
O Fire! thou hast claimed our brother; during life he subsisted by thy influence in nature; to thee we commit his body, thou emblem of purity. May his spirit be purified on entering a new state of existence.

O Air! while the breath of life continued our brother respired by thee; his last breath is now departed; to thee we yield him.

O Water! thou didst contribute to the life of our brother; thou wast one of his sustaining elements.—His remains are now dispersed; receive thy share of him who has taken an everlasting flight!

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

The question has frequently been asked what is meant by The proposed Institution, for which a charter to solicited? To save the writer and others the trouble of answering that question, you Sir, are respectfully requested to insert the following brief statement, as given by one of the petitioners.

The institution is to be known by the name of "The Union Seminary and School of Industry, designed principally for training up and providing for a number of Teachers among the Indians and destitute Inhabitants in the new settlements of Canada."

This Institution is to be placed under the management of 12 Trustees chosen by the Subscribers and donors, with power to choose officers and make by-laws for its government and regulation.

The proposed establishment is not designed to interfere with any arrangements in church or state; but if possible to prepare suitable instruments for carrying the means of instruction among the Indians, and most destitute Settlements of Canada, [illegible] watch and subject to the control of Government.

Upwards of thirty have signed the petition which is sent to the Legislature, and several of them have subscribed liberally towards furnishing the necessary means of carrying the proposed object into effect if a charter should be granted.

The principal excellence of the plan proposed, is to unite labour and study in such a manner as to render both agreeable, and thus form habits of industry, which may be of essential service to such as may become members of the Institution and qualify them for becoming extensively useful to others

Since the proposed establishment can do no injury and may do extensive good to a very needy and much neglected portion of our fellow creatures it is hoped, that no member of either branch of the Honourable Legislature will oppose a grant of land and an act of Incorporation.

A PETITIONER.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir

Having observed in your paper that the doors of the Debtors prison in the City of New York were thrown open, there being no prisoner except one solitary debtor, (which is the case at present in this Town) but who was liberated through the humane interposition of some benevolent persons.

I, Sir, am now the only solitary debtor confined within the walls of this prison, in which I have remained upwards of three years, suffering every degree of anguish which an aged deceased mind and body is able to sustain, being sixty years of age, and more than two hundred miles from my wife and children, or from any friend. I have been a resident of this Province nearly forty years, and see no prospect of ever being liberated, unless some kind friends of humanity, like those in New York, interpose for me. When I look from my present abode and see that fine edifice now building my heart sinks within me, for while I admire the structure I believe I shall be the first to hand-el it with death; unless some guardian angel should befriend me by speaking to those in whose power it is to send me on my way rejoicing to the bosom of my family, for I am willing to do all that is in my poor power, to do for them.

I am, &c.

Parliamentary Intelligence.

In our next, the "Parliamentary Register for the present Session, (on the plan heretofore adopted, with some slight modifications and abbreviations), in pursuance of an order of the House, will be commenced, and continued, through the Session; or, rather, to the end of the business of the present Session. No event could have more fully proved the necessity of such a record than the late conflagration of the House of Assembly, in which were destroyed the original Journals of previous Sessions. Through the multiplication of printed copies it is scarcely possible, by any event, that all can be lost!

The attention of the House, during the present week, has been principally occupied in framing new rules for the government of the House and its Honourable Members. The trial of the merits of the Durham Contested Election is fixed for Monday the 7th of February As many applications have been made, from very respectable quarters, to learn the nature of the allegations charged against the Returning Officer;—a copy of the Petition, itself, shall appear in our next.

Speech of His Excellency Sir Francis Burton on the opening of the Parliament of Lower Canada.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and
Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

The administration of the Government of this Colony having devolved upon me, in consequence of the absence of His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, I have judged it expedient to call you together at a season of the year, which I am led to consider, as the best suited to your private convenience, and as affording the greatest portion of leisure for the Despatch of Public business.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I shall, with as little delay as possible, cause to be laid before you an account of the Provincial Revenue of the Crown, and of the expenditure of the Civil Establishment during the last year, accompanied by such statements and returns as will enable you to judge of the resources of this rising Colony, and of the means which it possesses to provide for the Civil Expenditure of the Provincial Government, and to promote internal improvement, without the imposition of duties up on its commerce or its industry, to an extent that can be felt as a burthen by its inhabitants.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and
Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

Persuaded as I am of your devotion to the best of Sovereigns, and of your earnest desire to promote the general welfare of your fellow subjects, for whom you are called to Legislate, I cannot but anticipate the most beneficial results from your proceedings.

Although entering for the first time on the administration of the Government, I have resided long enough in the Province, to become personally acquainted with most of you, and it affords me the highest gratification to declare that I have not, in any part of the King's Dominions, remarked a firmer attachment to His Majesty's Person and Government than I have observed in you individually. I have, therefore, the best ground, to rely upon your collective exertions. I trust, Gentlemen, that you will cordially unite, for the purpose of doing away my difficulties which may heretofore have arisen, and for preventing, by an amicable arrangement of the Financial Concerns of this Province, the recurrence of such difficulties in future.

The abundance of the late harvest, and the increasing prosperity of the Province, are subjects of heartfelt congratulation to us all; a state of greater tranquility cannot well be imagined than that which we now enjoy, and both the kind dispensations of Providence, and the fostering care of a Paternal Government, hold out to you the strongest encouragement to pursue, in your Legislative capacity, such a course as may best secure the present and promote the future happiness of your fellow-subjects in this part of His Majesty's dominions; and I beg you to be assured that nothing is more earnestly the object of my wishes than to contribute, by every means in my power, to the attainment of so desirable an end.

The attendance of the Members of the Assembly is very punctual. Of four only, who were absent, three are at present in Europe. Mr. Papineau has been chosen Speaker by a large majority.

Governor Clintons Message.—We think our British and Canadian Statesmen would do well to ponder on the following extract, which clearly shews to us that our ambitious neighbours will always bear in mind this newly set up, and extravagant claim; and it is by no means improbable that on a fit occasion, it will be made hereafter one the grounds of war between the two countries.—Ed.

"Duties have been imposed on our productions sent to Canada; and it is believed that the British government have declined a negociation respecting the free navigation of the St. Lawrence. That we have, by the law of nations, a right of free transit to the Ocean through that river, I entertain no doubt, and am inclined to believe we are entitled to an entrepot or place of safe deposit for our commodities destined to the ocean through that channel.

"Although these points are not properly within the sphere of our deliberations, yet they ought to be known, because they effect the rights and interest of our fellow citizens; and in knowing them we may apply for redress to the constitutional organ. How far it may be advisable for the United States, in case a satisfactory arrangement cannot be made, to impose countervailing duties on the products of Canada, in their transit through our territory, down the St. Lawrence, is a subject, on which the national government will undoubtedly bestow wise consideration."

Civilization of the Indians.—We find the following interesting extract from a late Halifax Paper it seems that some of the Indians themselves, are desirous of a "local habitation and a name," and to become cultivators of the soil. This fact augurs well for the plan proposed by Mr. Buchanan and others.—Ed

INDIAN CHIEF.

In the Mars, we are informed, that the Chief Andrew Meuse, who exercises a kind of sovereignty over the Indians in the Western extremity of this Province, went as a passenger. He is the same person who some years ago harangued so successfully at the bar of the House of Assembly against a Bill calculated to deprive the poor Micmacs of their Porpoise catching; since that he has been elected a Chief, and his present purpose in going to England is supposed to be, to solicit Government for permanent grants of land to the Indians, in order that they may become cultivators of the soil. He is a remarkably intelligent man, sober in his habits, and has saved a little money, and though ignorant of letters his memory and understanding are uncommonly strong by nature. He is good looking, and is attired in the costume of the tribe.

GREAT SHIP COLUMBUS.

Though the London papers generally speak in terms of commendation of the Canada Ship, the Columbus, the John Bull thinks fit to run counter to the opinion of his contemporaries, as the following remarks will shew:

"That the thing is long, nobody can deny (so is the Maria Wood, the floating coop at Kew, in which citizens are tattened) but she has neither shape nor make to recommend her; and the broken backed appearance of her miserable hull, the wretched set up of her rigging and the filthy dirty state of the craft altogether, are such as to give those who never saw a ship before, the most unfavourable opinion of naval architecture, while to any human being who has ever been afloat, the whole concern imparts nothing but a feeling of contempt and disgust, not only for the object itself, but for the fools or newspaper knaves, who, probably are paid by the Tavern keepers of the neighbourhood, have combined to represent the mis shaped, flat bottomed, hogtrough, as a stupendous and beautiful vessel.

In symmetry, a collier is graceful, in comparison with her; and so far from exciting any pleasurable feeling, the only sentiment arising from a view of her is, that of amazement at the stupidity of making one great ugly ship, dangerous and unseemly, the materials of which would have made two handsome, safe and convenient vessels. In short, the Columbus is a complete humbug, and as a humbug deserves to be exposed."

The Quebec Mercury adds:

Now, with all deference to Mr. Hock's opinion, we suspect that although he has "been afloat," he never was more completely so than in these remarks. However unsightly the Columbus may be, a vessel manned by 90 men, which conveys across the Atlantic a freight of near 7000 tons, and whose average rate of sailing is stated to be 9 knots an hour, is no contemptible specimen of naval architecture; and we may fairly quote, in reply to John Bull's remarks, the homely proverb of "handsome she that handsome does."

Committed to the Gaol of this town, on Tuesday last, by Thomas Hamilton, Esq. Coroner, Samuel Kinslochs, and Thomas Taylor, charged with the murder of Wm. Wallis.—Communicated.

Editorial Commentary.

By some untoward accident or other the particulars of the execution of Mr Fauntleroy have only just reached us, and cannot appear in the present number.

The Canadian Land Company's Stock is still on the rise in London—, by the last advices it was at 9 per cent premium.

In obedience to the wishes of many of our correspondents we have this day given the principal allegations set forth in the Durham Petition, deeming it needless to publish the entire document; as it is our firm purpose, when all is over, to fulfil the promise made long ago—; namely—to present every FREEHOLDER of the COUNTY of DURHAM, who may desire it, with a concise history of this remarkable contest from its beginning to its end; which will, of course, embrace every important document connected with it.

The Parliamentary Register, and Intelligence, will be found much more copious after the present week, than circumstances have hitherto permitted.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Mr. Brougham.—(From a Correspondent.)—The increasing business of this distinguished advocate has excited a general expectation that he will be soon promoted to the rank of King's counsel. It is rumoured that an application was lately made to the Lord Chancellor at the suggestion of the judges of the northern circuit, who sat on a late assize, on the ground that his promotion to the rank of King's counsel was rendered requisite, in justice to several barristers on the circuit, who are deprived of their fair proportion of business by Mr. Brougham's not having been promoted. The Lord Chancellor, we understand, on the application being made to him, replied, "that a certain high personage desired that the name of Mr. Brougham should never be mentioned to him again." The veracity of a Lord Chancellor is, of course, unimpeachable; but we have some reason to belive that Mr. Brougham has a document in his possession not altogether corresponding with this assertion. It is a letter from a noble Lord (report says, Lord St. Vincent) which contains a declaration from the high personage named by the Lord Chancellor, to the following effect: "That the conduct of Mr. Brougham on an occasion most likely to meet his disapproval, was such as warranted by the duties imposed upon him in his capacity of advocate."

Gloomy Reports.—An over land despatch arrived from India on the 1st of December, but its contents had not been made public on the 2d. Gloomy reports, however, were in circulation, and India Stock has fallen 7 per cent.

A Prophesy.—Sir Harcourt Lees, in a letter to the Editor of the Dublin Morning Post, says, 'that if the present system of governing Ireland shall be persevered in for eight months longer (that is until about the 12th of July, 1825), you will have not only a rebellion in Ireland, but what I dare say would alarm the Protestant subscribers to the Catholic rent, and the Popish Priests much more, most probably Sir Harcourt Lees at the head of the Heretic Government of this country!"

Good Education the best preventive of crime.—Speaking of the literary institution in the State of New York, Governor Clinton states that "in many cases," and that have been instructed in the free School in the City of New York, there is not a solitary instance known of any one having been convicted of a crime.

Lake and Sea Coast of the U. S.—Governor Clinton, in his late Message to the Legislature of the State of New-York, mentions that not only that State, but the United States also, have more lake coast than sea coast.

Stupendous Rail way.—The intended railway from Birmingham to Liverpool will form a stupendous undertaking; it is proposed to be 70 feet in width, and from 90 to 95 miles in extent, requiring, it is stated, a capital of a million.

Currents of the Ocean.—The following notice was picked up at Gunwallow Fishing Cove, in Mount's Bay, Cornwall on the 12th Nov. by a lad named William Chinworth, belonging to that place.

"This bottle was thrown overboard from the James Cropper, Capt Marshall, now on her voyage from Liverpool to New-York, in lat. 48 20, north, lon. 38 5, west, all well, out 25 days, and experienced a succession of sutherly gales and bad weather. The purport of this being cast into the sea, is to try the current of the ocean, and therefore should it reach the land, the persons who find it are requested to make known where and when it was found.

Mr. FAUNTLEROY..

Mr Fauntleroy was executed pursuant to his sentence on the 30th of November. He met his fate with firmness and composure. Mr. F. was in the 41st year of his age; of middle stature; rather inclined to stoutness His complexion was pale, and his hair quite grey—being short sighted, he constantly wore glasses. By all accounts he was tranquil and resigned. It is said that it required 16,000 pounds annually, to pay the interest on the amount of his forgeries. At three o'clock in the afternoon, the undertaker employed by the family of the unfortunate gentleman, arrived at Newgate to demand the body of Mr Fauntleroy of the Governor. It was immediately delivered over to him in the shell in which it had been placed when removed from the scaffold. It was dressed, and the features appeared not to have undergone the least change. It was deposited in a leaden coffin, and then in a superb case The funeral was expected to be very private.

By some strange mistake, we have not received, and we are told that no person in town has received, the London papers of the 30th of November, giving the particulars of the execution. Some particulars of his last interview with his wife and Mrs. Forbes, will be found below.

LONDON, Nov. 27.

Mr. Fauntleroy.—This morning Mrs Fauntleroy determined, notwithstanding the very serious state of her health, and the intreaties of her friends, to bid a last adieu to her husband. At half past 10 o'clock she arrived at the prison in a carriage with her son. The Rev. Mr. Springett had prepared Mr. Fauntleroy for the meeting, and it required no slight degree of firmness upon the part of the unfortunate man to stand the shock. He had made up his mind never to see her more, and had, through the medium of a friend, communicated his view of the necessity, for both their sakes, to part forever without the dreadful ceremony of meeting for the purpose. Mrs. Fauntleroy, however, would not consent to a final separation under such circumstances, and desired her son to tell him that she could never have a moment's peace without bidding him an eternal farewell. He prepared to meet her, and the meeting was afflicting in the extreme. Mrs. Fauntleroy dropped almost senseless into his arms upon entering his apartment, and some minutes elapsed before either could address a word to the other Their son roused them from this condition, and then all the language which affection could dictate, was uttered. At a little after 12 o'clock, it was thought necessary to separate them. The struggle was most painful. Mrs. Fauntleroy was taken from his embraces, in a condition bordering upon frenzy. Some time elapsed before the unfortunate convict became tranquil, and that tranquility was effected by turning to the Scriptures, and a conversation with the Rev Mr Springett.

The prisoner continues to evince as resigned a state of mind as his most anxious friends could wish. He is fully conscious of his guilt, and expresses as much, adding, that he is now only desirous that his scene in this world should close.

He avoids interviews with those who call to see him, whenever he can do so with any propriety to the feelings of the parties themselves and his own.

This morning he expressed great concern at having to attend the Chapel to morrow, according to the usual custom, to hear the Sermon to the condemned. He shrunk from being again exposed to the public gaze; he said he was fully alive to the consolations to be derived from attention to religious duties; indeed, the promises of the Scriptures alone sustained him now; but he declared that the thought of having to appear in the Chapel where there would be so many eyes fixed on him, quite unfitted his mind for such solemn proceedings He made it a request to the Sheriff's that, if it were not inconsistent with their duties, they would dispense with his attendance in the Chapel on Sunday morning. To be relieved from such a duty would free him from many pangs. He was informed, in answer, that such attendance could not be dispensed with; that it was a part of the proceedings which the Sheriff's felt themselves bound to see performed; but that every further attention should be paid to the communication, with the view of affording all possible relief to the prisoner's mind.

The following particulars are from the Morning papers.

It has been already stated, that the female (she seems to be scarcely twenty years old) who lived with Mr. Fauntleroy had been induced to abstain from continuing to visit him in Newgate, in consequence of his having, by the advice of his friends, written to her pointing out the inexpediency of her coming, since his repeated interviews with Mrs Fauntleroy. She has, therefore, seen him once only during the last three weeks; it was naturally expected that he should be anxious, before he left the world, to bid a long adieu to her and his children, and yesterday was appointed for carrying into effect this painful purpose. About seven o'clock Mrs. Forbes arrived at Newgate, dressed in the deepest mourning, bringing with her two lovely babes, both girls, of the ages of 18 months and 3 months, both of them also in mourning Passing through the long and dreary passages of the prison, she entered the apartment where Mr. Fauntleroy is confined, who, on seeing her, appeared afflicted with the deepest anguish. He embraced her and his children with most affectionate ardour; his feelings were evidently wrought up to the highest pitch of intense agony. After remaining with him about an hour the distressing moment of separation arrived, which it is impossible to describe.—After Mrs. Forbes had quitted, him, as she supposed for ever, and had reached an adjoining room, Mr Fauntleroy came out three different times again to bid her farewell and last, addressing her in a most solemn and impassioned manner, said, "Maria, you must expect that the circumstances in which your are placed will expose you to the observation and scoffs of the world—regard them not; but place your confidence in Almighty God; and I charge you to bring up those dear children in his fear Recollect that these are the words of a dying man Oh! do not neglect them" He then sunk on a seat which was near, evidently overpowered by the acute pain he [illegible] a violent hysterical paroxism, in which she contained a long time.

LONDON, Dec. 2.

Mrs. Fauntleroy.—It was, we are assured from the best authority, intended to conceal the fact of the execution of the husband of this unfortunate lady until to day, and ever since the final determination of his fate she has been led to believe that this was the day appointed for his death. Yesterday morning, however, the fact was communicated to her, in the way which her friends considered would add least to her already harrowed feelings. We are given to understand that the communication was made by letter, from a gentleman who has all along taken a deep interest in the fate of her unfortunate husband, as well as in that of Mrs. Fauntleroy and her son. This was done at out ten o'clock yesterday morning. This letter was also accompanied by one from her son. Mrs. Fauntleroy's sufferings are the most poignant—she is confined to her room, and sees none but her nearest friends As soon as the fact was made known to her, the shutters of her apartments were closed.

Yesterday morning Mr. Baker went to Newgate, and having obtained possession of the ring which the above unfortunate gentleman wore at his death (to which we adverted yesterday, in our report of the execution,) he delivered it to Mrs. Harris, the wife of the principal turnkey, pursuant to the dying request of Mr. Fauntleroy, accompanying it with the acknowledgements he felt due to that person, for her unremitting attention to his wants and comforts during the time he had been under her care. A short time before Mr. Fauntleroy left his apartment to proceed to the condemned cell, he presented a valuable portable writing desk and apparatus to Mr. Harris, who received his cordial acknowledgements for is humane attention towards him.

HORRIBLE NARRATIVE.

The following account is given in the private correspondence of a Morning London Paper

On the 23d of this month, will be tried before the Assize Court of Versailles, a man, or rather a demon, named Leger accused of having violated and murdered, with circumstances of the most foul and atrocious nature, a girl aged twelve years and a half The principal facts of the case, which will bear telling, are as follows:—On the tenth of last August, Aime Constance de Bully, a girl aged twelve years and a half, residing in the Commune of Estrelle, went to work at four o'clock in the evening in a vineyard belonging to her father, about a quarter of a league from the village, on the borders of the wood of Bardion On her not returning at the usual hour her family became alarmed, and made a long and useless search in the vineyard and neighbouring wood during the night On the circumstance being made known to the police next day, a general search was ordered to be made in the vineyard, but which produced nothing unless the finding of a blue and white striped handkerchief near the place where the unfortunate girl had been working in the vineyard, but which handkerchief was recognized not to have belonged to her. At length, on the 16th of August, during a further search, there was discovered in a rock called de la Charbonniere, a cavern, the mouth of which was designedly concealed with hay, straw, and branches and leaves of trees. On descending into the cavern there were found fragments of artichokes, onions, pea-pods, and ears of wheat which proved that it had served as a habitation to some human being A strong smell of putrefaction which struck those who first entered, induced a further search. Lights were procured, and on proceeding to the farther extremity of the cavern there was found buried under two feet of sand a large and heavy bundle, which being brought out and opened, was found to contain the body of a young girl already in a state of dissolution, the leg doubled upon the trunk, which was most shockingly mutilated; the whole was enveloped in a shift and petticoat, and firmly kept together by a handkerchief and an oaken twig The body was instantly recognized by the parents as that of their ill fated daughter On the body being examined by a surgeon, it was found that it had been laid open by means of some very sharp instrument, from the waist to the chest; portions of the body had been entirely cut away; numerous and deep wounds inflicted; the head and neck gorged with blood, but the heart and blood vessels completely dry Shortly after the finding of the body a wood ranger saw a man, to him unknown, on a remarkable extraordinary face and appearance, and who fled on his approaching him His suspicions were awakened, and the next day, being on the look out again he succeeded in seizing him as he was drinking at a fountain. Not being able to give a satisfactory account of himself, and having no passport, he was committed to prison. He had not been long in confinement when he told two of his fellow prisoners that he had been wandering for the last fifteen days in the woods, that he had slept in a cavern of the rock, and lived upon artichokes, onions, and wheat, which [illegible] and that he had committed a most horrible murder. An important avowal, when it was recollected that the fragments of these eatables were found in the cavern where the body was discovered. The blue and white handkerchief also, which was found in the vineyard, on being compared with one which the prisoner (named Leger) wore, proved to be of exactly the same pattern and texture. Two knives were found on his person, one of which, with a wooden handle, was exceedingly sharp, and which on being applied to the wounds on the body of the girl (exhumed for the purpose) corresponded so exactly with them, as to leave little doubt of his being the instrument with which they were inflicted Leger, who had hitherto denied all knowledge of the murder, could no longer resist the force of these circumstances, and on being led to the spot where the body was found, and which latter was placed before him, he confessed himself the perpetrator, and entered into all the horrible details of the crime According to his confession he had been from his infancy of a sombre and savage disposition, hating the society of women and persons of his own age. Wishing to live in complete solitude, he had, on St. John's day, quitted his father's house under pretence of going to service. He brought away with him only 80 francs and the cloths which he wore. He took up his residence in the wood of Montmeaux, where he lived for several days upon wild roots, sorrel, and occasionally artichokes, wheat, &c which he stole from the neighbouring farmers. One evening he surprised a rabbit, which he tore in pieces and devoured Shortly after, pressed by hunger he entered a village, and purchased some bread and cheese This was corroborated by those who sold him the above articles He then went on to state that he became tormented with the desire of getting possession of a woman and eating her flesh and drinking her blood.—This demoniac project he was enabled to put into execution on seeing the young Constance de Bully in a lone vineyard, far away from any succour, he stole unawares upon her, tied a hand kerchief round her neck and mouth, threw her on his shoulder and fled into the woods Being at length obliged to stop from fatigue, he perceived that his burthen no longer breathed, he laid her upon the ground, and found that she was dead. He then delivered himself up to the most incredible excess of unnatural depravity and ferocity, after which he cut off portions of the body, which he devoured; he then ripped open the trunk, and stooping down, drank with avidity the blood from the heart and veins. He then disposed of the body in the manner which has been already stated He tore off the collar and wristbands of his shirt, which were stained with blood and buried them All the horrible details given by the hapless wretch have been fully corroborated by the state of the body, the finding of the bloody collar, and by his pointing out the oak from which he cut the twig to bind the body The twig was applied to the tree and proved the truth of his assertion

EMIGRATION.

The Emigrant's Note-Book and Guide; with Recollections of Canada &c. By Lieutenant J. C. Morgan, H. P. R. M. 12mo. pp 348, London 1824 Longman & Co.

An Account of the Colony of Van Diemen's Land, principally intended for the use of Emigrants. By Edward Curr 12mo. pp. 207. London 1824 G. & Co.

Is there a man, as the Recruiting Sergeants of times now past and gone used to say in their harangues at fairs and markets—is there a man who dislikes his home, who has an empty purse, a smoky house, or a scolding wife, or (heaven pity him!) all three; here is the King, God save his gracious Majesty! ready to relieve his distresses, let him take this shilling, the bounty is in itself a fortune and he must become, if he live long enough! a general officer at least, if not a corporal or sergeant.

We know not how it is, but the multitude of volumes which we have read within the last half dozen of years, every one upholding some favourite scheme and place for emigration, has wonderfully reminded us of the Crimps and Recruiters of our younger days, and infected us with strong suspicions of the whole muster.

Here we have had, within a not very wide range of our numbers, almost every quarter of the Globe strenuously recommended to persons who are not altogether satisfied with their native British.

Birbeck has most mendaciously laboured to allure settlers to his swampy prairies in the woods of North America, in order to enhance the value of his Ut[illegible]n purchases.

To South America, cry the bolder Patriots; sword there, as in ancient feudal ages, carves the adventurer's way to glory and fortune; and the mines of Peru are his reward.

Canada, all English in its rights and feelings, is the place—the only place, for the Emigrant, say Mr. Gale, Mr. Talbot, Lieut Morgan, and fifty others.

The United States, by their delusive legislation and individual arts, confend for the unwary Europeans, and invite them to seek the land of genuine liberty, at the expense of be ng slaves to say their passage thither.

The Cape of Good Hope has its advocates, and the magic of its name to tempt the weary and discontented to starve at Algoa Bay

Wentworth, and other proprietors in New Holland, protest that Botany Bay is a very heaven on earth, abounding in all the luxuries of life, as well as in Kangaroos and Convicts.

Van Diemen's Land has also its patrons, and contests the prize with New Holland, which its friends declare it excels in many points of convenience and enjoyment.

The humbug of Poyais has been villainously promoted by miscreants, who cared nothing for the sacrifice of lives in that horrid climate of the Mosquito shore.

And, in addition to these, we have pursued projects for peopling Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and almost every other NEW place;—for colonizing some of the Greek Islands,—for a settlement on the African Coast in the Mediterranean;—for (but of this we are not sure) employing the surplus population of our population in peopling the Moon and any of the Comets they can catch on their brilliant and attractive route

All these plots and plans, however, seem to hinge upon an assumed surplus of inhabitants in these noble islands, and on the prospect of their increasing in a geometrical ratio, till there shall not be elbow room for the throng. England expects every man to do his duty, said an authority against which it was rather dangerous to contend, and really we are not philosophers enough to stand out upon this position. We shall therefore take it for granted that it is good for sundry thousands of English, Scots, and Irish, to seek distant lands, wherein to find comforts for themselves and families, which the state of things prevent them from attaining at home. The question then comes to be, Where should they go?—and upon this, the two little volumes, the titles of which we have put at the head of this paper, profess to give them the best information.

Lieutenant Morgan, after taking a rapid survey of the advantages and disadvantages which belong to other settlements, adheres with all his force to the superiority of the Canadas, whither he himself is bound. He observes, very pertinently—

"From the writings of several it would appear, that of the many thousands who settle in the back woods of America, not one of them ever think of bettering their condition by crossing into Canada. If we are to form an opinion upon what they say on the subject, we should conclude that 'the beautiful prairies,' the 'loveliness of nature' and 'bounties, so superabundantly, and especially bestowed upon the United States, were fully sufficient, together with the superior liberty they enjoy, (to imitate which is forgery,') to keep them within the American boundary.

"But, alas how fatal to all this is the reality; there is no man who has passed from Montreal to the head of the Great Lakes, who will not remember seeing thousands of Americans settled within the Canadian boundary Previous to the late war, and since the peace, vast numbers of emigrants from the United States have taken up lands and distributed themselves throughout the whole of Upper and Lower Canada, and they still continue to do so.

"Surely this fact speaks volumes; for if the Government of America, its soil, and climate, are so vastly superior to the British Provinces, why, in the name of Yankee Independence, do so many hundreds and thousands leave it?

"For the emigrant, therefore, who has no inclination for 'liberty and equality' in a land of masters and slaves, or to sever himself forever from his native country, his early connexions and friends, either of the British Colonies of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or the Canadas; is far preferable to the United States of America.

"The emigrant, in a movement of so much importance as that of choosing a new country, where he will have to await what farther portion of good or evil providence may have in reserve for him, will do well to consider and reconsider the subject. For me it now only remains to give such particulars of Upper and Lower Canada as may probably prove useful to those who have already decided upon settling in that country.

This he proceeds to do in detail, beginning ab ovo with the voyage, the perils and inconveniences of which he advises emigrants to face boldly; for, says he,

"Cowardice, although perhaps in some cases a constitutional infirmity, is still a disgrace to any man, but more especially to him who has professed to set all personal hazard and difficulty at defiance. Let him rest fully assured that the greater portion of what is generally considered danger, bears no affinity to it if looked manfully in the face.

"When the Success, Trooper Frigate, Captain Barclay, in which I had my passage from Halifax to Quebec was nearly lost in a gale of wind in the night of the entrance of the Gulf I went below to inform my sleeping friends in the ward-room of their situation. My valued friend, Lieutenant John Hewitt, of the corps to which I have the honour to belong, immediately took a view of the rocks, and then seeing clearly that it would in a few moments, be all right, or all wrong with us, he began to draw on his inexpressibles, and to dress himself with great minuteness 'My fine fellow,' said I, 'I think you may dispense with your drapery, and prepare to swim for your life.' 'My good friend,' replied he, with admirable sang froid, 'let us by all means go on shore decent, for how do we know who we may be introduced to?'

DURHAM ELECTION.

The following are the principal allegations charged against the Returning Officer in the Petition now lying upon the Table of the House of Assembly—the merits of which are to be tried by a Select Committee on Monday the 7th instant:—

That the numbers for G. S. Boulton, and C. Fothergill, Esqrs. being equal, in the columns of the Poll-Book, at the close—The Returning Officer could not, legally, return the former gentleman, as duly elected, by a majority of four;—

That, the said Charles Fothergill having demanded a scrutiny, on the conception that he had a majority of legal votes, it was first granted and then refused, by the R. O. who, throughout, appeared manifestly partial to one of the Candidates, to the prejudice of the others;—

That, whilst the R. O. refused legal votes on one side he admitted illegal votes on the other;—

That, under pretence of riot, when there was no riot at all, he suddenly closed the poll for two hours, apparently to enable a doubtful freeholder to go and borrow a deed on which to vote for his favourite candidate;—

That, he allowed men to personate others at a distance, and vote by proxy;—

That, he admitted persons to vote, who had sold their Lands and received payment;—

That, he allowed persons to vote who had resided and carried on business in the U. S. during the last 7 years contrary to the Statute.

That, he allowed several persons to vote on the same deed, and, on the same undivided lot of land;—

That, for his favourite candidate, he admitted and recorded on the Poll Book a vote on a Freehold in another County;—

That, for the same purpose, he allowed persons to vote on Crown and Clergy Reserves, though no Leases, to say nothing of better title, had ever issued;—

That, he refused several, the most unexceptionable, votes when in favour of the said Charles Fothergill;—

That, he continually refused to notice, and enter on the Poll-Book, important objections urged by the said C. Fothergill, and which he was bound to do and did;—

That, when in favour of G. S. Boulton he did not hesitate to admit minors to vote;—

That, he admitted a person who confessed he had not taken the Oath of Allegiance to vote against the said C. Fothergill, though he would not admit the same description of votes in favour of the said C. F.—and even declared the election against him, afterwards, on that very account, merely by striking off some undoubted Freeholders on his own responsibility, after he had admitted them!!

The Petitioners further urge,—"that the proceedings and conduct of the said Returning Officer were a transgression of his duty, an usurpation of authority never before heard of, either in the ministerial or judicial character of the Office in which the said Wm. Sowden was placed, an infringement upon the constitutional rights of the Electors, and an example dangerous;—and in fact, mockery intended, the freedom and security of Elections;—and, that, as it is expressly declared by all the best authorities on this subject that a voter being once numerically admitted on the Poll, cannot be afterwards struck off, unless on a scrutiny to which he shall have been found to be invalid—The said R. O. could not, on his own responsibility declare one Candidate elected by a majority of four, when it was evident, by the columns of the Poll-Book, the two were equal at the close!"

The Petition concludes by praying the Honourable House, after hearing satisfactory evidence of the facts stated—either to declare the said Charles Fothergill entitled to the seat now occupied by the said G. S. Boulton, Esq.—or to decide the said election void, that a new writ may be issued, &c. &c. &c.

Report of the President and Directors of the Welland Canal Company.

As it has ever been the intention of the Directors of this Company to prose cute the work, she united to their management with vigor, they conceive it their duty to lay before the public, a statement of their proceedings until this period.

A sufficient amount of Stock having been subscribed on the 1st November last to warrant the commencement of the undertaking, due notice was given, & contracts made on the 15th. and the work commenced on the 30th of the same month, for the completion of the summit ridge, extending from the River Welland to New Holland, a distance of three miles, two of which is to be tunnelled.

Those contracts have been entered into, by able, energetic and experienced men, every way qualified to the undertaking they have commenced, these different sections, & prosecuted their work with a zeal that does them credit No preparatory arrangements could have been made, nevertheless the necessary building and machinery have been erected, tools and implements procured and as many men employed as can work to advantage.

From the uncommon favourable state of the weather since our commencement, the work has progressed with unusual rapidity, both tunnel mouths have been taken out to the level, and will be finished the whole Canal size by the 1st of May next at the extent—a shaft has likewise been sunk to bottom level in the centre of the tunnel which has enabled the contractor to test the quality of the earth to a certainty—it proves a strong adhesion clay, laying in regular Strata from end to end and peculiarly adapted for a safe and rapid prosecution of the tunnel—no water is met with at either end or centre until below water level, we can therefore assert with confidence no serious obstruction will intervene.

The original plan for this Canal was for a nine feet wide tunnel, eight feet locks—and sixteen feet bottom. The propriety of enlarging it to fifteen feet wide, the same dimensions as the Erie canal was suggested, and has been adopted with the general concurrence of the Stockholders, the advantages of this arrangement is apparent, more especially from our proximity to the American Canal, Boats from which will pass through this without shifting cargoes—our present dimensions are 15 feet wide by 14 feet high including six feet water.

When the tunnel was first contemplated it was supposed to occupy at least two years in its execution, we are now satisfied from experiment, it can be completed within the present season, Mr. Abbey the contractor is making extensive preparations to that effect, from his plan submitted to us for the prosecution of this work we are convinced it may become navigable by the first of November next.

Arrangements have been made with the Stockholders in Lower Canada and New York for the prompt and regular payment of their Instalments monthly, and they appear desirous from their communications to us that we should prosecute the work in the most expeditious manner. We are therefore enabled to assure the Stockholders, that this Canal is progressing under the most favourable circumstances it was generally supposed to be an undertaking of magnitude. The greatest difficulty to encounter has been to effect its commencement, this is removed, its prosecution is simple and easy, and if a moderate share of public patronage is afforded us we anticipate the entire completion of the whole line from Grand River to Lake Ontario during the present season.

THE CHRISTIAN AND INFIDEL.

A FRAGMENT.

A certain King of Hungary, who was a Christian, being one day very sad, his brother, a brisk and gallant young man, inquired the cause of his sadness. "O brother," said he, "I have been a great sinner against God, and I know not how I shall appear before him when he comes to judgment." His brother replied, "These are but melancholy thoughts," and so made light of them; and by flattery and humour endeavoured to dispel the seriousness and gloom of his brother's mind The king made no reply. The custom of the country at that time was, if the king's executioner sounded a trumpet before any man's door, the person was presently to be led forth to execution.—The king sent his executioner in the dead time of the succeeding night to sound his trumpet before his brother's door. His brother hearing the dreadful blast, and seeing the messenger of death prepared to execute his work, ran quickly and came in, pale and trembling before his brother, fell on his knees, and in the most earnest and moving manner, besought him to let him know wherein he had offended him. "O my brother," said the king, taking him by the hand, and raising him up, "you have never offended me, but always loved me, as I also have you: but if the signt of an earthly executioner is so terrible to you, shall not I, who am so great a sinner fear much more to be brought to the judgment bar of a justly offended God N H Repos.

PRIMITIVE AND MODERN CHRISTIANS.

In the tenth persecution under Roman Pagan. Diocletian the Emperor caused the Churches of Christians to be destroyed, the Holy Scriptures to be burned, and the disciples to suffer exquisite torments, that they might be compelled to offer sacrifice to idols. On the promulgation of the edict, a Christian of noble birth, in a public manner tore it in pieces; for which he suffered with great constancy, a most excruciating death. The Emperor began with the army, commanding the Christians to lay down their weapons; which they readily did, without offering any resistance. At Tyre (because the wild beasts (although they were kept hungry for the purpose) refused to devour the Christians who were cast to them, the victims were beheaded and thrown into the sea.—Diocletian's own household did not escape the fury of this storm His own Children and favorites were overwhelmed in the common ruin In Phrygia the inhabitants of a whole city were consumed in the flames. Six thousand soldiers, under the command of Mauritius, quartered at Thebes in Egypt refusing to worship images, were put to death continuing to the last, steadfast and unmoveable in the faith. So sanguinary was the persecution at Triers on the Moselle, that the river was discoloured by the blood of the slain. Eusebius says that the swords of the executioners were blunted with frequent slaughter, and that they needed often to repose themselves after their inhumane labours. When we take a retrospective view of the suffrings of the primitive Christians; their in trepid zeal, holy courage and invincible patience, we at the present day have cause to be ashamed that we are so unlike them. It becomes us to pray earnestly, as the Saint of Jesus that we may be left to undervalue our exceeding great and precious privileges, and to trample upon our mercies — Surely, the great Lord of all expects of us, so highly distinguished by his providence and grace, an ample revenue, which shall redound to his glory.

ORIGIN OF TARRING AND FEATHERING.—According to Holinshed, the following ordinance for punishing seamen was issued by Richard Cœur de Lion:—"If any man be taken with theft or pickery, and thereof convicted, he shall have his head pelled and hot pitch poured upon his pate, and upon that the feathers of some pillow or cushion shaken aloft, that he may be thereby known for a thief, and at the next arrival of the ships to any land be put forth of the company to seek his adventures without all hope of return unto his fellows."

A Good Example.—One hundred gentlemen of the New-York Bar, including the eminent, have subscribed the following notice.

"We the undersigned, Members of the Bar impressed with the impolitic cruelty of confining persons in prison for small debts, without some adequate provision for supplying them with the necessaries of life, and regretting its legalized and continued existence, do hereby pledge ourselves if called upon, to give our professional services gratuitously, each of the subscribers for himself to procure the discharge of each such debtor from imprisonment, in the course of the ensuing twelve months.

New-York, Dec. 25th. 1824."

TELESCOPES —It is said the use of telescopes was first discovered by one Hensen, a spectacle-maker at Middleburgh, in Holland, whose children playing in the shop casually placed a concave and a convex glass in such a position, that by looking through them at the weathercock, it appeared much larger and nearer than usual; and by their exclamation of surprise excited the attention of their father who soon obtained great credit for his valuable discovery.

STRANGE EFFECT OF FEAR.—The most singular effect of terror in the human species is that recorded in the Journal de Medicine pour l'an 1817, and which occured at Paris, in the Hospital of the Salpetriere.—A female, of advanced age, was so affected with horror on hearing that her daughter, with two children in her arms, had thrown herself out of a window and was killed on the spot, that her skin, in one solitary night became, from head to foot, as black as that of a negro. It continued permanent.

A WOMAN BORN TO BE HANGED — Although the following relation may be viewed by some as scarcely deserving credit, it may be relied on as authentic; the circumstances recorded in it took place in the county of Fint, about 80 years back. A woman having been convicted of a capital crime, was ordered for execution, and was actually hanged. Having remained suspended during the usual time, she was removed from the scaffold, and carried into the church; it was soon discovered that the vital spark was not totally extinct, and means were immediately adopted by her friends for the purpose of fully restoring animation. The executioner having been informed of what was going on and apprehended that he should incur censure, for the incomplete performance of his sanguinary duty, repaired to the church with an intention to despatch the woman. The females, however, who were around the body became furious when acquainted with the hangman's design, and immediately attacking him with the most violent rage, he was obliged to fly for safety up the steps which led to the belfry; thither his pursuers followed him, and seizing him by the heels, they dragged him down the stairs, and so much injured him that his death was the consequence. In the mean time, the body of the woman was carried away, and the measures for restoring life ultimately proved successful. But perhaps the most astonishing portion of this narration yet remains to be told; this woman, who might be said to have experienced a resurrection from the grave, not long afterwards actually committed another crime of which she was convicted at the next assizes, and for which she suffered death. The sheriff, in this instance determined that the intention of the law should not again be frustrated, caused a grave to be dug close to the gallows, in which the corps was immediately buried after the execution was carried into effect.

Curious Sign.—A periwig maker in London had a sign painted in the front of his shop representing the rebellious son of David hanging in the oak by the hair of his head, with this whimsical couplet below:

"O Absalom! unhappy sprig!
Thou shouldst have worn a periwig.

Civilization of Elephants.—In a play which Germanicus exhibited at Rome, in the reign of Tiberius, there were twelve Elephant performers, six males and six females, clothed as men and women After having danced and performed many curious antics, a sumptuous feast was served up for their refreshment. The table was covered with all sorts of dainties, and gold goblets filled with the most precious wines, and beds covered with purple carpets were placed around for the animals to lie upon, after the manner of the Romans when feasting. On these carpets the Elephants laid down, and at a signal given they reached out their trunks to the table, and eat and drank with as much propriety as if they had been well bred citizens.

Shenstone.—Shenstone was one day walking through his romantic retreat in company with his Delia (her real name was Wilmot,) when a man rushed out of a thicket, and presenting a pistol to his breast, demanded his money. Shenstone was surprised, and Delia fainted. "Money" said the robber, "is not worth struggling for; you cannot be poorer than I am" "Unhappy man!" exclaimed Shenstone, throwing his purse to him, "take it and fly as quick as possible." The man did so, threw his pistol in the water, and instantly disappeared. Shenstone ordered his foot boy to follow the robber, and observe where he went. In two hours the boy returned, and informed his master that he followed him to Hales-owen, where he lived; that he went to the door of his house, and peeping through the key hole saw the man throw the purse on the ground, and say to his wife, 'Take the dear-bought price of my honesty!" then taking two of his children, on each knee, he said to them, "I have ruined my soul to keep you from starving!" and immediately burst into a flood of tears. Shenstone, on hearing this, lost no time in inquiring the man's character, and found that he was a labourer oppressed by want and a numerous family; but had the reputation of being honest and industrious. Shenstone went to his house; the poor man fell at his feet, and implored mercy The poet took him home with him, and provided him with employment.

Secrets of Wealth.—A fox hunter can get drunk every night in the year, and yet live to an old age; but then, he is all exercise, and no thought. A sedentary scholar shall not be able to get drunk once in the year with impunity, but then he is all thought and no exercise. Now, the great object is neither to get drunk, nor to be all exercise, nor to be all thought, but to enjoy all our pleasures with a sprightly reason. The four ordinary secrets of health are, early rising, exercise, personal cleanliness, and the rising from table with a stomach unoppressed. There may be sorrows in spite of these, but they will be less with them, and nobody can be truly comfortable without them.

CURIOUS SUICIDE.

A short time since a poor man, a native of Ireland, [illegible] had a quarrel with his wife, threw himself into the river and was drowned. The following was found on account of his death, written by himself was found in his apartment.

"As I know the people that will find my carcase is curious about the cause of my death, which is something out of the way, I'll give them all the satisfaction in my power about it, as I know the whole matter from the beginning to the end, the more my misfortune in marrying a bad wife, that was never pleased but when she was angry with me, and scolding me out of my life.

"It may be reported, for the world is greatly given to lying, that I died by accident—but that is a mistake, for I threw myself into the water, and so killed myself, and as the little that's left of my substance is not much, I hope there will be no quarrelling about it. I give all the money that may be found in my breeches pocket, to Betty M Keuzie. My wife said I had unlawful doings with her, but that's a lie of her own inventing; and if I was alive I would say so to her face. As for my wife she must provide for herself, as I mean in future to give her nothing. I had enough to do to maintain her during my life and I am sure I'll not trouble my head about her now I am dead. I forgive all the world except my wife—but I don't know rightly where I shall go, but I am very easy about it, as I got absolution silly to day without the priest's knowing what I had in my head.

"I bore an indifferent good character while I was alive, and would have knocked the biggest man down that dared to say a word against it, but now I am dead they may say what they please but the devil reward them for their pains. I die in charity with every body except my wife, and I wish well to all who had a regard to me, and don't care a quid of tobacco where they bury me. I was divided between hanging and drowning but at last resolved upon the way I have taken as I thought it was not so vulgar as the other, for they hang thieves, heretics and murderers, but never drown them. So I depart this life in the 38th year of my age, without winding, grumbling or whining—but like a man—of my own free notion and choice, being at all times a good christian, with full assurance of going to heaven, where I shall laugh at my wife and the devil.

A GHOST STORY.

FROM WRAXALL'S MEMOIRS.

Prince Charles, of Saxony, having earnestly as well as repeatedly, besought Schrepfer, a person who made no secret of his ability to perform operations of magic, the most difficult of which was to raise departed spirits from the tomb, after many refusals, real or affected obtained at length a reluctant promise to present before his eyes an apparition: for Schrepfer artfully professed the greatest repugnance and disinclination to the act, as being perilous to himself, and attended with various circumstances of horror. It only remained therefore, to fix on the spirit that should be summoned. After a long time, the Chevalier de Saxe was named, and Schrepfer undertook to produce his ghost before a select company. The place chosen for the experiment was Prince Charles' Palace, in Dresden. But, as it was well known that the Elector having the misfortune to be neither credulous nor inclined to permit such exhibitions within his capital, might disapprove and prohibit it, the strictest secrecy was observed. The Chevalier de Saxe, third in order of birth among the natural sons of Augustus the second, King of Poland, was only half brother to the famous Marshal Saxe, as they were by different mothers. In right of his wife, who was a Princess Lubomirska, of a very illustrious Polish family, the Chevalier inherited considerable property in that country, as well as in Saxony. He resided principally in Dresden, and died only a few years ago, at his palace in his city; which his nephew, Prince Charles, who was his principal heir, occupied after his death. In addition to his maternal estates the Chevalier possessed a vast income from his military and other appointments in the electoral service; and as he left no issue, he was supposed to have amassed great sums. Reports had been circulated that money was concealed in the palace, but no one presumed to search for the precise place where it was deposited. If his spirit could be compelled to appear, that interesting secret might be extorted from him. Thus curiosity combining with avarice, or at least with the hope of discovering considerable treasure, prompted Prince Charles to name his uncle, as the object of the experiment.

On the appointed night, for Schrepfer naturally preferred darkness, as not only more private in itself, but better calculated for the effect of incantations; the company assembled. They were nineteen in number of whom I personally knew several, who are persons of consideration, character, and respectability. When they were met in the great gallery of the palace, the first object of all present was to secure the windows and doors, in order equally to prevent intrusion and deception.—As far as precaution could effect it they did so and were satisfied that nothing except violence could procure access or entrance. Schrepfer then acquainted them, that the act which he was about to perform, would demand all their firmness; and advised them to fortify their nerves by partaking of a bowl of punch, which was placed upon the table. Several of them, indeed, as I believe, all except one or two, think ing the exhortation judicious very readily followed it; but, the gentleman from whom I received these particulars, declined the advice. "I came here," said he, "to be present at raising an apparition. Either I will see all, or nothing. My resolution is taken, and no inducement can make me put any thing into my lips." Another of the company, who preserved his presence of mind, arose and placed himself close to the principal door, in order to watch if any one attempted to open or force it. These preparatory steps being taken, the great work began with the utmost solemnity.

Schrepfer commenced it by retiring into a corner of the gallery, where kneeling down, with many mysterious ceremonies, he invoked the spirits to appear, or rather come to his aid, for it is allowed that none ever were visible. A very considerable time elapsed before they obeyed, during which interval he labored apparently under great agitation of body and mind, being covered with a violent sweat, and almost in convulsions, like the Pythoness of antiquity. At length a loud clatter was heard at all the windows on the outside; which was soon followed by another noise, resembling more the effect by wet fingers drawn over the edge of glasses than any thing else to which it could be well compared. This sound announced, as he said, the arrival of his good, or protecting spirits, and seemed to encourage him to proceed. A short time afterwards, a yelling was heard, of a frightful and unusual nature, which came, he declared from the malignant spirit, whose presence, as it seems, was necessary and indispensable to the completion of the catastrophe.

The company were now, at least the greater part electrified with amazement, or petrified with horror; and of course fully prepared for every object which could be presented to them. Schrepfer continuing his invocations, the door suddenly opened with violence, and something that resembled a black ball or a globe, rolled into the room. It was invested with smoke or cloud, in the midst of which appeared to be a human face, like the countenance of the Chevalier de Saxe; much in the same way, it would seem, that Correggio, or Hannibal Carracci have represented Jupiter appearing to Semele. From this round body issued a loud angry voice, which exclaimed in German, "Carl, was wolte du mit mich?" "Charles, what would thou with me?" Why dost thou disturb me?"

Language, as may be supposed, can ill describe the consternation produced among the spectators at such a sight. Either firmly persuaded that the spirit which they met was spiritual and intangible; or deprived of resolution to approach and attempt to seize it, they appear to have had no effort to satisfy themselves of its incorporeal nature. The prince, whose impious curiosity had summoned his uncle's ghost, and to whom, as the person principally responsible, the spectre addressed itself, far from manifesting coolness, or attempting reply, betrayed the strongest marks of horror and contrition. Throwing himself upon his knees, he called on God for mercy; while others of the terrified party earnestly besought the magician to give the only response or sign of his art, for which they were now anxious, by dismissing the apparition. But Schrepfer, though apparently willing, found, or pretended to find this effort beyond his power. However incredible, absurd or ridiculous it may be thought, the persons who witnessed the scene, protest that near an hour elapsed before, by the force of his invocations, the spectre could be compelled to disappear. Nay, when at length Schrepfer had succeeded in dismissing it, at the moment that the company began to resume a degree of serenity, the door which had been closed burst open again, and the same hideous form presented itself anew to their eyes. The most resolute and collected among them were not proof to its second appearance, and a scene of universal dismay ensued. Schrepfer, however, by reiterated exorcisms or exertions, finally dismissed the apparition. The terrified spectators soon dispersed, overcome with amazement, and fully satisfied, as they well might be, of Schrepfer's supernatural powers.

Having thus related as seriously and circumstantially as I am able, the facts relative to the affair in question, it is natural to ask my opinion of the story: and to demand whether I can explain or account for it in any rational manner. To such inquiries I must frankly reply, that I can neither give any satisfactory solution of it, nor have I heard any attempted, except the obvious one of human credulity and terror, operated upon by imposture and deception. But, the manner in which so wonderful an illusion is produced, I am, in common with every person here, at a loss to understand. I believe no one has, as yet, explained clearly how the liquefaction of St Januaries' blood is performed; though out of Naples, I imagine few persons attribute it to miraculous or supernatural interposition. We know from experience, how prodigious are the deceptions practiced in and upon optics. Nineteen men, met together for the avowed purpose of seeing an apparition, and believing that it is in human power to render a departed spirit visible, are already half subdued to any thing however gross.

Night, darkness, and the imposing solemnity of magic invocations, bereave the strongest minds of their self possession. A bold and artful imposter might then trample upon their reason, and present to their eyes some hideous figure properly accoutred for the occasion. It must, however, always excite some astonishment and more regret, that among near 20 persons, not one should have endeavoured to lay hands on the spectre. Its second appearance is likewise very difficult to account for, as it was unnecessary in order to give a conviction, which had been fully effected. That it was a deception, no man of sound understanding will doubt; but how it was managed or produced, the persons who were duped have not yet discovered. They are nearly all still alive in this country, and they by no means boast of their adventure, or derive from it any sort of vanity. On the contrary, independent of the ridicule, they all feel and express the utmost repugnance to relating, or even recollecting a scene, which has impressed upon their imaginations so much horror. Their very friends dread and deprecate a renewal of the images then presented to those who were present; and a lady earnestly besought of me, not to press her husband on a subject, of which he could never think or converse, without passing a sleepless night. We must be content therefore to resolve it into German credulity or superstition, and congratulate ourselves on our superiority to such puerile terrors.

Natural History

Mineral Tallow.—The rare substance which was discovered in Finland in 1736, has lately been found in a bog on the borders of Loch Fyne, in Scotland. It has the colour and feel of tallow, and is tasteless. It melts at 118 degrees; and boils at 200 degrees; when melted, it is transparent and colourless; on cooling, it becomes spongy and white, though not so much so as at first. It is insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol, oil of turpentine, olive oil, and naphtha, while those liquids are hot; but it is precipitated again when they cool. Its specific gravity, in its natural state, is 0,6078, but the tallow is full of air bubbles; and after fusion, which disengages the air, the specific gravity is 0'983, which is [illegible] does not [illegible] lime with alkalies, nor form soap. Thus it differs from every class of bodies known; from the fixed oils in not forming soap, and from the volatile oils and bitumens in being tasteless and destitute of smell. Its volatility and combustibility are equal to those of any volatile oil or naphtha.—Edinburgh Philos. Journal.

The Black Swan.—Two of them were placed as a great curiosity in the gardens of Malmaison; they bred and the produce was sent to Prince Eugene at Munich. Some time after, the female died, and a white swan was put in the lake to supply her place, but neither time nor the snow white charms of his new companion have had the least effect on the pride of the sable monarch; he turns from her with disgust, will not suffer her to approach him, and prefers living in perpetual widowhood to forming a mesalliance.

EFFECTS OF LIGHTNING ON THE HUMAN BODY.

The following is an extract from an account by Dr Thiesius, of Mulhausen, given in Schweigger's Journal:—

Two vehicles were passing along a narrow road embedded in a forest; in the first were two brothers of the name of Teele, one aged 33 years, the other 29, in the second was M. Teele the nephew, aged 20 years, and M. Decker. The lightning struck successively the first horse, the two brothers, M. Decker, and his companion; the last did not survive. The horse remained dead on the spot; the skin on the lower part of its belly was torn, the mouth open, and the teeth black.

The lightning passed to the younger Teele by his umbrella, which, with his watch, was thrown twenty four steps off; the vehicle had a hole made in it six inches in diameter. The body, carried to the nearest village was put into a warm bath and rubbed; blood flowed from the nose, mouth, and ears, but no signs of life appeared. The mouth and nose were black; the skin and muscles of the arms and hands, both of which held the umbrella, were furrowed to the bone; the sleeves of his clothes were torn; the lesions of the skin were not like those produced in burns; the skin appeared as if it had been raised by rapped rubbing, and the clothes bore no trace of burning, but seemed as if torn by a sharp point. M. Decker, who was in the same car, received at the same moment a blow on the stomach so violent that he was thrown out and remained insensible for half an hour. When examined the place on which he felt the blow was found very red but unwounded; he very speedily recovered.

