by the Indians, be of a nature different from that of civilized nations, is it the fault of the British if they cannot wholly induce them to change their system of warfare ? That they have restrained them often in their sanguinary habits, is admitted by all Americans who have been in situations to know the truth. Supposing that part of the speech to be true which says that they are armed with "those instruments of carnage and torture, which are known to spare neither age nor sex." what less can be said of cannon shot or shell ? Do these instruments, in bombardments, discriminate between age or sex ? Have not the Americans used these ? Did they not fire red hot shot against Fort George ? Is the ferocity of the Indians greater than that evinced, within 3 years, by the civilized allies of the Americans, the French ? Is it necessary to remind Americans that in the last siege of Saragossa, in an unprovoked invasion of Spain by the French, not less than six hundred women and children perished by shot and the bayonet ? To talk then of the ferocity of the Indians is mere cant,—The American government have made enemies of them by unfair usage, and now impute it to Britons, as a crime, that they make common cause with them, in the defence of British and Indian territory. That is, that they did not realise Mr. Madison's vain expectations of the surrender of Upper Canada, on the appearance of American troops.

It is satisfactory to see, that notwithstanding the acknowledged measure of precaution and foresight in placing a considerable force in the Michigan territory, previous to the declaration of war, Mr. Madison does not attempt to disguise his disappointment, in the unfortunate result of General Hull's invasion of Upper Canada, by his retreat and loss of Detroit, of his army, and of the territory dependant on Detroit.

Mr. Madison does justice to the importance of the loss of the late lamented President of the Upper Province, not Governor as the President of the United States, ignorantly stiles him. A loss that is indeed more felt than the confiderable numbers avowedly loft by the enemy. However, important as that loss is, and numerous as the Americans ftill are, we truft that the mantle of the valiant Brock, like that of Elijah, has dropt on a fucceffor, whom it will render equally efficient to every purpose of defence and the maintenance of the Province againft marauding invaders ; and that Mr. Madison will meet with no less disappointment in his predicted superiority on the Lakes, than he did in his precautions and foresight on the land.

We will allow Mr. Madison to vaunt himself, for a short time, of his reprisals and successes on the Ocean ; the British lion is not yet roused. That noble animal is generally a little late in shaking himself, the trump of war must be sounded more than once in his ear, before it makes the necessary impression ; but when once he wags his tail and his eye balls begin to roll, woe to those who come within the vortex of his wrath. But where has been the theatre of something like equality ? On the American coast, where, in addition to national ships, American privateers swarm ; whilst we have scarcely one ; consequently where all our dependence is on his Majesty's ships. But where are the reprisals for the American ships detained in British ports, and which must be condemned in the event of the failure of negociation ? There are none. Consequently there can be no kind of comparison between the vessels taken from the Americans, and those taken from us, if all parts be taken into confideration, as well of the European as of the American seas.

The acknowledged difficulties attending the raising of an American army will not escape our readers. Corps not permanently established, and which are not subject to due discipline and subordination, are little to be dreaded as invaders, however efficient they might be, as defenders of a country.

From the general tenor of the speech no speedy termination of the differences between Great Britain and the American government can be expected ; therefore it behoves all to make up their minds to the arduous conflict in which we may be unavoidably engaged, ever bearing in mind that there is far less danger in bravely facing an enemy than in dastardly flying from him. In all battles the greatest carnage takes place in a flight ; salvation and victory can only be the result of a brave, determined and dauntless spirit, bravely resolved to conquer or to die.

To all to whom theſe preſents ſhall come. Greeting:

Proclamation.

York Upper Canada, July 25, 1814.

HIS Honor Lieutenant General DRUMMOND, Preſident, adminiſtering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, communicates thus publicly to the Inhabitants of this Colony, the reſult of the proceedings of a Special Commiſſion, begun, and holden by order of his Honor, at Ancaſter, in the Diſtrict of Niagara, on Monday the 23d day of May laſt, for the Trial of Perſons charged with High Treaſon.

His Honor laments that during that moſt ſolemn inveſtigation which public juſtice required, the firm and impartial adminiſtration of it produced the conviction and condemnation of fifteen perſons, who might ſtill have lived under the protection of the Government, and continued to enjoy, in common with his Majeſty's faithful ſubjects of this Province, the ineſtimable bleſſings of our happy Conſtitution.

Of thoſe, eight (the principal offenders, if guilt like theirs admitted of diſcrimination) ſuffered the execution of the awful ſentence of the law, at Burlington, in the Diſtrict of Niagara, on Wedneſday, the 20th day of July inſtant.—The remaining ſeven are reprieved until his Majeſty's Royal Pleaſure ſhall be known.

But his Honor, while he confidently expects that the juſt puniſhment of theſe unhappy criminals will have its due effect in putting down Rebellion and ſuppreſſing Diſaffection for the future, calls moſt ſeriouſly upon his Majeſty's ſubjects in this Colony, to beware leſt the forbearance exerciſed in affording this reſpite to the remaining convicts, may by any miſtaken influence encourage a repetition of the crime by which the extenſion of the Royal Mercy would moſt probably be effectually barred.

His Honor feels that at a moment ſo intereſting as the preſent, & on an occaſion ſo important to the Inhabitants of this Province, a public acknowledgment is due to the Gentlemen who compoſed the Grand and Petit Juries under the Special Commiſſion, for their patience, diligence, firmneſs, and juſtice in the diſcharge of their ſolemn duties.—And he begs to expreſs his conviction, that their conduct in this inſtance, honorable to themſelves, and highly beneficial in its conſequences to their country, will be to our Parent State a ſatisfactory proof of the general loyalty and fidelity of this valuable Colony, and (what is moſt to be wiſhed) that its happy effect will be to prevent the neceſſity on their part, of a frequent recurrence to a duty ſo painful.

By His Honor's Command,

ROBERT R. LORING, Secretary.

GRANT POWELL,
Official Principal, C. P.

W. W. BALDWIN, Regiſter C. P.

Mr Monroe to the Envoys extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary of the U States.

Department of State, June 25, 1814.

Gentlemen,—No communication has been received from the joint mission which was appointed to meet the commissioners of the British government, at Gottenburgh. A letter from Mr. Bayard, at Amsterdam, of the 28th of March, was the last from either of our commissioners. It was inferred, from that letter, and other circumstances that Mr Bayard, Mr. Gallatin and Mr. Adams would be in Gottenburgh, and it has been understood, from other sources, that Mr Clay and Mr. Russel had arrived there about the 15th of April. It is, therefore expected that a meeting will have taken place in May, and that we shall soon be made acquainted with your sentiments of the public result of the negociation.

It is impossible, with the lights which have reached us, to ascertain the present disposition of the British government towards an accommodation with the U. S. We think it probable that the late events in France may have had a tendency to increase its pretentions.

At war with G. Britain, and injured by France, the U. States have sustained the attitude founded on those relations. No reliance was placed on the good offices of France, in bringing the war with G. B. to a satisfactory conclusion. Looking steadily to an honorable peace, and the ultimate attainment of justice from both powers, the President has endeavored, by a consistent and honorable policy, to take advantage of every circumstance that might promote that result. He, nevertheless, knew that France held a place in the political system of Europe and the world, which as a check on England, could not fail to be useful to us.—What effect the late events may have had, in these respects, is the important circumstance of which you are doubtless better informed than we can be.

The President accepted the mediation of Russia, from a respect for the Character of the Emperor, and a belief that our cause, in all the controversy would gain strength by being made known to him. On the same principle, he preferred (in accepting the British overture, to treat independently of the Russian mediation) to open the negociation on the continent, rather than at London.

It was inferred from the general policy of Russia, and the friendly sentiments and respect for both would have much influence with the British cabinet in promoting a pacific policy towards us. The manner, however, in which it is understood that a general pacification is taking place; the influence Great Britain may have in modifying the arrangements involved in it; the resources she may be able to employ exclusively against the U. States; and the uncertainty of the precise course which Russia may pursue in relation to the war between the U. S. and Great Britain, naturally claim attention, and raise the important question, in reference to the subject of impressment, on which it is presumed your negociation will essentially turn, whether your powers ought not to be enlarged, so as to enable you to give those circumstances all the weight to which they may be entitled. On full consideration, it has been decided, that in case no stipulation can be obtained from the British government at this moment, when its pretensions may have been much heightened by recent events, and the state of Europe be most favourable to them, either relinquishing the claim to impress from American vessels, or discontinuing the practice, even in confideration of the proposed exclusion from them of British seamen, you may concur in an article, stipulating, that the subject of impressment, together with that of commerce between the two countries, be referred to a seperate negociation, to be undertaken without delay, at such place as you may be able to agree on, preferring this city, if to be obtained. I annex at the close of this letter, a project of an article, expressing, more distinctly, the idea which it is intended to communicate, not meaning thereby to restrain you in any respect as to form. Commerce and seamen, the objects of impressment, may, with great propriety, be arranged in the same instrument. By stipulating that commissioners shall forthwith be appointed for the purpose, and that all rights on this subject shall in the mean time, be reserved, the faith of the B. government will be pledged to a fair experiment in an amicable mode, and the honor and rights of the U. S. secured. The United States having resulted by war the practice of impressment, and continued the war untill that practice had ceased, by a peace in Europe, their object had has been essentially obtained for the present. It may reasonably be expected, that the arrangement contemplated and provided for, will take effect before a new war in Europe shall furnish an occasion for reviving the practice. Should this arrangement, however fail, and the practice be again revived, the U. S. will again be at liberty to repel it by war; and that they will do so cannot be doubted; for after the proof which they have already given of a firm resistance in that mode persevered in, until the practice had ceased, under circumstances the most unfavorable, it cannot be presumed that the practice will ever be tolerated again. Certain it is, that every day will render it more ineligible in G Britain to make the attempt.

In contemplating the appointment of commissioners to be made after the ratification of the present treaty, to negociate and conclude a treaty to regulate commerce and provide against impressment it is meant only to show the extent to which you may go, in a spirit of accommodation, if necessary. Should the British government be willing to take the subject up immediately with you, it would be much preferred; in which case the proposed article would, of course be adapted to the purpose.

Information has been received from a quarter deserving attention, that the late events in France have produced such an effect on the British government, as to make it probable that a demand will be made at Gottenburg, to surrender our right to the fisheries, to abandon all trade beyond the Cape of Good Hope, & cede Louisiana to Spain. We cannot believe that such a demand will be made; should it be, you will of course treat it as it deserves. These rights must not be brought into discussion. If insisted on, your negociations will cease.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) James Monroe.

"Whereas by the peace in Europe, the essential causes of the war between the U. States and G. Britain, and particularly the practice of impressment, have ceased, and a sincere desire exists to arrange, in a manner satisfactory to both parties, all questions concerning seamen, and it is also their desire and intention to arrange, in a like satisfactory manner, the commerce between the two countries it is therefore agreed, that commissioners shall forthwith be appointed on both sides, to meet at with full power to negociate and conclude a treaty as soon as it may be practicable, for the arrangement of those important interests. It is nevertheless understood, that until such treaty be formed, each party shall retain all its rights, and that all American citizens who have been impressed into the British service shall be forthwith discharged."

Orleans, New, a city of North America, capital of Louisiana built during the regency of the Duke of Orleans. In 1788 seven eighths of this city were [illegible] of the Mississippi.

Lon. 89 53 W.

Louisiana, a large country of North America, bounded on the E. by the Mississippi, on the S by the Gulf of Mexico, on the W by New Mexico, and running indefinitely N. It is agreeably situate between the extremes of heat and cold; its climate varying as it extends towards the N. The timber is as fine as any in the world; and the quantities of oak, ash, mulberry, walnut, cherry, cypress, and cedar, are astonishing. The neighbourhood of the Mississippi, besides furnishes the richest fruits in great variety. The soil is particularly adapted for hemp, flax, and tobacco; and indigo is a staple commodity, which commonly yields the planter three or four cuttings a year. It is intersected by a number of fine rivers, among which are the Notchitoches, and the Adayes, or Mexicano. This Country was discovered by Ferdinand de Soto, in 1541; traversed by M. de la Salle, in 1682; and settled by Lewis XIV in the beginning of this century. In 1763, it was ceded to Spain; in 1800 conveyed to France; and in 1803 purchased by the United States.

WINTER.

What art thou, frost? and whence are thy keen flores

Dread, thou secret all invading power,
Whom even th' illusive fluid cannot fly?
Not the potent energy, unseen,
Myriads of little salts, or hook'd, or frop'd
Like double wedges, and still'd immense
Thro' water, earth, and ether? Hence at eve,
Steam'd eager from the red horizon round,
With the fierce rage of Winter deep suffus'd,
An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool
Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career
Arrests the bickering stream. The lootened ice,
Let down the flood, and half diffus'd by day,
Rejoins no more; but to the sedgy bank
Fast grows, or gathers round the pointed stone,
A crystal pavement, by the breath of heaven
Cemented firm; till, feal'd from shore to shore,
The whole imprison'd river growls below
Loud rings the frozen earth, and hard reflects
A double noise, while, at his evening watch,
The village dog deters the nightly thief;
The heifer lows; the distant water-fall
Swells in the breeze; and, with the hasty tread
Of traveller, the hollow-sounding plain
Shakes from afar. The full ethereal round,
Infinite worlds disclosing to the view,
Shines out intensely keen; and, all one cope
Of starry glitter, glows from pole to pole.
From pole to pole the rigid influence falls,
Thro' the still night, intensely clear, strong,
And arrests Nature fast. Fleecy snow,
The mute, interrifing o'er the drooping world,
Lets her pale eye unfrozen. Then appears
The various labour of the silent night:
From the dripping eave, and dumb cascade,
Where late torrents only seem to roar,
Pendent icicles; the frost work fair,
Fancy'd figures
White frouted o'er the hill, the frozen brook.
A wild track, child gaming on the more;
The forest bent beneath the plumy wave;
And by the frost refin'd the whiter snow,
Incrusted hard, and sounding to the tread
Of early shepherd, as he pensive seeks
His pining flock, or from the mountain top,
Pleas'd with the slippery surface, swift descends.

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1814.

The courier arrived yesterday, but to the Editor's disappointment brought no papers. In most of those latterly received he sees with some regret, the Printers tournament commenced in our sister Province—the agitated subject is open to much acrimonious animadversion on the one side, and palliative justification on the other; but little public good can arise from its continuance, whilst much private enmity and some private evil may. Printing Offices are not the tribunals where defaulters of any grade or description can be condemned or acquitted—Printers too frequently deal out their pros and cons as whim, spleen, or disappointment may decide. Calm and dispassionate discussion is the real clue to facts; and they should be fully ascertained before even a Printer's judgment should be pronounced. A Coroner's report is founded upon the verdict of an inquest, and why should not a Printer's have better data than common report, which often arise without foundation? Should an officer find himself injured by public opinion, or thro' misrepresentation, it is not from our craft that he is to seek redress, but from an impartial court of his peers, a course which should doubtlessly be followed when cases urge its expediency.

He is not without his fears that, like him self, some of his brethren may have been infected with a strong military penchant. How man wishes are uncontrollable, and happy to most, are unattainable. To exemplify the vanity of indulging them, he will state his own case——Some years since, fair weather and the performance of a Regimental Band, wrought him up to a species of momentary fervor. It has caused him to whisker, gaiter, & boot—it has wi hout his seeming agency, built him bar over the right eye-brow. When unnecessary evolutions, he has placed his left arm a-kimbo—and supported by his right, reclined on a muff—bulging out—he has buckled his stock elosely as a tourniquet to distend his eye balls and force colour to his sallow visage. But, after his significant gambols were not quite found, or, what was more mortifying, unnoticed; with but a solitary exception, that is, a recruiting sergeant once deigned to shake a paw at him——When in company with ladies, he has whistled the grenadiers' march—once led off by a waltz—and his mouth has uttered in past time, with arms and legs, he has beat time with head hands and feet, and undergone all the bodily contortions of an Otaheitan in the Timorotee dance.

Long! long indeed, had he cherished the hope of becoming a soldier—when (death to his prospects) at the last draft of human lots he drew what? why a printers ticket.—Often had he feasted mentally on the many acts of soldiership which history would have to record of him. An Automaton (who has been physically dead for five years) as he has been, can fully appreciate posthumous praise. Had his ticket been a soldiers—what might have not followed? he might have figured in war with General Hull and some other nameless cotemporaries—he might have rivalled Jack the Giant Killer; or, (in fashionable tactics) he might have become an indefatigable Drill Serjeant, or a great Field Day man.—Let readers ask themselves whether beings under such nervous influence as the York Editor has been, are fit members for the Sorbonne—or whether they are most competent to decree a triumph or a strait jacket to any warrior.

It is not without reluctance that the Editor ever writes a line to help out the Gazette, but when matter fails as in the present instance, he does it from necessity and not choice. The near close of the season—local retrospect, and future prospects, would be inducements to most editors; but, as he could say little new or important on either subject, he will merely congratulate his friends on the health so generally enjoyed in the Province; on the general loyalty of its inhabitants; on the plentiful crops from the farms; on the deserving sons of Neptune and Mars; on the gallant Canadian who has our unlimited confidence; and on our present and prospective blessings—he wishes them diuated and continued; and, (much to be wished) he wishes them deserved.

He cannot forbear to express his wishes that some additional legions may opportunely be furnished us: for truly, contending against such disproportionate odds as we have contended, our heroes have invariably fought with the desperate determination of gladiators—They seem to have borrowed "Deus et mon droit" from the Arms of our gracious Sovereign. It seems their leading impulse, and indelibly engraved on each man's honest front.

We have listened to the recent rumours of peace with the United States—we view them as unfounded in every point—If the letter and spirit of Madison's instructions to his commissioners of 25th June, have a possible affirmation, we let peace down as distant indeed.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office Kingston, 1st Dec 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Niagara, [illegible] its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following obfervations pointing out the moft material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be publifhed for the information of the public :—

Firft, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S" in "Piaftres," is diftinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the cafe in any of the fets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills.

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider fpace.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, clofe to the "N" and the point "." much fmaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair ftrokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater diftances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair ftroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, ftanding clofer to each other than in the genuine.

The fame obfervations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, firft, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and ftanding further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the fame defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair ftroke appears, the impreffion being much ftronger.

LONDON, Aug. 29—Bonaparte, although born on the 5th of February, thought proper to call the 15 of August his birth-day, in order that the festival of Louis XIII. on occasion of his having a son, and be perpetuated in his name. This was always one of the grandest religious ceremonies in France, and Bonparte aimed at converting it by time and habit to adoration of himself.

The Court Martial ordered on Major-General Proctor assembled on Tuesday at the Court House, but was adjourned till yesterday, (owing to the absence of one of the members) when the number being complete, the charges were read, and the evidence of Lieut. Col. Warburton was heard in support thereof—the Court was then adjourned till 11 o'clock this day.

From the Montreal Courant of the 7th inst.

After the paper was prepared for press the Quebec Gazette was received, containing the following:

LONDON, OCT. 27.

It is said that Sir George Prevost is at length ordered home.

Vigorous prosecution of the war in America.

Government has, at length, come to the resolution of prosecuting the war with the utmost vigour in America: our army there will be on the grandest scale. Not only Sir G. Prevost, but most of the Senior Officers come home immediately.

The disembodying the militia is stopped, and all our disposable force will, without loss of time, be sent to America; even cavalry is mentioned, with a large force of Artillery.

The arrangements for the present is said to be, that Major General Kempt with rank as a Lieut. General, shall command in Canada, and Major General Pakenham, as Lieutenant General shall command the land and detached Armies. Most probably a commander of great name will, ere long go out to command in Chief.

The Staff immediately going out in the Statira frigate, is as follows:

The Hon. Sir E. Pakenham, K. B. com... ...t. Second ... ...nerals. ... Hospitals. ...ecretary. ... General. ... to the D. ... General ... the gren... ...r goes out ... Cavalry, ...ons will go ... they can be ... ...e convoy bound ... ...outh Sound on ... ...ition of the Van... ...and Ceylon. We ... ...ence Troops in ... ...e cavalry. The ... ...th a full breeze as did the troops for Cork and Beerhaven, and the Mackerel schooner, for America, charged with important despatches.

The 2nd, or Gaelic Highlanders, have received orders to embark; their destination is supposed to be America.

Oct. 25—A body of Marine Officers have been suddenly ordered to embark in ships which are under orders to Portsmouth for America, viz.—Major Bateman, Cranmer Farman, Garthwayte, Sparke, White, Elliot, & Reid; Lieutenants Toole, Wilson, Phillips, Shipton, Scotton, Skinner, Carden, Capel, Guernsey, and Stone

November.—In addition to the list of Staff given in a former paper, that proceeding with Sir Edward Pakenham, this gallant and enterprising officer will be joined by Major Gen. Keane and the troops which embarked at Plymouth; and likewise the following officers to go as Gen. Pakenham's staff; Col. ... to command the artillery, Lieut. Col. Burgoyne to command the Engineer department—Soane Esq. Purveyor General.

Report says, that Col. Harvey, of the 14th Dragoons, and Col. Barnard, of the Rifle corps, both of them officers who have greatly distinguished themselves under the Duke of Wellington, go out as Brigadier Generals.

Within the last few days, the command in chief of our armies in America had, in the military circles, been mentioned as being offered to different officers—Sir Thomas Picton, Sir Edward Paget, and Sir George Murray. The latest report is, that Lord Beresford is on his return from Lisbon, in order to proceed to America.

Thursday morning, the soldiers that compose the second battalion 93d regiment, under the command of Major Donald M'Donald, a detachment from the Depot of the Royal Scots, under the command of Captain Logan, and the Depot of the 40th regiment, under the command of Captain Kingdom, to the amount of 700 effective men, embarked at Leith, on board of transports for Cork, to join their respective battalions that are preparing for embarkation to America.

Monies to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 18 Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Pistares," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the fets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills.

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair stroke in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "r."

" in "Exchange" has the [illegible] it Two as in [illegible] hair stroke

LONDON, Aug. 29—Bonaparte, although born on the 5th of February, thought proper to call the 15 of August his birth-day, in order that the festival of Louis XIII. on occasion of his having a son, and be perpetuated in his name. This was always one of the grandest religious ceremonies in France, and Bonaparte aimed at converting it by time and habit to adoration of himself.

And 3d, of the current supply of money from the import form internal duties, and from the sales of public lands, which ceased to be a foundation of any rational estimate of revenue, to provide even for the dividend on the funded debt where it was found that the treasury notes (only requiring, indeed a cash payment at the distance of a year) to whomsoever they were issued at the treasury, and almost as soon as they were issued, reached the hands of the collectors in payment of debts, duties & taxes: thus disappointing and defeating the only remaining expectation of productive revenue.

"The act of authorizing the receipt of treasury notes, in payment of subscriptions to a public loan, was passed I fear, too late to answer the purpose for which it was designed. It promises, at this time, little relief either as an instrument to raise money, or to absorb the claim for treasury notes, and from other obvious causes, the dividend on the funded debt, has been punctually paid; a large amount of treasury notes has already been dishonored, and the hopes of preventing further injury and reproach in transacting the business of the treasury [illegible] afford a moment's con-

It is said that Sir George Prevoit is at length ordered home.

Vigorous prosecution of the war in America

Government has, at length, come to the resolution of prosecuting the war with the utmost vigour in America: our army there will be on the grandest scale. Not only Sir G Prevoit, but most of the Senior Officers come home immediately.

The disembodying the militia is stopped, and all our disposable free will, without loss of time, be sent to America; even cavalry is mentioned, with a large force of Artillery.

The arrangements for the present is said to be, that Major General Kempt with rank as a Lieut. General, shall command in Canada; and Major General Pakenham, as Lieutenant General shall command the road and detach[illegible] Armies. Most probably a commander of great name will, 'ere long go out to command in Chief

The 22d, or Gordon Highlanders, have received orders to embark; their destination is supposed to be America.

Oct 31—A body of Marine Officers have been suddenly ordered to embark in ships which are under orders at Portsmouth for America, viz.—Major Bartleman, Captains Farman, Garthwayte, Spurin, White, Elliot, & Rose; Lieutenants Toole, Willson, Phillips, Shipten, Beeston, Skinner, Carden, Capel, Guernsey, and Stone

November.—In addition to the list of Staff given in a former paper, that proceeding with Sir Edward Pakenham, this gallant and enterprising officer will be joined by Major Gen. Kean and the troops which embarked at Plymouth; and likewise the following officers to go as Gen. Pakenham's staff; Col. Dickson to command the artillery, Lieut. Col. Burgoyne to command the Engineer department—Soare Esq. Purveyor General.

Report says, that Col. Harvey, of the 14th Dragoons, and Col. Barnard, of the Rifle-corps, both of them officers who have greatly distinguished themselves under the Duke of Wellington, go out as Brigadier Generals.

Within the last few days, the command in chief of our armies in America had, in the military circles, been mentioned as being offered to different officers—Sir Thomas Picton, Sir Edward Paget, and Sir George Murray. The latest report is, that Lord Beresford is on his return from Lisbon, in order to proceed to America.

Thursday morning, the soldiers that composed the second battalion 92d regiment, under the command of Major Donald M'Donald, a detachment from the Depot of the Royal Scots, under the command of Captain Logan, and the Depot of the 94th regiment, under the command of Captain Kingdom, in all 700 effective men, embarked at Leith, on board of transports for Cork, to join their respective battalions that are preparing for embarkation to America

On the Evening of the 2nd January, J. P. RADAMULLER Keeper of the Light House on Gibraltar Point. From circumstances there is every moral proof of his having been murdered. If the horrid crime admits of aggravation, when the inoffensive and benevolent character of the unfortunate sufferer are considered—his murder will be pronounced most barbarous and inhuman—The parties left with him, are the supposed perpetrators, and are imprisoned.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public.

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Pleasures," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair stroke in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "e" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "r"

" in "Exchange" has the [illegible] hair str[illegible]

Extracts from the Speech of the Hon. Cyrus King, of Massachusetts, in the U. States House of Assembly, Oct. 22, against an Increase of the Taxes, as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

"MR. CHAIRMAN,

The consequence of this has been such as was probably expected and wished by the government. Many of our respectable citizens, sailors, and mechanics, have, for subsistence been forced into the ranks of your army, and marched into Canada. Yes, sir, I have to regret, nay to lament, the fate of many valuable citizens, some personal friends, who have thus fallen victims to the diseases of that climate, or the sword of the enemy—far distant from their homes, with no friendly hand to relieve their sufferings or sooth their distress; in death they cast a fond recollection back upon their country, and upon the dear objects of their affection and there close their eyes in despair. With the hope of giving some relief, I have since entered the dwellings of their families, once the abodes of their prosperity and happiness—now of wretchedness and woe. I have beheld their disconsolate widows, and helpless sparens, in misery and want; and their children crying for bread: Do then, Oh God, now their only supporter, according to the petition in thy prayer, give them each day their daily bread.

Fourth reason, cannot unite in supporting this administration, with Mr. Madison at their head, because he has always shown a settled and determined spirit of hostility, against the enterprize, the commerce, the rights, and above all, the patriots of New-England. In confirmation of this, with mingled sensations of pride and disdain, I descend to notice the mean, dastardly connection between this government and one John Henry, where your President gave to that scoundrel and traitor, fifty thousand dollars, of the peoples money, to purchase up as he fondly hoped, calumny and detraction against the first patriots in New-England. That he was disappointed in his malicious and revengeful hopes and designs, was not his fault. The traitor received his fifty thousand dollars from the hand of your President, who sent him, in one of our public ships, out of the reach of justice, even to the imperial Bonaparte.

We complain of the oppression of administration, and are told they are the choice of the people. The people do not choose rulers to oppress and tyranize. The moment they thus act, they forfeit their characters of rulers, and ought to be deposed. What, sir? shall we be told that a hereditary sovereign in Europe, may, for his crimes, be deposed and brought to the block——while a petty tyrant of four years standing, "strong enough to oppress, but unable to protect," shall in this free country live out his political life? No, sir—the same crime which would bring one to the block, ought to bring the other to the halter

No, sir, New-England influence was carefully excluded from the palace (before Mr. Madison permitted the enemy to burn it) lest the poor slave should be contaminated. Yes, sir, I consider this administration as alien to us. So much so, that New-England would be justified in declaring them like all foreign nations, "enemies in war, in peace friends." The States of New-England, Sir, can never be Satellites in any System. But like primary planets, they revolve round a sun of federalism, until the Almighty hand which created, shall dash them from their orbits forever.

Nay, more; this hall itself is demonstration; driven as we have been by the enemy, and the neglect of the government, from our splendid capitol, to the places of mere patent machines. And that we have the honor even of occupying the places of patent machines, we owe to the charity of the enemy begged by Dr. Thornton, of the patent office, that he might have where to bestow these models of arts and of taste. Yes, sir, every part of your city exhibits vestiges of the enemy and neglect of your government.—Yes, sir, the proud banner of that enemy has waved over the capitol, and all your public edifices are ruins. Add to this—your government, with the President at their head, pale with fear, flying before a few thousand British troops. The patriot turns from this scene with horror and disgust. Is this the man whom the people have chosen "to go in and out before them" and to lead their armies to battle and to conquest? Is this the kind of protection which he affords to this bleeding land? From such protection, and such protectors, O Lord deliver my country!

ANECDOTE OF GEN. BLUCHER.

The following anecdote of this Hero may be implicitly relied on; we have it from a gentleman who was present. On Sunday last, a Lady from Hemmersmith with her family, requested an audience of the Field-Marshal. On being ushered into the room where he was sitting, she was so overpowered by her feelings as to burst into a flood of tears, and sunk senseless on the floor. It was some time before she could be restored, and on being anxiously asked the cause of her emotion, she said that she had entreated that interview, to thank the General for having saved the life of her son. He was Lieut. of Marines on board the Courageux man of war, which was stationed in the Baltic in the year 1812, at a period of war between Great-Britain and Prussia; he commanded a boat's crew who had volunteered to effect a landing, and in the attempt they were cast away in a violent storm on the coast Pomerania, of which province and strong fortress of Colberg, General Blucher was Governor. He made every possible exertion to save these brave men, and succeeded in bringing them to Colberg. They had been some days in the boat, they were naked, famishing, and pennyless. He clothed them, he fed them, and supplied them with money and every other necessary, himself superintending the arrangements for their comfort, and finally restored them to their country. So wholly was the Lady overpowered by her maternal feeling, s that it was with difficulty she could assume sufficient calmness to relate the above narrative, and when she had finished, she threw herself at the Hero's feet, and there in a sort of frenzy snatched a scrap of paper which was lying on the table, which she said she would keep as an eternal memorial of the hero who had saved the life of her son. The General who had been no unmoved spectator of this scene, took out a card, on which he wrote his name, which he presented to her, saying at the time, good God! what have I done; when a soldier beholds a fellow-creature in distress, shall he stay to ask whether he is a friend or an enemy!

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 18 Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, are introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(h)" the tail of the "S" in "PLastr's," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower extremity, which is not the case in any of the fess "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the back, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point is much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the back letter "Ten Dollars" particularly in the "R." are finer and at nearer distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the back letter Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r"

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1815

In our laſt, for the ſimple purpoſe of ſhewing how palatable Madiſon's meaſures are, we gave ſome extracts from the ſpeech of a popular member of the U. S. Houſe of Repreſentatives—We now publiſh ſome from Madiſon's gazette the Nat. Int. to ſhew how confidently he thought and ſpoke of our ſubjecting the Canadas from us.

Theſe extracts however, are but a faint portraiture of his preſumption and profanity; yet they are an unqualified avowal of a long entertained and deliberate intention of robbing the Britiſh Empire of theſe provinces—and they developе in glowing colours the cunning ſophiſtry of the hue & cry of impreſſments and orders of Council. A folio volume could not blazon their real views in declaring war, more effectually.

Let us but preſerve the Country from their graſp; let their privateering become unproductive, and we ſee few other points of annoyance: but on theſe ſide we ſee but two alternatives, and one of them deſperate.

"Theſe are in brief our views of the ſubject, and our reaſons for believing that before July next, every Soldier of the enemy in both the Canadas, will be captive or ſlain, and the territory compleatly in our poſſeſſion.

"The value and conſequences of this acquiſition of two provinces of the enemy, ſuppoſing it to be made, as we do not doubt it will, we ſhall reſerve for a future paper." Nov 4 1813.

"We have already expreſſed our ideas relative to the probability of an early acquiſition to the United-States, by conqueſt of both the Canadas. They may prove erroneous. We may not obtain poſſeſſion of theſe territories in the next Summer. But eventually, they muſt be ours; and it is worth to enquire into their value, and the means of holding them after they fall into our power.

"Since then our enemy has forced us to war, and forced us to territorial reprizals for oceanic outrages, and ſtill perſiſts in refuſing us a recognition of our violated rights, we truſt that our readers will generally agree with us that the Canadas once ours, they ſhall be as theſe States have been, for ever divorced from Britiſh Sovereignty." Nov 9.

"But ſuppoſe Britain had fairly met us under the mediation of Ruſſia, & that on this day, on which we hope & believe Montreal, is in the poſſeſſion of the army a peace ſhall have been concluded at St Peterſburg. We do not know what the views of Government may be, or what may be the opinions of oppoſition editors, but we have no heſitation in expreſſing our own—and that is, that Mr. Gallatin, Mr. Adams, and Mr. Bayard, as well as the Britiſh negociators, will have been guilty of a groſs inattention to the intereſts of their reſpective countries, if they have not included in the treaty a ſtipulation for retaining to each country ſo much territory as may be occupied by either on the day of ratification of the treaty. Upper-Canada alone will be worth to us in ſecurity and tranquility to the N. frontier, in breaking up the ſcalp-markets at York and Malden, excluſive of the value of the territory and its waters, as much as the whole coſt of the war to this day." Nov. 17. 1814.

"And if we conquer the Canadas, & conquer them by the bleſſing of God we will, what are we to do with them if we dont retain them; ſhall they revert to the enemy, to be again made a harbour for Indian prophets, and Britiſh ſpies & traitors? Or ſhall the views of the patriots of the revolution in regard to theſe provinces be realized." ibid.

Late Foreign News.

Entry of the Emperor of Russia and King of Prussia into Vienna.

VIENNA, September 26.

The Emperor of Russia made his journey from Peterfburgh to Vienna with incredible rapidity.—The artillery placed on the road from Brunn to Vienna gave the signal of the arrival of his Majesty in the morning of yesterday. At eleven he was announced at Welkersdorff. The Emperor Alexander found there the King of Prussia, who awaited him and the two monarchs continued their journey together. As soon as the Emperor of Austria was informed of the approach of these Illustrious guests, he departed from his Palace, mounted on his horse accompanied by all the Princes, Archdukes and General Officers, to meet the illustrious foreigners. In the mean time all the troops of the garrison, the arquebusiers, and the noble Hungarian guard, were in parade at the entrance of the Prater, and shortly after the city guards joined these corps. The three Monarchs met on the left bank of the Danube, at the end of the Tabor bridge, and after the most affectionate compliments the Emperor of Russia and King of Prussia mounted the state horses brought for their conveyance. The entire cavalcade crossed the bridge. The Monarchs made a short review of the troops which were on parade, and at 12 the procession commenced solemn entrance into the capital of Austria. The regiment of Hussars of Prince Schwartzenberg opened the march: the curassiers of Albert or Saxe Teschin in person.—Then came the Emperor and King, having on his left the Emperor of Russia, and on his right the King of Prussia; a numerous and brilliant Staff followed; the noble guards and other military bodies closed the march. The procession lasted an hour, and in this period a thousand cannon were discharged from the ramparts. As the weather was fine, and it was Sunday, it may be said, that the whole population of Vienna, and the neighbourhood had collected to witness a spectacle never before seen—three powerful Monarchs of Europe sincerely and intimately united for the repose of the world. The air echoed with the acclamations and cries of joy that accompanied their majesties to the imperial Palace, where the guards were paraded. The Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia alighted and entered their appartments. The persons of their Court, and their respective suits, attended those Monarchs.

Extract of a Letter Dated Banger, November 15, 1814.

"Since I wrote you last, business has become brisk in this country. Castine the former shire town of this country, 35 miles from Banger, on the eastern side of the Penobscot, and now in possession of the British, is perhaps one of the most admirable military positions in the world. The harbor is one of the finest in the U. States. The British consider it a most important acquisition, and are making it impregnable by land. The place is something like Gibraltar.

The Peninsula is elevated, and connected with the main by a low neck, across which they are digging a ditch 30 feet wide, Several batteries on the hill render this neck impassable.

POTATOE-ROOT—The College of Medicine of Stockholm has discovered that the leaves of the Potatoe root, dried in a particular manner, give a tobacco far superior in fragrance to ordinary tobacco. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1815

House opened on the 1st

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

SINCE the last Session of this Legislature, many important and unexpected events have taken place.

The European Continent, after having been long oppressed by the Calamities of Tyranny and of War, has at last been revived, by the return of Tranquility and Peace.

Contemplating with pleasure these glorious events, which will transmit the names of Men, and of Nations, of the present day, with Honor, to future generations; we have the additional gratification to know, that, under Divine Providence, this happy revolution in Human affairs, has chiefly been accomplished by the Arms and Councils of our Parent State.

It would give me peculiar satisfaction to have it in my power to announce to you, that the Blessings of Peace were extended over every part of the British Empire. But, in this Province, the conflict is not yet at an end; we have still a most arduous contest to maintain.

With respect to internal Police, I deem it proper to recommend to your consideration, the repair of the Public Highways:—a measure, not only necessary for the accommodation of the inhabitants of the Province, in their ordinary and commercial intercourses; but, more especially, for facilitating the movements of His Majesty's Troops, so essentially requisite for the Public protection and defence.

The same causes which induced the Legislature, at the last Session, to suspend the Habeas Corpus Act, render it advisable that you take into your most serious consideration, the expediency of further continuing that suspension.

Your attention will necessarily be called to such Acts as require either to be continued or renewed. And such other matters as require the consideration of the Legislature, your knowledge, grounded on experience, will suggest.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have ordered the Provincial Accounts to be laid before you; not doubting but that they will be examined by you with your accustomed assiduity and attention.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

It is unnecessary for me to enter into a detail of the Military operations in this Province, during the last Campaign. With Pride, and Pleasure, will every Loyal Subject rejoice, that, notwithstanding the inequality on our side, in numbers, and the perseverance and avowed determination of the Enemy, His Majesty's Regular, and Militia Forces, have gloriously sustained the high character of British Soldiers, and have rendered every effort of the Enemy, to gain possession of this Province, vain and ineffectual.

I need not exhort you, I trust, to use Despatch in conducting the Business of the Session.

And I have only to add, that I will enjoy particular satisfaction in concurring with you in every measure, which can tend, in any way, to promote the peace, prosperity and happiness of this Province.

We were favored by a friend with a Montreal Courant of 14th—its general contents are as follow.

The Crown Prince had accepted the Constitution decreed at Eidswald—a wise measure which was tranquilizing Norway.——France has formally protested in the Vienna Congress against the aggrandizement of any of the parties concerned (this we view at present as a mere negative) her protest is transformed by the Statement that she will have no participation in such steps. The Ghent negotiation waited further instructions from America. A new diplomatic Character had gone to Vienna, to claim property in part of the Island of Elba; Bonaparte's further fate was to be decided on at the Congress. Whatever was done by the Hartford Convention is kept secret——Our cruizers are not idle on the American Coast—from 60 to 70 of our Vessels had arrived at the Mississippi with troops, New Orleans their supposed object of attack. The American General Jackson not suspecting the visit had dismissed 3000 Militia——The credit of the American National funds so deplorably low that even Contractors and Staff Agents had refused endorsing Treasury Notes! ——Public charities encouraged in our Sister Province—partial fires at Montreal and Quebec fortunate with but little damage. Goods plenty and the provision markets a perfect contrait to ours.

[BIRTH] At Prescott on Thursday night the Lady of Captain Loring A. D. C. and Private Secretary to His Honor Lieutenant General Drummond, was safely delivered of a daughter. The happy Father had returned from a state of captivity with the Enemy but a few hours previous to the joyful event.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

Presidents Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Piastres," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, as the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up; And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

It would give me peculiar satisfaction to have it in my power to announce to you, that the Blessings of Peace were extended over every part of the British Empire. But, in this Province, the conflict is not yet at an end; we have still a most arduous contest to maintain.

With respect to internal Police, I deem it proper to recommend to your consideration, the repair of the Public Highways:—a measure, not only necessary for the accommodation of the inhabitants of the Province, in their ordinary and commercial intersourses; but, more especially, for facilitating the movements of His Majesty's Troops, so essentially requisite for the Public protection and defence.

The same causes which induced the Legislature, at the last Session, to suspend the Habeas Corpus Act, render it advisable that you take into your most serious consideration, the expediency of further continuing that suspension.

Your attention will necessarily be called to such Acts as require either to be continued or renewed. And such other matters as require the consideration of the Legislature, your knowledge, grounded on experience, will suggest.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have ordered the Provincial Accounts to be laid before you; nor doubting but that they will be examined by you with your accustomed assiduity and attention.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

It is unnecessary for me to enter into a detail of the Military operations in this Province, during the last Campaign. With Pride, and Pleasure, will every Loyal Subject rejoice, that, notwithstanding the inequality on our side, in numbers, and the perseverance and avowed determination of the Enemy, His Majesty's Regular, and Militia Forces, have gloriously sustained the high character of British Soldiers, and have rendered every effort of the Enemy, to gain possession of this Province, vain and ineffectual.

I need not exhort you, I trust, to use Despatch in conducting the Business of the Session.

And I have only to add, that I will enjoy particular satisfaction in concurring with you in every measure, which can tend, in any way, to promote the peace, prosperity and happiness of this Province.

We are favored by a friend with a Montreal Courier of 14th—its general contents are as follow.

The Crown Prince had accepted the Constitution decreed at Eidswald—a wise measure which was tranquilizing Norway.——France has formally protested to the Vienna Congress against the aggrandizement of any of the parties concerned (this we view at present as a mere negative) her protest is transformed by the Statement that she will have no participation in such steps. The Ghent negociation waited further instructions from America. A new diplomatic Character had gone to Vienna, to claim property in part of the Island of Elba; Bonaparte's further fate was to be decided on at the Congress. Whatever was done by the Hartford Convention is kept secret——Our cruizers are not idle on the American Coast—from 60 to 70 of our Vessels had arrived at the Mississippi with troops, New Orleans their supposed object of attack. The American General Jackson not suspecting the visit had dismissed 3000 Militia——The credit of the American National funds so deplorably low that even Contractors and Staff Agents had refused endorsing Treasury Notes!——Public charities encouraged in our Sister Province—partial fires at Montreal and Quebec fortunate with but little damage. Goods plenty and the provision markets a perfect contrait to ours.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Piastres," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills.

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, as the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up; And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1815.

President's Office, 24th Jan. 1815.

His Honor the President has been pleased to appoint Mr. Allan M'Nabb, to be Serjeant at Arms to the House of Assembly, vice Stanton, resigned.

February 5, 1815.

His Honor the President has been pleased to appoint Mr. John M'Lean of Cornwall, to be Clerk of the Peace for the Eastern District; and also to be Register for the Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Russell, in the said District.

Among other instances of the treatment experienced by our officers who have unhappily fallen into the hands of the enemy, we record the following,—of the truth of which we are in possession of such "damning proofs" as to enable us to pronounce the fact unquestionable.

One of our officers in depot at Cheshire in Massachusett's, having been authorised by a gentleman at Boston to draw upon him for a certain sum, put the bill for the amount thereof into the hands of the deputy Marshal having charge of the prisoners of war at Pittsfield and the adjacent depots, whose services to negociate the same, had been voluntarily proffered.

It will be recollected that the banks of the state of New York having stopt payment in specie, a very large premium was necessarily created in favor of Boston where it continued to be issued.

Under pretence that a letter containing the oath had been mislaid, our officer did not receive his money for three weeks after the sale of the bill, and then only to the simple amount of it. An explanation being demanded, the deputy Marshal, (who is himself from Boston,) actually had the face to profess total ignorance of the existence of any premium; and stated in direct terms, that he had negociated the bill at the Albany bank, and had remitted to our officer the whole proceeds thereof.

Apprehensive no doubt, that so simple a circumstance, notwithstanding his precautions to the contrary, could not fail to be discovered, he affected the utmost surprise on the occasion, and said he would make inquiry on the subject.—What followed? About a fortnight afterwards the premium to a large amount was inclosed to our officer, with a letter from the deputy Marshal, stating, that he found upon investigation, the same had been credited to him by the bank at Albany,—and that altho having sustained that he had remitted to our officer the whole proceeds of the bill.

Such conduct needs no comment, and must in the mind of every honest man, carry with it that disgrace which is indelibly attached not only to the individual, but to those who employ him.

We understand that Major General Brisbane has received a New York Paper of the 4th instant, confirming the taking of New Orleans by our troops under the orders of General Pakenham.

Last Tuesday the first division of the 89th regiment, commanded by Major Clifford, quartered here for some time past, took its departure from this place for Ernesttown, where it will be joined by the remainder of that corps in a few days.

We hear that the Canadian Fencibles are to do duty here in place of the 89th.

DIED.] On Saturday morning the 4th inst. aged 23, Mrs. Harriet Thom, wife of Dr. Thom, Staff surgeon in the army, and stationed at this post.

To commemorate departed worth is an office always agreeable to a feeling mind, nor can merited praises, and the offers, scattered over the grave, where female excellence lies entombed, fail to interest and gratify every kind and affectionate heart. Snatched from the agonized embrace of connubial affection, and consigned to her native dust, this lovely woman has left the tenderest of husbands to lament her early and premature death, and two smiling babes unconscious of the greatness of their loss. This, not as those "without hope," deep indeed is their cause of affliction, for to uncommon sweetness of temper and benevolence of soul, the deceased united all those estimable qualities that can endear a wife and a mother,

"Only a few days are past away, since she was seen in full health and in the prime of life, and no doubt promised herself yet many years enjoyment of that domestic felicity, which the wisdom of her choice, the mildness, the affability, and cheerfulness of her disposition, even more than her extraordinary beauty, rendered eminently hers and for the long continuance of which her pleasing manners, and unaffected kindness had engaged the sincere wishes of all her acquaintance."

Seldom does an individual carry to the grave a regret so universal, for who that knew her is not afflicted at her death. Nothing could be more engaging than the amiable purity of her mind—nothing more excellent than her moral habits.

Short has been her time in this school of moral discipline, yet our grief is mingled with the balm of consolation, for she bore her illness with a serenity, composure and resignation to the will of the Almighty God, that was truly edifying.—And what greater comfort can her surviving friends enjoy, than to reflect, that she was a sincere Christian, and possessed an excellence of character which few are able to acquire. Surely the thought of such a death cannot be unconnected with immortality.

From the New Hampshire Gazette of Dec. 27.

THE HARTFORD CONVENTION.

We have been disposed to treat this unlawful assemblage with ridicule and contempt rather than sober consideration, believing that so large a portion of the federal party were opposed to a seperation of the union, as to check the other part in their headlong ruinous course. But it now behoves the friends to the union, both federal and republican to be on their guard, "disc untenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that (the national union) can, in any event be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts." The assemblage undoubtedly intend to concert their nefarious plans secretly, "covertly and insidiously." The silent stream may gradually undermine the majestic oak which the winds of heaven might have assailed in vain. So may this assemblage unless immediately checked, undermine, by their arts and influences the basis of the republic, which if the power of faction, with banners, unfurled, could not subvert.

We solemnly forewarn our countrymen, that this assemblage, if not at this, at a future meeting intend a seperation. With the union, would perish our hopes and liberties. We conjure our countrymen to read over and over the solemn and parting advice of our beloved Washington. A sacred regard for his monitions may save us at this eventful crisis.

The eloquent Randolph has made, indirectly, a solemn appeal to the Hartford Convention. He conjures his fellow citizens, by all they hold dear and by a regard for their future destinies, to oppose a seperation of the union. For this act of magnanimity, he is instantly denounced by the Bolton Junto and the federal papers. His language now reminds them of the "skip, hop and jump" There is now no connection of his ideas. He who just now was cried up as the eloquent statesman and ingenious patriot, is now suddenly cried down as a mad-

THE PRESIDENT FRIGATE.