The two brothers were sitting side by side when struck; the lightning first reached the head of the elder brother, tore his velvet cap into several pieces, glanced over the temporal bone about an inch above the left ear, then behind that ear, and flaying the skin slightly, descended to the neck; it traversed the nape of the neck obliquely, and ascended to the right ear the interior of which was as if scratched; it then went by the right shoulder, between the chin, over the right breast along the arm, and returning to the back, descended along the vertebral column to the sacrum. In this last part of its course, the skin was not torn, but only slightly raised, and much reddened; marks of the same kind were across the arms, and with the torn clothes, showed the zigzag path of the lightning as it had passed alternately from the right side of the younger brother to the left side of the elder. It continued its course on the former from the part where it had come in contact with some pieces of metal contained in his pocket, and at which place it had raised the skin of the muscles of the side for a space as large as a hand; it then crossed the stomach to the left side and passed over the internal surface of the thigh, knee, and calf of the leg. The width of the trace marked by the lightning, was generally about two inches; the wounds were most extensive and deep at the intersections of this trace; many of them were very painful, suppurated abundantly; the skin had been closely rolled up on the right and left by the rapid passage of the lightning. The wounds did not bleed; and on healing those phenomena only took place which accompanied the simple formation of skin. Nothing indicated a lesion of the organs due to fire or heat, but the effect was just such as would have been produced by the passage of a bullet over the surface.

The two brothers on becoming sensible felt excessively sick, and after drinking some tea, vomited several times, throwing out a little blood. No fever occurred. The eldest was quite deaf on the day of the accident, but recovered his hearing, in part, on the morrow. No paralysis occurred in the limbs struck by the lightning, and the wounds cicatrized in a few weeks. The accident happened in May 1821. Twelve months afterwards, the elder brother remained affected by deafness, which varied with the weather; he had a strong tendency to sleep, and has seldom slept twenty four hours if not awakened. The younger, ultimately, had an inflammatory fever, and was subject to a periodical depression of which he had previously felt nothing; and, generally, a much stronger impression had been made on the nervous system of both, than from the vigour of their constitution might have been expected.

Anecdote.

ANECDOTE OF ST. JOHN.

Domitian banished St John into the solitary isle of Patmos, where he was favored with the visions of the Apocalypse. After Domitian's death he returned from Patmos and governed the Asiatic Churches. There he remained till the time of Trajan. At the request of the bishops, he went to the neighboring churches, partly to ordain pastors and partly to reanimate the congregations. At one place in his tour, observing a remarkable handsome young person, he warmly recommended him to the care of a particular pastor. The young man was baptized, and for a time lived as a Christian. But being gradually corrupted by company, he became idle, intemperate, and at length dishonest, as to become a captain of a band of robbers. Some time after John had occasion to inquire of the pastor concerning the young man, who told him, that he was now dead to God, and inhabited a mountain over against his church. John in the vehemence of his charity, went to the place, and exposed himself to be taken by the robbers. Bring me, says he to your captain, who beheld him coming. As soon as he knew the Apostle, he was struck with shame and fled. The aged apostle following him cried, My son, why flyest thou from thy father unarmed and old? Fear not, as yet there remaineth hope of salvation. Believe me, Christ hath sent me. Hearing this the young man stood still trembled, and wept bitterly. John prayed, exhorted, and brought him back to the society of Christians, nor did he leave him, till he found him fully restored by divine grace.

We have yet another story of St John short, but pleasing, and which has had the good fortune to pass uncontradicted. Being now very old and unable to say much in Christian assemblies, "Children love one another," was his constantly repeated sermon. Being asked why he told them only one thing, he answered that nothing else was needed.

RURAL ECONOMY.

Valuable Experiments to show the difference between raw corn, and corn meal cooked, as food for Hogs.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of the American Farmer, dated Dec. 18, 1824.

"Some two years ago, while I was confined to the fireside by a cold, I amused myself with several experiments to find the increase by weight of corn, rye, shorts, &c, by boiling and cooking, with a view to economising hog food. I soon became convinced, that wonderful effects might be easily produced; and though I then made a regular record of what I did, strange to tell, I have never till lately attempted to put my theory into practice. I have had, since the first day of December, an actual experiment going on between raw corn and meal, made into good thick mush; two pigs, of about one hundred weight each, have been eating seven pounds each of raw corn per twenty four hours; and two others of near the same size, have had exactly seven pounds of meal made into good mush between them. These seven pounds of meal, cooked into the state of good stiff mush, weigh from 28 to 33 pounds. I [illegible] pig accurately at the outset, and weighed again two days since, to mark the progress. The two eating fourteen pounds of corn per day, had increased seventeen pounds in sixteen days; the two eating seven pounds of cooked meal per day, had increased twenty-four pounds in the same time. Here is a saving of one half the corn. I shall carry them on till early in January, when I shall kill them."

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor, transmits to the House of Assembly, a copy of his dispatch to his Majesty Secretary of State for the Colonies, accompanying the report of the Commissioners for the improvement of the internal Navigation, together with a Copy of His Lordship's reply thereto.

Government House York, Jan. 18, 1825.

MY LORD,

In compliance with an address of the Legislature, I have the honor to transmit to your Lordship a report of certain Commissioners appointed under an Act of this Province, passed in the year 1822, for the purpose of exploring the Country with a view to ascertain the most practicable and desirable improvements which may be made in its Internal Navigation; and for obtaining plans and estimates of the expense at which such Improvements may be effected Your Lordship, I regret to say, would not be warranted in inferring from these preliminary measures taken by the Legislature that the Province either possesses the means, or indulge any very sanguine hope of being able, without assistance, to undertake speedily works of such magnitude as those to which this report relates. At the same time, I am convinced it will be very satisfactory to your Lordship to find that public attention is given thus early to objects of such vast importance to the security and commerce of this Province. The natural advantages Upper Canada affords for Inland Navigation are perhaps beyond those of any other portion of America of equal extent, and the additional strength and prosperity which the improvement of these advantages, in the manner proposed by the Commissioners would ensure to the Province, would be cheaply purchased, I am persuaded, by the cost it would occasion.

The Legislature is strongly impressed with the conviction that His Majesty's Government desires to lend its aid in any practicable manner to the advancement of this valuable Colony, and it would be a subject of great congratulation if your Lordship could devise [illegible] mutually burdensome to the mother country, of affording countenance and support to exertions so disproportionate to the present resources of the Province.

I have the honor to be, My Lord,

Your Lordship's Most Ob't Humble Serv't

SIR,

In answer to your letter of the first of April in which you inform me that in compliance with an address of the Legislature, you have transmitted to me a report of certain Commissioners appointed under an Act of the Province of Upper Canada, passed in the year 18-2, with a view to ascertain the most practicable and desirable improvements which might be made in its Internal Navigation &c. I have to state that you correctly appreciate the satisfaction which I feel in finding that public attention is given to objects of such decisive importance to the security and commerce of the Province.

You state that the Legislature of Upper Canada is strongly impressed with the conviction that His Majesty's Government desires to lend its aid in any practicable manner to the advancement of the interests of that valuable Colony.

If I understand the report it has two distinct objects in view, the one, a canal connecting Lakes Ontario and Erie, the other a water communication from Lake Ontario to the Rideau River And that a calculation has been made that the expense of the latter undertaking will amount to £70,000, and I presume that this project is formed with the view of joining the water communication now in progress.

With reference to this latter object, in particular I shall feel myself justified in recommending in the strongest manner the advancement of a Loan of £70,000 Sterling, from the Treasury provided that the Legislature of Upper Canada will give ample security for the payment of an adequate interest and for the progressive liquidation of the principal, charged on specific Taxes to be imposed for that special purpose and pledged inalienably for the accomplishment of this object.

In selecting this latter object as that which is in every sense the most important, you will not understand that I mean by any means to reject the other project, but I am doubtfull whether it will not be more prudent to begin with one undertaking at a time. I shall, however, have equal pleasure in recommending the Canal from Lake Erie the following year, if upon reconsideration the Assembly shall feel desirous of undertaking it simultaneously with the water communication with the Rideau.

If therefore you can supply me with the information that this proposition will be accepted by the Legislature in the same spirit in which it is offerd, I will lose no time in conveying the recommendation with b, subject to such conditions, I am prepared to promise.

I have the Honor to be, Sir,

Your most Ob't Humble Serv.

man, who is a partner of his; it appears he is suspected of forgery Immediately after Mr Savery saw his partner come alongside the Hudson, he threw himself over board but was prevented being drowned. He then attempted to make away with himself by dashing his head against the side of the ship. He is at present at the Vine Inn, in custody of two peace officers, who are forced to watch him very diligently to prevent his committing suicide He is in a dreadful state of mind, and acknowledges that his crime is as bad as Fauntleroy's. On the Tide Surveyor's mustering the crew of the Hudson, Mr Savery passed by the name of Henry Serrington.—Globe and Traveller.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

LONDON, Dec. 20.

Mr. Henry Savery, whose apprehensions on a charge of forgery has been already mentioned, is the third son of Mr. Savery, the principal in the banking house of Sa[illegible] Co.

It appears that Mr Henry Savery has latterly carried on business in Bristol, as a sugar baker, in conjunction with a gentleman named Saward. Mr H Savery had failed in 1819, owing at that time a large sum of money, and the capital he put into the business by Mr. Saward not being equal to the extent to which Mr. Savery subsequently pushed their business, he supplied their deficiency by means of bills with fictitious addresses — These, he has been negociating for nearly three years, and the punctuality with which they were discharged, gave him a facility of raising funds to any amount — The execution of Mr. Fauntleroy had, it is supposed, made a deep impression on his mind, for it is now ascertained, that about that period he made preparations for his flight into another country, and had proceeded to London with that intention a few we ks since.— When there a circumstance occurred which induced him to accelerate his departure, before he had completed his arrangements—which ultimately led to the discovery of his practices He had always made these bills payable at the bank of Sir John Perring & Co.— There was one of £1250. which fell due on the day after his arrival in London, for the payment of which he had provided by a check, but, in that intended payment there was some delay or irregularity; and the bill finately taken up and paid, it was not paid in time to prevent the bill being noted and returned to Bristol — The absence of Mr. H Savery, and the discovery that this bill was a forgery, induced his partner, Mr. Saward, to proceed to London in search of him. At Bath he met Mrs Savary, who having as she supposed left her husband fairly beyond the reach of pursuit, at once disclosed his destination to America. Mr. Saward, however, proceeded on his journey, and in London received such information as led to the apprehension of Mr H Savery at Cowes, as already stated The vessel was actually under weigh at the time of Mr. Saward's arrival, and had he been half an hour later he could not have reached the ship The conduct of Mr. H. Savery after his apprehension, we have already detailed. When the charges against him were made known in Bristol, nothing could exceed the general consternation they created. Mr Savery, the banker had unfortunately, on other occasions before this experienced the painful feeling which arose from final misconduct The rumoured magnitude of these illegal transactions and the certainty of Mr Fauntleroy, produced as may be supposed the most poignant feelings.— If any consolation could be given to a father having a son under such circumstances, it was to be found in the general sympathy shewn in this melancholy occasion by the inhabitants of Bristol. The principal creditors of the firm are Mr. Protheroe, for be ween 3 and £10 000 and Mr. Alderman Campbell, for between 3 and £4000 At a meeting held on the occasion, it was understood that the total of the debts did not exceed £30. 000, towards which there were assets for £23.000 — The high respect in which Mr Savery, the elder, was held, joined to the dislike now generally entertained to prosecute in cases of forgery, induced holders of the bills to pause, before they could decide on the adoption of such a measure. Mr H Savery, however, as it is now generally understood, took up an impression that as the bills he had uttered are only what are called "kites," with fictitious names and addresses, he could not be convicted of forgery, and with an obstinacy bordering on madness, he refused to give up, or account for funds known to be under his control. Thus, in spite of the late awful warning presented by the fate of Mr. Henry Fauntleroy, he has thrown away the chance afforded him by the humane forbearance of his creditors, and tempted his own fate. The holders of the bills at length laid informations against him, and a warrant being issued, he was on Wednesday, brought into Bristol, in custody of an officer, by the Portsmouth mail and conveyed at two o'clock before the magistrate sitting at the Guildhall, for examination.

He appeared very faint and exhausted, looked wildly at the crowd assembled to witness his arrival, and supported himself on the arm of the officer. He answered the few questions put to him by the magistrate so incoherently, that they directed him to be conveyed to Bridewell, and to be brought up again on Saturday for re examination.

Since his apprehension he has exhibited great despondency, and we [illegible] to be [illegible] declaring on insanity. When the coach arrived within half a mile of Bristol, he appeared totally unconcerned as to his fate, showing his indifference by singing several light songs. The moment he perceived the crowd assembled to witness his examination, he became so much depressed as he had been previously elated. The amount of the bills turns out to be of much greater extent than was originally supposed, being nearly forty thousand pounds.

The banking house is not in the slightest degree affected by the circumstance; in fact, it is very well known that the balances in the several banks throughout the kingdom, have been greatly reduced since the failure of Marsh, Stracey, Fauntleroy & Co.; for the public have not yet recovered the panic infused by the circumstances of that failure.

* There has been already a conviction on bills of this description. A Mr. Nash, a merchant, was tried and convicted for uttering a bill, drawn by a fictitious person, but was afterwards pardoned.

A discovery has recently been made in a mercantile establishment in the environs of Bishop gate street, of a fraudulent nature, to the extent of several thousand pounds The confidential managing clerk, who had been upwards of twenty five years in the house, is now in custody and we understand will shortly undergo an examination. The deficiency already discovered amounts to £7500, but as the books have only been examined for seven years back, further sums are expected to be discovered —Times.

It is rumoured that an establishment has suspended its payments in one of the principal cities in the empire, and that circumstances are connected with this event which will create univer al interest as soon as they become publicly known.—ib.

We regret to state that we have received information of the failure of another bank, in a city of the West of England, of which the transactions were very extensive, under circumstances that will, if our information be correct, excite much attention.—Morning Chronicle.

In the following curious and amusing article the public may learn, I fancy, a better method of recovering lost or missing property, of small bulk but often of great value, than can be discovered from ten grounds or a pack of cards in the hands of the most skilful fortune teller Evening Post.

From a late London Paper.

Mary-le Bone—Profits of Dust Sifting — A decent looking woman, of the name of Wheeler, was put to the bar, charged with felony, by Mary Collins, a dust sifter residing in Bell street, Lisson grove, whose evidence was remarkable for the extraordinary discoveries it incidently contained of the large profits obtained from the apparently humble vocation of dust sifting. The details will be at once int resting and instructive to the public. The complainant stated that the prisoner had been employed by her to sit up with a sick child and that during the time she was thus employed, an old pocket, containing a great variety of valuables was abstracted from its usual place of deposit. The prisoner having access to the place suspicion fell upon her.— The contents of the pocket were thus described:—One coral necklace, large beads; one do. with pearl clasp; several handsome brooches; five gold seals; some gold rings; several gold shirt pins; a quantity of house heads, broken bits of gold and silver, &c.; Mr Rawlinson expressed his surprise at her having such a motley assortment of valuables by her. Complainant—Your Worship, we find them amongst the dust. Mr Rawlinson—Indeed, what all these articles? Complainant—Oh, your Worship, that's nothing; we find almost every small article that can be mentioned. We are employed by Mr. Kelly, the dust contractor, who allows us 8d per load for sifting, besides which we have all the spoons and other articles which may be found among the dust. Mr. Rawlinson—That's dustmen's law, I suppose; but how many silver spoons may you find in the course of a year? Complainant—It is impossible to say; sometimes more and sometimes less.

Mr. Rawlinson declared that what she had been telling him was quite novel to him. The urbane manner of the worthy magistrate won upon the old lady, and made her quite communicative. She had for two or three occupation eight years, and what with the "perquisites" (id est articles found), and the saving from "hard labour," she had realized enough to think about house building and had then a house erecting which she expected would cost at least £300. She had deposited £100 in the hands of Mr. Kelly, in part payment; and as a proof that all was not boasting, she produced her box, in which Mr. Morris counted thirty nine sovereigns two £5 bank notes, and several guineas and half sovereigns. She produced also a variety of duplicates of different found articles, which she disposed of by pledging to different pawnbrokers. They consisted of finger rings, silver table and tea spoons, silver forks, gold broaches, &c. In respect to the poor woman accused, no evidence was adduced to corroborate the suspicion, and she was therefore discharged. In justice to her it ought to be stated that she attended voluntarily.

Affecting Recognition.—A few years ago, in working to establish a communication between two shafts of a mine at Falkin, the capital of Dalecarlia, the body of a miner was discovered in a state of perfect preservation, and impregnated with vitriolic water. It was quite soft, but hardened on being exposed to the air. No one could indentify the body; it was merely remembered that the accident by which he had been buried in the bosom of the earth, had taken place about 50 years ago. All inquiries about the name of the sufferer had already ceased, when a decrepid old woman supported on crutches, slowly advanced towards the corps, and knew it to be that of a young man to whom she had been promised in marriage more than half a century ago. She threw herself on the corps, which had all the appearance of a bronze statue, buried it in tears and, fainted with joy, at having once more beheld the object of her affections. It is easier to conceive than to trace the singular contrast afforded by the couple; the one buried fifty years ago, still retaining the appearance of youth; while the other, weighed down by age, evinced all the fervor of youthful love.

Editorial Commentary.

THE Editor of this paper being the Agent for the Petitioners, complaining of the undue Election and return of G. S. The London Gazette announces the further prorogation of Parliament from Jan. 6, to Feb. 3.

The London Courier, in noticing the rumors which have grown out of the frequent meetings of the Cabinet Council, observes, that they are not worth contradicting—and adds, that "at no period has the aspect of public affairs been more gratifying, more pacific, and more calculated to inspire the most sanguine hopes of a long continuance of prosperous tranquility, than they are at this moment."

Foreign Intelligence.

(From the last French Papers.)

The tremendous hurricane of the 18th and 19th of November presents a most important phenomenon.—The direction of it appears to have been as follows:— It began upon the shores of England and Ireland, and, after having wrought into fury the Northern Sea, and caused numerous shipwrecks upon the Northern coast of Jutland, passed by Gothenburg and Stockholm, continually rising more and more from south west to North east. In traversing Sweden it swept away whole forests; but it was naturally in the Gulph of Finland that its ravages would be most severely felt, in violence having kept up to that spot. In an instant it drove the waters of the Baltic into the Gulph of Finland, which, being terminated by a point towards the East, must have experienced, particularly towards that extremity, a sudden and immense elevation of its waters. This line, which appears to form a double curve, determined by some lofty lands, prevents upon the map, a developement of from 370 to 400 leagues, over which the hurricane travelled in a few minutes, and perhaps even in one minute; for we have not yet precise information upon the exact moment when this phenomenon burst upon the different countries which it visited.

The city and environs of St. Petersburgh were thrown into unspeakable consternation on the 19th of November, by a violent gale from the South-west.—The tempest began at two o'clock in the morning, and blowing against the current of the Neva, the water at nine o'clock, was upon a level with the parapet walls of the river and the canals. The wind then blew stronger, and the river breaking over every barrier, inundated the city. In Newsky Prospect, the principal street of St Petersburgh, where the best shops are situated, the water rose to a height of ten feet. All the cellars, and even the first stories of many houses, and the Exchange sugar warehouses, were under water. The damage done it is impossible to estimate. Many persons who were before in easy circumstances are now reduced to beggary. The bridges over the river and most of those over the canals, were destroyed or seriously damaged. Boats laden with provisions and goods were carried over the quays and wrecked even in the heart of the city. The new pier preparing for the bridge of the summer garden had been finished at a great expense, was thrown down and the garden laid waste, large trees even, having been torn up by the roots.—Hundreds of persons must have perished. All the cattle in the markets of St. Petersburgh were drowned and the horses could only be saved by lifting them by main force to the first stories of the houses. It was not till three o'clock in the afternoon, that the wind going down and changing its direction, the water subsided, so that at 5 o'clock the streets were clear of it. The capital could not be lighted at night. The morning of the 20th it presented a scene of desolation. The ovens having being destroyed by the water and cellars filled, in which the flour is kept, it was difficult to supply the people with bread. Whole houses, with their occupants, were engulphed by the flood. Waggons with four horses, heavily laden, were carried away. The inundation was greater than that of 1797, when 3000 persons and much cattle perished at St. Petersburgh. At that period the Neva rose only 14 feet above its level. It now rose 16½ feet.

Intelligence from St. Petersburgh, represents the catastrophe as much greater than had been anticipated. The lost as of seven thousand persons have been found in the houses, and eight thousand persons are still missing. Nearly all the provisions of the capital have been destroyed, and as the winter is at hand, it is to be feared that the population remaining will suffer the horrors of famine.

Other letters, (which probably exaggerate) say the whole regiment of imperial carabanier guards, men and horses have perished. A vessel of 100 guns has completely disappeared; and all the imperial vessels in the harbor of Cronstadt are lost. Burying grounds have been washed away, and the dead bodies were floating through the streets. Whole stores of coffe and sugar have been destroyed; those articles have risen 50 per cent.

Five leagues round the city of St. Petersburgh, have all been destroyed. Within a few years, it is a remarkable fact, that Russia has seen both her capitals destroyed, one by fire, the other by water.

According to a letter of the 23d from Stockholm, the same hurricane raged with equal fury in the Swedish capital as well as in Gottenburgh, Wisburg, Jutland, &c. At Stockholm vessels were torn from their moorings and driven against each other, the roofs of houses were carried away, and the roads were completely blocked up with trees torn up by the roots, that travellers were under the necessity of cutting their way through with hatchets.

[From the Maysville, (Ky.) Eagle.]

HORRIBLE ATTEMPT TO MURDER.

The following statement has just been detailed by Mr. Vincent A. Bouge, who has escaped by a miraculous interference of Providence, from the death which awaited him, by a predetermined blow.

Mr. Bogue is a gentleman well known in Pittsburg, where he wrote in the prothonotary's office several years, and has lately become a resident of New Orleans. He left Pittsburg in September last, in a small flat boat, loaded with groceries and dry goods, on a trading voyage. He took into his employment there a young man named William Wilson, Jr. but whose real name is believed to be Robert Whitaker, and who appears to have formerly lived in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania. With Wilson, Mr. B. states, that he was much pleased, and that he placed much confidence in him, so much so, as to entrust him selling goods and receiving money, in many instances. All the way down, till they reached Maysville, which was Dec 19th, there was generally boats near them, some times in company, and some times trading along side. They stopped at Lavana, a town below Maysville, Dec 19th, and as nearly as the goods had been sold out, Mr. B. mentioned to Wilson that he would float to Cincinnati the next day, and wind up the concern and close the voyage. Mr. B. had at this time in his trunk, 3500 or 4,000 dollars, and about 3 or 400 dollars worth of goods on hand and here it was that Wilson determined upon executing his bloody and horrible purpose. At 9 o'clock, Sunday night, Dec. 19th Mr. B. went to bed, his birth being astern, and while sound asleep, Wilson approached his birth with a lighted candle in one hand, and a loaded pistol in the other, and discharged it at his breast.—Mr B aroused at the report, sprung—the bed clothes being set on fire by the powder—and was encountered by Wilson, who told him that the boat had been attacked by thieves and while Mr. B. hurried to the bow of the boat, Wilson struck him down senseless with a club, and then cut his throat with a razor from ear to ear, in a most horrid manner, by three several cuts!—From loss of blood or by the intercession of an over-ruling destiny, Mr. B. again recovered his senses and rose, and after a struggle with Wilson, grasped a fowling piece, which had been generally kept loaded with shot for killing small game on their way down. With the feeble strength he could exert, he cocked the gun, and aimed at Wilson, threatning to shoot him if he did not row the boat ashore, and call for assistance to save his life; (for by this time he had discovered that the boat was floating down stream)—Wilson, terrified or o verawed, was compelled to row the boat ashore, Mr. B at the same time having the gun extended with one arm, and the other pressing a blanket into the cuts on his throat to staunch the blood.—As the boat came near the shore which was below Augusta, Wilson sprung out and fastened the boat to a tree. Mr. B cut the boat loose and drifted down. Being faint with loss of blood, he hailed a flat boat in sight, and implored for assistance to a murdered man; but no attention being paid to his solicitations, he dropped again into his birth, and there lay weltering in his blood until an hour or two before day break, when the boat drifted between two trees, at the shore of the town of Neville, 14 miles below Augusta. At day break he crawled up into town, gave the alarm, and medical aid was called in immediately. Every thing about him was a mass of clotted blood, and his appearance frightful. His physicians say he will yet recover.

From a variety of circumstances it appears that Wilson's plan was to have sunk his victim in the river as soon as he had murdered him, and then to have taken possession of boat, goods and money; disposed of the remainder of the goods and made off with his booty. It also appears that the pistol bullet roled out of the muzzle before it was discharged, and thus Mr B's life was preserved. Mr. B. has lost a pocket book containing $500 in notes of the U. States' bank, principally of the Orleans branch, three notes $50 each, and the rest 20's and 10's—and a bank book containing $55.—

Wilson has been in custody since the crime was committed, but escaped yesterday from the persons who were taking him to Georgetown jail, Brown County. It is supposed he is making his way to Canada. He is between 21 and 24 years old grey eyes, fresh complexion well proportioned, about 5 feet 10 inches high, has lost two teeth, from the upp r jaw, one on the right and one on the left; prominent nose—when he laughs the inner skin of his upper lip appears. Had on a blue coater, gilt buttons, brown linsey pantaloons, pegged bootees, white stockings, toilleatt vest, and has a black silk handkerchief round his neck—Irish linen shirt, rather coarse—when telling a story, laughs. A reward of $100 is offered for his apprehension and confinement in any jail in this state, by Mr. Bogue.

EMIGRATION.

The Emigrants Note Book and Guide; with recollections of Canada &c. by Lieutenant J. C. Morgan &c. &c. continued from Vol 5.

But it is equally needless for us to convey our readers across the Atlantic, up the magnificent St. Laurence, &c, or to treat them with an epitome of the early history of Canada, which we think we must have done at least thrice since we began the Editorship of the Literary Gazette; or again to go over the circumstances of the late American war. We shall therefore restrict ourselves with stating of the gallant Lieutenant's book that it contains a good deal of information which may be of use to Emigrants; some effusion of sentiment very honourable to his feelings, but misplaced in his volume; an Episode of a Highland Uncle Toby and Corporal Trim in Canada; a few facetious remarks; and a desperate fling at lawyers, whome he seems to abhor from the very bottom of his soul. Perhaps he has suffered from them; and prefers the Mosquitos, which only bite through a two inch board; indeed, a bark wood, a savage wood, or any kind of wood in America, or elsewhere, he evidently considers to be infinitely better than that wood among ourselves, which is called the King's Bench.

Mr. Curr is an agriculturist, who has visited Hobart Town and Port Jackson; and he gives us his reasons for thinking Van Diemen's Land superior to every other spot on the world's surface for emigration. Yet he is rather impartial; for we do not think the following pictures very attractive. Of Hobart Town;

"The moral condition of the lower classes, consisting chiefly of prisoners, or of those who are free by the expiration of their term of servitude, is neither better nor worse than might be expected. A more efficient police, which however might be difficult to form out of such bad materials, would considerably improve the comforts of the colony. Daring Robaries, though of frequent occurrence, have certainly diminished during the last eighteen months: still those who are possessed of any thing to lose, are harassed by a continual feeling of insecurity, and are constrained to practise the poet's injunction.

"Now ere you sleep.
See that your polish'd arms be primed with care,
And drop the night bolt; ruffians are abroad.
And the first larum of the cock's shrill throat
May prove a trumpet summoning your ear
To horrid sounds of hostile feet within."

"Though the receivers of stolen property are numerous and notorious, personal outrages are happily very rare. The chances of escape from justice are so numerous, that it is seldom necessary for the robber to add the crime of murder for his security. Though the morality of the Colony is, generally speaking, at the lowest ebb, instances of improvement are not wholly wanting, part cularly among that class of persons who have received the benefit of education. Many of these rise to independence, and some to opulence; but that they often redeem their lost reputation, is more than I am prepared to state. In Van Diemen's Land, a line of demarcation has ever existed between convicts and free persons which the future acquisition of their freedom has never enabled them to overstep. It has been otherwise in New South Wales."

In the country, the farm-houses—

"The cottage is usually built of sods, logs, or mud, and thatched with straw; a few logs laid together in the style of the American fence, perhaps compose a pigsty; and an open detached yard of the same materials, serves to contain the working cattle.

"These are in a majority of cases the only features of a farm house in Van Diemen's Land unless, indeed, we think proper to add the disgusting appearance of wool, bones sheep-skins, wasted manure, and the confused heaps of ploughs, harrows, carts, fire wood and water-casks, with a few quarters of mutton or kangaroo hanging on a neighbouring tree, and a numerous tribe of dogs and idlers, the former barking, the latter lounging about. Every thing betokens waste and disorder, the total absence of industry and economy. As to the thrifty mistress of the house; her place is too frequently supplied (among the lower classes in particular) by a being of a different nature, generally a convict, or one free by the expiration of her term of transportation. In respect to the dairy and poultry, the latter are indeed generally to be met with; but the possessor of an hundred head of cattle often cannot command milk to his tea.

"Such is, for the most part, the uninviting state of a farm in Van Diemen's Land, so opposite to the comfort neatness, convenience and frugality, which are conspicuous on the first approach to houses of a similar class in England."

On the South Esk River, Norfolk Plains, &c. the country is lovely and fertile part of the country—

"Let the settler beware how he places himself amongst these people, for they are in general as poor and as flagitious as idleness, encouraged by the almost spontaneous fertility of their lands, can make them. Woe to the fat wethers, and even to the pregnant ewes of their more wealthy neighbours! None of these depredators will want meat while there is a flock of sheep within a convenient distance; and few of them will want rum while those who sell it encourage their depredations. I am acquainted with a gentleman of this neighbourhood, who, with three thousand acres in one spot of the finest land and richest pasturage in the Island, dares not feed a single sheep of all his large flocks upon it.

"Sheep stealing in this Island, but more particularly in this part of it, is organized into a most complete system, and various methods are adopted in the commission of the robbery, and in the secretion of the flocks when stolen.

"In some cases the shepherd is a party concerned; and where his integrity has been corrupted, the matter becomes simple enough. In other cases, where the flock is large, consisting perhaps of a thousand or more and extending over a considerable surface of ground it is scarcely possible that the shepherd can have the whole in view at one time. It is well known that the strongest and best sheep will always lead the flock; and the robbers, taking advantage of this, break into the midst of them, and cut off a number of the leaders frequently from two to three hundred, but usually not less than from one hundred to one hundred and fifty.—These they drive away, and if they are not missed for an hour or two, there is a great probability that they will evade pursuit; for the shepherd, at first only suspecting his loss, will count his sheep to ascertain it; and before this is done, and he knows which way to pursue, the robbers have gained a start of several miles. The sheep, once clear off their own beat, are driven about in various directions, to disguise and confuse their tract; and when removed to a sufficient distance, from twenty to fifty miles, if wanted for immediate use, are killed, and perhaps salted, in some secret part of the bush, or left in the flock of an accomplice, usually a small proprietor, who has previously agreed for the purchase, and the price, generally in ardent spirits, is paid to the plunderers. If the sheep are kept to be alive, they are driven to a considerable distance, and in some unfrequented place, where secret stock yards are kept up, unknown to any but these depredators, they proceed to disfigure them. If pitch-marked they are in the first place shorn; any remarkable spotted sheep being generally destroyed. If they are marked by any notch in the ear, the tip is cut off; or if the notch be cut too near the head, the ear is taken off altogether. If, as is often the case, they are branded on the face, the brand is altered by the addition of some other strokes; thus, I is easily converted into D and several other letters; L by prolonging the first stroke down wards and adding another on the right hand, is converted into H, and the same with many others. It is the letter be such that it admits of no alteration, it is covered entirely with another brand, which renders it a mere blotch, but probably puts it out of the power of any person to swear to the property.

"After they have recovered from their sores, and their coats are a little grown, they make their appearance in the flock of some persons known to be possessed of sheep, and in several cases have actually been sold again to their rightful but unsuspecting proprietors.

"Thus distructive practice is carried on to an extent which would scarcely be credited by those who are not acquainted with the colony. An individual has been known to lose more than one thousand head in the course of a year; and instances have occured where five or six hundred have been driven off at once and irrecoverably lost."

Again:

"And how is the work of the farm carried on? The labourer is a slave, with no motive to impel him but fear; his maintenance must be provided let him work or no. He is therefore idle and discontented may worse, he is continuanctions and insolent. If the master be easy the man is easier still, if he be generous, his good nature is imposed upon; if he be strict, there are a thousand ways of retaliating; his ploughs are broaeu his sickle lost, his working cattle are sure to be over or lame when required for the most important services. Should it unfortunately happen that, from the difficulty of providing meat or flour in remote situations, or, as is more frequent, from the wasteful extravagance of the men, they should be a day upon short allowance, they go down in a body to Hobart Town to make their complaint of being starved. In a word, the master is supposed to earn and perquisite.

"There are some of the drawbacks from the comfort of a settler's life, and there are but few of the inhabitants who will not feelingly bear witness to the truth of the picture."

For ourselves, we are not what is termed very particular in our notions of elegibility, comfort, and happiness. Good things we certainly like in more ways than one; but heaven preserve us from the good things which Mr Curr enumerates among those wine hiccinians (page v.) to "point out Van Diemen's Land as a place which possesses many peculiar advantages" for Emigrants! We have quoted indeed but a few items, but if these are insufficient to tempt the wanderer to pitch his tent there, he may strengthen his resolution by going through the volume wherence they have been transcribed. He will find, in addition, that there is paper money worth nothing; houses at dear rents recommended by being peculiarly liable to plunder: bad roads; a profligate population, justice inefficient, cattle but no dairies; and butchers meat scarce and high priced; agriculture not prospering; and a long and painful voyage to be endured before he can reach this Paradise —of Fools.

* Upon this latter subject, Lieut. Morgan tells us however a new anecdote. The commanding Officer of the Upper Canada Militia, which the good service, was a Captain of the 8th regiment, who held a brevet rank, with the local one of Lieutenant-Colonel whilst detached,—and I well remember an anecdote told of him at the time, too good to pass unnoticed. This gallant son of the Emerald Isle having been severely wounded in the action of (Lundy's Lane,) made the following laconic report of his situation to the Lieut. Colonel who commanded the 8th.

Dear———, I was shot through the head yesterday morning, but they tell me I am very well, and I think so myself. A plague on that villanious salt petre I think it will be the death of me at last. Your's, &c.

Mr. Perkin's Extraordinary Steam Gun.—A discovery has been made which will, in all probability, adjust the account between population and food in the most satisfactory manner. We allude to the new Steam Gun of Mr. Perkins, which promises very fair to send the whole race of heroes to their long homes in a very short time. According to the following account, which we extract from the London Mechanic's Register, the effect of this invention will leave every plague or pestilence at an immeasurable distance behind in point of destructiveness. Ten of his guns supposing one shot in twenty only to tell, will sweep away 150,000 men in a single day!

"We were enabled on Wednesday to ough the kindness of Mr. Perkins, to examine minutely, at his manufactory to the Regent's Park, the extraordinary powers of mechanism called the Steam Gun. It is simply formed by introducing a barrel into the steam generator of any engine, and by the addition of two pipes one into the chamber of the gun, introducing a quantity of balls, which, by the action of a handle to the chamber, are dropped into the barrel and fired one by one at the rate of from 4 to 500 in the minute. The expansive force of the steam which rushes from the generator and propels the balls is about 700 lbs to the square inch, with their force a musket ball fired against an iron plate at the distance of 100 feet from the gun, is completely flattened; and when a force of 840 lbs. to the sq. a inch is applied, the ball is actually driven to piece. In such a way that none of its fragments can be collected. 4. the gun is now fixed, having a direct communication through a wall with one of Perkin's engines, but will of course be removed from the spot; the barrel merely being susceptible of alteration; but in the event of the invention being applied to the purposes of warfare it would be easy to attach a portable steam engine of small dimensions, which could be removed with as much rapidity as any piece of ordinance now in use.

The cost of such a machine altogether would be comparatively small, and as Mr Perkins is about to construct a 4 pounder, which can be moved about with great facility by two horses, the public will have a good opportunity of judging of its practical merits, of which however, there cannot be a doubt after the experiments already made at the manufactory. The most extraordinary part of the affair is, the smallness in the expense in charging artillery of this nature compared with that of the present system. In Mr. Perkin's Steam Gun, one pound weight of coal is found to produce the same effect as four pounds weight of gunpowder, viz. one pound of coals will generate sufficient steam to expel, with equal force, as many balls as four pounds of powder. Of the rapidity, with which the discharges are made, we say little after what we have observed of the mode in which the balls are expelled, but there is another great advantage, which, on the score of humanity, deserves commendation. An explosion from this gun is next to impossible; for the greater the rapidity of firing, the less is the danger, as the stream of vapour rushes forward without check and finds a vent in the open air. How many lives on the contrary, have been lost on the bursting of our common gold pieces, and how little reliance is to be placed upon the greatest care in cleansing them in the heat of a battle. Ten guns upon this principle would in a field of battle, be more than equal to 200 on the present system; and a vessel of only six guns would be rendered more than a match for a seventy four.

"If any two rulers of the earth were to know that in the event of declaring war against each other, a plague or pestilence would blast both armies, and sweep them from the face of the earth, they would pause before they made such a declaration; but what plague what pestilence, would exceed, in its effects, those of the Steam Gun?—Five hundred balls fired every minute, and one out of twenty to reach its mark why ten of such guns would destroy 150,000 daily.—Mr Perkins considers steam discovery as in its infancy, for he says he is convinced that a steam engine might be made to throw a ball of a ton weight, from Dover to Calais."

Canadian Commissioners.—The London papers from the 10th to the 23d of December, contain several articles in relation to the Canada Company. The Tele- scope of the 16th contains the following paragraph:—

"The Commissioners appointed to proceed to North America are Col Cockburn, Mr. McGillivray, Co's. Hervey, Mr. Galt, and Mr. Davison, two being appointed by the government, two by the Canada Company, and one by the consent of both parties. Their object is to value the lands, reserved to the government and clergy, which are very extensive and valuable. The Commissioners will meet at Lord Bathurst's at two o'clock, on Thursday next, to receive their final instructions."

The Eclipse contains the paragraph below:—

"We understand that a ship of war has been ordered to get ready, for the purpose of conveying to New-York the government and Canada Company's Commissioners, who will sail early next month. From New York they will proceed to Albany, and then probably, by the line of the new canal to Lake Erie, at the head of which, on the banks of the Detroit River, they will begin their labors, as spring commences in the south-western extremity of Upper Canada, earlier by some weeks than at Glengary, which is the north-east boundary of the province."

York, 30th Dec. 1824.

Sir,

I have the honor to report to you for the information of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, the destruction, this morning, of the main body and the north wing of the Parliament House.

The fire appears to have originated in the north wing occupied as my office, and Committee Rooms, and, before the alarm was made general (between one and two o'clock) to have involved in flames the whole of the interior of that wing, so that not the smallest articles pertaining to the Assembly Office escaped.

The Library, I am happy to say has sustained but little damage, and the furniture of both the Legislative Chambers, with the entire of the office of the Legislative Council has been preserved, with no more injury than is unavoidably attendant on such a disaster.

Measures have been taken for the security of the property rescued from the flames, and, a coping your suggestion offered on the spot, I have directed its removal into the vacant appartments of the Hospital as a temporary shelter until the pleasure of His Excellency is known.

In enquiring into the cause of this, I may say public calamity, I shall make every research which is within my reach, and shall take the liberty of submitting the result to His Excellency without delay

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your Ob't humble Serv't.

That on Wednesday the 29th he went down with his daughter for the purpose of having the several apartments scrubbed and washed out, that while his daughter was so employed, he made a fire in the Clerk's Room, in the stove which warmed the two Rooms usually occupied by the Assistant Clerks, and in the Committee Room on the second floor, that the fire in the latter room was quite consumed by three o'clock in the afternoon with the exception of a few coals and these were secured by the andirons being crossed over them and the feuder properly placed in front of the chimney.

That the fire in the Clerks Room was also consumed and the remaining coals perfectly well secured with the andirons and fender and that a piece of wood between it.

That on examining the stove which warms the rooms of the Assistants Clerks, he found the wood consumed but the rooms being still damp he put one piece of wood into the stove and closed both doors of the stove, and locked the door of the room, and on his going into the centre room he perceived a little smoke which soon disappeared on the door being opened—on examining he could observe a slight puffing of smoke from the first elbow of the stove pipe which he attributed to the fire being rekindled by the piece of wood which he had put into the stove, that he then secured the window blinds, locked the doors, and in about half an hour after his having put this one piece of wood in the stove he left the place under the firm conviction that no danger could be apprehended from fire, and further this deponent saith not.

Editorial Commentary.

THE Northumberland Contested Election is decided, and Mr. EWART takes his seat.

IF there is any person who looks to the Editor of this Paper for a contradiction of that most infamous statement which appears in the Advocate relative to the printing of the Statutes of last Session, we can assure that person that the statement is, in itself, so palpably and egregiously false, as to require no comment from Mr. F—; yet, at the same time, we are authorised to assert Mr. F's perfect readiness to attend the proper tribunal, and, satisfactorily to answer, any interrogatories that may be put to him on the subject.

As to the Advocate and its unprincipled Editor (we have now no hesitation in using the term) and all other of the thickskulled house hold of Don Mendez Pinto—we can only say that we shall leave him and them, to the enjoyment of the thanks that

> "In their bosoms lodge
> To prick and sting them."

IF the people of this Province have appetites so depraved as to require food of that foul description which is alone afforded by the larder of the Advocate—we must say that our estimate of their character is considerably lowered.—But we hope and believe better things; and, in a little while, when we have more leisure, we will endeavour to shew how far many honest, well-disposed, yeomanry of this country, are gulled and imposed upon by this ranting, raving, moon struck, envious, malignant, Scottish renegado, under the pretence of advocating their rights!

As to the Durham Election it may be well known to the whole country that we have not availed ourselves of the facts in our possession, so prejudice the case, either one way or the other—and we still forbear—till a decision is made, which will probably be this week. when, as we have before promised, a general history of the whole affair shall be given to such as may choose to have it.

BY the arrivals of yesterday, we learn that MR. ADAMS has obtained the Presidency of the United States of America by a majority of six

IT is said the Independence of MEXICO, BUENOS AYRES, and COLOMBIA, has been acknowledged by the British Government.

WE have neither time nor space to add any other extracts.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Colonial Government.—The following changes have, it is said, taken place in the Colonial Government:—Lord Combermere succeeds Sir E. Pegot Commander in Chief in Bengal. The Marquis of Hunly succeeds Lord Charles Somerset at the Cape of Good Hope, where Sir William Piaskett is appointed Colonial Secretary, in the room of Col. Bird. Lord Howard of Effingham, relieves Sir Henry Wardle as Governor of Barbadoes; and Major General Darling proceeds to New South Wales to succeed Sir Thomas Brisbane.

The British Ministry.—Lord Sidmouth's retirement from the British Ministry is attributed to the ascendancy which the more liberal principles of Mr Canning are obtaining particularly in reference to the two great questions in which the Empire is most concerned, as it takes the deepest interest, namely, Catholic Emancipation and South American independence. Mr. Canning's policy is that which must be pursued, sooner or later; and events look as though the time is not far distant Should the Marquess of Wellesley be recalled from the Vice Royalty of Ireland to the Cabinet, the Catholics anticipate an accession of strength, which will hasten the triumph of liberal principles. Speaking of the retirement of Lord Sidmouth, and the influence of Mr. Canning, the Morning Herald says:—

"No change in administration, and perhaps indeed, no political event of any description ever produced so little impression. The unofficial way in which it has been announced to the world arises from the singular tenure by which His Lordship held the rank of a Cabinet Minister—that of having no responsible office in the State attached to it. His Lordship's political decease therefore, is as quiet and unobtrusive as his public life has been. No man has passed through the world with more of integrity and less of fame. He has held in succession most of the first offices in the State, none of which can be be said to have either tarnished or adorned; if we except the Chair of the House of Commons to which he established a reputation never surpassed, and which, perhaps, he was wrong to put to future hazard Though every thing connected with this Lordship's retirement must, for the present, be mere conjecture, there seemes to us little doubt but that his political demise must have been brought about by the same hand which, in earlier life, dealt such merciless blows at his political existence; and, if so, is a proof of the increasing ascendancy of that Right Honorable Gentleman in the Government. Mr. Canning is now, confessedly, the first man in the country. If we except Lord Liverpool, there is no person at all calculated to stand in competition with him—Whether the brilliancy of his imagination is equalled by the soberness of his judgment, is a question about which mankind may be divided But it is essential that great minds should have the ascendancy; and the nature of our Government presents checks enough upon the too ardent indiscretion of a Minister, if there happens to be such a one."

London Bridges.—To settle what toll would be necessary for the projected bridge at Vauxhall, Mr. Dodd, the Engineer, set men to count the passengers on that of Blackfriars. One day produced upwards of 70,000; the average of several days was 40,000

It is calculated that upwards of 20,000 houses have been added to London upon an average for the last three years.

Pacha of Egypt—A confidential agent of the Pacha of Egypt is at present in England, for the purpose of studying its language, manners, and industry. He has a Greek interpreter with him. He has visited various manufactories at Manchester.

LONDON, Dec. 6

A ship saved by a Cat.—The Dart, laden with coals was brought into Plymouth on 6th of December. She had been found at sea deserted by her crew, who, it is supposed, during the late storm, were all swept from the deck, or left the vessel in a small boat. By the act of 3d Edward I cap 4 and 4th of the same King, cap 2, it is enacted, that if a man, a dog, or a cat, escape alive out of a ship, such ship shall not be deemed a wreck; and as a live cat was found on board this vessel she cannot be a droit of the admiralty, but remain in charge of the Sheriff to be restored to the owner.

Mr Savery.—On the 23d of December, Mr. Savery, of Bristol, was brought before the Magistrates, for a long examination, and after a patient and careful inquiry, was finally committed to Newgate (Bristol,) for trial. Mr. Protheroe is reluctantly compelled to be the prosecutor, whose name he has forged for £14,000. A person from Birmingham deposed to such facts, as left the Magistrates no option as to his committal.

Oysters.—Only one vessel appeared at Billingsgate on the 24th December, and oysters in consequence were sold at five guineas a bushel.

Mr. O'Connel.—The following are the seditious words imputed to Mr. O'Connel: After reading a letter from the Secretary, stating, to provide Mr. O'Connel said, "It had been truly said, that oppression drives a wise man mad He hoped the Catholics would never resort to any other mode for the recovery of their just rights; but if that day should come, he trusted that the spirit of a new Bolivar, and such a spirit as animated the Greeks in the cause of freedom, would yet be found in Ireland." Other papers give the speech in terms somewhat different, but without any material alteration in its spirit; the wish for a Bolivar, which forms a prominent feature, not being denied in any quarter.

Miss Foote.—The case of Foote vs. Hayne, was tried in the Court of King's Bench on the 21st of last month, and a part of it occupies 14 close columns of the London Courier. The jury retired for a few minutes, and brought in a verdict for the Plaintiff—damages £3000. It was a breach of promise of marriage, and excited immense interest.

A large Tree.—The Lexington (Ky.) Public Advertiser says that "there now stands on the banks of the Ohio river, in the state of Indiana, opposite the mouth of Salt river, a Sycamore tree which has stabled fourteen head of horses at one time with ample room. It takes 75 long paces to go round the trunk, and you may with perfect ease turn a 14 foot pole in the inside of its cavity."

The Weather.—Persons who keep dairy of the weather, declare that the present season very much resembles that of 1709, which proceeded the year of the great scarcity.

The Steam Gun.—Mr. Perkins, the inventer of the steam gun, has stated, that it might be made to throw a ball of a ton weight from Dover to Calais!!!

Mr. Clay.—It affords us pleasure to state, that there was no truth in the report which produced so much excitement in the city yesterday, that Mr. Clay had fallen in a duel with Dr Darlington, of Pennsylvania. N York.

Self-moving Machine.—Mr. D M'Donald of Sunderland, (Eng.) has invented a "self-moving Machine," for travelling on roads, which has carried seven persons. It is propelled by means of treddles; a man sits behind working the same, and there is a fly wheel operating upon two cog wheels, which operate upon a square axle. The man behind has little labor, as, from the velocity of the fly wheel, together with the aid of a lever, which is in the hand of a person in front steering, he has not often to put his feet to the treddles."

Advantage of an empty purse.—People may talk as they please about independence. Your only real independent man is he of the empty purse. What is the rise or fall of stocks to him? What cares he for commercial failures? What for high or low prices? What for taxation or national debt? What for commotions, revolutions, the decline and fall of empires? Nothing. He smiles at the robber by night and the tax gather by day, and regards the exciseman and pick-pocket with equal indifference. He is your free philosopher who, in the eye of Jove; one who stands

"Unhurt amid the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds."

From a late London Paper.

Restoration after hanging.—Mr. Glover, Surgeon, in Doctor's Commons, London, relates the case of a person who was restored to life, after twenty nine minutes hanging, and continued in good health for many years after. The principal means used to restore this man to life, were opening the temporal artery and the external jugular, rubbing the back, mouth and neck, with a quantity of volatile spirits and oil, administering the tobacco clyster by means of lighted pipes, and strong frictions of the legs and arms. This course had been continued for about four hours, when an incision was made into the wind pipe, and air blown strongly through a canular into the lungs. About twenty minutes after this, the blood at the artery began to run down the face, and a slow pulse was just perceptible at the wrist. The frictions were continued for some time longer, his pulse became more regular, and the mouth and nose being irritated with spirit of salammoniac, he opened his eyes. Warm cordiale were then administered to him, and in two days he was so well as to be able to walk eight miles.

Foreign Intelligence.

SPAIN.

From the London Morning Chronicle, Dec. 18.

The French papers up to the 16, which we received late last night, contain an article of intelligence, which, if it be true, is deserving notice. The Courier Francais says, "that it is not Majorca, but the Island of Ivica, of which the Constitutionalists have made themselves masters." It seems also by the same paper, that the Constitutionalists have contrived to fit out several armed vessels, with which they are cruzing in the Straits of Gibraltar. Several parties of Constitutionalists have also shewed themselves in different provinces. We had previously heard from Paris.—"What was foreseen with respect to Spain after the retreat of the French army, begins to be realised in that unfortunate country, where there is a general fermentation.—Bands of malcontents have already collected at Navarre, Biscay, Galicia, Old Castile, and Estremadura.—At present their numbers are not small, but they will serve as rallying points to the Constitutionalists, who will have no other means to save their lives or their personal liberty. The mere report of the French withdrawing their troops, and the preparations for doing so, have roused the Constitutionalists into activity, and Guerillas are forming in different parts of Spain. From Ivica, where Ferdinand will scarcely be able to dislodge them, they may stir up all Catalonia, and the more persons he proscribes, the greater will be the number eager for vengeance, and the more readily will a force be collected to overthrow his Government.—Under such circumstances it is scarcely possible that any considerable number of French troops should now be withdrawn from Spain. If the Spanish refugees can keep up their hopes, and preserve the vigour of their arms some few months longer they may again see realized in their own country that Guerilla warfare which was formerely so destructive to a more powerful foe, and may have an opportunity both of taking revenge on their oppressors, and of proving their love of liberty.

THE KING OF SWEDEN.

It is stated in letters from Sweden, that a general belief prevails that the King, Charles John, has the intention of resigning in favour of his eldest son, Prince Oscar. The motive that is assigned for this determination is the fear entertained by the Monarch of the intrigues of the Holy Alliance for the reinstatement of the family of the deposed Gustavus, and a belief that a part of the enmity towards the new Dynasty may be removed, when it has assumed, by the lineal succession of the new King, the air of legitimacy. Shakespear makes Henry IV. say to his heir speaking of the Crown, which he had won—

"To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes

With me into the earth. It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'ed with boisterous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it with their assistance;
——What in me was purchas'd,
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort——
So thou the garland wear'st successively."

Bernadotte has hitherto managed matters with great skill. He is the only one of the Generals of the French Revolution who has preserved a sovereign power. He was one of the first who attained eminence: he was Minister at War under the Directory.

AFRICA.

A letter from Cape Coast Castle, dated September 6, says, "Our last engagement has completely broken the spirit of the Ashantees. It was a bloody affair and the first time both parties had fairly joined battle since the fatal day of Assamacan. Adoo is the Xerxes of this part of the world. He has led to the retreat of the enemy, completely humbled and ashamed. As far as we can judge, there is no chance of their returning in a hostile manner."

SOUTH AMERICA.

BUENOS AYRES.—A letter of Oct. 18, says—"The King of New Zealand has just arrived here on his way to England—reports say to raise a loan—but more probably to procure arms and ammunition." A B Ayres paper says he arrived in the English ship Urania, that he came on board when the ship was at one of the Islands, and insisting on proceeding to England, notwithstanding the Capt. was opposed to it. The ship was loading for Liverpool, and the Zealander would go in her.

COLOMBIA.

In Colombia, the population of which is reckoned at four millions of inhabitants, there is eighteen journals, forty new schools of mutual instruction, ten colleges, one in each of the chief places of the ten departments of the Republic, and three Universities, at Bogota, Caracas, and Quito. There are taught in the schools all the sciences cultivated in Europe except political economy and the mechanical and industrious arts. The French language is there particularly cultivated; the public library of Bogota, which is composed of 14,000 choice volumes, contains a great number of French works.—English papers.

UNITED STATES.

There is a ship of the line and a frigate on the stocks at present in Philadelphia. These vessels are building on a plan lately adopted by the British navy board.—The stern are made round, and planked in a similar manner to the bows, which adds greatly to the strength of the ship, and gives her a decided advantage in battle over ships with a square stern.—The ship of the line now building will be the largest vessel of war in the world. She will be rated at 120 guns, but it is supposed will mount 150.—N. Y pa.

JERUSALEM.

"The following intelligence from Constantinople is of the 11th September:—'A severe earthquake is said to have taken place at Jerusalem, which has destroyed a great part of that city, shaken down the mosque of Omar, and reduced the Holy Sepulchre to ruins from top to bottom."

Four lamps were burning o'er two mighty graves,
Godfrey's and Baldwin's—Salem's christian Kings.
And holy light glanc'd from Helena's naves,
Fed with the incense which the Pilgrim bring;—
While through the pannell'd roof, the cedar flings
Its sainted arms o'er choir and roof and dome,
And every porphyry pillar'd cloister rings
To every kneeler there its "we come home"
As every lip breathes out, "O Lord thy Kingdom come."

A mosque was garnished with its crescent moons,
And a choir voice call'd Mussulman's to prayer.
There were the splendors of Judea's throne—
There were the trophies which its conquerors wear—
All but the truth, the holy truth was there!
For there with lip prophane the crier stood,
And him from the tall minaret you might hear
Singing to all whose steps had hither trod,
That verse misunderstood, "There is no God but God."

Hark! did the Pilgrim tremble as he kneel'd?
And did the turban'd Turk his sins confess!
Those mighty hands, the elements that wield
That mighty power that knows to curse or bless
Is over all; and in whatever dress.
His suppliants crowd around him, He can see
Their heart, in city or in wilderness,
And probe its core, and make its blindness see
That he is very God, the only Deity.

There was an earthquake once that rent thy fane,
Proud Salem; when (against the prophecy
Of Him who liv'd, and died, and rose again,
"That one stone on another should not lie.")
Thou would'st rebuild that Jewish Masonry,
To mock the eternal word—The earth below
Groan'd out in fire; and from the brazen sky,
And from the boiling seas such wrath did flow,
As saw not Shinar's plain, nor Babel's overthrow.

Another earthquake comes. Dome, roof, and wall
Tremble; and headlong to the grassy bank
And in the muddied stream the fragments fall,
While the rent charm spread its jaws and drank,
At one huge draught, the sediment, which sank.
In Salem's drained goblet Mighty Power,
Thou whom we all should worship, praise and thank,
Where was thy mercy in that awful hour,
When hell mov'd from beneath, and thine own heaven did lour.

Say, Pilate's palace—say, proud Herod's towers,
Say gate of Bethelem, did your arches quake?
Thy pool Bethesda, was it fill'd with showers?
Calm Gihon, did the jar thy waters wake?
Tomb of thee, Mary—Virgin—did it shake?
Grow'd thy bought field, Aceldema, with blood?
Where were the shudderings Calvary might make?
Did sainted Mount Moriah send a flood,
To wash away the spot where once a God had stood?

Lost Salem of the Jews—great sepulchre,
Of all prophane and of all holy things,
Where Jew and Turk and Gentile yet concur
To make thee what thou art! Thy history brings Thoughts mix'd of joy and woe. The whole earth rings
With the sad truth which He has prophesied,
Who would have sheltered with his holy wings,
Thee and thy children. You his power defied;
You scourg'd him while he liv'd, and mock'd him as he died.

There is a star in the untroubled sky
That caught the first light which its maker made,
It led the hymn of other orbs on high,
'Twill shine when all the fires of heaven shall fade.
Pilgrims at Salem's porch he that your aid!
For it has kept its watch on Palestine!
Look to its holy light, nor be dismay'd,
Though broken is each consecrated shrine
Though crush'd and ruin'd all—which men have call'd divine.

Note to the verses.—Godfrey and Baldwin were the first Christian Kings of Jerusalem. The Empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, built the Church of the Sepulchre on Mount Calvary. The walls are of stone and the roof of cedar. The four lamps which light it are very costly. It is kept in repair by the offerings of Pilgrims who resort to it. The Mosque was originally a Jewish Temple. The Emperor Julian undertook to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem at very great expense, to disprove the prophecy of our Saviour as it was understood by the Jews, but the work and the workmen were destroyed by an earthquake. The pools of Bethesda and Gihon, the tomb of the Virgin Mary, and of King Jehosophat, the pillar of Absolom—the tomb Zachariah, and the campo-sancto, or holy field which is supposed to have been purchased with the price of Judas' treason, are, or were lately, the most interestig parts of Jerusalem.

EXPLANATION OF THE APOCALYPSE.

We have received a copy of the pamphlet under this title, the production of Gen. Alexander Smyth, a member in Congress from Virginia. Not having had time to examine it, we avail ourselves of the following notice from the editors of the Philadelphia American Sentinel:

The General endeavours to show, by a reference to the early Christian writers that the Apocalypse was not written until near the close of the second century, and that consequently the Apostle John could not have been its author. Instead of considering it as a prophetical description of events that were to take place, he regards the historical part of it as a figurative account of some of the leading events that took place in the Roman Empire, and particularly in Byzantium, during the age preceeding that in which it was written.

The contents of the historical part of the Apocalypse, (says the General,) may be briefly stated thus:

"Chap. 6. The reign of Commodus, and his death.
"Chap. 8. Heresies in the time of Commodus.
"Chap. 9. The same subject continued.
"Chap. 11. The fall of Pertinax and Didius
"Chap. 12. Septimius Severus, his wife and eldest son.
"Chap. 13. Albinus, his statues, medals and coins.
"Chap. 14. Caracalla, the army of Severus and the punishment of the Pretorian guards.
"Chap. 16. Civil war between Severus and Niger.
"Chap. 17. The city of Byzantium, and the Emperor Niger.
"Chap. 18. Byzantium taken and destroyed.
"Chap. 19. Caracalla, and the defeat of Albius at Lyons.

"Such are the events (says he) for which the Christians of that age sung Hallelujah!—And Caracalla, who attempted to murder his father; who murdered his brother in the arms of his mother; who put to death 20,000 persons for being his brother's friends; who massacred the people of Alexandria during a festival; and whose cruelty no rank, sex, or age escaped—he is the LAMB of the Apocalypse!"

The whole book he denounces "as a pious forgery," and calls upon the clergy to "expunge from the canon of faith a forged book, written in the spirit of insatiable revenge."—He is of opinion, that it was written by Ireneus, bishop of Lyons in Gaul.

INDIAN TRIBES.

It is impossible to read Mr BUCHANAN'S "Plan for the melioration and civilization of the British North American Indians," without being struck with the fervor and animation which he devotes to the cause, and convinced of the merit of many parts of the detail. Not being personally acquainted with any of the Indian Tribes, or with their respective qualities for civilization, we certainly are inclined to pay the greatest attention to what comes from a Gentleman who, we believe, has had many opportunities of acquiring correct information, and whose partiality we will presume to be well founded. Although, however, we are far from wishing to be ranked among those who reply to every proposition in favor of the Indians with the question cui bono? yet we fear there is too much apathy elsewhere as to the condition of these Tribes, and too little conviction here of the utility of the attempt, ever to allow it to be carried into effect. But this does not tend to diminish in any degree the merit of the Author of this plan, the particulars of which we shall shortly state.

Mr. BUCHANAN commences his pamphlet by disclaiming any sentiment hostile to general education. We entirely agree with him in disavowing any intention of literary instruction for some generations; as well as in his founding his system on the prevalent desires which are observed among the Indians, and which may easily be made subservient to the plan of melioration. Taking it for granted, that they are convinced of the advantages arising from a store of food and clothing against a time of want," we have the qualities of forecast and prudence, as far as regards their personal comfort, to work upon; and supposing also that it is "proved that they are fond of their children," we have to add one of the finest springs of action that ever animated a savage, namely, paternal love. It cannot be denied that these, well applied, are two most powerful and at the same time simple engines.

Of the two modes suggested by Mr. BUCHANAN, the one to be under the superintendence of His Majesty's Government, but rendered more efficient than the present system, which is pronounced a complete failure;—and the other to be directed by a Society, under the immediate patronage of the King, and subject to the control of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the latter meets with the Author's predilection. We extract, therefore, in Mr. BUCHANAN's words, the principal features of the plan on which he would form his Society:

"Looking at the efficiency of every benevolent institution under the superintendence of those humane characterers that abound in his Majesty's dominions, I venture to suggest the forming of a chartered society, under the patronage of the King, to be styled "The Royal British Society for the Preservation of the remaining Aborigines of British North America, and for the Melioration of their State and Condition."

"That to such Royal Society should be committed the funds now appropriated to the use of the Indians, and also such sums as might be contributed by those illustrious and humane individuals who are disposed to protect and cherish the perishing remnant of those forlorn but noble specimens of human nature.

"That the paternal feelings of His Majesty should be moved to grant to the said Society, that portion or tract of country (which did belong to the Indians) comprised within the line of the 44th degree of north latitude, and the lakes Huron and Simcoe, to be set a part as a Royal Asylum for the Indians of North America, and for their sole and separate accommodation for ever; within the limits of which no white man should reside, nor be permitted to remain without the authority hereinafter mentioned.

"This situation embraces in a superior eminent degree all the advantages essential to such an experiment as is proposed; it contains nearly four millions of acres, surrounded with lakes abounding with fish & leading to the great hunting districts; possesses a soil and climate rich and salubrious; is near the seat of government; and within the reach of that human investigation so essential to faithfulness in superintendents.

"That those tribes who might resort to, and be admitted into this Royal Asylum should be represented by one or more Chiefs of their tribes according to the number of the tribe: which Chiefs should form a council, who should decide all matters relating to the carrying into effect the measures deemed necessary and proper for the good government of the establishment.

"That the society when formed should recommend for His Majesty's approval a suitable person to fill the office of His Majesty's high commissioner, who should preside over the execution of all measures relating to the affairs of the Royal Asylum, and the sanction of this officer should be indispensible in the following cases, viz:

"First.—The admission of Indians or tribes into the Asylum.

Secondly.—The removal of any therefrom.

Thirdly.—The removal of any person from lands upon which he had entered with the approbation of the council, and upon which he had made any useful improvements.

"That the Asylum should be a place of refuge for all Indians, within which no blood should be shed for any offence, without a fair, impartial, and public trial, sanctioned by the council of chiefs; and that no adjudication in any matter of life or banishment should be carried into effect unless sanctioned under the hand and seal of his Majesty's high commissioner.

"That regular courts of session should be established, as soon as practicable, to be held by His Majesty's high commissioner and the council of Indians, at stated times, at least twice a year.

"That reports of all proceedings should be annually laid before His Majesty, the Parliament of Great Britain, and of Canada: and also, from time to time, before the Society, as they should please to order.

"That in all such places as the council and His Majesty's high commissioner should approve, dwellings should be erected, saw and grist mills built, and that roads should be opened through the Asylum to Lakes Huron and Simcoe.

"That houses should be built, grounds cleared, and seed furnished for such persons, and in such allotments as the chiefs should approve, but invariably as the reward of good conduct.

"That the pastoral life should be earnestly promoted as best adapted to wean the hunter from his course.

"That no Indian, to whom location should be assigned, should be permitted to absent himself from his family on hunting expeditions during the summer season without the consent of the council; and that a satisfaction without the consent of the council; and that a satisfaction without the consent of the council; and that a satisfaction

Mr. ATTY. GENERAL, from the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of the Magistrates of the Home District, informed the House, that the Committee had agreed to a Report which he was ready to submit for its adoption.

The Report was ordered to be received and was as follows:—

The Committee to whom was referred the Petition of the Justices of the Peace in and for the Home District met in adjourned Sessions, representing that the great number of Dogs kept by the Inhabitants of the Town of York, and its immediate vicinity, is a nuisance that ought to be restrained by Law, and praying that a Law may be enacted imposing a Tax upon all Dogs kept by any person residing in the said Town, and within a certain distance of it, specified in the said petition, the proceeds of which Tax should be applicable to Police purposes, having met; it appeared to them that the measure prayed for by the Justices of the Home District is one which it would be expedient to extend, under some modifications to the Province generally and they have reason to believe that some provision of the kind would be acceptable.

The Committee are of opinion that in Towns the Tax should be imposed on all dogs without exception, but that in the Country one dog should be allowed to be kept Tax free

The Committee further recommend that in Towns having a Police, the produce of the Tax should be appropriated in the same manner as the assessments raised for Police purposes, but that the produce of the Tax upon dogs kept in the Country and in Towns not having a Police, shall be paid into the District Treasury, to be applied in the same manner as the general assessments, in the hope that if the produce of such a Tax should be found to warrant it, the Legislature may hereafter deem it expedient to afford a bounty for the destruction of wolves, in which case the imposition of the Tax recommended would be found doubly beneficial, by lessening the number of useless dogs, which so frequently destroy sheep, and by affording the means of encouraging the destruction of wolves, from which the farmers, in many parts of the Province, suffer very serious injury.

All which is respectfully submitted.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF DURHAM.

GENTLEMEN,

TO RECAPITULATE the circumstances and events of the late Contest for the Representation in Parliament of your County, in a public advertisement of this nature, could answer no purpose—you are sufficiently well acquainted with them; and, that I am so, no one will doubt —Had I not conceived your liberties, and the purity of your elective franchise in danger, I should have occasioned no trouble either to you or to our opponents —You know that I have not desired to [illegible] myself on your notice in an improper manner —You know that up to this hour I have never solicited, either directly or indirectly, a single vote.—You know my sentiments on this head, and that I hold all tampering with so dear and sacred a right as a political crime productive of the most fatal consequences.

We have been victorious, and you are again free —Be firm and united and it will be your own fault if you do not return the object of your choice, whoever he may be, in that decisive manner which admits of no question

For my own part I shall be found in that same unshaken, invincible, determination to do my duty as your public servant, which I have heretofore expressed, should you be pleased to confide your political interests for a time to my hands.—On the approaching day of Election I shall be at my post, ready to obey your wishes, whatever they may be.—In the mean while I am, with the most profound respect, and full of gratitude for the favourable regard I have experienced.

Your devoted
and very humble servant,
CHARLES FOTHERGILL.

Editorial Commentary.

AFTER a close and unwearied investigation of the merits of the Durham Election, for more than three weeks before a Select Committee of the Hon. the House of Assembly—the Election has been declared void, on the ground of an equality of votes between the two opposing candidates, and a new writ is to be forthwith issued. It will be seen by an advertisement in this day's Gazette that Mr FOTHERGILL again intends to come forward —It is not certain how many opponents he is likely to have

As the connecting of the upper Lakes with Ontario, by a Sloop-Navigation, does not appear to be well, or generally understood, we deem it proper to make the following statement which shews at once the decided superiority such a navigation would give us over the Americans of the States, even in the conveyance of produce from the upper country to the New York market.

A rumour, apparently authentic, has reached us through the New York Papers, of a decisive battle having been fought in Peru. The Royalist army is said to have been totally defeated by BOLIVAR—; and, that the Vice-Roy and Generals Canterac and Valdez, the first severely wounded, are prisoners—a frigate was to bout to be dispatched to England with the news.

THE following paragraph appears in the N Y Spectator — It is currently reported in London, that the recognition of the South American States by Great Britain is to be immediately followed by a similar acknowledgment of their independence by France From the avowed determination of the French government to concur in the general policy of England, it may be inferred that the decision of the British government on a point so important to the preservation of tranquility in Europe, has not been taken without the concurrence of at least the great commercial powers. The die is now cast, and old Spain may henceforth be considered as irrevocably separated from her South American Colonies

CAPT Northrup (lately as we suspect from the neighborhood of Niagara) of the Colombian Navy, has had the good fortune to capture a very rich Spanish prize

MESSRS Wortley, Stanley, and Denison, the three members of our Imperial Parliament have reached Washington from their southern tour

WE are happy to learn that a Petition from the Committees of the ST LAWRENCE ASSOCIATION is before our Legislature with every prospect of a successful result Mr. GEDDES the intelligent and indefatigable agent is now in York, and has been assisted by a public meeting voluntarily assembled for the purpose of giving aid to the plan It is indeed certain that some important benefits will result from the measures already taken. It will be seen by an advertisement in the Gazette of this day, that a most respectable Committee of seven has been appointed to carry into effect the views and objects of the Association.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

The Yakut Horses.—A Siberian Yakut, (says Captain Cochrane) will for a considerable wager, ride his horse from 230 to 250 versts in 24 hours, I think, in a late instance. 300 versts, equal to 170 miles, have been performed by one horse within twenty four hours, not by any violent exertion, but by regular trotting, which would astonish the sporters of old England. Nor is a Yakut behind hand with such sporter in betting.

The Trade.—The first order on the records of the East India Company for the importation of tea appears in the year 1667-8. It is thus expressed: "Send home by these ships 100lbs. weight of the best tea that you can get."—Mr Ostervald lately mentioned, at a General Court of Directors at the India House, the fact of 3,000 widows having been burnt in India in the course of the last five years, and asked whether it was the intention to interfere in any manner to stop the progress of this horrible custom? He was well aware that it was a delicate task to interfere with the religious feelings of the natives, but he thought that a question of such vital importance might justify such an interference. He wished to know whether any instructions on the subject had been given to the Government in India by the Court of Directors. The Chairman said, that the Court had sent out directions to their Government, in the year 1823, but no answer to such despatch had yet arrived.

Antediluvian Remains.—Professor Buckland has published a letter relative to the cave lately discovered at Banwell. The Professor states the thickness of the mass of sand, mud, and lime-stones, through which the bones, horns, and teeth are dispersed, to be in one place nearly forty feet. He adds, "many large baskets full of bones have already been extracted, belonging to the ox and their tribes; of the latter there are several varieties, including the elk. There are also a few portions of the skeletons of a wolf and of a gigantic bear. The bones are mostly in a state of preservation equal to that of common grave bones; but is clear, from the fact of some of them belonging to the great extinct species of the bear, that they are of an antediluvian origin."

Curious Cloth.—Tavernier states, that at Serongo a sort of cloth is manufactured of so very fine a texture, that the skin may be seen through it as though it were not covered This cloth, he says, no merchant is permitted to export, the whole being purchased by the governor, and sent to the great Mogul, and to the chief Lords of the Court, who employ it to clothe the

The Pope, it seems, has thought proper to imitate the Grand Seignior, and has issued a decree against the indecent dresses of the Roman ladies, both in the streets and in their own houses. It is not a little remarkable, that the ordinance of the Grand Seignior on the length and thickness of the feredges of the Turkish ladies should first have been translated in the Roman journal (Diario di Roma) that contains the papal decree respecting the dresses of the Roman ladies, which are reprehended as being too thin and adherent to the body.

General Iron Rail-way.—A petition has been presented to the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London, by Mr Gray, author of "Observations on a General Iron Rail-way," pointing out the immense advantages that would attend the establishment of a general iron rail-way to the city of London. The petitioner states, that the mails from London to Manchester, Liverpool, and Leeds, might be conveyed within the space of twelve hours, and those to Glasgow and Edinburgh within twenty-four; and that a gang of coal-waggons, carrying the full freight of a vessel, might be forwarded from Newcastle to London in three days, by the simple expense of one steam engine.

From the Sterling Journal

On Saturday se'nnight, a young lad, belonging to Garronshore, named William Miller, a slater, having gone into Edinburgh to visit a brother, who lives at Fountain Bridge, was sitting by the fire with his brother, ere he went to bed, when, having occasion to go to the door, he left his brother's garden. The moon shone brightly, and it was about one o'clock on Sunday morning. Soon after going into the garden, he was alarmed by the noises of fighting, and cries for help, upon the high road. He immediately ran forward to ascertain the cause, when a man, dressed like a coach driver, came up to him, and urged him to assist in separating the pretended combatants. No sooner, however had he got to the spot, than one of them struck him over the mouth with his hand fastening at the same time, a large adhesive plaster over his mouth and nose, but owing to his giving a sudden turn of the head one nostril and a very small part of his mouth, were left uncovered. At the instant this was effected, the other fellow caught him by the arms, which they pinioned back with a rope like a culprit for the gallows. In this state he was hurried to a chaise, which stood near the place, into which he was raised, and a box, about three feet long, two feet high, that stood in the bottom of it, being opened, he was put into it upon his back, and the lid crushed down upon him and locked. The terror and stupor in which he was, destroyed all presence of mind, while the plaster prevented his making any noise. The chaise immediately set off, and for several hours he lay in this dreadful confinement, when the box was opened and his mysterious companions lifted him out and placed him between them upon the seat. The small glimmer which the pane in the back of the chaise afforded (for the blinds were up) enabled him indistinctly to observe the appearance of the men; they were dressed in large dreadnot great coats, close about their faces, one of them, whom Millar thinks he could recognise, seemed an oldish man. The most profound silence was observed, and after being allowed thus to enjoy a little air, he was again replaced in the box. This was done three times, evidently to keep him save, but he had now become much exhausted, and his arms, and legs benumbed from the rope and pressure. The chase stopped once, apparently at Dunbar, for as long a time as the horses might be changed. The journey was continued till the Sunday afternoon, when, at Ayrtown, the chaise broke down by the wheel breaking, and a spring giving way, and as it was impossible to get it repaired that night, and the men seeing they could not get on, they loosed their horses, and rode into Berwick, the driver behind one of them. Numbers of country people were returning from the church, who were attracted by a disagreeable smell issuing from a box tied behind the chase. This they were not long breaking up, when it was found to contain the dead body of a man! Proceeding in their investigation, the box within the chase was next opened, when their astonishment can hardly be imagined at seeing actually a living person in such a situation He was quickly taken from his wretched confinement, and removed to a public-house where he experienced humane treatment from the sympathy of his deliverers. Next day he was taken upon a cart into Berwick, and with a number of the eye witnesses made a deposition before a Magistrate. Here he learned that the horses had been left at an inn in Berwick, and as a suspicion was entertained that the crew were lurking about the town he was told no notice could appear in the public papers till a search was made for their apprehension A few shillings being collected for him, and having happened to have a guinea at the time concealed below the vest, he was enabled to return by the coach to Edinburgh, where his brother's family did not exceed in astonishment at his return, the satisfaction he felt at his miraculous escape. A guinea note was rifled from his watch pocket during the scuffle in putting him into the chaise. The writer of this relation has seen him and the plaster which he brought home. It is a price of white leather covered with a strongly adhesive substance.—Millar has a good character, and is a serious quiet lad He seems to have suffered considerably from his awful adventure, and says he is disturbed during the nightly fearful dreams that he is still in the cluteches of the resurrection men, and bound within the horrid box!

The following remarks of Lord Byron on the feelings and character of his wife, are copied from Medwin's Journal

"You ask if Lady Byron were ever in love with me—I have answered that question already—No! I was the fashion when she first came out; I had the character of being a great rake, and was a great dandy—both of which young ladies like. She married me from vanity, and the hope of reforming and fixing me. She was a spoiled child, and naturally of a jealous disposition: and this was increased by the infernal machinations of those in her confidence.

"She was easily made the dupe of the designing, for she thought her knowledge of mankind infallable; she had got some foolish idea of Madam de Stael's into her head, that a person may be better known in the first hour than in ten years. She had the habit of drawing people's characters after she had seen them once or twice. She wrote pages on pages about my character, but it was as unlike as possible.

"Lady Byron had good ideas, but could never express them; wrote poetry, too, but it was only good by accident. Her letters were always enigmatical, of ten unintelligible. She was governed by what she called fixed rules and principles squared mathematically. She would have made an excellent wrangler at Cambridge. It must be confessed, however, that she gave no proof of her boasted consistency. First she refused me, then she accepted me, then she separated herself from me:—so much for consistency."—(Page 42 to 47)

Ireland.

From the Dublin Star.

Affecting Elopement.—Perhaps the whole history of crime in this country furnishes no parallel to the iniquitous case we now lay before our readers. The criminal is a young man, about 23 years of age, a connexion of one of the most wealthy and distinguished mercantile houses in the kingdom—a house in whose very name even so much respectability centres, that he who bears it finds it not only a passport into any society, but a letter of credit throughout the commercial world. One afternoon, his absence first excited fears that he was a party in the elopement of a neighbour's wife, a beautiful woman, the mother of three children, the youngest of which is a babe only a few weeks old It seems the guilty pair hired a job carriage, and filled it with trunks containing money, plate, and other valuables. The lady had not been long seated with her paramour, when, according to the driver's account she burst into a flood of tears and upbraided him with his and her own crime. They took a route which inclines their respective friends to believe that they have gone to Waterford, there to take shipping to America. The distraction of the husband of the unfortunate lady mocks the force of language; he left Dublin, accompanied by some friends, in pursuit; and other parties are also in quest of the offenders in various directions. But the adulterous intercourse with the wife of the confiding friend is but one division of his enormous guilt. He has not only robbed a most respectable and once happy man of his beautiful and accomplished partner, and a nursery of children of their mother, but he has availed himself of his connexion with one of the first mercantile families in Dublin to obtain large sums from almost every merchant with whom he had been intimate! Nay, he has induced the lady, as well as to dishonor her husband's bed, to rob him of his money, plate, and other property. On the very day they absconded, he contrived to get the man who was that night to be the victim of his perfidy a sum of 170l. The Bank of Ireland was, a few days previously, taken in to the amount of 700l. A respectable house has been defrauded of 600l. Other houses lost equal or much greater sums. A house in Leinster street, loses nearly 300l.; but, in fact, the receptiness of the discovery renders it but too probable that these are minor transactions, in comparison with those which may after be disclosed. The whole of the property amounting to many thousands of pounds, has been carried off; several Dublin merchants will each give, we understand, 100l. for his apprehension We regret to say that the male off nder's mother is overwhelmed by her sorrow; her life, it is feared, may yield to her present deep affliction

Domestic.

"By the following extract it will be seen that the Americans entertain serious ideas, of laying a trasit duty on Produce and Merchandise passing through their territory on the navigable channel of the St. Lawrence at Barnhart's Island. It is much to be regretted that our commissioners, should not have been more particular with respect to this channel and not thus have left a bone of contention, which must unquestionably subject this country to many inconveniences, particularly if the State of New York, should insist on taking the advantage of this circumstance in their favour De Wit Clinton, Governor of the state in his last Message, expressed it as his opinion that they had a natural right to the free navigation of the St. Lawrence to the Ocean. This opinion, however preposterous, seems to have had its weight, and it appears to be the design of the Legislature either to compensate themselves for the embarrassment placed on their navigation down the St. Lawrence, by the Canada Trade Act, or place such obstructions on our trade as will eventually lead to the repeal of the act so abnoxious to them

Mr. Vauderheuvel offered on the 25th ultimo the following preamble and resolution, to the House of Assembly of the state of New York at Albany, which were ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

Whereas by an act of the British parliament of the year 1821, duties were laid on American produce imported into Montreal and Quebec which are extremely burdensome to the inhabitants of the northern section of this state, bordering on the river St. Lawrence, who from their situation have been necessarily led to resort to those markets, and operate as an entire prohibition of some of the most valuable articles, the growth and produce of their soil, and whereas, the British government notwithstanding the efforts made by negotiation on the part of the United States, to induce it to remove these commercial restrictions on our trade, steadfastly adhered to this system, and to the policy it is intended to promote of giving the decided preference of monopoly of those markets to the inhabitants of the Canadian provinces:

Therefore, Resolved, by the Senate and Assembly of the state of New York, that in order to retaliate the restrictive policy of the British government the senators and representatives of this state in congress, be instructed to use their endeavors to procure the enactment of a law imposing countervailing duties on the property of the inhabitants of Upper and Lower Canada, conveyed on the river St Lawrence on its transit thro'that part of the river which lies between Barnhart's Island and the American shore, and is wholly within the territory of the United States, and providing that the proceeds of the said duties shall be applied for the term of years after the passing of the act, to the improvement of the roads in the counties of Jefferson, St. Lawrence, Franklin and Clinton, or in assisting to construct such new roads or such canals, that may be hereafter made therein to facilitate the communication of the inhabitants on the St. Lawrence with the markets of their own state."

May it please your Excellency,

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament Assembled humbly beg leave again to call the notice of your Excellency to an inconvenience severely felt by the Inhabitants of this Province, but more particularly those in the Eastern part of it, from the want of Roads in that part of Lower Canada adjoining the Province line, corresponding with and continuing those which have been opened through the Eastern District to the line. This inconvenience we are well assured must be equally felt by many of the Inhabitants of Lower Canada, and upon a former occasion we requested your Excellency to communicate to the Executive Government of Lower Canada the anxious desire of this Province that the intercourse with Lower Canada may be made practicable in [illegible] St Francois and a Road opened continuing the Road through the County of Glengary from the bridge on the River Delisle to Vaudrieul near the St. Ann's Ferry — The representation made by your Excellency upon that occasion does not appear to have been attended with the desired effect, and as the Legislature of our sister Province is now in Session an opportunity is afforded of bringing forward the subject for public consideration. We therefore humbly request that your Excellency will be pleased again to communicate with His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor of Lower Canada on the subject with a view that the inconvenience alluded to, may be brought before the Legislature of that Province.

Mr. Dessaulles from the Committee of the whole House on His Excellency the Governor in-Chief's message of the 18 February last, accompanied by a copy of an address to His Excellency Sir P. Maitland by both Houses of Upper Canada, and also a copy of the resolutions adopted by both those bodies respecting new indemnifications to the Inhabitants of Upper Canada who suffered in the late war with the United States of America, reported to the House the following resolutions.

Resolved.—That it is the opinion of this Committee, that inasmuch as Upper Canada made in the late war, the same meritorious efforts as Lower Canada to repel the American Invasion, and as all the disposable resources of both Provinces were employed in resisting the urgent dangers which threatened them, this House sympathizes with the Legislature and people of Upper Canada in the sufferings and ruin experienced in that Province as in this by a large number of persons, but that the very unfavorable state of the Commerce of the Province renders impossible for the present, the imposition of new Taxes

Mr. Tacheresu moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after "that" be struck out, and the following substituted "the demands and proposals of the Legislature of Upper Canada respecting the indemnification to be granted to the sufferers in that Province by the calamities of the late war, are just and equitable and that the Legislature of Lower Canada ought to acquiese therein by providing and making Legislative Provisions in that behalf."

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF DURHAM.

Gentlemen,

TO RECAPITULATE the circumstances and events of the late Contest for the Representation in Parliament of your County, in a public advertisement of this nature, could answer no purpose—you are sufficiently well acquainted with them; and that I am so, no one will doubt.—Had I not considered your liberties, and the purity of your elective franchise in danger, I should have occasioned no trouble either to you or to our opponents.—You know that I have not desired to insist myself on your notice in an improper manner.—You know that up to this hour I have never solicited, either directly or indirectly, a single vote.—You know my sentiments on this head, and that I hold all tampering with so dear and sacred a right as a political crime productive of the most fatal consequences.

We have been victorious, and you are again free.—Be firm and united and it will be your own fault if you do not return the object of your choice, whoever he may be, in that decisive manner which admits of no question.

For my own part I shall be found in that same unshaken, invincible, determination to do my duty as your public servant, which I have heretofore expressed, should you be pleased to confide your political interests for a time to my hands.—On the approaching day of Election I shall be at my post, ready to obey your wishes, whatever they may be.—In the mean while I am, with the most profound respect, and full of gratitude for the favourable regard I have experienced.

Your devoted
and very humble servant,
CHARLES FOTHERGILL.

☞ Advertisements from the Country must be post paid, with the price of insertion; or, a reference in Town who will pay the same, if required, or discontinued

☞ Any Agent obtaining 3 Subscribers has a paper for himself at half price;—if he obtains 6, he has his own paper gratis;—and, for as many as he obtains above 6, he will receive before;—and that although the editor of a public journal is supposed by his readers to be endowed both with ubiquity and omniscience, yet as he is, after all, only a man, he must sometimes fail short of their expectation, and disappoint them by the mediocrity, the paucity, or the incorrectness of his details

Then there is another species of correspondents who, under the pretence of giving advice, are the most abominable, saucy and impudent fellows in the world, and who modestly give their crude suggestions as infallible axioms which, if you do not obey, you must lose their invaluable friendship and support. Thus, one will tell you, "Your paper is unquestionably dull, and he can't read it unless it contains an account of all the prize fights and other occurrences in the sporting world;" another declares, that "if you neither speak one column with such trash, he will cease to take in your journal." One correspondent thinks your paper of too literary a cast, and wishes you to give a little more variety, and now and then to pop in a few remarkable and horrid accidents—or a bloody murder!—Those are the things," says he, "to make it sell." A second says, that you "fill your paper with a collection of stories only fit for old women—and begs to have a luminous critique on the various works of taste and imagination, as they appear" Mr. Dunnot says, the paper is "too dull," whilst Miss Prate thinks, "it has not sufficiently serious turn." Miss Languish begs for "a little more poetry," and hopes, "you will let it be all about love;" whilst Farmer Giles writes to you "to leave out all that stuff of poetics, and put in more about the price of corn, and cattle." A sentimental young lady, who signs herself Flirtilla, begs that you "will put in all the pretty little love stories you can pick up;" whilst her maiden aunt says "by no ought not to suffer the word love to appear in print." Horace Gadabout wishes you "to be particular in giving spirited and copious notices of the drama;" whilst Mr. Cautwell desires, that "his paper may be discontinued, unless you omit all mention of such heinous and abominable proceedings."—Thus every man wishes his own particular taste to be gratified, without any regard to his neighbours; and the only way in which an editor can act, is, to disregard all such partial solicitations, and to keep on the even tenor of his way, without paying any respect to the confined views of his correspondents

The last Vermont Watchman contains the following signs of the times, which will answer, with out any material alteration, (to the almanack makers say) for many other places:—

"The Printer—Is in immediate want of some Wheat, Corn, Beef, Butter, &c from his customers. Dig he has done.—Beg he will not.—To Dun, he is ashamed—but he has no idea of eating without BREAD"

Female Economy.—The following bill of fare, which consists of a dish of fish, a joint of meat, a couple of fowls, vegetables, and a pudding, boiling in all seven dishes, for seven pence, had its rise in an invitation which a young lady of 47, sent to her lover, to dine with her on Christmas day.

To unite taste and economy is no easy thing, but to shew her lover she had learned that difficult art, she gave him the following.

At top, fish, two herringe	0 0 1
Middle, oz. and a half of butter melted .	0 0 0½
Bottom, a Mutton Chop divided . . .	0 0 2
On one side, one pound of small potatoes	0 0 0½
On the other side pickled Cabbage . .	0 0 0½
First remove, two Larks, plenty of crumbs	0 0 1½
Mutton removed, French Roll boiled for a Pudding.	0 0 0½
Parsley for garnish.	0 0 0½

The dinner was served upon China, and looked light and airy, the dishes well proportioned, and the table small, though the room was large, and two livery servants attended.

Who can say, after this, that the times are hard of that people who choose it, may not make a very elegant and genteel figure at a very small expense?

A droll adventure occurred last week at the Edinburgh Police-Office. A blood reeling home tipsy, wanted to look at his watch by the light of the lamp, but the chain by some means having dropped down the fob, he concluded that he had been robbed, and staggered to the police office, where, with some difficulty, he contrived to make the officer on duty understand the nature of his loss, and the name of the watchmaker from whom he had bought the lanier. The officer got a description of the watch from the maker, and sent it round to all the silversmiths and pawnbrokers, with the usual caution of stopping the bearer, &c. The next day, when the bacchanalian was sober he found his lost property in the proper place; and forgetting the adventure of the preceding night, and finding a want of cash at the same time, he actually took the watch to a pawnbroker to raise the wind upon it himself. The pawnbroker at once saw it was the identical watch described in the bill, and took the unfortunate drunkard in custody to the police-office, whence he would have been sent to prison as a thief, if, luckily the officer on duty the preceeding night, had not come in and recognised him

Tachygraphy—It is said, that Smallet wrote his complete History of England, (four volumns quarto) containing the history of thirteen centuries, and finished it, for the press, within fourteen months. Sir Walter Scott says, his is one of the greatest exertions of facility of composition which was ever recorded in the history of literature.

Editorial Commentary.

We are happy to announce the safe arrival in York of Sir John Harvey and Col. Cockburn, two of the Commissioners appointed to value the Crown and Clergy Reserves in this Province

From the Montreal Gazette we have inserted, under our Domestic head, another scheme to reconcile the different, and opposing, parties on the great Union question—which has at least novelty to recommend it. The writer may be assured, we consider of the approbation of this Province to such a plan as would give us a port of entry, from the sea-board, of our own, and such a one as the City of Montreal But, if the French Canadians of Quebec and of the lower Seigniories, are so warmly opposed to an union with us—what reason has the author of this plan to suppose that the people of Montreal and the upper Seigniories, would be less so?

From the papers just received we have the following military news

The four regiments about to be raised, will, when complete, be embarked for foreign service, two for Canada, to relieve the 37th and 70th; one for Gibraltar, to relieve the 64th; one for Corfu, to relieve the 36th Those regiments are complete, and in the highest state of discipline, and are destined for Ireland.

In the late London military circles it is stated that the following regiments have received orders of readiness to embark for Ireland; the 7th, 8th, 17th, 24th, 53d, and 72d regiments of infantry; arrangements have been made at Liverpool for the embarkation of the five first named regiments, and the 73d embark at Portpatrick, for Donaghadee.

There is surely no respectable or decent person who will take it on to notice the coarse and malignant ravings uttered by the last Advocate.—As a man brews so may it be bake!

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

London Jan 5.—The fall which has taken place in consols has created a great deal of surprise. Among the speculations on the cause it is said, after reaching 95 7-8 consols again fell to 95 1-2 and left off at the latter, with buyers. The expression is announces a considerable rise in the French funds.

Accounts from Paris of the 31 state that the well known Maginot, regent of Poitou, has been invested by Madrid and that he has even surrendered to the commander of the army intended to be sent in Spain for the conquest of the South American provinces

Le grande eclaraje at Suicide—Last evening (the) was seven o'clock, during the heavy rain, a female very respectably dressed, with an infant in her arms, both drenched to the skin was observed by some persons who had stood up for shelter in a pent house in the Hackney fields, near the lock of the Regent's canal, walking towards a bye part of the water with a hurried step. A man named Simpson, living in Margaret street, Hackney, who suspected her intention hastened after her, and when he was within twenty feet of his object, the unhappy woman threw her child into the canal, and then precipitated herself after it. Two other persons came up, a long pole was obtained, which was used without effect, upon which Simpson jumped in himself, and after a few moments he called out, "I have got them," and the next minute he reached the shore with the unfortunate creature and her infant in her arms, both alive. They were conveyed to the Wheatsheaf, where they received the kindest treatment and from what could be learned from the poor woman who seemed to be about 25 years of age, her name was Warren, and lived with her parents at Kingsland; that the father of the child was in the West Indies, and that distress had urged her to the rash attempt after preserver and one or two others conveyed her home, and her aged parents received her with open arms.—Courier

MARRIAGE OF THE KING OF PRUSSIA

Matrimony with a subject or an interior, on the avowed principle that the rights of that subject should not inherit the throne, and that the female should not be the acknowledged equal of her husband in rank, while the marriage itself is valid as to every other legal, religious, and moral obligation is allowed on the continent, and prevails both in Catholic and Protestant countries. The marriage of the present King of Naples is an example of this manner, and the King of Prussia's of the latter.

The Countess of Harrach, now Princess of Leignitz, to whom his Majesty of Prussia has chosen to give his hand, is of a Bohemian family, and consequently was not previously one of his subjects. The King became acquainted with her about two years ago at the waters of Teplitz, and personally arranged everything respecting their union, without the intervention of the cabinet of his government, or the formation of a state contract.—She is described as an interesting young person, of 26 years of age, endowed with all the charms of youth and beauty, and graced with all the accomplishments becoming her rank and family and now that she has become associated with royalty, the countess of Berlin will no doubt discover in her many great, good, and amiable qualities which might have "blushed unseen," in a more private station The manner of her coming to Court, and of her first appearance on the scene where she was destined to be so exalted, were distinguished by extraordinary plainess if not by an affected simplicity. She arrived at Berlin on the 1st of November, alone and unattended She was asked to Court, and attended, on the 5th, a ball given by the Princess Royal, but still there was no intimation that she was to be the wife of the King By the 9th, the intended marriage was declared to the Royal Family, and the Princess proceeded in the carriage or hackney coach of the Inn where she lodged to the palace of Charlottenbourg in the chapel of which she was married to the King in the presence of four witnesses, without the attendance of any minister or [illegible] and in the same dress as that of the diplomatic corps This ceremonial was still kept a secret from the public till the 11th, when the King assembled all his family to dinner, and introduced to them his new married wife. On the following day the Princess accompanied her husband to a public concert, and in a few hours afterwards all Berlin rang, of course, with the news. Such is the history of a transaction which could not take place in this country, but which, on the continent, may have reasons in favour of its policy that we shall not stop to examine.—London Times

The life of an Editor—There are few among the numerous readers of a periodical journal who are capable of appreciating the difficulties of an editor's situation, or who have any idea of the qualifications requisite which the public require him to possess In former times, if a newspaper contained notices of the foreign and home news, with a list of births, marriages and deaths, like a parish register, it was quite sufficient to satisfy its readers But these halcyon days for editors are over.

A journalist now which aspires to distinction must "fly at all in the ring;" no subject must be too high nor too low, for attention; no science must be too abstruse, no amusement too trifling for discussion;—the fate of empires must be adjusted, and the fashion of a lady's cap described, in the same page: and in one the editor is required to fix the canon of criticism in the fine arts; in another to describe a prize fight. He must be a diplomatist an anti-gamer, a musician—in fact, he must possess all kn wledge, from that which is requisite in a first minister of state, to the humble acquirements of the fancy; and he must be able to decide with the same degree of ease and promptitude in the disputes between a costermonger and a coalman It is needless to say, that when all this knowledge is required, something must be wanting; and that although, the editor of a public journal is supposed by his readers to be endowed both with ubiquity and omniscience, yet as he is, after all, only a man, he must sometimes fail short of their expectation, and disappoint them by the mediocrity, the paucity, or the incorrectness of his details

Then there is another species of correspondents who, under the pretence of giving advice, are the most abominable, saucy and impudent fellows in the world, and who modestly give their crude suggestions as infallible axioms which, if you do not obey, you must lose their invaluable friendship and support Thus, one will tell you, "Your paper is unquestionably dull, and he can't read it unless it contains an account of all the prize fights and other occurrences in the sporting world;" another declares, that "if you neither speak one column with such trash, he will cease to take in your journal." One correspondent thinks your paper of too literary a cast, and wishes you to give a little more variety, and now and then to pop in a few remarkable and horrid accidents—or a bloody murder!—Those are the things," says he, "to make it sell." A second says, that you "fill your paper with a collection of stories only fit for old women—and begs to have a luminous critique on the various works of taste and imagination, as they appear" Mr. Dunnot says, the paper is "too dull," whilst Miss Prate thinks, "it has not sufficiently serious turn." Miss Languish begs for "a little more poetry," and hopes, "you will let it be all about love;" whilst Farmer Giles writes to you "to leave out all that stuff of poetics, and put in more about the price of corn, and cattle." A sentimental young lady, who signs herself Flirtilla, begs that you "will put in all the pretty little love stories you can pick up;" whilst her maiden aunt says "by no ought not to suffer the word love to appear in print." Horace Gadabout wishes you "to be particular in giving spirited and copious notices of the drama;" whilst Mr. Cautwell desires, that "his paper may be discontinued, unless you omit all mention of such heinous and abominable proceedings."—Thus every man wishes his own particular taste to be gratified, without any regard to his neighbours; and the only way in which an editor can act, is, to disregard all such partial solicitations, and to keep on the even tenor of his way, without paying any respect to the confined views of his correspondents

The last Vermont Watchman contains the following signs of the times, which will answer, with out any material alteration, (to the almanack makers say) for many other places:—

LATEST FROM INDIA.

The British ship Jane, Captain Maitland, arrived last evening from Calcutta, and has furnished intelligence from that place up to the 1st of September When Capt Maitland sailed it was the prevailing opinion that the Burmese war had nearly terminated

Ireland.

The overwhelming interests of Irish politics at this moment is attested by the attention which the public journals confer them every day bound to bestow upon them We have copied from the Courier. St James's Chronicle and Times some new proofs of the direction which the public feeling of England has taken upon the great question at issue in that kingdom

We would point out the language endorsed by a Catholic priest of the name of L'Estrange, who boldly avowed sentiments which we believe not to be his alone, but those of the majority of the Catholic Clergy "that Clergy," he said, "were always alive to their duty, and would be ready at a moment's warning if necessary to discharge that duty" What duty? The spiritual instruction of the laity? No—we should be told from a hundred mouths that this duty has always been, and now, most conscientiously discharged But the same priest, some prospective duty, which they are to perform; and, "when the time for performing it arrive" adds Mr L Estrange, "perhaps it will be found that they have not been inattentive to passing events" We take the reverend orator at his word, because we are not sure whether the [illegible] many of his brethren who would imitate his frankness; but we believe there are few will have not justified his assertion Every [illegible] observer of passing events [illegible] they will perceive the duty they have performed to themselves, "when the time for performing it arrives," Ireland is more politically disturbed than she was four years ago. "A universal opinion (says a private letter) prevails here, that a crisis is at hand. Go into company of any rank, high or low—of any party, Protestant or Catholic—and you will find a more intense political feeling, and more violent party rage, mostly, than existed even in the year 1798. Both sides are wrought up into the highest possible state of excitement—both are anxious to come to blows; and when this is the case, a pretext cannot long be wanting It is impossible to predict from what quarter the breeze may come, which will fan the elements of combustion, or from what collision of materials, insignificant in themselves, will fly the igniting spark. For the anomalous and morbid state of society I have been describing, (at least the present exasperation of the symptoms,) has arisen chiefly from a measure, which, were we speaking of any other affairs than those of Ireland, we should admit to have been wisely designed, prudently and moderately executed, and which ought to have been productive of beneficial consequence. I allude to he King's visit, and the admonitory letter with which he was advised to conclude it"—Courier

It is as humiliating as it is melancholy, to reflect how much of the aggregate of human misery is the effect of our own folly. Using the authority with which we are invested by the unhappy accomplishment of our prediction from the King's visit, we appeal solemnly were our countrymen, that if Ireland is to be saved from becoming, de facto, a [illegible] of the system of the Government in that kingdom and the utter abandonment of that temporising neutrality he is even right and wrong, by which "the one shall be dragged" as the Court Journalist confesses, "to the edge of a precipice" Mere measures, system, must be all changed, if civil war (and such a civil war as has never been witnessed out of Ireland) is to be avoided. The Government that has encouraged Protestant Confederates, as an antidote to the Catholic Association, the husband of a Protestant wife; and taught Roman Catholics to proscribe, as not to be tolerated, the dissemination of the Scriptures, and which has connived at the putting into execution this non-toleration threat by mob law, is not the Government suited to Ireland in this crisis of her fate.—St James's Chronicle.

The conservatives in Parliament are offer it as our deliberate opinion, if confined to intellectual and spiritual weapons, must tend to enlighten and to rouse the Catholic mind throughout Ireland. The assertion of a right to read and think for himself, is natural to every human being; priests, when they challenge discussion must do what is almost unheard of in their church—they must defend, by something more than an horily, the prohibitions which that authority has imposed on its communion Hard names will not do, "Popish," "Jesuitical," "Antediluvian," and so forth, which the priests have lavished on our Protestant Clergy—for the people will infallibly enavas every word the respective disputants utter; and to bring the exercise any thought upon religion, is a step towards their thinking rightly. It then, the bullied and [illegible] priests do not stir up their flocks to revolt, as a diversion from more peaceful argument, is it unreasonable to presume that from these free and open questionings, the reformation itself may take its date in Ireland? Government will be mad if they interfere in [illegible] meetings between the Established and Catholic Clergy. Should, indeed, lawless violence follow, a new case arises, and with it a new course of policy.—Times

EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

The Case of a Murder in Hertfordshire, found amongst the Papers of that eminent Lawyer Sir John Maynard, Sergeant at Law, and some time one of the Lord's Commissioners of the Great Seal of England, viz:

The Case or rather History of a case, that happened in the County of Hertford I thought good to report here, though it happened in the Fourth Year of King Charles the First; that the Memory of it may not be lost by the miscarriage of my Papers

The Coroner's Inquest, on view of the body, and depositions of Mary Norkott, John Okenun, and Agnes his wife, were inclined to find Jane Norkott a Felo de se, for they observed the Coroner and the Jury, that she was found dead in her bed the knife sticking in the floor, and her Throat cut That the night before she went to bed with her child (Plaintiff in this App.al.) her Husband being absent, and that no other person came to the house after such time as she was gone to bed, came into the house the Examinants lying in the outer Room, and they must needs have seen or known if any Stranger had come in."

Whereupon the Jury gave up to the Coroner a verdict that she was Felo de se. But afterwards upon rumour amongst the neighbourhood, and their observation of divers circumstances, which they conceived that she did not, nor could possibly (according to those circumstances) murder herself; thereupon the Jury, whose verdict was not yet drawn into form by the Coroner, that the body which was buried might be taken up out of the grave, which the Coroner assented unto; and thirty days after her death she was taken up, in the presence of the Jury and a great number of People; whereupon the Jury changed their verdict; and the Persons being tried at the Hertford Assizes, were acquitted; but no much search out the evidences, that Judge Harvey let [illegible] but no much search out the evidences, that Judge Harvey let bail his Opinions, that if there were better an Appeal were brought, than no doubt a murder escape unpunished And, Pascha quarto Caroli, they were tried on the Appeal, which was brought by the same Child against his Father, Grandmother and Aunt, and her

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF DURHAM.

Gentlemen,

TO RECAPITULATE the circumstances and events of the late Contest for the Representation in Parliament of your County, in a public advertisement of this nature, could answer no purpose—you are sufficiently well acquainted with them; and that I am so, no one will doubt.—Had I not considered your liberties, and the purity of your elective franchise in danger, I should have occasioned no trouble either to you or to our opponents.—You know that I have not desired to insist myself on your notice in an improper manner.—You know that up to this hour I have never solicited, either directly or indirectly, a single vote.—You know my sentiments on this head, and that I hold all tampering with so dear and sacred a right as a political crime productive of the most fatal consequences.

We have been victorious, and you are again free.—Be firm and united and it will be your own fault if you do not return the object of your choice, whoever he may be, in that decisive manner which admits of no question.

For my own part I shall be found in that same unshaken, invincible, determination to do my duty as your public servant, which I have heretofore expressed, should you be pleased to confide your political interests for a time to my hands.—On the approaching day of Election I shall be at my post, ready to obey your wishes, whatever they may be.—In the mean while I am, with the most profound respect, and full of gratitude for the favourable regard I have experienced.

Your devoted
and very humble servant,
CHARLES FOTHERGILL.

Thus, one will tell you, "Your paper is unquestionably dull, and he can't read it unless it contains an account of all the prize fights and other occurrences in the sporting world;" another declares, that "if you neither speak one column with such trash, he will cease to take in your journal." One correspondent thinks your paper of too literary a cast, and wishes you to give a little more variety, and now and then to pop in a few remarkable and horrid accidents—or a bloody murder!—Those are the things," says he, "to make it sell." "The Printer—Is in immediate want of some Wheat, Corn, Beef, Butter, &c from his customers. Dig he has done.—Beg he will not.—To Dun, he is ashamed—but he has no idea of eating without BREAD"

Female Economy.—The following bill of fare, which consists of a dish of fish, a joint of meat, a couple of fowls, vegetables, and a pudding, boiling in all seven dishes, for seven pence, had its rise in an invitation which a young lady of 47, sent to her lover, to dine with her on Christmas day.

To unite taste and economy is no easy thing, but to shew her lover she had learned that difficult art, she gave him the following.

Middle, oz. and a half of butter melted .	0 0 0½
Bottom, a Mutton Chop divided . . .	0 0 2
On one side, one pound of small potatoes	0 0 0½
On the other side pickled Cabbage . .	0 0 0½
First remove, two Larks, plenty of crumbs	0 0 1½
Mutton removed, French Roll boiled for a Pudding.	0 0 0½

The dinner was served upon China, and looked light and airy, the dishes well proportioned, and the table small, though the room was large, and two livery servants attended.

Who can say, after this, that the times are hard of that people who choose it, may not make a very elegant and genteel figure at a very small expense?

A droll adventure occurred last week at the Edinburgh Police-Office. A blood reeling home tipsy, wanted to look at his watch by the light of the lamp, but the chain by some means having dropped down the fob, he concluded that he had been robbed, and staggered to the police office, where, with some difficulty, he contrived to make the officer on duty understand the nature of his loss, and the name of the watchmaker from whom he had bought the lanier. The officer got a description of the watch from the maker, and sent it round to all the silversmiths and pawnbrokers, with the usual caution of stopping the bearer, &c. The next day, when the bacchanalian was sober he found his lost property in the proper place; and forgetting the adventure of the preceding night, and finding a want of cash at the same time, he actually took the watch to a pawnbroker to raise the wind upon it himself. The pawnbroker at once saw it was the identical watch described in the bill, and took the unfortunate drunkard in custody to the police-office, whence he would have been sent to prison as a thief, if, luckily the officer on duty the preceeding night, had not come in and recognised him

Tachygraphy—It is said, that Smallet wrote his complete History of England, (four volumns quarto) containing the history of thirteen centuries, and finished it, for the press, within fourteen months. Sir Walter Scott says, his is one of the greatest exertions of facility of composition which was ever recorded in the history of literature.

Editorial Commentary.

We are happy to announce the safe arrival in York of Sir John Harvey and Col. Cockburn, two of the Commissioners appointed to value the Crown and Clergy Reserves in this Province

From the Montreal Gazette we have inserted, under our Domestic head, another scheme to reconcile the different, and opposing, parties on the great Union question—which has at least novelty to recommend it. The writer may be assured, we consider of the approbation of this Province to such a plan as would give us a port of entry, from the sea-board, of our own, and such a one as the City of Montreal But, if the French Canadians of Quebec and of the lower Seigniories, are so warmly opposed to an union with us—what reason has the author of this plan to suppose that the people of Montreal and the upper Seigniories, would be less so?

From the papers just received we have the following military news

The four regiments about to be raised, will, when complete, be embarked for foreign service, two for Canada, to relieve the 37th and 70th; one for Gibraltar, to relieve the 64th; one for Corfu, to relieve the 36th Those regiments are complete, and in the highest state of discipline, and are destined for Ireland.

In the late London military circles it is stated that the following regiments have received orders of readiness to embark for Ireland; the 7th, 8th, 17th, 24th, 53d, and 72d regiments of infantry; arrangements have been made at Liverpool for the embarkation of the five first named regiments, and the 73d embark at Portpatrick, for Donaghadee.

There is surely no respectable or decent person who will take it on to notice the coarse and malignant ravings uttered by the last Advocate.—As a man brews so may it be bake!

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

London Jan 5.—The fall which has taken place in consols has created a great deal of surprise. Among the speculations on the cause it is said, after reaching 95 7-8 consols again fell to 95 1-2 and left off at the latter, with buyers. The expression is announces a considerable rise in the French funds.

Accounts from Paris of the 31 state that the well known Maginot, regent of Poitou, has been invested by Madrid and that he has even surrendered to the commander of the army intended to be sent in Spain for the conquest of the South American provinces

Le grande eclaraje at Suicide—Last evening (the) was seven o'clock, during the heavy rain, a female very respectably dressed, with an infant in her arms, both drenched to the skin was observed by some persons who had stood up for shelter in a pent house in the Hackney fields, near the lock of the Regent's canal, walking towards a bye part of the water with a hurried step. A man named Simpson, living in Margaret street, Hackney, who suspected her intention hastened after her, and when he was within twenty feet of his object, the unhappy woman threw her child into the canal, and then precipitated herself after it. Two other persons came up, a long pole was obtained, which was used without effect, upon which Simpson jumped in himself, and after a few moments he called out, "I have got them," and the next minute he reached the shore with the unfortunate creature and her infant in her arms, both alive. They were conveyed to the Wheatsheaf, where they received the kindest treatment and from what could be learned from the poor woman who seemed to be about 25 years of age, her name was Warren, and lived with her parents at Kingsland; that the father of the child was in the West Indies, and that distress had urged her to the rash attempt after preserver and one or two others conveyed her home, and her aged parents received her with open arms.—Courier

Matrimony with a subject or an interior, on the avowed principle that the rights of that subject should not inherit the throne, and that the female should not be the acknowledged equal of her husband in rank, while the marriage itself is valid as to every other legal, religious, and moral obligation is allowed on the continent, and prevails both in Catholic and Protestant countries. The marriage of the present King of Naples is an example of this manner, and the King of Prussia's of the latter.