Extract of a letter from Commodore Decatur, late commander of the U. S. frigate President, dated 16th January, 1815

The night we left the Hook, owing to some blunder of our Pilots, we struck on the Bar, and there remained thumping two hours until the tide rose; at day light we fell in with the British squadron consisting of the Majestic, Endymion, Pomona, Tenedos and Dispatch brig.

"My ship owing to her getting aground, lost her sailing I lightened her as much as possible, but the enemy gained on us. The Endymion mounting 24 pounders on her gun-deck, was the leading ship of the enemy. She got close under my quarter, and was cutting my rigging, without my being able to bring a gun to bear upon her. To suffer this was making my capture certain; and that too without injury to the enemy.

"I therefore bore up for the Endymion, and engaged her for two hours; when we silenced and beat her off. At this time the rest of the ships had got within two miles of us. We made all the sail we could from them, but is was in vain. In 3 hours the Pomona and Tenedos were along side, and the Majestic and Endymion were close to us. All that was now left me to do, was to receive the fire of the nearest ships and surrender.

"My loss has been severe; the precise number I do not know, but believe it to be between eighty and ninety; of this about twenty-five are killed Babbit, Hamilton and Howell, are among the slain. Mr. Dale is wounded, but is doing well.

"I am in great haste.—We sail to day for Bermuda."

Extract from a character of Buonaparte.

We may now pause before that splendid prodigy, which towered among us like some ancient ruin, whose frown terrified the glance its magnificence attracted. Grand, gloomy, and peculiar, he sat upon the throne, a sceptered hermit, wrapt in the solitude of his awful originality. A mind bold, independent, and decisive; a will despotic in its dictates; an energy that distanced expedition; and a conscience pliable to every touch of interest, marked the outline of this extraordinary character, the most extraordinary perhaps, that in the annals of this world, ever rose, or reigned, or fell.—Flung into life in the middle of a revolution, that quickened every energy of a people that acknowledged no superior, he commenced his course, a stranger by birth, and a scholar by chance! With no friend but his sword, and no surface but his talents, he rushed into the lists where rank and wealth, and genius had arrayed themselves, and competition fled from him as from the chance of destiny. He knew no motive but interest; he acknowledged no criterion but success; he worshipped no God but ambition, and with a stern devotion, knelt at the shrine of his idolatry Subsidiary to this, there was no creed that he did not profess; there was no opinion he did not promulgate; in the hope of a dynasty, he upheld the crescent; for the sake of a divorce he bowed before the cross; the orphan of St. Louis, he became the adopted child of the republic; and with a parricidal ingratitude, on the ruins of the throne and the tribune, he reared the tower of his despotism! A professed Catholic, he imprisoned the Pope, a pretended patriot, he impoverished the country, and in the name of Brutus, he grasped without remorse, and wore without shame, the diadem of the Ceasars.

Such a medley of contradictions, and at the same time, such an individual inconsistency, were never united in the same character—A royalist, a republican, and an emperor: a mahometan, a catholic, and a patron of the Synagogue; a subaltern and a sovereign; a traitor and a tyrant; a christian and an infidel; he was, through all his vicissitudes, the same stern, impatient, inflexible, original; the same mysterious, incomprehensible self; the man without a model, and without a shadow.

His fall, like his life, baffled all speculation. In short, his whole history was like a dream of the world, and no man can tell how or why he was awakened from the reverie. Such is a faint and feeble picture of Napoleon Bonaparte, the first, and it is hoped the last, Emperor of the French.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Pistres," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good in regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

Washington, Jan. 14.

Letters received by yesterday's mail from Baton Rouge, announce that the Kentuckey and Fenneſſee troops paſſed that poſt on the 17th and 18th. There is little doubt that they arrived at New Orleans in time to aſſiſt in meeting the enemy, if he has made an attack on the city. This reinforcement was not previouſly expected at New Orleans, to have arrived there in time for that purpoſe.

The following letter, with a copy of which we have been obligingly favored by the Editor of the Kentucky Reporter, gives a few particulars which our letters heretofore publiſhed do not contain of the ſtate of things in Louiſiana.

Extract of a letter from an officer in the U. S. army, to the printer of the Lexington Reporter, dated New Orleans, Dec. 16, 1814.

"My Dear Sir,

"The Britiſh have had eight or ten veſſels between this and Mobile for ten or 12 days, by which the water communication between this and Mobile Bay has been cut off. On the 13th inſtant their number was increaſed to forty or fifty ſail, and there is no doubt they contain an army deſigned to conquer this country. On the 14th inſt. with forty barges, each containing a large 18 or 24 pounder, they attacked our gun boats in the bay of St. Louis, and carried them, after a deſperate action of one hour and an half. The enemy have alſo taken a ſmall guard at Baliſe and the pilots there —We are weak here at preſent, ſay 1200 regulars and 2000 militia. We expect Coffee with 2000 more in a day or two, and ere long the Kentucky and Tenneſſee drafts. When they all arrive, we are ready to ſtand any number they may ſend —As we are, the enemy may out number us, but even if my Lord Wellington has trained them, they are not better ſoldiers. We will weather the ſtorm like honeſt fellows; and if our weakneſs is taken advantage of, they ſhall at leaſt have a fight in minature.

"Our old general ſtands it nobly and is full of fight. The French turn out handſomely."

Extract of a letter from a citizen of Ohio at Baton Rouge, to a member of Congreſs, Dec. 18.

"All is confuſion and preparation to go to the ſcene of action. An expreſs has juſt arrived, ſtating that the Britiſh forces are landing 18 miles from New Orleans, to take that place—Gen Coffee, with the mounted Tenneſſeans paſſed here yeſterday in high ſpirits. Gen. Carroll with the Kentuckians and other Tenneſſeans, about 3000 troops, paſſed here this morning in boats, and will be at New Orleans in 24 hours. Gen. Jackſon and his forces were yeſterday at 12 o'clock at the city. The militia general Thomas has juſt received an order by expreſs, that the militia muſt turn out en maſſ and proceed on.

"2 o'clock—The mail not yet being gone, I have juſt time to ſay, that every additional information confirms the above. The volunteers are turning out lively."

From a Poſtſcript to the Philadelphia Democratic Preſs of Saturday evening.

We ſtop the preſs to announce that a paſſenger in the Southern Mail ſtage informs that on the 27th of Dec. New Orleans had not been attacked but had been conſiderably reinforced by general Coffee and his troops.

Quebec, Saturday, Jan. 21, 1815.

This day at one o'clock, his Excellency the Governor in Chief came down in ſtate to the Legiſlative Council, and being ſeated on the Throne with the uſual ſolemnities, the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod was ſent down to the Aſſembly, to command the attendance of that Houſe; and the members being come up, the hon. Speaker of the Legiſlative Council ſignified his Excellency's pleaſure that they ſhould return to the uſual place of their ſittings, & chuſe a fit perſon to be their Speaker, and preſent him to his Excellency on Tueſday the 24th, at one o'clock.

Tueſday, Dec. 24 His Excellency being ſeated on the throne, and the Aſſembly with Mr. Papineau, their ſpeaker elect, being in attendance below the bar, the hon. the Speaker of the Legiſlative Council expreſſed his Excellency's approbation of the choice of the Houſe of Aſſembly, and then his Excellency was pleaſed to deliver the following Speech.

Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council, and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

I have availed myſelf of an early period, after the cloſe of the active operations of war, to ſummon you to the diſcharge of your legiſlative duties. I meet you in the full aſſurance that the deliberations in the firſt ſeſſion of the preſent Provincial Parliament will be diſtinguiſhed by principles of patriotic loyalty, and by a diſpoſition to cordiality, confidence and mutual good-will.

I have to call your attention to the renewal of thoſe ſtatutes, formed for the welfare of the people and the permanent ſecurity of the Province, which are about to expire, and I indulge a confident expectation that in all the meaſures which ſhall be adopted by you his Royal Highneſs the Prince Regent, will receive freſh proofs of the high ſenſe you entertain of the excellent conſtitution which his Majeſty has been graciouſly pleaſed to confer upon this country.

His Majeſty's ſubjects have to lament the continuance of indiſpoſition with which the King has ſo long been afflicted; and our affectionate attachment to his Majeſty, prompts us at this moment the more deeply to deplore a fatality which excuſes our venerable Monarch from the general exultation of his ſubjects and of his allies.

The re-eſtabliſhment of ancient thrones in their juſt rights, the ſubverſion of the tyranny which had oppreſſed them, and the return of tranquility and order, to a world long diſturbed, are ſubjects of ſincere congratulation, and demand our gratitude to that Omnipotent Hand which alone could have wrought the conſummation.

Peace, which has bleſſed the nations of Europe has not yet extended her influence to the Councils of America. The high pretenſions and impracticable diſpoſition of the government of the United States, have diſappointed the deſire of his Royal Highneſs the Prince Regent, for an honorable termination to a war, which has aſſumed a particularly vindictive character. Individuals have thus been expoſed to horrors unparalled in the later hiſtory of civilized warfare; but it is alone to be attributed to the repeated outrages of the enemy; which from the magnanimity of his Majeſty, and the conſequent forbearance of his troops remained long unavenged by an offended people.

The proud capitol at Waſhington has, however, as a juſt retribution, experienced a ſimilar fate to that inflicted by an American force on the ſeat of government in Upper Canada. The operations contemplated on the ſhores of Lake Champlain, were completely fruſtrated by the failure of our naval means in the very outſet of the enterpriſe.

The reinforcements I have received from his Majeſty's government, have enabled me to diminiſh the preſſure of the war on the inhabitants of the Province; but on all occaſions, when I have called for their ſervices, the alacrity and zeal with which they have been rendered, ſufficiently teſtify their faithful, loyal, and patriotic adherence to his Majeſty.

Notwithſtanding a ſtate of war, proſperity dwells among you. After a long and ſevere campaign the American army has been compelled to ſurrender the partial advantages it had gained in the Upper Province, and you have been ſecured from aggreſſion.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly.

I ſhall direct to be laid before you a ſtatement of the Provincial Revenue of the Crown, and of the expenditure during the laſt year.

The demands of the public ſervice continuing various and large, I look to your liberality for continued exertions to meet them—for a renewal of a productive Revenue Bill, not eſtabliſhed in the laſt ſeſſion, and of ſuch of the proviſions of the army bill act as it ſhall be deemed expedient to adopt for the future.

I recommend alſo to your attention, the improvement of the communications in the Province.

Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

To you the community look for example, I therefore truſt, that in all your proceedings, you will manifeſt that liberal confidence in his Majeſty's government, and unanimity among yourſelves which is ſo eſſential to the public ſervice, and with us which your exertions, and my own, alike muſt neceſſarily diminiſh in influence and effect.

From the Montreal Herald of Jan 28.

Our attentive correſpondents have for warded to us Boſton and Albany papers to the 21ſt inſtant; files from New York to the 19th; the Boſton Repertory gives London dates to the 18th Nov. inclusive, via Bermuda. General Hill had not failed for America. The paragraphs taken from American papers, relate chiefly to the operations below New Orleans, but they do not come officially—wherefore we ſuſpend our comments, until we ſhall be furniſhed with ſolid materials. It is ſaid that a paper has been received from New York of the 19th inſt. which contains a rumour that the Britiſh troops had been repulſed at New Orleans.

Poſtſcript, one o'clock—The N. York E. Poſt of the 20th is juſt come to hand. The report of our being repulſed at New Orleans, is falſe. It was fabricated at Waſhington, where it is really believed, that New Orleans was in poſſeſſion of the Britiſh about the 24th ult.

A Gentleman who came Expreſs from Miſſiſqui Bay, brings the following Intelligence:

PEACE!

Tueſday, Feb. 14, 1815, 9 o'clock P. M.

From the Albany Argus Extra. Feb 12, 5 o'clock P. M.

We haſten to perform the moſt grateful task ever impoſed upon us, in the whole of our editorial labours. If the following intelligence ſhall be finally realized, in the completion of an Honorable Peace, the Country may rejoice.—With what anxiety muſt all parties wait for the promulgation of the Treaty, which is to realize our hopes, or our fears.

Governor Tompkins has this moment received an Expreſs from Jacob Barker, Eſq. of New York, bringing the agreeable news, that

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Pasfres," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

Edw. Mac Mahon, A. Secretary.

Address of the House of Assembly of L. Canada, in Answer to the Speech of Sir George Prevost, Baronet. &c. &c. &c. published in our last.

To His Excellency
SIR GEORGE PREVOST, Baronet, &c. &c. &c.

WE His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Lower Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to return to your Excellency our humble thanks for your gracious speech at the opening of this Session.

In the early convocation of the Legislature, after the close of the active operations of the war, we find a new proof of your Excellency's solicitude for the public welfare. Called upon by our duty to co-operate in measures deemed necessary for the public interest, we shall be anxious to concur in whatever may advance it, and shall be influenced by the strongest desire to realize, so far as may depend on us, your Excellency's anticipation that the deliberations of the Legislature in this Session, will be distinguished by patriotic loyalty, and by a disposition to cordiality, confidence and mutual good will.

The statutes formed for the welfare of the people, and the permanent security of the Province which are about to expire, and to which your Excellency has been pleased to direct our attention, will receive our immediate consideration; and in the measures we may adopt, it will be our anxious wish that His Royal Highness the Prince Regent may receive fresh proofs of the high sense we entertain of the excellent constitution which His Majesty, in conjunction with the other branches of the Imperial Parliament, has been pleased to confer on this Country.

We lament with your Excellency the continuance of the indisposition with wich our gracious Sovereign has so long afflicted; and when we consider the high satisfaction which the recent public events in Europe have been calculated to afford His Majesty we are prompted by our affectionate attachment to His Majesty, to deplore that dispensation by which our venerable Monarch is excluded from a participation in the general exultation of his subjects and of his allies, which those glorious events have excited.

In the re-establishment of ancient thrones in their just rights the subversion of the tyranny which had oppressed them, and in the return of tranquility and order to a world long disturbed, we find with your Excellency subjects of sincere congratulation which demand our gratitude to that omnipotent hand by which alone a consummation so long and so ardently desired, could have been wrought.

While we regret that peace, which has blessed the nations of Europe, has not yet extended her influence to the Councils of America, we are not the less sensible that the high pretentions and perverse disposition of the Government of the U. States have been the obstacles of pacification and have disappointed the desire of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent to affect an honorable termination of a war which has assumed, in many instances, peculiarly vindictive character. In a contest thus unnecessarily prolonged, it is painful to reflect, that individuals have been exposed to horrors unparalleled in the more recent history of civilized nations. These are no doubt to be charged on the repeated outrages committed by the enemy, which the magnanimity of His Majesty and the forbearances of his troops, long permitted to remain unrevenged. In the destruction however of the proud Capitol at Washington, the enemy has experienced the effect of retaliation, and may consider it as a just retribution for a similar fate inflicted on the seat of Government in Upper Canada.

The operations contemplated on the Shores of Lake Champlain, we are led to believe, by our confidence in your Excellency's judgement were planned in consequence of wise combinations, and our proximity to the scene of action has enabled us to acquire a perfect conviction that they were frustrated by causes beyond your Excellency's controul: we are equally convinced that the failure of our naval means, rendered necessary, at the very onset, an immediate abandonment of the enterprize.

The protecting hand of His Majesty's government, has been agreeably felt in the reinforcements received by your Excellency, for the diminution of the pressure of the war on the Inhabitants of this province. The testimony which your Excellency is pleased to bear to the zeal and alacrity, with which their services have been rendered, cannot but be most flattering to their feelings, and demands, through their representatives their warmest acknowledgements. It is under your Excellency's wise and just administration that their character and conduct have been justly appreciated; and whatever merit their services may be entitled to, a large portion of it is unquestionably due to your Excellency, whose well founded confidence in them has enabled them, by those services to testify their faithful, loyal and patriotic abherence to His Majesty, of which under your Excellency's administration, they hope many opportunities during a long time to come, will be afforded them to give additional proofs.

We have reason to be particularly thankful for the prosperous state of the Country, notwithstanding the continuance of the war, and after a long and severe Campaign, we are happy in finding that the American army has been compelled to surrender the partial advantages it had gained in Upper Canada, while under your Excellency's protecting care we have been secured from aggression.

We will receive with due attention the statement of Provincial Revenue of the Crown, and of the expenditures during the last year, which your Excellency purposes to cause to be laid before us.

In our endeavors to meet the demands of the public Service, your Excellency may expect that our liberality will be exerted as far as may be consistent with our means, and our attention will be directed to the renewal of the Revenue Bill which was in the first instance passed in the Assembly in the last Session, and such provisions of the Army Bill Act, as it may be expedient to adopt for the future.

We are sensible of the benefits that would arise from an improvement of the means of communication in the Province and will apply our particular attention to the subject.

Having no other desire but to discharge our duty, by maintaining the civil and political rights of His Majesty's Subjects in this Province, as happily established by law, and by providing for the security and welfare of the Province, our views must coincide with those of His Majesty's Government, and beget reciprocal confidence. On our part we shall only follow the impulse of our feelings, in placing the most liberal and implicit confidence in his Majesty's Government, and it will always be our wish to cultivate unanimity in our proceedings, being sensible with your Excellency that the Public Service will be thus promoted and that without such conduct the influence and effect of our exertions as well as those of your Excellency must be diminished.

WILLIAM PURDY.
Hope, Upper Canada, July 30, 1814.

Address of the House of Assembly of L. Canada, in Answer to the Speech of Sir George Prevost, Baronet. &c. &c. &c. published in our last.

To His Excellency
SIR GEORGE PREVOST, Baronet, &c. &c. &c.

WE His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Lower Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to return to your Excellency our humble thanks for your gracious speech at the opening of this Session.

In the early convocation of the Legislature, after the close of the active operations of the war, we find a new proof of your Excellency's solicitude for the public welfare. Called upon by our duty to co-operate in measures deemed necessary for the public interest, we shall be anxious to concur in whatever may advance it, and shall be influenced by the strongest desire to realize, so far as may depend on us, your Excellency's anticipation that the deliberations of the Legislature in this Session, will be distinguished by patriotic loyalty, and by a disposition to cordiality, confidence and mutual good will.

The statutes formed for the welfare of the people, and the permanent security of the Province which are about to expire, and to which your Excellency has been pleased to direct our attention, will receive our immediate consideration; and in the measures we may adopt, it will be our anxious wish that His Royal Highness the Prince Regent may receive fresh proofs of the high sense we entertain of the excellent constitution which His Majesty, in conjunction with the other branches of the Imperial Parliament, has been pleased to confer on this Country.

We lament with your Excellency the continuance of the indisposition with wich our gracious Sovereign has so long afflicted; and when we consider the high satisfaction which the recent public events in Europe have been calculated to afford His Majesty we are prompted by our affectionate attachment to His Majesty, to deplore that dispensation by which our venerable Monarch is excluded from a participation in the general exultation of his subjects and of his allies, which those glorious events have excited.

In the re-establishment of ancient thrones in their just rights the subversion of the tyranny which had oppressed them, and in the return of tranquility and order to a world long disturbed, we find with your Excellency subjects of sincere congratulation which demand our gratitude to that omnipotent hand by which alone a consummation so long and so ardently desired, could have been wrought.

While we regret that peace, which has blessed the nations of Europe, has not yet extended her influence to the Councils of America, we are not the less sensible that the high pretentions and perverse disposition of the Government of the U. States have been the obstacles of pacification and have disappointed the desire of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent to affect an honorable termination of a war which has assumed, in many instances, peculiarly vindictive character. In a contest thus unnecessarily prolonged, it is painful to reflect, that individuals have been exposed to horrors unparalleled in the more recent history of civilized nations. These are no doubt to be charged on the repeated outrages committed by the enemy, which the magnanimity of His Majesty and the forbearances of his troops, long permitted to remain unrevenged. In the destruction however of the proud Capitol at Washington, the enemy has experienced the effect of retaliation, and may consider it as a just retribution for a similar fate inflicted on the seat of Government in Upper Canada.

The operations contemplated on the Shores of Lake Champlain, we are led to believe, by our confidence in your Excellency's judgement were planned in consequence of wise combinations, and our proximity to the scene of action has enabled us to acquire a perfect conviction that they were frustrated by causes beyond your Excellency's controul: we are equally convinced that the failure of our naval means, rendered necessary, at the very onset, an immediate abandonment of the enterprize.

The protecting hand of His Majesty's government, has been agreeably felt in the reinforcements received by your Excellency, for the diminution of the pressure of the war on the Inhabitants of this province. The testimony which your Excellency is pleased to bear to the zeal and alacrity, with which their services have been rendered, cannot but be most flattering to their feelings, and demands, through their representatives their warmest acknowledgements. It is under your Excellency's wise and just administration that their character and conduct have been justly appreciated; and whatever merit their services may be entitled to, a large portion of it is unquestionably due to your Excellency, whose well founded confidence in them has enabled them, by those services to testify their faithful, loyal and patriotic abherence to His Majesty, of which under your Excellency's administration, they hope many opportunities during a long time to come, will be afforded them to give additional proofs.

We will receive with due attention the statement of Provincial Revenue of the Crown, and of the expenditures during the last year, which your Excellency purposes to cause to be laid before us.

In our endeavors to meet the demands of the public Service, your Excellency may expect that our liberality will be exerted as far as may be consistent with our means, and our attention will be directed to the renewal of the Revenue Bill which was in the first instance passed in the Assembly in the last Session, and such provisions of the Army Bill Act, as it may be expedient to adopt for the future.

We are sensible of the benefits that would arise from an improvement of the means of communication in the Province and will apply our particular attention to the subject.

Having no other desire but to discharge our duty, by maintaining the civil and political rights of His Majesty's Subjects in this Province, as happily established by law, and by providing for the security and welfare of the Province, our views must coincide with those of His Majesty's Government, and beget reciprocal confidence. Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

Presidents Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S." in "Piastres," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true Bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

EDW. MAC MAHON, A. Secretary.

Acting Secretary of State.

It is impoſſible that the joy diſplayed in Boſton at the receipt of the glad tidings of Peace,has been exceeded, or can be exceeded any where. The inſtant the news was announced, individuals ruſhed to the churches, and the numerous bells ſpread the report of important intelligence to the moſt remote parts of the city, and to the towns which environ it. The hearts of all ſuggeſted to them the happy cauſe of the merry peal, and they abandoned their avocations to felicitate each other, and to learn the particulars. The ſtreets were crowded, and the ſhaking of hands,hearty congratulations, and loud huzzas, were every where ſeen and heard, The colours, long laid aſide; of our numerous ſhipping, were again hoiſted to the maſt's head, and ſeveral houſes and ſtreets were decorated with flags. Many ſalutes were fired; and the general joy was expreſſed in every way, which the gratified feelings ſuggeſted.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S" in "Pillsters," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third, the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "I" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: second, the "s" in "Dollars" is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

Official Account of the Capture of Washington.

London Gazette Extraordinary, Sept. 27.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

Downing-street, Sept. 27.

Capt. Smith, Assistant Adjutant General to the troops under the command of Major General Ross, arrived this morning with a dispatch from that officer, addressed to Earl Bathurst, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, of which the following is a copy:

Tonnant, in the Patuxent, Aug. 3.

My Lord—I have the honor to communicate to your Lordship, that on the night of the 24th inst. after debarking the army of the United States on that day, the troops under my command entered and took possession of the city of Washington.

It was determined between Sir A. Cochrane and myself, to disembark the army at the village of Benedict, on the right bank of the Patuxent, with the intention of co-operating with Rear Admiral Cockburn in an attack upon a flotilla of the enemy's gun boats under the command of Commodore Barney. On the 20th inst. the army commenced its march having landed the previous day without opposition. On the 21st it reached Nottingham and on the 22d moved on to Upper Marlborough a few miles distant from Pig Point, on the Patuxent, where Admiral Cockburn fell in with and defeated the flotilla, taking and destroying the whole. Having advanced to within 16 miles of Washington, and ascertaining the force of the enemy to be such as might authorise an attempt at carrying his capital. I determined to make it, and accordingly put the troops in movement on the evening of the 23d. A corps of about twelve hundred men appeared to oppose us, but retired after firing a few shots. On the 24th, the troops resumed their march, and reached Bladensburg, a village situated on the left bank of the eastern branch of the Potomac, about five miles from Washington.

On the opposite side of that river the enemy was discovered strongly posted on very commanding heights, formed in two lines, his advance occupying a fortified house, which, with artillery, covered the bridge over the E. branch across which the British troops had to pass. A broad and straight road, leading from the bridge to Washington, ran through the position, which was carefully defended by artillery and riflemen.

The disposition for the attack being made, it was commenced with so much impetuosity by the light brigade consisting of the 85th light infantry and the light infantry companies of the army, under the command of Col. Thornton, that the fortified house was shortly carried, the enemy retiring to the higher ground.

In support of the light brigade, I ordered up a brigade under the command of Colonel Brooke, who, with the 44th regiment, attacked the enemy's left, the 4th regiment pressing his right with such effect as to cause him to abandon his guns. His first line giving way, was driven on the second, which yielding to the irresistible attack of the bayonet, and the well directed discharge of rockets, got into confusion and fled, leaving the British masters of the field. The rapid flight of the enemy, and his knowledge of the country, precluded the possibility of many prisoners being taken, more particularly as the troops had, during the day, undergone considerable fatigue.

The enemy's army, amounting to 8 or 9000 men, with 3 or 400 cavalry, was under the command of General Winder, being formed of troops drawn from Baltimore and Pennsylvania. His artillery, ten pieces of which fell into our hands, was commanded by Com. Barney, who was wounded and taken prisoner. The artillery I directed to be destroyed.

Having halted the army for a short time, I determined to march upon Washington, and reached that city at 8 o'clock that night. Judging it of consequence to complete the destruction of the public buildings with the least possible delay, so that the army might retire without l[illegible] the following buildings were set fi[illegible] consumed; the capitol, including the senate house and house of representatives; the arsenal, the dock-yard, navy office, president's palace, rope walk, and the great bridge across the Potomac; in the dock-yard a frigate nearly ready to be launched, and a sloop of war, were consumed. The two bridges leading to Washington over the eastern branch had been destroyed by the enemy, who apprehended an attack from that quarter. The object of the expedition being accomplished, I determined, before any greater force of the enemy could be assembled, to withdraw the troops, and accordingly commenced retiring on the night of the 25th. On the evening of the 29th we reached Benedict, and re-embarked the following day. In the performance of the operation I have detailed, it is with the utmost satisfaction that I observe to your Lordship, that cheerfulness in undergoing fatigue, and anxiety for the accomplishment of the object, were conspicuous in all ranks.

[Here follow encomiums on officers.]

An attack upon an enemy so strongly posted could not be effected without loss. I have to lament that the wounds received by Col. Thomas and the other officers and soldiers left at Bladensburg, were such as prevented their removal. Among of the wounded as could be brought off were removed, the others being left with medical care and attendants. The arrangements made by Staff Surgeon Baxter for their accommodation have been as satisfactory as circumstances would admit of. The agent for British prisoners of war very fortunately residing at Bladensburg, I have recommended the wounded officers and men to his particular attention, and trust to his being able to effect their exchange when sufficiently recovered. I have, &c.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

Downing-street, October 17.

Captain Macdougall arrived early this morning with a despatch, addressed to Lord Bathurst, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by Col. Brook, of which the following is a copy:

On board H. M. ship Tonnant, Chesapeake, Sept. 17, 181

My Lord

I have the honor to inform your Lordship, that the division of troops under the command of Major General Ross effected a disembarkation on the morning of the 12th of September, near North Point, on the left point of the Patapsco River, distant from Baltimore about thirteen miles, with the view of pushing a recognizance, in co-operation with the naval forces, to that town; and acting thereon as the enemy's strength and positions might dictate.

The approach on this side to Baltimore lays thro' a small peninsula formed by the Patapsco and Black Rivers, and generally from two to three miles broad, whilst it narrows in some places to less than half a mile.

Three miles from North Point, the enemy had entrenched himself quite across this neck of land, towards which (the disembarkation having been completed at an early hour) the troops advanced.

The enemy was actively employed in the completion of this work, deepening the ditch, and strengthening its front by a low abbatis, both which, however, he precipitately abandoned at the reproach of our skirmishers, having in our hands some few dragoons, being part of his rear guard.

About two miles beyond this post, our advance became engaged; the country was here closely wooded, and the enemy's riflemen were enabled to conceal themselves. At this moment the gallant General Ross received a wound in his breast, which proved mortal. He only survived to recommend a young and unprovided family to the protection of his King and country.

Thus fell at an early age one of the brightest ornaments of his profession;—one who, whether at the head of a regiment, a brigade, or corps, had alike displayed the talents of command; who was not less beloved in his private, than enthusiastically admired in his public character; and whose only fault, if it may deemed so, was an excess of Gallantry, enterprize, and devotion to the service.

If ever it were permitted to a soldier to lament those who fell in battle, we may indeed in this instance claim that melancholy privilege.

Thus it is, that the honor of addressing your Lordship, and the command of this army, have devolved upon me; duties which, under any other circumstances, might have been embraced as the most enviable gifts of fortune and here I venture to solicit through your Lordship, His Royal Highness the Prince Regent's consideration to the circumstance of my succeeding during operations of so much moment, to an officer of such high and established merit.

Our advance continuing to press forward, the enemy's light troops were pushed to within five miles of Baltimore, where a corps of about 6000 men, six pieces of artillery, and some hundred cavalry, were discovered posted under cover of a wood, drawn up in a very dense order, and lining a very strong paling, which crossed the main road nearly at right angles. The creeks and inlets of the Patapsco and Black River, which approach each other at this point, will in some measure account for the contracted nature of the enemy's position.

I immediately ordered the necessary dispositions for a general attack. The light brigade under the command of Major Jones, of the 4th, consisting of the 85th light Infantry. der Major Gubbins, and the light co of the army under Major Pringle covered the whole of the f enemy's skirmishers main body. Th Faunce, by ways.

In this order the signal being given, the troops advanced rapidly to the charge. In less than fifteen minutes the enemy's force being utterly broken and dispersed fled in every direction over the country, leaving on the field two pieces of cannon, with a considerable number of killed, wounded and prisoners.

The enemy lost in this short but brilliant affair from 5 to six hundred killed & wounded; while as the most moderate computation, he is at least one thousand hors de combat. The 5th regiment of militia in particular, has been represented as nearly annihilated.

The day being now far advanced and the troops (as is always the case on the first march after disembarkation) much fatigued, we halted for the night on the ground of which the enemy had been dispossessed. Here I received a communication from Vice Admiral the Hon Sir Alexander Cochrane, informing me that the frigates, bomb ships and flotilla of the fleet, would on the ensuing morning take their station as previously proposed.

Baltimore is completely surrounded by strong but detached hills, on which the enemy had constructed a chain of palisaded redoubts, connected by a small breast work: I have, however, reason to think that the defence to the north east and westward of the place were in a very unfinished state. Chicapin hill, which lay in front of our position, completely commands the town; this was the strongest part of the line, and here the enemy seemed most apprehensive of attack. These works were defended, according to the best information which we could obtain, by about fifteen thousand men with a large train of artillery.

Judging it perfectly feasible with the description of forces under my command, I made arrangement for a night attack, during which the superiority of the enemy's artillery would not have been so much felt, and Capt. Macdougall, the bearer of these despatches, will have the honor to point out to your Lordship those particular points of the line which I had proposed to act on.

During the evening, however I received a communication from the Commander in Chief of the naval forces, by which I was informed that in consequence of the entrance of the harbor being closed up by vessels sunk for that purpose by the enemy, a naval co-operation against the town and camp was found impracticable.

Under these circumstances, and keeping in view your Lordship's instructions, it was agreed between the Vice Admiral and myself that the capture of the town would not have been a sufficient equivalent to the loss which might probably be sustained in storming the height.

Having formed this resolution, after com[illegible]ling the enemy to sink up wards of 20 ves[illegible] different parts of the harbor, causing [illegible]s to remove almost the whole of [illegible] to places of more security in[illegible] Government to concentrate [illegible] of the surrounding States, [illegible] forcing them to col[illegible]ects, causing the [illegible]ank, with o[illegible] clear the [illegible]'s ha[illegible]

YORK (UPPER CANADA:) Printed by JOHN CAMERON, Printer to the KING'S Most Excellent Majesty.

London Gazette, Oct. 17.

[Concluded from our last.]

This tardy movement was partly caused by an expectation that the enemy might possibly be induced to move out of the entrenchments and follow us; but he profited by the lesson which he had received on the 12th, and towards the evening I retired the troops about 3 miles further, where I took up my ground for the night.

Having ascertained, at a late hour on the morning of the 13th, that the enemy had no disposition to quit his entrenchments, I moved down and re-embarked the army at North Point, not leaving a man behind and carrying with me about 200 prisoners, being persons of the best families in the city, and which number might have been very considerably encreased, was not the fatigue of the troops an object principally to be avoided.

I have now to remark to your Lordship that nothing could surpass the zeal unanimity and valour displayed by every description of force whether naval and military, or marine during the whole of these operations.

I am highly indebted to Vice Admiral Sir Alexander Cochrane, Commander in Chief of the naval for the active assistance and zealous co-operation which he was ready, upon every occasion, to afford me; a disposition conspicuous in every branch of the naval service, and which cannot fail to ensure success to every combined operation of this armament.

Captain Edward Crofton commanding the brigade of seamen appointed to the small arms, for the animated and enthusiastic example which he held forth to his men, deserves my approbation—as do also Captains Nourse, Money, Sullivan, and Ramsay, Royal Navy, for the steadiness and good order which they maintained their several directions.

I feel every obligation to Rear Admiral Cockburn, for the counsel and assistance which he afforded me, and from which I derived the most signal benefit.

To Colonel Patterson, for the steady manner in which he brought his column into action, I give my best thanks.

The Hon. Lieut. Col Mullins, deserves every approbation for the excellent order in which he led that part of the light brigade under his immediate command, while charging the enemy in line.

Major Jones commanding the light brigade gave me my best acknowledgements, for the active and skilful dispositions by which he covered all the movements of the army.

The distinguished gallantry of Captain De Bathe 95th light infantry, has been particularly reported to me, and I beg to record my own knowledge of similar conduct on former occasions.

To Major Faunce, 44th regiment, for the manner in which he gained and turned the enemy's left, as well as for the excellent discipline maintained in that regiment every particular praise is due.

The exertions of Major Gubbins commanding the 85th light infantry; and of Major Kenny commanding the light companies, were highly commendable.

Captain Mitchel, commanding the royal artillery, Captain Carmichael, a meritorious officer that corps, and Lieut. Lawrence of the marine artillery, are entitled to my best thanks; as is captain Blanchard, commanding royal engineers, for the ability he displayed in his particular branch of the service.

To Lieut Evans 3d dragoons, Acting Deputy Quarter Master General to this army, the unremitting zeal, activity, and for the perfect intelligence which he evinced in the discharge of the various and difficult duties of his department. I feel warmly indebted; and I beg leave to solicit, through your Lordship a promotion suitable to the high professional merits of this officer.

Capt. Macdougall, Aid de Camp to the late Gen. Ross (and who has acted as Assistant Adjutant General, in the absence of Major Debbeig through indisposition) is the bearer of these despatches, having been in confidence of General Ross as well as in mine, with be found perfectly capable of giving your Lordship any further information relative to the operation of this army which you may require; he is an officer of great merit and promise, and I beg to recommend him to your Lordship's protection. I have the honor to be &c.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Washington, Feb 21.

The following most interesting message was yesterday transmitted by the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress:

To the Senate and
House of Representatives of the U. S.

I lay before Congress copies of the treaty of peace and amity between the United States and his Britannic Majesty, which was signed by the commissioners of both parties at Ghent on the 24th of December, 1814, and the ratification of which have been duly exchanged.

While performing this act, I congratulate you, & our constituents, upon an event which is highly honorable to the nation, and terminates with peculiar felicity a campaign signalized by the most brilliant successes.

The late war, although reluctantly declared by Congress, had become a necessary resort, to assert the rights and independence of the nation. It has been waged with a success which is the natural result of the legislative counsels, of the patriotism of the people, of the public spirit of the militia, and of the valour of the military and naval forces of the country. Peace, at all times a blessing, is peculiarly welcome, therefore, at a period when the causes of the war have ceased to operate; when the government has demonstrated the efficiency of its powers of defence; and when the nation can review its conduct without regret and without reproach.

I recommend to your care and beneficence, the gallant men whose achievements, in every department of military service, on the land and on the water, have so essentially contributed to the honor of the American name, and to the restoration of peace. The feelings of conscious patriotism and worth will animate such men, under every change of fortune and pursuit; but their country performs a duty to itself, when it bestows those testimonials of approbation and applause, which are, at once, the reward and the incentive to great actions.

The reduction of the public expenditure to the demands of a peace establishment, will doubtless, engage the immediate attention of Congress. There are, however, important considerations which forbid a sudden and general revocation of the measures that have been produced by the war. Experience has taught us, that neither the pacific dispositions of the American people, nor the pacific character of their political institutions, can altogether exempt them from that share which appears, beyond the ordinary lot of nations, to be incident to the actual period of the world: and the same faithful monitor demonstrates that a certain degree of preparation for war is not only indispensible to avert disaster in the onset but affords also the best security for the continuance of peace. The wisdom of Congress will, therefore, I am confident provide for the maintenance of an adequate regular force; for the gradual advance of the naval establishment; for improving all the means of harbor defence; for adding discipline to the distinguished bravery of the militia, and for cultivating the military art, in its [illegible] branches under the liberal patronage of government.

The resources of our country were, at all times, competent to the attainment of every national object; but they will now be enriched & invigorated by the activity which peace will introduce into all the scenes of domestic enterprise and labour. The provision that has been made for the public creditors during the present session of Congress, must have a decisive effect in the establishment of the public credit, both at home and abroad. The reviving interests of commerce will claim the legislative attention at the earliest opportunity; and such regulations will, I trust, be seasonably devised as shall secure to the U. States their just proportion of the navigation of the world. The most liberal policy towards other nations, if met by corresponding dispositions will, in this respect, be found the most beneficial policy towards ourselves.

But there is no subject that can enter with greater force and merit into the deliberation of Congress, than a consideration of the means to preserve and promote the manufactures which have sprung into existence, and attained an unparalleled maturity throughout the United States during the period of the European wars. This source of national independence and wealth, I anxiously recommend to the prompt and constant guardianship of Congress.

The termination of the legislative session will soon seperate you, fellow citizens from each other, and restore you to your constituents. I pray you to bear with you the expressions of my sanguine hope, that the peace which has been just declared will be the foundation of the most friendly [illegible] between the United States and Great Britain, but that it will also be followed by [illegible] pineſs and harmony in our beloved country. [illegible] cepts and example [illegible]

By His Honor GORDON DRUMMOND, Esq President, administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieut. General commanding His Majesty's Forces in the said Province.

WHEREAS I have this day received from his Excellency the Governor in Chief and Commander of the Forces in his Majesty's North American Provinces, an official communication, signifying that a Treaty of Peace had been concluded between Great Britain and the United States of America, the Ratifications of which had been duly exchanged at Washington on the seventeenth day of February last, by which Treaty it is stipulated, amongst other things, that there shall be a firm and universal Peace between his Britannic Majesty and the United States and between their respective Countries, Territories, Cities, Towns, and People of every degree, without exceptions of places or persons, and that all Hostilities both by Sea and Land shall immediately cease.

I do therefore hereby proclaim the same to all his Majesty's loving Subjects in this Province, strictly charging and enjoining them to observe inviolably the said Treaty of Peace accordingly.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms at York, in the Home District of Upper Canada, this tenth day of March, A. D. 1815, and of his Majesty's Reign the fifty-fifth.

GORDON DRUMMOND, President.

By His Honor's Command,

5. It is with particular satisfaction that his Honor has to announce to the Incorporated Militia, the high sense entertained of their [illegible] by the Provincial Legislature; who, [illegible] grateful liberality, have bestowed, [illegible]e donations, a gratuity of Six [illegible]he whole Corps.

YORK (UPPER CANADA:) Printed by JOHN CAMERON, Print[illegible] to the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

LEIPSIC, Oct. 24—The brother of the King of Prussia, his royal highness Frederick William, is to be viceroy of Saxony, and to marry an Austrian princess. The constitution of Saxony will not be changed. The return of the King is no more spoken of. We hear from Berlin that he is returned to Frederickfield, where he has bespoke his apartments for three months.

VIENNA, Nov 13—It is believed the emperor Alexander, and King of Prussia, will depart for Berlin after the ceremony shall have taken place, of re-establishing the Imperial dignity of Germany in the house of Austria. If nothing intervenes to prevent it, this grand ceremony will take place on the 20th. The rights of the new emperor will be chiefly honorary.—The head of the empire will call for declarations of war, will receive proposals for peace, will communicate them to the general diet, and will propose to it every thing he may deem useful to the interests of Germany. In concert with the kings of the empire, he will watch over the German constitution. Germany will be divided into seven principal branches of nations or families; at the head of each will be placed a monarch to direct the military force. Two nations will be subordinate to Austria, two to Prussia, one to Bavaria, another to Wirtemberg, and the seventh to Hanover.

It is presumed that the medial princes of Germany will be appointed grand dignitaries around the future Emperor, and the organs of that head of kings at the general diet.

As the imperial cities, it is affirmed that those of them maintained by the vote of the empire of 1803, will continue as such They are Frankfort, Nuremberg and Augsberg. Dantzic will be Prussian.

LONDON, November 11.

This day the Prince Regent went to the House of Peers, and the Commons having been summoned to the bar, made the following

SPEECH:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It is with deep regret that I am again obliged to announce the continuance of his Majesty's lamented indisposition.

It would have given me great satisfaction to communicate to you the termination of the war between this country and the U. States of America.

Although this war originated in the most unprovoked aggression on the part of the government of the U. States, and was calculated to promote the designs of the common enemy of Europe, against the rights and independence of all other nations, I never have ceased to entertain a sincere desire to bring it to a conclusion on just and honorable terms.

I am still engaged in negociations for this purpose; the success of them must, however depend on the disposition being met with corresponding sentiments on the part of the enemy.

The operations of his majesty's forces by sea and land in the Chesepeake in the course of the present year, have been attended with the most brilliant and successful results.

The flotilla of the enemy in the Patuxent [illegible] destroyed. The signal defeat of their [illegible] enabled a detachment of his Ma[illegible] to take possession of the city of [illegible] and the spirit of enterprize [illegible] acterised all the movements in [illegible] produced on the inhabitants [illegible] impression of [illegible] calamities they have been so wan-

[illegible]ved from Halifax to the Northern coast of the U. States has terminated in a manner not less satisfactory. The successful course of this operation has been followed by the immediate submission of the extensive and important district east of the Penobscot River to His Majesty's arms.

In adverting to these events, I am confident you will be disposed to render full justice to the valor, and discipline which have distinguished his Majesty's land and sea forces, and you will regret with me the severe loss the country has sustained by the fall of the gallant commander of his Majesty's troops in the advance upon Baltimore.

I availed myself of the earliest opportunity, afforded by the state of affairs in Europe, to detach a considerable military force to the River St. Lawrence; but its arrival could not possibly take place till an advanced period of the campaign.

Notwithstanding the severe which appears to have taken place on Lake Champlain, I entertain the most confident expectation as well from the amount as from the description of the British force now serving in Canada, that the ascendency of his Majesty's arms throughout that part of North America will be effectually established.

The opening of the Congress at Vienna has been retarded from unavoidable causes to a later period than had been expected.

It will be my earnest endeavor in the negociations which are now in progress to promote such arrangements as may tend to consolidate that peace which in conjunction with his Majesty's allies, have had the happiness of concluding and to re-establish that equilibrium, amongst the different powers which will afford the best prospect of permanent tranquility to Europe.

The peculiar character of the late war, as well as the extraordinary lenght of its duration, must have materially affected the situation of all the countries engaged in it, as well as the commercial relations which formerly subsisted between them.

Under these circumstances I am confident you will see the expediency of proceeding with due caution in the adoption of such regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of extending our trade and securing our present advantages; and you may rely on my cordial co-operation and assistance in every measure which is calculated to the prosperity and welfare of his Majesty's dominions.

His Royal Highness having finished the reading of the Speech which he did in an audible and commanding voice, he retired, and returned to Carlton House in the same state as that in which he proceeded to Parliament.

Their Lordships then adjourned during pleasure, and at 5 o'clock they met again.

Nov. 24—The general opinion of the public respecting the duke of Wellington's embassy to Paris, will, we have reason to suppose be verified by his grace's recall. His life is even said to be exposed to some danger in the French capital, from the evil passions which his presence there has excited, and the most ordinary civilities, or proposals are received with coldness and caution, only because they come from him. Report selects lord Harrowby as the duke's successor in his present employment; lord Mulgrave to be president of the council, in the room of Lord Harrowby; and the Duke of Wellington, master-general of the ordinance, in the place of Lord Mulgrave.

We have been positively assured that, in point of fact, orders have been prepared in the respective departments, of the French military administration, for an additional recruiting to a very large extent. 80 or 100,000 men as it is stated to us. These orders have not yet been issued; and for the present they seem destined to wait the course of political events.

A pretty general rumor was current yesterday towards the close Change, that there had been some serious commotions in France, though no particulars of the time and place could be collected. An order was given to the ministers of the ex-emperor to quit Paris. They have not submitted to this order, saying that the constitution does not admit of arbitrary acts.

Nov 25—The duke of Wellington is said to have remonstrated successfully, against the observations made in the Paris papers on the capture of Washington; against the exemption of American armed vessels in the ports of France; and even against the pending out of French commercial consuls to the ports of America, during our blockade. Reference was had to the duke to obtain a pass through the blockade of the ports of America, to a French ship which had been some time in readiness to take her departure from Havre de Grace. The application has been ineffectual, and the cause of its ill success may be easily explained, as there are above 300 French Officers who have taken their passage by this vessel, and who had applied to Mr Crawford, the republican minister at Paris, to know whether they could acquire rank in the army of the United States.

Nov. 26

In the House of Commons, Nov. 24, the Chancellor of the Exchequer after high eloguims upon the late General Ross, moved that the Prince Regent be humbly requested to give directions for the erection of a monument to his memory. The motion was unanimously agreed to.

In the course of his remarks, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said:

"He could not help expressing a hope, that this vengeance, thus signally inflicted (alluding to the destruction at Washington) would be the last, and that no aggravation would render a resource to similar measures necessary. He also would take that opportunity of stating, that instructions had been sent out to the coast of America to abstain from further inflictions unless rendered necessary by fresh enormities, an order which he was satisfied, Gen. Ross, had he lived, would have felt sincere pleasure in promulgating."

London, Dec. 28—Peace being now concluded with America, there can be no further pretence for the continuance of the Income Tax. We may, therefore, now venture to congratulate the country upon the end of that oppressive burden, on the 6th of April next, as a matter of course.

31.—Spain is now more than ever infested with banditti. The Spanish troops are all without pay, and suffering, at the same time, privations in provisions. Every thing is in disorder; the government is not yet sufficiently established to enforce its decrees, and the wicked and desperate take the advantage of the times and circumstances. In corroboration of the above, we have to state, that Lieut. Col. R. J. Harvey, assistant quarter master general to the Portuguese army, while travelling post on horseback from Bayonne to Lisbon, a few weeks since, was stopped by six men, mounted and armed as guerillas, upon the high road, at about 11 o'clock in the day, and robbed of every thing he had. On his arrival at Valladolid, the captain general of Province, (Pasfox) furnished the colonel with what money he required, to provide himself with clothes, &c. to enable him to pursue his journey.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.

The effects of Peace, on many articles of foreign produce, on specie, and on the various descriptions of government paper, has been very sudden and extraordinary.

Muscovado Sugars, which on Saturday commanded a ready sale at twenty-six dollars per hundred weight, were, on Monday, sold at auction at thirteen.

Teas, as well as some other articles, fell in price, during the two days, from 75 to 100 per cent.

Specie, which on Saturday commanded 23 per cent. above par, cannot now be sold at 5.

PHOEBE and CHERUB.