The Countess of Harrach, now Princess of Leignitz, to whom his Majesty of Prussia has chosen to give his hand, is of a Bohemian family, and consequently was not previously one of his subjects. The King became acquainted with her about two years ago at the waters of Teplitz, and personally arranged everything respecting their union, without the intervention of the cabinet of his government, or the formation of a state contract.—She is described as an interesting young person, of 26 years of age, endowed with all the charms of youth and beauty, and graced with all the accomplishments becoming her rank and family and now that she has become associated with royalty, the countess of Berlin will no doubt discover in her many great, good, and amiable qualities which might have "blushed unseen," in a more private station The manner of her coming to Court, and of her first appearance on the scene where she was destined to be so exalted, were distinguished by extraordinary plainess if not by an affected simplicity. She arrived at Berlin on the 1st of November, alone and unattended She was asked to Court, and attended, on the 5th, a ball given by the Princess Royal, but still there was no intimation that she was to be the wife of the King By the 9th, the intended marriage was declared to the Royal Family, and the Princess proceeded in the carriage or hackney coach of the Inn where she lodged to the palace of Charlottenbourg in the chapel of which she was married to the King in the presence of four witnesses, without the attendance of any minister or [illegible] and in the same dress as that of the diplomatic corps This ceremonial was still kept a secret from the public till the 11th, when the King assembled all his family to dinner, and introduced to them his new married wife. On the following day the Princess accompanied her husband to a public concert, and in a few hours afterwards all Berlin rang, of course, with the news. Such is the history of a transaction which could not take place in this country, but which, on the continent, may have reasons in favour of its policy that we shall not stop to examine.—London Times

The life of an Editor—There are few among the numerous readers of a periodical journal who are capable of appreciating the difficulties of an editor's situation, or who have any idea of the qualifications requisite which the public require him to possess In former times, if a newspaper contained notices of the foreign and home news, with a list of births, marriages and deaths, like a parish register, it was quite sufficient to satisfy its readers But these halcyon days for editors are over.

A journalist now which aspires to distinction must "fly at all in the ring;" no subject must be too high nor too low, for attention; no science must be too abstruse, no amusement too trifling for discussion;—the fate of empires must be adjusted, and the fashion of a lady's cap described, in the same page: and in one the editor is required to fix the canon of criticism in the fine arts; in another to describe a prize fight. He must be a diplomatist an anti-gamer, a musician—in fact, he must possess all kn wledge, from that which is requisite in a first minister of state, to the humble acquirements of the fancy; and he must be able to decide with the same degree of ease and promptitude in the disputes between a costermonger and a coalman It is needless to say, that when all this knowledge is required, something must be wanting; and that although, the editor of a public journal is supposed by his readers to be endowed both with ubiquity and omniscience, yet as he is, after all, only a man, he must sometimes fail short of their expectation, and disappoint them by the mediocrity, the paucity, or the incorrectness of his details

Then there is another species of correspondents who, under the pretence of giving advice, are the most abominable, saucy and impudent fellows in the world, and who modestly give their crude suggestions as infallible axioms which, if you do not obey, you must lose their invaluable friendship and support Thus, one will tell you, "Your paper is unquestionably dull, and he can't read it unless it contains an account of all the prize fights and other occurrences in the sporting world;" another declares, that "if you neither speak one column with such trash, he will cease to take in your journal." A second says, that you "fill your paper with a collection of stories only fit for old women—and begs to have a luminous critique on the various works of taste and imagination, as they appear" Mr. Dunnot says, the paper is "too dull," whilst Miss Prate thinks, "it has not sufficiently serious turn." Miss Languish begs for "a little more poetry," and hopes, "you will let it be all about love;" whilst Farmer Giles writes to you "to leave out all that stuff of poetics, and put in more about the price of corn, and cattle." A sentimental young lady, who signs herself Flirtilla, begs that you "will put in all the pretty little love stories you can pick up;" whilst her maiden aunt says "by no ought not to suffer the word love to appear in print." Horace Gadabout wishes you "to be particular in giving spirited and copious notices of the drama;" whilst Mr. Cautwell desires, that "his paper may be discontinued, unless you omit all mention of such heinous and abominable proceedings."—Thus every man wishes his own particular taste to be gratified, without any regard to his neighbours; and the only way in which an editor can act, is, to disregard all such partial solicitations, and to keep on the even tenor of his way, without paying any respect to the confined views of his correspondents

It is as humiliating as it is melancholy, to reflect how much of the aggregate of human misery is the effect of our own folly. Using the authority with which we are invested by the unhappy accomplishment of our prediction from the King's visit, we appeal solemnly were our countrymen, that if Ireland is to be saved from becoming, de facto, a [illegible] of the system of the Government in that kingdom and the utter abandonment of that temporising neutrality he is even right and wrong, by which "the one shall be dragged" as the Court Journalist confesses, "to the edge of a precipice" Mere measures, system, must be all changed, if civil war (and such a civil war as has never been witnessed out of Ireland) is to be avoided. The Government that has encouraged Protestant Confederates, as an antidote to the Catholic Association, the husband of a Protestant wife; and taught Roman Catholics to proscribe, as not to be tolerated, the dissemination of the Scriptures, and which has connived at the putting into execution this non-toleration threat by mob law, is not the Government suited to Ireland in this crisis of her fate.—St James's Chronicle.

The conservatives in Parliament are offer it as our deliberate opinion, if confined to intellectual and spiritual weapons, must tend to enlighten and to rouse the Catholic mind throughout Ireland. The assertion of a right to read and think for himself, is natural to every human being; priests, when they challenge discussion must do what is almost unheard of in their church—they must defend, by something more than an horily, the prohibitions which that authority has imposed on its communion Hard names will not do, "Popish," "Jesuitical," "Antediluvian," and so forth, which the priests have lavished on our Protestant Clergy—for the people will infallibly enavas every word the respective disputants utter; and to bring the exercise any thought upon religion, is a step towards their thinking rightly. It then, the bullied and [illegible] priests do not stir up their flocks to revolt, as a diversion from more peaceful argument, is it unreasonable to presume that from these free and open questionings, the reformation itself may take its date in Ireland? Government will be mad if they interfere in [illegible] meetings between the Established and Catholic Clergy. Should, indeed, lawless violence follow, a new case arises, and with it a new course of policy.—Times

EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

The Case of a Murder in Hertfordshire, found amongst the Papers of that eminent Lawyer Sir John Maynard, Sergeant at Law, and some time one of the Lord's Commissioners of the Great Seal of England, viz:

The Case or rather History of a case, that happened in the County of Hertford I thought good to report here, though it happened in the Fourth Year of King Charles the First; that the Memory of it may not be lost by the miscarriage of my Papers

The Coroner's Inquest, on view of the body, and depositions of Mary Norkott, John Okenun, and Agnes his wife, were inclined to find Jane Norkott a Felo de se, for they observed the Coroner and the Jury, that she was found dead in her bed the knife sticking in the floor, and her Throat cut That the night before she went to bed with her child (Plaintiff in this App.al.) her Husband being absent, and that no other person came to the house after such time as she was gone to bed, came into the house the Examinants lying in the outer Room, and they must needs have seen or known if any Stranger had come in."

Whereupon the Jury gave up to the Coroner a verdict that she was Felo de se. But afterwards upon rumour amongst the neighbourhood, and their observation of divers circumstances, which they conceived that she did not, nor could possibly (according to those circumstances) murder herself; thereupon the Jury, whose verdict was not yet drawn into form by the Coroner, that the body which was buried might be taken up out of the grave, which the Coroner assented unto; and thirty days after her death she was taken up, in the presence of the Jury and a great number of People; whereupon the Jury changed their verdict; and the Persons being tried at the Hertford Assizes, were acquitted; but no much search out the evidences, that Judge Harvey let [illegible] but no much search out the evidences, that Judge Harvey let bail his Opinions, that if there were better an Appeal were brought, than no doubt a murder escape unpunished And, Pascha quarto Caroli, they were tried on the Appeal, which was brought by the same Child against his Father, Grandmother and Aunt, and her Husband Oakman; and because the Evidence was so strange, I took exact and particular notice. And it was as follows:

After the matters above mentioned related, an ancient and grave Person, Minister to the Parish where the Fact was committed, being sworn to give Evidence, according to custom, deposed, "That the body Being taken up out of the grave, thirty days after the party's death, and lying on the grass, and the four Defendants being present, were required each of them to touch the dead body Oakman's Wife fell upon her knees, and prayed God to shew tokens of her Innocency. The Appellant did touch the dead body; whereupon the brow of the dead, which before was of a livid and carrion colour (in Terminis, the verbal Expression of the Witness) began to have a Dew, or gentle sweat, arise on it, which increased by Degrees till the sweat ran down in drops on the face; the brow turned to a lively and fresh colour, and the deceased opened one of her eyes, and shut it again, and this opening the eye was done three several times, and pulled it in again, and the Finger dropped Blood from it on the grass." Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Justice, seeming to doubt the evidence, asked the Witness, Who saw this besides you?

ADVENTURES OF A NIGHT.

I was travelling with a view to collect the outstanding accounts of several extensive mercantile establishments in Philadelphia, and had then in my p ossession notes to a large amount when in the prosecution of my journey homeward, I was obliged to remain at a somewhat rude, disorderly public house, for several hours, in consequence of a violent storm and when the weather allowed me again to travel, I found myself 30 miles from Harrisburgh, the point I had selected on reaching that day, and that I had but an hour's son remaining. I preferred the hazard of the road however, to a lodging at such a place, and accordingly set forward on my way. By inquiry I discovered before I set out, that a man who had for some time followed the seas, and against whom I had a small bill, resided a few miles from the road, and that by going that distance out of the way, I could call on him. The bill had been reckoned a lost one, and I determined to see him if possible I reached his house about sundown, and found him at home He was a large, ferocious looking, weather beaten man, with a dark, lowering brow, huge red whiskers, and a rough and forbidding address. He exclaimed the bill in a moment, acknowledged it to be correctness, and told me it I could change a fifty dollar note, he would discharge it.

I replied without hesitation, and he brought the note, but held it in his hand waiting for his change Then, and not till then, I recollected that to make up the sum, I should have to resort to my large pocket book, and expose all the money I had not having a sufficiency in the small one I carried for the purpose of changing in my vest pocket. I paused a moment, but considered that my horse was tolerably fleet, I determined to run the hazard whatever it might be, of tempting him by the exhibition of the cash I had by me I unfolded roll after roll and he looked with an eye of apparent curiosity The change was counted down, he produced the note,—I saw at the first glance it was a counter feit, and told him so. He betrayed, I thought, a kind of forced surprise, at this declaration—but rejoined, that if I would sit down, he would immediately put off, return the note to the person of whom he received it, and procure the sum I wanted.

My suspicions had already been awakened,—it seemed the this offer of payment was either made with the inten to pass on me a spurious note or ascertain what money I had; indeed the last presumption appeared the strongest from the circumstance that the note was already passed, so that he could not possibly have small hope of its being taken. The question now was, however, should I run the venture, and remain, or attempt to reach another lodging, which I knew I could not find in a shorter distance than nine miles, and those of the most hilly description. I looked at his wife and his children, and the situation of things around; all tended to dissipate my suspicions—his family looked respectable, and appeared kind and amiable—all things were in regular order; I remembered that I had a pair of excellent pistols, well prepared for service; I was young, and persuaded that my suspicions were all childish. I resolved to remain, and my horse was hastily put up. Immediately after which the stranger mounted a small sorrel, and galloped as he said to get his note exchanged.

I had not been a long in the house however, before the woman excited anew my doubts as to my host She inquired whether I was armed; whether I carried any money in my portmanteau; where I had been in the neighbourhood; and a hundred similar questions, to all of which I answered with promptness, not choosing to betray any reserve, as that might make matters worse I waited anxiously for the man's return, debating with myself whether I could not frame an excuse for going on as soon as he returned; he was to have been home by nine in the evening but eleven came: the family all appeared weary of sitting up, and finally gave up the point, and yielded to the frequent intimations that I could retire, and was shown to my chamber

When left to myself, I examined into my situation in regard to the means of my escape, if an escape should be necessary. I found I was literally in prison. The windows were firmly nailed down and the sash remarkably strong: the only door was that by which I entered, it separated my room from the chamber in which it appeared to me all the family slept. It was fastened by a wooden latch on the outside, and I took notice that there was a string in the inside, when I entered, by which the latch could be raised. This the woman pulled through after her, when she shut the door and left me, leaving me no means of opening it, or of getting out of the room under any circumstance, without the application of great force I sat down and reflected a while on all these transactions; my suspicions all came back; presently I heard the trampling of a horse; after the voices of two men in the yard. They entered the house, and a long and constant conversation was carried on in a low tone of voice, which I could not here distinctly enough to catch a single word with one exception when one of the men raised his voice a little with emphasis, said, "at all events we must make sure of him in some way," a declaration that might have reference to me or might not.

I was alarmed—I picked my pistol flints, and examined the loading—threw off my coat only, and extinguished the light laid down with my pistols under my pillow a hand grasping each, and my money between the bolster and bed In this situation, so great was my fatigue, that I almost immediately fell asleep and did not awake until something hard under my shoulder aroused me—one of my pistols had slipped down, and I was lying on it: I replaced it more cautiously But at this moment whispering in the next room alarmed me: I listened and listened again; the wind was blowing without, and fitty lanes I fancied I heard the latch lifted, and grasped my pistols to fire—At last however, it died away The heat almost suffocated me I rose, undressed entirely, and laid down—an hour passed, and I awoke, it was by a gentle rapping at the door, and a call—"Sir, will you please to get up to breakfast?"

Never will I forget my joy; it seemed like a resurrection from the dead; for had an attack been made upon me in the utter darkness of the night, I know I should have had slim chance, armed as I was, against two, or more stout fellows. The sun was down; every face I met was cheerful and happy; the man paid my money; he had really been deceived in the note, and had found some difficulty in getting it exchanged, which was the cause of his late absence the night before His eldest son had come home with him; the good woman told me very kindly, that she feared I had been disturbed, as the old man and his son had sat up very late examining into, and arranging some accounts which they had against a fellow, who had recently become insolvent in the neighbourhood.

GAMING HOUSES AT PARIS.

There are at present 9 public gaming houses at Paris, licensed by the French Government, and the holders of them pay annually to the Government six millions of francs, (250,000L.) for permission to keep them. The capital daily appropriated as a bank for the whole is about 30,000*l*.

The first in consideration is the "Salon," in the Rue Grange Batelliere The next "Frescati," in the Rue Richelieu, and subsequently Nos. 9154, and others in the Palis Royal and different parts of Paris The games played are, Rouge et Noir, Roulette, and Hazard—The dealer of the cards, and those who officiate at Roulette and Hazard, are not allowed to play themselves, but receive a Napoleon per day (16s 8d their pay.—The "Salon," alone requires an introduction from one of the Members to the French Marquis, who presides before a stranger can enter When a stranger has been introduced, there is usually an invitation sent him to dine at the Salon, on Thursday, on which day a magnificient dinner is given gratis, to all the members—every delicacy of the season, provided, and the choisest Champagne in abundance, which is drank only in tumblers.

Dinner being over, the company adjourn to the tables below, when the play goes on After dinner a man is less on his guard, and Champaigne is a stimulous to play with freedom and resolution. Of this the "Chief" of the "Salon," is well aware, and some of the waiters in attendance are ready to lend money to those who may have lost. This arrangement is productive of immense profit, for if lost, which is too often the case, the money is, in fact paid back to the bonnes, and if the borrower should win, he usually refunds the loan before leaving the room, and if unsuccessful, it remains for him to repay the waiter as a debt "of honor" Lending money to a losing gamester is like attempting to fill a leaky vessel. This system of lending is productive of ruin to many who play for a man can retire without being hurt, after losing only the money which he had in his pocket, but he may lose thousands if he continue to borrow, for there is a disposition in gamesters to pursue a run of ill luck and the feelings are actuated by a sort of phensy, and spirit of revenge to regain that which they feel as if unjustly deprived of. Let a man win, and the gratification he feels renders him almost incapable of leaving the tables, or if he retire, it is only to come again, so that he must lose the more he plays.

A short time since, a foreign Prince won at the Salon 10,000*l*; with such a sum many would have tho't themselves content; but to win is productive of nearly as much ill as to lose. This young man was so intoxicated with success, that he distressed himself, by not only losing that sum, but an additional 3,000*l*. At two in the morning a supper is provided gratis at the Salon, this hour is probably chosen, because few come to supper, except to play, as the Opera and Theatre shut much earlier, and, except the gamesters, most persons have retired. The Salon continues open until 5 or six o'clock in the morning. At the Salon, only Rouge et Noir and Hazard are played. An English Nobleman, well known as a great frequenter of the Salon and Frescati, lost a short time since, 40,000*l*. At Frescati, Rouge et Noir and Roulettee, are played both day and night. Here neither dinner nor supper is provided; but a number of women of superior appearance are allowed to enter and they attract numbers of persons. Twice or thrice in the year, a magnificent ball and supper is given gratis, and to add to the splendour, several Opera girls are hired to dance. It might be said in reference to the ruin occasioned by play after dinner at the Salon, and the general bad consequence of a habit of playing, that a dinner at the Salon operates as a poison; and in the same way, the beauty met with at the Frescati may be considered as fatal.

The Gaming houses in the Palis Royal are open day and night, and free entrance is allowed to all who choose to go in, they offer no inducement beyond the hope of gain. The number of suicides in Paris, calculated at one per day, and it is considered that gaming is one of the first and most powerful causes for such destruction Before any one embarks his fortune at play, let him consider the impossibility of winning, because the chances are largely in favor of the tables.—Were it otherwise, how could 25,000*l*. be paid to Government? How is Champaigne, and a splendid dinner for forty or more persons, to be provided weekly at the Salon; and the balls, suppers, and beauties of Frescati, who offer these to the public—the losers!—Last year the principal holder of the Gaming tables, after paying every expense, is said to have netted 20,000*l*.

A PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR A UNION.

There perhaps never was a question in this Country which excited so much public discussion and party warmth as the Union of the Provinces. The whole arguments for and against the measure are now before the only tribunal imbued with the proper authority to decide upon it, and although there cannot be a doubt but that decision will receive the mature consideration of a kind paternal government, before promulgation, the business leaves every reason to suspect that whether Union or no Union, a large party will be disappointed. It is to be regretted that in their over anxious zeal; a middle course which might be more gratifying to both had not been thought of; a moment's attention to the situation of those who opposed the Union might have suggested such a plan. It is well known that the Anti Unionists, as they are termed, are the French Canadians—and the Unionists are the English If the Imperial Government should feel disposed to acquiesce in the wishes of the latter to their full extent they or a great portion of them might be satisfied by the following approximation to what they desire.

Let the act of 171, which fixes the line of separation between the two Provinces, be repealed or such part of it as may be necessary; and instead of that line running where it now does—let it commence on the frontier boundary between the United States and the Canadas where the line also intersects Lake Memphramagog—and proceed from thence through the Townships of Potton, Brome, Granby and by the Yamaska Mountain, in a straight direction, it would touch the river St Lawrence below the Island of Montreal somewhere about Cape St Micheal, and from across that river through the Townships of L'Assomption and Rawdon to the Hudson Bay territory.

If the boundary line betwixt the Provinces were to run in this direction it would give to a large portion of those most anxious for the Union all they desire, while but few of those opposed to it would be aggrieved by it; as such a disposition would attach to Upper Canada—a large mass of the English who wish to be so—In fact it would include perhaps four fifths of those in Lower Canada who signed the petition for the Union. A large portion of the Eastern Townships—all the English interest in Montreal—The flourishing settlement on the Eastern side of the Ottawa, would thus become under the laws of Upper Canada. Were this plan adopted, many beneficial consequences would result from it. Montreal might then be a made a port of entry which would give to Upper Canada a sea port, from whence the duties could be levied for the payment of the Civil List, and all contention about the proportioning the duties fixed at Quebec between the Provinces be set to rest. The advantages which would accrue to Upper Canada from such an arrangement ought to be sufficient to induce the people of that Province to come forward in support of it Those who are most anxious for that desirable object, a Register Office, and who from possessing extensive landed estate are most required to provide for its security, would by becoming attached to Upper Canada, have their wishes accomplished; and the additional value and security given to their real estate. Viewing this subject respecting the general benefits which would result to the Country from it, much good might be expected. The increase of interest and wealth which would be thus added to Upper Canada, would enable them to make greater efforts for public improvements. The navigation of our rivers above Montreal would soon be improved, while to procure a free outlet to the sea, the same would take place below it. In this manner such an arrangement could be made more congenial to the feelings of the contending parties than the method of a general union as at present proposed. Such a measure would ensure to a great proportion of those desirous for a Union the attainment of what they want; and lastly if a Union could be of service from this plan, a great portion of the expected benefit of it would flow, and at a less expense of the violation of party feeling which has been excited on this subject. Perhaps if predictions might be allowed, such a measure as here suggested, might be the means of exciting a more general interest in favour of a Union, and thereby removing many galling difficulties which have arisen on the subject,—but of this hereafter.

The width of the St Lawrence, opposite Quebec from Makenzie's Hotel at Point Levi to the Lower Town Market, was paced on the ice some time ago, and an average, which cannot be far from the true measurement, was drawn of 1150 yards, or about two thirds of an English Mile. It is generally thought to exceed this. We have now a good opportunity of knowing the exact width at different points, which as a matter of curiosity would be interesting. To the gentlemen of the army it is no doubt known; the range of a cannon ball with an ordinary charge is much greater than 1150 yards, and therefore Point Levi would afford a very favorable spot for the erection of an enemy's battery.

Two young lads of the 70th Reg. servants to Captain Tredennick and Lieut. Creighton, robbed their masters on Saturday night last, of a gold watch and chain, a small sum of money, and wearing apparel to a large amount, with which they deserted, and proceeded towards the lines —Mr. Creighton left town on Sunday in pursuit and arrived at Burlington in Vermont ten minutes before the fugitives. There aided by the Civil Authorities (from whom he received every assistance he could desire) he succeeded in arresting them with all the property in their possession —The fellow ing morning they were conducted to the County Jail where they will be kept to await their trial. Mr. Creighton recovered his property as well as that belonging to three other Military Gentlemen, who had been robbed at the same time and arrived in town on Thursday afternoon —Montreal Herald.

I had not been long in the house however, before the woman existed anew my doubts as to my host She inquired whether I was armed; whether I carried any money in my portmanteau; where I had been in the neighbourhood; and a hundred similar questions, to all of which I answered with promptness, not choosing to betray any reserve as that might make matters worse. I waited anxiously for the man's return, debating with myself whether I could not frame an excuse for going on as soon as he returned; he was to have been home by nine in the evening but eleven came; the family all appeared weary of sitting up, and finally gave up the point, and yielded to the frequent intimations that I could retire, and was shown to my chamber

When left to myself, I examined into my situation in regard to the means of my escape, if an escape should be necessary. I found I was literally in prison. The windows were firmly nailed down and the sash remarkably strong: the only door was that by which I entered, it separated my room from the chamber in which it appeared to me all the family slept. It was fastened by a wooden latch on the outside and from the manner in which these were put in the inside, when I entered, by which the latch could be raised. This the woman pulled through after her, when she shut the door and left me, leaving me no means of opening it, or of getting out of the room under any circumstance, without the application of great force I sat down and reflected a while on all these transactions; my suspicions all came back; presently I heard the trampling of a horse; after the voices of two men in the yard. They entered the house, and a long and constant conversation was carried on in a low tone of voice, which I could not here distinctly enough to catch a single word with one exception when one of the men raised his voice a little with emphasis, said, "at all events we must make sure of him in some way," a declaration that might have reference to me or might not.

I was alarmed—I pulled my pistol flints, and examined the loading—threw off my coat only, and extinguished the light laid down with my pistols under my pillow a hand grasping each and my money between the bolster and bed In this situation so great was my fatigue, that I almost immediately fell asleep and did not awake until something hard under my shoulder aroused me—one of my pistols had slipped down, and I was lying on it: I replaced it more cautiously But at this moment whispering in the next room alarmed me; I listened and listened again; the wind was blowing without, and fifty times I fancied I heard the latch lifted, and grasped my pistols to fire—At last however, it died away The heat almost suffocated me I rose, undressed entirely, and laid down—an hour passed, and I awoke, it was by a gentle rapping at the door, and a call—"Sir, will you please to get up to breakfast?"

Never will I forget my joy; it seemed like a resurrection from the dead; for had an attack been made upon me in the utter darkness of the night, I know I should have had slim chance, armed as I was, against two men, over powerful. I arose, dressed myself, and descended to the room where I found every face I met was cheerful and happy; the man paid my money; he had really been deceived in the note, and had found some difficulty in getting it exchanged, which was the cause of his late detention the night before His eldest son had come home with him; the good woman told me very kindly, that she feared I had been disturbed, as the old man and his son had sat up very late examining into, and arranging some accounts which they had against a fellow, who had recently become insolvent in the neighbourhood.

GAMING HOUSES AT PARIS.

There are at present 9 public gaming houses at Paris, licensed by the French Government, and the holders of them pay annually to the Government six millions of francs (250,000£) for permission to keep them. The capital daily appropriated as a bank for the whole is about 30,000£.

The first in consideration is the "Salon," in the Rue Grange Batelliere The next "Frescat," in the Rue Richelieu, and subsequently Nos. 9154, and others in the Palis Royal and different parts of Paris The games played are, Rouge et Noir, Roulettee, and Hazard—The dealer of the cards, and those who officiate at Roulettee and Hazard, are not allowed to play themselves, but receive a Napoleon per day (16s 8d their pay.—The "Salon," alone requires an introduction from one of the Members to the French Marquis, who presides before a stranger can enter When a stranger has been introduced, there is usually an invitation sent him to dine at the Salon, on Thursday, on which day a magnificient dinner is given gratis, to all the members—every delicacy of the season, provided, and the choisest Champagne in abundance, which is drank only in tumblers.

Dinner being over, the company adjourn to the tables below, when the play goes on After dinner a man is less on his guard, and Champagne is a stimulous to play with freedom and resolution. Of this the "Chief" of the "Salon," is well aware, and some of the waiters in attendance are ready to lend money to those who may have lost. This arrangement is productive of immense profit, for if lost, which is too often the case, the money is, in fact paid back to the concern, and if the borrower should win, he usually refunds the loan before leaving the room, and if unsuccessful, it remains for him to repay the waiter as a debt "of honor" Lending money to a losing gamester is like attempting to fill a leaky vessel. This system of lending is productive of ruin to many who play for a man can retire without being hurt, after losing only the money which he had in his pocket, but he may lose thousands if he continue to borrow, for there is a disposition in gamesters to pursue a run of ill luck and the feelings are actuated by a sort of phensy, and spirit of revenge to regain that which they feel as if unjustly deprived of. Let a man win, and the gratification he feels renders him almost incapable of leaving the tables, or if he retire, it is only to come again, so that he must lose the more he plays.

A short time since, a foreign Prince won at the Salon 10,000£; with such a sum many would have tho't themselves content; but to win is productive of nearly as much ill as to lose. This young man was so intoxicated with success, that he distressed himself, by not only losing that sum, but an additional 3,000£. At two in the morning a supper is provided gratis at the Salon, this hour is probably chosen, because few come to supper, except to play, as the Opera and Theatre shut much earlier, and, except the gamesters, most persons have retired. The Salon continues open until 5 or six o'clock in the morning. At the Salon, only Rouge et Noir and Hazard are played. An English Nobleman, well known as a great frequenter of the Salon and Frescati, lost a short time since, 40,000£. At Frescati, Rouge et Noir and Roulettee, are played both day and night. Here neither dinner nor supper is provided; but a number of women of superior appearance are allowed to enter and they attract numbers of persons. Twice or thrice in the year, a magnificent ball and supper is given gratis, and to add to the splendour, several Opera girls are hired to dance. It might be said in reference to the ruin occasioned by play after dinner at the Salon, and the general bad consequence of a habit of playing, that a dinner at the Salon operates as poison; and in the same way, the beauty met with at the Frescati may be considered as fatal.

The Gaming houses in the Palis Royal are open day and night, and free entrance is allowed to all who choose to go in, they offer no inducement beyond the hope of gain. The number of dupes in Paris, calculated at one per day, and it is considered that gaming is one of the first and most powerful causes for such destruction Before any one embarks his fortune at play, let him consider the impossibility of winning, because the chances are largely in favor of the tables—Were it otherwise, how could 25,000£ be paid to Government? How is Champaigne, and a splendid dinner for forty or more persons, to be provided weekly at the Salon; and the balls, suppers, and beauties of Frescati, who offer these to the public—the losers!—Last year the principal holder of the Gaming tables, after paying every expense, is said to have netted 20,000£.

A PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR A UNION.

There perhaps never was a question in this Country which excited so much public discussion and party warmth as the Union of the Provinces. The whole arguments for and against the measure are now before the only tribunal imbued with the proper authority to decide upon it, and although there cannot be a doubt but that decision will receive the mature consideration of a kind paternal government, before promulgation, the pertinacity wits which the advocates, on the one hand, and the opponents on the other, have pushed, the business leaves every reason to suspect that whether Union or no Union, a large party will be disappointed. It is to be regretted that in their over anxious zeal, a middle course, which might be more gratifying to both had not been thought of; a moment's attention to the situation of those who opposed the Union might have suggested such a plan. It is well known that the Anti Unionists, as they are termed, are the French Canadians—and the Unionists are the English If the Imperial Government should feel disposed to acquiesce in the wishes of the latter to their full extent they or a great portion of them might be satisfied by the following approximation to what they desire.

Let the act of 171, which fixes the line of separation between the two Provinces, be repealed or such part of it as may be necessary; and instead of that line running where it now does—let it commence on the frontier boundary between the United States and the Canadas where the line 45o intersects Lake Memphramagog—and proceed from thence through the Townships of Potton, Brome, Granby and by the Yamaska Mountain, in a straight direction, it would touch the river St Lawrence below the Island of Montreal somewhere about Cape St Micheal, and from across that river through the Townships of L'Assomption and Rawdon to the Hudson Bay territory.

If the boundary line betwixt the Provinces were to run in this direction it would give to a large portion of those most anxious for the Union all they desire, while but few of those opposed to it would be aggrieved by it; as such a disposition would attach to Upper Canada—a large mass of the English who wish to be so—In fact it would include perhaps four fifths of those in Lower Canada who signed the petition for the Union. A large portion of the Eastern Townships—all the English interest in Montreal—The flourishing settlement on the Eastern side of the Ottawa, would thus become under the laws of Upper Canada. Were this plan adopted, many beneficial consequences would result from it. Montreal might then be a made a port of entry which would give to Upper Canada a sea port, from whence the duties could be levied for the payment of the Civil List, and all contention about the proportionating the duties fixed at Quebec between the Provinces be set to rest. The advantages which would accrue to Upper Canada from such an arrangement ought to be sufficient to induce the people of that Province to come forward in support of it Those who are most anxious for that desirable object, a Register Office, and who from possessing extensive landed estate are most required to provide for its security, would by becoming attached to Upper Canada, have their wishes accomplished; and the additional value and security given to their real estate. Viewing this subject respecting the general benefits which would result to the Country from it, much good might be expected. The increase of interest and wealth which would be thus added to Upper Canada, would enable them to make greater efforts for public improvements. The navigation of our rivers above Montreal would soon be improved, while to procure a free outlet to the sea, the same would take place below it. In this manner such an arrangement could be made more congenial to the feelings of the contending parties than the method of a general union as at present proposed. Such a measure would ensure to a great proportion of those desirous for a Union the attainment of what they want; and lastly if a Union could be of service from this plan, a great portion of the expected benefit of it would flow, and at a less expense of the violation of party feeling which has been excited on this subject. Perhaps if predictions might be allowed, such a measure as here suggested, might be the means of exciting a more general interest in favour of a Union, and thereby removing many galling difficulties which have arisen on the subject,—but of this hereafter.

The width of the St Lawrence, opposite Quebec from Makenzie's Hotel at Point Levi to the Lower Town Market, was paced on the ice some time ago, and an average, which cannot be far from the true measurement, was drawn of 1150 yards, or about two thirds of an English Mile. It is generally thought to exceed this. We have now a good opportunity of knowing the exact width at different points, which as a matter of curiosity would be interesting. To the gentlemen of the army it is no doubt known if the range of a cannon ball with an ordinary charge is much greater than 1150 yards, and therefore Point Levi would afford a very favorable spot for the erection of an enemy's battery.

Two young lads of the 70th Reg. servants to Captain Tredennick and Lieut. Creighton, robbed their masters on Saturday night last, of a gold watch and chain, a small sum of money, and wearing apparel to a large amount, with which they deserted, and proceeded towards the lines —Mr. Creighton left town on Sunday in pursuit and arrived at Burlington in Vermont ten minutes before the fugitives. There aided by the Civil Authorities (from whom he received every assistance he could desire) he succeeded in arresting them with all the property in their possession.—The fellow ing morning they were conducted to the County Jail where they will be kept to await their trial. Mr. Creighton recovered his property as well as that belonging to three other Military Gentlemen, who had been robbed at the same time and arrived in town on Thursday afternoon —Montreal Herald.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF DURHAM.

GENTLEMEN,

TO RECAPITULATE the circumstances and events of the late Contest for the Representation in Parliament of your County, in a public advertisement of this nature, could answer no purpose—you are sufficiently well acquainted with them; and that I am so, no one will doubt.—Had I not conceived your liberties, and the purity of your elective franchise in danger, I should have occasioned no trouble either to you or to our opponents.—You know that I have not desired to foist myself on your notice in an improper manner.—You know that up to this hour I have never solicited, either directly or indirectly, a single vote.—You know my sentiments on this head, and that I hold all tampering with so dear and sacred a right as a political crime productive of the most fatal consequences.

The Quarter's Revenue—The sanguine view of our finances taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, when bringing forward his Budget last May, has been more than born out by the event, as will be seen by the Official Returns, of the Quarter's Revenue. It is gratifying to observe, that the Customs, though £1,150,000 have been given up in remitted duties, have so largely increased, that their produce in the present year only falls short of their amount in 1823 by the comparatively small sum of £168,000. In the Excise there is an increase of £1,156,814, in the year, and of £793 831, in the quarter. The Stamps, the Post Office, the Taxes, and the miscellaneous sources of income, are all more or less improving. The total increase on the last quarter deducting the decrease on the Customs, so well accounted for, is £146,000. But to this increase must, in fairness, be added the amount of the Austrian repayment. That was a feature in the last Budget, peculiar to the year, and formed no part of the regular income of the State. Putting that item out of the question, and the amount is £766,667

African Expedition.—Government has resolved on another expedition to Africa, to explore the course of the Niger. Captain Laing who was at Sierra Leone under Sir Charles M'Carthy, is to be at the head of it, with two secretaries and 14 men.

To give lustre to silver plate—Dissolve a quantity of alum in water, so as to make a pretty strong brine, which must be skimmed very carefully; add some soap to it and when you wish to use it, dip a piece of linen rag in it, and rub over the plate.

To prevent the Smoaking of a Lamp—Soak the wick in strong vinegar, and dry it well before you use it; it will then burn both clearer and pleasant, and give much satisfaction for the trifling trouble in preparing it.

Ancient Relic—At a festive meeting in Argyleshire a circumstance of a novel and very interesting character occurred. General Campbell of Lochnell rose, and addressing himself to Captain M'Dougall, of M'Dougall, said that he held in his hand a broach, known by the name of Brooch of Lorne, which had at one time belonged to King Robert Bruce. It was taken from the person of that Monarch by his ancestor, M'Dougall of Lorne, the person of that Monarch by his ancestor, M'Dougall of Lorne, the actions of rival clans can be so called, had placed that brooch in the possession of a relation of the Lochnell family. Campbell of Ballygleen, whose descendants had preserved it for about two centuries. It was his (General Campbell's) good fortune lately to obtain possession of it, and he now had the satisfaction of restoring it to the descendant of him who had so gloriously won and bequeathed it to his family. Captain M'Dougall made a suitable reply or thanks, and acknowledgments. The brooch was of silver, and of a circular form, the diameter about three inches. In the centre is a crystal, of an oval shape; the setting being raised about an inch round which rise eight tubes, to the same height, in each of which is a pearl; between these is some embossed work.—Inverness Courier.

Mining Companies.—Not even the South Sea Bubble, when at its extreme heigh, presented such a scene of insane eagerness, as that which now prevails in the foreign mining fever. On Saturday, shares in the Real del Monte Mines, on which £70 are paid, were sold at £1250! To-day they have been current at 1500 guineas—and not to be had—buyers eager Medical Precepts—Health may be as much injured by interrupted and insufficient sleep, as by luxurious indulgence.

The debilitated require much more rest than the robust; nothing is so restorative to the nerves as sound and uninterrupted sleep.

The studious need a full portion of sleep; which seems to be as necessary a nutriment to the brain as food is to the stomach.

Our strength and spirits are infinitely more exhausted by the exercise of our mental, than by the labor of our corporeal faculties—let any one try the effect of intense application for a few hours; he will soon find how much his body is fatigued thereby, although he is not stirred from the chair he sat on.

Those who are candidates for health, must be as circumspect in the task they set their mind, as in the exercise they give to their body. The brane demands a much more abundant supply of animal spirits than is required for the excitement of mere legs and arms. Those who possess and employ the powers of the mind, most seldom attain to great age

A MELANCHOLY EPISTLE!

Letter from an Irish Lady to her nephew, June 2d 1799

Dear nephew—I have not written to you since my last before now, because we had moved, from our former place of living, and did not know where a letter would reach you; but I now with pleasure take up my pen to inform you of the death of your only living uncle, Kirkpatrick, who died very suddenly last week after a lingering illness of five months. The day on man was in convulsions the whole time of his sickness being perfectly quiet and speechless, all the while talking incessantly and calling for water. I had no opportunity of informing you of his death sooner, except I had wrote by last boat, which went off two days before he died, and then you would have had postage to pay.—I am at a loss to tell you what his sickness was occasioned by, but I fear it was brought on by his last sickness, for he was never well ten days together during the whole time of his confinement, and I believe his sickness was occasioned by eating too much of rashers stuffed with peas and gravy, or peas and gravy stuffed with rabbits. I cannot tell which: but be that as it will, as soon as he breathed his last, the doctors gave over all hope of his recovery.

I need not tell you any thing about his age for you know that in December next he would have been twenty five years old, lacking ten months, and had he lived till then he would have been six months dead; his property now devolves to his first kin, who died some time ago, so that I expect it will be divided between us, and you know his property was something very considerable, for he had a fine estate which was sold to pay debts; and the remainder he lost in a horse race; it was the opinion of every body at the time, that he would have won the race, if the horse he run against had not been to fast for him; I never saw a man, and the doctors all say so, that observed the directions or took medicine better than he did; he would as lieve drink gruel as wine if it had the same taste, and would eat a table spoon full of salt as eat beef steak if it had the same relish. But poor soul he will never drink more, and you have not a living relation in the world except myself and your two cousins who were killed in the last war. I can't remain on this mournful subject any more, and shall send my letter with black wax, and put on it your uncles coat of arms, so I beg you don't break the seal when you open the letter, and don't open it till three or four days after you receive it, by which time you will be prepared for the sorrowful tidings. When you come to this place stop and do not read any more till my next

Your affectionate aunt

P S.—Don't write to me again till you receive this.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

It is an extraordinary fact, that at this early period arrangements are making to profit by the Coronation, which is to take place at Rheims in May, and which will be the most splendid ceremony ever witnessed in France. Meurice the inn keeper, is buying up all the carriages which he can obtain, with the expectation of selling or letting them for the journey at an enormous profit.

Some of the French editors are displeased at the British Government for recognising, as they term it, "the Insurgent States of South America." The Etoile of the 9th of January, remarks, that the Cabinet of Great Britain must now be considered hostile, not only to the monarchy of Spain, but to all the Cabinets of the other great Powers of Europe.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor of Russia has addressed a rescript to the Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs, charging him to exercise the most rigorous surveillance over all publications that touch on religion or public instruction, in order to prevent any from being published that have not received the sanction of the Synod

GREECE AND TURKEY.

Letters from Constantinople of December 2, announce the evacuation of Moldavia by the Ottoman Porte. It is said that the Sultan had considered extraordinary measures necessary for the protection of his person.

"Accounts from Zante of the 13th of Dec. say that [illegible] had executed several Greek chieftains in reprisances in opposition to the Greek Central Government, had been executed. or, as others say, had been killed in an action with the troops of the Government. Private letters from Hydra of the 2d December, say, that since the naval action fought off Candia, there had been another engagement near Rhodes, in which an Egyptian frigate was burnt, and several transports taken.

On the 37th Nov. Constantine Botzaris, informed that Joussouf Pacha had just sent two thousand men from Lepanto, commanded by the celebrated Achmet Pacha, left, Sichena himself, for the purpose of encountering them. He came up with them on the plain of Xero Campos, beat them, killed Achamet Pacha, and took away from the Turks the desire of giving further annoyance to the besegers. The capture therefore, of the fort of Patras may be considered very near.

UNITED STATES.

From the National Journal of February 21.

Indian Treaty—By a treaty concluded at Washington on the 20 January, 1825, between the United States and the Choctaw nation of Indians, and ratified on the 19th inst. the Choctaws have agreed to cede to the U. States all that portion of the land ceded to them by the second article of the treaty Doak Stand, lying east of line beginning on the Arkansas, one hundred paces east of Fort Smith and running thence, due south, to Red River; it being understood that this line shall constitute and remain the permanent boundary between the United States and said nation; and the United States agreeing to remove such citizens as may be settled on the west side to the east side of said line, and prevent future settlements from being made on the west thereof. The United States, in consideration of such cession, and on certain conditions, agree to pay them 6000 dollars annually forever.

A Delegation from the Cherokee Nation, consisting of three, viz Jno. Ross, George Lowry and Elijah Hicks, arrived in this City a few days since, on business with the Government, and on Saturday, eleven Indians, representing the Shawanse, Delaware, Kickapoos, Miamis, Piankashaws, Senecas, Wyandots, Weas, and Pioneas, &c.

The object of the last named Delegation is to make arrangements for a removal of their tribes West of Mississippi, and are the Indians to whom we referred in our notice headed "Movements of Indians," in our paper of the 8th instant.

UNION OF THE ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC

There is the fairest prospect of the execution of this most useful canal. During the last summer, the Mary Livingston sailed from New York with a company, who went in her for the purpose of examining the River St. Juan and Lake Nicaragua, and also of taking the level and exploring the route between the two oceans. The Mexican government has given its sanction, and has warmly adopted the project; and the Mary Livingston has sailed from Alvarado for St. Juan, to commence the survey. The execution is committed to Mr Edward Blunt, a gentleman of an enterprising and resolute character, and of scientific acquirements; and it may be rationally hoped, from the surveys which he has already made on our own coast, that this important line will not suffer in his hands.—Globe.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

(Concluded.)

Witness.—I cannot swear what others saw: But, my Lord, (said he), I do believe the whole company saw it; and, if it had been thought a doubt, proof would have been made of it, and many would have attested with me. Then the Witness observing some admiration in the auditors, spoke further; "my Lord. I am minister of the Parish, and have long known all the Parties, but never had occasion of displeasure against any of them, nor had to do with them, or they with me; but as I was minister, the thing was wonderful to me: But I have no interest in the matter, but as called upon to testify the truth, and that I have done." (This Witness was a very reverend person, as I guessed, of about seventy years of age, his Testimony was delivered gravely and temperately, but to the great admiration of the auditory.) Whereupon, applying himself to the Chief Justice, he said, "my Lord, my brother here present "is minister of the next Parish adjacent, and I am sure saw all "done that I have affirmed." Thereupon the Judge [illegible] to give Evidence. And the Jury [illegible] in every point [illegible] sweating of the brow, the change of the colour, thrice opening of the eye, and the thrice motion of the finger, and drawing it in again;" only the first Witness added, that he himself dipped his finger in the blood which came from the dead body to examine it, and he swore he believed it was blood.

I conferred afterwards with Sir Edward Powell, Barrister at Law, and others, who all concurred in the observation; and for myself in I were upon Oath, can depose, that these depositions (especially the first Witness) are truly reported in substance

The other evidence given against the Prisoners, viz:—The Grandmother of the Plaintiff, and against Okeman and his wife, that they confessed they lay in the next room to the dead body that night; and that none came into the house till they found her dead the next morning; therefore if she did not murder her self, they must be the murderers. To that end further proof was made.

First, That she lay in a "composed manner in her bed, the "bed cloaths not at all disturbed, and her child by her in bed."

Secondly, "Her throat cut from ear to ear, and her neck broke," so that it she first cut her throat, she could not possibly break her neck in the bed. Nem Contra—Thirdly, "There was "no blood in the bed, saving a tincture of blood on the bolster "where the head lay, but not substance of blood at all."

Fourthly, "From the bed's head there was a stream of blood "on the floor, which ran along until it pooled in the bendings "of the floor to a very great quantity; and there was also another stream of blood on the floor at the bed's foot, which pooled also on the floor to a very great quantity; but no continuance or communication of blood, or matter of the one to "places, from one to the other, neither upon the bed," so that she died in two several places; and it was deposed, turning up the mat of the bed, "that there were clots of congealed blood "in the straw of the bed underneath."

Fifthly, "The bloody knife was found in the morning sticking "in the floor, a good distance from the bed; but the point of the "knife, as it stuck, was towards the bed, and the haft from the "bed."

Lastly "There was the print of a thumb and four fingers of "the left hand."

Sir Nicholas Hyde, Chief Justice—How can you know the print of a left hand from the print of a right hand in such a case

Witness.—My Lord, it is hard to describe; but if it please that honour the Judge to put his left hand upon your left hand, you cannot possibly place your right hand in the same posture; which being done, and experience so, the defendants' said time to make their defence, but gave no evidence to any purpose.—The Jury departed from the Bar, and returning, acquitted Okeman, and found the other three guilty; who being severally demanded, why Judgement should not be pronounced, said nothing, but severally "I did not do it, I did not do it."—Judgement was given, and the Grandmother and Husband was executed; but the Wife had the privilege to be spared execution, being with Child. Enquiry did not [illegible] any thing at their execution, but they did not, as I was told.

Natural History.

ANTS IN BULAMA.

The greatest plague which we (of us on our first arrival says Captain Beaver, pass the immense quantity of ants upon the island. There are on Bulama five different sorts, but not all equally troublesome or destructive. Those that were most so, however, for long after we left them—for the most should have been uninhabitable, entered as we built upon, and occupied the ground—The different sorts are:

First the Termites called in the country bog-a-bugs These ants build their nests in no irregular construction, from 6 to 8 feet high, and from 10 to 15 feet in circumference at their base; the figure of the cottage, and about the hardness of a half-burnt brick, and are frequently so close and so numerous as to be easily distinguished at first sight for native towns and which I really thought the eye could find out upon the S W and of the island of Bulama. Near the Wood ashes. He have strong scented, such as cedar and the like, which keeps them from their depredations; and I have known a small plank, three inches thick, lying upon the ground completely hollowed out by them in one night. They begin their devastation from the ground underneath, and touch not the outer surface; so that the plank has all the appearance of its former solidity until it is moved, when there does not appear to be more than the thickness of a sheet of paper left of its former substance, all the internal part being entirely eaten away. Wood appears to be the chief subs ance against which they direct their rage; and this will never be hurt by them if it does not come in contact with the ground. Those posts which I placed in it were covered with either tar or paint, under the ground, and for a few inches above it, for the purpose of repelling these destructive insects; but whether it was attended with the desired effect, was did not know, as they were not examined when we came away. The nests which we destroyed were not attempted to be rebuilt, and these destructive ants retired from our habitations; so that I should think that were the island well peopled, they would be quickly destroyed. Exposure to the sun will kill them. The internal structure of their nests are very curious; whence there are innumerable channels or passages which lead deep under ground. We never destroyed one of them with out finding at the bottom of it, what is called by the grumetas, the queen (white) bug-a-bug; it was generally about three inches long; its head, which was perfectly that of a bug-a-bug, being the only resemblance it had to the rest of the body, which was throughout the form of a white, gelatinous matter, resembling what is called the fish in the vertebræ of animals: but what appeared to be its most extraordinary was, its being, apparently, incapable of progressive motion; for though its body was in a constant undulating motion it never moved forward. These queens were always found placed between two pieces of thin, well worked, smooth clay, laid one over the other, and their internal surfaces exactly fitting, in about the centre of which there was a concavity formed in each, to fit exactly the body of the insect, which we always sure to be found there the bite of this insect is very severe

2dly. The BLACK ANT. It is difficult to stop the progress of these formidable, and innumerable insects. If a brook be in their way they will go under it; if a house or a wall, they will either go under or over it. It is said that they will kill any animal, not excepting even the elephant itself, if they surprise it asleep; many astonishing things are told of them; and some so wondrous, have we seen ourselves, that I almost fear to relate them; neither would it, if there were not persons living who could vouch for the correctness of the accounts. Shall I be believed when I say, that I have seen them destroy living, full-grown rats? I did not see the beginning of the attack; but one day, with several other persons, we stumbled upon an immense number of these ants, which occupied a space of, I suppose, about twenty feet in circumference, in the midst of them were two full-grown rats, twisting about in the greatest agony, covered with these insects. I do not believe that they had been long attacked by them, for their hair was pretty entire; in less than half an hour, there was not a bit of it left upon either of their backs, and they appeared as if they had been scalded, their eyes and ears were full of blood, and in somewhat more than an hour one of them was motionless, for the other, poor creature, not only a long pole we killed it, to put it out of its misery. The rats though covered with ants when we first saw them, had quite strength enough to have run away instead of which they did nothing but writhe and twist about, until their strength was entirely exhausted. Upon our first landing we were greatly annoyed by these ants; several of the colonists being at different times wakened in the night, from their rotting about them; and one woman, I thought, would have absolutely gone mad, before she could be disengaged of a great number that had entered into her body, and had so got into her long and thick head of hair, that the strength of one to some time entirely to clear her of them. These insects, one would imagine, must have a very acute sense of smelling; for if a piece of meat was dropped on the ground, and not one of them was to be seen, it would in a very short time be surrounded by them, and quickly be devoured, and carried away. We, therefore, in all places pieces about as traps, and when a great number were collected about them, they were destroyed by throwing hot coals upon them. At first we attended it, by pouring on them boiling water; but after lying to all appearance dead, for about half an hour, they would get up and run away. They generally march in regular columns; and I have frequently watched their progress, like a stream of black ink, about two inches broad, for many hundred yards together. Sometimes they would go under ground, without any apparent necessity for so doing; and appear in it again at a short distance; and this would sometimes be frequently repeated but always with uniform pace, and in the most perfect order; as on others they would continue on the whole time that I watched them above ground; and at their again, they would once entered the ground. I was not able to trace their quitting it again, but struck me as the most remarkable circumstance in the march of insects on either side, in the line, there were larger ants always stationary, always with their heads towards the line of march, and always with their forceps wide open; these sentinels, like two rows of posts, always preserved the parallelism of the two sides of the column, as much so as if it lie in the two edges of a rule of black ribbon, to which they may, not unaptly be compared. All the large black ants were not thus stationary, but many were in the lines with the smaller ones, and, probably occasionally relieved the others; but I never saw a single one thus standing centinel. The small ants were in length rather more than the fifth of an inch, and the larger ones about four tenths of an inch, and were in point of numbers, compared with the former, probably, as six or one to one hundred. When these ants have bitten a person from the pain, they generally leave their corpse behind them, which make two small punctures, that are easily perceived. Like the other sort described, these (or there would be no living for them) always quite the habitations of men; and from three weeks after our landing to the time of our quitting the island, we were not in the least, annoyed by them. They [illegible] Portuguese inhabitants of Bissao; and I am told by the natives that they never enter their towns. These ants destroyed, in one night, soon after our arrival, a whole litter of pigs, and more than a dozen fowls. The two kinds of ants above noticed, have not the least similarity in their conformation, and not less dissimilar in their mode of living; the one subsisting chiefly on wood, the other on animal food; these latter, like the vultures, are of use in devouring dead carcases

3dly. A smaller black ant, whose nests are sometimes on the ground, and sometimes on the branches of trees. These are not troublesome, except when disturbed; their bite is not very severe.

5thly. A large black ant, about three-fourths of an inch in length. These are seldom met with in greater numbers than six or eight together, generally singly, or by twos and threes. They are frequently found in the bottom of holes or pits; their bite is painful; and when killed, they emit an intolerable stench.

There are numerous swarms of bees in all these countries, which make their combs and deposit their honey in the hollow of trees; to get at which the natives cut them down. We had no better mode, on the island of Sulama, to get at our honey, of which I have sometimes had three large pails full brought to me in one morning

* Our inclosed garden contained exactly half an acre, and in it we had to knock down twenty of these big a-hag hills, it is said that they always build their nests on the best soil.

† Those who wish to know more of this kind of ant will find it well described in Smellie's Philosophy of Natural History.

On motion of Mr. GORDON the address was read the second time.

On motion of Mr. GORDON the House went into Committee on the address

The Chairman reported the address amended.

The Report was ordered to be received, and the address was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr MORRIS from the Committee to whom was referred the Religious Society relief Bill, reported a Bill which was received and read the first time and ordered for a second reading on Monday next.

Mr. MORRIS from the joint Committee of conference on that part of His Excellency's message relating to the destruction of the late Parliament House, by fire submitted a Report which was received and as follows.

Joint Committee Room
January 27th 1825.

The Joint Committee of conference having met this day at twelve o'clock to enquire into the causes which occasioned the destruction, by fire, of the Public buildings appropriated for the meeting of the Legislature, it appeared to be of consequence, as a preliminary step, to ascertain as speedily as possible the actual state of the ruins and whether the walls of the middle building remained in a state worthy of being roofed and repaired, it was therefore unanimously resolved that Mr. Morris, the Chairman of the conferences from the House of Assembly should ascertain, from a proper workman, the present state of the buildings and the expense of roofing the same should the walls be found sufficient.

The Committee then adjourned to Saturday 29th January at three o'clock.

Saturday 29th January three o'clock, the joint conference met according to adjournment and examined several witnesses.

Doctor Powell, could give no further information than that which was contained in the Report which he had addressed to George Hillier Esq. Private Secretary to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on being asked why the House was not insured; answered, that it had been recommended by a special Committee but had not been adopted by the House.

James B. idgand, recollected nothing more than what he had stated on his affidavit, he and his daughter had been employed all the day on which the fire happened in cleaning the House and the windows—said that he had perceived some smoke but on opening the windows it immediately disappeared and having put one stick into the stove and carefully covered up the fire on the hearth, he had gone home about four o'clock and did not return till alarmed by the cry of fire—said that a beam passed very near the flue, that the chimneys had been all swept and the stove pipes cleaned the day before.

Lewis Bright, could give no information—was in the House during the day of the fire but not in the wing belonging to the House of Assembly.

3 o'clock, 31 Jan. 1825—The joint conference met according to adjournment.

Richard Owen, went past the House at ten o'clock at night, or perhaps a little later, saw a great smoke in the north chimney of the wing but had no idea that the House was on fire—soon after he was in bed, his wife who had not retired got alarmed at seeing a strange light about three o'clock—got up and ran to the buildings but found many there before him—the north wing all in flames—can form no opinion how the fire happened.

Mrs. Robinson, passed the House between eleven and twelve o'clock, and saw a great smoke in the north chimney, but no light, supposing that there were people in the House she was not alarmed, although the smoke was remarked on a little boy with her, as being very great—went to bed on reaching her house, and was roused by the call of fire, about an hour and a half after.

Mr. Hay, was alarmed a little after twelve, ran immediately out and on reaching the buildings saw the roof of the north wing already on fire—all the lower part consumed, is convinced that the roof caught from the lower story and that the ground floor took first.

Mr. Clinger, put up the pipes on the 28th, the day before the fire happened, but can give no information respecting the fire.

John Eaton, saw the fire issuing from all the windows when he got there—thinks the fire took first below—mentioned a beam passing within 4 inches of the flue, from the catching of which from a crevice in the flue he thinks the fire might have originated.

Daniel Stafford, thinks the fire originated from the flue and caught the beam of timber which entered the wall so near it.

John Hays, saw the fire below and above, corroborated Staffords evidence, mentioned the piece of timber 4 inches from the flue, but thinks the fire took from above.

Mr. Charles Small, returning from Mr Joseph Wehams at half past twelve observed something like a cloud which he thought might have been the marsh on fire—on reaching the bank he perceived a great light, and when opposite Dr. Widmers, saw two people crossing towards the Parliament buildings, Mrs. Hays looking out of her window told him the Parliament House was on fire, on hearing of which he returned up King street knocking at every door, and when he came back to the Parliament House he found about a dozen people who were busy taking out the books from the Library, he states that his mother Mrs. Small, alarmed by a faint cry of fire, ran to Dr. Widmers thinking it to be his house but discerning her mistake she returned and awoke Mr. Small—witness thinks the fire commenced below.

Mr. Charles Richardson, perceived about one o'clock a great light, thought it proceeded from Dr. Widmer's house, dressed expeditiously, and when in the street saw where the fire was, only one person at the Parliament buildings when he arrived, saw the flames issue from the windows of Doctor Powell's room, all the other windows dark—knowing where the Journals were kept opened the back window but such a volume of smoke was emitted as rendered it impossible to enter, was forced to let the window down again, is convinced that the fire originated below in Doctor Powell's Room.

Mr. Andrew Wharfe saw a light in his bed-room between twelve and one—thought Mr. Small's house was on fire—ordered his brother to give the alarm up the street—found on going out it was the Parliament House. The north wing was on fire, exerted himself in the first place to save the Library—gave no opinion as to the cause of the fire.

Mr. MORRIS, Chairman of the Committee from the House of Assembly reported, that Mr. Ewart the builder estimated the expense of putting on the roof on the middle building, the walls of which he states to be very little injured, at one hundred pounds, and closing up the windows and doors.

From the whole evidence, and likewise from a personal view of the ruins, the joint Committee are of opinion, that the North flue of the North Wing, as well as the Chimney on the other end, were so every insecure as to expose the Building to great danger and that therefore the fire may have been accidental, the Committee, however, can not forbear expressing, it as their opinion from the incidental information brought before them, that a great want of vigilance seems to have prevailed among the Servants employed, especially James Bridgland and John Hunter.

The Committee are further of opinion that the middle building should be roofed and enclosed, by boarding up the doors and windows, taking down the Interior Chimneys or supporting them as may appear necessary.

of Legislative Council.

(Signed) Wm. MORRIS,

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, it was ordered, that the Report of the Joint Committee should be referred to a Committee of the whole House, on the morrow.

Mr. BEARDSLY from the Select Committee, to whom was referred the Petition of John P. Clement, reported a bill which was received and read the first time.

Mr. BEARDSLY moved, that the bill for the relief of John P. Clement, should be read a second time on the Monday following.

Yeas, Messrs Matthews. Hornor, McCall, Hamilton, Lefferty, Perry, Randal, Scollick, Coleman, Ingersol, Clark, Wilson, Beardsly, Thomson, Thompson, and McBride. 16

Nays. Messrs. Gordon, C. Jones, J Jones, Wilkinson, Burnham, Atty General, VanKoughnett, White, McLean, D. Jones, Atkinson, Cumming, McDonald, Walker, Morris, Peterson, and Beasly, 17.

Question lost, majority 1

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on the subject of duties collected at the Port of Quebec, was read the third time, passed and signed, and is as follows:

Commons House of Assembly, 9th Feb. 1825.

In amendment CAPT. MATTHEWS moved, that after the word "aid" in the original Resolution the words "as far as applies to roads and bridges," be added.

Which was carried.

The original motion as amended, was then put and carried, and the following Members were chosen by ballot to compose such Committee, Messrs. Matthews, Hamilton, Clark, C. Jones, Hornor, McLean, and Beardsly.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24th, 1825.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LONDON, JAN. 14.

Yesterday afternoon, at two o'clock, his Majesty left the Royal Lodge, in his travelling carriage, with his regular retinue of domestics, but unattended by any military escort, as his Majesty declined having any until he reached Hounslow; from thence it is supposed his Majesty was escorted by a party of the 7th Hussars to Carlton Palace. It is expected that his Majesty will return to the Royal Lodge in a few days, as the establishment is still kept open.

PLYMOUTH, Jan. 13.—The Egeria, 24, Captain S. Roberts, C. B. is expected to sail to-morrow, with H. G. Ward, Esq. his Majesty's Commissioner to Mexico and other official persons, appointed to negociate and conclude, with the declared Independent States, a new Treaty of Commerce, the basis of which (it is understood,) previous negociation has already established.—The Blossom, 24, is to be commissioned by Captain Fred Wm. Beechey, at Woolwich, for the purpose (it is said) of proceeding to Behring's Straits, via Cape Horn, and endeavour to open a communication with Captain Franklin, who is about to proceed on his land expedition from the mouth of Copper Mine river, westward, to Behring's Straits.

Yesterday the brig Swiftsure, Capt. Tilly, (belonging to the Anglo Mexican Mine Company) sailed for the Havanah and Vera Cruz.—She took on board a quantity of quicksilver, for working the silver ore, in the Mexican Mines. She is a fine vessel, and was an object of curiosity whilst here, as it was in her that Buonaparte made his escape from Elba.

The receipts of the customs at the port of Bristol for the last year, exceeded those of the year 1823 by £40 000.

Crim. Con. Cox, vs Kean.—The trial of Edmund Kean, was concluded on the 13th of January. The jury without leaving the box, after deliberating for about twenty five minutes, found a verdict for the plaintiff.—Damages, £ 00.

The British Brig Gen. Brock, took fire on the night of the 15th ult. while lying at the Flats about 9 miles below Wilmington, and was totally consumed, with all her cargo, consisting of 1000 barrels of turpentine, and 203 bales of cotton. It was reported that two men belonging to the vessel, were sitterwards missed.

Dreadful Accident.—At Middleton Colliery on Wednesday evening, one of the most shocking accidents occurred which it has ever fallen to our lot to record. From the best information we could procure on the spot, it seems almost certain that the imprudence of one of the miners, who, with the rest, was just leaving off his work has brought this destruction and misery upon himself and his unfortunate fellow workmen.—He took off the top of his safety lamp, and an almost instantaneous explosion was the consequence, which killed no less than twenty-three of the poor workmen on the spot.—Besides these, four other received very severe injury, and were taken as soon as possible to Leeds Infirmary, where some hopes are entertained of their recovery. The bodies of all those who have been killed have been found except two; some of them are in a shocking mangled state; others appear to have perished merely by suffocation, thus from the injury sustained, as their bodies exhibit no marks of violence.

The following very remarkable anecdote was referred to by Mr. Williams, in his speech upon seconding Mr. Favell's motion for a petition to the Legislature to revise the criminal code.

Two men were once convicted of highway robbery, before Judge Caulfield, the lineal ancestor of the present archbishop Caulfield. When the jury brought in their verdict of guilty, the elder of the two felons turned round to the younger, and with a countenance expressive of the most diabolical cogency and severity, addressed his companion in the following manner:—"D——n seize you, you heartless villain! if it had not been for you, I should have sent that rascal to hell who here witness against us. I would have murdered the villain and then he could have told no tales. But you, you cowardly scoundrel, persuaded me to let him go. You dog, if I be hanged, you will be hanged with me, and that is the only comfort and satisfaction I have. But good people, if any of my profession be among you take warning by my example; if you rob a man, kill him on the spot; you will then be safe, for dead men tell no tales. I have robbed many persons, and I may escape from prison to rob many more, and, by Heavens, the men I assuredly will murder." "May God visit the blood of the men you murder upon my head," said Judge Caulfield. "Go, Mr. Sheriff, procure a carpenter have a gallows erected and a coffin made on the very spot where the murder stands; for from this bench I will not remove until I see him executed; as for the young man, whose heart, though corrupt by the influence of this infernal wretch, still retained the principles of humanity, he shall not perish with him: I must indeed pass upon him the sentence the law requires, but I will respite him, and use my influence with the Crown to pardon him. This hoary villain shall not, therefore, have the satisfaction his malignant heart has anticipated." The Sheriff obeyed the order; a gallows was erected in the court house, and in the presence of the Judge, the Jury, and the people, the unparalleled monster ascended the scaffold, cursing and blaspheming even to the moment when he was launched into eternity."

A year or two since, an enterprising farmer in the land of 'steady habits,' chanced to raise on his annual turnip patch, a turnip of most extraordinary and prodigious size. It occured to Jonathan, that this large turnip, which was the marvel of the whole town and country, ought to be turned to some better account than to be given to the hogs, or sold by the bushel. He had heard that some of the litterati of New York had done well by sending botanical specimens as presents to the Emperor Alexander, and that his Majesty, among other valuables, had sent gold rings in exchange for less pondrous articles than his turnip. Jonathan's mind was therefore made up, that the great turnip should be a vegetable, and he hoped, a meet offering to the Czar of all the Russians. The turnip was accordingly sent to St. Petersburgh, and in due time, Jonathan received in return, several valuable pieces of coin. His neighbours a l learned his good fortune, and one of them, emulous of Jonathan's luck, soon after, manufactured a cheese of huge dimensions, and despatched it as a present for the table of Alexander, and in the meantime waited for the result of the venture. The cheese was even larger than the turnip, and the neighbourhood all thought it fair to conclude, that his Majesty would make a proportionable equivalent for the gift. At length it was announced, a vessel had arrived at Stonington, bringing a large box for Squire Morgan, who sent these last year. The box which was carefully sealed, and directed, was opened in presence of all the family connexions, and a goodly number of the Squire's neighbours, and, on removing the packing materials, instead of the expected treasure, the great turnip was discovered which the spectators immediately recognized as their old acquaintance, and Jonathan declared, that "for his part he did'nt see but what the turnip had stood the voige darn'd well.—Noah's Ark.

The celebrated Aaron Hill when in Egypt, had the curiosity to examine a catacomb. He was accompanied in his expedition by two gentlemen, and conducted by one of the natives of the country as a guide.—They at length arrived at the spot, and, without taking any notice of some fellows who were sauntering about the place descended by ropes into the vault. No sooner were they let down than they were presented with a spectacle which struck them with horror. Two gentlemen, apparently starved to death, lay before them: one of these unhappy victims had a tablet in his hand, on which was written in very pathetic language, the story of their lamentable fate. It seemed that they were brothers of rank and family in Venice, and having in the course of their travels intrusted themselves with one of the natives for the purpose of visiting the catacomb, the perfidious villain had left them to perish.—The danger to which Mr. Hill and his friends were exposed instantly alarmed them. They had scarce read the tale, when looking up, they beheld their inhuman guide, assisted by two others, whom they had seen near the spot closing the entrance into the vault. They were now reduced to the utmost distress; they however, drew their swords, determined to make a desperate effort to rescue themselves from a situation so appalling. With this resolution they were groping about at random in the dark, when they were startled at the groans of some one seemingly in the agonies of death.—They listened to the dismal sound, and at length, by the glimmering light from the top of the catacomb, they saw a man just murdered, and a little beyond they beheld his inhuman murderers, flying with the utmost precipitation. They pursued them with so much speed that they had time to effect their escape through the passage, at which the robbers had entered, before they could close the entrance upon them.

LICENSING THEATRES.

Extract from a curious old manuscript in Malone's collection in the Bodlian Library.

Yesterday being the day appointed for Licensing the various Theatres, a full meeting of the Surrey Magistrates took place.

The first application was made by Mr. Wm. Shakespeare for the renewal of his licence for the Globe Theatre on the Bank side.

Sir Thomas Holmes felt considerable hesitation in assenting to the renewal of the licence. He would put one question to Mr. Shakespeare. Had he, or had he not written, and caused to be represented at the Globe Theatre, a play called Henry VIII? Mr. Shakespeare admitted he had. Mr. Thomas Holmes then stated, he had only put the question for form, he had himself attended and witnessed the representation; his feelings were truly shocked. Mr. Shakespeare had represented our late revered Sovereign as labouring to procure a divorce from Queen Catharine by the most unjust and corrupt artifices, and even as endeavouring to effect it by means of Italian perfidity. He had also represented his Prime Minister as levying cruel and oppresive taxes on the people in his Majesty's name circumstances tending to bring our late revered Sovereign's memory into contempt, and very painful to the feelings of his daughter, our present beloved Sovereign [Elizabeth.]

Mr. Shakespeare admitted the writing and representation of the play, but appealed to the proceedings of the Court, and to every memoir of the Life of Henry VIII, for the truth of the characters delineated in his play.

Sir Thomas Holmes considered this rather an aggravation of the offences, and calculated to augment the danger.

Sir Charles Wynn felt indignant at the exposition made of the Duke of Buckingham.

Messrs. Hemmings and Condell humbly stated that Mr. Shakespeare was only a Joint Patentee, and that they would take care to guard against a similar representation.

A consultation here took place among the Magistrates. The Chairman at length informed Mr. Shakespeare that his licence would be renewed this year, but cautioned him against pourtraying in future the characters of Kings, Ministers, or Courtiers, at least such as had not been dead an hundred years.

AN IRISH ORIGINAL.

Bow-street London.—Among the odd fish who were caught by the watchmen in casting their nets on Friday night, was a Hibernian wag, advanced in years, of very seedy exterior, by possessing all the dry good humour and fun of cracking of spoils on the Irish stage, countrymen.

On being put to the bar, the watchman was called on to state his charge, and this is done in very few words. In fact, Mr. Butler the datura, was found dead drunk, under the piazzas in convent garden, at two o'clock in the morning.

"Well," said Sir Richard, "how do you account for your disorderly conduct.

Mr. B. (with a grin.) O! faith Sir Richard, I never was much of an accountant; and if I was myself, when I was dead drunk, as the watchman says, what I'd be saying would'nt do me much good, for 'dead men tell no tales.'"

Sir Richard. "What brought you in such a state?"

Mr. B. I suppose I brought myself that way by drinking liquor.

Sir Richard. It would have been well if you had taken yourself home to bed.

Mr. B. 'Fore God you're right, it would have been well, but there are two reasons against that—first I was blind drunk, so I could'nt see my way; and next if my eyes were as good as your worship's I could'nt have seen what I hav'nt got, which is a bed.

Sir Richard. Have you no lodgings.

Mr B. Devil a lodgings, except in the words of the owld song, "On the cowld ground."

Sir Richard. What are you?

Mr B. Faith, I'm a prisoner I believe.

Sir Richard. I mean how do you get your living?

Mr B. Through the blessings of Providence.

Sir Richard. Have you no trade?

Mr B. Is it me?—the devil a trade.

Sir Richard. Were you brought up to no business?

Mr. B. No, by my soul I was tenderly rared, and my education was my only patrimoney.

Sir Richard. That sort of money does'nt go far with a man of your inclinations.

Mr. B. (with a laugh.) 'Fore God your right a gain! all the learning in the world is no use at the bar. I mean the bar of a public house, unless you back it with the circulating medium.

Sir Richard. I'm afraid you have been circulating your earnings through a very improper medium.

Mr. B. Devil a truer word you ever spoke in your life.

Sir Richard. If I let you go now, you'll set off, and get drunk again.

Mr. B. I'll go bail I wont for I hav'nt a rap in the world; and as for my credit, it's like my coat—worn out.

Sir Richard. I am half disposed to try you.

Mr. B. Not for tippling, I hope, your Worship; for if you do, I'm sure to be found guilty.

Sir Richard. You seem to be a good humoured fellow.

Mr B. There's a pair of us, your Worship.

Sir Richard laughed, and told Mr. B. to go about his business, and mend his ways.

Mr. B. Before I go I'll ask one favor.

Sir Richard. Well, what is it?

Mr. B. Just to give me a bit of a note to your countryman, Mr. McAdam, and if I despair of my own ways, perhaps he'll give me a job in mending the ways of others.

Sir Richard again Laughed, and bid him go out and wait, and he'd endeavor to put him in the way to industry.

Mr. B. shrugged his shoulders with good humour and pulling up his unmentionables, trotted out of the office. The worthy magistrate subsequently gave him a letter, which would probably procure him present occupation.

Foreign Intelligence.

INDIA.

Burmese War.—The advices from Bombay were to the 18th of September, which communicated intelligence from Calcutta to the 19th of August. Intelligence had been received that the bombarde near Romoo had been abandoned by the Burmese. The retreat was made in consequence of the capture of the guard by the English.

AFRICA.

Despatches have been received from Col. Grant, at Cape Coast Castle, dated October 1st. The Ashantees, in returning, have laid waste the country, and reduced many of the native allies to the greatest distress. The garrison was suffering from the dryness of the weather.

PORTUGAL.

Lisbon dates to the 9th of January had been received. A paper of the 5th contains a long article on the present tranquillity of Europe, and the guarantee for its continued repose, furnished by the existence of the "Holy Alliance." On the other hand the Courier Francais says, that there is much obscurity in the diplomatic intrigues, of which Lisbon is the centre. "It appears certain," continues that paper, "that Lisbon is the theatre of a sort of revolution; that there has been a severe struggle between the partizans of the Queen and the government party. It is intimated that the French government has received notice of the passing events in Portugal, and is preparing for any important event."

FRANCE.

The dates from Paris are to the 17th, but they contain no event of moment. The Chambers had passed the law respecting the civil list.

RUSSIA.

St. Petersburgh dates are to the 29th of December. The weather had been uncommonly tempestuous, and several alarms of high water, but no serious damage had been sustained. Reports had reached St. Petersburgh that great damage had been done at the town of Liebau.

GERMANY.

The Berlin papers of the 8th of January, contain a cabinet order relative to the censorship of the press. "Writings tending to hurt the personal honor and good name of others, shall not be published. All articles which attack the foundation of religion, or which presume to make the Christian Religion, the Holy Scriptures, and the historical and positive truths of our faith, &c appear ridiculous, shall not have a place in any publication."

BOSTON, MARCH 5.

Destructive fire at St. Thomas.—We have been favoured with the perusal of a letter dated St. Thomas, Feb. 15th. giving an account of the destruction of half the city by fire on the 12th. It broke out at 8 o'clock in the morning, and raged with great fury for several hours, destroying every house and store at the leeward of the spot where it began, with the exception of one fire proof store, and a dwelling house on the top of a high hill. Four or five hundred houses, including the small houses occupied by negroes, were destroyed, and more than five hundred families were left houseless. These families were in a state of the greatest distress, several hundred of them being reduced from an easy condition, and many of them from affluence, to beggary. The letter states that the fire might have been easily extinguished, had the firemen been permitted to work in their usual dress, but being required by law to put on their uniform, the fire made such progress before a sufficient number of men were collected, that all efforts to check it were unavailing. It was for a long time apprehended that the whole town would be destroyed, as the flames gained rapidly to windward, and it was owing in a great measure, to the aid of the crew of the United States schr. Grampus that they were finally checked.

It was first apprehended, that the fire was the work of an incendiary, and the signal for a rising among the negroes; but it was found to be the result of the folly and carelessness of a superstitious woman. She had lost two ducks, and resorted to the following expedient to discover the thief. She lighted a candle, having first stuck it full of pins, for the purpose of putting the thief to such pain as to compel him to make confession, and left the house for a few minutes. On her return, she found the curtains of her bed on fire, and being unable to smother the flames, she shut up the house and fled, without giving any alarm. She was taken into custody, and was confined as a prisoner in the Island. The Island was under martial law, and the writer was obliged to stand guard three nights in a week. The merchants had all suffered less or more from disaster. The population of the Island is we believe, 4000 whites, and, 8000 blacks.

SLAVE TRADE.

The following extracts are taken from the Sierra Leona Royal Gazette of the 20th of November 1824:

"We regret never having before inspected the numerous slave ships which have arrived here, in order to ascertain whether they answered the description set forth in their papers. The following particulars relative to three vessels taken by our squadron for being engaged in this horrible commerce, and lately brought into our harbour for adjudication in the British and Portuguese Court of Mixed Commission, will, we feel assured, astonish even our readers, who have unhappily had too many opportunities of witnessing the misery which this traffic imposes upon its defenceless and unfortunate victims.

"THE DIANA.—This vessel is stated, in the Royal passport, to be 120 tons burden; and permitted by this passport, in accordance with the Alvara of his Most Faithful Majesty, under date of the 24th of November, 1813, to carry 300 slaves, being at the rate of five to every two tons. On being inspected, she is found to admeasure only 66 tons 52-94ths English measurement, and therefore, authorized to take at the rate of five to each ton. The surface of the men's slave-room is only 480 feet, and two feet seven inches in height; and that of the women, 108 feet surface, and three feet eleven inches high; yet, on board this vessel there were actually shipped, at Badagry, for the passage to the Brazils, 156 human victims, besides her crew, 18 in number.

"THE TWO BRAZILIAN FRIENDS.—This vessel is also stated, by a like document, to be 146 tons, and being similarly licensed, might carry 365 slaves. On inspection she is found to be only 95 tons 54 94ths, and consequently, in like manner, authorized to carry at the rate of four to each ton. The surface of the platform for the men is 815 feet, and the height two feet six inches; that of the women, 148 feet eight inches surface, and three feet ten inches in height. On board this vessel there were actually shipped at Bunagry, for passage to the Brazils, 260 unfortunate Africans, besides her crew, 18 in number.

"THE AVIZO.—This vessel is, by a similar document asserted to be 231 tons, and by her licence might carry 580 slaves. On examining her, it is ascertained that she is only 165 tons 28-94ths, and therefore might carry at the rate of more than five to a ton. The surface of the men's room is 861 feet, height of ditto, three feet two inches; that of the women is 215 feet surface, and the same height as the men's. Four hundred and sixty five wretched beings were stowed on board this vessel at the same port, for passage to the Brazils, besides her crew 33 in number.

We have here 328 tons of shipping, licensed to carry 1,245, and actually conveying from the coast 881 slaves, being (in these three vessels) at the rate of 11 to every four tons, besides the men navigating them, and the water and provisions necessary for so great a number of people for the voyage, together with their boats and ship's stores. As the men and women thus embarked were 712 in number, and supposing the children, both boys and girls, to be either always kept on deck, or confined to the long boat (as is the practice) still only a little more than 3½ square feet was allowed for each adult African thus shipped—a space which, we should suppose, no human being could long exist in; and, indeed, the number of deaths, and the emaciated state of the survivors, too fully prove this to be the case! From the crowded state of these vessels, we do not hesitate to say, that it would be impossible to cram the number on board which the authorities of the Brazils (by sanctioning these false descriptions of vessels) give the masters permission to take, it is therefore, to a certain extent, useless, although proving to the world that this Government, not content with allowing their subjects to carry on the odious traffic, [illegible] ery of the unfortunate victims thus forced away from their families and country. We shall make no further remarks on this painful subject, satisfied that such cruel deception as is clearly shown to be sanctioned by this Power, which is thus adding further horrors to the already detestable slave-trade, will not be overlooked by our Government, who are, no doubt, in possession of the facts from our gallant Commodore and his officers.

"The French slave trade has lately most considerably increased in the rivers Bonny and Old Calabar.—Several new vessels have arrived, and many laden with the cargoes of human victims have left under the white flag, and manned by Frenchmen, although the capital embarked is ostensibly Spanish. In order that our readers may judge of the barbarity and want of feeling evinced by these subjects of an enlightened nation, which publicly disavows such horrible and infamous conduct, we desire to make known that Le Louis, commanded by one Oiseau, on completing her cargo of slaves in the Old Calabar, a few weeks since, without the slightest spark of humanity in him, thrust the whole of these unfortunate beings between decks, (a height of only three feet) and closed the hatches for the night! When morning made its appearance, fifty of the poor sufferers had paid the debt of nature, owing to the confined diseased and putrid atmosphere they were condemned to respire!! The wretch coolly ordered the bodies of these miserable victims, of his total want of human feeling, to be thrown into the river, and immediately proceeded on shore to complete his execrable cargo by fresh purchases of his fellow creatures. To detail all the information we have received relative to the enormities committed by these dealers in human flesh, who [illegible] see they are protected by the nation they claim, and the flag they hoist, would horrify any but slave-dealers, who seem naturally callous to every feeling which ennobles mankind; suffice it to say, they are heart-rending, and would disgrace the most unenlightened savage."

MARRIAGE.

From the Ladies Magazine.

Letter from a Lady to her Daughter

Before this can reach you, the hand that writes it and the heart that dictates, shall be mouldering in the grave. I mean it to supply some cautions which I should think it my duty to deliver to you, should I live to see you a wife

The precepts it contains you have often heard me inculcate, but I know that general observations on a possible event have less force than those which apply to our immediate condition. In the fate of a woman, marriage is the most important crisis It fixes her in a state of all others the most happy, or the most wretched, and though but mere precept can do but little in any case, yet there is a natural propensity to try its efficacy in all. She who writes this paper has been a wife and a mother. The experience of the one, and the anxiety of the other, prompts her instruction; and she has been too happy in both characters to have much doubt of their reception. Sweetness of temper, affection to a husband, and attention to his interest, constitute the duties of a wife, and form the basis of matrimonial felicity; these are indeed the texts from which every rule for attaining this felicity is drawn.

The charms of beauty and the brilliancy of wit, though they may captivate in the friend, will not delight in the wife. They will shorten their own transitory reign; if, as I have seen in many wives, they shine more for the attraction of every body else, than of their husbands. Let the pleasing of that one person be a thought never absent from your conduct. If he loves you as you would wish, he will bleed at heart if he should suppose it for a moment withdrawn. If he does not, his pride will supply the place of love, and his resentment that of suffering. Never consider as a trifle what may tend to please him—the great articles of duty he will set down as his own, but the lesser attentions he will mark as favors; and trust me, for I have experienced it, there is no feeling more delightful to one's self than that of thrusing those little things to so precious a use.

[illegible] mance of young minds generally paints for a husband, you will deride the supposition of any possible decrease in the ardeur of your affections; but wedlock, in its happiest state, is not exempted from the common fate of all sublunary blessings There is ever a delusion of hope, which cannot abide with possession. The rapture of extravagant love will evaporate and waste, the conduct of the wife must substitute other regards as delicate, and more lasting; I say the conduct of the wife; for marriage, be a husband what he may, never sees the prerogative of sex; his, will expect to be pleased, and ours must be sedulous to please. This privilege a good man may waive—he will feel it however due, and third persons will have penetration enough to see, and may have malice to remark, the want of it in his wife He must be a husband unworthy of you who could bear the degradation of suffering this in silence; [illegible] idea of power on either side, must be totally banished from the system; it is not sufficient that the husband should never have occasion to regret the want of it, the wife should so behave that he may never be conscious of possessing it. But my daughter, if a mother's fondness deceives me not, stands not much in need of cautions like these. I cannot allow myself the idea of her wedding a man on whom she would not be dependant, or whose inclinations a temper like hers would desire to control; she will be more in danger from that softness, and sensibility of soul, which will yield perhaps too much for the happiness of both. The office of a wife includes the exertions of a friend; a good one must strengthen and support that weakness which a bad one would endeavour to overcome. There are situations where it would not be enough to love, cherish and obey; she must teach her husband to be at peace with himself, to be reconciled to the world, to resist misfortune, to conquer adversity.

Alas, my child, I am here an instructress but too well skilled; the tears with which this paper is soiled tell not in the presence of your father, though now they but trace the remembrance of what then it was my lot to feel.

Think it not impossible to restrain your feelings, because they are strong. The enthusiasm of feeling will sometimes overcome distresses, which the cold heart of prudence had been unable to endure. But misfortune is not always misery; I have known this truth, I am proud to believe that I have sometimes taught it to return thanks to that power whose decrees I reverence. We always tempered the anguish of our sufferings, till there was a sort of luxury in feeling them.—Then is the triumph of wedded love.

The tie which binds the happy may be dear, but that which links the unfortunate is tenderness unutterable.

Poetry.

From the Literary Gazette.

When the days of thy beauty are faded,
When the lov'd and the lovely are gone,
When thy young eyes with tears are o'ershaded,
And you roam through the wide world alone—
Oh! come to the bosom—'tis bleeding and bare;
But the child of affliction may find a home there!

If thy smile, once so bright, love, shall languish,
My cheek is yet paler than thine;
If thy heart, love, feels chill in its anguish,
The cold blight of sorrow's on mine—
Then come to this bosom—'tis bleeding and bare,
But the child of affliction may find a home there!

Though the happy, the gay, may forsake thee,
Who smil'd when thy heaven was clear;
There is one to his heart who will take thee,
And give all his fortune—a tear,
Then come to this bosom—'tis bleeding and bare;
But the child of affliction may find a home there!

As the ivy, when blasts howl before it,
Clasps the bough, it encircles, more tight,
So my heart in the storms that break o'er it,
More closely to thine shall unite.
Then come to this bosom—'tis bleeding and bare;
But the child of affliction may find a home there.

THE BLIND MAN'S LAMENT.

O where are the visions of ecstasy bright
That can burst o'er the darkness, and banish the night?
O where are the charms that the day can unfold
To the heart and the eye that, for ever are cold?
Deep, deep in the silence of sorrow I mourn—
For no visions of beauty for me shall o'er burn.

They have told me of sweet purple hues of the west!
Of the rich tints that sparkle on ocean's wide breast;
They have told me of stars that are burning on high,
When the night is careering along the vast sky;
But alas! there remains, wheresoever I flee
Nor beauty, nor lustre, nor brightness for me!

But yet, to my lone gloomy couch there is given
A ray to my heart that is kindled in Heaven;
It soothes the dark path I tread, in this valley of tears,
It enlivens my heart, and my sorrow it cheers.
For it tells of a morn when this night shall pass by,
And my spirit shall dwell where the days do not die!

Melancholy Accident.—On Tuesday last as a young man named James Munley was crossing from Kingston to Long Island, he fell through the ice and was unfortunately drowned. The deceased was a native of the County of Mayo in Ireland.—His body was found on Wednesday.—K. Chronicle.

On Wednesday last, J B. Danis of this City was driving a loaded train, between Bohamois, and the Cascades, his Horse slipped, and fell on his knees, which broke the ice, and the Horse train and load fell through. Another horse belonging to Mr. Cammell, which was following Danis came directly to the broken place, but fortunately the driver had time to extricate the train from the harness, and by that means saved the loading, but the horse plunged into the water and was lost.

On Tuesday evening about 5 o'clock, a man named Marchatiere in passing between Nun's Island, and the La Tortu-road, in charge of two Trains, the foremost of which he drove himself, and the other was occupied by his son, a lad of 8 or 9 years old, the front horse broke the ice, and fell under, at that instant Mr. M. jumped from the train and ran to save the one in rear, but he succeeded only, with great difficulty, in preserving his son, as the horse proceeded, and met the same fate as his leader. Four other trains had passed the spot directly before this unfortunate circumstance occurred.

On Thursday last, as the Upper Canada Stage was passing between the Cascades and the Isle Perrault, the ice broke, and it was with great difficulty that the horses, stage, and passengers were saved; fortunately no other injury was sustained than a wetting, which the occupants of the Carriage received.—

We have mentioned a few accidents which occurred by the breaking of the Ice; we have heard of many others; but in a manner so uncircumstancial, that we decline publishing them until we receive more particular information.—Canadian Courant.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

Donegani vs McConnell.

This was an action brought by Joseph Donegani, Sent. against John Douglass McConnell, Esquire, one of the Officers of H. M Customs at this Port, for having entered Plaintiff's house on an information of smuggled goods being secreted therein, &c.

The circumstances from which this action arose were as follows:

From the extent of the illegal traffic carried on between this Province and the neighbouring Republic, the Officers of the Customs at this Port found it necessary to keep up a kind of patrole during the night, composed of the acting tidesmen and headed alternately by the two principal Officers. This watch observed suspicious movements about the premises of the Plaintiff in the night of the 5th August, 1823, and communicated the circumstances to the defendant who upon corroborative information given by the tidesmen, found it his duty as soon as the sun rose on the 6th to take a Peace Officer for the purpose of searching the Plaintiff's premises. On going thither he produced a writ of assistance, and requested permission to proceed on his duty. The Plaintiff resisted this authority and as appeared from the evidence used threatening language against any one who would attempt to search his house. At the same time a number of suspicious looking characters had assembled who seemed to combine with plaintiff in resisting the search The defendant after much fruitless expostulation, found it prudent to get military aid, and accordingly brought five soldiers to assist in keeping the peace. Further resistance being now impudent, plaintiff stated to deft that he might now search as the smuggled goods he had were removed whilst deft. was gone for soldiers On searching the store room, deft. found one whole chest of Hyson-skin Tea built round with boxes of sugar. This chest was marked with the date of importation into the U States, and plaintiff confessed it was smuggled, adding he thought it had been better hid. On further search, defendant discovered another whole chest, and a third containing about 20 a 30 lbs. those two last were marked as having been imported from England, and plaintiff stated that he had purchased them from a house in town eight years ago! and insisted that defendant should allow them to remain. But as they appeared to have been repacked, defendant did not deem it prudent to leave them, and stated his reason to plaintiff adding that if he in the course of that day produced an affidavit that the Tea contained in the two lasts chests was legally imported, he should immediately have them restored, this the plaintiff declined doing, and instead of producing any proof to authorize the restoration of the property: he served the defendant with a protest claiming the three chests, altho' he acknowledged that one was actually smuggled.

In the October term of 1822, he brought his action of damages for £1000. The defendant it appeared in due course of law libelled the three chests, together with a considerable quantity of other Teas, &c then under seizure Plaintiff put in a claim for the three chests, which caused a delay in obtaining judgment for the remainder until the February following, when the Court condemned the other articles contained in the information, reserving the three chests for further consideration, and on which no judgment appears to have yet been obtained

The grounds of this action for damages rested on the validity of the Writ of Assistance, which Plaintiff's Counsel contended was an illegal document, (although acted upon in strict terms of the Statute.) The defendant pleaded the general issue the Imperial Act 7 Geo. III. Cap. 46

The Chief Justice in pronouncing judgment for the Defendant, entered clearly into the merits of the case, explaining the nature of the writ of assistance; and he particularly rested on the fact of the Defendant having actually found one chest of smuggled Tea, which was considered as sufficient grounds for his proceeding to search.—Montreal Gazette.

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor transmits for the information of the House of Assembly, Copies of the Report and accounts of the Commissioners appointed by the Provincial Statute of the 4th Geo 4th Chap 22 for settling the affairs of the pretended Bank of Upper Canada.

(Signed) P. M.

The Report is as follows:

To His Excellency Sir P. Maitland, Knight Commander of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c. &c. &c.

The Commissioners appointed by an Act of the Provincial Parliament entitled, "An Act vesting in certain Commissioners therein named all the Stock, debts, Bond and Property of the Pretended Bank of Upper Canada, duly established at Kingston, for the benefit of the creditors of that Institution."

May it please your Excellency,

That observing how hopeless was every endeavour to collect Assets of the unfortunate Institution, confided to their care, without the adoption of compulsory measures, they determined after presenting their first Report again to resort to legal aid, aware, however of their inability to another failure and of the great expenses attendant upon such a result, if the whole of the defaulters were at once prosecuted, they thought it advisable to act with much circumspection, and accordingly selected the Bonds of two principal debtors only, for the purpose of ascertaining the correct course of legal procedure to be followed on subsequent occasions. A learned Solicitor was employed, to institute actions in these two cases, and it was expected that a decision in respect to both would be obtained at the Court which was to hold its sitting at York, in the month of March. If this decision should be favourable, ample time, it was conceived, would thus be [illegible] ing debtors, who would not pay except on constraint, and whose numbers have unhappily proved to be too great. If on the other hand the attempt should miscarry, it was thought that little comparative expense would be incurred, and that the experience acquired by the Solicitor, in the mode of conducting the legal business of the Bank, would at least ensure full success to future efforts.

In pursuance to his instructions the Solicitor lost no time in commencing the actions, and having joined issue with the adverse Counsel, he requested the Board, by letter, dated on the 13th March, to supply him with a variety of evidence, which he conceived essential to his support, and with which it was necessary he should be provided, before the 25th day of the same month, notwithstanding the brief space allowed for the preparation of so much important testimony, and some other difficulties which will be adverted to. the Board were enabled to dispatch their Clerk with every witness and document that was required in good season; and they accordingly obtained verdicts for the full sum claimed in each case, subject, however, to the determination of the higher court upon ten points reserved by the Counsel for the defendants This result, being inconclusive, created a delay of a few weeks, as the regular term for hearing the arguments on the reserved points did not come on till the close of the month of April, when that period arrived two points only were discussed on maintaining, that the act constituting the Board was a private and not a public act as the Solicitor of the Commissioners had stated it to be, the other, that the Statue was unconstitutional and consequently void, both points were fully and elaborately argued by the Counsel on each side but judgement was postponed and the Board was thus left on the closing of the term somewhat perplexed with regard to the course they should pursue. No measures could safely be taken against those who neglected or refused payment of their promissory notes while the issue of the suits, instituted by way of experiment, remained in suspense, because a failure in those cases would not only render all other actions, conducted on the same principles, abortive, but would obviously entail on the institution a serious waste of funds. It therefore seemed incumbent on the Board to remain inactive, and quietly await the approach of the July Term; at the period the consideration of the reserved points was resumed by the Judges, and on the 19th day of that month the Board received from the Solicitor the unpleasant intelligence, that judgement had at length been given in favor of the defendants.—The Court thus regarded the statute as a private bill which should have been set forth as such in the pleadings, and having thus decided one point against the Board they thought it unnecessary to examine or pronounce upon the other nine points, reserved by the Counsel for the adverse parties.

To be thus foiled in their second attempt to recover the debts of the Institution by legal means was a source of real regret to the Board; regret in no trivial degree, enhanced by the unlooked-to delay which had occurred in obtaining the determination of the Court, and which renders the deterioration it caused in the aggregate value of the debts, left no time to renew the suits at our Court that sat at Kingston in the month of September, if the council had been prepared to make a decision in April, the Commissioners would, in the event of that decision proving unpropitious, have one more recourse to the Law, and risked a third failure at home, where they could have had ready access to all the necessary evidence, and have thus avoided the expenses which had been incurred in sending proof to York on the late occasion In the actual state of things, the commissioners could not, safely or prudently, commence new actions at York. Not only were they confronted by a formidable array of nine points of Law remaining undecided, but they found themselves entirely without means for discharging the costs incidental to legal proceedings. The effects of the Bank afforded them no resources, and they saw, that if they perseverred in their measures, they would be obliged to make further advances from their private fund.

That it would have been indiscreet in the members of the Board after so many disappointments, and amid existing difficulties, to assume additional pecuniary responsibilities, will plainly appear on adverting to circumstances which it is now [illegible] to mark.

At a very early period the Board discovered that embarrassments would be felt in defraying the necessary expenses of their office, such as the Salary of the Clerk, the rent of the Office, and various Contingent charges, because they had resolved on no account to decline receiving the notes of the Bank in satisfaction of debts, and they were well aware, that so long as those notes remained in circulation and at discount, payments would be tendered in no other description of money. They had nevertheless prepared themselves to encounter temporary difficulties of this nature, fully relying on the speedy collection of the debts of the Bank, and conceiving, that in proportion as the notes were redeemed, payments in current money would be made in sufficient sums to meet the expenditure of the office. It is needless to remark that these expectations were far from being realized.

The unsuspicious termination of the suits instituted with a view of marking out the proper mode of legal procedure in the year 1823 not only blasted all such hopes, but had, among many, ill effects, that, of rendering debtors indifferent with respect to the settlement of their notes. It also produced certain other consequences which were not anticipated by the Board as in any case possible.—Owing to an error alledged to have been committed by the respectable Solicitor they had employed, the opposing Counsel whose claim on the effects of the Institution was very obvious, having also succeeded in establishing a claim upon the private effects of the Commissioners, obtained judgement against them individually and in their private capacities for the amount of the costs in defending each action, and before the members of the Board were at all aware of their being thus personally liable, execution directed against them, were placed in the hands of the Sheriff. Involved in this singular dilemma they satisfied, from their private funds, the demands, no enforced against them amounting in all to the sum of seventy one pounds three shillings and one penny.

A hope was entertained that the Legislature in revising the statute during its 1st Session, would have considered the necessity of providing means for carrying its enactments into effect, for though the Commissioners in their report of that time purposely abstained from any observation on the subject, they yet conceived that at the very small amount of current money stated to have been received, would itself have arrested notice and suggested the expediency of immediately supplying in some way or other the funds wanted for defraying the unavoidable expenses of the Board. It is however to be lamented that, instead of any such provision being made as here represented to have been requisite the new law even withdrew the discretionary power hitherto possessed, of insisting on the payment of at least a proportion of each debt in current money; a power, it is to be observed, which had not, and perhaps never would have been exercised. The same law forbade them to refuse the notes of the Bank and commanded the acceptance of certificates in redemption of debts; thus leaving the Board totally without resources, and disposing on them the burthen of promising as they might for the expenses of their office.

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor transmits for the information of the House of Assembly, Copies of the Report and accounts of the Commissioners appointed by the Provincial Statute of the 4th Geo 4th Chap 22 for settling the affairs of the pretended Bank of Upper Canada.

(Signed) P. M.

The Report is as follows:

To His Excellency Sir P. Maitland, Knight Commander of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c. &c. &c.

The Commissioners appointed by an Act of the Provincial Parliament entitled, "An Act vesting in certain Commissioners therein named all the Stock, debts, Bond and Property of the Pretended Bank of Upper Canada, duly established at Kingston, for the benefit of the creditors of that Institution."

May it please your Excellency,

That observing how hopeless was every endeavour to collect Assets of the unfortunate Institution, confided to their care, without the adoption of compulsory measures, they determined after presenting their first Report again to resort to legal aid, aware, however of their inability to another failure and of the great expenses attendant upon such a result, if the whole of the defaulters were at once prosecuted, they thought it advisable to act with much circumspection, and accordingly selected the Bonds of two principal debtors only, for the purpose of ascertaining the correct course of legal procedure to be followed on subsequent occasions. A learned Solicitor was employed, to institute actions in these two cases, and it was expected that a decision in respect to both would be obtained at the Court which was to hold its sitting at York, in the month of March. If this decision should be favourable, ample time, it was conceived, would thus be [illegible] ing debtors, who would not pay except on constraint, and whose numbers have unhappily proved to be too great. If on the other hand the attempt should miscarry, it was thought that little comparative expense would be incurred, and that the experience acquired by the Solicitor, in the mode of conducting the legal business of the Bank, would at least ensure full success to future efforts.

In pursuance to his instructions the Solicitor lost no time in commencing the actions, and having joined issue with the adverse Counsel, he requested the Board, by letter, dated on the 13th March, to supply him with a variety of evidence, which he conceived essential to his support, and with which it was necessary he should be provided, before the 25th day of the same month, notwithstanding the brief space allowed for the preparation of so much important testimony, and some other difficulties which will be adverted to. the Board were enabled to dispatch their Clerk with every witness and document that was required in good season; and they accordingly obtained verdicts for the full sum claimed in each case, subject, however, to the determination of the higher court upon ten points reserved by the Counsel for the defendants This result, being inconclusive, created a delay of a few weeks, as the regular term for hearing the arguments on the reserved points did not come on till the close of the month of April, when that period arrived two points only were discussed on maintaining, that the act constituting the Board was a private and not a public act as the Solicitor of the Commissioners had stated it to be, the other, that the Statue was unconstitutional and consequently void, both points were fully and elaborately argued by the Counsel on each side but judgement was postponed and the Board was thus left on the closing of the term somewhat perplexed with regard to the course they should pursue. No measures could safely be taken against those who neglected or refused payment of their promissory notes while the issue of the suits, instituted by way of experiment, remained in suspense, because a failure in those cases would not only render all other actions, conducted on the same principles, abortive, but would obviously entail on the institution a serious waste of funds. It therefore seemed incumbent on the Board to remain inactive, and quietly await the approach of the July Term; at the period the consideration of the reserved points was resumed by the Judges, and on the 19th day of that month the Board received from the Solicitor the unpleasant intelligence, that judgement had at length been given in favor of the defendants.—The Court thus regarded the statute as a private bill which should have been set forth as such in the pleadings, and having thus decided one point against the Board they thought it unnecessary to examine or pronounce upon the other nine points, reserved by the Counsel for the adverse parties.

To be thus foiled in their second attempt to recover the debts of the Institution by legal means was a source of real regret to the Board; regret in no trivial degree, enhanced by the unlooked-to delay which had occurred in obtaining the determination of the Court, and which renders the deterioration it caused in the aggregate value of the debts, left no time to renew the suits at our Court that sat at Kingston in the month of September, if the council had been prepared to make a decision in April, the Commissioners would, in the event of that decision proving unpropitious, have one more recourse to the Law, and risked a third failure at home, where they could have had ready access to all the necessary evidence, and have thus avoided the expenses which had been incurred in sending proof to York on the late occasion In the actual state of things, the commissioners could not, safely or prudently, commence new actions at York. Not only were they confronted by a formidable array of nine points of Law remaining undecided, but they found themselves entirely without means for discharging the costs incidental to legal proceedings. The effects of the Bank afforded them no resources, and they saw, that if they perseverred in their measures, they would be obliged to make further advances from their private fund.

That it would have been indiscreet in the members of the Board after so many disappointments, and amid existing difficulties, to assume additional pecuniary responsibilities, will plainly appear on adverting to circumstances which it is now [illegible] to mark.

At a very early period the Board discovered that embarrassments would be felt in defraying the necessary expenses of their office, such as the Salary of the Clerk, the rent of the Office, and various Contingent charges, because they had resolved on no account to decline receiving the notes of the Bank in satisfaction of debts, and they were well aware, that so long as those notes remained in circulation and at discount, payments would be tendered in no other description of money. They had nevertheless prepared themselves to encounter temporary difficulties of this nature, fully relying on the speedy collection of the debts of the Bank, and conceiving, that in proportion as the notes were redeemed, payments in current money would be made in sufficient sums to meet the expenditure of the office. It is needless to remark that these expectations were far from being realized.

The unsuspicious termination of the suits instituted with a view of marking out the proper mode of legal procedure in the year 1823 not only blasted all such hopes, but had, among many, ill effects, that, of rendering debtors indifferent with respect to the settlement of their notes. It also produced certain other consequences which were not anticipated by the Board as in any case possible.—Owing to an error alledged to have been committed by the respectable Solicitor they had employed, the opposing Counsel whose claim on the effects of the Institution was very obvious, having also succeeded in establishing a claim upon the private effects of the Commissioners, obtained judgement against them individually and in their private capacities for the amount of the costs in defending each action, and before the members of the Board were at all aware of their being thus personally liable, execution directed against them, were placed in the hands of the Sheriff. Involved in this singular dilemma they satisfied, from their private funds, the demands, no enforced against them amounting in all to the sum of seventy one pounds three shillings and one penny.

A hope was entertained that the Legislature in revising the statute during its 1st Session, would have considered the necessity of providing means for carrying its enactments into effect, for though the Commissioners in their report of that time purposely abstained from any observation on the subject, they yet conceived that at the very small amount of current money stated to have been received, would itself have arrested notice and suggested the expediency of immediately supplying in some way or other the funds wanted for defraying the unavoidable expenses of the Board. It is however to be lamented that, instead of any such provision being made as here represented to have been requisite the new law even withdrew the discretionary power hitherto possessed, of insisting on the payment of at least a proportion of each debt in current money; a power, it is to be observed, which had not, and perhaps never would have been exercised. The same law forbade them to refuse the notes of the Bank and commanded the acceptance of certificates in redemption of debts; thus leaving the Board totally without resources, and disposing on them the burthen of promising as they might for the expenses of their office.

SAINT PAUL STREET,
MONTREAL.

THOMAS CASEY most respectfully informs the citizens of Upper Canada that the above Establishment will be opened for the reception of the Public on Monday the 2nd of May.

SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT

The limits of an advertisement precludes the possibility of detailing with minuteness the various accommodations which this Hotel offers to the public. The proprietor, however, feels warrant in asserting, that in point of architectural beauty, and internal arrangement, the MASONIC HALL is superior to any Establishment of the kind in North America. The Building (which is new, and one of the principal ornaments of the city) has been built expressly for an Hotel. It contains eighty separate apartments, furnished in a style of superior neatness. Nothing has been omitted that could, in any manner, contribute either to the comfort and convenience of its inmates. Suits of apartments for private families; a spacious Ball room, for public Assemblies; a Coffee room; Billiard rooms; Baths, and a RESTAURATEUR on the plan of the Palais Royal, Paris, presents to the guests a variety of enjoyment that is only to be met with in the larger cities of Europe: with such recommendations, joined to moderate charges, and unremitting attention on the part of the Proprietor, T. Casey trusts, that in this his new undertaking, he will meet with the same liberal support he has already so amply experienced from the public.

GREY PAPER

GREECE.

The Greeks have been successful in three naval engagements. A letter from Constantinople of the 19th January, states that a second defeat of the Turkish fleet had taken place, and that Ibrahim Pacha had fled towards Alexandria, to which place the victorious Greeks pursued them.

Accounts from Missolonghi of Dec. 12th, states that a British frigate had just arrived with intelligence of a third victory. This battle was fought on the 3d of December, in which the Greeks gave a deadly blow to the Egyptian naval forces upon the coast near the Island of Crete. Twelve large transports, captured in this engagement, had arrived at Napoli, having on board 3000 negro soldiers, 400 horses, and a large quantity of provisions. Beside the transports captured were one of the Turkish regardon and a fine frigate were burned.

FRANCE.

Rambouillet, Jan.

The tragical event I am about to relate has caused the greatest terror in this neighbourhood. The circumstances are of so mysterious a nature, that one feels disposed to doubt the veracity of the writer, although the account is unfortunately but too true. In the early part of last July, a midwife, living in the small town of Cheverense, a short distance from Rambouillet, was sent for by a young gentleman, who had just arrived in the town. He informed the midwife, that his object in wishing to see her was for the purpose of securing her attendance at the accouchement of a young lady, but which event was not expected to take place for several months. The gentleman gave her some money and departed—previously informing her that her assistance would be required some time in January. On the 7th instant, she received a visit from a second individual, who told her that it was necessary to call immediately on the young lady, of whom she heard in July last; it was stipulated, in order to prevent a discovery, that it was necessary the midwife's eyes should be bloodfolded. The woman consented, after some hesitation, and was led by this gentleman a short distance, as she supposes from the town. On her arrival at the place of residence of the young lady, a tall man presented himself, and placing the midwife upon his shoulder, descended a great number of steps and suddenly taking off the handkerchief that covered her eyes, she found herself in a subterranean apartment. She observed, in one of the corners, a small bed upon which a young female was lying; and by her side was a still born infant, whose death, she thought, had been occasioned by the unskilfulness of the person who had performed the office of midwife. After a short time, the midwife declared that a second birth was about to take place, which assertion was verified in less than an hour. The child was alive and appeared strong. A few moments after the second accouchment, a gentleman entered the apartment, whom she immediately recognized as the stranger who had visited her in July; he was followed by an elderly gentleman, who remained a few minutes by his side; both of them looking attentively at the young female, but neither of their uttering a word. The elderly person seized an opportunity, when the young gentleman's back was turned, to plunge a dagger into the bosom of the unfortunate youth; he fell, and immediately expired. The midwife fainted, and when she recovered her senses she found herself lying by the side of a tree, half a mile from Chevreuse. The Police are very active in clearing up this horrible and mysterious murder. If any discovery is made, you shall hear from me again on the subject.

ALEXANDRIA, D. C. March 10.

Murder and Robbery.—On Saturday night William Simpson, a Northern trader, was murdered near Centreville, Fairfax county, Va. and robbed of about $1800, chiefly in notes of the Bank of Virginia. It appears that Simpson had eaten his supper at the tavern where he had been for several days, in company with four or five persons of the place; and that after supper they all left the tavern, not however, precisely of the same time, but this being common, attracted no particular notice. All except Simpson, resigned to the tavern in the house of the evening.—Next morning being Sunday, three of them left the village, two on foot, and one on horseback. Simpson's not returning to the tavern on Sunday, excited no suspicion, as his business led him frequently into the neighbourhood for longer and shorter periods. On Monday inquisitions began to be entertained, and on Tuesday morning the inhabitants undertook to search, and in a short time, within about half a mile of the village, and near one of the roads leading from thence, he was found dead, and the money which it was known he had about him was missing. He appeared to have been shot through the head with a pistol, and stabbed. The jury of inquest was sitting when our informant left the village on Tuesday.

CAMDEN, S. C. Feb 28.

Murder.—The following statement of a most diabolical deed is furnished us by a very respectable gentleman, residing near the spot where the act was committed.—

On the night of the 17th inst Mrs Stuckey, of Sumpter District, was inhumanly murdered by the servant maid Mrs S was [illegible] who was extremely ill; on the evening of the 17th, she returned to her residence to regulate her domestic affairs and enjoy some relaxation. At the proper hour she retired to repose; having two infants with her, leaving two children who were in the kitchen with the servant. The servant in a short time left the kitchen, and entered the mansion of her mistress and there perpetrated the deed by striking Mrs S. two or three blows on the head, and, it is said cut her throat, which caused her immediate death. Mr S the husband, was at the grandmother's of the murderer when she returned to the kitchen, the children saw her throw an apron behind the door, to which they paid no attention, suspecting nothing. When the children entered the house they heard one of the infants strangling, they rushed into the room, called their mother, and hearing no reply, put their hands upon her to awake her to relieve the child; but lamentable to tell, they found the bed-clothes wet; a fire was immediately kindled, and they beheld their beloved mother and the murderer bathed in the blood, of the deceased object of their affection and regard.—They immediately alarmed the nearest neighbours who repaired to the dreaded spot, and to their regret and astonishment witnessed the reality of the doleful tale. On an investigation of the matter, the children related the circumstances of the affair, which was immediately examined and found covered with blood. The servant was apprehended, tried and convicted, and was to be executed yesterday.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 10.