Most of our readers are, we believe, already aware of the arts by which the Americans invariably endeavour, whenever opportunities present themselves, to seduce our brave Tars from their duty, and thus to sap the foundation of a Power which is at once their envy and their dread. It is also well known, that the honour and honesty of John Bull have, on all occasions been proof against every temptation which Yankee cunning could devise; but we, notwithstanding, have great pleasure in publishing the following account of some circumstances that took place at Valparaiso, whilst his Majesty's ships Phœbe and Cherub were lying there in company with the frigate Essex and her prizes; because it must be as mortifying to the Americans, as gratifying to us, to find that no advantages of situation can ever enable them to practice their dirty artifices with success. Tho' removed almost as it were to another world, and tempted in every possible way to desert, not a single man was found in either of our ships base enough to do so; and we are satisfied that the same sentiments of unshaken attachment to their King and Country, which have been so nobly evinced by the crews of the Phœbe and Cherub, are generally prevalent throughout the British Navy.

The Letter from which these particulars are taken, is from an officer of the Navy, who, after describing the different places at which they had sought the Essex, thus continues:—"On the 8th of February we arrived off this port;—and had the pleasure, on opening the Bay, to see the long and anxiously looked-for frigate Essex, an English Whaler, which Captain Porter had armed with 20 eighteen pound carronades, and manned with 150 men, and two other English Whalers, prizes, at onchor there; having arrived about ten days before us, from the Marquesa Islands, where Porter has left three of his prizes. The little C. was anchored within half a cable's length of the American Frigates's larboard bow. At 8 o'clock the following morning the Essex and Little Essex hoisted their Ensigns, with a white Flag at the Fore Top Gallant Mast Head, written on it—"Free Trade and Sailor's Rights,"—manned their rigging, and gave three cheers.—About 6 minutes after the Phœbe and Cherub hoisted their St. George's Enfign with "God and our Country," "Sailors' best Rights" "Traitors offend Both," written on the Flag, manned our riggion, and gave three hearty cheers. Soon after the enemy manned all their boats, crowded with liberty men, going ashore, and with a Flag in each boat written on it "Sons of Commerce, Sons of Freedom;" pulling close under our bows; and on their gaining the heights just above us, spreading wide their flags, the Sailors mounted some on Horses, some on Mules, cheering and pointing at us.——No language can convey to you an idea of my feelings on witnessing the good conduct, loyalty and forbearance displayed by the seamen and marines of both our ships upon this and a number of other occasions during our continuance at Valparaiso. Whenever a boat from the Phœbe or Cherub went on shore, as we were obliged to beach them, the American Sailors wol'd ride to the boats with grog, and offer our people Horses to ride on; but it was all to no purpose, and some of our fellows told them they would give them a Water-Cask in the Fore-Hold to ride on, if they would venture from under the protection of the Spanish Flag. In the evenings the Americans would assemble forward, and commence singing. The Cherub's men requested to be allowed to do the same, and this being granted them, they commenced with—God save the King, Rule Britannia, Battle of the Nile, &c. and the singing on both sides continued every night during our stay. The Americans having thus discovered that all their attempts to seduce our men were insufficient; soon changed their tone and began to insult us, by replying in answer to our Cry of All's well, all's well on board the Guerriere—All's well on board the Java—All's well on board the Macedonian; and such an animosity has been excited between us and them, thro' these means, that our people most cheerfully submit to all the hardships, and inconveniencies attending a close blockade in the most unsettled climate I have yet known, in the hope of being one day able to punish their insolence."

Note. The above letter was written on the 27th of March, and the very next day the Essex was taken.

BOTANY BAY.

Extract of a letter from Sydney Cove, dated May 28, 1814.

"We have met with very great losses lately, in consequence of the very bad seasons last year. There was not, for nearly ten months, two hours rain. A vast number of cattle were starved to death, and if rain had not at last come, in two months there would not have been one animal alive of any kind in the country. Besides this mortality among the cattle, there was not three bushels of wheat to the acre all over the settlement. But the cattle did not merely die for want of food arising from the season, but from the practice of the natives, who set fire to the grass, which soon spread the flame, as it was so dry for want of rain, and the fire ran over the country in all directions with great rapidity. The natives catch their mangories, upon which they chiefly subsist, by setting fire to the grass round the bushes, and the mangories, seeing the fire around them, run from their holes, and are easily caught. You will hear with pleasure, on the other hand, that the ridge of mountains, called the Blue Mountains, which formed the boundaries on the west and north, which none had passed to observe the country beyond them, have been lately passed by three gentlemen, Messrs. Wentworth, Bloxland, and Lawson, who have found the country to be the more beautiful and fertile than can well be conceived. The Governor, in consequence of this discovery, intends to have a road made over these mountains, in order to form a settlement there without delay. A survey or has been sent for that purpose, and many persons accompanied the mission, exploring the country upwards of one hundred and fifty miles, who all concur in bestowing the highest praises upon its beautiful appearance, and the fecundity of the soil. The open country appears to be very well watered. They saw a fine river which seemed to extend through the whole, as far as the eye could reach. It is deemed a discovery of the utmost importance, for when it is properly cultivated we may hope then for abundance. The Governor has allotted a thousand acres to each of the gentlemen who first ventured to pass the mountains, which they well deserve for their zeal, intrepidity and perseverance. Other adventurers are also to be rewarded in proportion to their efforts.

"What renders this discovery and territorial acquisition of such great importance, is the consideration that all the land on this side of the mountain would soon have been in cultivation, but which would by no means have been sufficient for the wants of the colony, almost daily augmenting in population."

By His Honor GORDON DRUMMOND, Esq. President, administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieut. General commanding His Majesty's Forces in the said Province.

WHEREAS I have this day received from his Excellency the Governor in Chief and Commander of the Forces in his Majesty's North American Provinces, an official communication, signifying that a Treaty of Peace had been concluded between Great Britain and the United States of America, the Ratifications of which has been duly exchanged at Washington on the seventeenth day of February last, by which Treaty it is stipulated, amongst other things, that there shall be a firm and universal Peace between his Britannic Majesty and the United States and between their respective Countries, Territories, Cities, Towns, and People of every degree, without exception of places or persons, and that all Hostilities both by Sea and Land shall immediately cease

I do therefore hereby proclaim the same to all his Majesty's loving Subjects in this Province, strictly charging and enjoining them to observe inviolably the said Treaty of Peace accordingly.

Caution to the Public against Forged Army Bills.

President's Office, Kingston, 1st Dec. 1814.

It being ascertained that forged army bills, executed in the United States, and introduced into this Province from Ogdensburg or its neighbourhood, are now in circulation, his Honor the President has been pleased to direct, that the following observations pointing out the most material differences between the genuine and forged Notes be published for the information of the public:—

First, in the counterfeit ten dollar bill "(b)" the tail of the "S" in "Plastras," is distinctly marked with a dot at the lower end of it, which is not the case in any of the sets "(b)" of the Two, Three, Five, and Ten Dollar true bills.

Second, the "(b)" in the corner, at the head, occupies a wider space.

Third; the "o" in the "No." is lower down, close to the "N" and the point "." much smaller.

Fourth, the perpendicular hair strokes in the black letter "Ten Dollars," particularly in the "R." are finer and at greater distances than in the true bill, giving the whole a lighter appearance.

Fifth, the "x" in the black letter "Exchange" wants the lower back hair stroke, and looks like an "r."

Sixth, "By order of the Commander of the Forces" is of a longer faced letter, standing closer to each other than in the genuine.

The same observations hold good with regard to the Two Dollar counterfeit bills, excepting that the "o" of the "No" is a little higher up: And in addition, first, the head of the "T" in "TWO" is much better formed in the forged than in the original: Second, the "a" in "Dollars," is remarkably different from that of the true bill, the latter having no dot at the head, and standing further from the "l"

The "x" in "Exchange" has the same defect in the counterfeit Two as in the Ten, though a little of the hair stroke appears, the impression being much stronger.

From the London Morning Poſt.

On the Conduct of the United States.

To trace the fluctuations of public opinion, regarding the intrinſic value of our North American colonies, were not only a ſubject of curious inquiry, but is in ſome degree eſſential to a right underſtanding of their real importance, as component parts of the Britiſh empire.

Adverting to the known fact, that a diſpute reſpecting the limits of Canada & Nova Scotia, was the oſtenſible ground of war between France and England, in 1756, it were rational to infer, that proportionate importance muſt from that period have been attached to the poſſeſſion of thoſe provinces. Subſequent events have, however, clearly ſhewn, that ſo long as our original American colonies remained in ſubjection, the true value of the poſſeſſions we yet retain in N. America, was either unknown to the miniſters of Great Britain, or if known, moſt unaccountably diſregarded. This obſervation being peculiarly applicable to Canada, which had been deemed of ſufficient conſequence to involve the nation in hoſtilities, it may not be unintereſting conciſely to notice the opinions that were held on the policy of retaining that conqueſt at the peace of 1763.

In 1763, when from the ſucceſs of our arms, peace with France was anticipated, it became a queſtion of general diſcuſſion, whether Canada, or the iſland of Guadaloupe, were the preferable acquiſition to be retained by this country.—Both had been wreſted by conqueſt from France—the reſtoration of one was indiſpenſible, and the adminiſtration of that day evidently heſitated in their deciſion. At this juncture the Earl of Bath addreſſed a letter through the medium of the Preſs, to Mr. Pitt and the Duke of Newcaſtle, ſtrongly urging the expediency of retaining Canada. To that letter, an anſwer was publiſhed under the title of "Remarks," &c. as ſtrenuouſly recommending the reſtoration of Canada.—The ground of argument on which this writer urged that meaſure was twofold. Firſt, the impolicy of giving facility to the extenſion of our American colonies, "which by increaſing infinitely in population, might eventually become dangerous to the mother country;" and next, by the increaſing importation of ſugar, that muſt reſult from our attention to Guadaloupe.

In refutation of theſe "Remarks," Dr. Franklin produced his celebrated "Canada Pamphlet," which is believed to have had conſiderable influence on the deciſion of miniſters, to retain the province of Canada.

That the policy of retaining a ſugar iſland, could have ever been oppoſed to that of poſſeſſing the Canadas, the great river of St. Lawrence, and the lakes of North America, forming altogether the moſt extended inland navigation known to mankind, may, naturally, at this day, be diminiſhed on a view of the arguments adduced by Dr. Franklin, in ſupport of the policy recommended by the Earl of Bath. Thoſe productions of the ſoil and coaſts, and the extraordinary facilities of inland navigation, which now conſtitute the value and importance of the Canadas to this country, appear to have been wholly diſregarded, in diſcuſſing the relative value of thoſe important provinces, when compared with that of the iſland of Guadaloupe. Neither the foreſts of Canada; the capacity of the ſoil for producing a vaſt ſurplus of grain; the abundance of fiſh on the coaſt; the traffic in furs; nor the probable extenſion of our maritime ſtrength, are adverted to in the "Canada Pamphlet." "If," ſays the Doctor, "it is aſked what are the productions which the farmer of Canada can offer in return for the manufactures of G. Britain; I anſwer, hemp, flax, potaſh, & above all, ſilk. From the ſouthern parts may alſo be derived olive oil, raiſins, currants, indigo, and cochineal." A ſingle glance at the annual ſtatement of exports from Quebec, may ſerve to ſhow with how little foreſight Dr Franklin appreciated the proſpective value of Canada to this country! with the ſolitary exception of potaſh, there is not an article in his enumeration, which has found its way in any quantity to this country. Of hemp and flax, there is, indeed, no queſtion that the ſoil of Canada is adapted to an abundant production; but hitherto, from various cauſes, every effort to cultivate thoſe articles extenſively has proved unſucceſsful.

Nor will that ſurpriſe

The truth is, that the poſſeſſion of Canada by Great Britain, was at that time viewed as infinitely more important to our other provinces of North America, than to the parent country. By the removal of the French government, our colonies were delivered from that apprehenſion of Indian outrage, which ſo greatly impeded and reſtrained the extenſion of their back ſettlements; and although many collateral arguments are urged by Dr. Franklin in favour of the annexation of Canada, it cannot be doubted, that the anxiety of our coloniſts was founded upon the hope and proſpect of ſecurity againſt the Indians

To appreciate the policy which led to the retention of Canada and to refuſe the adviſers of that meaſure free from the imputation of defective foreſight, it is, however, proper to keep in remembrance, that the dependence of our Weſt India iſlands upon a foreign, and by poſſibility, an adverſe power, could not at the peace of 1763, be within the range of political anticipation.

In our American colonies, lumber, tobacco, rice, and indigo, were then conſidered as the chief ſtaple articles of exportation. With rice and lumber our Weſt India iſlands were naturally ſupplied from the American ſtates; but the ſalted fiſh, beef, and pork, the flour and biſcuit conſumed in theſe iſlands, were principally derived from Great Britain and Ireland. For the population of the parent country had not yet attained that exceſs beyond agricultural production which has ſince rendered the importation of grain eſſential to exiſtence. Theſe iſlands during ſeveral years, between 1750 and 1760, produced a ſurplus of grain ſuch as to admit the exportation of conſiderable quantities.

Hence the viciſſitude of political events has tended naturally to produce a fluctuation of public opinion, regarding the value of our American colonies; and Canada, which originally was deemed valuable chiefly as a poſſeſſion of ſecurity, muſt now be viewed as the great and invaluable reſource on which can alone be founded the independence of our Weſt Indian poſſeſſions—the independence of our navy againſt defective ſupplies of timber from the Baltic—and as the certain means, if duly cheriſhed, of increaſing our commercial wealth and maritime power.

SORCERY.

(From the Gazette de France.)

On the 25th day of January laſt, L. Rollaſſey, Jean Parſon, Etienne Morlet, ann Jean Dupen, of the commune Jouy complained that on the 6th of that month Claude Griffée circulated a report, that on that day he had ſeen them dance round a fire and a table on which were a quantity of bottles and glaſſes of wine, in the midſt of which was placed a gilt chair in which was the Devil, who preſided over the dance They complained that theſe reports injured their characters and commerce; that their children even dared not to go to the public ſchools, nor into the ſtreets, being hooted and pelted by other children The complainants concluded that Griffée ſhould be required to contradict his aſſertion, and pay a certain ſum to each of them by way of compenſation. The tribunal of the police of Ile-ſur-le-Serin diſcharged the parties out of court, the charge of ſorcery being too contemptible to occupy the attention of the court.

The Procureur General, Merlin, required ex officio, the revocation of this deciſion. Nothing (ſaid the Magiſtrate) would be more proper than the judgment of the tribunal of Ile-ſur-le-Serein, if reaſon were the guide of the multitude—but it is not. That the people may give eaſy credit to the charge of ſorcery, is proved by numerous facts. Hence to accuſe an individual of ſorcery, is to injure him, in the opinion of the multitude—conſequently it is committing a puniſhable offence.

The court being of opinion that the imputation of ſorcery was a grievous injury done to the complainants; that by its being credited, it might miſlead the opinion of the people, diſturb the public repoſe, and occaſion fatal conſequences; and that by refuſing to decide upon a demand of reparation, the tribunal of police of the canton of Ile-sur-le-Serin had violated the 471st article of the penal code, annul the said judgement.

A Paris paper has the following anecdote:—An inkeeper of Troys, read in a newspaper, that the Princess Amelia, of Savoy, had clandestinely quitted the court of her father; and she was travelling in France with an Italian Count, and that his Sardanian Majesty had ordered the arrest of the fugitives wherever they might be found. If the King however, had his emmissaries, the Princess had also her's, and the Sieur Marcel, her intended, who was at Troyes, determined, in order to relax the pursuit, to make a peasant girl, who had arrived at the inn, named Tonton, pass for the Princess of Savoy. Mademoisseile Elomire Tonton had, however, so little the air of a Princess, that the inhabitants of Troyes, could scarcely be deceived. Tonton retired to rest, and uttered in her sleep some incoherent phrases, which the intended interpreted in his own manner; and moreover, there were found in a parcel, a purse full of gold, and some letters with the seal bearing the arms of Savoy. After these proofs there remained no doubt, and the good Troyens hastened to offer their homage to her highness. A Gascon barber, named Bosquet-Gayandan played the character of the Italian count. He partook all the honor rendered to the Princess Amelia Tonton, and sat at table with her. Marcel, who, by this stratagem, had gained sufficient time, finished the masquerade by marrying the barber and Tonton.

PARIS, Oct. 14.

FRENCH MARINE.

The King has not yet appointed the Minister of Marine. The Minister who at present fills that office is incapacitated by years, as well as by want of natural ability, for an office, in which all the enterprise of youth should concur with the caution and experience of age. Public attention seems to fix upon M. de Travarsee, who is now in Paris. He seems to have those qualities which admirably fit him for an office of so much importance. He possesses the confidence of the sailors, who regard him as the only man capable of raising the prostrate flag of France, without exciting jealousy in England, whom we desire to conciliate, and ever respect.

The King and the Ministers act with perfect good faith on this point, but the nation do not partake in their sentiments. We are humbled, we are mortified, as much by her greatness, as by the sense of obligation which we owe her. Our animosity, our jealousy, mixes itself in every thing; in our public spectacles, in our songs and our epigrams. No satire is so much relished as that against England. Malice is always heard with favor, when it is employed to depreciate her.

M. de Travarsee served in the navy before the Revolution, and distinguished himself as an officer. He was well known to Louis XVIII. at Milan, and is the most accomplished in nautical skill of any man in France. He has all the genius of Colbert, with more of the practical knowledge. His Majesty has tendered to him the office; but, it is said, that he has declined it.

The opinion of M. de Traversee, is, that France, rich in noble harbors, and arsenals, upon both seas; having gates, at the same time to the Mediterranean, and Atlantic; cannot but excell in her fleet, at a time moreover, when England restores to her the Colonies—A restitution vainly made, unless she has power to protect and defend them in case of war. Our military advisers are all of this opinion; but our finances hold directly opposite sentiments; and they use all their efforts to persuade the King, that the restoration of a navy exceeds the powers of the revenue, and that a mercantile marine is alone within the reach of France.

These two opinions divide the Cabinet, and there seems little prospect of a composition. Our administration is at this moment without a head.—The nation behold talent in some, whose integrity they suspect; and they lament the want of ability in many whose honesty they applaud.

The Surprize, left the port of Brest on the 9th Jan. By this arrival the Editors of the commercial advertizer are favoured with a file of the Paris Moniteur to the 21 Jan. inclusive.

Translated for the Commercial Advertizer.

Madrid, Dec. 13.—A report, which is unfortunately too well confirmed, has spread abroad in this city the greatest consternation. The royalists and insurgents of the kingdom of Mexico, have united and proclaimed, unanimously, the political independence of the northern part of our possessions in America.

It is said that the Empress of Russia is pregnant. This event will be very important for Russia. The Emperor has no children.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—Letters from Madrid state that England has demanded of Spain; as an indemnity for the war, Mahon and Ceuta; they add that the Spaniards are making preparations for the defence of Mahon; these reports do not appear to be well founded.

Altona Dec. 11.—It is said that the Senate of Hamburgh has been obliged lately to sign an engagement, not to make any alterations in the fortification of the city, until the end of Congress.

From the Moniteur of January 2.

VIENNA, Dec.—The report gains strength that the Prince Royal of Wirtemburg will marry a Princess of the north.

PROCLAMATION.

Frederick Augustus, by the grace of God, King of Saxony and Duke of Warsaw. We have learned with the most lively grief, that our kingdom of Saxony is about being provisionally occupied by the troops of his Majesty the King of Prussia.

Ever decided not to seperate our [illegible] from that of our people, filled with confidence in the justice and magnanimity of the Allied Monarchs, and intending to accede to their alliance as soon as we had it in our power, we resolved, after the battle of Leipsick to wait upon the conquerors; but the Sovereigns refused to listen to us; and obliged us to depart from our States and retire to Berlin. His Majesty the Emperor of Russia nevertheless gave us to understand that our separation from Saxony was only required by the military exigencies of the time and his Majesty invited us at the same time to place the most entire confidence in him. We received also from their Majesties the Emperor of Austria and King of Prussia the most feeling proofs of interest and sensibility. We were therefore permitted to indulge ourselves in the hope that as soon as these military considerations should cease, we should be reinstated in our rights and restored to our dear subjects. We were still more authorised to expect a prompt and happy change in our situation because we had made known to the allied Sovereigns our sincere desire of co-operating in the establishment of the peace and liberty of Europe: and because we had manifested, in every way which was in our power, our true devotion for their persons and for the cause which was the object of their efforts.

When peace was concluded with France, it was a source of infinite grief to learn that our reiterated requests for a prompt restoration had not been accorded; that our just hopes were yet unattended to; and that the decision of our dearest interests and of our people, had been adjourned to the Congress of Vienna. Far, however, from crediting the rumors spread abroad in relation to the fate of our States, since the peace of Paris, we reposed an entire confidence in the justice of the allied monarchs, it was impossible for us to penetrate the motives of the proceeding which they had observed towards us.

The preservation of the consolidation of the legimate dynalties had been the grand end of the war which had terminated so happily. The Allied powers, for this purpose, had proclamed at different times, in the most solemn manner, that far from any project of conquest and aggrandizement, they had only in view the establishment of the rights and liberty of Europe. Saxony, in particular, has received assurances the most positive, that its integrity should be maintained. This integrity comprehended essentially the preservation of the dynasty for which the nation had publicly manifested its constant attachment, and an unanimous desire of being re-united to its sovereign.

We have committed to the principal powers of Europe, a frank and complete avowal of the motives which had directed our political conduct during the late years and from the unshaken confidence which we place in their intelligence and justice, we are persuaded, that not only perceived the intentions, but also fity which [illegible] position [illegible]

The inviolability of our rights, and of those of our house, under the inheritance honorably and justly acquired by our ancestors, must be perceived; Our speedy restoration to them ought to follow of course.

We would fail in our sacred duties to our Royal House and to our people were we to keep silence upon the new measures projected against our States, at a moment when we have a right to expect their restitution. The intention manifested by the Court of Prussia, to occupy, provisionally, the States of Saxony, obliges us to fortify our well established rights against the consequences which may grow out of such a measure.

It is in the presence of the Congress of Vienna, and in the face of all Europe, that we acquit ourselves of this duty, signing these presents with our own hand and in reiterating it the same time publicly the declaration communicated some time ago to the allied Court, that we will never consent to the cession of the States inherited from our ancestors; and that we will not accept any recompence or equivalent which may be offered us for them.

Given at the Frederickofeld, the 4th of November, 1814.

In your last I observed a Miscellaneous paragraph, prefaced "without application."—I think, judging from recent things, that you were premature and much mistaken.

It is well known that honorable appreciation of a soldier's unclouded merits is an article of our country's ethics—If in the instance alluded to, the present result of such appreciation was not sooner declared, let it be remembered that we are in one continent and our political judges in another country; from whence such fiat alone can come; where its fitness alone can be judged, however much we feel its necessity. I think also, that if a puny writer (like you) could be permitted to copy the immortal Sam Johnson in parallel or simile, he might pronounce that a section of our continent had now a "Shirt" instead of its ostensible substitute.—If you will further help to an application, you may publish the enclosed biographical Sketch of my mirror.

YORK (UPPER CANADA:) Printed by JOHN CAMERON Printer to the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

From the Montreal Herald of March 11, 1815
Communicated by a Correspondent.

Guernsey, April 2, 1814.

SIR,

Major General Sir Roger H. Sheaffe, has communicated to us a copy of the humble address of the Commons of Upper Canada, in Parliament assembled, to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent of the United Kingdom, in which they beg leave to suggest "that a grant to the family of Major General Sir Isaac Brock, of a portion of his Majesty's most valuable waste lands in the Province of Upper Canada, would be most gratifying to them, and would, they doubt not, be acceptable to his family, as it would be the means of perpetuating the name of Brock, in a country in defence of which the General so nobly fell, and which his exertions had so eminently contributed to save,"—and also, a copy of a letter from Earl Bathurst, to Sir Roger, in which his Lordship states that his Royal Highness is pleased most graciously to acquiesce in the wishes of the Parliament.

In appreciating, as we ought, this affecting tribute of the Honorable the Commons of Upper Canada, to the merits of their late and lamented President, we should be wanting as much to the high sense we entertain of the honor it confers upon his memory as to the sentiments of affection which embalms in our hearts the remembrance of our dear brother, if we delayed, most respectfully, to express our grateful thanks to the Parliament, for thus giving the fraction of their high authority to his character.

A character indeed worthy of their love; the warm affection he entertained for the people of the Upper Province, and the many friendships he had formed with the most distinguished individuals among them, were independently of his most public services, so many domestic claims which he had acquired to their attachment and confidence; his letters to us, breathed one continued prayer for their welfare; and he felt only happy in the belief of possessing their esteem

At the same time we should derogate from the high opinion he had formed of them as well as from the unassuming modesty of his own mind, if we forbore to mention that he ever ascribed the success which attended his measures to the wisdom and spirit which marked the deliberations of the Parliament of the Upper Province, to the correspondent exertions on the part of the other branches of its government, and the loyalty and courage of its population.

In accepting, Sir, the favor which it hath pleased his Royal Highness the Prince Regent at the solicitation of the Commons of Upper Canada, graciously to bestow upon us, may we be permitted through you to assure them, that we shall ever retain the most grateful and respectful remembrance of their honorable intervention on our behalf; fully sensible that we owe it to the merits of him whose loss we never can cease to deplore; it will be our sacred duty to impress this truth upon the hearts of our descendants, as it is already engraven upon our own; so that they, as well as ourselves, may unceasingly labor to preserve the affection which the people of Canada entertain for the name of Brock; and by striving to imitate the virtues of him who has illustrated it, may study to acquire the esteem of the country of his love; a country which will be endeared to our descendants, as it is to us being the scene of his triumphs; the occasion of his glorious death; and the tomb of his honored remains.

We have the honor to be most respectfully Sir, your most obedient, most humble servants,

Signed { Daniel De Lisle Brock, William Brock, John Savery Brock, Irving Brock.

To Allan M'Lean, Esq. Speaker of the Commons House of Assembly of Upper Canada.

From the same.——A FRAGMENT.

1. And it came to pass, in the reign of Jonathan, King of Fredonia, beyond the Western Sea, towards the setting sun, that the servants of George, King of the Isles; whose servants do business on the great waters, grievously oppressed the servants of Jonathan, by searching their ships and taking away by force, a few of the servants of George their Master, who had deserted his service

2. And behold the wrath of Jonathan was kindled; and he said to his princes and councellors: "See I pray you, what the servants of George, King of the Isles do unto our people, how they tame them into captivity in time of peace, and shall we sit still?"

3. And the princes and councellors of Jonathan consulted together what ought to be done in vindication of their rights, and said, "Let us arise in the greatness of our power and make war upon the people of the King of the Isles Let us seize upon their numerous ships on the great waters, wherever we can find them; and send our captains of thousands at the head of our young men, to subdue their distant provinces."

4 Therefore Jonathan hearkened to the voice of his Princes who counselled to make war against the servants of the King of the Isles; and commanded his servant the captain of his host, and the captains of thousands to gird on their armour and smite the Canadians, who inhabit the country on the great river, lying on the north of Fredonia, with the edge of the sword.

5. And it came to pass, in the third year of the war, that Jonathan and his servants were discomfited in all their attempts to subdue the provinces lying on the great river, insomuch that he sent messengers unto George, King of the Isles, praying him for conditions of peace.

6. And the King of the Isles being a good man, peaceably inclined and full of days, hearkened unto the voice of the messengers of Jonathan, and granted them conditions of peace, on the grievances of which Jonathan complained; and for which he made war, were not considered in the league; for Jonathan was more desirous of being freed from the calamities of war, than of asking a redress of the grievances which at first made him gird on his sword.

7. Thus Jonathan, having made a mighty stir concerning a pretended oppression which had at the beginning, greatly kindled his anger, and having found how hard it was to obtain redress by fighting, and to subdue the King of the Isles, as many battles went sore against him, he took counsel that it was better to drop the subject of the original quarrel, in which he had to much to lose and nothing to expect

8 Wherefore he sent unto George, King of the Isles, by the hands of his messengers, saying, "Let there be no strife between me and thee, and between my people and thy people, for we be brethren. Let us ascertain the boundaries and land marks which were in old times placed between thy country and my country, and swear to each other, that our people shall not pass over these land marks to do each other any hurt." So George King of the Isles, and Jonathan set their seals to the writing and made peace, which caused great joy throughout the land. Behold the rest of the acts of Jonathan, are they not written in the Chronicles of the Kings of Fredonia?

New York Feb. 27. We believe that it is the intention of government to send out a naval force to the Mediterranean, to chastise the insolence of the Algerines, who have provokedly commenced war upon us, and carried our citizens into captivity. On the 24th inst. Com. Bainbridge received orders from the Secretary of the Navy, to prepare the Independence of 74 guns, for sea with all despatch The Independence is at Charleston, near Boston.

We have said from the moment that Algiers availed herself of our war with England, to insult our minister and make prisoners of our countrymen, that the day of peace with England ought to be the day of war against Algiers. We repeat the declaration. Not one moment should be lost in equiping our navy to attack the Pirate. He should give our captive countrymen, and shrunk his annual tribute, or his town should be battered about his ears. We could not wish a finer school for our navy. The Tripolitan war brought great talents to light. A war with Algiers would be productive of the same benefits

On Saturday the Lords of the Council met to investigate a charge of murder in Portugal. The accused belonged to the commissariat department, in Lord Wellington's army, and is charged with shooting a female with a pistol. Three witnesses attest, that the prisoner after he had shot the deceased, had cut his own throat, from the effects of which he had but lately recovered. The defence set up by the prisoner was romantic in the extreme. He stated, that the deceased cohabited with a person in the same department; during which time a mutual attachment took place between her and himself; but a strict sense of honour forbad her quitting that person's protection; even though he offered her marriage; they therefore determined, since honor prevented their forming any connection in life, to die together, and he accordingly shot her. He then prepared to dispatch himself, but finding the butt of his pistol, was too large for the pistol, he placed it on his head, and fired against it, supposing that would eject his purpose; but finding himself mistaken, he cut his throat, and this a so proved ineffectual.—The case occupied their Lordships attention from one till three o'clock; when the prisoner was remanded to Tothil fields bridewell.

The wheat trade was exceeding heavy this morning, and sales could not be affected even at a reduction of 4s. per quarter from Monday's prices.—Barly continues nominally as on Wednesday, having none of fine quality at market. Oats and beans are full 1s. per quarter, and grey peas are 2s. per quarter lower. In other articles there is no alteration.

BOSTON, Feb. 26.

It has been asserted, that the Congress frigate, now lying at Portmouth, N. H. was destined to carry out minister and suite to Holland. This is probably not correct. She is however under orders to fit immediately for sea, as are the Washington, 74, at Portsmouth, and the Independence, 74, at this port.

JAVA.—We have received from Macassar, the following report of the effects produced by the abolition of the slave trade:—"The influence on the abolition of slavery is already felt to a great degree in this country.—Murders, which were formerly so numerous here, now happen very seldom; the people of the country travel about to any distance in perfect security. Those wretches, whose former employment was stealing and selling children into slavery, are now obliged to confine their depredations to horses and buffaloes and the scantiness and precariousness of this mode of subsistence compells many to cultivate the land to procure a livelihood. Under these circumstances cultivation and civilization are daily increasing, and must extend rapidly over the country. The native chiefs in Celebes do not conceal that they are much poorer in consequence of the change, but although they cannot at present be expected to co-operate willingly in the suppression of slavery, they are perfectly conscious of the blessings it must ultimately produce."—London Paper.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

On this interesting subject, Mr WILBERFORCE has written to a friend in the following terms:—"I am happy to inform you that a letter from the Duke of Wellington, brought me a few days ago the welcome intelligence, hat the French Government had actually issued an order, prohibiting the Slave Trade by French subjects, any where to the northward of Cape Formosa. By this measure protection is afforded to 1500 miles of coast, and the measure is the more important because, from the shape of the coast, slaves might be brought from the interior, either to the southward or to westward coast. Let us hope that this concession is the earnest of more complete success."

Portsmouth, Dec. 3, 1815.

The Prometheus sloop of War, Capt. Dashwood is fitting out with 20 32-prs. carronades, and she is to have a complement of 123 men. The American sloop of war Wasp mounts 22 32 pounders, and has 170 men; the Peacock sloop (American) has 20 32-pounders, 2 long 18 pounders, and 180 men.

A detachment of the 32d Foot (200 men) embarked this day for the Mauritius.

The friends of humanity will hear with much satisfaction, that three Merchants in the African slave-trade have been brought from Sierra Leone, in the Ariel sloop of war, and lodged in this gaol, in order to their being sent to New South Wales, for 14 years; that being the sentence of punishment passed upon them after their trial before Judge Thorpe, at the Colony of Sierra Leone. Their names are James Dunbar, by birth a Spaniard, Malcolm Brodie, a native of Manchester, and George ooke, an American.

The disbanding of the three regiments of East-India Volunteers, in consequence of the peace, is a saving to the company of 30 000l. per annum; each man received his cloaths, a one pound note, and 4s for a dinner, when finally dismissed.

DEATH OF THE DAY TUNIS.

The French papers contain the following account of the death of the Dey of Tunis: "A letter from Tunis, dated the 3d of October, says this event took place on the 17th of September. It was the last day of the RAMADAN (the Mahometan lent,) and this Prince had fasted during 24 hours. He was surrounded by the grandees of the Regency, and his Courtiers, who had assembled all the bards, to celebrate the last day of the Ramadan. He shewed no appearance of indisposition, when he suddenly fainted and expired, without convulsions or any symptoms of pain. He was 57 years of age, and had reigned 32 years. All the Princes of the family were immediately convoked, and Sadi Ottoman, the brother of the deceased Dey, was that very night declared his successor. He assumed the reigns of Government without any obstacle. The funeral of the Dey was celebrated on the 17th with much ceremony. On the same day Sadi Ottoman was saluted Dey of Tunis by the Divan and the Diplomatic Body. The letter adds, that the new Dey is indolent and rather remarkable for his taciturnity, but of a mild and pacific disposition.

BARBADOES.

BRIDGE-TOWN,

DEC. 15.

Restoration of the French Colonies.

By the politeness of a friend from Martiniquewe have received the accounts of the final furrender of that Colony to the French, pursuant to the preleminary treaty signed at Paris in May last.

St. Pierre and its Jurisdictions were taken possession of on Friday the 2d instant. The French frigate L'Erigene, which had arrived at the Island a day or two preceding, with troops from Europe came to anchor at the port of St. Pierre at 9 A. M. and exchanged salutes with the batteries. About 1 P. M. the Venerable, 74 also arrived, on board Rear-Admiral Durham, Naval Commander in Chief on this station; Sir James L[illegible] Commander in Chief of the [illegible]ces; Major Gen. Lindsay, the Colony,—and several other officers of rank. The Venerable likewise received the ceremony of salute with the batteries, and anchored at half past three.—The French authorities, Messrs. Du Buc, le Baron de Labarthe, and De Perinelle had previously arrived from Fort Royal.

Sir James Leith, with the General officers and the respective authorities of both Governments arrived at the battery D'Esnotz,—and at five o'clock the change of Flag was announced by the thunder of artillery from the batteries in conjuction with the ships in the harbor.

The French troops, thronged in their progress by the populace, who rent the air with reiterated cheers of Vive le Roi! Vive les Bourbons! proceeded to occupy the post of the principal battery, which had been evacuated by our force.

The most cordial unanimity prevailed amongst all parties, and a splendid entertainment was given at the Government House by his Excellency the Commander in Chief, in honor of the ceremony.

On Friday last, the 9th inst. the British garrison, consisting of the right wing of the 63d Regiment, commanded by Lt. Colonel Ratry and a detachment of the West India Rangers, under Capt Hubbard, evacuated Fort Edward, and embarked on board the frigate Galatea and Lord Eldon transport,—and at the same time the French troops to the number of about 300, landed from the Meduse frigate, and thereby proceeded to the vacated Fort, their fine full band playing national airs, which were greeted by the huzzas of the people.

Precisely at 12 o'clock the British Union was struck, and replaced by the White Flag,—which ceremony was greeted by a general salute from the vessels at anchor in the harbor and by the respective batteries. The frigate Galatea and Swaggerer, brig, together with the French men of war, were beautifully decorated with flags,—and the elegant appearance of the Galeata is said to have excited the particular admiration of all present.

Old Fort Dessaix or Fort Bourbon, together with Pigeon Island, were given up to the French a few days previous to the evacuation by our forces of Fort Royal.

The Colony of Martinique is now, therefore under the entire controul of the Government of France.

Trade, it is supposed, will remain unshackled by any material obstruction,—as the French Authorities are said to have signified their intention to ensure every facility in their power to the general mercantile interest of the West-Indies, and to admit the importation by our vessels of almost every article except flour.

After the surrender of Fort Edward on Friday last, His Excellency Major-General Lindsay embarked in the afternoon on board the army ship Captain Seymour, which sailed with H. M. S. Swaggerer, in company with several sail of small craft laden with Government stores, the same evening for Dominique. The Galatea, with the transport Lord [illegible] and several small vessels, sailed [illegible] with stores to be deposited at Grenada & Tobago.

The right wing of the 63d Regt. we understand, is to be stationed at Grenada, and the left wing at St. Vincent. And the detachment of the West-India Rangers, which embarked on Friday from Fort Edward, are destined for Tobago.

On the return of the Swaggerer from Dominique, she was to take charge of the brig Penelope, with Lt. Colonel Evans, of the Royal Artillery, and one part of the government stores for this Island. If this be correct their arrival may now be momently expected.

Our informant states that three British Officers of the Commissariat, Ordnance and Barrack Departments, are to remain at Fort Royal a short time, to superintend the entire removal of all property from the place, belonging to our government.

Several transports are arrived at Greenock for the purpose of conveying troops to Cork, destined for America. A detachment of the 2d battalion 79th regiment, has been in readiness at Fort Glasgow these three weeks past, a detachment from the 71st is daily expected there.

The 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th Garrison battalions, now in Ireland, are all to be reduced on the 24th; and Courts of Inquiry, to examine into the accounts of the above battalions, are ordered in the mean time.

The 2d battalions of the 12th and 40th Regiments, from Cork, are arrived at Plymouth; and the 2d Battalion of the 59th have left Fermoy for Dublin.

Emerick Pyeny, an Hungarian nobleman, who was travelling on the 31st of August near Drebeczin, alighted from his carriage to shoot some ducks, directing his servants to proceed. The report roused eight or ten shepherd's dogs, that were tending numerous flocks in those extensive uncultivated plains, who tore him in pieces before assistance could arrive.

In the account of monies paid out of the Civil List, and not provided for by Parliament, the following item appears: To Captain G. Hewson, for conveying the American Commissioners from Dover to Calais, one hundred and ninety three pounds thirteen shillings and six pence!

New-York, March 7.

The following Message was on Monday last, transmitted by the President of the United States to both Houses of Congress:

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the U. S.

Peace having happily taken place between the United States and G. Britain, it is desirable to guard against accidents, which, during the periods of war in Europe, might tend to interrupt it: and it is believed, in particular, the navigation of American vessels exclusively by American seamen, either natives or such as are already naturalized, would not only conduce to the attainment of that object, but, also increase the number of our seamen, and consequently, to render our commerce and navigation independent of the service of foreigners, who might be recalled by their governments, under circumstances the most inconvenient to the United States. I recommend the subject, therefore, to the consideration of Congress, and, in deciding upon it, I am persuaded that they will sufficiently estimate the policy of manifesting to the world a desire, on all occasions to cultivate harmony with other nations, by any reasonable accommodations, which do not impair the enjoyment of any of the essential rights of a free and independent people.—The example on the part of the American Government will merit, and may be expected to receive a reciprocal attention from all the freindly powers of Europe. JAMES MADISON.

February 25, 1815.

The message was read and committed in each House.

The following horrid circumstance, has been communicated to us. by a friend from Glengary, under date of the 13th March, 1815:—

"A melancholy affair happened in this neighbourhood on Thursday last; a German Soldier, I believe of D. Meuron's Regiment, came to a Tavern at M'Martin's Mills, River Raisin, in company with a boy; after being some time in the house, the Soldier went off, and left the boy behind. He had not been long gone before the boy missed a bundle that he had brought with him; and fell a crying; upon which the tavern keeper, a Dr. Brown, and one the name of Montgomery, who had his sleigh at the door rode after the thief, and soon overtook him, with the bundle under his arm. He made no resistance: but while they were on their way, and not suspecting any mischief, the villian pulled from his pockets two knives, sprung on the man that was before driving the horses, and run the knives thro' his heart; he expired without uttering a groan; then turning to Dr. Brown gave him a desperate stab betwixt the shoulder and the collar bone; and thinking him despatched he made off. The horses kept forward until met by a person to whom the Dr. who was languishing with the loss of blood, related what had happened. He brought back the sleigh to the Dr's House; and two young men armed went in pursuit of the villian whom they soon overtook by his track in the snow, he having left the road. They commanded him to surrender, which he refused, saying he was not the person they were in pursuit of, at the same time coming up to them with his hands and the knives to his bosom. One of the men then cocked his gun to shoot him, but it miss'd fire; on seeing this he sprung upon him, but the young man fell down to avoid the blow that was aimed at him, while the other with his fixed bayonett ran in upon him, and pierced him thro' the body; he fell, with the knife still in his hand, making a back handed stroke at his adversary, in the doing of which he wounded himself in the thigh or leg. Having secured and bound him, they drew the Bayonet from his body, and brought him to Dr. Brown's house. He was sent off to Cornwall gaol, where he is languishing, refusing medical assistance, and will not let any one come nigh him. Dr. Brown is alive, but in a very low condition, far from being out of danger."—Montreal Herald.

The wheat trade was exceeding heavy this morning, and sales could not be affected even at a reduction of 4s. per quarter from Monday's prices.—Barly continues nominally as on Wednesday, having none of fine quality at market. Oats and beans are full 1s. per quarter, and grey peas are 2s. per quarter lower. In other articles there is no alteration.

BOSTON, Feb. 26.

It has been asserted, that the Congress frigate, now lying at Portmouth, N. H. was destined to carry out minister and suite to Holland. This is probably not correct. She is however under orders to fit immediately for sea, as are the Washington, 74, at Portsmouth, and the Independence, 74, at this port.

JAVA.—We have received from Macassar, the following report of the effects produced by the abolition of the slave trade:—"The influence on the abolition of slavery is already felt to a great degree in this country.—Murders, which were formerly so numerous here, now happen very seldom; the people of the country travel about to any distance in perfect security. Those wretches, whose former employment was stealing and selling children into slavery, are now obliged to confine their depredations to horses and buffaloes and the scantiness and precariousness of this mode of subsistence compells many to cultivate the land to procure a livelihood. Under these circumstances cultivation and civilization are daily increasing, and must extend rapidly over the country. The native chiefs in Celebes do not conceal that they are much poorer in consequence of the change, but although they cannot at present be expected to co-operate willingly in the suppression of slavery, they are perfectly conscious of the blessings it must ultimately produce."—London Paper.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

On this interesting subject, Mr WILBERFORCE has written to a friend in the following terms:—"I am happy to inform you that a letter from the Duke of Wellington, brought me a few days ago the welcome intelligence, that the French Government had actually issued an order, prohibiting the Slave Trade by French subjects, any where to the northward of Cape Formosa. By this measure protection is afforded to 1500 miles of coast, and the measure is the more important because, from the shape of the coast, slaves might be brought from the interior, either to the southward or to westward coast. Let us hope that this concession is the earnest of more complete success."

Portsmouth, Dec. 3, 1815.

The Prometheus sloop of War, Capt. Dashwood is fitting out with 20 32-prs. carronades, and she is to have a complement of 123 men. The American sloop of war Wasp mounts 22 32 pounders, and has 170 men; the Peacock sloop (American) has 20 32-pounders, 2 long 18 pounders, and 180 men.

A detachment of the 32d Foot (200 men) embarked this day for the Mauritius.

The friends of humanity will hear with much satisfaction, that three Merchants in the African slave-trade have been brought from Sierra Leone, in the Ariel sloop of war, and lodged in this gaol, in order to their being sent to New South Wales, for 14 years; that being the sentence of punishment passed upon them after their trial before Judge Thorpe, at the Colony of Sierra Leone. Their names are James Dunbar, by birth a Spaniard, Malcolm Brodie, a native of Manchester, and George ooke, an American.

The disbanding of the three regiments of East-India Volunteers, in consequence of the peace, is a saving to the company of 30 000l. per annum; each man received his cloaths, a one pound note, and 4s for a dinner, when finally dismissed.

DEATH OF THE DAY TUNIS.

The French papers contain the following account of the death of the Dey of Tunis: "A letter from Tunis, dated the 3d of October, says this event took place on the 17th of September. It was the last day of the RAMADAN (the Mahometan lent,) and this Prince had fasted during 24 hours. He was surrounded by the grandees of the Regency, and his Courtiers, who had assembled all the bards, to celebrate the last day of the Ramadan. He shewed no appearance of indisposition, when he suddenly fainted and expired, without convulsions or any symptoms of pain. He was 57 years of age, and had reigned 32 years. All the Princes of the family were immediately convoked, and Sadi Ottoman, the brother of the deceased Dey, was that very night declared his successor. He assumed the reigns of Government without any obstacle. The funeral of the Dey was celebrated on the 17th with much ceremony. On the same day Sadi Ottoman was saluted Dey of Tunis by the Divan and the Diplomatic Body. The letter adds, that the new Dey is indolent and rather remarkable for his taciturnity, but of a mild and pacific disposition.

BARBADOES.

BRIDGE-TOWN,

DEC. 15.

Restoration of the French Colonies.

By the politeness of a friend from Martiniquewe have received the accounts of the final furrender of that Colony to the French, pursuant to the preleminary treaty signed at Paris in May last.

St. Pierre and its Jurisdictions were taken possession of on Friday the 2d instant. The French frigate L'Erigene, which had arrived at the Island a day or two preceeing, with troops from Europe came to anchor at the port of St. Pierre at 9 A. M. and exchanged salutes with the batteries. About 1 P. M. the Venerable, 74 also arrived, on board Rear-Admiral Durham, Naval Commander in Chief on this station; Sir James L[illegible] Commander in Chief of the Forces; Major Gen. Lindsay, Commandant of Martinique, and several other officers of rank. The Venerable likewise received the ceremony of salute with the batteries, and anchored at half past three. —The French authorities, Messrs. Du Buc, le Baron de Labarthe, and De Perinelle had previously arrived from Fort Royal.

Sir James Leith, with the General officers and the respective authorities of both Governments arrived at the battery D'Esnotz,—and at five o'clock the change of Flag was announced by the thunder of artillery from the batteries in conjuction with the ships in the harbor.

The French troops, thronged in their progress by the populace, who rent the air with reiterated cheers of Vive le Roi! Vive les Bourbons! proceeded to occupy the post of the principal battery, which had been evacuated by our force.

The most cordial unanimity prevailed amongst all parties, and a splendid entertainment was given at the Government House by his Excellency the Commander in Chief, in honor of the ceremony.

On Friday last, the 9th inst. the British garrison, consisting of the right wing of the 63d Regiment, commanded by Lt. Colonel Ratry and a detachment of the West India Rangers, under Capt Hubbard, evacuated Fort Edward, and embarked on board the frigate Galatea and Lord Eldon transport,—and at the same time the French troops to the number of about 300, landed from the Meduse frigate, and thereby proceeded to the vacated Fort, their fine full band playing national airs, which were greeted by the huzzas of the people.

Precisely at 12 o'clock the British Union was struck, and replaced by the White Flag,—which ceremony was greeted by a general salute from the vessels at anchor in the harbor and by the respective batteries. The frigate Galatea and Swaggerer, brig, together with the French men of war, were beautifully decorated with flags,—and the elegant appearance of the Galeata is said to have excited the particular admiration of all present.

Old Fort Dessaix or Fort Bourbon, together with Pigeon Island, were given up to the French a few days previous to the evacuation by our forces of Fort Royal.

The Colony of Martinique is now, therefore under the entire controul of the Government of France.

Trade, it is supposed, will remain unshackled by any material obstruction,—as the French Authorities are said to have signified their intention to ensure every facility in their power to the general mercantile interest of the West-Indies, and to admit the importation by our vessels of almost every article except flour.