Sad Accident.—We have to record to day a melancholy occurrence, in which probably more than twenty fellow creatures have been hurried into eternity, and by which, one of the most respectable families of this city has been covered with mourning.

"George Shiraton, master of the British brig William, doth depose and say, that on the 12th day of January, about 30 miles from Cape Antonio, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, he picked up a boat with 9 men in it, that said men, 1 of whom was the mate of the Columbian privateer, L. A. Ana, told this deponent that said privateer, commanded by Alexander Hasle, had capsized the night before in a violent storm; and that they, the said nine men, were the only persons who escaped; and that the said Alexander Hasle, and all the crew were drowned That on the 16th of the said month of January, this deponent was boarded by a Columbian privateer called the Clara; and that the captain of the said privateer Clara took on board of her 8 men out of the said boat left on board of this deponent's vessel one of them here present, who calls himself Spencer Clark, who will be able to give further information on the subject.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

A most melancholy catastrophe took place in the county Fermanagh on Saturday last. A number of persons (upwards of forty) chiefly females, embarked at Derryhinch Point in a long cot, for the purpose of crossing over to Devinish, where they intended to bury the body of a young woman, which they carried with them Devinish is an island in Lough Erne, between two and three miles north of Enniskillen, and containing the remains of an ancient abbey (supposed to have been founded in the sixth century,) and a round tower.—The wind was high and the current strong, and the boat so much crowded that the Rev. Mr. Kelly, the parish priest, who intended to accompany the funeral, remonstrated on the imprudence of crossing, under circumstances of such imminent danger, and refused to proceed, by which his valuable life was preserved.—The party in the cot, however, were not to be dissuaded. They went on, and had nearly reached their destination, when a female becoming alarmed sprang out and actually reached the shore in safety. Another woman, equally frightened and adventurous, but not so fortunate, leaped overboard, fell into the water, and was seen no more.—A rush to that side took place for the purpose, probably, of endeavouring to afford this unhappy person assistance, but she had disappeared, and dreadful to relate the boat upset, and 35 persons lost their lives. The corpse of course, also sunk.—There was no aid immediately at hand, but several of the bodies were soon afterwards taken up. When the accident came to the knowledge of Doctor Maguire the benevolent physician, who resides in that county, and who went to the spot without a moment's delay, and with the promptitude, skill, and humanity for which he has been long remarkable, tried every means to restore animation, unfortunately without effect. The melancholy accident [illegible] that part of the country.—Dublin Paper.

CLONMEL, Jan. 15.—On Wednesday evening last, a desperate affray took place in the streets of Cashell, between two factions, when one man of the name of Farrell, received a stab in the left side from a policeman, named Francis Gannon, of which he now lies dangerously ill in the County Infirmary, the point of the sword having entered the lungs, after a fracture of the ribs had been effected. The police asserted that Gannon was obliged to use the sword in self defence, while Farrell's friends state that the wounded man was only endeavouring to save one of the parties who was beat and lying in the street. Another man, of the name of Kerwick, whose fingers were severely cut in the affray, received two or three blows of a sword, and, another being about to be repeated, he caught the sword in his hand, and, fearing a thrust was intended at him, endeavoured to hold it, when it was wrested from him and drawn through his hand.

An attempt was lately made to set Waterford Post-office on fire. On Mr. Shaw's going to the Receiver, in the evening to make up the mail for England, he discovered a piece of wood, partially burnt at one end, having some paper wrapped around the other. A reward of £20 has been offered by the Postmaster General for the discovery of the perpetrators of this act.

On the night of Tuesday se'nnight a little after seven o'clock, the London Hibernian, or Free School, at Ballyboa, county of Limerick, was set on fire, and consumed to ashes. The fire ran through it with such velocity, that though the police were on the spot a few minutes after the fire appeared no assistance could be rendered; and all the furniture, together with the Bibles, books, &c. were totally consumed.

Silke, the driver of the Dublin and Waterford mail, convicted at the Dublin Commission of stealing £1000 in Bank notes from the coach, has been sentenced to seven years transportation.

CRIM. CON.—A most distressing item has been lately added to the catalogue of Crim Cons. which, from their frequency now a days, really appear to belong to transactions of ordinary occurrence. The parties are in high life, and are both noble allied. The husband of the fair delinquent, an Irish Earl, has, we understand, lately expended upwards of 80,000l. in improvements on his beautiful and romantic residence in the South of Ireland. The gay Lothario is the brother of an Irish Peer, and his inamorata is the daughter of an ancient Peer, the sister of a Peer, and the sister in-law of a Peer. Thus the affair lacks nothing of nobility or rank to render it highly fashionable. The injured husband with feelings of creditable delicacy for the station of the parties, and unwilling to involve so many persons of distinction in the unpleasantness inseparable from a public exposure, offered to waive a trial provided the lady would return to her own family, and leave the Hon. Gentleman for whose society she had deserted his protection. With this recognition the lady refused to comply; and notice of trial has been consequently served upon the fugitives, who are at present sojourning on the Continent. The Gentleman, on receiving the notice expressed his surprise at being engaged out by the Noble Earl as there "were others who might be similarly addressed with equal, if not more reason and propriety." The trial, we understand, will certainly take place—probably in Ireland.

MR. KEAN. LONDON, Jan. 28.

Drury-Lane.—Great curiosity was excited by the announcement that Mr Kean would resume his performances immediately, and that he had selected for his re-appearance Richard, his favourite character, and Monday the favorite day with most of his staunch supporters.

The Managers, anticipating some opposition to this precious appointment, made application to the Magistrates at Bow-street, early yesterday morning, for the assistance of a strong party of the police within the hour. This was at first peremptorily refused, on the ground, that if they chose to make such out of the-ordinary appointments they must take the consequences upon themselves: but in the course of the day, upon a more earnest entreaty for assistance, their Worships relented in their refusal, and issued an ease of actual riot; and this injunction they strictly observed. Many while the house and this worshippers of Mr Kean, were, it is said, bearing up for volunteer defenders, and that he himself dined in the theatre or with a party of his own, to [illegible] ally. All the doors were [illegible] and many [illegible] were posted immediately [illegible]—to the great [illegible] of the pick pockets, in a few minutes the house was crowded to an overflow [illegible] by those who had previously taken places; [illegible] that time to the drawing up of the curtain, there was a continual roar of "Kean, forever!" mingled with yells and hisses; and to the credit of the latter we believe it were not more than some twenty or thirty of them in the whole assembly.

At last the curtain drew up, and the [illegible] and [illegible] the Lieutenant of the Tower and Officers. These imposing and illustrative related many matters highly necessary to the unfolding of the plot, and seemed in active spirits to hold another conference upon the matters set down for their discussion; but for naught any one more remote than the Leader of the Band would pronounce with certainty, they might have talked High Dutch and encountered the adventures of Jack the Giant Killer.—The stage however, only witnessed mail Mr Young under this appearance, and was mistaken for Kean. The burst which followed this mistake had not long subsided when the real Richard entered. His entrance was marked by the same impetuous salutations in the shape of hisses, which was ever distinguished the Richard in this performance. Richard, or Kean, (which about as you like it) appeared in his wonted colours before the little world who are qualified to decide upon the good or bad of his exploits—he appeared the same unbounded despoiler of man's peace, and the same [illegible] and [illegible] whose form the same exhibition in successfully villany and hardy defiance of opinion, which we have been accustomed to regard as the features of his character. Having made his bow upon the stage, Mr Kean turned to the audience and seemed to ask their consent by repeatedly bowing and laying his hand upon his breast, amidst the most deafening uproar that ever saluted the ears of a public performer. The cries of encore became tenfold in noise, number, and variety; but one thing but Mr Kean did not move and gesture, whilst vociferous bursts of applause came in aggravate opposition, and swell the discordant din to its utmost pitch. The front benches of the pit were conspicuous in this service. Among the cries which greeted him were these:—"Where's your morality Kean?"—"Little Drummer!"—"Go and take care of mother Cox!"—"Off, off!"—"Brava," and "Go on Kean," "No connivance," and shouts and noises of all kinds, which the two parties made to drown the vociferations of each other. After waiting in vain for the uproar to subside, Mr Kean proceeded in his task—

"Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by the son of York."

Mr Kean repeated this passage once or twice in the hope of procuring an interval of calm; but the "glorious summer" [illegible], the sun of public favour seemed for ever set, and the performer destined, for time yet untold, to "hide the pining" of his wintry [illegible]. His struggling was hopeless—he ceased to [illegible] his speech as the best means of stemming the tide of disapprobation which seemed set in against him. We were unable to hear one syllable of this or any of the succeeding speeches. After the first act, after King Henry [illegible] he advanced forward with an easy, confident expression, as if to address the audience. There was even something like contempt and defiance in his manner. He waited with much patience for several minutes, but the applause of the audience was not conceded to him—he had lost the ear of the public, and an increase of the uproar was the only answer made to his appeal. The confusion this action filled the House rendered it difficult to ascertain what was the precise object and meaning of it. He [illegible] have already stated all the ingredients of the room, hissing, hooting, and cries of various kinds, with a strange medley of [illegible] and [illegible] The predominant cries were "Off, off," a call for the Manager, and Elliston by name, and "Kean, Kean—I protest myself"—Kean for ever—"Kean and no more"—(meaning the first act) and so on. Nothing, however, could prevail upon the audience to accord to Mr Kean the silence of a minute, either for what he might have to offer on his own behalf, or any part of that which he had so [illegible] for the night. Having waited what he deemed a reasonable time, Glo'ster blanch'd his cap on his head with a martial and resolute air, and returned to finish his work of murder upon the body of Henry. The wooing scene, in presence of the house so disposed, was gone through, and although the soft language of love and interlude was not heard, the House had the satisfaction to behold the accomplished actor on his knees before the object of his dirty designs. Here again the rage of discord resumed reads, and silent as [illegible] Mr Kean left the stage. [illegible] for a season, and [illegible] himself a second time to the [illegible] audience for a brief hearing. He was, however, as successless as before—the cries for Mr Elliston to appear, and other cries, offensive to Mr. Kean, were all he could obtain. When he came to that part in which he offers the sword to Lady Anne, some Senator in the two rumbling gallery roared out, "Keep that little trinket, and hide!" and away went the Lord Protector in a huff, followed by cries from another strong-lunged Orangeite of "Do you think to cram cris.. cus. down our throats?" and "Brava, Kean!" a thousand times repeated by the pittites. The scene with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen was assez expressive and business-like. The Knights approaching it to the very echo, and the cash drawers making the house ring with execration. To the end of the play the noise was uninterrupting, and the only voice heard ever for a moment were those of his Wife and Sir Wallack. The curtain fell amidst an indescribable confusion of sounds. There were some cries of "Kean," and "Elliston," but they were neither powerful nor long continued. The audience appeared to be composed as auditors generally are on such occasions. There was a strong muster, especially in the pit, of the thick-and-thin friends of Kean, and adherents of the Manager, and there were on the other hand a great number of persons evidently disgusted at the conduct of both those persons, and determined to express their disgust. Amongst these was a large proportion of young men of gentlemanlike appearance. The majority of the audience seemed to be assembled only to witness an opinion, a gratification very rare in these quiet and [illegible] days, and which [illegible] power of [illegible] which party continued most to it. The "We're" and other supporters of Kean certainly roared with astonishing vigour and perseverance; and this perhaps saved their opponents much exertion, for the great object of the latter was, that nothing should be heard. One hiss was sufficient to put the whole house in a ring with bellows of "Kean forever—Turn out the Aldermen—Turn out the Society for the Suppression of Vice!"—Two or three other leaders amused themselves with making flags of dirty pocket handkerchiefs, and some accidentally [illegible] the symbol of this that Mr. Alderman Cox was present. An unfortunate gentleman in a private box was then invested with Aldermanic honours, and being shown in his gestures his disapprobation of Kean, he was assailed with a well-directed fire of oranges and oranges [illegible] some thousands in number, the whole of which he dexterously parried with great firmness and gallantry, until the end of the play. On the whole, the tumult of last night cannot but be regarded as indicating a very strong feeling on the part of the public against the return of Kean to the stage, and a very unanimity. Against this opinion [illegible] Johnson was quite right when he said that no man could safely set himself up against the world. And of all men, perhaps, the last who can do so is a Theatrical manager or a theatrical performer.

THE BARBER'S GHOST.—A FACT.

A gentleman travelling some years since in one of the southern States called at an inn, and requested entertainment for the night. The host informed him, that it was out of his power to accomodate him, as the house was already full. He entreated him to lodge him, as he was almost exhausted with traveling, as well as his beast. After much solicitation, the host consented to entertain him, provided, he would sleep in a certain chamber that long remained unoccupied in consequence of a belief that it was haunted by the ghost of a barber, who was reputed to have been murdered in that room a number of years since. "Very well," said the guest, "I am not afraid of the ghost—take care of my horse, and prepare me some supper." After taking some refreshment, he inquired of the host how and in what manner the chamber in which he was to lodge was haunted. The host replied, that those who had lodged in the room, stated that shortly after they had retired to rest, an unknown voice was heard, in a trembling and protracted accent, saying, "do you want to be shaved—ted?" "Well," replied the guest, "if he comes I will let him shave me." He then requested that he might be shown to the apartment; in going to which he was conducted through a long room, where were seated a great number of persons at the gaming table. Feeling a curiosity which almost every one possesses, after having heard "ghost stories," he carefully searched every closet in the apartment, but could discover nothing but a large basin. He then went to bed; but feeling much fatigued, he did not close his eyes to sleep immediately, (which is often the case when one is excessively tired) and in a few moments he imagined he heard the voice as represented to him by the host. He arose from his bed and searched every part of his chamber, but could discover nothing. He then went to bed—but no sooner had he begun to compose himself to sleep, than the question was repeated. He then arose and went to his window; the sound appeared to proceed from that quarter, and he stood a while silent—after a few moments of suspense, he again heard the sound distinctly. Convinced that it was from without, he opened his window, when it was repeated full in his ear. On a closer examination he observed that the limb of "a tree adjoining," which stood near his window, projected so near to the house, as to [illegible] breath of wind to grate against the shingles, creating a sound resembling the interrogation, "Do you want to be shaved—ted?" Having satisfied himself that this ghost was nothing more or less than the limb of a tree, comforted with the hour, he again went to bed, and attempted to go to sleep; but was now interrupted by peals of laughter in the room below where the gamblers were assembled. This fang he could turn this discovery to his own advantage, he took the sheet from the bed, and wrapped it around him and taking the basin in his hand, descended to the inn of the gamblers, and suddenly opened the door, rushed in, exclaiming in a tremulous voice, "Do you want—to—be—shaved?" Terrified at this sudden interruption, they left the room in the greatest confusion; some tumbling down stairs over others. He then deliberately put his basin under the table, and gathered an immense sum of money into it, which had been left thereupon a chest it, and retired peaceably to rest.

The next morning the young Beau, awoke the house in the utmost confusion. They immediately missed him if he had enjoyed a good night's rest. He replied in the affirmative. "Well, no wonder," said the host, "for the ghost, instead of going into his usual place, made a mistake, came into our room, and carried off a vere great deal of our money." The guest without being in the least surprised, quietly eat his breakfast, and departed with his valuable treasure.

STANZAS.

I saw yonder Rose lurk in abundance and joy,
The beeze in its bosom was sporting,
The sun-beams were kissing its fragrance away
For 'twas nature her fav'rite courting—
I saw it again; but its beauty had flown;
Its blossoms lay scattered beneath;
Save one which in sadness did stem all alone
To mourn its companion's death.

Too true a resemblance of youth's happy prime,
When affection commences her reign;
It dreams not of chance in the circle of time,
But of joys that must ever remain—
For the locking in all the full glow of delight,
The flame that shall ne'er fade away;
And the happiest that smiles on his pillow to-night,
May to-morrow awake with a sigh.

Fatal Accident.—Ira Steele of the township of Pickering near York, borrowed a gun of a neighbour a few days ago, went a shooting squirrels on his ground and unfortunately shot himself. It is supposed that while re-loading, he had, after priming and charging with powder, leaned on the musket till he could get the shot from his belt, and that the piece had gone off then, as no shot was found in the body. A large wound was found in his left breast, to his heart. The body was not discovered till the following day. Melancholy to relate, his unhappy wife is now in child bed. I enquired and was told that he was a useful and worthy member of society.—Advocate.

(First Session of the Ninth Parliament.)

No. VIII.

THURSDAY, Feb. 17th 1825.

Report of the Commissioners appointed to settle the affairs of the pretended Bank of Upper Canada, lately established at Kingston,

In this extraordinary situation it naturally became a subject of deliberation, so soon as the new Law was published, whether the Board should close their office, and wholly discontinue their proceedings, or make advances from their private funds, on the presumption that Parliament justly appreciating the measure, would at its next Session remedy the defect of the Statute by a vote of instant reimbursement. The latter alternative having been adopted, the Board made arrangements for paying the arrears of salary due the Clerk, and satisfying various claims for rent and incidental charges, they also defrayed the expense of sending the witnesses to York in March, which, owing to the bad state of the roads at that time, amounted nearly to Eighty Pounds, and they have since disbursed other sums on behalf of the Commission. The Statement herewith submitted will shew the amount of cash actually advanced by the Members of the Board in their private capacities, together with several accounts, for services rendered still outstanding, for the discharge of which the effects of the Bank have furnished no means, and which the Commissioners have not individually found it convenient to satisfy.

The former description of claims amount to four hundred and forty four pounds seven shillings and nine pence, the latter to three hundred and seventy seven pounds two shillings and eleven pence. It now rests with the Legislature to act, in regard to both, as its wisdom and sense of justice may determine.

From the facts already detailed, it will be sufficiently clear that the Commissioners have made little progress in accomplishing the purposes of their appointment. The entire of legal distinctions and the subtleties of pleadings have created obstacles which the Board from its inexperience in such matters certainly did not apprehend, and which have hitherto proved invincible notwithstanding the attempts made to surmount them by securing the aid of learned Gentlemen of experience and high professional character.

Since the opening of their office the Commissioners have granted nine certificates for claims against the late Institution, amounting to seven hundred and seventy eight pounds seventeen shillings, of which four, for the sum of three hundred and fifty five pounds sixteen shillings and ten pence have been redeemed, leaving five in circulation for a balance of four hundred and twenty three pounds and two pence.

One hundred and thirty certificates have been issued in redemption of Bank notes, amounting to six thousand four hundred and fifty one pounds eleven shillings and five pence, of which number, five for the sum of two pounds and forty two pounds ten shillings have been cancelled, leaving still in circulation one hundred and twenty five certificates for the sum of six thousand two hundred and nine pounds one shilling and five pence.

The interest allowed on redeemed certificates amounts to forty one pounds nine shillings and five pence.

Subsequently to the nineteenth day of October last, when by the enactment of the Session, the Commissioners were bound to make and declare a dividend of the money collected, the Board burned all the Bank notes that had been redeemed, some of the directors of the Institution were present and assisted on the occasion in due conformity to the Law. The notes destroyed amounted to eleven thousand four hundred and eighty eight pounds nine shillings and three pence; of this sum one thousand and forty one pounds fifteen shillings was redeemed by the Directors, but not surrendered by the Bank of Canada, in whose possession it had remained, until the effects of the late Institution had been placed under the control of the Commissioners.

The balance of ten thousand four hundred and forty seven pounds four shillings and three pence, shows the [illegible] course of their transactions.

Notwithstanding certain provisions of the late enactment a large amount of Bank Notes is still held by the creditors of the Institution. This amount, so far as it can be ascertained, appears in its utmost extent, to be seven thousand five hundred and thirty eight pounds fifteen shillings.

The claims which exist against the Institution including those of the Stockholders, for eleven thousand one hundred and thirty six pounds ten shillings, the amount of their capital stock paid in, reach the sum of twenty six thousand six hundred and ninety eight pounds twelve shillings and three pence halfpenny. To meet these demands the Board have in their possession, promissory notes, Bonds, book debts &c. amounting to eighteen thousand seven hundred and eighteen pounds seven shillings.

Should the deficiency amounting to seven thousand nine hundred and eighty pounds five shillings and three pence halfpenny be made up from the stock paid in, there would be a surplus to be divided among the Stockholders of three thousand one hundred and fifty six pounds, four shillings and eight pence halfpenny, (less the expense of collection)

Should the Cashier and his sureties be required to pay the sum of five thousand eight hundred and eighty four pounds three shillings and a halfpenny, stated as the amount of the deficiency by the examining committee of Stockholders, and considered by the Legislature as an abstraction from the funds of the Institution, the balance of capital to be refunded the Stockholders would, without taking interest into calculation, be nine thousand and forty pounds four shillings and eight pence halfpenny—occasioning a loss of two thousand and ninety six pounds five shillings and three pence halfpenny only.—In this case also, deduction must be made for the expenses of collection and settlement.

Should it however, be determined that the cashier and his sureties are to be held responsible for the whole sum which appears deficient in the means of extinguishing the claims against the Institution, and which according to the general statement submitted with this Report, amount to seven thousand nine hundred and eighty pounds five shillings and three pence halfpenny the Stockholders would in that case lose no part of their capital, except the proportion that would be consumed in adjusting the affairs of the Bank.

The Board, in making these remarks, do not find themselves required to give any opinion with respect to the amount for which the cashier should be considered bound. Indeed, it might perhaps be no easy task to declare the precise amount for which a call should be made on him and his sureties until further progress was made in investigating and settling the affairs of the Institution.

It would however, be exceedingly unjust, that he should be compelled to answer for any losses which may have occured in the transactions of the Bank, or which may have originated in a faulty system of Book keeping, unless the mismanagement can be distinctly fixed on him; at the same time, it is equally clear, that wherever instance of negligence can be adduced in the conduct of so important an officer as the cashier, entrusted with the general superintendance of the concerns of the Bank and the safe keeping of its funds, the Stockholders in all such cases have an undoubted claim on him for the injury which such misconduct may have occasioned their interests.

With respect to the several balances just stated, it is to be observed that they are made under the most favourable view that can be taken of the affairs of the Bank; for in computing them it has been assumed that all the claims of the Institution will ultimately prove good and be recovered. The Commissioners, however, cannot conceal that this view of circumstances is unhappily fallacious. They not only consider many of the debts worthless and desperate, but are even apprehensive, that after all the capital Stock paid in has been devoted to the purpose, many claims upon the Bank will still remain unsatisfied, such, they conceive it proper to declare, is the impression made on their minds after an attentive examination of the books and papers of the Institution; an impression which it would be gratifying hereafter to find erroneous.

The various documents accompanying this Report will serve to illustrate the foregoing statements, as well as the transactions of the Commissioners generally, and will furnish all the information they have it in their power to communicate respecting the present condition of the Bank, they are not aware that any further explanation is required or can be given.

Having thus exhibited an account of their proceedings in conformity to the Statute, the Board in concluding, respectfully entreat permission to resign their trust to the Legislature, by whom it was imposed.

The absolute failure of all their endeavours to collect the debts of the Bank, the very remote prospect of any satisfactory settlement of its affairs, the entire absence of means for defraying the expenses attending such settlement, and the many annoyances incidental to such a state of things; these considerations all unite in impelling the Board to solicit exoneration—other reasons, it is true, exists for wishing to retire from the commission which it does not appear necessary to assign.

Two years of earnest application and unceasing solicitudes vainly consumed in the discharge of a duty, alike unpleasant and thankless, and which was not merely unsought, but reluctantly undertaken from a pure sense of respect for the high authority that enjoined it, do, it is with deference conceived, constitute as great a sacrifice of time and labour as under all the circumstances it is convenient to make, or as the Legislature and the Country can reasonably require from persons in no wise connected with the Institution, except as Commissioners.

All which is humbly submitted.

(Signed)

POSTSCRIPT.

We have just received information of the Prorogation of the Parliament of Lower Canada, and the following is the Speech of His Excellency Sir FRANCIS BURTON on that occasion.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

The diligence with which you have proceeded in the dispatch of public business, enables me to terminate the Session of the Provincial Parliament, and I derive much pleasure on this occasion in observing that the cordiality and good understanding which have subsisted between the several branches of the Legislature, during the whole of the Session, are subjects of sincere congratulation to every one, who takes an interest in the happiness and prosperity of this Colony.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

I thank you, in His Majesty's name, for the supply you have granted in aid of those funds already appropriated by law, for defraying the expenses of the Civil Government and the administration of Justice.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

It will be a pleasing part of my duty to convey to His Majesty, as early as possible, the satisfactory intelligence, that by an amicable arrangement of the pecuniary concerns of the Province, you have removed those difficulties which, for several years successively, had disturbed the harmony it was so desirable to establish between the Legislative Bodies, and this event I am persuaded, will tend in an eminent degree, to draw close the bond of union, between this Province and the Parent State.

GENTLEMEN,—You are now about to return to your respective residences, in various parts of the Province, and to mix with the general mass of your fellow subjects, whose loyalty and good conduct your example will serve to encourage, whose approbation and esteem you highly deserve, and will, I hope universally obtain.

Editorial Commentary.

It will be seen by the Proclamation in this day's Gazette that the Royal Assent has been given to the Wild land assessment Bill. In the next Gazette that Bill will be published at length.

As an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying for such information relative to the plans and views of the Canadian Land Company, as he may have it in his power, or may feel himself at liberty, to communicate, has gone up from the House of Assembly,—we may shortly expect some intelligence of importance on this highly interesting subject; and, for which, the whole country is anxious.

There seems to be now no doubt that the Clergy Reserves, already leased, will be sold,—as advertisements to that effect have made their appearance.—The period of Ten Years, by annual instalments, is proposed as the term of credit—which is surely liberal and amply sufficient. For ourselves we are greatly rejoiced at this news—which cannot fail to be gratifying to all classes of the community.

In the Commercial-Intercourse-Bill (with the United States) now before the House of Assembly—some important alterations have been already proposed, and it is more than probable will be adopted.—Travellers are to be allowed to bring their Horses, &c. Emigrants are to be permitted to bring along with them their Oxen Cows, Sheep, Hogs &c &c. The duty on Tobacco is to be reduced to 1d p lb; and, on Leather to 1d 1-2 p lb.—Many other necessary enactments are proposed which will be made known in due season.

It is rumoured, on good authority, that our Parliament will be prorogued on Wednesday or Thursday next

Captain Franklin, and party, destined to the North west on the inland journey of discovery in co-operation with the intrepid Parry—arrived here—via New York—on Tuesday last. The party will proceed immediately to Fort Chipewhyne, there to embark for the upper lakes

By the late arrivals we learn that the "Bill to amend the existing laws relative to unlawful associations in Ireland" introduced by Mr. Goulburn into the British House of Commons has been carried by a majority of 155. The principal objection of this Bill is the suppression of the Catholic association

We beg to correct a mistake in the last Quebec Mercury—We did not assert Mr. Gourlay's arrival in New York,—suppose there, of a public meeting for the purpose of giving aid to his plans. But we did announce his arrival here. (York. U. C.) and that a public meeting was held to further his views,—and those of the St. Lawrence Association.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

British Capital!—It has been estimated, that the different new schemes now in agitation amount to 114, and the capitals to be more than £105,000,000: namely, rail roads, 20, capital £13,950,000; banking loan, investment, &c., 22, £36,760,000; gas companies, 11, £8,000,000? British and Irish mines, 8 £3,600,000; foreign mines, 17, £11,665,000; shipping and dock companies, 9, £10,580,000: miscellaneous, 27, £11,070,000.

Snuff the one thing needful!—At Marlborough-street, a poor infirm old woman, was charged with being dissatisfied at the work house and refractory. She fell on her knees, on being placed at the bar, and said she had been deprived of snuff, at the workhouse, or she would have behaved well. Mr. Dyer said he would take care that snuff should be provided for her. The poor old woman said, God bless your Worship: I can put up with shortness of victuals, but to be kept without a pinch of snuff is unbearable.

Re-appearance of Miss Foote.—Miss Foote made her appearance at Covent-garden Theatre on Saturday night, in the character of Letitia Hardy, in the comedy of the "Bell's Stratagem." For nearly a fortnight back every place in the boxes had been bespoken; and when the doors opened the rush for admission was tremendous, and in a very few minutes, pits, galleries, and slips were filled to an overflow. When the important moment for the entrance of Miss Foote arrived, she was seen, by those in the stage boxes, behind the scenes supported by her friends, and evidently deeply affected Mrs Gibbs (who sustained the part of Mrs. Racket) saw her distress, and went to meet her. In a moment afterwards she was led to the presence of the audience, who simultaneously rose and received her with unbounded and enthusiastic cheers. The boxes, the pit, and the galleries, were alike warm in their greeting, and the unfortunate girl could scarcely sustain the shock which was produced on her mind She burst into an agony of tears, and for some seconds seemed unable to sustain the weight of her own frame. Mrs Gibbs endeavoured, by every means in her power, to recall her to a sense of her situation; but she was under the necessity of taking a seat, and passing for a considerable period before she recovered fortitude enough to proceed with her part. The remainder of the act like the previous part, was performed without the audience being able to hear two sentences in succession. There was a continued repetition of encouraging applause, and when a solitary hiss found vent, it was immediately drowned in loud and reiterated shouts of applause; epithets being applied to the hissers of a very questionable description. At the conclusion of the first act, Miss Foote was loudly cheered, and the performance went off in the most spirited manner.

From a London Paper.

The damages and taxed costs awarded against Mr. Hayne, had been paid by him to Miss Foote, from which she allowed the deduction of the money borrowed from Mr. H. by her father. The receipts at Covent Garden, on the first night of her re-appearance, amounted to 900*l.* 16*s.* the largest sum ever received at that theatre. If the following article, which appeared in a London paper of the 13th Feb. is to be relied on, we should not be surprised if the public were to be again amused with the loves of this lady and her quondam Adonis:

"Various rumours are afloat respecting the reconciliation between these parties, and the probability of their ultimately coming together. We have already stated that Mr. Hayne had no personal or unmanly hostilities towards Miss Foote, and the best proof of this is the fact of his attending the theatre last Saturday week, for the express purpose of giving her his support. The interviews which have taken place since the trial we have good authority for stating were not sought for by Mr. Payne. The fact is, that an accidental meeting took place in Hyde Park—Miss Foote and her mother being in a carriage, and Mr. Hayne in his cab. The former nodded and smiled—Mr. Hayne in mere gallantry, could not do less than bow. The next day there was another meeting, and another smile, another nod, and in addition a playful beckon. Drew the gay Lothario after his former flame—hands were shaken, and Miss Foote informed Mr. H. that she had left certain paintings for him at Robins's. The separation was mutually cordial, and on the third day, Mr. H had a note from Mrs Foote requesting an interview. This took place; but for what passed we must refer to those most interested."

The eldest son of Sir Walter Scott was on the eve of marrying a Miss Jobson, the daughter of a retired merchant in Dundee, with a fortune of 60,000*l.* sterling. George IV. is said to have caused his congratulations to be intimated to the Baroness.

Curious Automaton.—The inhabitants of Easingwold were astonished by the exhibition of an automaton, made by Mr. Clemitshaw, of that place, called the Alarm Statute, or Wooden Watchman previous to its being sent to London for presentation to his Majesty. This curious piece of machinery represents a soldier in uniform, and is six feet high. It stands erect in the manner of a sentinel on duty, having a blunderbuss in its hand, but upon touching a wire it immediately turns round in that direction, drops its head, presents the piece, and fires. It also at the same instant rings two alarm bells, and cries "Fire!" in a distinct and audible manner.

Orchards.—For the benefit of those who wish to improve fruit by grafting, the following method is well worthy of notice:—Make a salve of Turpentine, Beeswax and Tallow of a suitable consistence to stand the heat of summer; plaster a suitable quantity round the stock and cion to keep off the external air. This is the most sure and the most expeditious way of engrafting. Carry your composition or salve in a kettle of warm water to keep it pliable.

Westerlo, March 16, 1825. J. P.

Economy in Candles.—If you are without a rush light, and would burn a candle all night, unless you use the following precaution, it is ten to one an ordinary candle will gutter away in an hour or two sometimes to the endangering the safety of the house; this may be avoided by placing as much common salt, finely powdered, as will reach from the tallow to the bottom of the black part of the wick of a partly-burnt candle; when if the same be lighted it will burn very slowly, yielding a sufficient light for a bed chamber: the salt will gradually sink as the tallow is consumed, the melted tallow being drawn through the salt, and consumed in the wick.

Onions.—A few fresh walnuts or raw leaves of parsley, eaten immediately after dinner, will speedily remove that disagreeable taint which always infects the breath after partaking of onions, garlic, or shallots.

Lotteries.—The last contract for the English Lotteries, was made on the 25th of January. This concludes the National Lotteries, which had existed for 150 years

ROME.

A letter of Jan. 25th from Rome, complains that the number of pilgrims who have resorted to the capital of the Christian world, to celebrate the Jubilee, is very inconsiderable in 1300 and 1350 the number, according to contemporary writers, was several millions. In 1750, at the opening of the Holygate on the 24th of December, 1300 pilgrims were present and 9400 arrived between Christmas day and New Year's day This year there were only 20 pilgrims present at the opening of the Holygate, and on New year's day only 46 had arrived at Rome The difference is in some degree to be attributed to the difficulty in obtaining passports to travel through the Italian States of Austria and the State of Sardinia

GREECE.

"Zante January 6.

"I have the pleasure to inform you, that at last the Government has triumphed over its internal enemies, so gloriously as ever its external enemies We may say that the new attempt of those who are contrary to the Government has had a providential effect both in freeing our country from the tyrannical yoke of the Primates, and as it serves to show to Europe that there is really a Government in Greece and not merely a nominal one, as has been said to twelve.

After the death of Caliostro's son, the Government sent orders speedily to all the troops of Romelia to march into the Peloponnesus, at the same time that the islands sent different other troops to Napoli di Romania Corons, Coron, Modon, Navarin, Tripolizza, and several other Generals proceeded speedily after them to the Peninsula, and some by the way of Corinth. These drove before them the Insurgents who besieged that fortress, whilst others, land or at Vostizza and proceeding to Calavrita, in that place awaited the additional Chiefs. These since a short resistance seeing themselves surrounded by their own troops and being joined by the people without themselves to fight; and there have already arrived here as fugitives, the famous Gine Strano, with his family, from whom I have learned that Londo and several others were sought refuge at Calamata. We should really, on this occasion, be grateful to the President, George Condouriotis, who undertook the direction of the Government in the most favorable trouble, and was ready to succedes every thing, and to give to the Peninsula the most favorable result, if he was not opposed by the Colocotronis, having first also his armed son, by a an from his horse, has submitted to the Government, by the mediation of Coglopulo, and that he her own sword destroyed to Kolon — They say also, that Pape Flesca is destined for Candia, and that most Primates will, undoubtedly, be strictly dismissed In Gastouni there were 800 men from Morea, and it is thought that these will proceed to Patras. The arrival of the fourth in-stalment of the Loan from London, was a considerable one in repressing the Insurgents Even before its arrival the President had disbursed 60,000 Spanish dollars of his own money.

"The Egyptian fleet is no longer heard of.—After his last disaster so glorious to the Admiral Mosaha, Ibrahim Pacha will no longer of proceeding to Candia, he is now at Modon.

"The Sultan, by sending a new Pacha to Romelia, has caused a Revolution there, which is promised by Omer Vrione. All these things co-operate to our independence."

The following gives rather a favorable view of the actual state of affairs in Greece. In addition to this, some further intelligence is furnished by the British Press, derived through the latest German journal. It is here stated, that, Omer Vrione, the Turkish Commander in Albania, apprehensive of the treachery of the Divan, who, under the guise of promoting him, are endeavouring to get him into their power, has opened negotiations with Prince Maurocordato, an armistice had been agreed to, and it was expected that the Pacha would declare himself independent The latest accounts, a signal will be given for the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire. Every Pacha remote from Constantinople, will, at once, throw himself com subjection to sovereignty. The only Viceroy of Egypt will be among the foremost to seize the golden opportunity for which he has so long been watching and dissembling. The German Observer, the consistent and persevering friend of the Mahometans, asserts, that they are resolved upon moving their best campaign with more vigor than ever. Their resolution may be very good, but we suspect their power will begin not a little to fail them. Every effort, however, will be made to call into the field a great levy of the Irish forces. The Sultan, with his own hand writing, has summoned the Pachas of Widden and Belgrade — Alarm has penetrated the Divan, and not without reason, for never was the Empire of Constantinople in a more critical state. It is fighting now, not for victory, but for life."

A letter from a French officer returning from Greece, and written while performing quarantine at Toulon, to his friend at Marseilles, concerning the foregoing war in all it consists the happy termination of the dissentions in Greece — He left on the 10th of January, and his intelligence to the latest we have seen. In regard to these dissentions he says that it was a necessary evil — he for was smothering under the ashes, and burst out at a fortunate moment. It was even very fortunate that the civil war assumed so decided an aspect, as to force the government, notwithstanding its clemency to put down a most turbulent Chief. It is most true that Panos Colocotroni has been killed. Theodore Negris died of the typhus." Hydra and Napoli de Romania are encumbered with prisoners and in force. The disorganized troops at Modon and Ali, who have been captured, are employed in cleaning the streets and gutters.

PERSIA.

THE LATE EARTHQUAKE IN PERSIA.

[From the Bombay Gazette of September 6]

We are indebted to a correspondent in Persia, who was an eye witness, for the following account of the dreadful earthquake that has devastated so much of that interesting portion of fated country.

"Jehan Numah, near Shiraz, June 25, 1824.

"This morning, about half past 6 A. M. I was disturbed out of a sound sleep by the violent commotion of an earthquake, of much greater force than the one I sent you an account of from Kneuchtenau on the 3d inst. My first object was to move out of the house; but to accomplish it was difficult and dangerous, owing to the number of large brick-pieces of wood, and mortar, falling from the roof all round the outside of the house, and a few stones and chasm from the ceiling inside that had been previously injured. Having happily, effected my escape without injury to myself or servants, I walked out of the garden to see what damage Shiraz had suffered, the first and worst that I discovered was the complete destruction of the Shaw. Mees. Ally. Khan Hoonaz, a beautiful mosque about 400 yards in front of this garden, and perhaps the same distance from Shiraz: its fine ly ornamented cupola had fallen in, and the body of the mosque was rent in every part. Shiraz itself was enveloped in dust, nor could I see a house standing near me, or in any direction also, but this sad sight was enough to show that it had suffered severely. As the dust cleared away, it was truly sorrowful and distressing to see the ruins of so fine stately mosques and minarets, a few minutes before the chief ornaments of the town, but now a shapeless mass, and each succeeding minute, as it vanished, some fresh object presented its shattered form — The eastern side of the wall that surrounds the town, and the only face discernable from hence has fallen in, and most of the towers were laid level with the ground, and the remainder much injured. But melancholy and distressing as what I have attempted to describe may be, what is it compared to the sufferings of the unfortunate inhabitants? The cries and lamentations of thousands bewailing the loss of relations, friends, and every thing dear, resounded in the air, and were enough to soften the hardest heart; you may then easily conceive what my feelings were, indeed are, at this moment, hearing dismal cries and mournful lamentations in every quarter. To get any thing like an accurate account of the sufferers will take some days. Since the great shock, and between that time and ten o'clock, there has been three shocks, though scarce, nothing compared to the first. I have pitched my tent in the garden, and intend occupying it; the comparative degree of safety will more than compensate for the comforts of the House. The inhabitants have quitted the Town and are living in tents, routies and under cambies outside. Mesrs Ally Arbor, (our Agent) poor fellow, and his whole family, are living with me; his house is completely destroyed, and every part of the palace has been much injured; to be short, I believe not a house has escaped without some injury and most of them in ruins; the fine Bazar is still standing, but much shaken and injured. The exact number of those who have perished in the ruins I cannot ascertain. Mesrs Ally Arbor assures me that 2000 is under the number, but reserve this as a mere conjecture and report only; I should think half the number nearer the mark."

VAN DIEMAN'S LAND — CANNIBALISM.

Trial of Alexander Pierce, before Chief Justice Pedder — Monday June 14

"Alexander Pierce, a convict, was arrigned for the murder of a fellow prisoner, named Thomas Cox, at or near King's River, in the month of November last, and pleaded —Not Guilty.

"The circumstances which were understood to have accompanied the above crime had long been considered with extreme horror. Report had associated the prisoner with cannibals, and recollections, as well of Gil, the vampire legend of modern Greece, were earlier, that on this occasion our eyes glanced in fearfulness at the being who stood before a retributive Judge, laden with the weight of human blood, and believed to have banqueted on human flesh.

"The prisoner's written confessions were afterwards most fairly communicated on by the Chief Justice, who addressed the Jury at considerable length with much solemnity, and submitted to their consideration, whether or no it was fully proved that the deceased had died from blows inflicted by the prisoner; and then, even if he had so died, whether, as a quarrel had been stated to have occurred before death, the prisoner was guilty of the crime charged of manslaughter. The Jury retired for a short time, and found a verdict of — Guilty.

"The learned Judge, who appeared much affected from the dreadful relation, so horridly set forth in evidence and confession, the case being too inhuman to comment upon, urged the miserable culprit to prepare himself to appear before the tribunal where mercy may be obtained — That sentence is that he be removed from this place to the gaol and (when the supreme authority shall appoint) from thence to the place of execution, to be hanged by the neck till you are dead; afterward your body to be delivered over to the surgeons for dissection — The following Monday, June 21, was named for the case then to take place, and on the Sunday morning, at the usual service, at nine o'clock, an appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. Wm. Bedford, the whole of the convicts in and near Hobart Town were ordered to church upon the occasion.

A statement made by Alexander Pierce, the Evening before his Execution, in the Gaol to Mr. Burder

"I was born in the County of Fermanagh, in the North of Ireland. In the twenty sixth year of my age I was convicted of stealing six pairs of shoes, and received sentence to be transported for seven years; I arrived in Van Diemen's Land, on board the ship Castle Forbes, from Sydney; was assigned as Servant to John Bellenger, with whom I remained about nine months; was then, from misconduct returned to the Governor Superintendant. A few months after I was assigned to a man, named Case, a constable, and staid with him only sixteen weeks, when an occasion obliged him to take me before the Magistrates, who ordered that I should be returned into the Crown labour. Afterwards I was [illegible] Scattergood, of New Norfolk, from whom I absconded into the woods, and joined Laughton, Saunders, Latten, and Allbart Town, tried for the forgeries, found guilty, and sent to the Penal Settlement at Macquarie Harbour for the remainder of my sentence. I was out there more than a month before I made my escape with seven others, namely — Dalton, Traverse, Badman, Matthews, Greenhill, Brown, and Cornelius. We kept altogether for ten days during which time we had no food but our kangaroo skin jackets which we ate, being nearly exhausted, with hunger and fatigue. On the eleventh night, we began to consult what was best to be done for our preservation, and made up our minds to a dreadful result.

"In the morning we missed three of our companions.—Dalton, Cornelius, and Brown, we concluded, had left us with the intention of going back, if possible We then drew cuts which of us five should die; it fell to Badman's lot; I went with one of the others to collect dry wood, to make a fire, immediately, and continued to use it as long as it lasted — During which time Travers had succeeded in killing Badman. When drew cuts again, and it fell to the lote of Matthews; Travers and Greenhill killed him with an axe, cut the flesh from his bones, carried it on, and lived upon it as long as it lasted. By the time it was all eat, Traverse, through fatigue, fell lame in his knee — so much so, that he could not proceed; Greenhill proposed that I should kill him, which I agreed to. We then made the best of our way, carrying the flesh of Traverse between us, in the hope of reaching the Eastern settlements while it lasted We did not, however, succeed, and I perceived Greenhill always carried the axe, and thought watched an opportunity to kill me I was always on my guard, and succeeded, when he fell asleep, to get the axe, with which I immediately despatched him, made a meal and carried all the remaining flesh with me to feed upon. To my great disappointment, I was afterwards many days without food, and subsisted solely upon grass and nettle tops which I boiled in a tin pot that I brought with me from the settlement. At length I fell in with some native's huts, which from appearance, the inmates had just left, where I collected some cattel, and bits of kangaroo which afforded me a meal. Two days afterwards, when nearly exhausted, I came in sight of a hut, which proved to be M Guyre's near the high Plains. I told there a fortnight, and made up my mind, to surrender myself to Captain Wood, a Magistrate on the river Clyde, but on my way thither, I met Davis and Churchen, who were then desperadoes, and living at the Bush hut. They wished me to join them, to which I agreed. In a few weeks we were all taken near Jericho by party of the 40th regiment, and brought to Hobart Town Gaol; Churchen and Davis were tried, found guilty of capital offences, and suffered death. It was my fate to be returned to the Penal settlement I again made my escape with Thomas Cox, who eagerly pressed my departure. I had irons on at the time; when we had proceeded some distance, Cox knocked them off with an axe he had brought with him, and we made the best of our way through a thick scrub, which was very wet. At night we tied to make a fire but would not. We travelled on several days, without food, except fern roots and shrubs, until we came upon King's River; I asked Cox if he could swim; he replied he could not; I remarked that had I been aware of it he should not have been my companion: we were enabled to make a fire; the arrangement for crossing the River created words, and I killed Cox with the axe; I ate part of him that night, and cut the greater part of his flesh up in order to take on with me. I swam the River with the intention of keeping the coast round to Port Dalrymple; my heart failed me, and I resolved to return and give myself up to the Commandant I threw most of the flesh away, but one piece, which I carried in my pocket, to show the Commandant that Cox was dead. I confessed that I had killed him, and accompanied a party in a boat to bring up his remains, which was done. I was then sent up to Hobart Town, confined in the prison to take my trial before the Criminal Court; the result is now universally known here — Gaol 20 June, 1824."

grounded on the plan now proposed to be made, by a Surveyor unquestionably competant, as the Committee do not doubt Mr. Clowes is, and would find responsible persons ready to contract on the faith of that estimate for the sum for which it is stated the expense would be limited, the Stock would in a short time be taken up in these Provinces without the necessity of that aid, which the Committee apprehend it may not be thought convenient to afford.

The Agent for the company represents to your Committee, that if the Legislature would raise for them by loan, the sum of twenty five thousand pounds, it would enable the company to proceed in the work without any suspension of their contracts,—that they would willingly pledge the Canal [illegible] by consenting that it should be held as public Stock until the debt was redeemed, or that they could give personal security for the repayment.

It is further stated that the loan would be effected at an interest of five per cent. to be repaid in ten years,—that the Canal would be completed in the summer of 1826, and that the profits of it would be certain to relieve the Province from the burthen.

Upon this proposition your Committe have to observe that with regard to the offer of personal security, whatever would certainly indemnify the Province, would be equally satisfactory, it is to be supposed, to those who are expected to advance the loan, and who might therefore contract with the company on that footing, without the intervention of the Government

The Committee can not venture to confirm by their opinion, the correctness of the calculations on which the Agent for the Company founds his anticipation of an immediate profit, as they conceive there can not be any certain data on which to frame such an estimate,—much will depend on the contingency, whether the article of Staves will bear such a price at Quebec, as to admit of their exportation from the country bordering on the Canal, and also upon the fulfilment of the expectation that a considerable portion of the produce of the United States will pass through this Channel.

Under those circumstances, the Committee have little doubt that the Stock would be at once productive, and at all events considering how great a public object is to be immediately attained at an expense comparitively small, your Committee would very heartely second, with their recommendation, the prayer of the Company for a temporary advance if they were aware that a debt to the amount required could be incurred by the Province without inconvenience.—But your Committee have not such information as can warrant them in taking this for granted, and as they feel that the Legislature in the event of authorising such a loan, must be aware that the Provincial Revenue will afford the means of redeeming the public pledge, in the event of a failure on the part of the Company,—they can not venture to recommend an acquiescence in the prayer of the petition, unless they could at the same time suggest the means of providing for such an increase of the Revenue as would certainly meet the additional burthen which might possibly be thrown upon the Province.—The expediency and practicability of any such measure they concede, must with more propriety be left to the consideration of the House.

Provincial Parliament
Upper Canada.

AT Four o'clock this day, His Excellency, the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, being seated on the Throne, in the Legislative Council Chamber, and the House of Assembly being present, His Excellency was pleased to prorogue the present Session of Parliament with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and
Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

IN closing this Session of the Provincial Parliament, which has been of more than ordinary length, I find but few measures of general concern presented to me, as the result of your labours.

THE Bill for the further regulation of our Intercourse with the United States of America, contains one provision in particular, which I should be happy to see exist, I mean the provision for admitting free of duty, the Horses employed in conveying persons removing into, or travelling through this Province.

I regret much that this relaxation, which may itself, I fear, seem in some measure repugnant to that part of the Canada Trade Act, which regulates the Intercourse between this Province and the neighbouring Country, should have been connected with others, that appear more decidedly inconsistent with that Statute. But although these circumstances compel me to reserve the Bill for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure, I will, in the mean time, take such measures, upon my own responsibility, as may give immediate effect to the provision to which I first alluded, in the confidence that it will be ultimately confirmed.

THE amendments you have made to the Act incorporating the Welland Canal Company, will have the effect, I trust, of facilitating the execution of a work, which, if conducted to a successful termination, must be of incalculable importance to this Province.

I regret to perceive that your Session has terminated without affording to the Government the means of carrying on the Public Service during the present year.

So long as I continued to confine the charges of the Administration of the Civil Government as rigidly as the service would permit, to that scale which I found established, which His Majesty's Government had long approved, and which the Legislature of this Province, since their assumption of it, had repeatedly investigated, and as often confirmed; I did not apprehend that I should fail to receive the ordinary and necessary support for the Public Service. It will be incumbent on me to afford an early opportunity of supplying this omission, in the mean time I shall endeavour, as much as possible, to avert the inconvenience to which the Public Service may be exposed.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

Desirous that the public expenditure should always receive due consideration, I afforded you at an early period of the Session, the opportunity of investigating the Public Accounts, and I have answered promptly, and as satisfactorily as it was in my power, to every call for information.

IN the absence of any provision for the support of the Civil Government. I am not at liberty to consent to any other appropriation of the Provincial Revenue,—a necessity which will account for my rejection of measures which must otherwise have received my cheerful concurrence.

Honourable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

I have witnessed in late Sessions with so much pleasure the beneficial effects of a vigilant application in the Legislature to objects of great and permanent interest to the Colony, that I indulge in the hope that circumstances will not again interpose themselves to prevent the consideration and furtherance of those important measures which have of late years so auspiciously engaged attention.

Editorial Commentary.

Our Parliament was prorogued at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, with an intimation that it would be re assembled at an early day. The Speech of His Excellency, the Lieut. and Governor, on that important occasion, will appear in a Gazette Extraordinary of this day; but, as we fear, too late for the eastern Mail Shares in the Canadian-Land-Company are at 30 per cent premium in London.

There are rumours leading us to believe that the Holy Alliance have assumed a positive hostile to the interests of Great Britain on the Continent of Europe—in retaliation for her acknowledgment of the Independance of South America. We consider these rumours as an idle wind.

Had we time or room in this sheet, we should have desired to descant at some length on the provisions, and probable effects, of the important Act of Parliament promulgated in the Gazette of this day.—as it is, what we have to say, must be reserved, with other matter of great interest to this Province, to another opportunity

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

French Coronation.—The Duke of Northumberland has been appointed by the King of Great Britain to represent His Majesty at the Coronation of the King of France. The King has appointed the Right Hon. Frederick Lamb, his Minister at the French Court.

English Canals.—The following statement will show the vast increase in the value of canal property: Old Birmingham Canal, original cost per share, £140; present value, £2,840; annual dividend £100.—Stafford and Worcester Canal, original cost £140; present value, £960; annual dividend, £40 Trent and Mersey Canal, original cost, £6. 0; present value, £4,600; annual dividend, £130 and bonus. Coventry Canal, original cost, £100; present value, £1,340: £44 and bonus.

Chartered Companies.—The Levant company, after long and romantic character, in the words of "The Dublin Freeman's Journal," of Saturday last. A murder, of the most singular and awful description, is said to have been committed about a week since, near Rathdown. We give an outline of this shocking transaction as it has been related to us: A young woman was at the fair, in Rathdown, with her father, who gave her the money he received that day, (ten pounds) and advised her, as it was growing late, to go to her female cousin, who lived here with her two brothers, as she'd sleep with her that night. She complied with his request, and at night one of the brothers came into the room with a candle, and said to her, "What, are you awake still? You had better go to sleep. She was much alarmed at this expression. Her cousin was asleep.—She listened attentively, and gathered the dreadful information that they meant to murder her, and get possession of the ten pounds. She then went to the other side of the bed, and one of them cut the throat of his own sister! The young woman feigned to be fast asleep. They took the body away to bury it in a grave that they had previously dug in an adjoining garden. In the meantime the young woman got out thro' a window, without waiting to put on her clothes ran down the road, and meeting a cart, prevailed on the owner to put her into it, and cover her up. Shortly after, the brothers discovered their fatal error and overtaking the cart, asked the man if he had seen an unfortunate deranged woman, who had made her escape out of bed when raving of murder. With great presence of mind, he said, "Yes, she ran across the fields, but I could not leave my cart to follow her." They instantly went in pursuit—the cart went on to Wicklow, and the two brothers are now lodged in the gaol of that town—The coroner's inquest brought in a verdict of wilful murder against them both."

An Amazonian Bride.—The attention of the citizens about the market, was on Friday morning last, arrested by the appearance of a robust, but comely female, parading on its pavement, with a cowskin of immoderate length, in her hand, and evidently in a temper to apply it with a hearty good will, to some one, who had provoked her ire

On enquiry it appeared, that, some two or three weeks since, she had entered into an engagement to be married to a certain dashing buck of her neighbourhood, and that the preceding evening had been fixed on for the consummation of the nuptials.

At the appointed hour the minister and guests had assembled; an elegant and ample supper had been prepared, and the lady herself, her face wreathed in smiles and her person adorned with many a frill and fur, below, impatiently awaited the moment which was to make her a bride! The moment came and passed!—hour after hour lingered on, and finally the evening expired—but the Bridegroom came not!

At first, the neglected fair one bore her disappointment with a sort of pensive gloom, or meditative sullenness:—this state of feeling, however, presently gave way to anger, and this soon became tempestuous and uncontroulable:—and in the morning she sallied forth, prepared as we have described, to avenge her own grievances, in contempt of Doctor's Commons, Judge and Jury.

The truant lover, suspecting, probably, that there was a rod in pickle for him, prudently kept himself incog, and in the back ground. He seemed to be, (to use a sporting phrase) "a cock that would neither show nor fight;" and it was not until after long and diligent search, that he was discovered concealed, not far from the spot, where was exhibited the unusual appearance we have described.

The incensed female, forthwith, and without remorse, or the smallest mitigation of her powers, began to apply the cowskin to the shoulders of her craven bridegroom, and this application she continued with so much pungency and perseverance that flesh, and blood could no longer bear it, but nothing loth, he fled with might and main down the street, pursued by the enraged woman in dishabille, followed by a hundred or two of the gentry and nobility about the market.

"The beam he fled with utmost speed,
And sad and piteous looks,
For why, he felt the whip indeed
Was at his back, gadzooks!"

It soon became apparent, however that though our hero-the ran with great speed and spirit, that yet she was deficient in that essential quality for a courser, which Jockeys term bottom. And after "finishing it," (to keep up the figure in high style,) for two or three hundred yards, and occasionally applying her instrument with great efficiency to the shoulders of the fugitive beau, she was obliged to give up the chase, and thus afforded him an opportunity of accomplishing his retreat in security

—What may be the result of this feline sort of courtship, we presume not to conjecture; but we had rather have witnessed the castigation and the race, than any thing of the kind which has occurred since the days of the merry rumble of Johnny Gilpin and his mare

Influence of Copper on the Magnet.—Mr. Arago has announced that the purest Copper exerts a marked influence, on the magnetic needle, and that such is this influence that a needle, which in a wooden box, or in the open air, would make 145 oscillations before its motion ceased, would not make more than 30 when surrounded by a circle of copper; and it is remarkable, that the copper, which thus changes the number of the oscillations does not alter their duration.—[Jour. de Pharmacie, Dec. 1824.

Report of Commissioners of Burlington Bay Canal.

Niagara Falls Dec. 2 1824.

Sir,

As a Commissioner for superintending the making of a Navigable Canal at Burlington Beach, I have herein the honor to inclose you, to be laid before His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor the Report of the Commissioners appointed to superintend that work; which is accompanied with copies of the estimate of the Engineer, and the contract for completing the Canal.

I have the honor to be,
very respectfully, Sir,
Your Obedient Servant,

(Signed) THOMAS CLARK.

MAJOR HILLIER &c. &c.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the most Honorable Military order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein. &c. &c. &c.

The Commissioners appointed by your Excellency, in conformity to the provisions of two several Acts passed by the Legislature of this Province for making a Navigable Canal for Vessels, between Burlington Bay and Lake Ontario.

Most Respectfully Report.

That soon after the appointment of said Commissioners, viz on the fifteenth day of last, they met at the outlet of Burlington Bay and proceeded to organize a board for the transaction of business, when the Hon. Thomas Clark was appointed President and James Crooks Esq vice President, Mr. Harris, who had formerly been employed by the Commissioners for the improvement of the Internal Navigation of the Province, and who was well acquainted with the local situation of Burlington Bay having been requested to attend, was so good as to comply, as also Mr Hall, whose experience under Mr Telford in Britain, induced the Commissioners to avail themselves of his abilities.

The assistance of those two Engineers, aided by the Surveys and Reports of the Messrs. Clowes's gave the Commissioners as fair a view of the object they were appointed to superintend, as in the short time between their nomination and meeting, could well be obtained, although the latter Report of Messrs. Clowes's seemed to make doubtful the practicability of making the proposed Canal through Brandts pond that is north of the outlet, yet the great advantages Vessels would derive from the protection of the North Shore, when running in with heavy weather, induced the Commissioners to ascertain the existence of Rock as reported by the Clowes's. This service was undertaken by Mr. Harris, who, upon boring, found in every situation between the outlet and north shore suitable for the purposes of a Canal through Brandts pond, such masses of stone at the depth of six feet below the water surface as would render the undertaking were impracticable except at an expense far beyound the local advantages of the situation—The next object was to examine the outlet, which in some measure has the advantage of protection from the North Shore, and which, from the excavation already made by the water through it, seem to offer advantages over a more Southern situation—But upon examination by the Engineer the distance was found to be about one thousand feet more than one half a mile south of it and the expense proportionably greater.

Before giving a preference to this last situation the Commissioners examined a place still further south, called the head of the Island, and although the width of the Beach at this place is one half greater than at the place last mentioned, yet the depth of water close to the shore in both Lakes and said Island obviating the necessity of any protection works in Burlington Bay seemed to make this place highly elegible were it not that the distance from the north shore denied it any protection; in Lake Ontario and in the little Lake the channel was so intricate and narrow as to render the ingress and egress very difficult, and could never be made deeper under any circumstances than eighteen feet water. Weighing maturely the advantages and disadvantages made by the contractors up to the eighth of September last.

advantage of the different situations the Commissioners using their best judgment could do no other-wise than decide on the situation about half a mile South of the Outlet, where the distance across the Beach is five hundred and forty feet, and, to protect the entrance from Lake Ontario, works are required to be carried out seven hundred and forty five feet and in the little Lake eight hundred and ten feet, making together two thousand and ninety five feet exclusive of the break water, and leaving a passage of seventy two feet wide and twelve feet deep—The break water in Lake Ontario resting in sixteen feet depth of water, the aggregate expense of which is much less than if made in any other situation and the depth of water can be increased at any future period should it ever become necessary either for Vessels of War or of Commerce, the entrance of both Lakes is also accessible at all times and the disappearance of sand at the depth of fourteen feet water in both obviates the apprehension of the Canal ever filling up even if the works are carried no further out.

Having thus decided upon the place where the cut across the beach should be made. The Commissioners lost no time in agreeing with Mr. Hall to superintend its execution and this Gentleman immediately made out the necessary specifications for the information of persons who might be willing to contract, and public notice was also given for that purpose and the first day of June appointed to receive proposals, to receive which the Commissioners again met at the outlet—and on examination found the offer of Messrs. Strowbridge, Hays, and M'Keen, most advantageous, being for the construction with block work, thirty one thousand seven hundred dollars, and for pile work thirty four thousand dollars—which last sum exceeding the grant of the Legislature of this Province it became necessary to consult the Engineer whether such ailments could be made in the work without incurring any material injury to it, as would come within the grant and also provide for the Engineers Salary and other contingent expenses—and he being of opinion such curtailments could be made, a contract was entered into with those persons, by which they undertake to complete the whole work by the 1st day of October one thousand eight hundred and twenty five, leaving in the hands of the Commissioners one eighth part of the sum laid out as the work proceeds as security.

To meet the expense, in the beginning, of providing apparatus, machinery and materials, one thousand pounds currency was agreed to be advanced upon competent security being given, but the security heretofore offered not being such as the Commissioners could approve of, no such advance has been made, and only one thousand pounds paid in compliance with the contract on the work actually done—with a view of benefiting the Canal and facilitate the entrance of vessels from Lake Ontario a breakwater has been substituted for a pier that which would have been put down this fall but for sickness which prevailed amongst the workmen (and of which, one of the Contractors has died) and the prevalence of Easterly winds lately—should, however, a favour ble change take place in the weather, this desirable object may yet be obtained and the Commissioners could approve of its sufficiency to withstand the winter storms and ice.

The Commissioners beg leave to lay before your Excellency the estimate of the Engineer upon which they have proceeded, as also his Report of the progress made by the contractors up to the eighth of September last.

The Commissioners before closing this Report beg leave to state to your Excellency that, when they had in contemplation, to make the canal to the north of the outlet, through the land belonging to John Brant Esquire, Mr Brant very handsomely offered to convey gratuitously to Government, a-ny part of his land that the Commissioners might think necessary for the purposes of the Canal.

All which is most respectfully submitted.

SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT

will be opened for the reception of the Public on Monday the 2nd of May.

The limits of an advertisement precludes the possibility of detailing with minuteness the various accommodations which this Hotel offers to the public. Nothing has been omitted that could, in any manner, contribute either to the comfort and convenience of its inmates. Suits of apartments for private families; a spacious Ball-room for public Assemblies; a Coffe-room; Billiard rooms; Baths, and a RESTAURATEUR on the plan of the Palais Royal, Paris, presents to the guests a variety of enjoyment that is only to be met with in the larger cities of Europe: with such recommendations, joined to moderate charges, and unremitting attention on the part of the Proprietor, F. Editorial Commentary.

We are at a loss to know what Carey means by saying in his last Observer, that the contemplated canal between the Ottawa and Kingston, has been checked by the timidity of the House of Assembly—when a warm and grateful acknowledgement for the proposed loan has been voted, and preliminary measures taken for carrying the plan into effect.—That there was some hesitation in bringing this Province into so large an additional debt as £70,000, without previously knowing from what funds the principal, as well as the interest, was to be paid—proves nothing more than what is greatly to the credit of that body;—namely, a careful watchfulness over the public interests.—There are those, and we confess ourselves amongst the number, who would prefer expending this loan on improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence,—on the principle that we ought first to secure one general and unobstructed public highway,—both by land and water, through the Provinces,—before any collateral improvements, of minor consequence, were attempted. How any one who had attended to the proceedings of the Lower House, during the late Session, could charge it with timidity,—we are at a loss to comprehend, since most men are of opinion that that body has evinced a spirited, and somewhat uncommon, hardihood.

We have just received information that a public meeting has been held at Cobourg, in the Newcastle District, WALTER BOSWELL, Esq. in the Chair, for the purpose of building a Steam Boat to navigate the waters of the Rice Lake, upper part of the Trent, and the Otonabee river. Resolutions were entered into, which shall appear in our next, together with comments on one of the most useful and praise-worthy undertakings that has originated in these enlightened and enterprising times. It is one that shall have our warmest support, and it so happens that our local knowledge of that part of the country enables us to appreciate the entire merit of this important undertaking.

An important political change in the island of Cuba is anticipated by several of the American papers—with what truth we know not

It is rumoured that Lord Dalhousie will not leave England, for Canada, until the fall.

THE following intelligence must be of importance to many of our readers.

CANADA ASHES.—Copy of a letter addressed to the Mayor of Liverpool, dated Somerset place, Feb. 17:—

"Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the merchants and others of Liverpool, interested in the trade with Canada, that Lord Liverpool and the Chancellor of the Exchequer having a plan had under consideration the subject of Canada Ashes, have determined to propose to Parliament to take off the duty on ashes from our own colonies or possessions, and to lower the duty on those imported from foreign ports, and to repeal the allowance of drawback altogether.

W. HUSKISSON."

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LONDON, February 19.

The London papers of this date are engrossed by a report of the debate in the House of Commons, of the day before on Mr Brougham's motion that the Roman Catholic Association should be heard "by themselves, counsel, agents, and witnesses" at the Bar of the House. The Association had presented a petition to that effect. The motion was lost; ayes 89—noes 222. Messrs O'Connell, Shiel and Bric, the delegates, were seated on one of the benches below the bar. The Chronicle of the same date observes: "It is said that the illness of King Ferdinand of Spain is more moral than physical; that he has been unable to digest our King's speech."

The London quidnuncs were busy with the pretended partition of Spain and Portugal by the Holy Alliance.

Catholic Association.—On this subject the Courier remarks, with exceeding great joy, at this result, but the opposition papers contend that the measure is absurd, and will prove ineffacious. The following is the language of "The Times," on the subject:

"The more we consider the subject of this strange measure, the more is our early opinion confirmed—that ministers might as well attempt to catch the winds or to fix the ocean, as to destroy the body against whom they have declared hostilities. It asked how this coercive law can be evaded, we answer, by any one of a thousand acts, which, under any conceivable system of law, each individual of the 3000 composing the association, might every day perform. The law may be eluded by any man who can put his hand into his pocket and pay money to another. It may be eluded by the change of a name. It may be eluded by a weekly or half weekly calling together of an aggregate meeting, by a dinner, or a succession of dinners, where speeches are made and reported—where seditious sentiments may be conveyed under words that are intangible; and what is, worse than all, but what the Government would do well to prepare for, the defiant of the law may be consummated by deep concealment, by meetings at which no speeches are reported, and where transactions take place, of which we shall know nothing until we see them developed in their fruits.

Mrs. Coutts—Mrs Coutts, of London, the widow of the Banker, gave a Concert on the first night that Madam Catalani appeared after her return to England, which was followed by a supper the cost of which was estimated at two thousand pounds sterling.

Probert, the accomplice of Thurtell.—Probert, who was connected with Thurtell in the affair of Gill's cottage, had been arrested for horse stealing.

Water on the Brain.—The operation of tapping the head for water on the brain, was performed by Surgeon Gray, of this Town (Galway,) on a child of Nine months old. He drew off more than 10 ounces of water, which gave the child great relief. Should the child even not recover, which, from the generally diseased and deformed state of the body, may, probably be wished for; yet we think the performance of such operations should be made public, as they may lead to more successful practise in that disease.—Connaught Journal.

Indelicacy.—A young woman was recently fined $25 for appearing in the streets of New Orleans in "Eve's clothing."

North Carolina Gold.—The Cheraw intelligencer of the 11th inst. states, that "an immense deal of pure gold has within a short time back, been found in the counties of Cabarrus, Montgomery and Anson, North Carolina. In Montgomery a new mine has been discovered different from any we have mentioned. The gold is abstracted from large masses of rock, which indicate the existence of rich and extensive mines, and strongly resemble those of Peru. We understand a gentleman, on whose land the mine in Montgomery was discovered, has within a few weeks obtained about of a bushel of Gold, amounting to $20,000. It is said that this extraordinary good fortune has partially deranged him"

Astronomical Fact.—The seventh visible star of the constellation Pleiades has been of late found to be a periodical and revolving star, which accounts being for the constellation described by some writers as consisting only six, and by some as composed of seven stars, which Ovid alludes—

"Septem quæ dici, sex tamen esse solent."

Chinese dinner at Singapore.—Singapore is an island belonging to Great Britain, situated near the southern extremity of Malacca. In June last, Sir. Hahi, a Chinese merchant entertained the whole of the European merchants and military officers of the city of Singapore with a splendid Chinese dinner. In the bill of fare were the following delicious novelties;—soups of birds' nests, rogs' and ducks' livers; a basket of stewed sparrows' tails, with a sauce of lizards' eggs; a stewed porcupine, served up with the fat of turtle; fishmaws dressed up with sea-weed; a platter full of snipes eyes, garnished around the border with peacock's combs, (this cost $200;) jellies made from rhinoceros' hide; soup from Malacca and Rhio; wines from Europe, &c.) The party remained at the table till 3 o'clock the next morning; "about that time, the wine had made an impression on the heads of some of the party, and the glasses were heard to tingle in different parts of the room; however, ended in perfect harmony."

From the Trenton Emporium.

"I'LL DO IT TO-MORROW."

Of all the methods which man, in the abundance of his ingenuity, has invented by which to cheat himself, that of procrastination is probably the most effectual. There is a trite remark of a very reputable sage extant, to the purpose, "all the good you will ever do—all the good you will ever do—must be done to day—for there is no to-morrow." That period of time which lies beyond the present moment, is not guaranteed to us by pledge.—To-morrow, to us, may become to-day or never. To suspend any thing important, then, upon absolute an uncertainty, is madness—as saith the poet,

"Defer not till to-morrow to be wise,
"To-morrow's sun to you may never rise."

Even if it ever does return, the thing called opportunity may not return with it.

My aunt Dorothy was the first example I ever had the sad evil of this "I'll do it to-morrow" mania. She was a very pretty, gay girl, and being decidedly belle of the village, had young men in abundance one time or another paying court to her. They were all mere slippers neither just fit to be worn a few days and then shook off; but were so one of them worthy enough to, had the means to marry, and so forth.—But whether it was that she dearly loved to be courted as most girls do, you know, or that she really found some difficulty in choosing among them, I know not; she kept putting one and another of them off till to-morrow and to-morrow; but at last the golden chances all went by—and she was left to sing the sad ditty of

"Nobody coming to marry me—
"Nobody coming to woo."

In ancient times this disposition to procrastination existing in the mind of one great man, was the pivot upon which the fortunes of a world turned. You remember Hanibal and Cannoe. When the Roman legions were broken and destroyed, the city panic-struck and defenceless. Hanibal and I will march to-morrow, until his energy gathered strength; again put on his armour; and the time for conquest had gone by for ever. Had it not been for this Carthage might have worn the crown of the universe, and Hannibal known no greater general in the annals of time.

A great deal of decision is necessary, if we would prosper. No one was ever successful to any considerable extent, without it. To-morrow I'll is a cheat.—And it deceives us principally in time, and conceals from our view the multitudinous affairs it will bring to fill up its every vacant moment.—Thus, when it comes, it disappoints us by presenting itself with its own cares and wants and without a space in which to deposit those of the time that is past.

Singular fact.—Mr. John Gage, of Union, a few years ago, grafted a pear upon an apple scion in his garden. When it grew up, so as to begin to bear, it bore for two years very excellent pears. The third and fourth years it was barren; but during those years, its leaves, which formerly were those of a pear tree, changed by degrees, to those of an apple tree. The fifth year, and ever since, it has born excellent apples.—American Farmer.

To preserve Vegetables.—Vegetables may be preserved all the winter, particularly French beans and peas;—by filling a middle sized stew pan with young peas, for instance, in which must be put two or three table spoonfuls of sugar, and the stew-pan then put over a brisk charcoal fire. When the heat begins to act, stir up the peas two or three times, then as soon as they begin to yield water, pour them out into a dish to drain. Spread them out on paper, in an airy place not exposed to the sun, and turn them frequently, so as to dry rapidly. Guard them from moisture, and you may have them green at Christmas."

Radish.—The boiled roots of this vegetable form an excellent dish, when served up as Asparagus.

The Rev. Dr. Isaac Barrow, meeting Lord Rochester one day at Court, his Lordship by way of banter, thus accosted him: "Doctor, I am your's to the shoe tie." Barrow, seeing his aim, returned his salute as obsequiously, with, "My Lord, I am your's to the ground." Rochester improving his blow, quickly returned it, with "Doctor, I am your's to the centre;" which was smartly followed by Barrow, with "My Lord, I am your's to the Antipodes." Upon which, Rochester, scorning to be foiled, exclaimed, 'Doctor, I am your's to the infernal regions." On which Barrow, turning on his heel, answered, "There my Lord, I leave you.

A Light Man.—Wanley, in his "wonders of the Great and Little World," gravely tells us that Fuletus of Cous, who was an excellent critic and a very good poet in the time of Alexander the Great, used always to lean and so night, that he used to wear leaden shoes, and never walked out without a leaden weight about him, lest he should be blown away by the wind.

Foreign Intelligence.

HOLY ALLIANCE.

It was reported in London that Russia, Austria and France, had agreed to recognize the independence of Greece, and that Russia had marched an army on Constantinople. It was also rumoured that the "Holy Alliance" had resolved on excluding Great Britain from the continent of Europe, as a proof of the displeasure of that body on account of the measure adopted by the former relative to South America.

SWEDEN.

A letter from Copenhagen, of the 5th of February, states, as a report, that Sweden had determined on following the example of England in the recognition of the South American States.

SPAIN.

MADRID, Feb. 3.—(Private Correspondence.)—A notice is published to day, that the account of the state of the King's health, prayers for his recovery will be performed to day, and the Holy Sacrament will be exposed during the service. His Majesty is, in fact, as ill, and even more so than he was first represented at this illness, said to have been produced by a violent fit of passion, into which his Majesty fell during a Council of State on the affairs of Spain. It is reported that his Majesty even deplored the sad fate which had placed him at the head of the Government. He complained bitterly of having never been seconded by his Ministers, tho' he had selected them from the persons whom he thought the most attached to him.

Lastly, according to the same reports, the King said that he now saw that every body deceived him, and that he was not without uneasiness for his own safety, and that of his family. Whatever may be the cause of his of his Majesty's indisposition, it is certain that it has caused great alarm for these three days past; the gout seemed disposed to fly to the stomach, but the exertions of the physicians have arrested the progress of the disorder.

Letters from Corunna say, that the royalist volunteers there have been disarmed, and that the Spanish troops of the line have been obliged to leave the city for fear they should have come to quarrels with the French garrison. The operation has been effected, it is said, to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants of the town, and without the slightest opposition from the Spaniards, though their discontent was visible, and their hatred concentrated.—Courier Francaise.

INDIA.

The arrival of the Bombay at New-York from Calcutta, has furnished papers from that place to the 20th November. Official accounts are published of the subjection to the British arms of the sea port towns of Tavoy and Mergui, and that the Mahoons, (Governors) and a few of the head men were prisoners of war. The Mahoon of Tavoy, was taken in consequence of the treachery of the officer who commanded immediately under him. Mergui was afterwards taken by storm, in which the natives lost about 500 men—the Rajah remained till the British troops were actually in town, and then withdrew with about 300 of his followers.

The Burkuru gives an account of a mutiny at Barrackpore in the 20th, 47th and 62d native regiments, a considerable part of which arranged in a line and refused to obey the officers and swore they would not surrender. The whole troops were then drawn out, and a fire was opened upon the mutineers by the King's troops, who returned the fire in an irregular manner and then fled; about 100 of them were killed, and the remainder were pursued, and many of them taken.—Upwards of 100 had been condemned to suffer death; eleven only, however, were executed, the sentence of the others having been committed to hard labor on the roads. Order was completely restored. Some further advantages had been gained over the Burmese.

SOUTH AMERICA.

NEW-YORK, March 25.

Columbia and Mexico.—Carthagena papers to the 19th ult. have been received at Baltimore. On the 14th, the French frigate Constantia arrived, having on board the Marquis Maguan, who it is stated, would proceed immediately to Bogota, to lay liver his despatches, which is said to be "of the greatest importance." The intelligence of the acknowledgment of the independence by England, had reached Carthagena.

The British cutter Lyon, had arrived at Alvarado, with one million of dollars, part of the loan made by Goldschmidt and Co of London.

The London November packet had arrived at Alvarado, with 50,000 dollars specie, for the mining Companies, and the Mexican Markets are represented as glutted with British manufactures.

Ireland.

We are anxious to turn aside, for a moment, from the political and religious discords that agitate Ireland, to a consideration of those means by which her condition may be permanently ameliorated.

Ireland possesses all the requisite advantages of soil, climate, and mineral productions, to render her at once an agricultural, a manufacturing, and a commercial country; and there does not appear any natural impediment, to her rivalling England in wealth and prosperity. Her soil is productive, in spite of a barbarous system of agriculture, which would throw one half of Great Britain out of cultivation. She has the most valuable streams of water, in the best situations, unemployed. She has excellent coal for manufacturing purposes, in nineteen or twenty counties, which can be worked as cheap as in this country, and she abounds in other minerals, particularly iron, which can be, and we understand is, produced, of equal quality, 20 or 30 per cent. cheaper than in England.

All that is wanted are the skill and capital necessary to turn these natural advantages to account. The Irish, to use a favorite word of their own, are a talented, but not a commercial people, and, generally speaking, commercial undertakings do not succeed in their hands.—They may have capital also, as many of the Irish are fond of asserting; but if so, they might as well have none for any good that is done with it. Capital to be useful must be properly employed.

The commercial character, or those habits of order, punctuality, patience, and preseverance, which secure success to commercial undertakings, and that well tempered spirit of enterprize, which success at once generates and justifies, are seldom of purely indigenous growth. They are formed by those very undertakings, to the success of which they are necessary; and, in general, they can only take root in a foreign soil by being transplanted.

What Ireland wants, and what every sensible and disinterested Irishman is desirous to see imparted to her, are, English capital, skill and enterprize agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial. Not that the regeneration of Ireland is to be effected by English capital alone; but the impulse must be given by it.—The Irish must be trained by the example of English management and excited to emulation by its success.—In short, Ireland must receive from this country a graft, which, growing on a healthy stock, and in a fertile soil, will in the end, there is little doubt, produce a tree as flourishing as the original.

It has long been our opinion, that this would be best effected in the first instance by means of companies; and hence, the establishments of this nature, formed to introduce British capital into Ireland, which we trust will become more general, have had our decided support. Of these, the most important are the Hibernian Mining Company, and the Irish Provincial Bank, and as we cannot promote the object of such undertakings in a better manner than by calling public attention to the nature and probable success of those already formed, we shall, perhaps, take an early opportunity of devoting an article or two to the subject.—Courier.

Mr. LISTON, THE COMEDIAN.

OBTRUSIVE IDEAS.

Mr. Liston, the comedian, is subject to the intrusion of the same singular fancies as are noticed by Locke in his Essay on the Human Understanding. The Biographer's account is exceedingly curious: At Chiswick we behold Liston thoughtful grave, ascetic from his cradle averse to flesh meat, and strong drink; abstemious even beyond the genius of the place; and almost in spite of the remonstrances of his great aunt, who, though strict, was not rigid, water was his habitual drink, and his food little beyond the mast and beechnuts, of his favourite groves. It is a medical fact, that this kind of diet, however favourable to the contemplative powers of the primitive hermits, &c. is but ill adapted to the less robust minds and bodies of a later generation. Hypochondria almost constantly ensues. It was so in the case of young Liston. He was subject to sights, and had visions. These mixed beech nuts distilled by a complexion naturally adust, mounted in to an occiput, already prepared to kindle by long seclusion, and the fervour of strict Calvinistic notions. In the glooms of Charnwood he was assailed by illusions similar in kind to those which are related of the famous Anthony of Padua. Wild antic faces would ever and anon protrude themselves upon his sensorium. Whether he shut his eyes, or kept them open, the same illusions operated. The darker and more profound were his cogitations, the droller and more whimsical became the apparitions. They buzzed about him as thick as flies, flapping at him, flouting him, hooting in his ear, yet with such comic appendages, that what at first was his bane, became at length his solace; and he desired no better society than that of his merry phantasmata.

We find him making his debut, as it is called, upon the Norwich boards, in the season of 1801, being then in the 22d year of his age. Having a natural bent to tragedy, he chose the part of Pyrrhus in the Distressed Mother, to Sally Parker's Hermione. We find him afterwards as Barnwell, Altamount, Chamont, &c.; but, as a nature had destined him to the sock, an unavoidable infirmity absolutely disqualified him for tragedy.—His person at this latter period, of which I have been speaking, was graceful and even commanding; his countenance set to gravity; he had the power of arresting the attention of an audience at first sight almost beyond any other tragic actor. But he could not hold it. To understand this obstacle we must go back a few years to those appalling reveries at Charnwood. Those illusions, which had vanished before the dissipation of a less recluse life, and more free society, now in his solitary tragic studies, and amid the intense calls upon feeling incident to tragic acting, came back upon him with tenfold vividness. In the midst of some most pathetic passage, the parting of Jaffier with his dying friend, for instance, he would suddenly be surprised with a fit of violent horse laughter. While the spectators were all sobbing before him with emotion, suddenly one of those grotesque faces would peep out upon him, and he could not resist the impulse. A timely excuse once or twice served his purpose, but no audience could be expected to bear repeatedly this violation of the continuity of feeling. He describes them (the illusions) as so many demons haunting him, and paralysing every effect. Even now, I am told he cannot recite the famous soliquy in Hamlet, even in private, without immoderate bursts of laughter. However, what he had not force of reason sufficient to overcome, he had good sense enough to turn into emolument, and determined to make a commodity of his distemper.—He prudently exchanged the buskin for the sock, and the illusions instantly ceased; or if they occurred for a short season, by their very co-operation added a zest to his comic vein; some of his most catching faces being as (he expresses it) little more than transcripts and copies of those extraordinary phantasmata.—London Magazine.

To the Editor of the Edinburgh Observer.

TREATY OF TILSIT.

Sir,—From an extract you lately published from Fouche's Memoirs, it would appear that he is ignorant of the manner in which the British government obtained information of the secret articles of the treaty of Tilsit and which they so boldly anticipated by the capture of the Danish fleet. As it is probable that few of your readers know it either, you are at perfect liberty to give publicity to the following facts, which I have from undoubted authority.

The son of Mr. M——, a very respectable oil'man in B——Street, London, was intended by his father for his own business, and accordingly attended daily in his premises to learn the details of it. He could not, however, reconcile himself to it and one morning packed up his clothes and disappeared. He crossed over to the Continent and penetrated into the southern part of Russia, where he took up his abode among the Cossacks. He gradually acquired their language, imitated their manners and costume, and at length enrolled himself as a soldier in one of their regiments. Some time after this the guards of the Emperor of Russia needed recruits, and our hero being a very handsome tall man, was selected as one of them, and proceeded to St Petersburgh. After the battle of Tilsit, the famous meeting of Alexander and Bonaparte took place on a raft and the subject of this memoir who was a capital linguist, and who was never suspected of being any thing but a Cossack, was one of the Emperor's body guards. Here he heard these articles discussed in the French language, which were intended to seal the ruin of Britain.—He shuddered at the discovery of the abyes which was preparing for his country, and resolved to do his utmost to avert the blow. He took the first opportunity of deserting, and threading his way through Germany and Holland, at length after considerable difficulties and dangers, reached the sea. Here he was fortunate enough to prevail on some fishermen, for a reward, to carry him across the channel, and he again set his foot on his native soil. He immediately proceeded to London, and at 6 in the morning reached his father's house, who had never heard of him since he left several years before.—"Good God," said the old gentleman, "where have you been."—"I'll tell you bye and bye, but wish instantly to see his Majesty's Ministers."—His father started, told him it was too early and tried to change the discourse—But he clung to it, and after an early breakfast, stept into a hackney coach and proceeded to Downing Street.—He then gave a complete detail of what he had witnessed, told who his father was, and intreated, if his information was doubted, that at least some step should be taken to avert the threatened dangers. Messengers were dispatched with the news to every place where we still maintained a friendly correspondence, and to Bonaparte's astonishment the secret articles became almost immediately public, and Ministers being convinced of the correctness of Mr. M——'s information, adopted the most decisive measures to thwart the design of our implacable foe. Among others, the seizure of the Danish fleet was one of the most important in its results, and the furious rage of Bonapart at the steps was the greatest compliment he could pay us.

Mr. M——has since been employed in important missions by Government, mixes in the best society in London, and enjoys, I believe a pension which he richly deserves out of the secret service money.

Natural History.

Curious fact in Natural History.—It is a fact, we believe, not much known, that the eel, though it lives in an element that seems to place it beyond the reach of atmospheric changes, is yet singularly affected by high winds. This is well known to the inhabitants of Linlithgow, who have an excellent opportunity of observing the habits of that animal in the loch adjoining the town. The stream which flows out of that loch at the west end passes through a sluice, and falls into an artificial reservoir, from which it escapes by a number of holes at the sides and bottom. These holes are too small to let eels of a common size pass, and hence this reservoir answers the purpose of an eel-trap or cruive. The fish, however, are rarely found in it in calm weather; but when strong winds blow, especially from the west, these tenants of the water seem to be seized with a general panic, and hurry from their lodgings like rats from a conflagration. At these times they rush through the outlet in crowds, and fall pell-mell into the reservoir, from which they are speedily transferred to the fryingpans of the burgesses. During the high winds within the last fortnight, a cart-load was taken out of the reservoir every day, and, in one day, no less than two cart-loads!—Scotsman.

Birds of Passage.—A bird of the landrail or corncrake species, which is seldom seen in these countries except in the summer months, was shot on wing, on the 17th of January at Gaulstown Park, Westmeath, Ireland, the residence of the Right Honourable Lord Kilmaine.

Antediluvian Animals.—The Academie des Sciences, at Paris, has proposed the following questions on comparative anatomy, for an extraordinary competition.—To decide, by means of the fossil bones in the Museum of the Jardin des Plantes, if the imperial antediluvian eagle, had as humble a look, as at at present times; if the antidiluvian ass were carnivorous, like many modern asses; if the antediluvian panther walked on two legs; and if the species of the ape, called in scientific language, Simia Dandy, were as common before the deluge as afterwards.

Vol. IV. THURSDAY, APRIL 21st, 1825. No. 16.

AGRICULTURE.

Jerusalem Artichokes.—A pig fed with these roots, 2 bushels of beans, and 3 pecks of barley meal, killed April 21st, weighed 12 stone 5 lbs.; original cost December 21st, 1822, £1 2s Beans 6s Barley-meal 8s. total £1 14s.—The butcher who killed it offered 6s. a stone for the whole pig (£3 13s.) The artichokes grew upon about 3 poles of rough ground, were dug up as given to the pig—and were ~~entirely~~ by the severe frost of the late winter; in the year 1820, when the thermometer was 20 degrees below freezing, Jerusalem artichokes in the ground were not in the smallest degree injured.—Four other pigs bought at the same time did equally well on artichokes. The meat is very good, and does not waste in boiling.

Domestic.

The following is from the Lower Canada Papers.

There is certainly no want of inclination in the British North American Provinces to improve their resources, and the following abstract of what they are doing or have done, reflects, we think, great credit upon them:—

LOWER-CANADA has given in 1824 upwards of £15,000 for Roads, as a bounty for establishing a Steam Vessel between Halifax and Quebec, for agricultural and other purposes, for a census of its population, &c.; besides having authorised an additional loan of £30,000 to complete the Lachine Canal, near Montreal.

UPPER CANADA, before the Session of its Parliament terminates, will probably vote £25,000 to the Stock of the Welland Canal Company to make the Canal uniting Lakes Erie and Ontario, large enough to admit the passage of the ordinary vessels sailing upon the Lakes. It has in consideration to take a Loan of £70,000 sterling, offered by the Imperial Government, for the purpose of uniting Lake Ontario with the River Ottawa; and the improvement of the Navigation of the Rapids of the River St Lawrence, &c. &c.

NOVA-SCOTIA has voted £12,000 to improve its Internal Communications, besides considerable sums on the Shubenacadie canal, and to improve its agriculture, to encourage commerce, &c.

NEW-BRUNSWICK has voted £10,000 for its Roads and Internal Communications, besides £4000 for Fish bounties, £1000 to meet the expenses of a Survey of a Route for a Canal from the Bay of Fundy to the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, and other sums for purposes of Education, Agriculture, the establishing of Light houses &c. &c.

Banks, Marine and Fire Insurance Companies, Mechanics' Libraries, Agricultural Societies, Associations to improve the Navigation of Rivers, for Hospitals, for Steam Navigation, and for numerous other public benevolent purposes have been established or formed; and indeed an ardent a spirit for improvement exists as any where else, or as can be desired. The only doubt is as to the best and most economical manner, and the opportuneness of time for carrying the improvements contemplated into effect.—Old Gazette.

Parliamentary Register,
OF
Upper Canada:
(First Session of the Ninth Parliament)

No XII

(From Wednesday Feb 23rd to Feb 26th, 1825 inclusive.)

Mr. ATTY GENERAL from the Select Committee for trying the merits of the Petition of Joel Merriman and others, complaining of the undue Election and Return of James Lyons, esq Member to represent the County of Northumberland in the present Parliament, reported the following Resolutions.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the want of firmness and decision in the Returning Officer, at the late General Election for the County of Northumberland, in allowing persons to influence him at the Poll in the receiving and rejecting votes, and in the rejecting votes at the final summing up and afterwards at the general Scrutiny, the unequal decisions made by the Returning Officer under the same influence or influences, although it might not have been intentional on his part, had a decided tendency to give an undue advantage to the Sitting Member Mr James Lyons, over the opposing Candidate Mr. Benjamin Ewing.

Resolved, That when the votes were cast up at the close of the Poll, it appears there was a majority of two votes in favour of Mr. Ewing.

Resolved, That under all the circumstances of this case, it is the opinion of this Committee, that the Return ought to be amended by erasing the name of James Lyons, and inserting that of Mr. Benjamin Ewing instead thereof; and that leave be given to Mr. Lyons and the Freeholders of the County, to question by Petition the Election of Mr. Ewing within fourteen days, if they shall think fit.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the opposition of James Lyons, esq. the sitting Member, to the Petition of Joel Merriman and others, does not appear to them to have been frivolous or vexatious.

CHAIRMAN.

MASONIC HALL HOTEL,
SAINT PAUL STREET,
MONTREAL.

FRASCO most respectfully informs the citizens of Upper and Lower Canada, that this SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT will be opened for the reception of the Public on Monday the 2nd of May.

The limits of an advertisement precludes the possibility of detailing with minuteness the various accomodations which this Hotel offers to the public. The proprietor, however, feels warranted in asserting, that in point of architectural beauty, and internal arrangement, the MASONIC HALL is superior to any Establishment of the kind in North America The Building (which is new, and one of the principal ornaments of the city) has been built expressly for an Hotel. It contains eighty separate apartments, furnished in a style of superior neatness. Nothing has been omitted that could, in any manner, contribute either to the comfort and convenience of its inmates. Suits of apartments for private families; a spacious Ball-room for public Assemblies; a Coffe-room; Billiard rooms; Baths, and a RESTAURATEUR, on the plan of the Palais Royal, Paris, presents to the guests a variety of enjoyment that is only to be met with in the larger cities of Europe: with such recommendations, joined to moderate charges, and unremitting attention on the part of the Proprietor,

F. Rasco trusts, that in this his new undertaking, he will meet with the same liberal support he has already so amply experienced from the public.

Editorial Commentary.

According to our promise of last week we shall now give an account of the Meetings held at Cobourg, in the Newcastle District, preparatory to the establishment of a Steam Boat to navigate the waters of the Rice Lake, together with the Resolutions entered into there at, and some comments of our own on the practicability, and utility of this undertaking.

RICE LAKE STEAM BOAT COMPANY.

At a Meeting held at Cobourg on Monday the 11th day of April, 1825, for the purpose of considering the expediency of building a Steam Boat, to Navigate the waters of the Rice Lake.

Walter Boswell, Esq. in the Chair.

Resolved—That a Steam Boat on the waters of the Rice Lake, would conduce greatly to the general improvement of this District, particularly of the back Townships, in facilitating the means of getting the surplus produce of the Inhabitants to Market.

Resolved—That Walter Boswell, Esq Mr. Throop, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Perry, Mr. J Boswell, Mr Bethune and Mr Stuart, be appointed a Committee to carry the above Resolution into effect, and to draw the necessary rules and Regulations, and to report the same at a public Meeting, to be held at Bucks' Tavern on Friday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Signed, WALTER BOSWELL,
Chairman.

At a Meeting held at Bucks' Tavern, in Cobourg on Friday the 15th day of April 1825.

Walter Boswell, Esq in the Chair.

The above named Committee presented the following report:

The Committee appointed to draw the Rules and Regulations for carrying into effect the resolution of the former Meeting, beg leave to offer the following

The Committee have suggested the raising of One Thousand Pounds, which will probably exceed the cost of the Steam Boat and Engine, because there are some obstructions in the River Otonibee to be removed, and it will be expedient to make some improvements in the roads, from Rice Lake to the front, which may be accomplished by applying such portion of the Company's funds, as can be spared in addition to the statute duty

That as soon as one hundred Shares are Subscribed for, a Meeting of the Subscribers be called, for the purpose of choosing Directors, and a Treasurer That the number of such Directors should be Five, who may appoint a President and Secretary, and that three shall be a Quorum.

That the Directors be chosen from amongst those of the Subscribers, who are holders of four shares at the least, and that each of the Subscribers be entitled to as many votes, as he holds Shares in the said Company.

That the Directors first chosen, shall remain in Office until the first Monday in January next, at or the Boat shall commence running, and afterwards that they shall be chosen annually.

That as soon as a Treasurer is appointed, he may call on the Subscribers for £25 per cent, on the amount of their subscriptions, and the Directors may afterwards call for the balance in such proportions and at such times as they may think proper, giving one months notice.

That the Treasurer, Directors and Secretary shall act gratuitously, and that once in every year a meeting of the Subscribers shall be called, when the Directors shall report the state of the accounts of the said company and declare a dividend of the profits thereof.

That the Engine for the intended Boat should be of eight horse power, and that the Boat should be of as large a size as may be consistent with that power so as to afford the greatest possible facility for the carriage of produce from the shores of the Rice Lake and the Otonibee Rivers.

Resolved—That the above report be adopted.

Resolved—That books be immediately opened to receive Subscriptions at Cobourg, Kingston, York, Port Hope, and other places where Subscribers may be expected to be found.

Resolved—That the proceedings be published in the York and Kingston papers.

Resolved—That J. G Bethune Esq. Mr J. Boswell, G. S. Boulton, Esq. and Z Burnham, Esq. be appointed a corresponding Committee.

Signed, WALTER BOSWELL,
Chairman.

That this Establishment, if carried into effect, will be of great service to all the back Townships situated upon any, even of the minor, and tributary streams of the Rice Lake waters, there can be no doubt, and all those who are in anywise interested in the prosperity of that rich and extensive section of country, would do well to take a few shares in the concern which is now advertised. But it is not the back Townships only that would be benefited. A road has been recently formed which leads directly from the Marmora Ironworks to the lower end of the Rice Lake; and, as the head of that Lake is no more than ten miles distant from Port Hope, on Lake Ontario,—a ready communication to all the western parts of the Province for the conveyance of heavy articles of iron-manufacture might be thus facilitated, that could not fail to prove of essential advantage to the public generally.

As a gradually inclined plane can be had throughout the whole of the above mentioned distance of ten miles, from Rice Lake to Port Hope; and, as iron is in abundance, and at hand, it is probable that a carriage-railway would be the cheapest and best mode of transit from the back waters to the front.

By incurring an expense of no very serious amount an eight horse power steam-boat could run down the Trent as far as the Upper Falls, which, in a direct line, are within six and an half miles of the Marmora works; the boat might then, without further expense, have a run of about 70 miles; namely, from the south eastern extremity of the great communication-road in the Township of Smith; down the river Otonibee; through the waters of Rice Lake; and down the Trent, as far as the Upper Falls.

It is true no great profit can be immediately expected, but we are satisfied before the Boat has been two years on the water it will yield a fair remuneration, and, in a newly settled country like this, if we were always to confine our views to instant advantage, we should make but poor architects for the fortunes of our children, or even for our own old age. The plan has our warmest approbation, and shall have as much of our support, in a pecuniary way, as poor printers like ourselves can afford to give.

A Subscription-List for the names of Stock-holders, with the number and amount of Shares, is open at the U. C Gazette Office in York

The new Steam Boat, Toronto, destined to ply between this capital and Niagara, was launched last Saturday and went off in high style —She is constructed on Mr. Annesly's plan; and her building, throughout, has been superintended by that ingenious and artistic artist.—Her model is exceedingly beautiful;—she has two side rudders; most capacious deck; and, if we may judge from appearances, she will not only be a safe and commodious, but a very fast vessel. It is expected she will be ready for her first trip in about a fortnight

The Commissioners of the Canadian Land Company, now here, are about to return to England; having, as it is supposed, completed their inquiries, so far as they have deemed it necessary to make them.

We observe by the last papers that Canada shares, in London, are quoted at 40½ to 41 per cent premium.

In our last we omitted to mention that Mr. Buchanan, our Consul at New York, has been chosen as the fifth Director, for the present year, of the Welland Canal Company. This appointment, we presume, will prove highly satisfactory to the New York Stockholders.

The Catholic Association Bill has passed the House of Lords.

Government have made arrangements for the immediate embarkation of 2000 Irish emigrants to Canada.

Another extensive and destructive Fire has occurred in the old Town of Edinburgh.

There is a long account in the late London papers of the Coroner's Inquest held on the body of the Hon. F. Ashly Cooper, son of the Earl of Shaftesbury, who was killed in a pugilistic contest at Eton school, by a son of Col. Wood, but it is too lengthy for our columns.—The verdict was Man slaughter.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

London, March 5

On Sunday last, about the hour of two o'clock, two young gentlemen, Collegians of Eton, the Hon F. A. Cooper, and Mr. Wood, were in the play-ground when some words arose between them, and they pushed each other. Who gave the first assault is differently stated; but from words they proceeded to blows, and fought for several minutes when the captain came up and separated them. It was subsequently determined that they should meet on the following afternoon, and terminate their differences by a pugilistic contest, a custom prevalent among the scholars of Eton, and, indeed, of all other public schools; and the conqueror always tenders the hand of friendship to his defeated adversary. In this instance the majority of the scholars were present to witness the battle and the combatants stripped, at four o'clock on Monday afternoon, and commenced fighting. Mr. Cooper was smaller in stature than his opponent, his age was 15 years, and his opponent, who was half a head taller, was nearly 17 Mr. Wood had the advantage in point of strength, but the quickness and precision of Mr. Cooper were remarkable for one so young, and he declared that he would never give in. In the eighth, ninth, and tenth rounds he became weak and exhausted, and it was then evident, that he was not a match for Mr. Wood, and he ought to have been taken away. Some of the "backers" had brought a quantity of brandy in bottles into the field, and the second of Mr. Cooper, in the eleventh round, poured a considerable quantity down Mr. Cooper's throat and he recovered his wind and strength.—The young men continued fighting from four till nearly six o'clock and when they were in a state of exhaustion, they were constantly plied between the rounds with neat brandy. It is stated that Mr. Cooper drank during the fight considerably above half a pint of the spirit. They fought about sixty rounds, and at the end of the last round, Mr. Cooper fell very heavily upon his head and never spoke afterwards. He was carried off the ground to his lodgings by his brothers, who were present at the fight. He was put to bed; but no medical assistance was called for till four hours afterwards, a short time before he expired. As soon as his death was known, expresses were sent off to the Earl of Shaftesbury, and other relations of the deceased, to inform them of the lamentable catastrophe. On Tuesday morning the secretary of the noble Earl arrived at Eton, and took away to the deceased's two brothers. About one o'clock on Tuesday, Colonel Wood arrived at Eton, and evinced much sorrow at the event which had taken place. The Coroner who received intelligence of the death of the deceased by an express messenger, arrived at the Christopher Inn, at Eton, at two o'clock on Tuesday, and a jury which had been previously summoned) assembled to hold an inquest.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

The project of a most attrocious law has been introduced into the French Chamber by the Minister of Justice—a project which, under the pretence of punishing sacrilege, denounces the punishment of death against every person who shall profane the sacred utensils (vessels used in the celebration of the mass); and in case the profanation should extend to the consecrated wafer, the punishment is to be the same as that inflicted for parricide, in which the culprit has his right hand struck off before he is put to death. These bloody and intolerant enactments are worthy of the darkest ages, and will reflect infinite disgrace on the reign of Charles X. This law is probably intended to furnish a pretext for harassing the protestants, for which indeed it is admirably fitted, as the protestants may not always be able to pay sufficient respect to observances which they despise as superstitious, and abhor idolatrous.

INDIA.

On a perusal of the Calcutta papers, we find that on the first seven days of December last, there was a most bloody battle fought at Rangoon.

It appears from the official account of this battle, that the whole military force of the Burman Empire was engaged, amounting to about 60,000 men, well armed, with a numerous artillery, &c. Their Chiefs seemed confident of success, and boasted of soon having it in their power to lead the British army captives in chains to grace the triumph of the Golden Monarch The result proved the reverse, for the British gained a signal victory, after an action of seven successive days, by land and water. The natives were dispersed, leaving most of their artillery, stores, &c, behind them in their flight. From the nature of the marshy ground and thick brush, it was not possible to ascertain the loss of the natives, but at least 5000 are supposed to have been killed. Of 300 pieces ordnance of their army, 240 were left in possession of the British The loss of the British was inconsiderable, compared to the importance of the service performed. Among the killed were, Major Walker, of the infantry, Capt and Lieut. O'Shea, of do. and 11 officers wounded.

At the last accounts, the whole Burmese Coast from Rangoon to the eastward, was subject to the British arms.

A treaty of friendship and alliance had been concluded between the British Government in India, and Sultan Mahomed Shah of Johore and Datto Tomongong, and Chief of Singapore and its dependencies, which event was announced by 19 guns from Fort William on the 23d of December last.

LATE FROM INDIA.

Capt. Whitney, of the Beverly, brought Calcutta papers to the 1st of January, which we have seen for a moment. Several spirited engagements had taken place between the British forces and the Burmese, which terminated with great loss to the latter, and not without some considerable loss to the former. Kiaoor surrendered on the 6th December, and the whole coast from Rangoon to the eastward was subjected to the British—but the natives were again assembled in large bodies for the purpose of forcing them from their territory. Gen. Sir Alexander Campbell, Commander in Chief of the Presidency of Madras, died on the 11th of December.—N. Y. Spectator.

Private accounts received in this City, represent the mutiny in the East India Company's native forces to have been of the most serious description, and to have been for some time organizing before it actually broke out, yet not without attracting the attention of the officers; six regiments of native infantry were stationed at Barrackpore, and there being no European troops on the spot, apprehensions were entertained that the remaining corps should join their refractory brethren. Lord Amherst despatched an express to Sir Edward Paget, who hastened down with the 1st Royals and 47th

British regiments, and a detachment of Artillery, which were joined by the Governor General's body guard The mutineers were then summoned to surrender and return to their duty, but obstinately refused to comply extreme measures were resorted to, and besides the number which fell by the artillary and the bayonet, nearly 150, as many more were drowned in endeavouring to swim the Ganges. The discontent originated from the allowance of double batta, on taking the field, being refused.

The Company has asked for a further addition to the King's Troops, and particularly of Artillery, a branch of the Regular Army which has not for many years been employed in that portion of the British Dominions. The war between the Company and the Burmese was waging with great spirit when the last accounts left India.—Mercury.

SIMON BOLIVAR,

The celebrated defender of South American Independence, was born at Carracas, in 1785, and is of a noble, and extremely rich family. He was sent at an early period to Spain to be educated, and when he had completed his studies he went to Paris, where he was much noticed for his talent and learning, in all the best societies of the capital. In Paris he was a constant attendant on all public lectures He contracted an intimacy with Humboldt and Boupland, travelled with them for some time, and successively visited England, Italy, Switzerland, and a large part of Germany, to make himself acquainted with their customs and the character of men. Returning to Venezuela he was appointed a Col. in the service of the newly established republic, and was sent to London on an important mission, the expense of which he defrayed himself.—When Bolivar came back, Miranda gave him the command of Puerto Cabello, but the Spanish prisoners having risen and seized the Fort, Bolivar was obliged to evacuate the town, and proceed by sea to Carracas.

After Miranda had capitulated with Monteverde, and resistance seemed to be at an end in Venezuela, Bolivar retired to Curacoa, where he formed a connexion with Brion by which he procured maratime co operation. He then offered his services to the Congress of New Grenada, and they were accepted. Finding that the Venezuelans were disposed once more to throw off the Spanish yoke, he obtained from Congress a body of six hundred men, with which, in 1813, he penetrated across the Andes into Venezuela, and after several sanguinary actions succeeded in wresting from the enemy the whole of that province, except the ports of Leguyra and Porto Cabello, in the latter of which Monteverde defended himself in the most obstinate determination. It was during this campaign that the guerro annerte, or extraordinary war began, in consequence of the Spaniards having put to death some of their prisoners The Spanish dominions would now have been annihilated had not Monteverde contrived to arm the slaves, and thus to spread insurrection over the whole extent of the country.—Boves, Puy, Palmo, and others were at the head of these auxiliaries to the Spaniards. The whole country was ravaged with fire and sword. Bolivar, who had been declared dictator of Venezuela, now marched against these enemies, overthrew them in some encounters, and would probably have destroyed them had he not divided his army and suffered himself to be surprized by Boves, who defeated him in a decisive engagement. The consequence was, disrust and disunion among the republicans, and the complete triumph of the royalists, who showed no mercy to their antagonists. Bolivar again retired to New Grenada, and served two years under the banners of the Congress.

REMARKS CONCERNING THE SAVAGES OF NORTH AMERICA.

The following observations were communicated by a nobleman who is not less distinguished as a patron of literature than for his knowledge of the relative interests of nations, and the circumstances that promote the comforts of domestic life. This paper will afford an excellent specimen of his judgment in selecting persons who are capable of giving a discriminative view of the object they contemplate. Had we notices of all different nations, done with the same perceptive discrimination as those of this writer, or Garani, we might be almost contented with travelling in our elbow chair. The Editor considers himself much obliged by this communication, and would be happy if he could find many such SAVAGES we call them, because their manners differ from ours, which we think the perfection of civility. They think the same of theirs. Perhaps, if we could examine the different manners of different nations with impartiality, we should find no people so rude as to be without any rules of politeness, nor any so polite as not to have some remains of rudeness.

The Indian men, when young, are hunters and warriors; when old, counsellors; for all their government is by counsel of the sages. There is no force, there are no prisons, no officers to compel obedience, or inflict punishment. Hence they generally study oratory, the best speaker having the most influence. The Indian women till the ground, dress the food, nurse and bring up the children, and preserve and hand down to posterity the memory of public transactions These employments of men and women are accounted natural and honourable Having few artificial wants, they have abundance of leasure for improvement by conversation Our laborious manner of life, compared with theirs, they deem slavish and base; and the learning on which we value ourselves, they regard as frivolous and useless. An instance of this occurred at the treaty of Lancaster in Pennsylvania, anno, 1744, between the government of Virginia and the six nations. After the principal business was settled, the commissioners from Virginia acquainted the Indians by a speech, that there was at Williamsburg a college, with a fund for educating Indian youth, and that if the six nations would send down half a dozen of their young lads to that college, the government would take care that they should be well provided for, and instructed in all the learning of the white people. It is one of the Indian rules of politeness not to answer a public proposition the same day that it is made; they think it would be treating it as a slight matter, and that they shew it respect by taking time to consider it, as of a matter that is important. They, therefore, deferred their answer till the day following, when their speaker began by expressing their deep sense of the kindness of the Virginia government in making them that offer "for we know," says he, "that you highly esteem the kind of learning taught in those colleges, and that the maintenance of our young men while with you, would be very expensive to you. We are convinced, therefore, that you mean to do us good by your proposal, and we thank you heartily. But you, who are wise, must know that different nations have different conceptions of things; and you will not therefore, not take it a miss if our ideas of this kind of education happen not to be the same with yours. We have had some experience of it; several of our young people were formerly brought up at the colleges of the northern provinces; they were instructed in all your sciences; but when they came back to us they were bad runners; ignorant of every means of living in the woods; unable to bear either cold or hunger; knew neither how to build a cabin, take a deer, or kill an enemy; spoke our language imperfectly, and were, therefore, neither fit for hunters, warriors, nor counsellors; they were in short, good for nothing We are, however, not the less obliged by your kind offer, though we cannot accept it; and, to show our grateful sense of it, if the gentlemen of Virginia will send us a dozen of their sons, we will take great care of their education, instruct them in all we know, and make men of them."

Having frequent occasions to hold public councils, they have acquired great order and decency in conducting them The old men sit in the foremost ranks, the warriors in the next, and the women and children in the hindmost The business of the women is to take exact notice of what passes, imprint it in their memories, for they have no writing) and communicate it to their children. They are the records of the council, and they preserve the traditions of the stipulations in treaties one hundred years back, which when occasion arises they can recite, and verify by their writings, we always find them exact. He that would speak rises. The rest observe a profound silence. When he has finished and sits down, they leave him five or six minutes to recollect; that if he has omitted any thing he intended to say, or has any thing to add, he may rise again and deliver it. To interrupt another, even in common conversation, is reckoned highly indecent. How different this is from the conduct of a polite British House of Commons, where scarcely a day passes without some confusion, that makes the Speaker hoarse in calling to order; and how different from the mode of conversation in many polite companies of Europe, where, if you do not deliver your sentence with great rapidity, you are cut off in the middle of it by the impatient loquacity of those you converse with, and never suffer to finish it!