After the surrender of Fort Edward on Friday last, His Excellency Major General Lindsay embarked in the afternoon on board the army ship Captain Seymour, which sailed with H. M. S. Swaggerer, in company with several sail of small craft laden with Government stores, the same evening for Dominique. The Galatea, with the transport Lord [illegible] and several small vessels, sailed [illegible] with stores to be deposited at Grenada & Tobago.

The right wing of the 63d Regt. we understand, is to be stationed at Grenada, and the left wing at St. Vincent. And the detachment of the West-India Rangers, which embarked on Friday from Fort Edward, are destined for Tobago.

On the return of the Swaggerer from Dominique, she was to take charge of the brig Penelope, with Lt. Colonel Evans, of the Royal Artillery, and one part of the government stores for this Island. If this be correct their arrival may now be momently expected.

Our informant states that three British Officers of the Commissariat, Ordnance and Barrack Departments, are to remain at Fort Royal a short time, to superintend the entire removal of all property from the place, belonging to our government.

Several transports are arrived at Greenock for the purpose of conveying troops to Cork, destined for America. A detachment of the 2d battalion 79th regiment, has been in readiness at Port Glasgow these three weeks past, a detachment from the 71st is daily expected there.

The 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th Garrison battalions, now in Ireland, are all to be reduced on the 24th; and Courts of Inquiry, to examine into the accounts of the above battalions, are ordered in the mean time.

The 2d battalions of the 13th and 40th Regiments, from Cork, are arrived at Plymouth; and the 2d Battalion of the 59th have left Fermoy for Dublin.

Emerick Pyeny, an Hungarian nobleman, who was travelling on the 31st of August near Drebeczin, alighted from his carriage to shoot some ducks, directing his servants to proceed. The report roused eight or ten shepherd's dogs, that were tending numerous flocks in those extensive uncultivated plains, who tore him in pieces before assistance could arrive.

In the account of monies paid out of the Civil List, and not provided for by Parliament, the following item appears: To Captain G. Hewson, for conveying the American Commissioners from Dover to Calais one hundred and ninety three pounds thirteen shillings and six pence!

New-York, March 7.

The following Message was on Monday last, transmitted by the President of the United States to both Houses of Congress:

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the U. S.

Peace having happily taken place between the United States and G. Britain, it is desirable to guard against accidents, which, during the periods of war in Europe, might tend to interrupt it: and it is believed, in particular, the navigation of American vessels exclusively by American seamen, either natives or such as are already naturalized, would not only conduce to the attainment of that object, but, also increase the number of our seamen, and consequently, to render our commerce and navigation independent of the service of foreigners, who might be recalled by their governments, under circumstances the most inconvenient to the United States. I recommend the subject, therefore, to the consideration of Congress, and, in deciding upon it, I am persuaded that they will sufficiently estimate the policy of manifesting to the world a desire, on all occasions to cultivate harmony with other nations, by any reasonable accommodations, which do not impair the enjoyment of any of the essential rights of a free and independent people.—The example on the part of the American Government will merit, and may be expected to receive a reciprocal attention from all the freindly powers of Europe. JAMES MADISON.

February 25, 1815.

The message was read and committed to a committee of one member from each House.

The following horrid circumstance, has been communicated to us by a friend from Glengary, under date of the 13th March, 1815:—

"A melancholy affair happened in this neighbourhood on Thursday last; a German Soldier, I believe of D. Meuron's Regiment, came to a tavern at M'Martin's Mills, River Raisin, in company with a boy; after being some time in the house, the Soldier went off, and left the boy behind. He had not been long gone before the boy missed a bundle that he had brought with him; and fell a crying; upon which the tavern keeper, a Dr. Brown, and one the name of Montgomery, who had his sleigh at the door rode after the thief, and soon overtook him, with the bundle under his arm. He made no resistance: but while they were on their way, and not suspecting any mischief, the villian pulled from his pockets two knives, sprung on the man that was before driving the horses, and run the knives thro' his heart; he expired without uttering a groan; then turning to Dr. Brown gave him a desperate stab betwixt the shoulder and the collar bone; and thinking him despatched he made off. The horses kept forward until met by a person to whom the Dr. who was languishing with the loss of blood, related what had happened. He brought back the sleigh to the Dr's House; and two young men armed went in pursuit of the villian whom they soon overtook by his track in the snow, he having left the road. They commanded him to surrender, which he refused, saying he was not the person they were in pursuit of, at the same time coming up to them with his hands and the knives in his bosom. One of the men then cocked his gun to shoot him, but it miss'd fire; on seeing this he sprung upon him, but the young man fell down to avoid the blow that was aimed at him, while the other with his fixed bayonett ran in upon him, and pierced him thro' the body; he fell, with the knife still in his hand, making a back handed stroke at his adversary, in the doing of which he wounded himself in the thigh or leg. Having secured and bound him, they drew the Bayonet from his body, and brought him to Dr. Brown's house. He was sent off to Cornwall gaol, where he is languishing, refusing medical assistance, and will not let any one come nigh him. Dr. Brown is alive, but in a very low condition, far from being out of danger."—Montreal Herald.

On the subject of the late peace we have noticed but few remarks:—From the present silence of America on the mighty pretensions for which war was declared; and from not seeing mention made of them, nor even allusion in the treaty.—We feel it relatively a subject little worthy of comment; but, when we look to the motives which caused them to time their aggression as they did, we are fully enabled to anticipate what consequences will follow. On their part we set down the peace as an armistice of convenience.—In any case, let a faction of mercenary zealots against the commonwealth, we are not to look for time nor consistence, in a war declaration—on the contrary, a phrensy, an undigested fit may madden them, and premature war be again waged upon us. If, on the other hand, a sober and reflecting government should unexpectedly be formed, situated as the American boundary is, British America is obviously too desirable—have it they ultimately will if the acquisition is possible to them.—Thro' their mouth piece, the official "National Intelligencer," they have glaringly and repeatedly avowed it. To traverse for a moment the ground plan of the United States, to view how they are intersected and washed by the lakes and rivers, their present northern and western boundaries; to consider the incalculable value of their outlets to a trading and agricultural people; to appreciate the boundless tract of country to the north and east of them, the ultimate object of America is as easily distinguished as the letters of the alphabet are named. We cannot doubt but that our government, which has seen the venomed adder leap its length, will guard against its sting so far as may be.—It has witnessed our infantine worth, it sees our growing value, it views the immense future consequences linked with retaining us—and it will never yield us to an enemy whilst Providence affords the means of protection.

[Never was a government more disappointed at not conquering a country than the American government at not over running this Province. Let us quote as a proof, and as an object of some visibility, that their Commanders were instructed to name provisionally, the places they successively conquered—and Newark, whilst in their possession, was in all their local officials, dubbed "West Niagara, in the County of Ontario, and State of Columbia."]

GORDON DRUMMOND, President

LONDON, November 10.

We have now as prisoners about 20 000 American seamen, and the inactive, ruined, degraded British navy, has only taken from the Americans 228 ships of war and armed vessels, and about 1,700 other vessels forming 20.000 Prisoners, and nearly 2 000 Vessels capture from the Americans!!!

But the captures from us.—Aye, there's the rub,' say the opposition. Let us see it! Since the Peace of Paris, before which our navy could not be applicable entirely to America, we have lost 176 vessels. By the fault of the Admiralty! Let us enquire. Of these 176, 94 were running ships, the loss of which cannot be imputed to the Navy; 38 others taken seperated from their convoy either from threfs of weather or wilfully. The number lost of the coasting trade, which have no convoy, amounted to 11.. thus

Running ships	94
Separated from Convoy	38
Coasting Trade	11
	143

So that the number taken under convoy amounts to just 33, and this Mr Whitbread's so corrected, ruined British trade, and supine British navy, and this is his active, successful and enriched American navy. TWENTY THOUSAND American seamen prisoners, and two THOUSAND American vessels, to be set against 176 British vessels.

Lord Grenville, supposing the report of his speech to be correct, seems to think it is "impossible for two great nations to give up their territories to the wretchedness of war, for an abstract question." Without dwelling upon the equality, in point of greatness, implied in these expressions, between England and America, we must ask, whether we or America entertered into the war for abstract question? Did not America ally herself with Bonaparte for the purpose of producing this great practical object, the humiliation and ruin of this country? She went to war to support him in his continental system, the exclusion of British commerce and intercourse from the Continent. She went to war to enforce and establish the principle of free bottoms making free goods: to put an end to the right of search; to establish that damnable doctrine by which a man is to view the homes of his ancestors, the graves of his forefathers, the altars of his God, as objects of indifference or contempt, and is to be permitted to take up arms against his native country with impunity. This was no abstract point with America. She hoped to accomplish it, and hence she refused to make peace with us, though the sole grounds upon which she had pretended to go to war, were done away by the repeal of the Orders in Council. However, by the destruction of her great ally Bonaparte, the question of maritime rights has become an abstract one to her, though she has not failed to use her efforts with the Continental Powers to take it up. But she is ready to abandon this question, say the party, and that is all we ought to require: in other words, America finds she cannot accomplish it, and that is to satisfy us. But let us not forget there was another little object which she avowed. To the question we have already stated, was attached another...the conquest of Canada. This was avowed to be one of the great objects of the war...it was the Government's project easy in its accomplishment, on account of the American possessions on the Lakes, and glorious and golden in its results. But the plan of aggrandizement has failed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, November 11.

Mr. Croker rose, pursuant to notice, to move for leave to bring in a Bill for the further encouragement and reward of the Petty Officers, Seamen, and Marines of the Royal Navy. He briefly stated to the House the object of this Bill. For the reward and maintenance of the Seamen and Royal Marines, when disabled by wounds, or absolutely worn out, a fund was provided by the chest at Greenwich; but for seamen who were discharged after a certain length of service, tho' not absolutely worn out, no reward was appointed. The Governor and Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, though anxious to extend relief to that class of claimants, found themselves restricted by the Act of Parliament, which expressly pointed out those men only who were wounded, disabled, or worn out, as the specific objects of that fund. The intention of the present Bill was to do away that restriction, and to render the chest at Greenwich and the Hospital there, available, as far as they would go, to all those Petty Officers, Seamen, and Marines, whom a certain length of service entitled to claim such benefit; it was also the intention of the Admiralty, after a certain length of service to grant to Seamen and Marines free discharge, with a pension, instead of that Interminable service which now existed; taking care to make the regulations as analogous to those of the Army as, upon a fair and liberal view, the two services will admit.

Mr. Croker, in reply to an Hon. Member, whose name we could not learn, who asked a question as to the intentions of the Admiralty with regard to the midshipmen and master's mates, said, that it has been found impossible to arrange any system of half pay for that numerous class of claimants. The Board of Admiralty intended, however, as soon as proper returns could be made, to adopt a plan of just and liberal promotion, which would extend to all the different classes of midshipmen and master's mates (Hear, hear, hear!), and all those who could not be promoted, would be maintained on full pay, instead of being cast forth destitute into the world, as was apprehended by some Honourable Gentlemen. (Hear!)

METHOD OF CUTTING IRON WITH A SAW.

It was lately stated in the papers on the authority of a French publication, that iron at a red heat, could be cut into thin pieces with a common saw. This important discovery was put to the test on Saturday last, in the presence of several Gentlemen, at the Iron Foundry of Mr. Williams, in Waterford, and the success was repeated, and each time afforded satisfactory evidence of the truth of the statement to which we allude. This discovery must be of very great importance to locksmiths and others who have to cut iron with nicety, as much time may be saved by its application to the purpose of business, and the waste of materials which is otherwise unavoidable, will be prevented. The iron should be heated to a cherry red, and the saw need only be selected according to the fineness of the pieces into which the metal is to be cut. The operation is perfectly easy, and the saw is uninjured by the work. Mr. Williams is entitled to the thanks of his fellow citizens for the readiness with which he performed the experiment, and the amenity with which he demonstrated its importance to workers in iron.

Observations of Mr. KING of Massachusetts, in the House of Representatives of the United States, February 27, 1815, on the Bill for the Military Peace Establishment of the United States on the late war and present peace, and on other Topics introduced by the Majority into the debate

MR SPEAKER—I regret to consume, on this subject, even a few moments of the remainder of the session: pressing and important is the business which ought to engage our attention. But it does appear to me, that in the wide range which gentlemen have taken, they have lost sight of the object and provisions of the bill. If it is to fix the military peace establishment of the United States, it has no relation to our connexion with foreign nations or even the position and intentions of our late enemy. All arguments, therefore, drawn from these considerations or sources, are entirely out of place. But suppose further danger was to be apprehended from your late enemy, or from Spain or any other power, does not the fifth section of the bill leave it discretionary with the president, whether to disband your regular army, on the 1st day of April next, or not. Should circumstances render it necessary, in his opinion, you give him the power, however improperly, to retain the whole of your present army. And there can be no doubt of his disposition to do it, whether warranted by circumstances or not. The power of wielding 60,000 swords, or of turning 60,000 bayonets against his foreign or domestic foes, poſſeſs infinite charms for him, and the patronage which they confess is all important, the vital principle, to him, and most profitable to his friends.

Sir—When I came to the house this morning, and saw a flock of executive birds, of ill omen, flattering round the hall, I expected a war breeze—I expected that executive influence would be extended to the utmoſt, to fix your peace eſtabliſhment as high as poſſible. These ominous, ill fated birds, are never on the wing but a ſtorm, deſtructive of ſome important intereſt of the people, immediately follows—A regular force of 6000 men, nearly double the number of your former peace eſtabliſhment, are as many ought to be retained, for any and every beneficial purpoſe; indeed, are more than can be intruſted with the preſent abuſers of power, with ſafety to the people.

Mr. Speaker—On the ſubject of the peace, and the events and progreſs of the late war, relative to which ſo much has here been ſaid, I would obſerve, that neither foreign nations nor our own, will judge thereof by your harangue here, or even by the deceptive meſsage of your preſident. No, sir—they have read in your declaration of war the alledged cauſes thereof, and will look into the treaty of peace, to see what you have gained. They will there see that not one of the objects for which you went to war, has been ſecured or obtained—even the point of honor rests with your late enemy with the poſſeſſion of Moose Iſland; your own envoys having very wiſely ſubmitted to commiſsioners, whether a part of your own territory and inhabitants belong to you or not.

Adminiſtration ſhould not deceive themſelves by the enthuſiaſtic expreſsions of unbounded joy on the return of the bleſſing of peace—a joy which has ſpread like lightening through our country, electrifying our citizens, and it echoed and re-echoed, and echoed again, from Maine to Louiſiana. Its peals are ſtill heard, like remote thunder, in the extremes of our nation. It implies the ſeverſt meaſures on, and I devoutly hope and believe, will ſeal the doom of this worthleſs adminiſtration. It is not in commendation of the terms of peace: becauſe it burſts forth ſpontaneouſly, before thoſe terms were known. Yes, sir, it implies an utter deteſtation and abhorrence of our war; and of war men and war meaſures. Yes, sir, an abhorrence of a war, from which the ſurvivors rejoice to have eſcaped with their lives, and with the miſerable remnants of their property, before you had completed the ruin of your country.

But miſtake me not, sir—moſt cordially do I unite with honorable gentlemen on this floor, and with all my fellow citizens, in mutual congratulations on the return of peace: already our beloved country is ſaved from further danger and deſolation—moſt cordially do I join with honorable gentlemen here, in voting thanks, and monuments, and ſwords, and medals, to the brave defenders of the country by ſea and land; in wreathing for them the laurels of immortality; and in every other teſtimonial of national gratitude to thoſe who have preſerved America from the power and ſtrength of our late enemy, and from the wickedneſs and folly of our rulers. But, sir, in all this, there is nothing to conſole the wicked adminiſtration; unleſs, like the fooliſh bird, they decorated their diſgraced body with the plumage of others. Notwithſtanding this truth, others might preſume from the language of gentlemen this day, that they had beaten their late enemy at all points, had indeed conquered him in the cabinet, and in the field, and had emerged from the horrors of this war, covered with glory. Yes, sir, that glory, like the all extended mantle of charity, had covered the multitude of their political sins. But where are we to look for this glory? It is mounted on the ſhoulders of your officers (who ſwarm our ſtreets) in the pretty form of epaulettes, right and left; or in the ſuits of your captains? In the heroic attacks of our warriors; or in the precipitate and diſgraceful flight of your preſident, your conſtitutional commander in chief, from the unfought field at Bladensburg? In the numerous and ſplendid victories of our gallant "ocean warriors;" or in the wreck of public credit, and in the loſs of 30,000 brave Americans, and of 150,000,000 of treaſure, ſacrificed in your late ruinous war. In theſe ſcenes we find no glory for the adminiſtration.

Accompany me next, to the cottages of the poor, and to the palaces of thoſe who were once rich, for your war, like pale death, as deſcribed by the elegant latin poet "æquo pulſat pede pauperum tabernas regumque turres." Yes sir, war

"With impartial fate
Knocks at the cottage and the palace gate."

Enter with me theſe dwellings of wretchedneſs; inquire of the ten thouſand widows, made ſuch by your war, there find, if glory will compenſate for the loſs of every thing dear to their hearts; aſk the twice ten thouſand fatherleſs children, orphaned by your war, if glory will give them bread, when they cry therefor, or clothes when naked, or inſtruction to reſtore to them the endearing relation of father: No. sir, no; they are thrown deſtitute and helpleſs upon the "the mercy of a rude world, which muſt forever hide them." and will be taght to lisp in curses, the name of Madison, and Madison's war. Follow me to your various encampments, viſit with me your numerous fields of battle, and of blood, and cry glory, glory, glory, over the mouldering remains of thirty thouſand ſlaughtered, murdered American citizens; victims to your ambition and folly; and ſee if it will reanimate, and reſtore them to their country and their friends. No, sir, no—their accuſing ſpirits have aſcended to their God, and their blood will be required at your hands. Cry glory, glory to your deſtroyed public creditors, and ſee if it will drown their clamours, or ſatisfy their demands, or fill the empty vaults of your treaſury. If your glory can do none of theſe things, it is of no national importance, "'tis air, a mere 'ſcuthcheon;" when weighed againſt our loſs—the mere duſt of the balance.

Sir, as to this peace—I fervently pray God, it may be perpetual! As to the treaty, whatever may be its terms, and I grant they are humiliating—ſince it is ratified—fulfill it with the moſt ſcrupulous good faith, extend to your late enemy a generous confidence, in advance; you will loſe nothing by your magnanimity, though you may every thing by your enmity and diſtruſt; reduce your army immediately to the loweſt peace eſtabliſhment—the American people will not maintain a ſtanding army, to gratify the pride and ambition of any man; curtail your enormous expences, by the moſt œconomy, and thus relieve the people from ſome of the grievous burdens, which your war, and your madneſs, and your folly, have impoſed upon them. As to the fears pretended to be entertained by ſome of the majority, of further hoſtile deſigns, meditated by your late enemy, or by any other nation; they are vain; againſt them, I will point to the brave yeomanry of our country, and be ſilent.

Waſhington, March 23d, 1815.

NOOANHEVA.

Com. PORTER has publiſhed a part of his journal, in which he diſcloses tranſactions of a moſt extraordinary nature, which commit the character and honor of this country. He relates that he made war upon the Typees, a tribe in Madiſon's Iſland, who had never troubled or moleſted this country. He says on the 26th Nov. laſt—

"We continued our march up the valley and met in our way ſeveral beautiful villages, which we ſet fire to, and at length arrived at their capital for it deſerved the name of one; the place was ſoon carried, and I very reluctantly ſet FIRE to it for the beauty and regularity of this place was ſuch as to ſtrike every ſpectator with aſtoniſhment. Their grand ſquare or public square was far ſuperior to any other we had met with. Numbers of their GODS were here deſtroyed; ſeveral elegant and large war canoes, which had never been uſed, were burnt in the houses that sheltered them. Our friendly Indians [his allies] loaded themſelves with plunder after deſtroying bread fruit and other trees, and all the young plants they could find We returned after being absent 4 hours, leaving behind us a scene of ruin and deſolation,

He says the number of villages deſtroyed amounted to TEN, and that the deſtruction of trees and plants and the plunder carried off by his Indian tributaries was almoſt incredible. He made much havoc and ſlaughter among the Happans, but loſt none of his own men except a ſerjeant, who died of fatigue a few days after.

"When I had reached the ſummit of the mountain, (proceeds this philoſophical journaliſt) I ſtopped to contemplate that valley in all its beauty, the ſcene of abundance and happineſs, a long line of ſmoking ruins marked our trace from one end to the other: the oppoſite hills were covered with the unhappy fugitives, and the whole preſented a ſcene of deſolation and horror!"

BOSTON, February 26.

When the news of peace reached Sacket's Harbor, 600 ſhip Carpenters were at work upon one ſhip of 98 guns, one of 74 guns, and a frigate of 44 guns. The keels had been laid, and the other work in some forwardneſs. [Baltimore Gazette.]

BOSTON, March 20.

New Blockade.—The Spaniſh Admiral Don Juan Gavallo, has notified from Porto Santo, the Britiſh Admiral Dunham, that he has inſtituted a ſtrict and rigorous blockade of all the ports and places in the Spaniſh American province of Venezuela, which are occupied by the inſurgents; and giving the information that all his Britannic Majeſty's ſubjects, and all others of course, may ſtop any direct communication with ſaid ports, under pain of condemnation.

NEW YORK, March 23.

Lieutenant Colonel Lawrence to General Jackſon, dated Fort Boyer, February 12, 1815.

SIR—Imperious neceſſity has compelled me to enter into articles of capitulation with Major Gen John Lambart, command ng his Britannic Majeſty's forces in front of Fort Boyer, a copy of which I forwarded you for the purpoſe of effecting an immediate exchange of priſoners. Nothing but the want of proviſions, and finding myſelf completely ſurrounded by thouſands—batteries erected on the ſand—mounds which completely commanded the fort—and the enemy having advanced by regular approaches, within thirty yards of the ditches, and the utter impoſſibility of getting any aſſiſtance or ſupplies, would have induced me to adopt this meaſure. Feeling confident, and it being the unanimous opinion of the officers, that we could not retain the poſt, and that the lives of many valuable officers and ſoldiers would have been uſeleſsly ſacrificed, I thought it moſt deſirable to adopt this plan. A full and correct ſtatement will be furniſhed you as early as poſſible.

Capt Chamberlain, who bears this to E. Levingſton, Eſq. will relate to him every particular which will, I hope, be ſatisfactory.

I am, with reſpect, your obt. humble ſervt.
W LAWRENCE, Lt. Col. Comd'g.
Major Gen. Jackſon.

The garriſon conſiſted of about 360 men, including officers. Three ſmall ſchooners in which the detachment was tranſported over the bay, were captured by the enemy's barges after the troops had landed.

QUEBEC, March 16.

It is rumoured that meaſures are in contemplation to ſettle the men to be diſcharged from the army and provincial corps, on the frontiers. It is hoped that ſome ſteps will be taken reſpecting thoſe who have fled into the States during the war, to avoid the ſervice required for the defence of the country; and that no doubtful ſubjects will be hereafter ſuffered to eſtabliſh themſelves in any part of theſe Provinces in the vicinity of the United States. Timely and wiſe precautions in theſe reſpects, would do more for the ſecurity of the country in the event of another war, than would be effected by a large military force.

DIED, At Ste. Foy, on Saturday the 10th inſt. Joſeph Mignereon, aged 86. The example of this venerable old man is worthy of being held up to public imitation, particularly at the preſent time. He ſerved as a private militia man in the wars of 1747 and 1755, on the borders of the great Lakes and on the Ohio, and returned to his pariſh, having eſcaped the greateſt danger attending the ſervice, moral corruption, a danger, indeed, leſs imminent in thoſe days than at preſent. Having applied himſelf to the labours of agriculture, to which he had been inured from his infancy, he ſoon became the owner of a valuable farm, which, when his ſtrength began to fail, he gave to a perſon who had formerly aſſiſted him in its cultivation, on condition of receiving half of the produce during his life and the life of his wife. He never, however, ceaſed to labour with his donatee while he was able; and the ample funds which remained, after the ſupplying of his own moderate wants, he conſtantly diſtributed among his poorer neighbours; lending without intereſt to thoſe who were able to repay him, viſiting thoſe who were in diſtreſs or affliction, and carrying amongſt them relief and comfort. Till a few days before his death, he never was confined by any illneſs, and retained the uſe of all his faculties. Within the laſt year he has been known to walk twelve miles to attend divine ſervice at the church of a neighbouring pariſh, when none was celebrated in his own.—Such a man need not be regretted; he fell when he was ripe, having fully completed the period of earthly exiſtence, performed all its duties, and left it without repining in the humble confidence of another and a better world.

MONTREAL, April 1.

The news of peace reached New Orleans on the 19th Feb. and was announced on the 21ſt to General Jackſon, by the Britiſh Admiral.—The reduction of Fort Boyer was received at New Orleans the ſame day.

The declaration of war by the United States againſt Algiers is generally thought to be a pretext for the purpoſe of keeping up a naval force, and affording a proper ſchool for their naval officers. Their public reports tend to confirm the belief. Mr. Crowninſhield the Secretary of the Navy has required of Congreſs, in a late report, for the purpoſe of carrying on the war againſt Algiers, "two 74's, ſix frigates, three ſloops of war, and ſix or 8 ſmall armed veſſels." In his report he alſo ſays, the three 74's ſhould be compleated for ſea and ready for ſervice on the firſt emergency—"four frigates ſhould always be deemed in actua ſervice, together with four ſloops of war, four ſmall armed veſſels, (to be principally employed as deſpatch veſſels) and two gun-boats in each principal port. The purchaſe of timber, the caſting of guns, and the collection of all other materials for building and equipping veſſels of war at ſafe and convenient places, are objects of the greateſt importance, and the annual conſtruction at leaſt of one 74 and two frigates, is recommended upon the principles of œconomy as well as policy."

KINGSTON, March 21.

Yeſterday Sir James Yeo having reſigned the naval command in this country to Commodore Owen; the officers of the fleet on Lake Ontario, unanimouſly joined in teſtifying their reſpect and regard for their late diſtinguiſhed aſſociate in arms, by inviting him to a farewell dinner. The mould loft of the dock yard, was fitted up for the purpoſe; the roof and ſides of the room being ornamented with different paintings on canvaſs, and the flags of various countries emblematically and taſtefully arranged; while in the upper end of the room appeared in a tranſparency—"Muros—Cayenne—Ontario." The whole ſhewing a degree of elegance far beyond expectation.—At ſix o'clock upwards of eighty officers of the rank of Lieutenant and above, ſat down to dinner. Preſident and Vice Preſident, Lieutenants Hambly and Richards; Deputies—Lieut. Scott, Mr. Lewis, Surgeon, Mr. Blacklock, Surgeon, and Mr. Gifford, Purſer. On the removal of the Cloth the following TOASTS were drank.

The KING. Tune, God Save the King.

The Prince Regent. Tune, Prince Regent's March.

The Queen and Royal Family. Tune, Merily dance the Quaker's wife.

Sir James Yeo—Our late Commander in chief—may he return in ſafety to our native country to receive a higher tribute of applauſe than we can beſtow on him; and long may he be ſpared to the ſervice, the credit and honor of which he has ſo ably ſupported. Tune, Britons Strike Home.

Com. Owen. Tune, Tom Tough

Sir R Hall. Tune, Hearts of Oak

Immortal memory of Lord Nelſon.

Duke of Wellington—May he long live to fight our battles and continue what he now is, "the pride of his country and the dread of its enemies." Tune, Battle of Salamanca

General Drummond—May he receive the undivided reward of his eminent ſervices Tune, Britiſh Grenadiers.

Proſperity to the Canadas. Tune, Speed the Plough.

The memory of the brave and lamentable Captain Downie—May the honorable but untimely circumſtance of his end prove equally an example and a leſſon to the ſervice

The memory of Generals Roſs and Pakenham, and the heroes who fell with them.

It is impoſſible to describe the enthuſiaſm that univerſally prevailed on Sir James Yeo's health being drank—every heart and tongue appeared to reſpond with ſentiments of attachment and reſpect for their gallant chief; which drew from him a reply as dignified as impreſſive and affectionate.

It is not in recollection that ſo unanimous a teſtimony of reſpect from all ranks of officers to their commander in chief, ever occured in any Fleet. The ſcene was truly intereſting and diſplayed in moſt eminent and glowing colours a degree of mutual confidence and eſteem between the commander and his ſubordinates highly honorable to both, and perhaps never ſurpaſſed in any military body.

Sketch of the Life and Character of the late B. Gough Eſq

Before he loſt ſight of the counterpoiſe between a Bonavanant and Sot, he was a perſon of ſome public intereſt in this country.—He was born in Ireland A D 1762.—His family removed to Briſtol in England, during his early infancy, and returned to Ireland ſhortly after the breaking out of the American Rebellion,—he received his education in England, and after his return to his native place, was, at his own deſire, indented to a linen draper.—At the expiration of his apprenticeſhip he was taken into the concern: he afterwards formed a ſecond connexion in general commerce—in neither of which however he realized any thing conſiderable. At the breaking out of the unhappy troubles in Ireland he ſhipped for the United States, with his diſpoſable funds, about 2000l. Sterling.—He was employed as principal accountant in an extenſive houſe in New York, in which ſituation he remained two or three years—after which he went to South America with an adventure as ſupercargo and partner, and was fortunate in ſales and returns—a ſecond and more extenſive adventure was ſtirred out, when he failed again, and ſuffered ſhip wreck a ſhort diſtance from La Vera Cruz (the port he was conſigned to,) and the veſſel and nine tenths of the cargo totally loſt. Fortunately for himſelf and the other ſhip owners, ſo much of the cargo was inſured as covered them from a ſerious loſs.—In 1801 he came to ſee this Province, and found himſelf ſo much pleaſed with it, that he purchaſed ſome fixed property, and in five or ſix years became a reſident.

His education was decent, his information very extenſive, and his opinions and judgement generally correct.—Before he yielded himſelf to deſtructive fotuiſhneſs, he was a moſt agreeable companion, and much valued; he was liberal, and few with particular ſatisfaction the growing improvements of the country.—¶ He married about eight years ago; but his diſpoſition was either naturally too peeviſh, or had become of a make to communicate or enjoy but little happineſs in the married ſtate

He fell an untimely victim to the wretched courſe of life he had given into—and of the many friends and admirers he once had, not one was left to heave the ſigh or ſhed the tear, when the grave received his ſhatter'd remains.

VIENNA, Oct. 21.

They talk now of a marriage between the Archduke Charles and the Grand Duchess Catharine with the addition, that they will hold their Court at Warsaw. Poland would then be placed under a mixed government, the members of which would be named by Russia, Austria. The congress is said to be engaged in discussing this project. The project of making Hamburgh a bulwark for the North of Germany is abandoned, but a formidable line of fortresses will certainly be established from Switzerland to Wesel, which will have constantly numerous garrisons, forming a kind of standing army for the future safety of Germany. The defensive connection between the Emperor and the kingdom of the Netherlands will be of such a nature, as to insure the independence of the latter against all future contingencies. This state will acquire great influence in the balance of Europe.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 29

The Chronicle of the Congress arrives from Vienna, Dec. 19th, the affairs of Germany are going on in the most desirable manner. The principles expressed by Austria, Russia, and England, were indirect invitations to meet the wishes of all.

It is affirmed that the extension of Belgium to the Rhine is certain. Bavaria is said to have agreed with Prussia for the exchange of the countries on the left bank of the Rhine.

The most noble William John Kerr, Marquis and Earl of Lothian, Earl of Ancram, K. T. &c died at his seat on Wednesday night the 4th inst. His Lordship was born in 1737, and was consequently about 78 years of age. He is succeeded by his eldest son, William, Earl of Ancram.—The late Marquis was one of the oldest Generals in the army, and by his decease, the Colonelcy of the 11th dragoons, as well as a green ribbon, becomes vacant. He was, in former times, a great favourite with his Majesty, and might be called his personal friend, being nearly of the same age; but differing from the Minister on the first Regency question, his Lordship, soon after retired from Court life to the quiet of the country.

Manilla, Pacific Ocean. Feb. 21.

Thirteen years had elapsed since the volcano of Aibay, called by the natives Mayan, had remained in undisturbed silence, so that it was contemplated without those feelings which volcanoes generally raise in the minds of the neighbours. The last eruption took place in the year 1800, when great quantities of sand stone and ashes were thrown up, and caused great damage to the neighboring villages.—From that period nothing occurred to mark a volcano, so that the terror which it had occasioned began by degrees to evaporate. The lofty brow of the mountain was converted into a pleasant and beautiful garden, and was cultivated with hemp, cocoa nuts, and many kinds of fruitiferous trees, with a great quantity of roots and leguminous plants, which at the same time that they afforded a delightful prospect to the eye, gave support to many industrious families.

On the last day of January some slight shocks of an earthquake were felt, but were barely noticed; similar shocks having become very frequent since the dreadful eruption in October 1, 1800. During the night the earthquake became more severe; and at 2 o'clock in the morning was more violent than had at any time been known. It was repeated at 4 o'clock, and from that time continued with our intermission till the eruption commenced. A morning more fair, or an horizon more serene than attended the approach of the day, had never been known. The hills contiguous to the volcano were, however, observed to be covered with mist, which was supposed to be smoke of some house that had been burnt during the night. No sooner however, had the clock on that fatal morning, struck eight than the volcano began to emit tremendous quantities of stone, land, and ashes, which were instantaneously thrown up into the air, higher than the eye could reach, and caused terror and consternation among the inhabitants, who saw the summit of the mountain assume a most terrific appearance. The eruption was more tremendous than had ever been known, and every one expected instant death. The first effort was to offer up prayers to the Divine mercy and then to fly to seek shelter in the caves and remote parts in the mountains, but the efforts of many were fruitless, being overtaken in their flight by showers of stones and burning matter, which spread death among them. The misery of our situation increased as the day became darkened, and the subterraneous noises of the volcano more severe—The eruption continued for ten days, and during the first four was accompanied by almost total darkness. About noon on the tenth day the noise of the volcano began to abate, and by two o'clock the horizon was entirely clear, and enabled us to see distinctly the horrid and lamentable destruction which the dark veil had conceal ed from us Five populous towns in the province of Cumarines, and the principal part of Albay, were destroyed; more than 1200 persons were reckoned among the dead, and many that survived were dreadfully wounded or burnt!

The mountain presents a melancholy picture; its brow which was before cultivated, and offered a beautiful prospect, is now a dry and barren desert. The matter thrown out by the volcano covers the ground in some places from ten to twelve yards in depth, and on others it reaches the tops of the tallest cocoa nut trees. Its ravages extend over the whole of the beautiful province of Cumarines, where scarcely a tree has been left standing or uninjured. The opening of the mountain, which forms the crater of the volcano has extended itself twenty fathoms below the level, whilst on the southern aspect of the mountain, three new apertures have been opened, out of which smoke and ashes still continue to be occasionally thrown. The population of the province was calculated at 20,000 souls; and all who have survived the eruption have been ruined or deprived of every thing they possessed.

NEW YORK, March 11.

The Turks, says the Federal Republican, have imprisoned forty two Christians in Servia, and have a vast number in prison destined for the same fate. The Grand Seignor has forced upon the property, several millions, of Solomon Lipman Biegender, a most benevolent Jew, who fed eight thousand of his distressed nation in a time of scarcity. Throughout the whole Ottoman empire, the Jews and Christians forming a very large portion of the population, are treated with a degree of oppression beyond the conception of those who have not witnessed it. Mahometan superstition is a cradle for the plague, as they scrupulate any attempt to counteract it. These are facts worthy of the attention of Christendom, its Princes and its Presses.

Copy of a letter from Lieut. Watson, aft of the late U. S. Sloop Argus, to the Secretary of the Navy, dated

Norfolk, March 2d 1815

SIR—Circumstances during my residence in England having heretofore presented my attention to the painful duty which devolved on me by the death of my gallant commander, Capt. Wm. H. Allen, of the late U. S brig Argus. I have now the honor to state for your information, that, having landed the Minister Plenipotentiary (Mr Crawford) and suite at L'Orient we proceeded on the cruize which had been directed by the Department, and after capturing twenty vessels (a list of the names and other particulars of which I have the honor to enclose,) being in 52, 15, north lon. 5, 50, west on the 14th August 1814, we discovered at 4 o'clock, A. M. a large brig of war standing down under a press of sail upon our weather quarter, the wind being at south, and the Argus close hauled on the starboard tack, we immediately prepared to receive her; and at 4 30, being unable to get the weather gage, we shortened sail and gave her an opportunity of closing. At 6, the brig having displayed English colours, we hoisted our flag, wore round and gave her the larboard broadside (being at this time within grape distance) which was returned, and the action commenced within the range of musketry. At 6 4, Capt Allen was wounded, and the enemy shot away our main braces, main spring stay, gaff, and try sailmast. At 6. 8, Capt Allen, being much exhausted by the loss of blood, was taken below. At 6 12, lost our spritsailyard and the principal part of the standing rigging on the larboard side of the foremast. At this time I received a wound on the head from a grape shot, which for a time rendered me incapable of attending to duty and was carried below. I had, however, the satisfaction of recollecting on my recovery, that nothing which the most gallant exertions could effect would be left undone by Lieut. W. H. Allen, junior, who succeeded to the command of the deck—Lt. Allen reports, at 6 14 the enemy being on our weather quarter, edged off for the purpose of getting under our stern, but the Argus luffed close to with the maintopsail aback, and gave him a raking broadside, frustrated his attempt. At 6 18, the enemy shot away our preventer main braces and mainstopsail-yeard: and the Argus having lost the use of her after sails, fell off before the wind, when the enemy succeeded in passing our stern, and ranged up on the starboard side. At 6 25, the wheel ropes and running rigging of every description being shot away, the Argus became unmanageable; and the enemy, not having sustained any apparent damage, had it completely in his power to choose a position, continued to play upon our starboard quarter, occasionally shifting his situation until 6 30, when I returned to the deck, the enemy being under our stern, within pistol shot, where he continued to rake until 6. 38, when we prepared to board, but in consequence of our shattered condition, were unable to affect it; the enemy then passed our boardside and took a position on our starboard bow.—From this time until 6. 47, we were exposed to a cross or raking fire without being able to oppose but little more than musketry to the broadside of the enemy, our guns being much disabled and seldom brought to bear. The Argus having now suffered much in hull and rigging, as also in killed and wounded, among the former of whom (exclusive of our gallant Captain) we have to lament the loss of two meritorious young officers in Midshipmen Delphy and Edwards; and being exposed to a galling fire, which from the enemy's ability to manage his vessel, we could not avoid; I deemed it necessary to surrender, and was taken possession of by H. B. M's Sloop the PELICAN, of 21 guns, viz: sixteen 32-pound carronades, four long 6's, and one 12 pound carronade.—I hope this measure will meet your approbation, and that the result of this action when the superior size and metal of our opponent, and the fatigue which the crew &c. of the Argus underwent from a very rapid succession of captures is considered, will not be thought unworthy of the flag under which we serve.

I have the honor to enclose a list of the killed and wounded, and feel great satisfaction in reporting the general good conduct of the men and officers engaged on this occasion, and particularly the zeal and activity displayed by Lieut. Allen, who you will observe for a time commanded on deck.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,

W. H. WATSON.

Late 1st Lt. U. S. brig Argus.

Hon. B. W. Crowninshield,
Secretary of the Navy.

Copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, FEB. 28, 1815.

SIR——In compliance with your request, I have the honor to transmit an estimate of the expences of the Navy, reduced to the demands of the establishment, accommodated to all the effects of the peace with Great Britain, but at the same time to provide for the protection of our commerce against the actual hostilities of the Dey of Algiers.

The act that proposes the reduction of any part of the naval force, is naturally accompanied with a greatful recollection of the service which that force has rendered to the nation.

In the first movements of the late war, the achievements of the navy excited admiration and confidence throughout the United States shedding a lasting splendor upon the American arms. Victory has invariably been the result of our naval combats with an equal force; and even when the surrender to a superior force has proved unavoidable, it must be acknowledged by the world, that those who have gained the ship, have not always gained the glory of the battle.

Co-operating with their brave and patriotic brethren of the army, the officers and crews of the American vessels of war have greatly contributed to the honorable restoration of peace; and whatever may be the general policy of reducing the naval establishment, it must be universally a favorite object to secure for those meritorious citizens a participation in the blessings which they have conferred upon their country.

Permit me sir, to take this opportunity of recommending to your attention the bill which has received the sanction of the Senate for creating the rank of Admiral in our naval service. The measure is suited to the existing naval establishment, and appears to be necessary, not only as the means of furnishing commanders of proper rank for our squadrons, but as the means of bestowing professional distinction and reward upon the distinguished veterans of the navy. It has been seen and lamented that for want of this grade of command, the gallantry of a subordinate officer could be rewarded by promotion, while his gallant superior officer must remain stationary.

The protection of commerce against the hostilities of the Dey of Algiers will require that a strong squadron should be stationed, as soon as practicable in the Mediterranean. The Algerine naval force is believed to consist of four frigates, four corvettes, four sloops of War, and twenty gunboats, but these vessels will be covered and aided by the powerful batteries which defend the harbour of Algiers. To secure success in our operations therefore, and to command the general respect of the Barbary Powers it is proposed, that the American squadron shall consist of two seventy-fours, six frigates, three sloops of war, and six or eight smaller armed vessels; and an estimate of the expenses of the expedition accompanies this communication. If, however, Congress should not contemplate a maratime war against Algiers and should be disposed to increase the naval establishment, a different course must be pursued. The three seventy fours (of which two may be soon completed for sea, at a small additional expence) should be perfected in their guard equipments, and laid up in ordinary so as to be ready for service upon the first emergency. —Four frigates should always be manned and ready for sea; and should be deemed to be in actual service, together with four sloops of war, four small armed vessels (to be principally employed as despatch vessels) and two gunboats in each principal port.

The bomb ships may be discharged, and the gun boats (with the exception provided for) and the barges may be generally laid up or sold, as the President shall deem most expedient.

The ships and vessels on the Lakes, or on the stocks for the Lake service, may also be laid up, or sold, as the President shall direct. But it is respectfully suggested, that no greater reduction of our naval establishment ought, at this time to be made.

The destinies of the nation appear to be intimately connected with her maratime power and prosperity; and as the creation of a navy is not a work to be quickly performed, it seems necessary not only to cherish our existing resources, but to augment them gradually and steadily.

The purchase of timber and casting of guns and the collection of all the other materials for building and equipping vessels of war at safe and convenient places, are objects of the greatest importance; and the annual construction of at least one seventy four and two frigates, is recommended upon principles of economy as well as of policy.—Smaller vessels of war can be built as the occasions occur, but these require time and care.

Contracts for a supply of two hundred heavy cannon, to be delivered at New York, Boston, or Portsmouth (which afford at all times an outlet to the ocean) might be advantagously formed.

To these general views, I beg leave to add that an appropriation, for the purchase of the vessels captured by Commodore M'Donnough on Lake Champlain is necessary; and as the estimated value cannot be now ascertained, the appropriation may be made for such sum, as shall be settled and agreed upon, with the approbation of the President.

I have the honor to be very respectfully, &c.

B. W. CROWNINSHIELD.

Hon. J. W. Eppes, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives

Extract of a letter from Paris,

"Three fourths of the population who appear in public are military. In travelling I have had some opportunity of conversing with them, and hearing their observations amongst each other. They universally breathe war and venom against all Europe, and particularly against England. The freedom of conversation is truly astonishing, and, indeed, alarming. I have heard a man declare, in the presence of persons who were utter strangers to him, that the French did not despair of the return of Napoleon. In passing through one of the saloons of the Louvre, I observed a statue which struck me as very like Bonaparte, and I accordingly asked a gentleman near me whether is was not made for him? The person whom I addressed walked off, evidently displeased, without giving any answer. Another French Gentleman, who overheard my question, told me it was a statue of Bonaparte; but advised me, in speaking of him, always to call him "Napoleon." After some conversation, I asked him why there was so general a feeling of dislike against the English? His answer was "Sir, it is owing to the English that Napoleon is not still upon his throne." I, of course, required no further explanation. The statue was executed for Bonaparte when he was first consul, and intended to be placed on one of the bridges, now called the bridge of Louis XVI. In the catalogue it is given to a fictitious general, Vanhubert.

The government, whether from prudence or timidity, is extremely moderate. The French princes are far less popular than the king; they seem to forget that the French people are now very different from what they were before the revolution. It is easy to observe, that the enthusiastic attachment to the Bourbons of former days no longer exists—not a single Bourbon sign is to be seen over a shop or wine house in the country towns, and scarcely any even in Paris. In many instances, I observed over the post houses, "Post Imperiale," changed to "Post aux chevaux," (not royale) and a still more alarming symptom, is the dead calm which seems to pervade the press at Paris. With the exception of the rhetoric of Chateaubriand, who has successfully bestowed invective and adulation upon Bonaparte and the Bourbons, not a single political pamphlet is exhibited in the windows or cried about the streets. This calm, however, may be the serenity of a settled and tranquil temperature of the public mind, rather than the forerunner of a storm.

SABBATTI SEVI.

MR. COBBETT...A few days ago I picked up the leaf of an old book, which contained the following account of Sabbatti Sevi. Perhaps, were it circulated in your valuable Register, the catastrophe of the story might serve as a lesson to some who are fond of the marvellous—your Messiah-hunters and others.

A Subscriber to your Register

Sabbatti Sevi, a Jew impostor, who appeared at Smyrna in 1666 and pretended to be the Messiah, which opinion the Jews in these countries were so possessed of, that they left off their trades and business, assuring themselves that the restoration of their kingdom was now come, and the streets were covered with carpets for him to tread upon. The Jews expected that this Messiah should lead them to Jerusalem, or the Holy Land, and made provision accordingly to attend Sabbatti, who nominated those Princes who were to govern them in their march; and to such a height of folly and delusion were they arrived, that Nathan, the associate of Sevi, took the courage and boldness to prophesy, that in the month of June, the Messiah should appear before the Grand Seignior, take from him his Crown, and lead him in chains like a captive. Such encouragement, with the general infatuation of the Jews in all places where they resided, made them, instead of transacting their usual affairs of traffic, stuff their hearers with nothing but wonders and miracles wrought by their Messiah: as, that when the Grand Seignior sent to take him he caused the messengers to die instantly, upon which other Janissaries being again sent, they all fell dead, but with a word of his mouth he restored them to life; with many other lying wonders. The Grand Seignior having information of the madness of the Jews, sent a messenger to bring Sabbatti to Adrianople. Being brought into his presence, he appeared much dejected, and the Sultan told him in short, that if he could not shew him a miracle of his own proposing, he should be punished as a deceiver and impostor; which was that Sabbatti should be stripped stark naked, and set a mark to his most dexterous archers, and if the arrows pierced not his body, but that his flesh and skin were proof like armour, he then would believe him to be the Messiah, an that God had designed him that greatness he pretended to. Sabbatti not having faith enough to stand so sharp a trial, renounced all his titles to kingdoms and governments, and humbly acknowledged that he was but a poor Jewish priest, and had nothing of privilege or merit above the rest of his brethren. The Grand Seignior replied, that having committed treason, he had no other means to expiate his guilt but by turning Mahometan, or else the stake to be riven through him was ready at the gate. Sabbatti in this extremity declared, that he thankfully embraced the Turkish faith, and deemed himself much honored to do it in his presence, and he continued in the house of the Grand Seignior ten years, and then died, exposing the Jews to the utmost scorn of the Turks and Christians in those parts of the world.

[Another account of Sabbatti Sevi states that after he declared himself a Mahometan he thenceforward laboured to convert the Jews to Mahometanism. As a change, he alledged, necessary previous to their final restoration. As a proof of the strange force of delusion, his followers still believe in him, even after such open, such avowed apostacy. The said Sabbatti was carried up into heaven, and a Dæmon had assumed the shape and white hair of the old man, on purpose to disgrace him."]

An extraordinary operation in Surgery has been lately performed by Mr. Carpue of Dean street. An officer of distinction lost his Nose in actual service in Egypt, though otherwise enjoying robust health. On his return home hearing that Mr. Carpue had, in his Anatomical Lectures, mentioned the possibility of supplying the defect; and that the story of Taliacotius was not a fable, there being a very beautiful work of his on the subject, in which the whole process was described, and it being known that in India one of the Casts of the Natives were in the habit of performing this operation, applied to that Gentleman who readily undertook the experiment. The consequence was, that by bringing down a piece of the flesh and skin of the forehead, he has completely succeeded in forming a new nose, which partakes of the regular circulation of the blood, and is not to be distinguished from the original. The forehead has also recovered the flesh and skin which were cut out to supply the deficiency; and it is justly regarded as an operation high honorable to Mr. Carpue and to the science of the present day.

As some compensation for the gallant exertions of our Soldiers, Government are proceeding to collect together the spoils of the different campaigns; or, in other words, the plunder taken from the enemy during the war. Seven hundred and forty pieces of ordnance are to be melted down, and sold. It is calculated that the whole produce will be about six hundred thousand pounds.

The Hereditary Prince of Wirtemberg was married on the 8th of June, 1808, to the Princes Charlotta Augusta, daughter of the King of Bavaria; but they are separated, and a divorce has been obtained, or is in progress. The marriage of the Prince, therefore, with the Duchess of Oldenburgh is believed to be settled.

MONTREAL March 25. 1815

After hard debates in both Houses of Congress on the standing army bill, it has been decided by considerable majorities, that it shall consist of 10 000 men. Mr C. KING, of Massachusetts, opposed the bill in an impressive strain of eloquence seldom equalled; he insisted that 6000 was sufficient to maintain the internal police of the country, and that more would eventually lead to the introduction of despotism; but his animated arguments were of no avail; the bill only wanted the signature of the President to make it a law.

The misunderstanding between Algiers and the United States, have produced war between the two countries, by a law passed in Congress, war is actually declared, which will cut out some employment to the federal heroes of the east. It is said the three new 76 gun ships and the rest of the American navy, are immediately to be despatched for the Mediterranean, to frighten the Dey of Algiers into peace. To do this effectually we question whether the new than ing army of ten thousand sent with the fleet would accomplish the object! By a prudent management of her affairs, Algiers may create trouble enough to the United States, and saddle her with further loans, and heavy sacrifices of every description. In the Courts and Cities of Algiers there are no American factions and monied interests to counteract the administration, as there were in London and other towns and cities of Britain when the war commenced. We are far from wishing the Dey of Barbary success, on the contrary we wish and with the Americans may prove successful, and root those incorrigible pirates from their filthiness, and for ever prevent them from plundering the christian world. It is disgraceful to the European nations, that such a scourge should so long have been permitted to exist. But the dispute is at length left to nations worthy of one another, prevail who will.

Paris, March 23 1815.

The Emperor left Elba on the 25th of February, at 5 in the afternoon, in a brig of 26 guns, with 400 of his guards, accompanied by 3 other vessels, having on board 200 infantry, 100 Polish light-horse, and a batallion of artillery of 200 men. The day of sailing, they passed the French brig of war Zephyr, without suspicion. On the 28th saw a 74, which took no notice of the brig. On the 1st of March the Emperor arrived in the Bay of Juan, where he landed at 5 in the afternoon, and encamped on the sea shore until the rising of the moon. At 11 o'clock he put himself at the head of his handful of brave men, and proceeded to Cannes, from thence to Grasse, and through St. Vallier, and arrived in the evening of the 2d at the village of Ce enon, having marched the first day 20 leagues.

The manner in which he was received by the people of Cannes, gave the Emperor the first presage of the success of the enterprize. On the night of the 3d, he slept at Bateme, on the 4th he dined at Digne. From Castellane to Digne, and throughout the departments of the Lower Alps, the peasants, informed of the march of the Emperor, assembled from every direction upon his route, and manifested sentiments which left no doubt of his success. On the 5th General Cambronne, with an advanced guard of 40 grenadiers, took possession of the bridge and Fortress of Sisteron. On the same day the Emperor slept at Gap with the horse men and 40 grenadiers. The enthusiasm with which the presence of the Emperor inspired the inhabitants, and the hatred which they had felt towards the nobility, was a proof of the sentiments of the Province of Dauphine.

At Gap thousands of copies of proclamations were printed and addressed by the Emperor to the army and the people; and by the soldiers of the guards to their comrades. These proclamations were circulated with the rapidity of Lightning. On the afternoon of the 6th, the Emperor left Gap, accompanied by the whole population of the city. At night he slept at Corp. The 40 men of the advanced guard of General Cambronne proceeded to Mure, where they fell in with the van of a division coming from Grenoble to oppose their march. Gen. C. wanted to parley with the advanced post. They answered that they were forbidden to hold any communication. However, this van fell back 3 leagues and took a position between the lakes, at the village of ———. The Emperor, informed of this circumstance, rode to the spot where he found, 7 or 800 troops—dismounted his horse, made himself known, and said that to the first soldier who chose to kill his Emperor might do so"—The unanimous cry was Long live the Emperor. This regiment had been commanded by the Emperor, during the first campaigns in Italy; these troops embraced the followers of the Emperor, and instantly tore from their hats the white cockade and repaced them with the tri-coloured. The Emperor then addressed them, after which they demanded to be the first to march against the division that covered Grenoble. They began their march in the midst of a crowd of inhabitants, which increased every moment. The Emperor marched towards Grenoble, and on his way, a whole regiment came over to him, commanded by col Labedoyere.—At 9 in the evening the Emperor entered one of the suburbs Grenoble. The troops within the gates of the city filled of about 6000 in number, among them a regiment in which, 25 years before, the Emperor had been made a captain.

The National Guards and the whole population of Grenoble, were behind the garrison, and rent the air with the cries of Long Live the Emperor. The gates were burst open, and at 10, the Emperor entered the city in the midst of an army and people animated by the most lively enthusiasm.—The next day he reviewed the troops in the midst of the population of the whole of the department; who cried down with the Bourbons! down with the enemies of the people! long live the Emperor, and a government of our own choice!" The Carrison of Grenoble immediately afterwards proceeded to Lyons. From Grenoble to Lyons the march of the Emperor was a triumph. During this time, the count D'Artois, the duke of Orleans, and several Marshals, had reached Lyons. Money was lavished among the troops, and promises made to the officers, but to no purpose. The Emperor entered Lyons on the 10th, at the head of the troops sent out to oppose him, and was received with every demonstration of joy. The count D'Artois quitted Lyons escorted by a single gen d'arms!

On the 11th the Emperor reviewed the troops at Lyons, and with Gen. Brayer at their head, began his march towards Paris.

On the 13th he arrived at Villa Franche, a small town of 4000 inhabitants, but which then contained upwards of 60.000. On the 15th he arrived at Autun; on the 17 h at Autevere, where he was joined by the Prince of Moskwa who had caused the tri coloured cockade to be hoitted throughout his District.

The Emperor reached Fontainbleau on the 20th, at 4 o'clock in the morning; at 7 he learned that the Bourbons had quitted Paris, and that the capital was free. He immediately proceeded to the city and entered the Thuilleries at 9 in the evening, at the moment when he was least expected.

Thus has terminated, without shedding of a single drop of blood, without meeting any obstacle, this great enterprize, which has restored to the nation her rights and her glory, and which has effaced the stain which treason and the presence of strangers had fixed upon the capital.

PROCLAMATION

GULPH OF JUAN, 1st March, 1815.

Napoleon, by the Grace of God and the Constitution, Emperor of the French &c. &c

To the French People.

FRENCHMEN the defection of the Duke of Castiglione delivered Lyons into the hands of our enemies, the command of which army I had confided to him. The number of its battalions, the bravery and patriotism of the troops was sufficient to have beaten the Austrian army opposed to it, and to have arrived in time upon the rear of the left flank of the enemy which threatened Paris. The victories of Champ Aubert, of Montmarial, of Chateau Thiery, of Vauchamp, of D'Arcy Sur Aube and of St Dizier; the insurrection of the brave peasants of Lorrain, or Champaigne, of Alsace, of Franche Conte and of Burgundy, and the positions which I had in the rear of the enemy's army, which separated him from his magazines, and parks of artillery in the reserve, stopping all convoys of provisions and stores of every kind, placed him in a most desperate situation. Frenchmen never were before so near approaching the highest destiny, and the best of the enemy's army would have been lost without a resource; they would have found their graves in that country they meant to ravage, when the treason of the Duke of Raguse surrendered the capital of the nation, and disorganized the army. The unexpected conduct of these two generals, who at the same moment committed treason against their country, their Prince, and their benefactor has changed the destiny of the war.—Such was the disastrous situation of the enemy when the affair before Paris terminated; he was separated from all his reserve, without cannon or munitions of war. In these great and new scenes my heart was torn within me, but my soul was immoveable. I confined only the interest of the country. I exiled myself on a rock in the midst of the seas. My life was and ought to be yet useful to you. I could not permit the great number of my fellow citizens who voluntarily withed to accompany me and partake of my destiny. Their presence was more useful to France, and I took with me a handful of those brave and generous guards necessary for my protection. Raised to the throne by your choice, every thing that has been done without your approbation is illegal. During 25 years France had obtained new constitutions, new glory, which cannot be guaranteed but by a national government, and by a dynasty created and fitted to the new circumstances. A prince who should reign over you, who should be seated on my throne by the power of those same armies who have ravaged our territory, would in vain strive to support himself by the principles of feudal rights—he could not assure the honor and rights of but a small number of individuals, enemies of the people who for 25 years have condemned them in all our national assemblies. Your internal tranquility and your external confederation would be lost for ever——Frenchmen! In my exile I have heard your complaints and your vows: you have reclaimed the government of your choice and the only legitimate one.—You accuse me of my long silence—you reproach me with having sacrificed the great interest of country to my own repose. I have traversed the seas amidst perils and dangers of all kinds; I arrive amongst you to regain my rights which are also yours.—All that individuals have done, or have written since the taking of Paris, I shall remain ignorant of; that shall not in the least diminish the remembrance, that I always preserve for the important services which they have rendered their country—for those events are of such a nature as to be beyond human comprehension.—Frenchmen!—There is no nation, however small, which has not the right to withdraw their obedience from a prince imposed upon them by a victorious enemy. When Charles the 7th entered into Paris and overthrew the ephemeral throne of Henry VI. he acknowledged to hold his throne by the valor of his brave soldier, and not the reigning prince of England. It is thus to you alone, and to the brave soldiers of the army, that I shall glory in performing my duty.

London, March 17

Twenty sail of the line were yesterday ordered to be put in commission, and many officers who have been put upon half pay, have been ordered to repair to the admiralty. A press is ordered in the port of London and in all other for the service of the fleet.

When the news of the landing of Napoleon reached Ghent, it excited the greatest enthusiasm in favor; and we learn, that the same effect was produced in all the low countries. Our troops will have sufficient employ in preserving tranquility there.

MEXICO

We have at last news from this interesting country. The independents or revolutionists have appeared so formidable. We give the following extracts from letters which have been kindly communicated us, and upon which dependence may be safely be placed, as they are written by royalists, rather to dissimulate or her than exaggerate the disasters. The dates from Mexico and Xalapa farther than the 5th of November, because from epoch there are no communications with Vera those from this last place are down to the 17th of nuary.

Xalapa, Nov. 5

The insurgents become every day more and more numerous, owing to the weakness marks the conduct of our leaders; and unfortunately there are among us too many who believing revolutionists will triumph over the royalists, tion of the interior, wait for nothing. There longer any perceptible remedy to all this, and wait to have remitted what I have rescued ruins to pass to Europe.

Vera Cruz, N

We are in the greatest consternation—the tionists triumph in sight of us.

An English Sloop of war has just arrived protect our commerce, and to convey the fugitives and of the government to Europe. Expect some other English vessels. The British vessel, indifferent to our sufferings from us 25 per cent. for freight; and of 25 per cent. which we pay to the insurgents effects which pass through the country there very little will remain to us.

JANU

Of all the advantages gained by the most disastrous for us is the rout of the army for the defence of our city, under the orders Louis Aquilla, who has just been brought mortally wounded in action which took place 13th inst. The insurgents are this moment after defeating the royal army in three days we may expect to see them enter the moment.

NEW-YORK,

The ship Minerva, capt. Allen of Liverpool from this place yesterday morning, with a passenger; among whom are Sir James Lucas, captain Owen of the British Navy, and Mr. Sheldon, of New York.

NEW YORK, May 1.

By the arrival yesterday afternoon of the ship Louisa, in 30 days from Bourdeaux we received papers to the 28th of March, they contain Paris dates to the 23d inst. by the Swedish ng matter, which has not been laid before the public. The following are Translations :—

PROCLAMATION.

LOUIS, by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre. To our faithful and loyal Peers of France, and the Deputies of the Departments.

Divine Providence, which recalled us to the throne of our ancestors, permits, to-day, that this throne should be shaken by a part of the armed force who had sworn to defend it; we might profit by the faithful and patriotic dispositions of an immense majority of the inhabitants of Paris, to dispute their entrance; but we shudder at the miseries of all kinds to which a battle within the walls would expose the inhabitants.

We will retire with some brave men whom intrigue and perfidy have not been able to detach from their duties; and because we cannot defend our capital, we will go further off to rally our forces, and to find out, in another part of the empire, not subjects more loving and faithful than our good Parisians, but Frenchmen more advantageously situated to declare themselves for the good cause.

The crisis, in which we find ourselves for the moment will subsist; we have the heart-consoling presentiment, that the soldiers who have been seduced, whose defection gives up our subjects to so many dangers, will not be slow in acknowledging their errors, and they shall find, in our indulgence and in our goodness the recompense of their return.

We will soon come back in the midst of these good people, to whom we shall restore peace and happiness ever more."

From these causes, we have declared, and do declare, ordained and do ordain as follows :—

Art. 1. In conformity to the 50th article of the constitutional charter, and of the 4th article of the 3d title of the law of the 14th Aug. 1814, the session of the House of Lords and that of the House of Commons for 1814, are declared suspended—The peers and the representatives which compose them shall instantly separate.

2 We convoke a new session of the House of lords and the session of 1815 of the House of Commons.

The Lords and Deputies of the Departments shall meet together without delay, at the place which we shall point out for the provisional session of our government.

Every meeting of either house, which shall be held elsewhere, without our authority, is, from this moment, declared null and unlawful.

3 Our Chancellor and our Ministers, each in what concerns him, are charged with the execution of the present proclamation, which shall be carried to the two houses, published and posted up, as well in Paris as in the Departments, and sent to all the prefects, sub-prefects, courts and tribunals of the kingdom.

Given at Paris, the 19th March, of the year of grace, 1815, and of our reign the 20th.

(signed) LOUIS.

By the King, the Chancellor of France.

(Signed) CAMBRAY.

Let us sincerely hope that the numerous crimes, the cleverness and the cruel ambition of Bonaparte, are at length drawing to a speedy and final conclusion!—Infatuation and pride have betrayed him into the rash and impious act of violating his late most solemn engagement, so publicly made in the face of the universe, to renounce, for ever, his usurped and blood-stained title to the Throne of France.—He rushes on his fate! and by this last and most treacherous of his former misdeeds, has he not roused the just resentment of an insulted world?—The following unanimous and spirited declaration of the congress now assembled at Vienna, will shew the astonished world that the powers of Europe to unite and exert their utmost efforts in destruction claims our admiration and praise, and it is with joy we announce that their collective forces, for effecting this most desirable purpose amounts already to a million and a half of troops.

Although we most sincerely lament that the downfall of this monster may cost the christian world more blood, yet it ought to be a consolation, to all good men, when they reflect that the justice of the cause makes the sacrifice not only necessary, but truly just and honorable.

Declaration sent to H. R. H. the Duke of Angoulême by the Count D'Osmond, Ambassador of France at Turin.

DECLARATION.

The powers which have signed the Treaty of Paris of 30th May, assembled in Congress at Vienna, informed of the invasion of Napoleon, and of his carrying sword in hand into France, owe to their own dignity, and to the interests of social order, a solemn declaration of the sentiments which that event has caused them to entertain, thus breaking the convention which established him at the Island of Elba. Bonaparte overturns the legitimate title to which his existence could only be a claim, by appearing in France with projects to disturb and attack, he has deprived himself for the protection of the laws, and has manifested to the face of the universe that there can be no safety in having a peace or a truce with him. The powers declare in consequence, that Napoleon Bonaparte has placed himself out of all civil and social relations; and that as the enemy and disturber of the repose of the world, he is delivered up to the vindictive public. They declare at the same time, that firmly resolved to maintain inviolate the treaty of Paris of May 30, 1814, the dispositions sanctioned by that treaty, and all those which they have, or which they shall yet agree upon to complete and consolidate it, they will employ all their means, and will unite all their efforts in order that the general peace, the object of all the vows of Europe, and constant end of their labours, be not disturbed anew; and in order to guarantee it from all attempts which shall threaten to replunge the people in the disorders and miseries of revolutions; and though fully persuaded that France entire, will again rally itself around its legitimate sovereign, to render nugatory this last attempt of a criminal and impotent delirium, all the sovereigns of Europe, animated with the same sentiments, guided by the same principles, declare, that if, contrary to every calculation, there should result, from this event, any real danger, they will be ready to give to the King of France, and to the French nation, or to any of their allies, as soon as the demand shall be made, the necessary means, to re-establish the public tranquility, and to make common cause against all those who shall undertake to disturb it.

The present declaration, inserted in the Protocol of the Congress convened at Vienna, in the session of the 13th of March 1815, shall be made public. Signed at Vienna 13th March, 1815.

By passengers in the Louisa, we are informed that the above document had very much strengthened the determination of the Royalists in the south of France to hold out against Bonaparte, and persevere in establishing an independent or provisional government.

NEW YORK, May 2.

Last evening arrived at this port the fast sailing ship Pingal, Stanton, in 31 days from Havre de Grace, which port he left on the 30th of March.

By this arrival we learn verbally, that France was apparently in a state of tranquility; no part of the country had taken an active part for the Bourbons, which family left France for Flanders, and has arrived at Menin. Marseilles, Bordeaux, and other places, from which opposition was expected, had either acquiesced, or were perfectly tranquil. The British Minister at Paris, had asked for and obtained his passports to return to England. The Emperor Napoleon had issued a proclamation granting the British army in Belgium 14 days to evacuate it. A war between France and England was momently expected. Messrs. Gallatin, Adams, Bayard and Russell, were in Paris; Mr. Clay departed for England on the 19th March.

From a Paris paper—Declaration of his Majesty the Emperor of the French, to the French, and particularly to the Parisians:

"After an abdication, the circumstances of which you are acquainted with; after a treaty, all the articles of which have been violated; after having seen myself be great penetrated by numerous assassins, sent by the Bourbons; after having seen the French ministers intriguing at Vienna, to wrest from me the asylum to which I was reduced, and to take from my wife and son the States which had been guaranteed to them; from that son, whose birth inspired you with so lively a joy, and who ought to have been to all the sovereigns a sacred pledge. All these attempts made in violation of plighted faith, have restored me to my throne and to liberty.

"Frenchmen I soon I shall be in my capital; I come surrounded by my brave brethren in arms—after having delivered our provinces of the south, and my good city of Lyons from the reign of fanaticism, which is that of the Bourbons. Fifteen days have sufficed me to unite these faithful warriors, the honor of France; and before the 30th of this month your happy Emperor, the Sovereign of your choice, will put to flight those flatterers. Princes who wish to render you tributary to foreigners, and the contempt of Europe.—France shall still be the happiest country in the world. The French shall still be the Great Nation. Paris shall again become the Queen of Cities, as well as the seat of sciences and arts.

"In concert with you, I will take measures, in order that the State may be governed constitutionally, and that a wise liberty may never degenerate into inconsiderate. I will emigrate to the fast fashion of all those names become odious, which the Bourbons gave you their princely word they would abolish, under the title of Droits Reunis, and which they have re-established under the title of indirect impositions.

"Property shall be without distinction respected and sacred, as well as individual liberty.

"The general tranquility shall be constantly the object of my efforts; commerce, our flourishing manufactures, and agriculture, which under my reign attained to high a prosperity, shall be relieved from the enormous imposts with which an ephemeral government have burthened them.

"Every thing shall be restored to order, and the dissipation of the finances of the State to gratify the luxury of the court, shall be immediately repressed.

"No vengeance, it is far from my heart; the Bourbons have set a price on my head, and I pardon them. If they fall into my power, I will protect them; I will deliver them to their allies if they wish it, or to that foreign country where their chief has already reigned nineteen years, and where he may continue his glorious reign. To this my vengeance is limited

"Be calm, Parisians, and you, national guards of that noble city—you who have already rendered such great services—you who, but for treason, would have been enabled to defend it for some hours longer, against those allies who were ready to fly from France. Continue to protect property and civil liberty; then you will have deserved well of your country and of your Emperor.—From my Imperial General Head Quarters. (Signed) NAPOLEON.

Bourgoine, March 8, 1815.

NEW YORK, May 4.

Yesterday afternoon arrived at this port the fast sailing private-armed brig Scourge, C. W. Wooster, Esq. commander, in 29 days from L'Orient.

Capt. W. left L'Orient on the 9th of April, and has politely favored the Editors of the Mercantile Advertiser with the following verbal intelligence :

"The whole of the army have declared for Napoleon, and are unanimous for his cause. The officers and soldiers on furlough are all called into service.

"The Emperor has issued a decree abolishing the African Slave Trade. He appears to be much inclined for peace with all nations, and says he has no desire to ex end the boundaries of France. It is however the general opinion, that war with England will soon take place. England is fitting out armed men of war. In consequence of the hostile disposition of the citizens of Bordeaux towards the Emperor, all communications are cut off from that place to Paris and elsewhere. Gen. Clausel is marching to Bourdeaux with an army of 25,000 men, and no doubt the inhabitants of that place will soon submit.

"Information was received at L'Orient from Paris, on the 21st April, stating that a general embargo was to take place on all the shipping in the ports of France."

Great preparations appear to be making by the British government, for a renewal of the war with Bonaparte.

A London paper of March 22 says :—"the Emperor Alexander, on hearing of the landing of Bonaparte, dispatched one and twenty couriers to different parts of his empire, to put his troops in motion."

In Spain alarming disturbances are said to exist, in consequence of the refusal of the army to obey King Ferdinand, who is reported to have fled.

Extract of a letter dated, Cape Henry, Isle of Hayti, November 29.

Mediana, one of the three commissioners sent to this colony, by the French government is in prison. Governor Lay having rigorously interrogated him, he gave up his instructions, by which he was recommended to cultivate the acquaintance of the generals and the inhabitants, and to endeavour if possible, to foment a revolt.

Mediana has been exposed in the church, to the view of the whole city and the garrison as a spy. Christophe immediately communicated these circumstances to the other chiefs Petion and Borgeais, who have caused Daoxion Lavoysse and Daverman to be arrested — God only knows what fate awaits them.

Hamburgh Jan 17. One of our Gazettes announces that the Ottoman Porte has concluded with one of the great powers of Europe (probably with France) a treaty of alliance offensive and defensive.

Vienna Feb. 19. Lord Wellington has arrived, and on Monday all the troops stationed here are to perform a grand manoeuvre, in presence of Lord W.

It is asserted that at his first meeting of the ministers, he made a remarkable speech, in which, among other things he said, that if Great Britain had concluded peace with the U. States of America on terms little to her advantage, it was merely from the motive of giving peace to the whole world, it was therefore but just that Russia and Prussia, on their part, should likewise abate their immense pretensions, and give way in some measure to the wishes of Austria, France and the other powers. The English minister then handed in a sealed note, containing the ultimatum of his government. The affairs of Saxony being settled, the other matters are progressing rapidly.

London. March 30. By the provisions of the convention between Russia, Prussia, Austria, and Great Britain, signed at London, June 29. 1814. the three former powers stipulated to keep on foot a war establishment, until the definitive arrangements were made by the Congress of Vienna, 75 000 troops each, of which 60,000 were to be infantry, and fifteen thousand cavalry, artillery, &c. As the arrangements of the Congress has but just been made, these troops had not been disbanded, and are ready to take the field.

Letters from Wesel say, that 100 000 Prussians were proceeding by forced marches to the Rhine.

The Elector of Hesse Cassel has put 20,000 on the same destination. The allies are in possession of all the strong holds near the frontiers of France.

For several days previous to the entrance of Bonaparte into Paris, numerous addresses full of loyalty to the Bourbons, and determination to support his throne, and the constitution, were presented to the French Parliament; and brought by the Deputies from all quarters. If there was any truth in these testimonials, it is evident, the sober sense of the French nation has been overawed by the bayonets of a lawless soldiery; and that when the intimidation ceases to operate, and they can be aided by bayonets from without, they will yet attempt to restore the mild reign of the Bourbons.

The city of Marseilles had voted two millions, and Bourdeaux two hundred thousand franks, to any regiment which should capture like Bonaparte dead or alive.

Vienna letters say, Bavaria will furnish 60 men against Bonaparte, under Prince Royal; Russia is to send 40,000 troops into the field.

Bonaparte is said to have sent the Duke of Vicenza (Caulincourt) to the Congress of allied Monarchs in Vienna, on a mission. Some Paris accounts say he carries the resolution of Napoleon to ratify, and give surety for fulfilling the Treaty of Paris, accompanied by a request that the Allies would not interfere in the internal affairs of France. Other accounts say, the negociation relates solely to the Empress Maria Louisa and her son, whom Bonaparte demands may be permitted to return to Paris.

New York. May 8. A letter from Richmond, Virginia, April 25, announces the election of the Hon John Randolph, as a Representative to Congress, vice Mr. Eppes, by a majority of 63 votes. It has been the most severely contested election that ever was held in Virginia.

The sailing of the squadron at this port for Algiers, has been suspended. The cause is not known, but it is presumed it is with a view to wait for the Independence of '74. and the frigate United States, the latter of which has arrived at Boston from New London.

The British Packet Princess Elizabeth, captured by the American, was, when taken, about fifty days from Rio Janeiro. Her officers stated that a serious misunderstanding had taken place between the English minister at the Brazils and the Portuguese government; that a war was expected, and that the Packet and other English vessels were ordered away at a very short notice—the Packet left it in so great a hurry that she had only fifteen pound of bread for 31 men, when she was captured. Her mails were thrown overboard when her colours were struck.

It is stated that the large vessels of war at Sackett's Harbour are to be finished, launched and sunk, as the best means to preserve them for a future occasion.

Montreal, May 20. We have seen a letter from Scotland, brought by the Dunlop, dated 28th March, mentioning that 15 000 English, Scotch and Irish were preparing to embark, for the purpose of settling in the Canadas, under great encouragement from the government.—Quebec Mercury.

An American boat coming from Plattsburg to St. John's on Sunday last with eighteen passengers on board, was upset by a flaw of wind near Ash Island, and nine of the crew drowned.

Latest Intelligence.

London, March 22.

The following Marshals are known to have gone over to Bonaparte—Ney, Massena, Davoust, Suchet. Of Soult, since his resignation, Oudinot, Victor, and Mopcey, we hear nothing. MacDonald is said to have bro't back his troops to Paris, which he had marched to Melun. But the foreign office bulletin says he is with the King. At Calais they are scaling the guns, and running them down to the pier heads; at Bologne they are making the same active preparations. Dunkirk is fortifying with great haste.

We have the authority of an eye witness, says a paper of yesterday, that the entrance of Bonaparte into Paris was not marked with the exultation of the populace to any thing like the extent represented. In no other part of the city was the cry of Vive l'Empereur! heard, but opposite to the window of the Thuilleries, where the occurrence had brought the rabble together. Not the slightest change was observed, except of the flags on the Palace, and on the Pillar in the Place Vendome.

Our naval preparations keep peace for activity with our military. Orders have been issued to suspend the discharge of seamen and marines. A formidable fleet will soon be ready; several men of war have already sailed from Portsmouth and Plymouth with sealed orders.

Accounts from Brussels stated that part of the Prussian army had already passed the French frontiers, and that the troops were advancing from all quarters towards the Rhine; also that Murat had offered his support and 80 000 men in the general cause.

The Duke of Castiglions (Augerau) was particularly denounced as a traitor to his Emperor by Bonaparte, in one of his proclamations after his landing from Elba; and it was supposed he could never hope for pardon; but it now appears Angerau has declared for Napoleon.

March 23.

An attempt was made in the Thuilleries on Thursday night last to assassinate the King of France. The assassins had got into his Majesty's bed-room, when one of them was seized with his knife in his hand, and was instantly shot.

Warlike preparations go hastily forward. A large quantity of cannon has been ordered to be shipped for Ostend. Fresh transports have been taken up, and troops are marching from several quarters to the coast, there to be embarked for the continent. On Monday the 3 5th, 7th, 10th, 11th, 16th and 18th regiments of Grenadiers received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march for the coast to be embarked for Belgium. Lord Uxbridge is to take the command of the cavalry there.

March 29.

A Dutch mail arrived this morning with papers to the 26th inst. They represent the united forces consisting of Prussians, Hanoverians, English, Dutch and Belgian troops, are advancing for the French frontier. It is expected that in a few days they will amount to an army of 150 000 men. There was a report all night, that the Hereditary Prince of Orange had actually proceeded with a body of British and Dutch troops beyond Tournay towards the French frontier; and that he had done this against every remonstrance that had been made to him.

The force which Bonaparte has sent to Lille, to wait the attack of the royalists, it is said actually amounts to 40,000 men.

March 30.

Last night General Hill set out for Belgium. He is the bearer of the Commission to the Duke of Wellington, appointing him commander in chief of his Majesty's forces on the continent of Europe.

The following regiments of Infantry now in America, are expected home immediately; viz: 1st regiment of foot, 1st and 4th battalions; 3d, 1st battalion; 5th, 1st battalion; 6th, 1st battalion; 18th, 1st and 2d battalions; 9th, 1st battalion; 13 16th, 27th, 3d battalion; 29th, 39th, 1st battalions; 41st, 49th, 57th, 1st battalions; 58th, 1st battalion; 64, 81st, 82d and 88th, 1st battalions; 89th, 2d battalion; 90th, 1st battalion; 93d, 2d bat.; 97th, 98th, 100th; 2d garrison battalion, five companies; and 10th veteran battalion, two companies.

Extract of a letter from Bordeaux, April 5.

"This place has submitted to the authority of the Emperor on the 1st inst. and the Imperial Government is every where re-established, except in a few of the southern departments, and their submission is hourly expected. No blood has been shed, and the public tranquility has not been disturbed.—The apprehension of war with England and the other European powers, has advanced the price of imports."

Austria was expected to join the Emperor Napoleon. Nothing was known at Bordeaux respecting the movements of the allied powers.

DECREES OF BONAPARTE.

All the emigrants who have entered France since the 1st of Jan. 1814, are commanded to leave the Empire. Such emigrants as shall be found 15 days after the publication this Decree, (dated 13th of March) will immediately be tried, and judged by the laws established for that purpose, unless they can prove ignorance of this decree, in that case they will be merely arrested, sent out of the French territory, and have their property sequestered. All promotions in the Legion of Honor conferred by Louis are null and of no effect, unless they be made in favor of those who deserve well of their country. All its privileges are re-established.—The Electoral Colleges are to meet in May next, to new model the Constitution, according to the will and interest of the nation; and at the same time, to assist in the coronation of the Empress and King of Rome.

It is said that an embago had been laid upon all French ships of war in French ports, in order to prevent their putting to sea, and declaring for their legitimate king.

Orders, we understand, have been despatched to Sir A. Cochrane, and the other naval commanders on the West India and American stations, and to the British military commanders, to take measures immediately to secure the French Colonies for the King, and prevent them from being transferred to Napoleon.

Although the Emperor has been thus far victorious, yet there were many instances of attachment to Lewis and his mild reign.

The vessels which carried Bonaparte from Elba, have since been taken by a Bourbon frigate.

Boston, May 2.

Upwards of 40,000 Englishmen were said to be in France, when Bonaparte commenced his new career. Their countrymen, who trusted to his magnanimity at the rupture of the treaty of Amiens, having been cruelly deceived, and suffered a long captivity, the present visitors of France have thought it best to hurry home. They were very welcome, as they drained England of much money—many of them being rich, and deriving their income from England, and spending it in France.

Great riots have taken place in London, in consequence of the prohibition of the importation of wheat when the price is below 80s. 50,000 persons were concerned. Members of Parliament were personally stopped and abused, and the windows of their houses broken, and the houses in some instances partly demolished. Several persons were said to have been killed. It was considered as nearly quelled at the last date.

There is a report that Lisle had declared for Bonaparte; and that Bonaparte had arrived there.

The troops and populace at Brest, Cancale and other places, have declared for Bonaparte.

New York, May 27th

This morning the French frigate L'Hermoine, which arrived here a few days since from the West Indies, hoisted Bonaparte's tri-colored flag, and fired three national salutes. After which she tastefully decorated herself with flags of the different nations—that of the American being displayed from the frigates foretop-gallant royal mast. Up Bonaparte, down Bourbon.

York, May 5, 1815.

WHEREAS my Wife Mary Augene, has eloped from my bed and board, stripped my house of every thing valuable, and carried them off in the absence of myself and son while at work in the field, for which she can assign no reason, excepting my checking of her (by speaking) for frequently getting beastly drunk, striving to barter her daughter (near 16 years of age) to a half Indian for three gallons of rum; and for her bad example to her two younger daughters, one 14 and the other near five years old; I therefore caution all persons from crediting or harboring her on my account, as I will not pay any debt of her contracting. Given under my hand at No. 17, North side of the Township of Toronto, Upper Canada, this 29th of May, 1815.

THE ALLIED POWERS ASSEMBLED IN CONGRESS AT VIENNA TO THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

March 18th, 1815.

A Corſican, the diſgrace of uſurpers and the ſcourge of nations, has ſeated himſelf a ſecond time on the throne of St. Louis. Already hordes of perjured men have acknowledged him for their maſter, and have ſold to him a nation whoſe courage and fidelity they had enchained. Frenchmen! we know your love for the king; from the inmoſt receſſes of our palaces (du fonds de nos palais) we have heard your vows and your alarms; do not let yourſelves be diſcouraged, the traitors ſhall ſoon be puniſhed —The thunderbolts of vengeance are roaring on all ſides; all Europe has riſen and is marching to avenge the Cauſe of Kings. Our warriors, in again appearing in your country, have no other object than "war againſt Bonaparte and his perfidious army; peace with France and the Bourbons."

The allied Powers ſhall enter France as friends with their muſkets ſlung over their ſhoulders, (l'arme en bandouliere;) they ſhall not wage war againſt that kingdom, but againſt a ſingle man, who by violating all treaties has put himſelf out of the pale of the laws of all nations. Therefore they declare:

1. That they will halt as ſoon as Bonaparte ſhall have been delivered up in their hands.

2. That in caſe Bonaparte ſhall not be delivered up to them, if any officers who have taken an oath of fidelity to the king ſhall be found with arms in their hands, taken up for the ſervice of Bonaparte, they ſhall be inſtantly SHOT.

3. That in every town the citizens of which ſhall have taken part in the reſiſtance to the allied armies, a part of the inhabitants ſhall be put to the SWORD.

By order of the duke of Wellington, a bridge is thrown over the Ruppel, to facilitate the paſſage of the German troops who are coming hither.

"The works of Antwerp are proſecuted with great activity, 6000 laborers are employed in raiſing entranchments before Tournay, 5000 bef re Tons, 3000 before Charleroi, and 3000 before Ypres.

"Lord Wellington will have a meeting with marſhal Blucher, to arrange the grand military operations, between the Moſelle and the North ſea.

"Anew reinforcement of 10,000 men is arrived at Luxemburg. These troops will be cantoned oppoſite Longwy and Thionville.

Bruſſels, april 23.

Yeſterday the Maichausee brought into this city a French General, who was arreſted the day before yeſterday, on the Place d'Arme at Ghent. His Majeſty, in his tour to Flemiſh Flanders, went as far as Mons, where he arrived the day before yeſterday, with the Duke of Berg and the Duke of Wellington.

Frankfort, April 24.—About the 15th of May there will be an army of eighty thouſand Ruſſians on the Rhine; by the 30th, another army of the ſame ſtrength will alſo arrive there: a third army of fifty thouſand men will go through the Tyral to Italy; the 13,000 Imperial Guards coming by ſea are not incluſive in this account. Beſides theſe, 100,000 Ruſſians will form an army of reſerve on the Oder.

Numerous Bavarian troops of all arms continue to paſs the Rhine at Manheim. The Bavarian troops are obſerved to be among the fineſt and beſt diſciplined troops in Germany. The 1ſt diviſion of Auſtrian troops, under Prince Colloredo, will reach the Rhine at the end of this week, and will be followed ſucceſſively by 60,000 Auſtrians, whom the Emperor places under Prince Wrede.

From the Liverpool Courier, April 26.

A circumſtance lately occurred near Termonde upon the Scheldt, which affords a new example of paternal and conjugal tenderneſs. The wife of a boatman, having a child in her arms, was thrown into the Scheldt, by the rope attached to the rudder, which broke through the violence of the waves. The boatman was below deck, but the cries of the ſpectators called him up, and he precipitated himſelf into the river.—After being a little while into the water, he appeared with the child; but, as he was ſwimming for the boat, he thought his feet touched the clothes of his wife. He plunged down anew, and returned with the one and the other, ſaying to his wife, "Don't be afraid, I ſhall ſave you both." He held the clothes of the child in his teeth, took his wife under his arm, and thus ſwam to ſhore, loaden with all his family.

LONDON, Tueſday Evening, May 2.

Government have received more detailed accounts of the operations in Italy. They are all ſatisfactory. One of Murat's Columns, which he commanded in perſon, advanced towards Occhio Bello; a ſecond towards Ferrara; a third under Pignatelli marched upon Florence.—The Auſtrians in the firſt inſtance fell back; Murat advanced cloſe to Occhio Bello, where up a tete de pont. Murat made two attacks upon it on the 8th and 9th, but was repulſed in each. He fell back upon Carpi. Thither Marſhall Bianchi followed, and attacked him on the 11th. The conflict was long and bloody; but at length the enemy were driven out of the place, with the loſs of 12 officers and 500 men. Reggio was next abandoned, and they took the route of Modena—The column which proceeded againſt Ferrara had begun operations againſt it, when on the 12th, the Auſtrian Generals Mohr and Niepping attacked it, drove off the field, deſtroyed its works, and purſued it as for Bologna.

The third column under Pignatelli had entered Florence. General Nugent retired towards Pittio. There Pignatelli attacked him, but failed, and was driven under the walls of Florence. Two more attacks were made upon him on the 10th and 11th, but the enemy were each time repulſed with conſiderable loſs in killed and wounded.

LATEST FROM GIBRALTAR.

By the Brig Grenada, which arrived at this port yeſterday, we have received Gibraltar papers to the 9th May, but they are barren of intelligence. We learn verbally, that at that time the Algerine ſquadron had not paſſed into the Atlantic.

The Bayonne and Impregnable of 98 guns. Malta of 80, Montague of 74, and three other line of battle ſhips, ſailed from Gibraltar on the 3d of May, to cruize off Toulon; where they were to be reinforced by another ſquadron from England.

The war between the United States and Algiers was known at Gibraltar; and the American ſquadron for the Mediterranean was looked for with no ſmall degree of anxiety.

We learn from Havanna, by the ſchooner Elvira, that all the French veſſels in that port, under the Bourbon flag, had been detained until the iſſue of the late counter-revolution in France ſhould be known, and inſtructions be received from the Spaniſh Government.

Capt. Aderton, in 13 days from Port au Prince, confirms the accounts of a Spaniſh ſquadron from Spain, with troops, having arrived off, and taken poſſeſſion of the iſland of Margaretta: and that they had put to death, indiſcriminately, all the men, women and children on the iſland. A Spaniſh 74 had blown up, and every perſon on board (1200 in number,) periſhed. Carthagena had been bombarded for 30 days, and the cauſe of the Patriots was deſpaired of in that quarter. The chieftains, Petion and Chriſtophe were in a ſtate of peace, although they had made no treaty with each other.

INDIAN WARS.

SAINT LOUIS, May 27.

Col. Ruſſel has politely favored us with the peruſal of letters from Capt. Muſick and Lt. Gray, of the Rangers, which gives information that on Wedneſday laſt (the 24th) a party of our men was attacked near fort Howard, by about 50 Indians, that the troops from the fort under Capt. Craig, immediately repaired to the ſcene of action and engaged the Indians; that ſhortly after Capt. Muſick joined in the affair and a warm battle enſued. The numbers were about equal; but before the affair cloſed a party of the indians entrenched themſelves to a ſink-hole, and perfectly ſecured themſelves from the powerful exertions of troops. At dark the Rangers retired, and next morning found five Indians killed on the ground, and the appearances of many more having been killed. The action laſted a conſiderable time. We loſt Capt. Craig, Lieut. Spears, and five men killed, four wounded, and one miſſing.

Capture of Fort Royal, Martinique.

By the ſchr. Bulwark, in 13 days from Martinique, we learn that Admiral Durham, with a 74, 8 frights and a fleet of transports, took poſſeſſion of Fort Royal, Mart. on the 4th of June; and that all the French troops, had embarked for France, moſt of whom ſailed. The Bourbon flag was flying. It was the opinion, that Guadaloupe would alſo be taken.

The King of Spain on the 24 of May iſſued a Declaration of War againſt Bonaparte, by which he undertakes (in conjunction with the other Sovereigns, who, he ſays, are diſtinguiſhed for their morality, religion and humanity) to deliver France and her throne from the yoke of oppreſſion, and to conquer the tranquility of the world. It is called, "A Manifeſto of the juſtice, importance, and neceſſity that the King our Lord finds to oppoſe the aggreſſion of the Uſurper Bonaparte, procure the repoſe of Europe, and protect the rights of humanity and religion."

CHAP. I.

An Act to facilitate the Circulation within this Province of Army Bills, iſſued by authority of the Province of Lower Canada.

[Paſſed the 13th day of March, 1813.]

WHEREAS it is expedient at this important juncture to facilitate the circulation of Army Bills in this Province, and to give them the ſame effect and force which they have in the Province of Lower Canada, Be it therefore enacted by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by and with the advice and conſent of the Legislative Council and Aſſembly of the Province of Upper Canada, conſtituted and aſſembled by virtue of and under the authority of an Act paſſed in the Parliament of Great Britain, entituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act paſſed in the Fourteenth year of His Majeſty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual proviſion for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further proviſion for the Government of the ſaid Province," and by the authority of the ſame, That each and every the ſaid Army Bills which have been or ſhall be lawfully iſſued by the authority of the Province of Lower Canada, and ſhall from time to time remain undiſcharged and uncancelled, ſhall and may be received and taken, and ſhall paſs and be Current to all and every the Collectors and Receivers in this Province of Upper Canada of the Cuſtoms, or any Revenue or Tax whatſoever already granted, due or payable, or which ſhall or may hereafter be granted, due or payable to His Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, under and by virtue of any Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, or of the Provincial Parliament or otherwiſe, and alſo at the office of the Receiver General of this Province, from the ſaid Collectors and Receivers or from any other perſon or perſons, bodies politic or corporate whatſoever, making any payments whatever there to His Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, for or upon any account, cauſe or occaſion whatſoever. And that the ſame in the hands of ſuch Collectors and Receivers, and in the hands of he Receiver General of this Province, ſhall be deemed and taken as Cash, and as ſuch ſhall be charged againſt and credited to ſuch Collectors and Receivers, and to ſuch Receiver General as aforeſaid reſpectively, in their reſpective Accounts with each other, and with his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors.

II. And be it further enacted by the authority aforeſaid, That if any perſon or perſons ſhall forge or counterfeit any ſuch Army Bills as aforeſaid, which ſhall be iſſued, before the ſame ſhall be paid off, diſcharged or cancelled, or any ſtamp, indorſement of writing thereupon, or therein, or tender in payment any ſuch forged or counterfeit Army Bills, or any ſuch Army Bill with ſuch counterfeit ſtamp, indorſement of writing thereupon or therein, or ſhall demand to have ſuch counterfeit Army Bills of any ſuch Army Bill, with ſuch counterfeit ſtamp, indorſement or writing thereupon or therein, exchanged for Bills of Exchange or for Cash or ready money by any perſon or perſons, body or bodies politic or corporate, who ſhall be obliged or required to exchange the ſame, or by any other perſon or perſons whatſoever, knowing the Bills ſo tendered in payment or demanded to be ſo exchanged, or the ſtamp or indorſement of writing thereupon or therein to be forged or counterfeited, and with intent to defraud his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, or the perſons appointed or to be appointed to pay off the ſame, or any of them, or to pay any intereſt thereon, or the perſon or perſons, Officer or Officers, body or bodies politic or corporate, who ſhall iſſue or exchange the ſame for Bills of Exchange, or any of them, or any other perſon or perſons, body or bodies, politic or corporate whatſoever, then every ſuch perſon or perſons ſo offending, being thereof lawfully convicted, ſhall be adjudged a Felon, and ſhall ſuffer as in caſes of Felony, without benefit of Clergy.

III. And be it further enacted by the authority aforeſaid, That for and during the continuance of this act, no perſon ſhall be held to ſpecial Bail upon any proceſs iſſuing out of any Court of Juſticature in this Province unleſs the affidavit which ſhall be made for that purpoſe, according to the law now in force reſpecting affidavits to hold to Bail, ſhall not only contain the ſeveral matters required neceſſary by the Law aforeſaid, but alſo that no offer has been made to pay in Army Bills the ſum of money in ſuch affidavit mentioned, and therein ſworn to for the purpoſe of holding ſuch perſon to ſpecial Bail, and if any proceſs ſhall be iſſued againſt any perſon upon which ſuch perſon might have been held to ſpecial Bail before the paſſing of this Act, and no Affidavit ſhall be made as aforeſaid, that no ſuch offer of payment in Army Bills had been made as aforeſaid, ſuch perſon ſhall not be arreſted on ſuch proceſs, but proceeding ſhall be had againſt ſuch perſon in the ſame manner as if no affidavit had been made for the purpoſe of holding ſuch perſon to ſpecial Bail. Provided always that if an affidavit ſhall be made upon which any perſon or perſons might be held to ſpecial bail upon any ſuch proceſs as aforeſaid, before the paſſing of this Act, and it ſhall be likewiſe ſworn in ſuch affidavit, that ſuch offer of payment in Army Bills has been made as aforeſaid ſo that the perſon or perſons who might have been arreſted and held to ſpecial bail upon ſuch proceſs if this act had not been made, cannot by reaſon of ſuch offer and of the proviſions in this act contained, be ſo arreſted and held to ſpecial Bail; it ſhall be lawful for the Court out of which ſuch proceſs ſhall iſſue, or for any Judge of ſuch Court in a ſummary way, in Term or Vacation, to order the defendant or defendants in the action in which ſuch proceſs ſhall iſſue, and who might have been ſo held to ſpecial Bail as aforeſaid, if this act had not been made, to cauſe Army Bills to the amount of the ſum of money for which ſuch perſon or perſons might have been held to ſpecial Bail if this act had not been made, to be depoſited in the Court out of which ſuch proceſs ſhall iſſue, or in ſuch manner as ſuch court or ſuch Judge ſhall direct, to anſwer the demand of the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs in ſuch action, and if ſuch Depoſit ſhall not be made within the time limited by ſuch order after ſuch notice thereof as ſhall thereby be directed to be given it ſhall be lawful upon affidavit duly made and filed that ſuch depoſit has not been made according to ſuch order, to arreſt ſuch defendant or defendants, and to hold him or them to ſpecial Bail, in ſuch and the ſame manner as if this act had not been made.

WORTH.

"Worth makes the man," Pope ſays; and every body acknowledges the truth of the ſentiment; but then the queſtion is, what makes worth?—The moraliſt will tell you, "it is virtue, but the man of the world ſays it is money." And indeed, in this age of Reaſon, the latter definition ſeems almoſt univerſally to prevail. When it is aſked how much a man is worth, the anſwer generally has an excluſive reference to his property. If he has wealth, the replier to the queſtion ſays he is worth ſo many pounds, but if he be very poor, though he ſhould poſſeſs the intelligence of a Newton, and the benevolence of a Howard, "He is not worth a groat."—Thus the worth of a man, like that of beef and butter, is reckoned by pounds, ſhillings and pence.

Bank Notes Swallowed.—On Thurſday laſt a young man who calls himſelf Thomas Watkins Means, alias T Tomkins Means, a native of Philadelphia county, was purſued to this borough on ſuſpicion of ſtealing a number of bank notes from Mr. Eiche berger, of York county. While in the act of ſearching him, he very dexterouſly ſwallowed three of the bills, amounting to 28 dol. A doſe or two of tartar emetic, however, being adminiſtered, by way of endorſement, in a little while this new banker diſcounted the bills, which were very little injured by the new proceſs of incorporation. The banker (through the interference of a magiſtrate) will for a while hold his office in Walnut ſtreet, in the ſtone building, vulgarly called the Stone-Jug.

☞ The firſt numbers of the Canadian Viſitor, and a ſubſcription liſt, are lodged at this Office, where perſons ſubſcribing, will receive them.

DUTCHESS D'ANGOULEME.

On Wednesday morning arrived here the Wanderer sloop of war, capt. Dowers, from Passage, which she left on the 11th inst. having on board her royal highness the Dutchess d'Angouleme, the Dutchess de Serant, Countess de Choisey, Countess de Dumas, Marquesa de Rougey, with about 20 noblemen, generals, &c. As soon as her royal highness's arrival was communicated by signal, a guard of honor consisting of the grenadiers of the Derby militia, with colors and music, attended by Ad. Sir J. T. Duckworth, Major General Brown, and several other officers of the navy and a rmy, assembled to welcome a heroine to the British shore. About 10 o'clock her royal higness landed from the Admiral's barge under a royal salute from the garrison and lines. As her royal highness passed over Mount Wise to the admiral's house, she was frequently cheered with huzzas and "vive le Roi." The populace eager to gain a view of this truly illustrious female, scrouded around the admiral's house, to whom her royal highness presented herfelf at the window for a considerable time, bowing moft gracefully, and overcome even to tears by the demonstrations of attachment and eftcem with which she was received. This proof of her fenfibility made a moft forcible impreffion on all who witneffed it. Her royal highness's appearance is in the highest degree interesting. Melancholy seems to have marked her for her own; and it was not eafy to recognife in her pallid countenance and fragile form, any traces of thofe energies which fo lately diftinguifhed her at Bordeaux. The French muft have been callous indeed, and have loft all that gallantry for which they were once celebrated to refift her honorable and enlivening appeals, that in any other country less demoralifed would have proved irrefiftable. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon her royal highness departed for London, with her fuit and several carriages. Her own carriage was very heavy, and not otherwife remarkable than for the fleurs de lis on the pannels, moft beautifully executed. At Ridgeway, five miles from Plymouth, her royal highness was accofted by a lady well acquainted with the french language who on profeffing her regret at feeing the daughter of Louis XVI. and the niece of the lawful monarch of France under fuch circumftances, was informed by her royal highness that fhe was going to a place (London) where fhe had a great many friends, and whence fhe hoped to return soon home to her native land, without a fear of further diftarbance. An unthinking John Bull in one of the public coaches that had ftopped to water the horfes at Rideway, alfo fpoke to her royal highness: but inftead of expreffing his forrow at her fituation, he enquired of her, if the carriage fhe rode in was her own, and by whom it was built, at the fame time, obferving that it was very heavy, and could not have been built in England!

Great care was taken to conceal from her royal highnefs the fact of her husband's having been taken prifoner. Previous to her leaving Bordeaux, her royal highness iffued the following fpirited addrefs to its inhabitants:—

"Brave Bordelais,—Your fidelity is well known to me—your devotion, unlimitted, does not permit you to foreſee any danger, but my attachment for you, for every frenchman, directs me to foreſee it. My ftay in your city being prolonged might aggravate circumftances, and bring down upon you the weight of vengeance. I have not the courage to behold Frenchmen unhappy and to be the cauſe of their misfortunes. I leave you, brave Bordelais, deeply penetrated with the feelings you have expreſſed, and can affure you they fhall be faithfully tranſmitted to the King.—Soon, with God's aſſiſtance, under happier auſpicies, you fhall witneſs my gratitude, and that of the Prince whom you love

THE PUBLIC are reſpectfully reminded that a ſmall periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Viſitor; Subſcriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is deſigned to extend uſeful information and promote a taſte for reading among all claſſes of the community, by recommending thoſe plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extenſively uſeful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but ſhe is more deſervedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious inſtitutions. The moſt aſtoniſhing effects have been produced by theſe different eſtabliſhments. And it is hoped that all the Britiſh colonies will imitate the parent country in the eſtabliſhment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the bleſſings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Chriſtian and true Patriot will ſhow exert himſelf as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years paſt in deſtroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houſes might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is ſincerely hoped that all will learn wiſdom by the things which they have ſuffered.

Advertiſement.

EMPRESS MARIA LOUISA.

The Empreſs, or rather the Archduchess Maria Louiſa, has publiſhed a letter written to Count Ceratte, Governor of Parma, of which the following is a faithful extract:

"My wiſhes rejected the hand of Bonaparte. As a dutiful daughter I yielded to the entreaties of a beloved father, and ſacrificed myſelf for my country. When I arrived in France, amidſt ſuch dazzling proſpects, the amiable manners of the French reaſoned me perhaps too indulgent to the inconſiſtency and unſteadineſs of their character. I thought I had ſtudied the nation. It abandoned Napoleon in his adverſity, and recalled to the throne the Prince whom it had proſcribed. Ah! Napoleon returns to France, and the people forſake their king. What a baſe and faithleſs nation! Never will I return to it, and if I had not a ſon to whom I have conſigned my exiſtence, I would ſhut myſelf up in a convent for the reſt of my days."

Parma, April 15.

Proclamation of Maria Louiſa,

The following Proclamation has been publiſhed here by authority:—

We the Empreſs Maria Louiſa, Archduchess of Auſtria, Ducheſs of Parma, Placentia and Gauſtalla, make known to all the ſubjects and inhabitants of our ſtates of Parma, Placentia and Gauſtalla, that having taken into conſideration the circumſtances of the impoſſibility in which we find ourſelves, to repair in perſon into our above named ſtates, we have entreated our beloved Father the Emperor and King, to hav them provisionally governed in his name. We wiſh and enjoin our faithful ſubjects of the ſaid States, to obey the orders and diſpoſitions which his Majeſty ſhall deſign to make known, for ſuch is our pleaſure.

EUROPEAN MATTERS

Many letters from Americans in Paris, dated May 1st. have reached town. They mentions that though Napoleon remained in Paris, the city was very dull. There had been no feſtes, no ſplendid exhibitions as in former days. The war preparations were active; and the Imperial Guards had departed for the frontier; which was conſidered as ominous ſpeedy hoſtilities. The ſervor in favor of Bonaparte had ſubſided, and he had quarelled with Carnot and Fouche, on the ſubject of the Conſtitution. The public confidence in the ſtability of his reign was weak; as was viſible in the ſtate of the funds—the 5 per cent ſtock of France being as low or lower than the 3 per cent ſtock of England. The French people did not appear to dread the war; and placed reliance on the magnanimity of the allies, ſhould Bonaparte be compelled to fly from France. Peace was not expected, as they knew all Europe had the Imperial word of Alexander of Ruſſia, that the allies will make no treaty with Bonaparte or his family. One letter has ſaid—"You need not be ſurpriſed, if before 1816. you ſee Napoleon's ſpontoon on the American ſoil."

The ſurveyors lately ſent to ſurvey the military bounty lands, in the Michigan territory have returned without executing any part of the work for which they were ſent out. The cauſe of their premature return was occaſioned by the Indians forbidding the ſurveying any lands in that territory, inſomuch as they in effect deny the treaty or ſale of any lands therein.

THE GREEN ASS.

A certain widow, through pretty much advanced in life, had a mind to marry again. As her fortune was very large ſhe thought herſelf entitled to a young huſband; and accordingly fixed her eyes upon a handſome youth, who had nothing but his perſonal recommendations to depend upon. She plainly perceived that there would be no difficulty on his part, but ſhe dreaded the cenſure and ridicule of her neighbours. In this perplexity, ſhe communicated her wiſhes and alarms to a maiden ſiſter, who lived in the houſe, and poſſeſſed an uncommon ſhare of ſhrewdneſs and addreſs for all ſuch occaſions:—Sitter, ſays the amorous widow, "What think you of Leander? he is ſurely the picture of my late huſband. Alas! I ſhould never have yielded my heart but to this irreſiſtible reſemblance. What ſhall I do? for I am in a dreadful conſternation about what my neighbours may ſay of me, being well acquainted with their malice and cruelty;—the pureſt love is not ſheltered from their ill natured ridicule. Were it not for that, this dear young man ſhould——but, how abſurd is all this, my dear ſiter!—replied the other, follow your inclinations, and don't tell me of ſuch fooliſh fears. You will be ſung, hooted, hallowed after, and halked up for eight days;—on the ninth, they will think no more of you than one thinks of a freind one has quitted for three months. That Aſs which you ſee yonder, ſhall, if you pleaſe, impoſe ſilence on the whole Pariſh about you the morning after your nuptials,—that Aſs!—yes, that Aſs, that Aſs I ſay, and leave the reſt to me and the Aſs." The widow was eaſily perſuaded, and the marriage was concluded, on the credit of the Aſs—Dreadful outcry in the Pariſh, rough muſic before the doors—not a ſoft thing could be heard from the mouth of either party for the noiſe of kettles and frying pans. In the mean time, the ſiter had painted the Aſs as green as a parrot, and out rushes the phaenomenon, with a triumpiant bray, into the midſt of the croud. In an inſtant every kettle and pan was mute, and every ſoul in the pariſh crowed round ſo ſtrange a prodigy.—"A green Aſs! good Heavens, who could have believed it! well, wonders will never ceaſe, how ſurpriſing is nature in all her operations! I dreamed, cried an old woman, of this very Aſs a week ago. I am ſure it betokeneth ſomething bad to our town,—a number of white miee appeared in the ſame manner juſt before the plague that happened in my youth." Such obſervations and exclamations as theſe took place of the clamour about the new married couple. The green Aſs laſted its eight days, and then there was no more curioſity about the green Aſs than there had been about the new married couple the moment the Aſs appeared,

A young woman of Dublin, who was apprehenſive of ſome fruitful effects, from an illicit amour which ſhe had for ſome time carried on with a Dutch Sailor, mentioned her ſituation to a freind of her's, who adviſed her to place her future offspring to the account of her matter, as being the richeſt man of the two. "I was thinking of that (ſaid the girl) but then, you know, the child will diſcover all when it learns to ſpeak Dutch."

An act to repeal and amend certain parts of the Militia Law, and alſo for the Transporting Naval and Military Stores.

[Paſſed the 13th day of March, 1813.]

WHEREAS it is expedient to repeal ſome parts of the militia laws and to introduce certain amendments in lieu thereof, Be it enacted by the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, by and with the advice and conſent of the Legislative Council and Aſſembly of the Province of Upper Canada, conſtituted and aſſembled by virtue of and under the authority of an act paſſed in the Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act paſſed in the fourteenth year of his Majeſty's Reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual proviſion for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further proviſion for the government of the ſaid Province," and by the authority of the ſame, That the Juſtice or Juſtices of the Peace before whom any perſon or perſons ſhall be convicted and fined for any offence againſt the Militia Laws of this Province or againſt this act, are hereby authoriſed and empowered to levy the amount of ſuch fine or fines, and all reaſonable coſts and charges incurred both before and after the conviction, by diſtreſs and ſale of the goods and chattels of ſuch offender or offenders, if the ſaid Juſtice or Juſtices ſhall deem ſuch proceeding expedient and proper. ANECDOTE.

In an age long paſt, the little republic of Padua had a diſpute with the Pope of Rome, who inſiſted upon exerciſing over it temporal as well as ſpiritual authority. The diſpute growing very hot, the Pope fulminated his threats againſt any of the citizens that ſhould take part with the Senate of Padua; and the Senate, too, threatened with the puniſhment of death any ſubjects of the republic that ſhould take ſide with the Pope. During this dilemma an officer of the Senate asked a prieſt of Padua, whether he preferred being hanged for obeying the Pope, or being excommunicated for obeying the senate? To this the prieſt replied—"that for his part, he had rather be excommunicated thirty years, than be hanged for a quarter of an hour."

THE PUBLIC are reſpectfully reminded that a ſmall periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Viſitor; Subſcriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend uſeful information and promote a taſte for reading among all claſſes of the community, by recommending thoſe plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extenſively uſeful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but ſhe is more deſervedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious inſtitutions. The moſt aſtoniſhing effects have been produced by theſe different eſtabliſhments. And it is hoped that all the Britiſh colonies will imitate the parent country in the eſtabliſhment of SCHOOLS and BOOK SOCIETIES.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the bleſſings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Chriſtian and true Patriot will now exert himſelf as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years paſt in deſtroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houſes might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is ſincerely hoped that all will learn wiſdom by the things which they have ſuffered.

Latest Intelligence.

Augsburgh April 29 — Private accounts from Upper Italy state that the brave army of the Commander in Chief, Baron Frimont, being numerous enough to pursue the beaten and dispersed remains of the Neapolitan army all the reinforcements of troops, 40 000 in number, which are already on the march to the south of Italy, have received orders to proceed by forced marches to Savoy and Piedmont. We expect, therefore soon to hear of military operations on the southern frontiers of France.

Letters from Bergamo, of the 19th affirm, that a revolution has broken out at Naples against Murat, his wife, and his party, and that the arrogant and faithless deserter of Italy, if he could reach his capitol, would only meet his distruction there.

LONDON, May 13.

Hostilities are on the point of commencing or probably have commenced. On Monday and Tuesday there was a general movement in advance from the interior of Flanders to the French frontier. The Prussians and Belgians, who have hitherto been in the rear, were then advancing in the direction of Mons and Valenciennes, with their trains of artillery, and in every respect equipped for instant service. It seems probable, that, while a sufficient force is left to watch the Garrisons of Lisle and the other fortresses in that quarter, the Duke of Wellington will enter France between Mauberg and Valenciennes, while Marshall Blucher advances upon the French corps at Moitzers and Sedan. If Mauberge were taken, and the French dislodged from the latter places, the Allies might turn, as they did last year, the triple line of Fortresses, and the Armies of Wellington and Blucher would remain incommunication with each other, notwithstanding their advances.

TRURO, May 12.—On the 14th ult. Murat abandoned the Panaro, and, continuing his retreat in all haste, fell back to Bologna, which he evacuated on the 17th, and the Austrians entered it on the same day. Two Austrian corps debouched on his right and left flanks, and made him accelerate his retreat. There was a sharp action at Castle Fracco, in which the Austrians made many prisoners. On the 16th in the evening, Murat had reached Imola. On the 17th, he is said to have been at Faenza, and the Austrians were still pursuing him. His army is said to be in a state of great dissatisfaction, complaining of having been deceived; in as much as when they began their march, they were told it was to cooperate with the Austrians, not to fight against them.

An Austrian corps is said to have landed and taken Remini and Pesaro—whilst a strong English and Sicilian force had debarked near Naples, obliging Murat to fly from Naples to Ancona. It was even reported our troops had entered Naples, and that Murat had been made prisoner.

LONDON, May 23.

The following telegraph dispatch was, yesterday, received from Portsmouth:—"La-vendee in a general state of insurrection." The news was brought by a brig of war. Private letters are also in Town, which contain the same intelligence, with the additional fact of several General Officers having joined the royalists, whose number are perhaps too zealously rated at 50,000 men.— Charette and Oieron are amongst them.

A letter from Bayonne, dated the 13th, states, that an English army corps, about 18,000 strong, is immediately to disembark on the frontiers of the Western Pyrenees. This corps is to be reinforced by 14,000 Spaniards, who are encamped on the banks of the Ebro. Letters also from Madrid have announced the march of a Portuguese army of 30,000 men. For a month past all communications with Spain have been interrupted.

TURIN, May 9.—Nine in the Evening.

We have just received the following news—"On the fourth day, General Mohr, vigorously repulsed the Neapolitan army, made a brigade prisoners near Fermo, and took several waggons with amunition and baggage and among them Murat's own carriage. The enemy protected his retreat by gun-boats. General Bianchi has moved his army to Aquila The enemy left a garrison of 7000 men in Ancona This garrison offered to capitulate, on the condition of being allowed to march out with arms and baggage, which was refused. The town is blockaded."

[The following extract from a proclamation of the allies is given in the Ar ftarque Francais, a Paris paper of May 11th, 18, with which we have been favored by a respectable friend: —New York paper.]

PROCLAMATION OF THE COMBINED ALLIES.

"It is very imprudent to suspect that we leave Bonaparte to act in all his pretensions. French men, we repeat it, our arms are not turned against you; we only wish to bring down to the ground the man who has never ceased to violate the most sacred and the most legitimate rights: we will maintain with all our forces the treaty of Peace which we have signed with Louis the 18th: we will replace him upon the throne; we will never acknowledge any other government than that which ought to exist under his dynasty; we swear it in the presence of the universe."

"Those unmeaning intrigues which we read in the Gazettes of France, do not impose upon us; we know the minds of all good Frenchmen; we know their love for the descendants of Henry IVth, their legitimate princes: we cannot then suppose that Bonaparte can have influence enough to collect two millions of French under his flag; at all events, Frenchmen, be persuaded, that it will be easy for us to oppose a double number, if there should be need of it."

"Recall to mind our first proclamation: woe to the French taken with arms in their hands, and the cities which shall shew themselves rebellious! Frenchmen, our assembled cohorts, march under the banners of your king, his cockade and white flag."

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

BOSTON, June 29.

Hostilities had not commenced on the frontiers, nor had Bonaparte left Paris on the 10th of May. This protraction of his journey is said to arise from the encreasing discontent in the interior which demands his attention, and the great difficulties of getting forward the conscriptions. In a conversation with his minister, Carnot, he demanded 300,000 new levies; but was answered—"Sire, your conscription law can no longer be enforced—times, as well as opinions, have changed.

Discontents and insurrections are spreading throughout France: in moft of the departments there are already armed bands, who openly refift the government of Bonaparte: at Dieppe the military officers were refifted and many of the troops declared for Louis the 18th. At Lisle, great numbers of the troops have deserted; in one boat there came over to our coast, twelve officers, bearing the white cockade in their hats. These occurrences have created much alarm at Paris, and Fouche has made them the subject of an official report, wherein he recommends that all Frenchmen, who have left the country, be recalled back to France; that all communications with the Bourbon family be prohibited; and that no national emblem shall be exhibited but the tri-colored. All infractions of these rules, are to be punished in the moft exemplary manner. Withthese troubles in the departments, it is said Bonaparte is threatened with an explofion at Paris, where ftrong parties are forming of the old and new jacobins, whose object is, to create confufion, and bring every thing on a level with their ftandard.

Louis 18th iffued a proclamation, dated at Ghent, the 2d of May, in which he announces having accepted the affiftance of the allied powers, to reinftate his family on the throne of France; and received their most solemn assurance, that the integrity, independence, and rights of France, fhould be respected.

These accounts again confirm our oldest

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, May 22.

In a letter from the Netherlands, it is said that "from the moment the troops of the allies enter France, there is to be no regular commiſſariat to iſſue orders of payment on Britiſh agents, or to draw bills of exchange on the Britiſh treasury; but clothing, proviſions, and every article of neceſſity and convenience, is to be levied in the way of contributions on the cities, towns, and villages of the invaded territory; and thus on the enemy is to be retaliated his own oppreſſive ſyſtem of exactions and the expences of the war will be, by this expedient, largely diminiſhed. Some indulgence, however, is intended to be ſhewn to thoſe places in France on which contributions are levied, when loyalty ſhall be manifeſted to the legitimate ſovereign, and ready obedience is paid to the orders of the Commanders. In ſuch cases, a sort of payment is to be made to a given extent, in the ſhape of bills drawn by Louis, and countersigned by his miniſters of finance, which are to be made payable at the public treasury of Paris.

Accounts of inſurrections, principally among the conscripts, in the cities, and of deſertions from the armies are received from various quarters. An exploſion at Paris is talked of in the Dutch papers with increaſing confidence: the reign of the Jacobins and Terrorists appears on the eve of commencing. A Havre, Liſle and Rouen, the diſturbances have been ſerious, and ſeveral lives have been loſt. La Vendee is also said to be in a ſtate of ferment.

Late and Important.

London papers to the 9th, and Liverpool to the 11th June, have been received at New York. Their contents are highly intereſting—but we have room only to notice the leading articles in a ſummary way.

Hoſtilities had not opened, but every thing indicated an immediate commencement. Bonaparte was in Paris on the 5th June, where he was to review his troops for the laſt time and ſet out for the army on the 6th. Soult, his Major General, had already gone. The new French Legiſlature had aſſembled, but the proceedings of their meeting were very ſumultuous. Serious inſurrections exiſted in the weſt of France—Indeed the latest accounts ſhow the affairs of Napoleon to be far from proſperous.

The preparations on the part of the Allies were active, and on an immenſe ſcale. They have renewed the declaration of war against Bonaparte, in which all the powers of Europe had ſo ſolemnly united.

The miniſterial majority in the Britiſh Parliament in favor of the meaſures againſt the common enemy, was almoſt unprecedented—the votes ſtood about 3 to 1. Mr. Gratton, the celebrated Iriſh patriot and orator, and one of the leaders of the oppoſition in England, made an able and ſpirited ſpeech in favor of war againſt the French Tyrant.

Murat, whom Bonaparte created king of Naples, is compietely un-kinged.—His wife, the ſiſter of Bonaparte, is a priſoner to the Auſtrians—his army all diſſipated, and his capital in poſſeſſion of Ferdinand IV. the former king, and who is again recognized by the Vienna Congreſs as the rightful ſovereign of the two Sicilies

[New York pap.]

PLYMOUTH, June 3.

A letter from Lord Burgherſh ſtates that the Rivoli has captured the French frigate Melpomene, of 44 guns, in the Mediterranean, the latter having 25 killed and 30 wounded. It was reported that orders had been given, May 29, to capture all veſſels under the tri-colored flag. The Duthchess D'Angouleme embarked for Orlend, to join the King, May 27

London papers of the 1ſt, say, that Bonaparte remained in Paris. Nothing was ſaid of his departure for the army; and the ceremony of the Champ de Mai, has been poſtponed. Two frigates were prepared in France, with ſecret orders, ready to take off Bonapare, and his family, in caſe of extremity.

Inſurrections continue in the weſtern and interior French departments.

The mails between England and France continue four times a week.

As Bonaparte's anxiety appears to be to fortify Paris; and ſome of the bakeries were ealcu ated to batter down, as well as defend the city.

Admiral Durham has ſailed with a ſquadron to take poſſeſſion of Martinique and Guadaloupe, Troops are continually embarking and ſailing for the Netherlands.

The motion for an addreſs to the Prince Regent, promiſing the concurrence of the houſe in effective meaſures to carry on the war againſt Bonaparte, was carried in the houſe of Commons, May 31ſt, by a majority of 331 to 92. The largeſt number of members preſent, which has been known for a long time

Lord Caſtlereagh officially informed the houſe, that the troops which the allies would bring into the field would exceed ONE MILLION.

It was aſſerted at London that both Marſeilles and Bordeaux had again hoiſted the white flag.

LONDON, May 23

France is expected to be invaded from the Pyrenees—Inſurrection in the North, and the South and the Eaſt—Inſurrection in the Weſt. This is the ſituation of affairs which the Morning Chronicle conſiders very comfortable one for Bonaparte

We learn, by Breſlau papers of the 25th of April that 11,000 Ruſſian troops, with two trains of Artillery, had paſſed through that town on their way to the frontiers. They are represented as troops in the very beſt condition. On the ſame authority it is ſtated, that a Ruſſian army of leſs than 234 000 men, beſides cavalry, had been aſſembled in Poland, and were ordered off in diviſions by different routes, in order that they might, with greater facility be accommodated on their march. Troops, in the route of Breſlau and Prague, were expected to continue marching until the 31ſt of June before all of them had paſſed by.

The Gazette of Florence announces that on the 7th of April, Lord Bentick ſent orders to the different Engliſh commanders in the Mediterranean to begin hoſtilities againſt king Joachim by ſea and land

BASLE, April 29.—Baron de Stern the Pruſſian Miniſter is now at Zurich where he arrived the 24th. It is thought that he will come here. The object of his miſſion is to engage the Diet to embrace the cauſe of the allied powers. He has already obtained the votes of 11 cantons.

FLANDERS MAIL.

COURTRAY, May 4.—Yeſterday 40 lancers arrived here, coming from Liſle, with their baggage, arms, and horſes. They ſay that the detention is conſiderable from Liſle to Tournay; that there is a dearth of forage in the firſt of theſe places; and that their horſes had not received any during the laſt five days. The intercourſe between Courtray and Liſle, are forbidden.

BARBADOES, May 1.—The Duke of Montroſe packet, Capt. Blewit, ſailed from Falmouth on the 31ſt March, with the mails unfortunately struck on the Kendal Rocks, on Friday evening, about 9 miles to windward of this Island, and we are ſorry to ſay, ſhe immediately upſet. The crew and 2 paſſengers (Mr. Harriſon, of Nevis, and Mr Ferrall, of St. Croix) very prudently took to the boats, and arrived here at 12 o'clock the ſame night, with the Mails, which were all that could be ſaved.

Boſton, July 17.

FROM HALIFAX

Yeſterday, advices from Halifax to the 8th inſtant ſtates, that eight American veſſels had been captured by the Engliſh for fiſhing on the weſtern ſhores of Nova Scotia. The veſſels were given up, with an endorſement on their papers forbidden their fiſhing on the weſtern ſhores of that province.

ſtatements, that Murat had been overpowered by the Auſtrians. It is alſo ſaid, the Auſtrians are in poſſeſſion of all Tuscany; and that 2000 Napoletans had joined them. There is further more a report, that the Engliſh had taken poſſeſſion of Naples and made Murat priſoner.

Bonaparte is fortifying Paris.

A letter from Maria Louiſa, is ſaid to be in circulation, wherein ſhe expreſſes a diſinclination to return to France, aſſigning as a cauſe, that the people were fickle and faithleſs and ſhe dared not truſt them again.

The French papers ſay, that Bonaparte would nominate a regency before he left Paris.

Boulogne, Calais, Quesnoi, Mauberg, Dunkirk, Bergeues, Liſle, Douay, Valenciennes, Conde, and Avesne are declared to be in a ſtate of ſiege.

The laſt London dates, ſtate, that hoſtilities were on the point of commencing, as a general movement of the allied armies towards France, had recently taken place.

An allied army is collecting to act on the ſouthern frontier of France; this may account for the delay of the Spaniſh and Portuguese troops as mentioned in our laſt previous accounts.

It is ſaid, the Ruſſian troops, which have lately arrived and joined the allied army, ſwell the battalions, furniſhed by Alexander to 350,000.

The Auſtrians have entered Civita Vichia.

The French troops continue to desert in great numbers—they are generally form the cavalry corps.

The declaration of war againſt France was ſigned by all the high allied powers on the 11th April, and immediately after a proclamation was iſſued by them, prohibiting all communication between France and Germany

The Landſtrom (Militia) is organizing with celerity, in all parts of the north of Germany. The ſmall territory of Waldeck turns out 11 000 men, well armed and equipped.

The Bourbon family have many friends in Havre; and when ever a multitude is aſſembled together, the cry of Vive le Roi, is boldly vociferated; without the intervention of diſcordant notes.

Accounts from Lisbon are received to May 21; they ſtate the arrival there, of a number of transports, for the purpoſe of conveying a large body of Portuguese troops, under Lord Beresford, to the Netherlands. Their embarkation had, however, been delayed—probably from the circumſtance, as mentioned in the London accounts, that a diverſion was contemplated in the ſouth of France.

The Liſbon papers ſay, that very ſerious and threatening diſcontents exiſt throughout the whole of the ſouth of France; that the people are generally in favour of Louis 18th, from natural attachment, and are rendered more hoſtile to Bonaparte from the severity of his laws, and heavy exactions which are thrown upon them. They wait but a favorable opportunity to join the ſtandard of Louis.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

Murat, cloſely purſued on all ſides by the Auſtrians, and his capital menaced if not already in the hands of the Engliſh, has offered to negociate a ſuspenſion of arms; but this was not agreed to; and a ſpeedy termination of his power may therefore be anticipated.

Auſtria will have 300,000 men in the field; the Netherlands army, under Lord Wellington, will comprise not leſs than 180 000, with an immenſe body of cavalry, and a ſtrong body of field artillery.

The laſt London date (May 13th) says, "a declaration of war againſt Bonaparte will be promulgated on Wednesday next."

The allied armies were moving towards France; the Pruſſians and Belgians were marching with a heavy train of artillery towards Mons and Valenciennes; a large body watched Liſle; the Duke of Wellington will enter France between Madberg and Valenciennes; Blucher was marching on Moizers and Sedan. Theſe movements, if ſucceſsful, will give to the allies, immenſe advantages, in purſuing their grand object.

GLORIOUS NEWS!

BOSTON, July 31.

A gentleman has just arrived in town from a vessel which he left in the harbor, bringing London date to the June 24th. The principle article is an official despatch of Lord Wellington, dated Waterloo, June 19, giving a detailed account of a General engagement. The attack commenced on the 15th, by Bonaparte at the head of six corps of his army on the Prussian posts at Thuin and Lobez on the Sambre. Blucher concentrated his army upon Sambref. Armand and Ligny. The enemy marching upon Brussels on the evening of the 15th attacked a brigade of the army of the Netherlands.—On the 16th Blucher and Wellington's armies were both obstinately attacked in their positions, the whole of their divisions not having come up, in which great slaughter was made, and many distinguished officers were killed, among them the Duke of Brunswick. Blucher fell back after the attack upon Wavre, and Wellington to Genappe and Waterloo

On the 17th Bonaparte with all his army except the 3d corps, attacked Wellington in his position which was successively repeated until 7 o'clock in the evening, at which time a part of the Prussians having come up to his assistance, Wellington attacked the enemy with his whole line, which he says succeeded in every point. The enemy fled in confusion, leaving behind ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY CANON, with their ammunition, which fell into the hands of the Allies. The pursuit continued by Wellington's army until after dark, and then by Blucher's thro' the night, they having been less engaged. The latter took SIXTY cannon, and several carriages, some of which contained Bonaparte's own baggage.

Among the British killed were Lieut. Gen. Sir Thos Picton, Lieut. Gen. Sir H. Ponsonby, 4 Colonels, 5 Lt. Colonels, and many other officers.

The Prince of Orange wounded by a musket ball in the shoulder. Lieut. Gen. Duke of Uxbridge has had his leg amputated. Lt. Generals Alten, Cocke, Barnes, Kempt, Halket, Adams and Daral y, were wounded.

The messenger brought over two Eagles which he presented to the Prince Regent.

[Particulars in our next.]

The small papers of Paris, mention a report, of the arriva. there, of Mr. Murat, Mrs. Murat, and the little Murats—are King, Queen, Princes, and Princesses of Naples.

In the House of Commons, June 9, in reply to an inquiry whether any arrangement had been made with the U States respecting the Newfoundland Fishery, Lord CASTLEREACH said that the treaty of 1783 was expired, and that the subject was to be construed by the general law of nations. The King of Prussia proceeds to the army by the way of Berlin, and the two Emperors go by Prague.

Lateſt Intelligence.

LONDON, June 17— Information from Conſtantinople, was received to 10 th May—Turkey is in a ſtate of repoſe, and has no inclination to take a part in the diſputes of Europe—Ruſſia has reſtored her fortreſſes which were so long withheld—

LONDON, June 23.

The French after they were routed re treated in the greatest diſorder, their arms, they threw down by whole regiments. The Pruſſian cavalry gave them no rest, purſuing them the whole night. All the roads were choaked with dead, and dying, cannon, baggage &c. Bonaparte's carriage, plate, correſpondence &c. fell into our hands. There were ſeveral thouſand proclamations found dated from the palace of Lacken, near Bruſſels, for he had promiſed to be at Bruſſels on the 19th. The loſs in killed and wounded is eſtimated at 40,000—The number of cannon taken exceeds 300—The French imperial Guard, is ſaid to be nearly deſtroyed. On all ſides was ſeen a total diſregard of perſonal danger—The Leaders were mingled in the heat of the fray like the meaneſt Soldier—The Duke of Wellington was in cloſe converſation with Lord Uxbridge, when the latter received the ball in his knee—His Lordſhip had been throughout the day foremoſt in danger and glory. M. Blucher, it is ſaid, was for some moments a priſoner. As to Bonaparte, he was more than once incloſed among the Britiſh troops, and diſentangled as it appears by miracle-

"Never before, (says the Britiſh Commander) was I obliged to take ſuch pains for victory, and never before ſo near being beaten" as on the 18th June.

On Monday laſt, the Duke of Wellington arrived at Bruſſels to viſit the Prince of Orange and other wounded officers-

The Pruſſians have re-entered Charleroi, Binch and Fontaine l' Eveque-The two armies expected to be in France to day. (June 23)

Whilſt theſe great events have been paſſing in the north of France, the Auſtrians and Ruſſians are ſaid to have entered Alsace; and from the French papers we find that another Auſtrian army has entered France near Chamberry.

LONDON June 24.

Yesterday in the House of Lords and Commons, Thanks were UNANIMOUSLY voted to Lord Wellington, and the officers, and non-commissioned officers and privates under his command, for the victory of June 18.

In the Lords, the vote was moved by Earl Bathurst. He ſaid Bonaparte had not now to complain of any of the difficulties to which he had attributed former diſaſters he choſe his time, place and enemy; and had been repulsed, defeated and routed. He stated the loss of the Prussians on the 16th, at 16,000 men. In the battle of the 18th Lord Wellington performed occasionally all the duties from Colonel to Field Martial. At the cloſe of the day Bonaparte put himself at the head of his guards, and made a vigorous attack; but the British guards met, overthrew and completely routed the choicest troops of the enemy. By despatches this day received, it appeared the effect of this victory had been 5000 priſoners brought into Bruſſels, 2000 more on the road, and others whose arrival might be daily expected. But no intelligence has yet been received of the result of the purſuit kept up by the Prussians. The Earl ſaid that no doubt ramain'd from the effects of this victory that the Allies would obtain the object of the contest.

The Earl alſo moved thanks to the Marshal Blucher and the Pruſſian army —And to the Prince of Orange, to Baron Alten, Gen. Barnes, Lord Somerſet, &c.

Conformably to a message from the Prince Regent, it was unanimouſly voted that the House would concur in granting an additional proviſion to the Duke of Wellington [The grant laſt year was 200,000l.] addition voted 200,000l.

In the House Commons the motion for thanks was made by Lord Caſtlereagh. He remarked that the Allies had been neceſſitated to diſtribute their troops with reference to the means of subsiſtance. He complimented Bonaparte greatly for his military talents, and the troops under his immediate command, which were the moſt complete and efficient corps belonging to France —and which he eſtimated at from 130,000 to 140,000—composed of those who had returned from the priſons of the allied Powers and thoſe veterans who had survived former battles. He characterized Napoleon as the greateſt captain in the world, except the leader of the British Army.

The allied army under the Duke of Wellington notwithſtanding its achievements was with the exception of the Britiſh, a green army not having had opportunity to see service. Deducting the 25 000, men, who under Prince Frederick of Orange, was in Weſt Flanders, and many other detachments. The whole army under the Duke of Wellington, was not 64,000.

Lord C. asserted that the French had been obliged to leave behind half if not more, of their artillery; but it was impoſſible for him to ſtate what their loss in men amounted to. The thanks of the Commons were given in the same terms and persons, as those of the Lords —and followed by a similar vote and grant to the Duke of W.

Mr Whitbread joined heartly in elogizing the brave troops and their Commanders, and added that the measures of the Ministers in conducting the war had his approbation. Sir F. Burdox joined in praising the officers and army.

The general wish appared to be for the erection of a Palace for the Duke of Welton.

A vote was passed giving 800,0000. to the army for military stores captured from 1802 to 1811—the result of 12 general actions and 2 sieges

The Duke of WELLINGTON to Louis 18th.

Field of Battle, June 18, 1815.

"SIRE. Bonaparte has been completely repulsed at Genappe. The battle was bloody. The Duke of Brunswick was killed. Two Engliſh diviſions suffered conſiderably.

"I am in purſuit of Bonaparte, with Marshal Blucher.

"The Belgian troops conducted themselves remarkably well."

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

It is a circumstance not generally known, but at the present moment worthy of peculiar remark, that the entry into active service of the illustrious person whose name is prefixed to this article, was in the early part of the year 1794, with the expedition under the Earl of Moira, which was intended in aid of the loyalists in Brittany. It is well known that the destination of this expedition was diverted to the Netherlands, in consequence of the unfortunate issue of the early part of the campaign in that quarter.

Tournay had fallen before the arrival of Lord Moira's little army [about 10,000 men] at Ostend. Circumstances induced his Lordship to attempt a junction with the Duke of York; in the course of which his army, fatigued and exposed to a most inclement season, were attacked by the French. On this march Lt. Colonel Wellesley was of the greatest utility in the command of a covering party in the rear. On the 8th July Lord Moira joined the Duke of York. During the attack of Boxell by General Abercromie, a regiment of dragoons [by some accident] threw the 1st, regiment of infantry into confusion. Of this the enemy's squadron instantly availed themselves advancing in full force, when the gallant Wellesley, who had his regiment (the 33d) formed in the rear, caused them to open, and permit the enemy's dragoons to pass through, when instantly wheeling into line, by order, they coolly threw in a few well directed vollies, which compelled the enemy to a precipitate retreat, and enabled Gen Abercrombie to pursue his retreat unmolested. During the whole of this arduous and calamitous retreat of the British army from Flanders, Lieut. Colonel Wellesley, at the head of three battalions had covered all the movements.

The object of this short sketch is to hold out (although almost unnecessary) to the panting heart of the British soldier, aspiring to honor and fame, the Hon. Arthur Wellesley, a Lieut. Colonel, participating the glory, and sharing the hardships of his regiment in Flanders, in the years 1794 and 1795:—and in the year 1815, see him raised to the highest civil and military ranks in the gift of his Sovereign, and in possession of the full confidence of all the legitimate Sovereigns of Europe, about to wield a baton and a sword on the same scene, in defence of the just rights of the people and of Sovereigns.

Among the things which have fallen into the hands of the victors is the grand order of the black-eagle, which the king of Prussia had given to Napoleon—The insignia of the order bears the motto, "e very one his own"—But a thing which, history will notice, and which deserves to be recorded, is, that the victory was decided at a place called "la belle alliance"

IMPORTANT NEWS.

Yesterday arrived at this port, the brig Ludlow, Capt. Mudge, 40 days from Bordeaux, and 27 from the Cordovan.

Capt. Mudge reports verbally, that while at the Cordovan, a paper was received, which contained the CAPITULATION OF PARIS, dated the 4th July, and signed by Col. Howard, on the part of Lord Wellington, and by an officer on the part of Prince Blucher. The capitulation granted the honors of war to the French troops, who were to march out towards Nantz; and that the Allies were to enter the next day.

That Marshal Souchet at Chamberry, entered into an armistice with the Austrian General Frimont, who commands the Italian army, June 30.

That the Head Quarters of the Arch Duke Charles, who commands the Austrian grand army, moved from Fribourg to Loerrach, preparatory to entering France, June 23.

That Bonaparte left Paris for Cherburg, June 29, accompanied by Bertrand and many other officers, where he was to embark for the United States of America, two frigates having been appointed for the purpose of taking him off.

That an embargo had been laid in France for 8 days, after Bonaparte left Paris, said by some to be to facilitate, & by others to prevent his escape.

That the Provisional Government had informed Lord Wellington, that Bonaparte had abdicated, and was off; and inquired what more the Allies were contending for.

It was the general opinion, that the French would oppose the restoration of Louis 18th; but that the they would be compelled to it.

Soon after sailing, Capt. Mudge was boarded from an English frigate, and a demand made if Bonaparte was on board; Strict search was accordingly made over every part of the vessel; But not finding him, the boarding officers proceeded to examine the phizes of every person on board to see if there was not a Bonaparte among them. They stated, that they believed, that he intended to make his escape in some American vessel, for this country; and that they should search every one they might fall in with, to find the Ex-Emperor.

No serious disturbances had taken place at Bordeaux, or its vicinity; but they were very apprehensive of difficulties.

FRENCH HOUSE OF PEERS.

The Journal of June 24th contains the sequel of the debate in this house on the 22d. The President informed the house, that the answer of Napoleon to the address of thanks was, that he had only abdicated in favour of his son. Lucien several times insisted on the immediate acknowledgement of Napoleon II. Ponteconlant said he did not know what title Lucien had to talk thus. He knew him only as a Roman Prince. Joseph also said, he consented to the nomination of members of the provisional government, provided the government was exercised in the name of Napoleon II. The house, however, finally passed over the motion.

Extract of a letter from Bordeaux, to a gentleman in this Town, dated July 2.

"Bonaparte has abdicated, and left the capital. The Allies, it is expected, will enter in a few days. A GENERAL PEACE on the continent will grow out of the late events, and the old BOURBON KING reinstated."

GHENT, JUNE 22.

His Majesty Louis XVIII. has just left us, to return to his kingdom. A great many Frenchmen of distinction have followed; the others will follow successively. The corps stationed at Clost, Termonde, &c. are also gone forward.

Canadian Courant, Extraordinary, of August 15.

A friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada.

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the profperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship; and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that no education can be confidered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 10 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

The District School,

WILL be opened on the 11th September next at which the more useful branches of a liberal education will be taught by the Subscriber, and his Assistants.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more defervedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

FRENCH LEGISLATURE,
House of Representatives,
Sitting of June 28.

M. Durbach read the following leter from the President of the Provincial Government to the Duke of Wellington, dated June 27.

MY LORD—You have just added greatness to your name by new victories gained over Frenchmen It is by you therefore, that the French are best known and appreciated. You will vote for their rights in the midst of the powers of Europe

In that council of Sovereigns, your credit and influence must be as great as your glory.

The vows of nations, who neither caiumniate nor flatter, have declared your character. In all your conquests, your law of nations has been justice, and your policy has appeared to be the voice of your conscience.

You will find the demands, which we make through our plenipotentiaries, conformed to the most rigorous justice.

The French nation wishes to live under a monarch. She also wishes that this monarch should govern under the empire of the laws.

The republic has taught us, how fatal is the excess of liberty; the empire how, fatal is the excess of power Our desire, and it is unchangeable, is to see the independence, the order of the peace of Europe placed at an equal distance from both these excesses.

Every one in France looks to the constitution of England; we do not pretend to be more free than she is; we will never consent to be less so.

The Representatives of the French people are forming a social compact. The powers will be distinct, but not divided. It is from their very separation that their harmony is expected to rise.

As soon as this instrument shall have received the signature of the sovereign, who shall be called to govern France, that sovereign will receive the sceptre and the crown from the hands of the nation.

In the present state of knowledge in Europe, among the greatest misfortunes of mankind are the divisions between France and England; let us unite for the happiness of the world.

My Lord, no man, at this moment, can so effectually as yourself contribute to the improvement of the character and condition of the human race.

I pray your Lordship to accept the assurance of my highest consideration.

The President of the Government,
THE DUKE OF OTRANTO.

June 29.

Count Lanjuinais presiding, presented the following messages, from the provisionary government, and the accompanying documents.

Mr. President—The provisional government has not forgotten for an instant that Napoleon by his abdication has placed himself under the safeguard of French honor. Their first care was to demand of the enemy generals, safe conducts for the protection of his person.

On the 25th of June, Napoleon demanded that two frigates should be put at his disposition. The government immediately ordered the ministry of the marine to arm two frigates. Lt Gen Beker was ordered to provide for the protection of the person of Napoleon during his route, and all necessary orders were given for securing the preparation of relays of horses.

In the mean time Napoleon had not set out, yesterday the 28th. The safe conduct had not arrived. The approach of the enemy giving lively inquietude respecting the safety of Napoleon, the commission determined to press anew his departure, and positive orders were given to the ministry of the marine. This last was sent to him by the count Boulay,

The house will perceive by the subjoined [reply]* of Lord Wellington, that he did not consider himself authorised to give the safe conduct requested: and that the government has performed one of its most sacred duties in causing the departure of Napoleon.

The Government informs the house that Napoleon set out at 4 o'clock, as the subjoined letter* of General Beker shows

The Government invites the house to make provision for him and for his family.

Accept, &c
(Signe) Duke of OTRANTO.

Not necessary to Publish.*

Paris July 1.

Letter from the Minister of War to the Duke of Wellington.

Head Quarters Villettee, June 30.

My Lord—Your hostile movements continue, although according to the declaration of the allied sovereigns, the causes of the war no longer exist since the Emperor Napoleon has abdicated his power.

At the moment when blood is again to be shed, I have received from Marshal Duke of Albufera a elegraph despatch of which I send you a copy. My Lord, I guarantee upon my honor this armistice. All the reasons which you could have to continue hostilities are at an end, since you can have no other instructions from your government than those which the Austrian generals had from theirs.

I make of your Lordship a formal demand to cease hostilities immediately, and to conclude an armistice, to wait the decision of the congress. I cannot believe my Lord that my demand will be without effect:—you will take upon yourself a great responsibility in the eyes of your noble coadjutors.

No other motive than the wish to prevent the effusion of blood and the interest of my country has dictated this letter.

If I appear in the field of battle with the conviction of your talents, I shall carry thither the conviction of contending for the holiest of causes, the defence and independence of my country: and that whatever may be the event I shall merit your esteem.

Accept I pray you,
my Lord, the assurance of my highest consideration.
ECKMUHL.

A similar letter has been sent to Marshal Blucher.

From the Boston Daily advertiser, of August 19.

By the Ludlow, Capt. Mudge, which arrived yesterday at this port in 27 days from Bordeaux, we have received papers of that city to July 6, from which we have made many important extracts.

From Capt. Mudge, we learn that the Allies under the Duke of Wellington, and Marshal Blucher, entered Paris by capitulation, July 4 The terms of capitulation, so far as Capt. M. can recollect from having heard them once read are that the French armies should march out towards Nantz, with the honors of war, and that during the suspension of arms agreed on, the city and country should remain under the existing government and flag. Both parties guarantee peace and tranquility, and engage that six days notice shall be given previous to the commencement of hostilities. The articles were signed on the part of the Duke of Wellington by Col Harvey, on the part of Marshal Blucher by Baron Muffin, and on the part of the French by Prince Eckmuhl [Davoust] Baron Guilleminot, and the Prefect, Count Bondo.

On the 8th of July, a Proclamation was issued at Bor eaux, signed by the Prefect, Baron Forchet, and Gen. Clausel, declaring the department of the Gironde in a state of seige.

Bonaparte left Paris at 4 o'clock on the 29th of June, to proceed to Cherburg, or Rochfort, (for the accounts in the Paris papers are very contradictory,) where he was to embark for this country The Provisional government say that they consider him in consequence of his abdication, as placed under the safeguard of French honor. They applied to the Duke of Wellington for a passport to permit him to proceed, unmolested to the United States. This passport Wellington refused to grant. Bonaparte requested two frigates to be put at his disposal, to bring him and his friends to this country, which request was readily granted him by the provisional government.

He still remained in Paris until the 29th, when the allies approaching nearer the city his friends becoming alarmed for his safety, hastened him away. The following persons accompany him: Gen. Bertrand, Gen Savary, Gen. Lallemand, Gen. Labedoyere, Gen. Montholon, and Gen. Gorgeau; Cols. Baillon, and Dechamps; Chiefs of Squadron Moran, Rosigny, and St. You; Capt. Pieron, Lt. Antrie, Messrs. Dolaseasse, Chamberlain, and his son; St. Catharine,; page Ratheray, Secretary; Began, Surgeon; Cotin and Appiani, maitres d'honor; Plant, Saint Jacques and Chiappi, and eight or ten domestics.

The application to the Duke of Wellington for a passport probably gave rise to the report in London, that Bonaparte had given himself up to Wellington.

The plenipotentiaries who had been dispatched to treat for a suspension of hostilities with Wellington, had repaired to the head quarters of those generals, and the result of their mission was not definitively known on the 28th of June. But the allied armies in the mean time continue to advance, and on the 30th June had arrived within sight of the capital. Davoust, minister of war, had assumed the command of the French army, the whole of which had on the 29th retreated to the lines about Paris, Versailles, the royal residence, ten miles from Paris had been entered by the allies, and conflicts of small parties in the vicinity of the capital, were taking place every day. Whether any general action preceded the capitulation of the city, which took place on the 4th of July, we are not informed.

Of the Austrian and Russian armies these papers contain little information. One corps had passed the Rhine near Mantz, and advancing nearly by Blucher's rout in 1814, has penetrated more than na 100 miles into France, and on the 25th was at Chateau Salins, proceeding rapidly towards Paris.

Another army said to consist of Austrians and Badeners, entered France on the 26th by Basle, in the rout of the grand army in 1814. The French retreated as they advanced.

On the side of Italy, Suchet made an armistice with Bubna and Frimont, for a few days, to expire on the 22 July.

June 28 an armistice was made with the royalists in the West of France, by which they are secured and an indemnity for the past, and are permitted either to remain at their homes or retire unmolested from their Country. It appears from it that the Marquis la Roche Jacqueline, a distinguished leader of the royalists is not dead as was reported.

The two Houses of the Legislature continued in session with great constancy, and were using every exertion to oppose the allies. No mention had been made of the restoration of the Bourbons nor had any measures been taken for the acknowledging Napoleon II. They produced on the 29th of June, strange as it may seem, an entire new constitution. The form of the new government is monarchial, but no hint is given who is to be the sovereign.

The Ludlow left Bordeaux July 1, but did not sail from the river until the 13th. An embargo was laid in France on the 4th, which expired on the 13th. It can hardly be supposed that the object of this was to prevent knowledge from getting abroad of Bonaparte's departure, for his intention to proceed to this country was ten days before officially made known to the Duke of Wellington, by application to him for a passport. The Ludlow shortly after sailing was borded by a British frigate and very strictly searched even to the persons of the crew for Bonaparte, who it was thought might be concealed or disguised on board.

ALBANY, August 22.

European News.—We continue to receive details of European news, though the dates are no later than we published a week ago. From these we learn many particulars which throw light upon the designs of the allies, and the present state of France. The Napoleon party is unquestionably the strongest in France; and without foreign interference, the nation would repose in quietness under its rule. The father having abdicated, the wishes of this party concentrate upon the son of course. Next to this, the Orleans party probably ranks greatest in numbers who wish to see the Duc d'Orleans placed upon the throne, as being less obnoxious than Louis to the imperialists and republicans, and more liberal and enlightened in his policy. It is a general belief, however, that the allies will restore Louis XVIII.

Credited Rumour—That Bonaparte has fled to England, and thrown himself on the Royal Clemency.

A friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada.

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the prosperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that, no education can be considered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 16 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

Latest Intelligence.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

The Duke of Wellington, and field marshal Prince Blucher, at the head of the allied army, entered Paris on the 7th of July; Louis 18th, King of France arrived at his capital on the 8th, and the arrival of the Emperors of Russia and Austria was expected on the same evening. Lord Castlereagh also arrived on the 8th.

Of Bonaparte we have no certain intelligence. The most plausible rumour [illegible] is, that he sailed from Rochefort in a French Frigate on the 3d of July.

The Provisional Government, or Commission of Regency, and the two Legislative Chambers, were dissolved, and the ministers of Louis, who were in office on the first of March, were restored to their respective official functions.

It will be recollected that Lord Wellington, in a despatch dated June 19th, stated the British loss, in killed, wounded and missing, in the battles of the 16th, 17th and 18th, at 12 or 13,000. In a subsequent despatch he gives the following official returns, which make their loss much less than his lordship had supposed:

British killed, wounded and missing in the Battles of the 16th 17th and 18th of June.

Officers killed 108; non-commissioned officers 102; rank and file 1549; Officers wounded, 436; non-commissioned officers 333, rank and file 5830. Grand total 8458.

PROCLAMATION OF LOUIS XVIII.

Louis by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre.

To our faithful subjects health.

At the time when the most cruel of enterprizes, seconded by the most inconceivable defection, compelled us to quit momentarily our Kingdom, we informed you of the danger which threatened you, unless you hastened to shake off the yoke of a tyrannical usurper. We were not willing to unite our arms, nor those of our family, to the instruments which providence has employed to punish treason. But now that the powerful efforts of our allies have dissipated the satellites of the tyrant, we hasten to reenter our states, there to re. establish the Constitution, which we have given to France; to repair by all means in our power the evils of revolt, and of the war its necessary consequence; to reward the good; to put in execution the existing laws against the guilty; in short, to call round our paternal throne the immence majority of Frenchmen, whose fidelity, courage and devotedness, have brought such pleasing consolations to our heart.

From the London GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY.
Downing Street, July 7.

A despatch, of which the following is a copy, was this day received from field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, K. G. addressed to Earl Bathurst.

Paris, July 7.

My Lord—In consequence of the convention with the enemy, of which I transmitted your Lordship the copy in my despatch of the 4th, the troops under my command, and that of the field Marshall Prince Blucher, occupied the barristers of Paris on the 6th, and entered the city yesterday; which has ever since been perfectly quiet.

The king of France entered Paris this day.

I have the honor to be, &c.
WELLINGTON.

London, July 28.

The news of Bonaparte's surrender to the British fleet gave rise to a number of extraordinary reports here yesterday. Every description of business appeared to have been forgotten. His surrender was in the mouth of every one, affording food for the most ludicrous conversation. Some doubted the fact; but at 4 o'clock all doubts were put at rest, by the receipt of an official note by Lord Castlereagh from the D. de Otranto, containing an official despatch of the 17th of July, of which the following is an extract:

"After having closed my despatches to you of this morning, I received the enclosed communication:

"I have the honor to make known to your excellency that Napoleon Bonaparte, finding it impossible to escape the British cruizers and troops who were stationed to guard the coast, came to the resolution of going on board the British ship of the line Bellerophon, capt. Maitland. I have the honor to be, &c.

Signed, Le Duc d'OTRANTO."

Bonaparte's Letter to the Pr. Regent.

"In consequence of the factions which have divided my country, and the hatred of the greatest powers of Europe, I have terminated my political career; and I come like Themistocles, to place myself under the protection of the British nation. I place myself under [illegible] your Royal Highness, as the most powerful, the most constant, and the most generous of my enemies."

The Austrian Army, at the last dates, occupied Bourgogne, the department of the Nieore, and there had arrived on the banks of the Loire a corps of Russians, Bavarians and Wirtembergers, to observe the army on the Loire which was daily decreasing by continual desertions. Davoust had returned to Paris.

There were great and magnificent rejoicings at Bordeaux on the 18th of July, on the re-hoisting the Bourbon flag. Gen. Clausel issued a proclamation on the 20th of July, addressed to the authority of the king. A deputation from the garrison of Strasburgh, and other French corps, arrived at Paris on the 29th July, to offer their submission to the king.

Cardinal Fesch has left Paris, under an escort of Austrian cavalry.

The fortress of Befort, in Alsace, has been carried by the Austrian troops, after five assaults which cost much blood on both sides.

It appears, from the latest French papers, that the most perfect tranquility reigned in every part of France.

From the Evening Post, August 28.

Just as our paper was going to press the Governor Strong arrived in a short passage from Liverpool bringing us London papers to the 26th of July. We have only time to glance at them and give the leading particulars.

Upon the arrival of the Bellerophon at Plymouth, she was ordered to keep off at least three leagues from shore, and to await further orders of the admiralty. &

Latest Intelligence.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM ENGLAND AND FRANCE.

The Duke of Wellington, and field marshal Prince Blucher, at the head of the allied army, entered Paris on the 7th of July; Louis 18th, King of France arrived at his capital on the 8th, and the arrival of the Emperors of Russia and Austria was expected on the same evening. Lord Castlereagh also arrived on the 8th.

Of Bonaparte we have no certain intelligence. The most plausible rumour respecting him is, that he sailed from Rochefort in a French Frigate on the 3d of July.

The Provisional Government, or Commission of Regency, and the two Legislative Chambers, were dissolved, and the ministers of Louis, who were in office on the first of March, were restored to their respective official functions.

It will be recollected that Lord Wellington, in a despatch dated June 19th, stated the British loss, in killed, wounded and missing, in the battles of the 16th, 17th and 18th, at 12 or 13,000. In a subsequent despatch he gives the following official returns, which make their loss much less than his lordship had supposed:

British killed, wounded and missing in the Battles of the 16th 17th and 18th of June.

Officers killed 108; non-commissioned officers 102; rank and file 1549; Officers wounded, 436; non-commissioned officers 333, rank and file 5830. Grand total 8458.

PROCLAMATION OF LOUIS XVIII.

Louis by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre.

To our faithful subjects health.

At the time when the most cruel of enterprizes, seconded by the most inconceivable defection, compelled us to quit momentarily our Kingdom, we informed you of the danger which threatened you, unless you hastened to shake off the yoke of a tyrannical usurper. We were not willing to unite our arms, nor those of our family, to the instruments which providence has employed to punish treason. But now that the powerful efforts of our allies have dissipated the satellites of the tyrant, we hasten to re-enter our states, there to re. establish the Constitution, which we have given to France; to repair by all means in our power the evils of revolt, and of the war its necessary consequence; to reward the good; to put in execution the existing laws against the guilty; in short, to call round our paternal throne the immence majority of Frenchmen, whose fidelity, courage and devotedness, have brought such pleasing consolations to our heart.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Downing Street, July 7.

A despatch, of which the following is a copy, was this day received from field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, K. G. addressed to Earl Bathurst.

Paris, July 7.

My Lord—In consequence of the convention with the enemy, of which I transmitted your Lordship the copy in my despatch of the 4th, the troops under my command, and that of the field Marshall Prince Blucher, occupied the barristers of Paris on the 6th, and entered the city yesterday; which has ever since been perfectly quiet.

The king of France entered Paris this day.

I have the honor to be, &c.

WELLINGTON.

London, July 28.

The news of Bonaparte's surrender to the British fleet gave rise to a number of extraordinary reports here yesterday. Every description of business appeared to have been forgotten. His surrender was in the mouth of every one, affording food for the most ludicrous conversation. Some doubted the fact; but at 4 o' clock all doubts were put at rest, by the receipt of an official note by Lord Castlereagh from the D. de Otranto, contanining an official despatch of the 17th of July, of which the following is an extract:

"After having closed my despatches to you of this morning, I received the enclosed communication:

"I have the honor to make known to your excellency that Napoleon Bonaparte, finding it impossible to escape the British cruizers and troops who were stationed to guard the coast, came to the resolution of going on board the British ship of the line Bellerophon, capt. Maitland. I have the honor to be, &c.

Signed, Le Duc d'OTRANTO."

Bonaparte's Letter to the Pr. Regent.

"In consequence of the factions which have divided my country, and the hatred of the greatest powers of Europe, I have terminated my political career; and I come like Themistocles, to place myself under the protection of the British nation. I place myself under her protection and her laws, and which I demand of your Royal Highness, as the most powerful, the most constant, and the most generous of my enemies."

The Austrian Army, at the last dates, occupied Bourgogne, the department of the Nieore, and there had arrived on the banks of the Loire a corps of Russians, Bavarians and Wirtembergers, to observe the army on the Loire which was daily decreasing by continual desertions. Davoust had returned to Paris.

There were great and magnificent rejoicings at Bordeaux on the 18th of July, on the re-hoisting the Bourbon flag. Gen. Clausel issued a proclamation on the 20th of July, addressed to the authority of the king. A deputation from the garrison of Strasburgh, and other French corps, arrived at Paris on the 29th July, to offer their submission to the king.

Cardinal Fesch has left Paris, under an escort of Austrian cavalry.

The fortress of Befort, in Alsace, has been carried by the Austrian troops, after five assaults which cost much blood on both sides.

It appears, from the latest French papers, that the most perfect tranquility reigned in every part of France.

From the Evening Post, August 28.

Just as our paper was going to press the Governor Strong arrived in a short passage from Liverpool bringing us London papers to the 26th of July. We have only time to glance at them and give the leading particulars.

Upon the arrival of the Bellerophon at Plymouth, she was ordered to keep off at least three leagues from shore, and to await further orders of the admiralty. A gentleman passenger in the same ship with Bonaparte states that he was almost constantly upon deck reconnoitering with his spy-glass, frequently walking backwards and forwards with a hurried step, muttering to himself.

The Bellerophon has been ordered to Plymouth where strict orders had been given to prevent any intercourse between the shore and the ship. The curiosity of all ranks of people to behold the monster in chains is excessive, and great numbers from London and other parts are flocked down to Plymouth though they know Bonaparte is not to land.

Admiralty-Office, July 25.

Extract of a letter form Capt. Maitland, of H. M. S. Bellerophon, to J hn Wilson Croker, Esq. dated in Basque Roads the 14th inst.

For the information of my Lords, Commissioners of the admiralty, I have to acquaint you that the Count Las Casses and General Allemand, this day came on board his majesty's ship under my command, with a proposal for me to receive on board Napoleon Bonaparte, for the purpose of throwing himself on the generosity of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent.

Conceiving myself authorised by their Lordship's secret order, I have acceded to the proposal, and he is to embark on board this ship to-morrow morning.

That no misunderstanding might arise I have explicitly and clearly explained to the Count Las Casses, that I have no authority whatever for granting terms of any sort; but that all I can do is to convey him and his suite to England, to be received in such manner as his Royal Highness may deem expedient.

He is in good health. As usual he passes but a short time at his meals and drinks but little wine though much strong coffee He is said to drink regularly the health of the Prince Regent. When he first approached land he is said to have exclaimed " Enfin, voila ce beau pays !" (At length, here is that beautiful country !)—He is plainly dressed, in general in a green coat, without any decorations and a cocked hat.

Napoleon Bonaparte.

The following extracts, written by a British naval officers, relative to the deportment of Bonaparte, subsequent to his surrender, will be read with interest.

" Napoleon stood exposed at full view on the gangway, about 20 yards distant, to survey us; and we in return examined him, as you may be assured, with minute and eagar attentention. He was dressed in a green uniform coat, with two epaulettes, and a red collar, a broad red sash over his shoulder, a large star on his left breast, white waistcoat, pantaloons, boots, and a large cocked hat with the tri-colored cockade. I knew the figure & face instantly; it was impossible for any one who had ever examined the lineaments attentively to mistake them. The greatest likeness is that exhibited in the print shops, termed a hieroglyphic portrait, &c. taken from the German, with the motto, " Napoleon the first and last," by the wrath of heaven,"&c. Brand, Savary, L'Allemand, and others, were with him.

" He first sent out to Capt. Maitland for permission to proceed to America in the frigates, which was refused; but an offer made of referring him if he came out to the admiral of the squadron. He then asked for a brig; and afterwards for a schooner—requests equally inadmissible. Afterwards he formed the plan of going in two chasse marees out of Breton Passage in the night, and being informed thot this ship would intercept him, he replied, " He would try, for we would not suspect such small vessels." This determination was altered, probably, by reflecting, that if taken prisoner he would have no claim to our generosity, while by throwing himself into our power, there might at least be some hope in setting up such a claim. He then surrendered, after threating to force his passage.

" On board the Bellerophon he seemed to think himself emperor, taking possession of Capt. M.'s Cabin, and shortly after inviting him to dinner. When he first went on board the Superb this morning, Bertrand first ascended the side, and was introduced to the admiral; Napoleon followed. " The Emperor" said Capt. M. Napoleon bowed to the admiral, without further ceremony walked into the cabin, and sent his compliments that he would be glad to speak with him.

Nothing escapes his eyes are in every place, and on every object, from the greatest to the most minute He immediately asked an explanation of ropes, blocks, masts. and yards, and all the machinery of the ship. He sent for the Boatswain to question him; that officer always fitting out the French ships. He requested the Marines to pass in review before him, examining the arms, evolutions, dress, &c. &c. and expressed himself highly pleased. He enquired into the situation of the seamen, their pay, prizemony, clothes, food, tobacco, &c. and when told of their being supplied by a purser or commissary, asked if he was not a rogue.

Bonaparte was complimented by admiral Hotham, after his surrender, by an invitation to breakfast with him. On this occasion the admiral ordered the yards manned as a mark of respect to his distinguished guest.

A friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada.

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the prosperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship; and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that, no education can be confidered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 10 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor, Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK SOCIETIES.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.
HOUSE OF LORDS—JULY 12.
THE PROROGATION.

A few minutes after 5 o'clock his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, attended by the Royal Suite entered the House, and being seated on the Throne in his Royal robes sir Thomas Tyrwhitt Knight Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, was despatched to order the attendance of the Commons, who forthwith to a great number, with the Speaker at their head, appeared at the bar.

The Prince Regent then delivered the following speech from the Throne:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I cannot close this session of Parliament without again expressing my deep regret at the continuance of his Majesty's lamented indisposition.

"At the commencement of the present session, I entertained a confident hope, that the peace which I had concluded in conjunction with his Majesty's Allies, would meet with no interruption; that after so many years of continued warfare and unexampled calamity, the Nations of Europe would be allowed to enjoy that repose for which they had been so long contending; and that your efforts might be directed to alleviate the burthens of his Majesty's people, and to adopt such measures as might best promote the internal prosperity of his dominions.

"These expectations were disappointed by an act of voilence and perfidy of which no parallel can be found in history.

"The usurpation of the supreme authority in France by Bonaparte in consequence of the defection of the French armies from their legitimate sovereigns, appeared to me to be so incompatable with the general security of other countries, as well as with the engagements to which the French nation had recently been a party, that I felt I had no alternative but to employ the military resources of his Majesty's dominions, in conjunction with his Majesty's Allies, to prevent the re-establishment of a system which experience has proved to be the source of such incalculable woes to Europe.

"Under such circumstances you will have seen with just pride and satisfaction, the splendid success with which it has pleased Divine Providence to bless his Majesty's arms and those of his Allies.

"Whilst the glorious and ever memorable battle obtained at Waterloo, by Field Marshals the Duke of Wellington and Prince Blucher, has added fresh lustre to the characters of those great Commanders, and has exalted the military reputation of this country beyond all former example, it has at the same time produced the most decisive effects on the operations of the war, by delivering from invasion the dominion of the king of the Netherlands, and by placing, in the short space of fifteen days, the city of Paris, and a large part of the kingdom of France, in the military occupation of the Allied Armies.

"Amidst events so important, I am confident you will see how necessary it is, that there should be no relaxation in our exertions, until I shall be enabled in conjunction with his Majesty's Allies, to complete those arrangements which may afford the prospect of permanent peace and security to Europe.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,"

"I thank you for the very liberal provisions you have made for the services of the present year.

"I deeply lament the continuance and increase of these burthens which the great military exertions of the present campaign combined with the heavy arrears remaining due for the expences of the former, we have rendered indispensible, and which his Majesty's loyal subjects, from a conviction of necessity have sustained with such exemplary fortitude and cheerfulness.

"You have already seen however, the fruit of the exertions which have been made; and there can be no doubt that the best economy will be found to result from that policy which may enable us to bring the contest to the most speedy termination.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The brilliant and rapid success of the Austrian arms at the opening of the campaign has led to the restoration of the Kingdom of Naples to its ancients sovereign, and to the deliverance of that important portion of Italy from foreign influence and dominion.

"I have farther the satisfaction of acquainting you that the authority of his most Christian Majesty has been again acknowledged in his capital, to which his Majesty has himself repaired.

"The restoration of peace between this country and the United State of America has been followed by a negociation for the Commercial Treaty, which I have every reason to hope will be terminated upon conditions calculated to cement the good understanding subsisting between the two countries, and equally beneficial to the interests of both.

"I have great pleasure in acquainting you, that the labours of the Congress at Vienna, had been brought to a conclusion by the signature of a treaty, which, as the Ratifications have not yet been exchanged; could not be communicated to you, but yet I expect to be enabled to lay before you when I next meet you in Parliament.

"I cannot release you from your attendance without assuring you, that it is in a great degree to the support which you have afforded me, that I ascribe the success of my earnest endeavours for the public welfare; and on no occasion has that support been more important than in the course of the present session.

"In the further prosecution of such measure, as may be necessary to bring the great contest in which we are engaged to an honourable and satisfactory conclusion, I shall rely with confidence on the experienced zeal and steady loyalty of all classes of his Majesty's subjects; and they may depend on my efforts to improve our present advantages in such manner as may best provide for the general tranquility of Europe, and maintain the high character which this country enjoy amongst the nation of the world.

At the conclusion of the Royal Speech, the Lord Chancellor having approached the Throne, and received the Prince Regent's commands for the purpose, came forward, and addressed both Houses as follows;

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It is the will and pleasure of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent acting in the name and on behalf of his majesty, M that this Parliament be prorogued to Tuesday the twenty second day of August next, to be then there holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Tuesday the 22d day of August next."

Paris, July 27.—Faithful to the principle of the alliance formed between the powers of Europe, and only directed against the man, who usurping anew the power over France, has caused to re-appear all the evils which war brings in its train, his Royal Highness the Prince Regent of England, who has shewn himself so constantly animated with the noble desire of putting an end to them, having been informed that Napoleon Bonaparte had surrendered himself to the naval forces of his Britannic Majesty, hastens to cause all hostilities on the coasts of France to cease. His excellency lord Castlereagh has communicated to the minister of the king an official notice of these orders, and the following note to this effect has been addressed to his highness prince Talleyrand:

NOTE.—The undersigned, the principal secretary of state of his Britannic Majesty for foreign affairs has received from his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, orders to inform prince Talleyrand, and through him his most Christian Majesty, that so soon as the news was received in England that Bonaparte had surrendered himself to the naval forces of Great-Britain; his Royal Highness immediathly gave orders to cause all hostilities on the coast of France to cease.

The undersigned, communicates with the greatest pleasure to his Royal Highness prince Talleyrand, the copy of the orders given on this subject, and seizes this occasion to renew to him the assurances of his distinguished consideration.

Translation of a dispatch of Earl Bathurst, to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty

Department of War, July 21, 1815.

My Lords—Having been informed to-day, that Napoleon Bonaparte has surrendered himself to the hon. capt Maitland, commanding H. M. ship Bellerophon; his Royal Highness the Prince Regent hastens to embrace the opportunity of delivering the ports of France from the impediments which result from the state of war, as much as is compatible with the great object of the alliance of the sovereigns, the stability of the peace and tranquillity of Europe, has directed me to make known to you, that his intention is that your lordship should give orders that all hostilities against the coast of France cease immediately, and that his majesty's vessels suffer all French vessels carrying the white flag to navigate freely

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1815.

Arrived on Monday last, the 25th inst. His Excellency FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, to re-assume the reins of Government. His Excellency was received with a Cordial Welcome and the Honors due to his Rank, and was Saluted by H. M. Ship Montreal, and Garrison.

On Wednesday the 27th Inst, He was waited on by a Deputation and presented with the following Address.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper-Canada, &c. &c. &c.

WE the Judges, Majistrates and principal Inhabitants of the Town of York.

In approaching your Excellency to express our great satisfaction at beholding you once again amongst us, feel that we have still greater reason to congratulate ourselves on this happy event.

Our experience of your past firm and liberal Administration, by which the prosperity of the Province has been so essentially promoted teaches us to anticipate the greatest benefit from its resumption, and this pleasing anticipation is confirmed by our knowledge of that Paternal solicitude, which induced you while in England, to bring, upon all proper occasions, the Interests of the Colony, under the favorable attention of His Majesty's Government, a solicitude which calls forth in our hearts the most grateful emotions.

We rejoice that the blessings of peace are to be dispensed by One who is so well acquainted with the wants and faculties of the Country, and we flatter ourselves, that York, recovering from a state of War, (during which she has been twice in the power of the Enemy,) will not only forget her disasters but rise to greater prosperity under Your Excellency's auspicious Administration.

A friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada.

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the prosperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship; and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that, no education can be considered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 10 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Downing-Street, July 6.

Dispatches of which the following are copies, have been this day received by Earl Bathurst, from Field Marshal his Grace the Duke of Wellington, dated Gonasse, July 2.

GONASSE, JULY 2.

My Lord—I have now the honor to enclose the report of Lieut. Gen. Sir C. Colville, upon the attack of Cambray, which affords a strong proof of the gallantry and exertions of our troops.

I have, &c.
(Signed) WELLINGTON.

COVY, June 26, 1815.

My Lord—Lieut. Col. Sir N. Campbell, (major of the 54th regt.) having asked my leave to go to head-quarters to request your grace's permission to return to England, I beg leave to take the opportunity of mentioning that I feel much obliged to him for his conduct in closing in the town of Cambray, with the light companies of major general Johnson's brigade, and in leading one of the columns of attack.—The one which he commanded escaladed, at the angle formed (on our right side) by the Valenciennes gateway, and the curtain of the body of the place—A second, commanded by col. Sir William Douglas, of the 91st regt. and directed by lieut. Gilbert, royal engineers, took advantage of the reduced height in that part of the escarpe (which, on an average, is on that side about fifty-five feet) by placing their ladders on a covered communication from this place, to a large ravelin near the Amiens road—The Valenciennes gate was broken open by Sir N. Campbell, and draw bridges let down in about half an hour, when on entering the town, I found that the attack made by col. Mitchell's brigade, on the side of the Paris gate, had also succeeded; the one directed by capt. Sharps, royal engineers, forced the outer gates of the Corre port of the horn work and passed both ditches, by means of the rails of the draw bridges, which they scrambled over by the side, not being able to force the main gate the escaladed by the breach (the state of which your grace had observed in the morning,) and before which, although the ditch was said to have twelve feet water, a footing on dry ground was found, by wading through a narrow port in the angle of the gate, within the rampart. I have every reason to be satisfied with the light infantry of the division, who, by their fire, covered the attacks of the parties, of sixty men each, which preceeded the column.

The three brigades of artillery of lieut. col. Webber Smith, and majors Knott and Browne, under the direction of lieut. col Hawker, made particularly good practice, and immediately silenced the fire of the enemy's artillery, except from two guns on each flank of the citadel, which could not be got at, and two field pieces on the ramparts of this town, above Valenciennes gate, and which played upon the troops as they debouched from the cover they had been posted in. Twenty prisoners were made at the horn work of the Paris gate, and about an hundred and thirty altogether in the town. Their fire was very slack, and even that, I foresaw, they were forced by the garrison of the citadel. I left the 23d and 91st regts. in town, with guns and a troop of Ensdorff hussars, and am much indebted to Sir William Douglas and col. Dalmer for their assistance in preserving order. Some depredations were committed, but of no consequence, when the circumstances we entered are considered. From the division as well as my personal staff, I received every assistance in the course of the three days operations.

I am, &c.

LONDON July 25—We have great pleasure in observing from the Flanders Mail, that Prussia has reclaimed all the plunder which had been torn from her during the period of Gallic conquest and spoliation, and that the Paris Museum is disgorging this portion of its riches, or rather of its disgrace.

"Torbay, July 24—Arrived this day his Majesty's ships Myrmidon and Bellerophon: on board the latter is Napoleon-Bonaparte, General Bertrand, his wife, and three children; the Count Montholon, his wife and one child; Savary, Las Casas and his son, General Allemand, and several others—in all about 34. The Port Admiral at Plymouth and my Lord Keith are expected this afternoon from that port, when it will be known what is so become of Napoleon and his party; at present we know nothing of what is intended to be done with them. No strangers are permitted to go along side the Bellerophon, but Napoleon is seen plain enough by all at the stern-gallery, and those that go round the ship have a full view of him.

"Another leter of the same date, from Torbay, after confirming all that is said in the precedings, states that the duke of Rovigo, count Las Casas, cont Montholon and family, two lieutenant-colonels, three captains, and two lieutenants, are on board his majesty's ship Myrmidon. It then states, that boats may pass round the Bellerophon, but are not permitted to go alongside That Napoleon is almost constantly in the stern-gallery, and that the parties who have been off, have approached near enough to distinguish that he has greyish eyes, brown hair, &c.

BONAPARE IN LONDON.

Captain Cole of the ship Savannah, from Havre-de-Grace, informs that on the 3d of August he was close off the harbour of Falmouth, where he spoke a frigate one hour from that port, and was informed by her that Bonaparte had that morning been escorted to London.—Col.

Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, JULY 25.

Letters from Brussels, on Saturday, state that the King of the Netherlands has created the Duke of Wellington, Prince of Waterloo, and conferred on him the estate of la Belle Alliance.

From the London Times of July 25.

His Majesty's ships Rhin, Menelaus, Havannah, and Ferret, have had an affair with some French Batteries near to Brest, who opposed their capturing some vessels in a small harbour that had the tricoulered flag flying. The batteries were attacked by the boats of the above squadron, and, after much resistance, the one that protected the French shipping was carried, and our gallant tars brought off a sloop of war, a cutter, two schooners, and three chasse marees. We are stated to have had several men killed and wounded in this affair.

BOSTON, Sept. 16th

LATE from ENGLAND.
THE DESTINATION OF BONAPARTE IS FIXED.

He has been conveyed from England to St. HELENA, which was confidered the most proper place for his security. He was transferred from the Belerophon to the Northumberland, which ship received the flag of Admiral Sir G. Cockburn. It is said that Sir H. Lowe is to be the military officer as Bonaparte's guard, and act as Governor of St. Helena.—The Company's troops will be replaced by a King's regiment (the 21 batt of the 53d regt. and a detachment of the Royal Artillery) and there will be an article in the new treaty of Paris, by which the expence of this establishment will be a constituent part of the British contingent towards the force that is to be kept up for the maintenance of the peace of Europe.—None of the suite of Bonaparte, it is said, except domestics were permitted to go with him to St. Helena.

FURTHER PARTICULARS

PLYMOUTH, August 5.

On Monday the future destination of Bonaparte was officially communicated to him and his general officers by Lord Viscount Keith and Sir Henry Banbury, Under Secretary of State for the War Department, which the Despot heard with grief, of the most acute description, exclaiming inarticulately that his wish had been and was to domiciate in England, under any surveillance its government might think proper, but he never would be carried to St. Helena alive, and publicly declaring that rather than be removed from the Belerophon he would have himself shot through the head by his Marshals. Magnanimous hero! If so fond of dying, why did he not meet death in the field of battle, the properest field for the exit of a soldier.

Bertrand cried bitterly, on learning his own fate, and that of his master. Madame Bertrand became so affected, that she attempted to drown herself, but was prevented, when in the act of leaping overboard. All the officers swore that they would not be seperated from their precious master, but the validity of a French Oath we all know, by experience, and so strongly did those ordered to be removed obey its dictates, that they went with the greatest tranquility on board the Liffey, whence they proceeded, on Tuesday last, with equal calmness, on board the Eurotas.

The demeanour of Bonaparte, ever since the above communication, has been ferocious, sullen and dissatisfied; and he declined gratifying his visitors any more with a sight of his form, except for about three minutes on the same day, when the boats were kept at a great distance.

On Tuesday orders came down for restraining all boats to a cable and a half distance from the Bellerophon, when the captive complaining that he was indisposed, closely confined himself to his cabin, from which indiscribable disappointment were occasioned to those who had gone out to see him. The precaution adopted, with respect to the boats, arose, we understand, from a foreign spy's being detected hovering round the ship, with letters addressed to Bonaparte, and without a passport, who could give no account of himself. He is in custody.

Bonaparte's property expecting what may be absolutely necessary for his use, has been sealed up, and is to be kept in England, to prevent him from committing bribery, but he will be at liberty to bequeath it to any persons he may like at his death.

At length, after a career of insolent pretensions on one hand, and of strange and ungovernable curiosity on the other, the departure of this disturber of the world has taken place. An express arrived on Thursday night, directing the Bellerophon to meet the Northumberland in the Channel which ship sailed yesterday, accompanied by the Tonnant and Eurotas. The Telegraph was at work all day, and report states, that it an order for the ships not to proceed further than the offing, but to wait the arrival of the Northumberland, which is hourly expected.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—

Government, it is said, have received accounts this morning, that the Peace is signed between the Allies and France.

PLYMOUTH, AUG. 5.

The Bellerophon 74 guns, having on board Bonaparte, accompanied by the Eurotas frigate and Peruvian brig of war sailed yesterday afternoon to the eastward, supposed with a view of meeting the Northumberland off the Start Point, in order to transfer him to that ship. For the two last days previous to his sailing, no boats were suffered to approach near the Bellerophon, during which he did not show himself to the public; but previous thereto, the numbers that surrounded the ship every evening were immense, amounting at times to upwards of 19,000 persons."

Some of his linen, sent ashore to be washed, appeared to be extremely fine in its texture, and has been held in such esteem, that many individuals at Plymouth have temporarily put on one of his shirts, waistcoats, or neckcloths, merely for the purpose of saying that they had worn his clothes; Blind infatuation!

Among the sheets, were several of exquisite cambric, inscribed in the corners with L. surmounted by a flat crown, in red silk, which renders it likely that they were stolen from the present monarch of France, or left by him in the Thuilleries, when he fled from Paris. Others had N. also in red silk, and surmounted by a crown, but higher than the other and imperial. Possibly Louis Bonaparte when king of Holland, might have been the owner of the articles marked L. with the lowred crown.

Bruges, July 25.

Since the 22d there have arrived here successively from 10 to 12,000 English troops. They proceeded by the way of Ghent to join the army of the Duke of Wellington.

LONDON, July 28.

General Bertrand, who had attached himself so closely to the fortunes of Bonaparte, if the same officer who constructed the bridge over the Danube, from the Isle de Lobau, which saved the French army after the battle of Asperne. Madame Bertrand was born in Martinique, of Irish parents, and her maiden name was Dillon. She is extremely pleasant and affable, and greatly attached to Napoleon's interest.

We received this morning some American Papers to the 27th ult. They are extremely hostile to this country. The return of Bonaparte to France is contemplated with extravagant joy—and the paper says, "Napoleon the great is popular throughout America since his return from Elba and re-assumption of the throne, and he ought to be for the system of freedom he is now establishing." Poor American journalist! how short lived will be their joy—how altered their tone, when they know that Napoleon the Great is in the custody of the Lords of this little Island!

COURIER OFFICE,
Half-past three o'Clock.

The following Bulletin has Just been issued:—

Downing Street, August 2, 1815.

Dispatches have this day been received from Lieut. Gen. Sir R. Brownrigg, dated Kandy in Ceylon, the 25th February 1815 On the 1st Febuary, after overcoming very great difficulties, principally in provisioning the Troops of the 1st and 2d divisions under the command of Major Hook and Lieut. Col. O' Connell, reached the foot of the Balani Mountains on the great road leading to the City of Kandy. The fort commanding the pass through the mountain was taken on the 2d after a trifling opposition, and on the 3d, a fort still further in advance, was taken possession of by the 1st division, without loss. On 10th the army again moved forward, and reached the great river of Mahavelliganga, three miles distant from Kandy, when in first learnt that the King and his adherents had abandoned his capital, and the defences which had been erected to prevent the passage of the river. On the 15th Sir R. Brownrigg joined the advance of the army, and on the following day entered the city of Kandy, and fixed his headquarters in the palace.

On the 19th the King was surrounded by the people of Dombera, the province into which he fled, and after some resistance was, together with two of his wives, taken prisoners.

Sir R. Brownrigg speaks most highly of the conduct and discipline of all the troops engaged in these operations.

An India Crown and Throne.—The ship America, capt. Luckett, arrived at Alexandria last Thursday from Liverpool. Capt. Luckett spoke, on his passage July 27, the British frigate Niger, 7 weeks from the East Indies bound to England. —They informed him that they had on board the Crown and Throne of the King of Ceylon, which place was in possession of the British, having been captured after a hard fought action, in which the British lost two general officers and a number of men.—the crown and throne were valued at 8 millions—They had likewise on board a number of wild beasts—he said American privateers had been very numerous in the East Indies.

Alencon, July 25.

A party of 400 Prussian cavalry have entered here, and demanded forthwith the sum of 400,000 francs.

Soissons, July 27.

For some days past the Russian videttes have advanced very near to this city. Our garrison is about 4000 men.

Nevrs, July 24.

Our city is occupied by the Austrians. We are overwhelmed by requisitions of all kinds.

Bloys, July 22.

Our city and all its environs, have been disarmed by the Prussian troops.

Toulon, July 24.

This morning all the military and civil officers of the Marine, at this port have addressed a respectful submission to the King. The white flag has been hoisted and the English squadron which was in sight of the port, saluted the flag as soon as they saw it flying on the forts and batteries.

Toulouse, July 24.

His R. H. the Duke d'Angoulems, arrived yesterday in this city at 3 o'clock P. M. in the midst of the acclamations of an immense multitude, intoxicated with the happiness of possessing him again. The presence of the Prince so ardently beloved by this people, raised the enthusiasm to its height.

LONDON, August, 2.—Mr. Mates, the Messenger, arrived yesterday with dispatches from Lord Castlereagh. He left Paris early on Sunday morning. It was said that Soult and one or two more traitors had been arrested. We trust they will be soon brought to their trial. The King, it was supposed, would retire to Compeigne during the trial.

The Northumberland received on board yesterday, a Captain, two Lieutenants, and 40 Privates of the Royal Artillery. The 53d regiment embarked on board the Bucephalus and Ceylon, which were to sail this day. These are the troops destined to guard Buonaparte at St. Helena. Our letters from Plymouth this morning contain nothing new relative to Buonaparte. Upwards of one thousand boats are from morning to night round the Bellerophon, to catch a view of this once "tremendous stranger." The seamen of the Bellerophon adopt a curious mode to give an account to the anxious spectators in the boats of the movements of Buonaparte. They write in chalk on a board which they exhibit, a short account of his different occupations.—"At breakfast"—"In the cabin with Captain Maitland"—"Writing with his Officers"—"Going to dinner"—"Coming upon deck." &c.

We repeat that he is extremely averse to going to S. Helena, and we understand asserts that he surrendered himself under the idea that he should be permitted to reside in England; to which is to be replied that he surrendered, and was warned that he must surrender, unconditionally.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

"During the first and second day, he says they thought they should be beaten, and on the last and great day, from the time when the first attack was made in the morning until 7 at night, they did not even attempt to do any thing more than repel the furious charges of the enemy. Three times they thought nothing remained to them, but to sell their lives as dearly as possible; and during the whole day they suffered more than ever an army suffered before, that was at last victorious. Amidst all these calamities, the Duke remained as nearly as possible in the same spot—never spoke but when he gave his orders expressed no anxiety no opinion, nor even any thing like feeling. They brought him word, that his favourite regiment in the guards was destroyed and that some of his best officers had fallen—nay, he saw his dearest friends sink by his side, until he stood alone—but never showed by word or movement of countenance, that he even knew of the destruction about him, or feared its consequences. At last, at seven o'clock, the fire of the French began to slacken and he ordered a charge to be made along the whole line—a desperate measure, which, perhaps, was never before ventured under such circumstances—but when he saw the miraculous alacrity with which his men advanced, then, for the first time, laying his hand with a concussive movement on his saddle-bow, he said, without the least apparent emotion "That will do."—In ten minutes, the French were not to be seen. And yet this great man's failing is his impetuosity and excessive feelings which twice in India and once in Spain had well nigh ruined him."

The residence of the Duke of Wellington is at length fixed in Cheshire. Purchase of land is said to have been agreed upon, consisting of about 12,000 acres. The mansion is to be as splendid as 200,000 pounds can make it.

A friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada.

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the prosperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship; and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that, no education can be considered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 10 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

THE Subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the Public that he has recently brought with him from Montreal a choice assortment of the best superfine and second Cloth &c. with suitable trimmings, and a variety of other seasonable goods——The whole being selected by himself and purchased for Cash, enable him to warrant their quality genuine and to sell at reduced prices—amongst his cloths are the following approved and fashionable colours.

York, July 8th, 1815.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

400 Dollars Reward.

WHEREAS on the Night of the 27th of May last, some evil and malicious Person or Persons, did set fire to the subscriber's Barn and burnt it to ashes; the above reward of Four Hundred Dollars, will be given to any one, who will give information, that shall lead to a discovery, so that the Villian or Villians, that did the Crime may be convicted, and brought to Justice,

MARSHAL BLUCHER.

London, July 18.

In the many letters which Prince Blucher has written to his friends in this favourite country after his native one, he does not cease to impart to them his firm persuasion of the success of the good cause, and of his being in a short time at the gates of Paris.

"It is to be lamented," are his words in a letter from Namur, June, 5, "that we are obliged to remain here without employment, and yet completely well prepared to meet the enemy; the opposition in the Vendee is very strong, but if we do not assist those good people it will soon be crushed; in general the sound part of the nation is against the tyrant, but it is the army accustomed to pillage and the rabble, by which he keeps the people in awe; the contest, once begun, will be short, it will cost much men, but Bonaparte's opposition cannot be of long duration, if the Sovereigns remain united. Assure all England, that I am again on my way to Paris, and this I hope is also the wish of my neighbour Wellington, whom I visited a few days ago.

"But I need the blessings of the fair sex in England, which I sincerely request. The business once over, I shall come to England, and I shall testify to them in the most expressive manner the gratitude which animates me."

ST. HELENA—an island in the Atlantic Ocean, 20 miles in circumference, belonging to the English East India Company. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana's Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. It is in general rocky and mountainous, but far from being barren, the interior valties and even mountains being pleasant and fertile. Mr. Forster tells us, that "having travelled about half a mile from the town into the country, he was transported with one of the finest prospects he had ever seen, consisting of several little hills, covered with rich verdure, and interspersed with fertile valties, which contained gardens, orchards and various plantations; that many pastures surrounded by inclosures of stone, were stored with a small but fine breed of cattle, and with English sheep; that every valley was watered by a little rivulet; that the mountains in the centre of the island were with woods; that the soil which covered the rocks and mountains, was in general a rich mould, from six to ten inches deep, clothed with a variety of plants and shrubs, among which was a tree, which the inhabitants call a cabbage tree, though only used for fuel, gum-trees, and red wood; that in the Governor's garden, about three miles from the town, he saw several plants of Europe, Africa, and America, and particularly a profusion of roses and lilies, interspersed with myrtle and laurel; that several walks of peach trees were loaded with fruit, which had a peculiar rich flavour, different from that of our peaches; but that the other European fruit-trees throve but indifferently, and never bore fruit; that vines had been planted several times, but had not succeeded, on account of the climate; that cabbages and other greens thrive extremly well, but are devoured by caterpillars; that barley, and other kinds of corn, are generally devoured by rats, which are immensely numerous; that the ground, for that reason, was laid out chiefly in pastures, the verdure of which was surprising; that the whole island could support 3000 head of their small cattle; that the beef is juicy, delicious, and very fat; that the island besides cattle, abounds with goats, rabbits, a small breed of horses, ringpheasants, red-legged partridges, rice-birds, pigeons, &c. of some of which the breed is indigenous, but others have been brought from Africa, Europe, or the East Indies; that the number of inhabitants on the island does not exceed 2000, including near 500 soldiers and 600 slaves, who are supplied with all sorts of manufactures and other necessaries by the company's ships, in return for refreshments; and that many of the slaves were employed in catching fish, which are very plentiful." It lies between the continents of Africa and and South America, about 1200 miles W. of the former, and 1800 E. of the latter. Lon. 5 49 W, lat. 15 55.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman, dated Liverpool July 10, to his correspondent.

DEAR SIR.—Mr. Bainbridge and myself saw Mr Robinson at the board of Trade on Saturday, and the result of our interview was very satisfactory.

The intercourse between the United States and the King's Colonies is to be carried on under the 28th of the King, in British built vessels and none other.

The Americans are excluded from the Fisheries, and not to be allowed to come into our harbors as formerly, they are to possess in this respect, no other right than the subjects of any other nation, which by the Law of Nations is limitted to three leagues from the coast.

The Naval Timber Bill is passed for five years; the points about Hardwood &c. will be considered in the course of the summer.

I trust this communication will be satisfactory to you; if the Ship Owners are firm there will not be any alteration next Session in the duties on Foreign Timber.

FRANCE.

ADDRESS TO THE KING BY THE ARMY OF THE LOIRE.

SIRE—The army, unanimous in its views and affections, in order to be brought to a free and simple submission to your Majesty's Government, has no need either or receiving any private impulse, or of altering its spirit or sentiments; it is enough for it to consult the sentiments that have animated it under all circumstances, and the spirit which guided it during the last twenty five years of political storms. Its opinions, its acts, the conduct of each of its members, always had for their actuating cause that love of country, ardent, deep, exclusive, capable of every effort, of every sacrifice, respectable even in its errors and wanderings, which at all times commanded the esteem af Europe, and which secures to us that of posterity. The generals, the officers and the soldiers, who now surround their colours, and who are attached to them with the greatest constancy and love, even when they are most unfortunate, are not men who can be accused of regretting private advantages To other thoughts, therefore, to motives more dignified and noble must be ascribed the silence which the army has hitherto kept. From the lowest soldier to the officer of highest rank, the French army numbers in its ranks only citizens, sons, fathers of citizens, it is intimately connected with the nation; it cannot separate its cause from that of the French people; it adopts with them, it adopts sincerely the government of your Majesty; it will cause the happiness of France by generous and complete oblivion of all that has pass, by effacing every trace of dissention, by respecting the rights of all. Convinced of this truth full of respect and confidence in the sentiments expressed by your Majesty, the army swears to you, with entire submission, a fidelity, proof against all trials; it will shed its blood in fulfilment of the oaths which we this day pronounces to defend the King and France.

Head quarters, near Orleans, July 14, 1815.

(A true Copy) The Prince of Eckmuhl,
Marshal of France, commanding the Armies of the Loire and the Pyrenees.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser of Monday.

An obliging friend at Newburyport has sent us two papers, dated August 16 and 19, called the Commercial Gazette of Point Petre, which appears to be a continuation of the late Gazette Imperiale — They contain several proclamations, decrees, and public notices. In the proclamations of Sir James Leith, he styles himself Governor of Guadaloupe, and administers the government in the name of his Britannic Majesty.

An obliging friend has furnished us with the Martinique Gazette of Aug 15, received by the Tamahaamah, by way of Bevereux from which we have translated the account of the surrender of the command of Sir James Leith, on the 10th ult. It seems the conquest was made with very little blood-shed.

On the morning of the 10th, Sir James Leith, had his H. Q. at the house of Baizet, half a league from the town of Baffaterre. The tri-coloured flag yet floated over fort Charles, but at 3 o'clock it was pulled down and replaced by the British flag.

At 5 o'clock his Excellency the general in chief made his entry into the town and took up his quarters at the hotel of the government, precisely 48 hours from the time of his landing at Grand Cove.

There are few examples of so grand a result obtained in so short a time with so little loss The British army had but about 35 men killed or wounded. The rebels lost one hundred.

DREADFUL FIRE AT PORT ROYAL.

From the Kingston Royal Gazette of July 15, received at the office of the City Gazette, by the British ship Sisters, from Jamaica.

We have this day the melancholy and distressing task of recording the effects of a fatal & destructive Fire, which broke out in the town of Port Royal about half past 1 o' clock on Thursday afternoon It began in negro yard in Cannon-street, and was occasioned by a negro woman's making a fire in an improper place. It quickly communicated to the adjoining buildings, and among the first, to Miss Finnan's fine to ging house; from thence it spread its ravages to the adjoining and opposite houses and, from the very strong breeze that prevailed, burning shingles, &c were soon wafted to others, which, being remarkably dry, quickly burnt out in a blaze, so that by two o'clock three or four parts of the town were burning in a most horrid manner. The consternation that now prevailed in the town, as we are informed, surpasses description; every minute fresh flames were issuing forth: the principal street, in which Court-house, Tarron's Tavern Mr. Jackson's stores, are situated, became a volume of fire and smoke, and from thence it spread to the whole of the streets and lanes towards the harbor, the wharves the Naval Hospital, Mr. R. M'Kowan's house and wharf, and all adjoing, to within a few houses of the Officer's quarters on the Parade; The fire having communicated to Mrs. Wittake's house, towards the west corner of the Parade, it was suggested to pull down the houses opposite, so as to open a passage between those on fire to those which it had not yet reached, which, being effected by very great exertions, was the means of preventing the flames from continuing their fatal effects along the row of houses on the Parade leading to the Artillery Hospital, which were thus fortunately preserved from the dreadful element.

The Dock Yard has been miraculously saved: nothing but the extraordinary exertions and skill displayed on the unhappy occasion could have secured it; as it is, some buildings near the wall close to Mr. Jackson's stores have been demolished, partly by the fire, and partly by pulling them down, to prevent the flames from communicating to those of more value, situated further in the yard. To attempt to estimate the loss sustained by any particularize individuals who have suffered on this melancholy occasion would be absurd. Suffice it to say, that of all classes, some have lost much and some their little all! The fire was not completely got under until yesterday morning, and of an ill fated Port Royal all that now remains, besides the Dock Yard is Fort Charles, the Artillery Barracks and Hospital, the Church, the street in which Mr. Peter Duffus's house is situated, the street at the back of it, in which Mr. Henry Beer's liquor store is, and also from about 14 to 16 houses, and running each way to about six or seven houses.

New-York, September 18.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

It is known to those who are concerned in the W India trade, that two or more of the Governors of those Island on their own responsibility permitted the entry of American vessels with produce, after the expiration in March last, of the order in Council permitting their entry. The following is a copy of reply of the British Minister to the letter of the Governor of the Island of Tobago on this subject.

Downing Street. May 30. 1815.

SIR.—I have received your dispatch of the 30th March, and am very sorry to be under the necessity of conveying to you the decided disapprobation of his Majesty's Government, of your having admitted any American vessels to entry, after the expiration of the order in Concil. by which such admission was authorized for a limited time.

The conduct which you have adopted in this inftance, is both contrary to law and the general interest of his Majesty's Colonies, and I am therefore to signify to you the express command of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, that you should in no instance take it upon yourself to authorise the admission into the ports of Tobago of vessels and cargoes, which are excluded by the general law of the empire.

Marshal Ney has been arrested and conducted to Aurillac.

Marshall Brune, after having quitted Toulon, with passports from Mr. de Revierre, has been affailed by the people at Avignon: He allighted from his carriage, and took refuge in one of the hotels in the city. The prefect had advised him to prosecute his journey without delay. When he heard that his life was in danger by the populace, he went to rescue him at the peril of his life; and at the moment the Marshal thinking that his door would be forced, shot him ...

FROM FRANCE.

We have received by the brig Sampson, Capt. Sampson arrived here yesterday from Bourdeaux, the Journal de Paris of Aug. 1 and 2, the only papers brought by the vessel. Their contents are of little importance. The following articles are all that we have deemed worth the trouble of translation.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—An order of the day for July 31, issued by Count Duffaite, declares that in conformity to a letter from the Barron de Muffling the allied soldiers, found strolling through the streets in the night, will be arrested by the patroles of the national guard.

Russian troops arrived yesterday in the vicinity of Paris. Seven hundred soldiers of that nation are quartered at La Vilette.

A few days after the entrance of the allies into Paris some turbulent fellows of the lower class of the people, who are in the habit of assembling on the place du Chateret, &c. insulted and provoked at 10 o'clock in the morning, the Prussian soldiers, who were going to the hotel de Ville at 2 o'clock in the afternoon cannon were placed on the Exchange bridge, the New bridge, of Notre-dame, &c. Yesterday morning, no doubt for the same reasons, pieces of artillery were placed at the south extremity of the Notre dame bridge and that of the bridge of the king's garden; it is absolutely indispensable to seize and punish the agitators and disturbers of the public tranquility, who make such measures necessary.

A news paper asserts, that M. Boulay de la Meurthe has been arrested, and conducted to one of the prisons in Paris.

It is asserted that the archudess Leopoldine, whose marriage with one of the French royal Family continues to be announced, will accompany the Empress of Austria to Paris.

His majesty has, it is said, given his approbation to the plan, that has been presented to him for this purpose. It is believed that according to this plan, all officers more than 50 years of age will obtain an honorable retreat.

Two Aids of Labadoyere, and a Sec. of Murat were arrested to day.

It is intimated several assassinations have taken place at Lyons.

Prosecutions are ordered against the persons who insulted Lt. Gen. Lagrange when he came to present himself to the King.

30.000 Russians are coming to Paris.

friendly hint to Parents & Guardians of Youth in Canada

The part which you are called upon to act, is very important. You are the guardians of the Church and State—On your conduct depends in a great degree the prosperity of the community, & the temporal and spiritual happiness of them committed to your care

Is not this consideration sufficient to excite all persons of every rank and station in life, to exert themselves to the extent of their power "to train up the rising generation in the way they should go"

You will never regret that you have expended a small part of your property in building school-houses and places of worship; and providing competent and wholesome Instructors for your offspring wards—But if you neglect this, you will have reason to repent of it, not only in this life, but in the next.

The best portion of earthly goods you can give your children, is a good education: and it must be remembered that, no education can be considered a good one unless it embraces morality and religion.

The time of a child from 5 to 10 years of age, is worth very little for labour, but it is as valuable for the purpose of acquiring elementary instruction, as at any future period.

THE Subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the Public that he has recently brought with him from Montreal a choice assortment of the best superfine and second Cloth &c with suitable trimmings, and a variety of other seasonable goods——The whole being selected by himself and purchased for Cash, enable him to warrant their quality genuine and to sell at reduced prices—amongst his cloths are the following approved and fashionable colours,

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

Latest Intelligence.

LONDON, Aug. 21.

We guarantee the authenticity of the following, extracted from the conversation which Lord Littleton and Mr Lowther have had with Bonaparte, on board the Northumberland.

When remonstrating against his detention, he said, "you do not know my character; you ought to have placed confidence in my word of honor."

One of the gentlemen replied, "permit me to say to you, that since the invasion of Spain there is not an individual in England who would not distrust you and your most solemn engagements."

"I was (replied Bonaparte) invited into Spain by its Sovereign."

Bon.—I had a great political system. It was necessary to establish a counterpoise to your maratime power; and besides I only did what the Bourbons had before done.

You must however confess, M. General, that France, under your sceptre, was much more to be feared than France, as it was during the last years of the reign of Louis XIV, aggrandized as it was then.

Bon.—England, on its side, was become much more powerful.

He spoke afterwards of our colonies and acquisitions in India.

Bon.—I would have regenerated Spain and done many of those things, which the cortes have since attempted to do. After a pause he said, "well, I have then deceived myself in counting upon your generosity; replace me or send me back to the position from which you took me." When speaking of the invasion of France, "I was" said he, "a sovereign at that time: I had the right to make war." He said in detaining him, as we had done, we acted like a petty aristocratical power, and not like a great state or a great people.

He said of Mr. Fox, "I knew him, I saw him at the Thuilleries, he had no prejudices"

Mr. Fox, M. General, was a zealous citizen of his own country, and moreover, a citizen of the world.

He sincerely wished for peace, replied Bonaparte, and I wished for it likewise; his death prevented a peace from being made. The other negociators were not sincere.

Bonaparte added again, "I do not say that during 20 years of war I did not conspire the ruin of England"—then recollecting himself, as though he had inadvertantly said more than prudence justified, added, "I mean its humiliation; I wished to compel you to be just towards me."

He appeared neither agitated nor depressed. His expressions, sometimes energetic, were always uttered with calmness, and he gesticulated much less than the Frenchmen or Italians are accustomed to do.—

BONAPATE'S PROTEST.

Note by the French Editor.

[The Courier refutes in an energetic and victorious manner the principal statements in this protest. How dares Bonaparte, placed out of the laws of nations, by the Congress of Vienna, to complain of an act done in the mitigation of this decree? How can he state that he surrendered himself to the English under the persuasion that they would suffer him to dwell in Great Britain, when the Captain of the English vessel refused to receive him otherwise than unconditionally. Was he not convinced that if he remained at Rochefort, a few days longer it would not have been possible for him to escape? The whole is then false, absurd, perfidious in this last act of his political cunning.]

With a view to assure the possession of Canada, in case of a rupture with the U. States, the government has given orders to build upon the lakes new ships of war and gun vessels, proper for the navigation of those waters. Every thing is preparing in England for the arming and equipping of these vessels.

LONDON, Aug. 24.

Four vessels, three under Portuguese, and one under Spanish colours, have been captured on the coast of Africa, by H. B. M. sloop Brisk; they were trading in the horrid slave trade, and had about seven hundred wretched creatures on board.

It is generally believed in the Netherlands that the first and second line of French fortresses will be occupied by the allied troops, and we trust, never be re-occupied by the French.

By the last accounts from Cairo, 1,500 persons died daily of the plague.

Soult has been permitted to retire under surveillance to his country seat.

Lavallure, who married the only daughter of Francois de Beaubarnois, the brother-in-law of Josephine, is the next person to be tried.

The British Parliament is to meet 2d Nov. next.

Mrs. Patterson formerly Madame Jerome Bonaparte, was at Cheltenham somewhat indisposed.

The London papers say the Algerines agree to pay the Americans 10,000 dollars for some specific damages suffered, and that the Algerines had declared war against the Spaniards.

According to some reports Murat and Thionville had been apprehended, and forwarded to Paris; and according to others Murat had been set at liberty, or had not been taken at all.

The Duke of Wellington had been honored by the King of Saxony and the Duke of Baden, with their highest honours—and the Prince Regent of England had conferred the order of the Bath upon the Princes Blucher, Wrede, and Schwartzenburg, and Count Wittgenstein, Barclay de Tolly.

Bonaparte has been permitted to carry with him every shilling of money and effects he brought from France. The fact exposes the falsehood of almost innumerable assertions on the subject. He embarked, too, with cheerfulness and appears too tenacious of life to make away with himself.

Translated for the Commercial Advertiser, New York.

PARIS, Aug. 20—Yesterday at 4 o'clock, at the moment the king was about mounting his carriage, madame Labedoyere threw herself at the feet of his majesty to solicit pardon for her husband. The king told her that if M. Labedoyere had only offended him, his pardon would be granted to him; but that all France demanded the punishment of the man who had drawn down upon her the flames of war. His majesty was very much moved, and it was visible how much he suffered in being obliged to resist the emotions of his heart. The king, who knows how to connect goodness to justice, has designed to promise to madame Labedoyere his protection for herself and her child.

At 6 o'clock, when the king returned from his excursion, the mother of M Labedoyere was in the court of the Chateau to make a new attempt upon his majesty. Perceiving that measures were taken to prevent her from entering into the vestibule, and from renewing a scene as painful as useless, she retired. Mad. Labedoyere, the mother was in deep mourning.

Col. Labedoyere was condemned yesterday at 6 o'clock in the evening.

Yesterday evening col. Labedoyere arrived on the spot designed for his execution, where he fell on his knees and received the blessings of the confessor who accompanied him; after which he rose, and without waiting for the bandage being placed over his eyes, bared his bosom to the veterans who were appointed to shoot him; and cried out, "Mind do not miss me." In a moment after he was no more.

PARIS, AUG. 4—The trial of the Bonapartean officer who commanded in Cepde, for the murder of the British General Gordon, who carried a summons for the surrender of the place occasions much excitement. Some palliations of the conduct of the commander having appeared in the Gazette de France, the brother of the General has addressed the following note to the editor :—

"Paris, Aug. 1815.

"Sir—The military assassination committed on the person of Adjutant General Gordon, at Conde, will form the subject of a trial, which will exhibit in a clear light the true circumstances which preceded and accompanied that crime. It is in vain that his assassins endeavor to avert public indignation by their misrepresentations. No imprudence was committed by their victim. If he was not accompanied by a trumpeter, it will appear on the trial, that he neither could nor ought to have had one at that moment. Besides such a circumstance could so farthest have only excused their firing upon and killing Mr. Gordon, before he entered the town; but having reached the presence of the military chiefs, who dared to condemn him to death who brought to them, in the king's name the pardon of their treason, the absence of a trumpeter was a mere defect of from which had received its explanation.

"No, it was a flag of truce sent in the name of the king, to summon Conde to surrender; it was an officer invested with the external signs of his rank, and the bearer of papers authorising his mission, that these comrades massacred. It was a military Commission that condemned him to be shot.

"He whom death has thus deprived of the best of brothers, while he fulfils his eyes with confidence on the throne of a Monarch as just as good, before whose face the most odious of crimes will not remain unpunished.

(Signed) "JAMES GORDON."

SUMMARY.

The 6th Prussian corps was on its march to the interior of France.

It appears that Nantz is to be garrisoned with 6000 Prussian troops. Prussian troops were at Caen.

Austrian troops continued to advance towards France, even from Hungary and from Italy.

A Danish army is marching to the French frontier.

Additional British troops continue to enter France.

We do not perceive any account of the advance of Russian reinforcements.

Two hundred thousand barrels bread, one hundred thousand barrels meat, one hundred thousand litres brandy, are daily issued to the allied troops of and about Paris.

15,000 muskets and 37 cannon have been delivered from the French depot at Vicennes to the English and Prussians. 10,000 were to have been delivered to the Russians; and they went for them; but some difficulty prevented the delivery.

The London Morning Chronicle of Aug. 19, says the letter recently published as from Louis 18th, is proved to be genuine by a letter from the duke of Berri. But this we belive is matter of inference from the sentiments of the duke, rather than his assertion. The duke complains of prussia, but compliment the Russians and English, and particularly the latter. He says the Bourbons will never consent to the degradation of France. From this the Morning Chronicle infers, that there is some plan for the dismemberment of France.

The Russian governor of Lorraine, has displaced the Russian intendant in the department of the Meuse, and restored the authority to the French prefect.

The disbanding of the old French army and forming a new one, is, in a great many cases, a mere transfer of the same men from one army to another. A part of the old army still remains in some force.

Marseilles is considered one of the most loyal cities of France. The attachment to the Bourbons and aversion to the Bonapartean's is of the most decisive character. Their friendship is extended liberally to the friends of Louis. A large British squadron has been welcomed into Marseilles harbor, and a public dinner has been given to the officers—and the Russian, English and French colours entwined at the theatre.

A great number of loyal addresses come from all part of France to the king. Several of them invite the punishment of the distinguished and active Bonapartists.

At the siege of Mezieres, 100 houses were burnt and 60 persons killed.

Marshal law exised at Toulon. At Marseilles there was a rumour that the Austrians contemplated occupying Toulon.

The French generals Vandamme and Soult continue at the residence assigned by the police. Drouet was in the Abbaye Ney in the Conciergerie. Debelle in some other place of confinement. The three last it is said are to be tried.

Count Thibodeau has been arrested in France.

Majors Carre and Tournier, have been arrested at Bourdeaux.

It is said Jerome Bonaparte has escaped from France to the court of his father-in-law, where, it is added, he is permitted to reside with his second wife.

Translated for the Columbian.

Proclamation of the General in Chief of the Spanish army to the Frenchmen of the bordering districts.

The troops of the king my master enter the French territory, not to commit hostilities, but to suppress the ferocity of a faction who are not satisfied with the calamities they have occasioned, by which they have compromitted the throne of his most Catholic Majesty and the tranquility of his subjects. In the declaration of the 2d of May it is said that the Spanish army should not wage war against France, but the faction which defolates it; that it avows no other conquest than the repose of France herself, in restoring her king called to the throne by the fundamental laws of the state whose prostration has plunged the whole kingdom in sadness and bereavement.

The chief of the disturbers of the public quiet is no longer at their head, but his spirit still animates his followers.

King Louis the Eighteenth is on his throne but his virtues have not yet completed the conquest of minds bewildered by the genious of evil. All the declaration of the king my master are that the troops which enter the domains of his Catholic majesty, must neither ravage or dismember the smallest part of them but protect and preserve them faithfully as a sacred trust.

Genguire, the—August, 1815.

FOREIGN ARTICLE.

The following is an extract of a letter from the Prussian General Ribbenthrop, to the Prefect of Paris, respecting the Prussian requisitions.

"This measure has been dictated to me by the Commander in Chief. You and your fellow citizens cannot tax it with injustice, when I remind you of the overtures which I have several times made you respecting the demands of Prince Blucher.

"You know that in 1806, 7 & 8, Prussia, under the administration of M. Daru, not only lost its prosperity, but was sunked by enormous masses of requisitions and extortions to which it was subjected. You know what was done in 1809 10 & 11, to exhaust the kingdom; nor can I dissemble that in 1812, though then in alliance with France, several of our provinces suffered treatment of which the most cruel enemy would hardly have been guilty.

"It was in 1813 that we shook of the yoke of tyranny; the victorious arms of the allies delivered France from a dynasty under which nine fine country had groaned for so many years.

The inconceivable efforts which Prussia made to support this great contest, after six years of oppression, signalized by all kinds of extortion and arbitrary treatment, put in out of our power to make a suitable provision for the equipment, the pay and other wants for the armies again called forth to combat Buonaparte and his adherents.

"You pretend that the contribution of 100 millions of francs exceeds the ability of your city. Ask Count Daru what Berlin, a city of quarter of the size of yours, was obliged to furnish, and you will be convinced it greatly exceeds the demand of Prince Blucher upon the capital of France.

If we treated your provinces as you did ours from 1806 to 1812, the contributions to be imposed, according to that standard might exceed your ability.

"Last year the conquest of Paris ended the war. In this campaign, the same conquest has been the object of our labours, to attain it, we have been forced to make promises to the troops—not such promises as the French leader made to his army before the defeats on the Katzbach, near the Calm, and Downewitz, which hindered him from performing them, but such as generous conquerors make to modest soldiers, whose we fare they value, and whose courage they know how to appreciate. It is by the contribution that the promises must be fulfilled.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded, that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor, Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

A ministerial paper says—"The following arrangements respecting Bonaparte are handed about in the upper circles in M. S. but upon what authority we know not.—He is to have one servant and his own cook. His letters are to be opened by the Governor. He is not to be landed till a house is fully prepared for his reception. He is to be permitted to exercise himself in any field sport of which the island will admit, but is constantly to be attended by an officer and two orderley men, who are to shoot him if he attempts to escape, and is beyond the reach of their hands. He is only to be allowed such a sum of money as he may be in want of for common occasions; and, finally the French government is to be wholly at the expence of supporting him."

London, Aug 21.—Papers from Hamburgh, Brussels and Frankfort, are arrived to a late date.

Prussia has ordered a new levy of 30,000 men, beyond the 60,000 lately raised. The second class of the landwehr is also to be embodied.

The Nuremberg Gazette contains the following article, dated Vienna. August 5:—"There seems now no doubt, that some provinces will be separated from France and given to other matters. A plan is said to have been formed which is ascribed to the Prussian cabinet, according to which, all French Flanders and Brabant, with some districts to complete the frontier, would be given to the king of the Netherlands, who on the other hand would cede some provinces, on the east of the kingdom, to Prussia. Lorraine and Alsace are assigned by the [illegible] to Austria, and a part of the latter province to Switzerland. An accession of territory is proposed also for the king of Sardinia."

We trust the above statement in the Nuremberg Gazette will prove to be correct. This is the only sound, wise, and just policy.

And do not let it be forgotten in the treaty, that the pictures and statues be given up by France—given up before the armies quit France. The French say they are theirs, not by robbery but by the right of conquest. Be it so—By the same right of conquest then they are ours: What can be clearer than this? And though we do not mean to say that we should keep them from those from whom they were taken, yet those powers might be willing to give up to us part of what belongs to them for a valuable consideration.—Would any man say that 2 or 300,000l. would be foolishly laid out for the purpose that would enable us to make a national gallery in London, upon which every Briton might look with unalloyed pride and pleasure. It would be the fruit not of robbery but glory—not of victories that have served to enslave mankind, but of victories that have restored the universe to peace, prosperity and independence.

FOREIGN OFFICE, Aug. 26.

Lord Bathurst, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, has this day notified, by command of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, to the Ministers of friendly powers resident at this court that in consequence of events which have happened in Europe, it has been deemed expedient and determined, in conjunction with the allied sovereigns, that the island of St. Helena shall be the place allotted for the future residence of General Napoleon Bonaparte, under such regulations as may be necessary for all perfect security of his person; and for that purpose it has been resolved, that all foreign ships and vessels shall be excluded from all communication with, or approach to that Island, so long as the said Island shall continue to be the PARIS, AUG 25.—Madam Ney presented herself two days ago at the house of the duke of Roban The answer of a great monarch to her application for his intercession in behalf of her husband was unfavorable.—Gazette de France.

The Electoral College of the department of the Seine was admitted yesterday to an audience of the king. All the members of the college had assembled in the gallery of Diana. Monsieur joined them after the mass, and conversed with the greatest affability, being informed by the grand master of the ceremonies that the king expected the electoral college in the hall of the throne. Monsieur honored the members by proceeding at their head to present them to his majesty. Monsieur approached the king, and addressed his majesty in these terms.

"SIRE—Conformably to the permission which your majesty has had the kindness to grant, the electoral college of the department of the Seine comes to deposit at the foot of the throne, the homage of its profound respect and its unalterable fidelity. A witness of the sentiments which animate the members of the electoral college, it is equally agreeable and flattering to me to be at this moment their organ, and to attest to your majesty that their devotion to your sacred person, and their obedience to the laws of the realm, will have no bounds but those of their existence. The assemblage of the members which your majesty is about to convoke, will be animated with the same sentiments and the more critical and awful the circumstances of the times, the more attentively Europe will admire and respect the generous efforts of a great nation inspired by its love for its sovereign, and by its gratitude for the laws & institutions, by the charter, the happy fruit of your majesty's wisdom and of your personal goodness."

The king answered—

"The choice that I made of you, my brother, to preside over the electoral college of the department of the Seine, was the greatest proof that I could give you of my love. I am repaid for it by the love shewn to you personally by the members of the college. I am very sensible to the sentiments of fidelity which you express to me in their name. The elections which they have made are the guarantees of those sentiments, as well as of the public happiness. I have the most lively satisfaction in expressing my approbation of them."

Jerome Bonaparte passed through Carlsruhe on the 22d escorted by a Wirtemberg Officer.

The city of Arras has not yet opened its gates to the allies. Foot passengers only are allowed to enter by a wicket.

It is reported at Vesoul that different Austrian corps had received orders to prepare for their departure to Italy.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—We are informed that Turkey is arming with the greatest activity, and that formidable armies are already put in motion. People ascribe to this circumstance the retrograde movement of the Russian Forces.

MILAN, Aug. 15.—Letters from Rome mention that Gaeta has surrendered.

the European confederation contains the following scheme of a new kingdom of the Rhine. It would be composed of Lorraine, Alsace, Franche Compte, and the countries on the left bank of the Rhine which still from apartments of the Upper and Lower Rhine, of La Meurthe, La Moselle, La Meuse, Les Vosges, Haute Saone, Doubs, Mount Jura, and Mount Tonnerre.

These ten departments are so situated as to form a fine and powerful kingdom with a population of three millions and a half of inhabitants which would render its future sovereigns as strong as the king of Bavaria.

BRUSSELS, Aug 28—Accounts from Vienna of the 18th contains the following:

"The marriage of his imperial highness the arch duke Charles will not be celebrated till after the return of the court from Milan, the abode of this prince at Mentz seems to have, independently of his military command, a very important political object. It was presumed that Lorraine will return under the dominion of Austria; it was the cradle of the Imperial house, and might form a third appendage under the arch duke Charles.

LONDON, Aug. 31.

We have much greater dependence on the following letter than on the French papers. The causes which have brought Lord Stewart and the Duke of Bourbon to this country will be found very different from pacific, and entirely accordant with the intimations contianed in the two last publications of the Sun:—

DOVER, August 30.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Bourbon, and his Aid-de-Camp, have just landed from the Emilie, from Boulogne: he set off for London immediately. Lord Stewart embarked yesterday for Calais; it is generally thought that there is something very important going forward by such distinguished persons hasting to and fro. All is quiet in Paris; but by the countenance of the French that they are dissatisfied. Great part of our troops are encamped in the Bois de Bologne, and the Cossacks in the Champs Elysee, their horses barked most of the trees, and by this time next year it is thought scarcely one will be left alive. Several more of the pictures are packed up ready to send off to Prussia.

LONDON, Aug. 26.

The number of American Mercantile agents lately arrived at Liverpool from the United Sates, exceeds all precedent. Fifteen stage-coaches now run daily from that port to Manchester, and in general return heavily laden with cotton goods of every description.

An absurd report prevailed on Friday that Bonaparte, on his passage to St. Helena, and committed suicide, and that his body had been landed at Torbay.

We understand that Sir J. Yeo proceeds in the Inconstant, to command, with a broad pendant, on the coast of Africa. Sir R. Hall, lately returned from Canada, proceeds again immediately to that country, to supersede Commodore Owen in the command on the waters of Canada, where Government intends keeping up a respectable establishment in future.

LONDON, August 29.

We received this morning a letter from our correspondent at Paris, in which it will be seen that he confirms the account of the attempt upon the Duke and Dutchess of Angouleme at Poictiers. The Duke behaved with great decision. He cut down two of the rioters, who attempted to remove the white flag from the window of the hotel.

LONDON, Sept. 2.

Our private letters from France very positive assert that the long pending treaty has been finally concluded. Unless some strong impression to that effect had prevailed among the maimed men in France, we know not well how to account for the fact, that while the most unpleasant rumours of the state of the interior continue to prevail the funds have experienced a marked ameliora tion. In the course of the 28th ult they were as 62 1-4. It was belived that the Duke of Bourbon had been the bearer of a copy of treaty to England; and that it waited only the ratification of the Prince Regent to be promulgated. It is now asserted that the report ascribed to Fouche was the workmanship of one of his hackney scribes named Jeni, and was merely a jacobinical manœuvre to feel the pulse of the people. It appears to have failed. —The nation in general, though smarting under the hardships universally incident to invasion, appear by no means inclined to augment their sufferings by a rash and foolish resistance to the large armies of the Allies. Hence it is predicted that Fouche's power draws to a close; and even the journals subjected by the Royal Ordinance to his controul begin to show symptoms of a disposition to set him at defiance.

A letter from Havre, dated Tuesday, states the arrival of a British Frigate, with Savary and Lallemand on board. She had the white and British flags flying, and was received with a salute from the fortress; but they were not permitted to land until instructions had been received from Paris.

Old Albain has carried the Laurel away.

WRITTEN AFTER THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO,

BY J. DUNLOP, ESQ.

The morning shone bright on the streams of the Sambre,
Smooth flowing the current, and limpid the wave,
But night with a torrent, as dark as December,
All delug'd its banks with the blood of the brave.

Rest, rest to the spirits of Warriors departed,
The sport of Ambition, the victims of fame,
And peace to the friends they have left broken hearted
Deploring the fate that ennobles their name.

For though the fond heart may exult in their glory,
The tears of affection must flow for their fall,
And the brave who survive to recount their sad story
Shall envy the Honors that cover their pall.

Then "raise the Lament" for the dread desolation,
The blood streaming havock of WATERLOO's day,
But pride may indulge in this high exultation,
Old Albain has carried the Laurel away.

Scarborough, Novr. 10th 1815.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of Sunday and Day Schools in this country. Now the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

OFFICIAL BULLETIN.

British Head Quarters, Kandy, March 2.

This day a solemn conference was held in the audience hall of the Palace of Kandy, between his Excellency the Governor and commander of the forces on behalf of his majesty and his R. Highness the Prince Regent, on the one part, and the Amkars, Dessaves, and other principal chiefs of the Kandian provinces on the other part, on behalf of the people, and in presence of the Mohottaes, Corals, Vidaans, and other subordinate headmen from the different provinces, and a great concourse of inhabitants. A public instrument of treaty, prepared in conformity to conditions previously agreed upon, for establishing his majesty's government in the Kandian provinces, was produced and publicly read in English and Cingalese, and unanimously assented to.

The British flag was then for the first time hoisted, and the establishment of the British dominion in the interior was announced by a royal salute from the cannon of the city.

All the troops present in this garrison were under arms on the occasion of this important event.

Archduchess Maria Louisa.

The Empress returned on the 7th to Baden from her little excursion, and alighted at the hotel inhabited by the Archdutchess Maria Louisa. The next day the Empress and Archdutchess left Baden, and returned to Schoenbrun. The latter has for some weeks been busily employed in studying the English language, in which Mr. Lilly an Englishman, has the honor to be her preceptor. Young Napoleon generally visits his mother twice a week, accompanied by his governor, Count Maurice Von Diedtichstein.

Recruiting continues here without intermission; some thousands of recruits have lately arrived from Lombardy, who are exercised in arms, and then sent to strength their regiments. It is said 80,000 recruits are to be raised in Hungary, and a beginning has been already made in all the counties. His Imperial Higness the Archduke Palatine arrived yesterday: he is going to Schulemberg to celebrate his nuptials with the Princess of Anhalt Bauburg.

Spain.—Preparations are said to be making at several of the Moorish castles in Spain for confining a number of Liberalist, who have just been arrested. The number of persons imprisoned in Spain, on account of their political opinions, is estimated at Fifty-one Thousand.

Paris, August 23.

When Labedoyere was shot, he obtained leave to be without the bandange on his eyes, and to give the word to fire. He said "I cannot fear to die who have seen death in so many shapes! and who have so often given the word to French soldiers to fire, may be permitted to do so this once and for the last time."

He advanced with a firm step to the Veterans who were appointed to shoot him, and when within four or five paces, gave the words—"Ready! Present! Fire!"—They obeyed most steadily, and he fell dead in an instant.

He was 29 years of age, of elegant manners and handsome person, and married two years ago and has a son. He never confessed himself guilty of any wrong, but on the contrary, said he and his enemies put different constructions on the term loyalty, for that he had acted loyally and for the good of France by attaching himself to Napoleon believing that he, and not the Bourbons, could save it.

FRANKFORT, Aug. 20—Preparations are already beginning to be made for the reception of the Diet of the Empire which is to be opened here on the 1st of November next. It is pretended that several modifications of the compact of the Confederation of Germany, which are particularly desired by England, will be proposed to it, and that the articles of the general peace, which will not be concluded till that time, will be communicated to it.

PARIS, Aug. 31.

It is thought that the refusal of Moncey has not been the only refusal of a marshal to sit upon the trial of Ney. He is confined in a very narrow room, and allowed to walk into the court of the Conciergerie only from 6 to 7 in the morning. The dubitation of Moncey was intended to strike terror into the other Marshals. I understand that Marmont, Victor and Augereau, are the only marshals who have consented to be members of the court; and that Massena, and even Oudinot, have excused themselves. The trial, it is now said, is to come on next week.

The number of pictures and pieces of sculpture at the Louvre is every day becoming less; but, like the books of the Sybil, as they diminish in number, they increase in interest, if one may judge from the daily increase of visitors, consisting of artists, amateurs and strangers. About one hundred pictures have been taken, and twenty pieces of sculpture, not including those taken away several weeks since by the Prussians. No attempt has been made by any person to impede the persons employed to remove the pictures and statues; but it was natural to expect some disorder.—The French are stung to the heart by losing these "Fruits des victoires." This is one of the inscriptions of the roof of the gallery.

The formal accession of Denmark to the grand alliance of the 25th of March (which has been delayed by several circumstances, particularly by the non-fulfilment of some points in the treaty of Kiel) has now taken place at Paris.

The ratification of our subsidy treaty with England is arrived here, and bills for a considerable sum given.

LONDON, Sept. 2.

GENERAL ROSS.

Influenced by sentiments of affection, similar to those which unite the members of a family with their parent, the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates, of that distinguished corps the 20th or "Maida." Regiment of Infantry, have joined in a liberal subscription, to testify their feelings of esteem and regret for their late Commanding Officer, Major-General Ross, who had been their Lieut. Colonel. In consequence a monument has been ordered by them to be erected to his memory, in the Church of Ross Trevor, his family residence in the North of Ireland. The mark, executed, and to be seen at the Marble yard of Alderman Darley, in Dublin, is highly creditable to the talents of the Artists employed, and particularly to the statuary Smith.

It consists of a lofty pyramid of dark dove coloured marble, at the base of which appears, in alto relievo, of white marble a greatful figure of Fame, holding an elevated trumpet in her right hand, and in her left a chaplet of laurel, while she leans on a rock which supports a medallion, bearing the bust of the General.

This figure with its accompaniment; stands on a well proportioned Sarcophagus, on the centre of which are carved the armonial bearings of the deceased, and on each side of which project beautiful executed trophies, emblematic of the business and glory of military life. The Sarcophagus rests upon rich pilasters, between which is a tablet, containing the following inscription from the pen, we understand, of Mr. Preston Fitz Gerald, the well known author of "Spain Delivered."

Although the national gratitude has given to General Ross, among other heroes who have died for their country, a monument in St. Paul's, yet an humbler, and dearer tribute was to be paid to his worth by those once happily permitted to approach it: and this purpose has been performed by the officers and privates of the 20th regiment, in a manner that, while it throws a lustre round the dead, reflects back a portion of its splendour, on themselves.

Sacred to the Memory of

MAJOR GENERAL ROBERT ROSS.

Late Lieutenant Colonel of the 20th Regt. of Foot.

This Monument is Erected
By the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of that Corps,
To perpetuate his Worth in the place that gave him Birth, and remain in testimony of their esteem and sorrow
Called early to command,
He exercised it with devotion, for the Honour of the Service and the Glory of his Country.
Partner in the dangers, and associate in the triumph of his illustrious Compatriot, he left his Name united with that of WELLINGTON, on the Plains of the Peninsula, and Gaul, at Vittoria, at Pamplona, at Orthes, those imperishable Memorials of the Cause of Nations and the constancy of Britain!
When called from the conclusion of one war, to effect the objects of another, he passed from the shores of France to those of America, invested with a distinguished Command.
The Choice of his Prince and the confidence of his Country, were amply justified by the Victory of Bladensburg, and the fall of Washington; which wrestling from an enemy of superior, force the Capital of his States, compelled him to witness in the heart of his territory, the humiliation of an arrogant policy, and the just vengeance of a mighty Nation.
Indefatigable in the path of duty, and the pursuit of renown, he advances, to the achievement of other conquests; until, wounded by a rifle ball in the approaches to Baltimore, on the 12th of September 1814.
He fell, alas! too early, although in the maturity of Fame, closing his early course in the 43d year of his age; yet having combined both hemispheres in the scene of his exploits!
In private life, as Husband, Father and Friend, faithful affectionate, generous;
In public, intelligent, active, ardent and undismayed; He furnished at once the purest example of Domestic Merit, and the brightest Model of Military Worth!
An excess of courage, which formed his glorious fault, will augment the splendour of his name;
But has consigned, too soon, to his brethren in Arms, the proud, though mournful office of recording on this Monumental Tablet, the Lustre of his Virtues, and the Magnitude of his Loss.

In opposition to the rumours of the speedy invasion of France by the allied troops, we find that in order to complete the equipping of a new levy with all possible speed, a loan has been levied upon the bankers in the Prussian states, of five millions of six dollars, for which the lenders are to receive bills of exchange payable in three months.

LONDON, Sept. 6.

In the name and on the behalf of His Majesty.

GEORGE, P. R.

Our will and pleasure is, that all French vessels and cargoes that may have been captured or detained by reason of the late declaration of hostilities against France, on any voyage to or from Martinique or Marseilles, and also all vessels and cargoes captured on a voyage from any French port at which the white flag was hoisted at the time when the vessel sailed from her port of lading, shall be released forthwith, on payment of such expences as have been duly incurred in consequence of such capture or detention.

Given at the Palace at Carlton House, this 26 h day of August, 1815, in the fifty-fifth year of our reign.

By command of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, in the name and and on the behalf of his Majesty.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 30.—The Prussians have occupied the citadel of Sedan, the Governor had hoisted the white flag, and has given up the fortress to the Allies by the express order of the King of France. This is the first example of the kind, and this circumstance gives rise to various conjectures.

An article in the Gazette of Dusseldorf, dated the 27th ult. has these words:—"Prussia has openly declared itself on the necessity of separating Lorraine from France.

A total change in the French Ministry is confidently talked of by which the royal faction would force the king to adopt their maxims. The Duc de Richelieu is mentioned as Premier; Pozzo di Borgo, Minister of Police: and M. Chabrol, the Prefect of Lyons as Minister of Finance.

York, Sept. 21st, 1815.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the patent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

It appears by French official papers, that Louis 18th gave orders to his Generals to refiſt the march of the two Spaniſh armies, which had paſſed the Pyrannees at both extremities; and that in conſequence of theſe orders, and the repreſentation of the Duke d'Angouleme they were directed to halt, and wait for new inſtructions from Madrid.

Extract of a letter from an Officer on board his Majeſty's ſhip Warrior, dated, Portsmouth, September 6, 1815.

"The Warrior 74 guns, ſailed from Jamaica in company with the Electra, gun brig, and 99 ſail of merchantmen, under convoy, on the 10th July. On the 9th of Auguſt, at 4 P. M. near the banks of Newfoundland, it began to blow hard from the S. E. with very thick weather: at a quarter paſt 4 ſhipped a heavy ſea, which carried away the lee quarter boat, quarter deck gangway, and forecaſtle bulwark, alſo our boats five in number, that were ſtowed on the booms amidſhip. We then obſerved a ſhip on the lee bow, about one hundred yards from us. At this moment we broke our tiller, and carried away our rudder head, and ſoon after fell on board the George, merchantman, of Liverpool, when we lay ſometime beating each other to pieces. The George's maſts were carried away, and our anchor ſtove in her ſides. In this ſinking ſtate the ſhips company, 16 in number, got on board of us, including two children. She then dropt her ſtern, and in a few minutes ſunk, with the maſter, one man and a child. To get the Warrior before the wind, we cut away our mizzen-maſt, and hove our anchors overboard, but it had not the deſired effect: we then ſtrove to throw overboard part of our guns—but were unable ſo to do, owing to the ſhip being partly on her broadſide, and in ſome degree water-logged—we then cut away our main-maſt, and got a tiller ſhipped in the wardroom, when ſhe righted, which enable us to throw overboard twelve of our main-deck guns. At this time the wind ſhifted to the ſouth-weſt, and we got her before it, but found the lower deck ports under water, and ten feet and a half water in the hold—all hands to the pomps, when we ſoon gained on her. At this time the gale, which had laſted for ſeven hours, began to moderate, and by two o'clock A. M. on the 10th we had nearly freed the whole from water. Our bed-rooms, powder magazines, proviſion-room, and almoſt every other place in the interior of the ſhip got filled with water during the gale, which nearly deſtroyed every thing therein. About forty ſail of the convoy, we underſtand, are diſmaſted, and ſeveral foundered during the gale. We have ſpoken ſhips having on board the crews of five others."—Globe.

FROM THE ST. JAGO GAZETTE.

Laſt Sunday evening a moſt fatal duel took place on the Race-Ground, near this town: the parties were Lt. M'Glashan and Enſign B.---- both of the 101ſt regiment. The former received a mortal wound in the belly, of which he died early the following morning, and Enſign B. was wounded in one of his arms.---Lieut. M'Glashan has left a wife and young family, beſides a numerous circle of relations and friends, to deplore his untimely fate; after an inquest having been held, the body was interred on Monday afternoon with military honors, and a numerous and reſpectable attendance of the inhabitants of this town.

Thus has another victim fallen to the barbarous practice of duelling, and thus has the ſervice been deprived of a very active and meritorious officer, and his family of the protection and comfort of a moſt affectionate and tender husband and parent. We did hope that the late General Orders of the Commander in Chief would have operated as almoſt a death blow to duelling in the army, but its frequency of late has proved how inſufficient any ſuch orders are unleſs moſt rigidly enforced. Immediately after the inqueſt, the Coroner iſſued his warrant againſt Enſign B. and the ſeconds, who, we, underſtand are all in cuſtody, and the matter of courſe, is in a train of legal inveſtigation.

York, Sept. 21st, 1815.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor; Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of Seminaries and Bible Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

Lateſt Intelligence.

From the Philadelphia Daily Advertiſer of Tueſday.

Extract of a letter received per the Brig Maryland, dated

"MADEIRA, 14th Sept. 1815.

About 10 o'clock the Admiral's Secretary, Mr. Glover, and ſeveral officers from the Northumberland, came on ſhore, with letters and orders for wine to Meſſrs. M. Y. W. & Co. at whoſe houſe I was introduced to them—learning that Mr. Glover was every day a good deal in company with Napoleon, and always dined with him, I loſt no time in cultivating Mr. Glover's acquaintance, and the number of little anecdotes he gave me of him were quiet amuſing.

He is exceſſively fond of playing cards; and juſt before leaving England, he was furniſhed, at his own requeſt with cards, dominos, cheſs and backgammon boards—and ſcarcely an evening paſſes, but he plays Vingt-un, ſometimes with the admiral and his officers, and ſometimes with his exciled companions. One evening a ſhort time after the Northumberlaud left England, he won from the admiral upwards of 160 Napoleons; as it happened to be on the evening of his birth day, he was much elated.

Bertrand and the reſt of his countrymen, are very attentive and ſubmiſſive to him, and always addreſs him as "Emperor"—the Admiral and officers call him "General." He breakfaſts by himſelf, and never before eleven—dines with the admiral at ſix, and ſeldom appears on deck until juſt before or after dinner; at which meal he eats heartily and drinks mo' ately.

"The Sun ay before the Northumberland arrived here, the crew were cal'ed to prayers, (for you muſt know it is usual on board a line of battle ſhip to have Divine Service performed every Sunday,) and Boney who happened to appear on deck at the moment, immediately joined with the officers in all the forms in the Epiſcopal Church, "as ſoon as the ſervice was over, the admiral aſked him what religion he profeſſed—"ALL" ſaid Napoleon, "for I find it to be the beſt policy."

"He ſeldom ſpeaks of his wife or child—and upon the whole, he ſupports his fall with unalterable firmneſs. He is cheerful, and ſometimes pleaſent company; joins in converſation with every body and always has ſomething to ſay for himſelf? He is pleaſed with ſeeing military men, eſpecially ſuch as have been in any of his campaigns, and is always delighted when converſing on military ſubjects—at Moscow, he ſays, he ought to have died, that there did glory ended.

The Northumberland did not anchor but lay off and on about three miles from the ſhore, to prevent boats going alongſide. In the evening my friend S——— (who is acquainted with admiral Cockburn) and myſelf, went in a boat a conſiderable diſtance to ſea, for the purpoſe of getting on board; but the wind and ſea were ſo high, and the night promiſing to be dark, we were obliged to give up our project and return—which was fortunate enough, as the admiral, had ſent a note on ſhare, ſaying that his orders were ſuch that no perſon could be permitted on board.

"Before the A——— arrived, we had a ſpell of dreadful weather here—a Levant wind blew very hard for nearly three weeks, which dried up almoſt all the grapes; the vintage is ruined—I never in my life felt any thing ſo oppreſſive. The thermometer in ſome places ſtood as high as 100 and 110. A ſubſcription is opened here for the ſufferers at the battle of Waterloo," &c.

London, Sept. 14.

The ceſſion of the Floridas by the Spaniards to the Engliſh government is very currently reported. It is ſaid alſo that that ceſſion is viewed with conſiderable uneaſineſs by the United States; for ſince the acquiſition of Louiſiani, which Bonaparte forced the Spaniſh government to cede to him in order that he might ſell it again to the United States, the latter have always deſired to annex the two Floridas, which are ſo admirably ſituated to augment and round off th r poſſeſſions. The Floridas, as our readers will remember, were ceded to us by the treaty of 1763. We kept them until 1781, when they were taken by the Spaniards, to whom we ceded them by the treaty of 1783.

London Sept. 16.

Captain Maitland commanding the Bellero n, arrived at London on Tueſday, and delivered to Sir Hudſon Lowe the new Governor of St. Helena, 4000 pieces of gold found among the articles that appertained to Bonaparte. It is ſaid that the Governor will take care of that money for the purpoſe of giving it to the owner in ſuch proportions as will not endanger the ſafe keeping of his perſon.

The artificial leg made at Bradford in Yorkſhire, for the marquis of Angleſey, is one of the moſt curious pieces of workmanſhip of that kind: it is as ſtrong as a natural leg and is contrived with elaſtic ſprings, that the motions of the hip and the knee are performed with the greateſt eaſe, and that it is ſerviceable for every motion, either in ſitting down or walking.

The plague is at Mecca, and it is ſaid that 70,000 inhabitants of Cario had fallen victims to that cruel diſorder by the laſt of June.

Dutch papers to the 20th Sept. Engliſh to the 15th and French to the 23d have been received. They contain very little news.

The allied troops excepting the 150,000 deſtined to remain, were ſaid to be marching out of France—300,000 were ſaid to have commenced their march. Charlemont, Longwy, Montmedi, Neubriſac, Cherburgh, and many other towns ſtill held out: and the ſiege of ſome is ſaid to have been abandoned by the allies.

Murat is permitted to reſide in the Auſtrian ſtates, as a private individual, under the title of Count Lipani, he giving his parole of honor to the emperor not to quit the Auſtrian poſſeſſions without the conſent of the latter.

Nothing of the reported treaty between the French and allies had tranſpired; and many doubted that one had been ſigned.

The Americans have become unpopular in France, on account of the Bourbon party being the mere creatures of Britain. Our conſul at Bordeaux had been inſulted and it was deemed unſafe longer to mount the eagle, our national badge.

Great Britain expected to receive nine millions ſterling of the contributions levied on France.

London. Sept. 22

A moſt alarming, although, it is hoped, not very ſerious, accident, happened to Sir GEORGE MURRAY, on returning in a poſt chaiſe from a viſit to Lord Bathurſt, at Pultney yeſterday on leaving Linegrove, the poſtilian alighted to open the gates, when the horſes went off at full ſpeed; on paſſing down the High ſtreet an attempt was made to ſtop them, which only if poſſible, increaſed their pace and one of the wheels came off. on turning the bridge oppoſite the Red Lion Inn, the chaiſe went over with ſuch force as to be completely reverſed, reſting on the top, and the three remaining wheels continuing to whirl round for ſome time from the rapidity of the overthrow. Sir George was extricated from the carriage in this ſituation, and the aſſistance of Mr. Shillito, a ſurgeon, im mediately obtained. Fortunately although Sir George had received ſome severe contuſions, no ſerious conſequence were apprehended and he was ſoon recovered ſufficiently to be removed to his own houſe.

STILL LATER FROM EUROPE.

COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER, Nov. 18.

Lateſt Foreign News.—By the arrival this morning of the brig Orient, Capt. Hicks, in 41 days from Dublin, the Editors of the Commercial Advertiſer have received a file of Dublin papers to the 7th of Oct. inclusive. Theſe papers contain Paris dates to the 30th of Sept. and London dates to October the 4th eleven days later than were before received.

The intelligence we have ſelected for our paper this day, will be found highly intereſting. The Treaty of Peace has been ſigned at Paris and the Allied Sovereigns have taken, or were about to take their departure from Paris.

The Duke of Otranto had left France, and the London Globe of Sept. 28, announced his arrival in London, This fact however is not confirmed by later dates.

Talleyrand is appointed Prime Miniſter of France.

A very alarming inſurrection has broken out in Spain. On this ſubject we have given below all that our limits will permit. The lateſt accounts from Corunna ſtate, that the inſurgents had been defeated, and their leader Porlier, taken priſoner.

The diſturbances in Ireland are increaſing to a ſerious and alarming degree. All the requeſt of 40 magiſtrates of the county of Tiperary, the Lord Lieutenant and Council of Ireland on the 25th of Sept. Iſſued a proclamation, declaring the greater part of that county in "in a ſtate of diſturbance": warning the inhabitants againſt unlawful practices and directing the enforcement of "the proviſions of the inſurrection Act."

ANECDOTE.

The late Dr. Townſend walking down Broad ſtreet, Briſtol, during an illumination, obſerved a boy breaking every window which had not a light in it. Mr. T. aſked him how he dared to deſtroy people's windows in ſuch a manner. O, (ſaid the urchin) it's all for the good of the trade—I'm a glazier. All for the good of the trade, is it? (ſaid Mr. T. raiſing his cane and breaking the boy's head) that's for the good of my trade—I'm a ſurgeon.

EPIGRAM.

DICK, often drunk, when crop-ſick gravely ſwore
That while he breath'd he never would drink more:
Dick daily tipsey grows, nor perjur'd thinks
Himſelf, but ſwears he breather not while he drinks.