The politeness of these savages in conversation is indeed carried to excess, since it does not consist in flattering, but rather in saying truth very plainly. I did not understand what he said; but, perceiving that he looked much at me and at Hanson, I imagined he was angry at seeing me there; so I went out, sat down near the door, and listened to what was said, but all my pipe; waiting till the man should speak to me. I thought too, that the men had promised somethin of beaver; and I suspected it might be the subject of their meeting So, when they came out, I accosted my merchant Well, Hans," says I, "I hope you have agreed to give more than four shillings a pound. "No," says he, "I could not, give so much: I cannot give more than three shillings and six pence" I then spoke to several other dealers; but they all sung the same song, three and six pense, three and six pence. This made it clear to me, that my suspicion was right; and that, whenever they presented of meeting to learn good things, the real purpose was, to consult how to cheat Indians in the price of Beaver. Consider but a little, Conrad, and you must be of my opinion If they meet no where to learn good things, they would certainly have learnt some before this time But they are still ignorant. You know our practice It a white man travelling through our Country enters one of our cabins, we will treat him as I treat you; we dry him if he be wet, we warm him if he be cold, we give him meat and drink, that he may allay his thirst and hunger, and spread soft furs for him to rest and sleep on; we demand nothing in return.* But if you go into a white man's house at Albany, and ask for victuals and drink, they say, "where is your money?" and if I have none they say, get out you Indian dog! You see they have not learnt those little good things that we need no meetings to be instructed in, because our mothers taught them to us when we were children.—And, therefore, it is impossible that their meetings should be for any such purpose as they say, or have any such effect. They are only to contrive the cheating of Indians in the price of Beaver.

* It is remarkable, in all ages and countries, hospitality has been allowed as the virtue of those whom the civilized were pleased to call barbarians. The Greeks celebrated the Scythians for it The Bannens professed it eminently; and it is to this day the reigning virtue of the wild Arabs St Paul, too, in the recital of his voyage and shipwreck on the island of Melita, says, the barbarous people shewed us no little kindness; for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold

THE BENDED BOW.

BY MRS. HEMANS.

It is supposed that War was anciently proclaimed in Britain, by sending messengers in different directions through the land, each bearing a bent bow, and that Peace was in like manner announced by a bow unstrung, and therefore straight.—See Cambrian Antiquities.

There was heard the sound of a coming foe,
There was sent through Britain a bended bow,
And a voice was poured on the free winds far
As the land rose up at the sign of war.

"Heard ye not the battle horn?
—Reaper! leave thy golden corn!
Leave it for the birds of Heaven,
Swords must flash, and shields be riven!
Leave it for the winds to shed—
Arm! ere Britain's turf grow red!"
And the Reaper arm'd, like a freeman's son,
And the bended bow and the voice pass'd on.

"Hunter! leave the mountain chase,
Take the falchion from its place!
Let the Wolf go free to-day,
Leave him for a nobler prey!
Let the deer ungall'd sweep by—
Arm thee! Britain's foes are nigh!"
And the Hunter arm'd ere his chase was done
And the bended bow and the voice pass'd on.

"Chieftain! quit the joyous feast!
Stay not until the song hath ceased,
Though the mead be foaming bright,
Though the fires give ruddy light,
Leave the hearth, and leave the hall—
Arm thee! Britain's foes mast fall"
And the chieftain arm'd, and the horn was blown,
And the bended bow and the voice pass'd on.

"Prince! thy father's deeds are told,
In the bower and in the hold!
Where the goatherd's lay is sung,
Where the minstrel's harp is strung!
—Foes are on thy native sea—
Give our bards a tale of thee!"
And the prince came arm'd, like a leader's son,
And the bended bow and the voice pass'd on.

"Mother! stay thou not thy boy?
He must learn the battle's joy,
Sister! bring the sword and spear,
Give thy brother words of cheer!
Maiden! bid thy lover part,
Britain calls the strong in heart!"
And the bended bow and the voice pass'd on
And the bards made song for a battle won.

Editorial Commentary.

We regret that our narrow limits prevent the admission, in this paper, of the detailed accounts of the late glorious victory obtained by a handful of British Soldiers, over a host of Burmese in India—said to have been 60,000 strong. It is probable that this important event will lead to the speedy restoration of tranquillity in that quarter.

The Revenue of England is in the most flourishing state, and her commerce on the encrease in a prodigious ratio.

The exports of British manufactures in 1822 amounted to 45,787,389—in 1823, to 46,261,511, and in 1824, to 50,758,808!

It will be seen, by another part of our paper, that measures of the most beneficial nature, regarding our Colonies generally,—and of these Provinces in particular, have been brought forward by Mr. Huskisson. The admission of Canadian Wheat at all times into British Ports, on payment of a small duty, must prove of the greatest advantage to this country, as the best of all stimulants to our farmers.

At our latest dates the King, the Duke of Wellington, Marquis Wellesley, and Mr. Canning were all confined by sickness.

The Catholic Association has been formally and peaceably dissolved, in Dublin, after a public meeting (numerously attended, and convened for the purpose,) was held; and, at which, an admirably well-written and sensible letter from the famous Counsellor O'Connell, in recommendation of strict obedience to the laws of the land, was read.

It seems certain that the Earl of Dalhousie will return to the Government of Lower Canada in the course of the present summer.

Sir Ralph Noel, father-in-law of the late Lord Byron, is dead—and, having no male issue, is succeeded in his titles by his nephew, now Sir John Milbank Bart.

In a debate in the British House of Commons, on the subject of the Canadian Land Company, Mr. Wilmot Horton said, that one of the conditions of the compact was, that the Company were to pay the sum of £20,000 annually for 15 years, to be applied by his Majesty's Government to the Civil expenses of this Colony. Mr Hume asserted, that out of 39,000 Emigrants to U. C. only 100 families had been able to establish themselves!—and that for the last fourteen years, the colonial department had been the most inefficient department of Government. This gentleman was very severe on Lord Bathurst, and said:

"If he had a Reformed House of Commons he would not hesitate a moment to impeach Lord Bathurst for neglect of duty, and to move an Address to His Majesty for his removal. The misconduct of that Noble Lord was not confined to Canada. It extended itself to the Ionian Islands, to the Cape of Good Hope, &c. He had often declared the necessity of an inquiry into the system pursued in the whole of our colonial possessions. When he looked back at what had been long going on in many of our colonies; when he considered the conduct of some of their Governors; when he saw what was at present going on in the Cape of Good Hope; when he recollected how many of his Majesty's subjects had been transferred by the direction of Lord Bathurst from the Cape to Botany Bay; when he contemplated the mass of tyranny which had so long been exercised, he really felt ashamed of himself for having so long sat quietly without raising his voice against the continuance of such things. The imperious necessity of creating some new and important check on the Government of our distant Colonies was constantly becoming more and more apparent; and he repeated his persuasion, that he should confer a gr at benefit on his Majesty's Ministers and on the country, if he could induce the House to address his Majesty to remove Lord Bathurst from the situation which he had so long and so disadvantageously filled.

The following remarks by Mr. Baring, as they are known to accord with the sentiments of His Majesty's present Ministers, will be read with deep interest:—

Mr. Baring pressed upon His Majesty's Government the expediency of considering in good time what must, of necessity, be the future condition of Canada. It was impossible that it could very long continue to be a Colony of Great Britain, for all experience proved that no colony could, for any great extent of time, continue in that relation to the parent country, the productions of which were similar to the productions of the parent country. It would, therefore, be wise to consider the propriety of doing that freely and in time, which would otherwise be accomplished after great bloodshed and expense; and if His Majesty's Government lost sight of this important consideration, they would in his opinion, very much misunderstand the best interests of the Empire. If it was not too bold to meddle with such a question without having any authority from official situation to do so, his own inclination in dealing with that colony would be to call the people together, and ask them whether they were now arrived at that state of maturity which would entitle them to separate from the mother country! Whether having nurtured and brought them up from childhood, we should not now treat them as parents treat their own children, in giving them independence? If, however, it was still the policy adopted by this country to retain them as a dependant colony, it could only be done by acting towards them with the greatest liberality, by not only attaching the hearts of the people but attaching them enthusiastically to us. In that view we should afford them every commercial advantage, and adopt those liberal principles of colonization which were calculated to increase the population to the greatest extent. It was impossible not to feel that ten years would scarcely pass over our heads without bringing things to such a state as might endanger the existence of the colony, if the contrary course was to be pursued.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Mr. Charles Alexander Wood, and Mr. Alexander Wellesley Leith were, on Wednesday, put on their trial at Aylesbury, for manslaughter, the former for having killed the Hon. F. A. Cooper, son of the Earl of Shaftesbury, in a pugilistic contest, and the latter for aiding and abetting in the felony. The Earl of Shaftesbury, however, did not prosecute, no counsel appeared for the prosecution, and no witnesses answered to the summonses. A verdict of Not guilty was, of course, returned, and the prisoners were discharged.

The Canada Club met on Saturday the 19th March, (a highly respectable Meeting at the Freemason's Tavern,) was much enlivened by the presence of the four Indian Chiefs, lately arrived by the way of Liverpool. They were dressed in the full costumes of their nations; they sung French songs and seemed to enjoy the festivity of the evening. Government, we understand, defray all their expenses in this country, and every attention appears to have been paid them.—London Paper.

British Navy.—The British Government is constantly adding to its Navy. The Formidable of 84 guns, was about to be launched at Chatham, and another 84, to be called the Monarch, will be set up in the same place as soon as the former is launched.

Prosperity of the Country.—The prosperity of the country is a general topic of conversation. His Majesty alluded to the gratifying fact with great propriety and truth when he observed, that "there never was a period in the history of this country, when all the great interests of the nation were in so thriving a condition, or when a feeling of content and satisfaction was more widely diffused throughout all classes of the British people." As one confirmation of this, take the following fact: The managers of the Savings Bank in this town have actually invested, in Government securities, upwards of £194,064; and including the Huyton bank, the total amount of deposits is now more than £200,000, this sum has been funded by 67 Liverpool friendly societies and 4,082 depositors. The following were the deposits and payments from the 6th January to the 5th of February, 1825 a period of one month only:—Received from 1,018 depositors, £10,634, which averages about ten guineas each. Paid out to 658 depositors, £5,720, which averages a fraction more than eight guineas each. In the above payments there were 396 persons who received interest only, in small sums, amounting to £880.—Liverpool Courier.

Free Trade to Turkey and Egypt.—It is with considerable pleasure we have to state another important opening for the commerce of this country. His Majesty's Ministers have made an arrangement with the Levant Company to abolish their charter; and, at a general court of the said company, held in London, they have made the following order, namely "The Levant Company's duties are to cease on all goods imported into all ports or places in ships or vessels which have reported or which may report on and after the 1st day of January last. The Levant Company's duties which have been paid on goods now in warehouse under the King's lock, but imported previously to the 1st day of January last, and in the hands of the original importer, shall be repaid to the said importer, application for the same being made within one month after the 18th day of Feb. 1825." This act of liberality on the part of the Levant Company will, we hope, be a lesson to the East India Company to lay open the trade of China to the public, when Liverpool, no doubt, would enjoy a share of that lucrative commerce. The revenue of Customs and Excise at this port for the last year amounted to near four millions of money, and which revenue will, after the 5th of April next, be collected by the Customs on all goods imported.—This change of system will be a great saving of expense to the Crown, and will give despatch and accommodation to trade, as the merchants will only have one set of revenue officers to attend to their business.—ib.

Mrs. Eleanor Franklin.—We feel sincere regret in announcing the death of this lady; the wife of Captain John Franklin, R. N. one of those gallant officers who have distinguished themselves on the Northern Expeditions so honourable to the enterprising spirit of this country. Mrs. Franklin has not less distinguished herself in the province of literature, by works of high poetical and scientific merit. She was one of the daughters of the late eminent and respectable Mr. Porden, the architect. Her poem entitled The Feats, has been justly admired for genius, learning, and the beautiful union of poetry with chemical and geologic knowledge, by which it is characterised, as well as by other works of a similar description, and many effusions of wit and humour. But ease, politeness, and good humour adorned her personal character, and a total exemption from every appearance of literary reputation. She was in the prime of life, and it was impossible for her to have met with a partner more suitable to her habits and disposition than the manly virtues, scientific attainments, and gentlemanly qualities of Capt. Franklin. The separation, which took place on the 14th inst. when the Captain left town on the Northern Expedition, was of so affecting a nature as to threaten the melancholy event which has so unfortunately occurred.—Mrs. Franklin died at her house in Devonshire street, Portland place, deeply lamented by her numerous friends.

The above melancholy intelligence will be a severe blow to the gallant Captain Franklin, and will be lamented by all who knew him, and we are aware of the heart rending circumstances under which his sense of duty so recently compelled him to leave his dying wife.—N. Y. American.

CORNPLANTER AND THE SEASH.

From the Conewango [Warren] Emigrant.

Cornplanter is one of the Chiefs of the Seneca Nation of Indians. He lives on the Allegany river, 16 miles above this place. He is noted for courage, and the active part he took against the Americans in the bloody scenes at Wyoming; he is averse to saying any thing on that subject or even to hearing it spoken of.

He was instigated to the part he took (as he said) by the noted Butler. He is about 90 years of age; retains his power of mind remarkably well. His speeches, though quite untutored, are generally forcible and prevailing. He is decidedly opposed to selling out their lands. The nation is about equally divided on that question: have held several councils on the subject, and he was the means of carrying the vote against it. He is also opposed to have the "black coats" (missionaries) come amongst them—and to schools. The reason of his opposition to the latter, is this. He gave his son Henry a tolerable good English education, which he perverted to the worst of purposes. It made him impudent, arrogant, and roguish. Among a great many acts of villany, of which he has been guilty, there is one which has incensed the mind of his father against him, perhaps more than any other—The old man left a quantity of lumber, at Pittsburgh to be sold at commission. So soon as his son Henry ascertained it was disposed of, he forged an order, went and drew the money, to the amount of several hundred dollars, and spent the whole in gambling and dissipation.

About the first of January last, this chief prophesied and declared it in a council of his nation, that there is to be a Famine. He stated it had been revealed to him by the "Great Spirit;" he told them the winter would be mild; but little snow, and that there would be no freshet in the spring to run lumber. He enjoined it on them to save all their corn, and bring all they wished to sell him. He has actually bought in a quantity of corn and other provisions, in the full belief that a famine will take place. However it may turn out, we hope it may have this effect: To be so far relieved by those who are in the habit of selling their grain at a low price, or exchanging it for whiskey in the fall and winter, and before harvest having it to buy at double so much as they sold it for, as to cause them to save enough at least to last them till next fall.

At any rate, his prophecies turn out thus far to be literally true. Our winter, or rather our winter months, are gone. We have at no time had more than three inches of snow—and that but twice, and lasted but three or four days.

CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION.

PROTEST

To the second reading of the Unlawful Societies Bill, on the Journals of the House of Lords, March 3, 1825.

1. Because the Bill contains new restrictions on the exercise of a right coeval with our earliest institutions; viz.—The right of petitioning, and new prohibitions and restraints on practices connected therewith, usually and legally resorted to by all classes of His Majesty's subjects who seek redress from laws by which they deem themselves aggrieved.

2. Because all proof of the existence and extent of such danger as can alone justify a measure of this nature, was withheld from the House, and petitioners who deemed themselves particulary aimed at, and aggrieved by the provisions of the Bill, were denied the permission of being heard at the bar, or adducing evidence in vindication of their conduct, or in proof of the injury which their interests would sustain in the event of the Bill passing into a law.

3. Because the danger to be guarded against by this Bill, is not distinctly stated in any part thereof; and the danger apprehended does in fact arise from grievances which naturally and necessarily produce discontent in many millions of our Irish fellow subjects.

We are indeed well aware that the privilege of the people, the rights of free discussion, and the spirit and letter of our popular institutions must render (and they are intended to render) the continuance of any extensive grievance, and of the dissatisfaction consequent thereupon, dangerous to the tranquility of the country, and ultimately subversive of the authority of the State. Experience and theory alike forbid us to deny that effect of a free constitution. A sense of justice, and a love of liberty, equally deter us from lamenting it. But we have always been taught to look for the remedy of such disorders, and the preventions of such mischiefs, in the redress of the grievances which justify them, and in the removal of the dissatisfaction from which they flow, not in restraints on ancient privileges, not in inroads on public discussion, nor in violations of the principles of a free Government.

If, therefore, the legal method of seeking redress which has been resorted to by persons laboring under grievous disabilities be fraught with immediate or remote danger to the State, we draw from the circumstance a conclusion long since foretold by great authority—viz. "that the British Constitution and large exclusions cannot subsist together; that the Constitution must destroy them, or they will destroy the Constitution;" and we are thereby confirmed in our determination not to sacrifice any part of the ancient privileges of the people, for the purpose of preserving certain statutes which are comparatively modern, which are themselves restraints on the rights of the people, and on the prerogatives of the Crown; and which, in our conscience, we believe cannot long be maintained without civil bloodshed, or the surrender of all constitutional liberty in a part of the empire united to Great Britain, and thereby entitled to a full participation in the benefits of our free Constitution.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—MARCH 22, 1825.

COLONIAL TRADE.

In the House of Commons last night, Mr Huskisson brought forward his motion on the subject of Colonial Trade in a very clear and comprehensive speech, and we regret our confined limits prevent us doing it that justice in our abstract, which its importance to this commercial community deserves. The Right Hon. Gent. at the outset of his speech, stated that the changes which had taken place in the last few years required a revision of our Colonial system. It had hitherto been altogether restrictive. He then entered into a review of the restrictive system, and noticed the progress of enlightened principles in reference to Ireland, which previous ly to 1780 had been on the footing of a Colony, the proposition of allowing Ireland a free intercourse with the West Indies was violently opposed. Glasgow & Liverpool had petioned against it as a measure which would almost annihilate those towns. He appealed to the result. The United States he thought a still stronger case: no one could say, at least in a time of peace, that the commerce of this country had been injured by that separation. The advantages the Colonies could receive by having a free trade, would attach them more firmly than ever to the British Crown. The result of all he had stated was this—that a system of excussion and monopoly did certainly tend to impede the prosperity, and cramp the energies of the Colonies, and he maintained that the legitimate inference from this position was, that the system which could impede and cramp the prosperity of the Colonies, could not be otherwise than injurious to the parent state. He should propose to place the trade of the Colonies with Europe and the United States on the same footing as our own trade with the Isle of Jersey and Ireland; subject, however, to certain restrictions as to the introduction of fire arms and implements of war, and as to the trade in some of the staple commodities. These privileges would be granted to the United States, and to all the powers of Europe, who were willing to act upon the principal of reciprocity of advantage. With the exception of these restrictions, however, we ought to permit the free intercourse of any friendly state with our Colonies, subject only to the same regulations as their intercourse with the various ports in the empire; such as that the cargo should be the entire property of the subjects of that nation from whence it was brought, and that the ship should be a national vessel. The result would be, that retaining exclusively our coasting trade, we should give every facility for trade consistent with the safety of the Colonies, to the Colonies themselves and to the rest of the world. Of course it would be necessary, in order to effect this purpose, greatly to enlarge the list of articles the Colonies were now permitted to receive from other countries, and it would be necessary to impose moderate protecting duties on the articles of trade. At first these duties might be rated at seven per cent, but some there must be of a higher kind, and these would probably amount to fifteen, twenty, and by possibility in some instances as high as thirty per cent. These duties would be appropriated for the benefit of the Colonies and consequently for the advantage of the mother country. The Colonies must, of course, act in every thing under the direction of England, but the revenue arising from the duties paid on goods imported into the Colonies would not be transferred to the English Treasury, but would form the Colonial Revenue, and be carried to their account, so that they would have no reason to complain that any of their privileges were in the slightest degree invaded. He should also propose, with a view to the benefit of our commerce, that where it was capable of being applied, the Colonies should receive the whole benefit of the warehousing system of England, by receiving in their warehouses goods that were not intended to be sold and consumed in the Colonies, but to be exported thence into other parts of the world. He thought such a system would be extremely beneficial, especially with reference to our commerce with Spanish America. The wants of the people in that part of the world were numerous; and when a demand for a certain article existed, a single cargo from this country was totally insufficient to meet it. This was the general nature of his propositions, its effects, it appeared to him would be different in the sugar colonies of this country, and in the British possessions of North America; in the one it would, he thought, introduce a new description of inhabitants, a new sort of commerce, and even beyond that, a different kind of agriculture. He did not see why Indigo and other valuable articles of commerce as well as sugar, which at present was almost the only productions, might not be grown. The numbers of the whites would be most materially increased, and he had not the smallest doubt that the West Indies would be more materially benefitted by the proposed alteration than Ireland had before been. If this was true of the West Indies, which he considered at present mere sugar plantations, the produce of which was obtained by slaves, to be remitted to this country for the benefit of their masters, who resided here, how much more forcibly did the observations apply to the British Provinces of North America? There the whole population was free—there industry prospered, for the man worked for his own advantage, the people considered the country as their own, and their commerce with other countries was not to support in affluence a few landed proprietors, their masters, but to supply their own wants. It was his intention to propose in the course of the Session, an alteration in the duty on the importation of sugar from the Mauritius, reducing it to the level of the duty on West Indian. It was also his intention, to propose the admission of corn from Canada, on paying a duty of 5s. per quarter, and that in other respects the trade should be perfectly open and free, and suject to no restrictions. The greatest quantity of corn that had hitherto been imported from Canada in any country in the circumstance of many large conch shells, one year, did not exceed 50,000 quarters; this, together with the distance the grain must be carried to market, the port of shipment and the expense of freight which the whole of the calculated at less than 12s. or 14s. per quarter, would not afford much ground for the jealousy of the agricultural interest. The large fees levied and arms, either as armour or for the purpose, of orna- in the West Indies, especially upon Colonial produce ment, as they were perforated with holes, which were from Canada, would be totally abolished. The Re- probably intended to put fastenings into to secure them venue officers, should be paid out of the gross receipts upon the person. I was assured that these shells were of the duties created by the trade of the Colonies, but a species which is only found on the western coast of others from the change of system would be no longer America, and on the shores of the neighbouring islands wanted. There had also been Naval Officers employ- within the Tropics. On seeing the shells, I immed- ed, but now that commerce was rendered free from iately recollected that in the museum at New York, the duty could be discharged by members of the civil there is a dress which belonged to the son of the King establishment. Due compensation would be made of Owhi-hee, which was brought to Europe originally where vested rights were then held upon, and in other by one of Captain Cook's vessels, and that upon the cases allowances should be made to those thrown out same dress there is a conch shell of the same species of employ out of the general Revenues of the Colony. of the Niagara ones, which forms a very conspicuous ornament. Does not an investigation of this subject promise to throw some light on the history of the original population of the American continent and the islands of the Pacific.

Foreign Intelligence.

GREECE.

the following is from the Nuremberg Gazette:

"A letter from Pera, contains the following detail's of the plan of campaign of 1825, which the Turks have formed against the Greeks: "The Porte is to have four armies to bring the Morea and Terra Firma into subjection. The first will be composed of troops which have been long assembling upon the coasts of Asia; they will be embarked on board European transports, which will convey them to the Morea under the escort of the Turk-ish fleet. The capt Pacha will not take the command of this fleet in order to avoid all contention with Ibrahim Pacha, who, by a firman of the Grand Seignior, has been charged with the supreme direction of the expedition against the Greeks. The second army, under the direct conduct of Ibrahim will consist of the troops of Egypt. The third, which will be the most numerous, will be organised at Larissa by Reschid Pacha, and be composed of all the disposable troops in Romelia, Bulgaria, Macedonia and upon the borders of the Danube. A part of the garrison of Constantinople will join this army, the nucleus of which will be formed by the troops of Thessaly, which made the last campaign under the command of Derwish Pacha. The fourth army, which is to act in concert with the third, will consist solely of Albanese troops. To this effect negotiations have been opened with the military chiefs of those troops. The latter army, which will be under the command of the Pacha of Scutari, will march upon Etolia, whilst Reschid Pacha will penetrate into Livadia. After the submission of these provinces and Acarnania, has been brought about, the whole of these troops will be transported to the Morea."

An Account of some Tumuli near the Falls of Niagara.

BY MAJOR A. F. MCLEVEAN, OF THE BRITISH ARMY

About three miles from the Falls of Niagara, near the house of Sir P. Maitland, there is a range of rising ground, commanding an extensive view of Lake Ontario and the surrounding country, which is for the most part to this vicinity covered with wood.

On the most elevated part of this ridge, which is now called Mount Dorchester, two years ago, a large oak tree, measuring at the base five feet in circumference, was blown down, and an opening made in the soil by the roots of the tree being torn from the earth, which exposed to view a quantity of human bones. The person who discovered that the accident had happened, caused an excavation of about ten feet in diameter to to be made, and found a deep stratum of human bones, regularly disposed, and forming a vast number of perfect skeletons. The wrist bones of many of the skeletons had a species of armlets upon them; the head of a tomahawk, several Indian pipes, beads, and other ornaments, were also found interred amongst the skeletons; and the conjecture suggested by the discovery is, that the remains in question are those of some of the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, who had fallen in some sanguinary conflict on the spot, and found their graves upon the field of battle.

The most interesting part of the discovery, however, remains to be mentioned. In the circumstance of many large conch shells, some of them bored so as to be used as a rude kind of musical instrument, having been found disposed under the heads of several skeletons. Several fragments of shells were also found near the upper parts of the bodies, and seem to have been worn upon the shoulders of the principal dead. The large fees levied and arms, either as armour or for the purpose, of ornament, as they were perforated with holes, which were probably intended to put fastenings into to secure them upon the person. I was assured that these shells were of a species which is only found on the western coast of America, and on the shores of the neighbouring islands within the Tropics. On seeing the shells, I immediately recollected that in the museum at New York, there is a dress which belonged to the son of the King of Owhi-hee, which was brought to Europe originally by one of Captain Cook's vessels, and that upon the same dress there is a conch shell of the same species of the Niagara ones, which forms a very conspicuous ornament. Does not an investigation of this subject promise to throw some light on the history of the original population of the American continent and the islands of the Pacific.

The spot where these remains were found, bears every appearance of having been an Indian encampment. The ground on the side of the lake, which is distant about seven miles, seems to have been rendered steep by artificial means; and Mr. Rorbach, who first discovered the bones, says that when the ground is freed from the leaves of trees, which are every where strewed over it in great thickness that holes, resembling the marks of pickets, may be seen surrounding the space of several acres. We should, hence infer, that those warriors who fought with the tomahawk, and who used shells as musical instruments, and as defensive armour, were not ignorant of the art of war so far as the construction of an extensive encampment, defended by works possessing some pretensions to regular fortification, goes.

Where the first excavation was made, there can be little doubt that a tumulous had originally been constructed over the bones; four heaps resembling tumuli have been opened, and found to contain bones and ornaments of the kind which I have described.

The people in the neighbourhood have carried away many of the skulls, particularly the entire ones—I, however, succeeded, with the assistance of Mr. Rorbach, in collecting some of the most perfect of the remains, and took measures to insure their reaching Europe in safety, intending them for a scientific friend, from whose knowledge on such subjects it may be hoped, that interesting results are to be looked for, should he be afforded an opportunity of examining these relics of an ancient and obscure period.

From the side of the hill rises a fountain of the most transparent water, in quantities sufficient to turn the wheel of a mill which is situated at a short distance; this is the invariable attendant of such tumuli, wherever they occur in Britain, Scandinavia, or in Asia; and I could not help regretting that the tumuli of Niagara had not been inspected by some of those literary characters who have exhibited so much learning and brought to light so much interesting and curious knowledge in their treatises upon the barrow and tumuli of Europe, Asia and Africa, as undoubtedly those at Niagara, when taken together with the remains of a similar character which Baron Humboldt describes as existing in Mexico might be the means of throwing light upon a period of the history of the world where records entirely fail us, and which seems buried in the darkness of the most remote antiquity.

List of the articles sent to England by Major Mack intosh.—A skull and three thigh bones; a brass kettle; a sheet of metal; several strings of coloured glass beads; some strings of beads, apparently made of shell-bead bones; the head of a pipe; a conch shell entire; several pieces of the same kind of shell shaped into ornaments.*

[* We examined those articles while in the possession of Mr. Rorbach, and was informed by that gentleman, that many similar articles had been dug up on his farm, and given to gentlemen who had visited the Falls; and that from appearances, he had no doubt large quantities could be found in the same neighbourhood.—New York Com. Adv.]

SIMON BOLIVER.

(Concluded.)

When the Spanish troops under Morillo, reached the South American coast, in 1815, Bolivar threw himself into Carthagena, which he defended a long time, till resistance became hopeless. He then made his way with part of his army, through the besiegers, and retired to St Domingo. Carthagena surrendered to the Spaniards in December 1815, and by June, 1816, Morillo had reduced not only Carraccas, but als New Grenada, the Capital of the latter province having fallen into his hands.

The spirit of resistance, however, was not destroyed. Arismendi drove the Spaniards from the Island of Margarita, and Bolivar arrived there with his forces which he had recruited at Auxcayes, and was soon joined by Brion. After some attempts on the coasts of Carraccas and New Grenada, Bolivar and Brion ascended the Orinoco, and made themselves masters of Angostura, the capital of Spanish Guyana. There Bolivar increased his strength by means of volunteers from Europe, and prepared to commence another struggle with Morillo. In 1817 he ascended the river Apure, and penetrated into Carraccas as far as Calabuza, but after several hard fought battles, he was worsted in a contest near Ortin, and compelled to return to Angostura.

Undismayed by these reverses, Bolivar changed his plan, and resolved to begin by the conquest of New Grenada; an operation which was likely to succeed as the enemy did not expect to be attacked in that quarter. Accordingly, embarking the whole of his forces, he ascended the Orinoco and the Meta by a difficult and dangerous navigation. He thus penetrated into New Grenada, and made himself master of Santa Fe, the capital, in Aug. 1819. This blow was decisive. He was joined by numbers, and had the resources of an extensive country at his command. Morillo in vain endeavoured to stop his progress. The country under his authority was gradually wrested from him by successive defeats and defections, and towards the close of 1820, he concluded an armistic with Bolivar, in order to afford time to negotiate a treaty between the South Americans and the Government of Spain. That armistic still subsists; and it is probable the independence of Venezuela will eventually be acknowledged. Thus after a struggle of eleven years, the valour and perseverance of Bolivar will be crowned with success, and he will indisputably have a claim to the title which was long ago given to him, of "THE LIBERATOR OF HIS COUNTRY."—English Work.

Domestic

From the Canadian Spectator.

Died, in the gaol, of this city, on the 10th inst. SAMUEL B. SHELDON, aged 30 years.—The case of this unfortunate man, and the manner in which he lost his life are highly deserving of comment, as showing to what extent the unrelenting creditor has power over the liberty and life of his poor and unfortunate debtor, and how far it has been experienced in this instance.

Mr Sheldon suffered under close and rigorous confinement for debt, at the suit of Messrs. Bridge and Penn, for three years and three months. After being confined about two years and a half finding his health greatly impaired, he applied to his creditors, showing them by certificate of three attending physicians, that his health was so far impaired as to admit of no remedy in his then present situation, and therefore prayed to be released; but his creditors were inexorable.—Through the humane exertions of Dr. Selby the attending Physician, that Mr. S. might not die in gaol, application was made to the creditors for his removal to the Hospital but a few hours before his death; but on this occasion also, they refused to grant any relief.—Although such treatment is justified by the laws of the country, it is hoped that few such cases as the present are to be found in this enlightened age.—HUMANITAS.

Mr. PETERSON from the Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, with the address of the House for a Map of the St. Lawrence, reported delivering the same and that His Excellency had been pleased to make thereto the following reply.

GENTLEMEN,

All the information which I can procure on the subject of your address shall be communicated to your House with the least possible delay.

Mr Secretary Hillier brought down from His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor several messages with the Report of the Commissioners of Internal Navigation, and having withdrawn the Speaker read the messages as follows.

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor transmits for the information of the House of Assembly a copy of the Report of the Commissioners appointed under the Provincial Statute of the 2 Geo. 4, Chap 2 for the improvement of the Internal Navigation of this Province.

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor thinks proper to acquaint the House of Assembly that the sum of one thousand pounds appropriated by the Provincial Statute 4 Geo. 4 Chap 4 for defraying the expenses of the Board of Claims has been found inadequate to that service.

The Salaries of the Commissioners and the Secretary, and the Contingencies of the Office have been paid up to the 30th June last, amounting to one thousand one hundred pounds nine shillings and six pence.

The Supplies, viz: One hundred pounds nine shillings and six pence, has been in the mean time drawn from the fund provided by the Act of the 56. Geo. 3 Chap. 26. The Salaries and Contingencies to the 31st December last, amounting to two hundred and fifty nine pounds eighteen shillings and eight pence are still unpaid, and the Lieutenant Governor recommends to the House of Assembly, to make such further provison for this service as may be necessary.

Signed, P. M.

P. MAITLAND,

The Lieutenant Governor transmits to the House of Assembly, the Copy of a Supplementary Report from the Commissioners for opening a Canal between Burlington Bay and Lake Ontario.

Signed, P. M.

3rd March, 1825.

(COPY)

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, Major General, Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c. &c. &c.

The Commissioners appointed by Your Excellency, in conformity to the provisions of two several Acts of the Legislature of this Province, for making a Navigable Canal for Vessels, between Burlington Bay and Lake Ontario.

Most Respectfully Report,

That since their last Report, the works at Burlington Bay have proceeded as expeditiously as could be expected from the lateness of the Season, and consequent unsettled state of the weather, notwithstanding which, the Contractors after several unsuccessful attempts, succeeded in placing the centre crib, of the Breakwater in Lake Ontario, and filling the same with stone, but such has been the mildness of the season up to this time, that the accumulation of ice has been too trifling fully to test its solidity; from the very substantial manner in which it was put down, and resting as it does, upon a bed of clay, the Commissioners however, feel little anxiety as to its permeancy, which will be further secured when increased to its proper dimensions.

The mildness of the season has prevented the contractors from availing themselves of the ice from which they expected great facilities in driving the piles necessary to complete the work in Burlington Bay, in its absence they attempted piling between the two Lakes, but such is the resistance from the sand composing the Beach, that little progress has yet been made, and it is feared that this part of the work will be obliged to be postponed until the operation of the dredging machine considerably reduces its depth; in the mean time, every exertion has been made to accumulate large quantities of materials and to prepare them for use so soon as the Season permits.

The Contractors having procured the necessary security; the advance, in our last Report of One Thousand Pounds, has been made, which with the current payments under agreement to them and the Engineer and other expenses, amount to about Two Thousand Two Hundred Pounds, and as the winter is most favourable for laying in provisions and materials a considerable disbursement is anticipated of the funds appropriated to this object.

All which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed,)

JAMES CROOKS,
WM CHISHOLM,
MANUEL OVERFIELD,
ROBERT NELLES,
} Commissioners.

THE celebrated DR PARR, the best classical scholar of the age, and more nearly resembling the illustrious Johnson, both in person and manner, (as well as in acquirements and a knowledge of general literature,) than any other man of the last century—has at length paid the debt of mortality, at Hatton near Warwick, in England.

We have received several communications on the subject of the "Supply-Bill," to which the Legislative Council refused their sanction at the close of the late Session of Parliament, which we cannot, for reasons that must be sufficiently apparent, admit in the columns of this paper. We have duly noted, not without feelings of surprise and pity, and of astonishment and indignation, the strange opinions and remarks made by some of our scribblers on this subject, who would do well to study DR LOLME on the Constitution of England, a little more closely than it appears they have done, before they venture to speak so large y and boldly on what is evidently beyond their grasp of mind. The editor of the Chronicle, having asserted a downright falsehood, has received a very masterly and well-written castigation at the hands of "VERITAS," published in the Brockville Recorder. Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

The Hon. Ward Chipman, a Judge of the Supreme Court, and Speaker of the House of Assembly of the Province of New-Brunswick, is appointed by Earl Bathurst third Arbitrator under the Act for regulating the trade of the Canadas. The object of the arbitration is to settle the amount of duties to be paid by way of drawback to the Upper Province for articles landed at Quebec and consumed in Upper Canada, (Upper Canada, having no seaport on the Atlantic, must necessarily transact its commercial business through the Lower Province) each Province chose one arbiter, and they not having agreed upon the third, the choice has been made by the Crown, under the provisions of the statute. This appointment we conceive to be most judicious, for the individual referred to, enjoys, and most deservedly so, the highest reputation for talents and integrigrity. Judge C. will pass this way on his rout to Canada, and may be shortly expected to arrive in the city.—Albion.

PROGRESS OF CAPTAIN FRANKLIN.

Capt Franklin left York, U C. on his way to Lake Simcoe on the 7th ult. Dr. Richardson, Lieut. Kendall, and Mr. Drummond, had set off a few days previously. Lieut. Back remained at York to bring up the twenty Canadian voyagers, who were hourly expected from Montreal. They arrived on the 9th, and were to follow without delay, as information had been received that the lakes were open This latter circumstance will prevent the short stay Capt. Franklin intended to make to adjust the instruments, &c. at Penetanguishene

It affords us great pleasure to learn that the most marked attentions were paid to the party, on the route to York At Albany, His Excellency the Governor, De Witt Clinton, the Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer, and many other gentlemen vied with each other in their civilities to the adventurous travellers. With the two former distinguished individuals the whole party had the honour of dining the two days they remained in the city. They visited the Senate and the House of Representatives, which were in Session, where seats were provided for them within the bar. On the Sunday, which occurred during their stay Capt Franklin, always attentive to his religious duties, attended divine service with all his officers, and were conveyed to the place of worship in the Governor's carriage, where an impressive discourse was delivered, and the Rev. Dr. Chester offered up a most fervent prayer for the success of the expedition, and the safety of the individuals composing it. Time did not admit of much delay on the journey from Albany to Niagara, but in all places the most kind attention were displayed by various persons, many of whom pressed forward and presented books, and other articles which they supposed might be useful to the party. Capt F. passed one day at Niagara, viewing the Falls and the magnificent scenery appertaining thereto. On seeing the monument erected to the memory of General Brock, it reminded him that he had, on that day, (3d of Apr) twenty-four years ago, been a companion in arms with the late General at Copenhagen, under the immortal Nelson. Colonel Cockburn, and the officers of the Canadian Land Company, and other gentlemen, received Capt. F. with great kindness at York, by whom he was assisted on his way to Lake Simcoe. Capt. F had not received the account of the death of his amiable and accomplished lady when he set out for the upper lakes.

FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

A Metropolitan University.—Mr. Campbell, the poet, has addressed a letter to Mr. Brougham, in which he recommends the establishment of a Metropolitan University—an University in London "for effectively and multifariously teaching, examining, and rewarding with honours in the liberal arts and sciences, the youth of our middling rich people, between the age of 15 or 16 and 20." By the middling rich he means "all between mechanics and the enormously rich." His plan is as follows:—

"To build and endow a London University would cost, I imagin, £100,000. It might contain thirty professors or more, the most of whom would maintain themselves by small fees from the students, though a few professorships would require salaries. Two thousand families subscribing £50 a piece would raise that sum. A youth could surely travel 2 miles daily to his studies. Place the University centrically, and you would thus give it a surrounding circle of London pop ulation four miles in breadth, and twelve in circumference. How many families in that space would patronise the scheme, remains to be tried; but deducting largely for those who have no sons for University sittes, and still a vast number would be found willing to postpone sending their boys to business or professions for the sake of some years of good education.

"In the mass of families whose incomes vary from some hundreds to two or three thousand a year, what a serious cost is education. Cambridge and Oxford are, of course, out of the question with one half of them. But say a man has £1000 a year, he can hardly send one son to an English University. To send three sons would cost him at least £750. If there were a London University, the board of each son in his own house might be £15, his clothing and pocket money £25, and his education at a London University, on a plan perfectly practicable, would not need to exceed by any computation £25 or 30 At Oxford University education given to three sons would thus leave a man of £1000 a year £250 for himself and his wife and daughters to subsist upon The London scheme would leave him £700.

"Instead, therefore, of discussing what Oxford and Cambridge are or ought to be, the people of London should settle what sort of University they wish for, and it will be their own fault if it does not exist It may be said that £50 is a serious sum for a middling circumstanced family to give away as the price of a mere privilege. It is for men of influence to inspire the people with different sentiments. What incomparably larger sacrifices are made every day to objects less important than intellectual character. I beg pardon if I make an error in so grave a matter of history as the price of periwigs of our forefathers; but I think I have heard that a full bottomed British periwig once cost £50 Revive the fashion, and £100,000 would instantly leap from the pockets of middling gentility in order to save cost, by investing "the human head divine" in these absurdities. But fashion has now happily altered to decorating the inside more than the outside of the skull.

"People have talked to me of the difficulty of establishing discipline in an University. I declare I think I can speak of Glasgow College impartially, though I was its alumnus; for I know that it had many imperfections. But I was there seven years, and an insubordinate student, or a tyrannical professor, I never saw. In some few classes, slight fines prevented lateness, absence, and bad behaviour; in others, decorum and silence seemed to come of their own accord; and the Irish were among the most orderly students. I care not what the powers of the professors of that University may be according to old statues, I argue upon the power which they really needed to exercise, and that was nothing more than to summon an offending student before the Senitus Academicus, to mulate him in a very trifling fine, or to rebuke him; if that failed, he might be expelled—but expulsion was punishment unknown in my recollection. Who would fear giving the professors of any University a power, a little liable to abuse? At the venerable Professors Jardine's class in Glasgow, I remember the students were made to revise the themes of each other; this is but one of the many methods which could be adopted to facilitate education on a great scale. I am convinced that, by a skilful method, 500 students could be taught in one class as easily as 50. If London will listen to this project, the subscribers could elect an organizing committee and that committee might have all the experience and wisdom of the country to suggest what it would be best to avoid, and what to initiate, in existing Universities.—If my opinion were thought worth hearing, I should support the system of teachers lecturing an hour every day, for nine months in the year, and examining the students for two hours daily. I should advise, also, an annual distribution of prizes; and such an august spectacle in a London University would light up a generous emulation in every youthful breast and stamp an improved character on the rising generation.

"I trust you will gain over men of every variety of opinion to this design. It is no matter of party politics, or of church and state disputation. It is a point of union for all the friends of liberal views, and as the Propiet Isaiah says, 'the liberal devise liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand.'"

GEORGE IV. THE LEGITIMATE HEIR OF THE CHEVALIER CHARLES STUART!

It is rather singular that no sovereign of Great Britain has ever been in Scotland who was not in the line of the ancient Scottish monarchs, according to the undoubted assent of all parties; and that no such sovereign could have been here but George the IV. Charles the second was here, who was unquestionably in that line; from his time, to the death of the Cardinal of York (late in the reign of George III.) the royal family was divided. The claims of the exiled branch of it were maintained to the very last, by a party who were called Jacobites, which latterly was not a very large party, but which yet survived in Scotland, and persevered in supporting the right of that family to the throne of Britain. By the death of the Cardinal of York, the Jacobite party have become completely triumphant; for we are all now Jacobites, thoroughbred Jacobites, in acknowledging George IV. If George III. had been here, or any of his predecessors, back to James II. (VII) it might have been said by the Jacobites, that he was not the legitimate monarch, inasmuch as the elder branch of his family was preserved in the persons of the ejected Stuarts but nothing of that kind can be said of George IV; and Scotland is in the singular situation of making preparation to hail the arrival of a sovereign, who unites in his person all the claims to the throne whether de jure or de facto, which any party has ever set up, and which no sovereign has ever been able to boast since the last royal visit which Scotland received, if we except the short and feverish reign of James II. (VII) though, in fact, he was here when Duke of York. This seems to be one of the feelings that stimulates the people here, at the present time, to make such great exertions —Our King is the heir of the Chevalier, in whose service the Scotch suffered so much, shone so much; and

EAST INDIES.

New-York, April 20.

The papers received by a former arrival mentioned that a mutiny had taken place among some of the native regiments in India particularly the 47th. The regular troops were ordered out, and on the 47th refusing to stack their arms, they were fired on and several mutineers were killed. By the papers of the 22d f March, we find that a Court Martial has been held for the trial of the mutineers. The 47th Regt. has been disgraced, and the Gov. General has directed "that No. 47 be struck out of the Army List." Thirty-five privates of the 62d native infantry, were sentenced to death for seizing the colours of their regiment and joining the 47th when in a state of open mutiny; four were executed, the others sentenced to 14 years labour. Several soldiers for the like offence, belonging to the 24th and 26th regiments were tried and found guilty, some were hanged, and others order ed to severe punishments.

The East India Company are making the most extensive preparations to send out reinforcements to India About seventy vessels, many of the largest dimensions, have been tendered to them to carry out men and stores; and the report is, that 30,000 tons of shipping will be taken up by this Company. The average tenders are £15 per ton out and home, and for the voyage out about the half.

A TALE OF WOE.

No where else on earth, perhaps, has human misery, by human means, been rendered so lasting so complete, or so remediless, as within the dire wall, of that Mansion of cruelty, the Bastile of France, which was at once the means and the cloak of the accursed tyranny of the Capet race. A person who had been guilty of the enormous crime of uttering some unguarded expressions of disrespect against Louis XV or against his ministress, was immured in this prison by order of that weak Monarch. Upon the accession of his late unfortunate successor, the ministers there in office, moved by humanity, began their administration with an act of clemency and justice; they inspected the registers of the Bastile, and set many of the prisoners at liberty. Among the number was an old man, who had groaned in confinement for a period of forty-seven years, between four thick and cold stone walls. Hardened by adversity, which strengthens both the mind and constitution, when men are not overpowered by it, he had resisted the horrors of his long imprisonment with an invincible and manly spirit. His locks, white, thin, and scattered, had almost acquired the rigidity of iron; whilst his body, enfranchised for so long a time by a coffin of stone, had borrowed from it a firm and compact habit. The narrow door of his tomb turned upon its grating hinges, opened not as usual, by halves; and an unknown voice announced his liberty, and bade him depart. Believing this to be a dream, he hesitated; but at length rose up and walked forth with trembling steps, amazed at the immense expanse, almost without bounds. He stopped from time to time and gazed around like a bewildered traveller; his vision was with difficulty reconciled to the clear light of day; he contemplated the heavens as a new object; his eyes remained fixed, and he could not even weep.

Stupified with the newly acquired power of changing his position, his limbs, like his tongue, in spite of his efforts, refused to perform the office; at length he got through the formidable gate which had so long before closed upon him. When he felt the motion of the carriage designed to convey him to his former habitation, he screamed out, and uttered some inarticulate sounds; and as he could not bear this new movement, he was obliged to descend. Supported by a benevolent arm, he sought out the street where he had formerly resided; he found it, but no trace of his House remained; one of the public edifices occupied the spot where it stood.

He now saw nothing that brought to his recollection, either that particular quarter, the city itself, or the objects with which he had formerly been acquainted. The houses of his nearest neighbours, which were fresh in his memory, had assumed a new appearance. In vain were his looks directed to all the objects around him; he could discover nothing of which he had the slightest remembrance. Terrified, he stopped and fetched a deep sigh

To him, what did it import that the city was peopled with living creatures? none of them were alive to him; he was unknown to the world, and he knew nobody; and whilst he wept, he regretted his dungeon.

At the name of the Bastile, which he often pronounced, and even claimed as an asylum, and the sight of his clothes that marked a former age, the crowd gathered round him; curiosity blended with pity, excited their attention. The mob asked him many questions, but had no remembrance of the circumstances he recapitulated.

At length accident brought to his way an ancient domestic, now a superannuated porter, who, confined to his lodge for fifteen years, had hardly sufficient strength to open the gate; he did not even know the master he had served; but informed him that grief and misfortune had brought his wife to the grave thirty years before, that his children were gone abroad to distant climes, and that all his relations and friends were now reexamined. This recital was made with the indifference which people discover for events long passed, and almost forgotten. The miserable man groaned, and groaned alone. The crowd around offering only unknown faces to his view, made him feel the excess of his calamities even more than he would have done in the dreadful solitude that he lately quitted.

Overcome with sorrow, he presented himself before the minister to whose humanity he owed the liberty that was now a burden to him. Bowing down, he said "Restore me again to that prison from which you have taken me: I cannot survive the loss of my nearest relations; of my friends; and, in one word, of a whole generation. Is it possible in the same moment to be informed of this universal destruction, and not to wish for death? This general mortality, which to the rest of mankind comes slowly and by degrees, has to me been its antaneous, the operation of a moment. Whilst secluded from society, I lived with myself only; but here I can neither live with myself nor with the new race, to whom my anguish and despair appear only as a dream. There is nothing terrible in dying, but it is terrible indeed to be the last."

The minister was melted; he caused the old domestic to attend this unfortunate person, as he only could talk to him of his family. This discourse was the single consolation that he received; for he shunned all intercourse with a new race, born since he had been exiled from the world; and he passed his time in the midst of [illegible] as though he had done whilst confined in a dungeon for almost half a century. But the mortification of seeing no person who could say to him, "We were for merly known to one another," soon put an end to his existence.

TOM MOOR OF FLEET STREET.

You must all have heard of Tom Moor, the linen draper, in Fleet street. His father when he died left him an affluent fortune, and a shop of excellent trade.

As he was standing at the door one day a countryman came up to him with a nest of jackdaws, and accosting him, says, 'Measter,' wool he buy a nest of daws?—' No; I don't want any'—' Measter,' replied the man, 'I'll sell them all cheap; you shall have the whole nest for nothpence—' I don't want, em,' answered Tom Moor, 'so go about your business.

As the man was walking away, one of the daws pops up his head, and cries, 'Mawk, mawk.'—Damn it,' says Tom Moor,' the birds know my name, Hallou, countryman, what will you take for that bird?'—' Why you shall have him for three pence,' Tom Moor bought him, had a cage made, and hung him up in the shop.

The jackdaw had too much notice of the bird, and would frequently tap at the bottom of the cage, and say, ' Who are you? who are you? and immediately reply, ' Tom Moor of Fleet street.'

In a short time the jackdaw learnt these words; and if he wanted victuals or water, would strike his bill a gainst the cage, turn up the white of his eye, cock his head, and cry, ' Who are you? who are you? Tom Moor of Fleet street, Tom Moor of Fleet street.

Tom Moor was fond of gaming, and often lost large sums of money; finding his business neglected in his absence, he had a small hazard table set up in one corner of his dining room, and invited a party of his friends to play at it.

The jackdaw had by this time become familiar; his cage was let open, and he hopped into every part of the house, sometimes he got into the dining room, where the gentlemen were at play; one of them being a constant winner, the other would say, ' Damn it now he nicks 'em;' the bird learnt these words also and adding them to the former, would call, ' Who are you? who are you? Tom Moor of Fleet street, Tom Moor of Fleet street; Damn it how he nicks 'em.'

Tom Moor, from repeated losses and neglect of business, failed in trade, and became a prisoner in the Fleet; he took his bird with him, and lived on the master's side, supported by his friends in a decent manner. They would sometimes ask, What brought you here? when he used to lift up his hands, and answer, ' Bad company, by G—d.' The bird learnt this likewise and at the end of the former words would say, ' What brought you here?' and to imitate his master, lift up his pinion and cry, ' Bad company, by G—d.'

Some of Tom Moor's friends died, others went a broad, and by degrees he was totally deserted, and removed to the common side of the prison; where the gaol distemper had broken out; he caught it, and in the last stage of life lying on a straw bed, the poor bird, who had been two days without food or water came to his feet, and striking his bill on the floor, called out, ' Who are you? who are you? Tom Moor of Fleet street, Tom Moor of Fleet street. Damn it how he nicks 'em, damn it how he nicks 'em What brought you here? what brought you here? Bad company, by G—d, bad company, by G—d.'

Tom Moor, who had attended to the bird, was struck with his words, and reflecting on himself, cried out, 'Good God! to what a situation am I reduced? My father, when he died, left me a good fortune and an established trade; I have spent my fortune, ruined my business, and am now dying in a loathsome gaol, and to complete all, keeping that poor thing confined without support: I'll endeavour to do one piece of justice before I die, by setting him at liberty.

He made a shift to crawl from his straw bed, opened the casement, and out flew the bird. A flight of Jackdaw's from the Temple, was going over the gaol, and Tom Moor's bird mixed among them. The gardeners were then laying the pots of the Temple gardens, and as often as they placed them in the day, the Jackdaws pulled them up by night. These got a gun, and attempted to shoot some of them; but being cunning birds th y always placed one as a watch in the stump of a willow tree; who, as soon as the gun was levelled, cried 'Mawk, mawk,' and away they all flew, so that the men could never shoot one of them.

The gardeners were advised to get a net, and the first night it was spread, they caught fifteen? Tom Moor's bird was amongst them. One of the men took the net into the garret of an uninhabited house, fastens the door and windows, and turns the birds loose.—' Now,' says he, ' you black rascals, I'll be revenged on you. Taking hold of the first at hand, he twisted his neck, and throwing him down cries, ' There goes one. Tom Moor's bird, who had hopped upon a beam in one corner of the room unobserved, as the man laid hold of the second calls out, ' Damn it how he nicks 'em.' The man alarmed cries, ' Sure, I heard a voice! but the house is uninhabited, and the door fast: it could not be imagination. On laying hold of the third, and twisting his neck, Tom Moor's bird again says, ' Damn it how he nicks 'em.' The man dropped the bird in his hand, and turning to where the voice came from, seeing the other with his mouth open, calls out, ' Who are you?' to which the bird answered, ' Tom Moor of Fleet street, Tom Moor of Fleet street' ' The devil you are; and what brought you here?—Bad company by G—, Bad company, by G—.' The fellow frightened almost out of his wits, opened the door, and ran down stairs out of the house followed by all the birds, who, by this means saved their lives, and gained their liberty.

THE SULIOTE MOTHER.

(From the New Monthly Magazine, just published.)

Various writers on modern Greece have related the fate of those Suliote Women who threw themselves, with their infants, from the precipices of their mountainous territory, on the conquest and approach of Ali Pacha. One of those narrators adds, that a wild song was chanted by the mothers before committing the act of desperation.

Amidst the dark blue sky,
A bitter smile was on her cheek,
And a dark flash in her eye.

" Dost thou see them, boy?—through the dusky pines,
Dost thou see where the foeman's armour shines?
Hast thou caught the gleam of the conqueror's crest?
My babe! that I cradled on my breast!
Wouldst thou spring from thy mother's arms with joy?
That sight hath cost the a father, boy!"

For in the rocky strait beneath
Lay Suliote sire and son;
They had heap'd high the piles of death,
Before the pass was won.

" They have crost the torrent and on they come!
Woe for the mountain-hearth and home!
There, where the hunter laid by his spear,
There, where the lyre hath been sweet to hear,
There, where I sang thee, fair babe! to sleep,
Nought but the blood stain our trace shall keep!"

And now the horn's loud blast was heard,
And now the cymbal's clang,
Till e'en the upper air was stirr'd
As cliffs and hollows rang.

" Hark! they bring music my joyous child!
What saith the trumpet to Suli's wild?
Doth it light thine eyes with so quick a fire,
As if a glimpse of thine armed sire?
—Still!—be thou still!—there are brave men low—
Thou wouldst not smile couldst thou see him now!"

But nearer came the clash of steel,
And louder swell'd the horn,
And farther yet the tambour's peal
Through the dark pass was borne.

" Hear'st thou the sounds of their savage mirth,
Boy, thou wert free when I gave thee birth!
Free, and how cherish'd! my warrior's son!
He, too, hath bless'd thee, as I have done,
Ay, and unchain'd must his loved ones be—
Freedom young Suliote, for me and thee!"

And from the arrowy peak she sprung,
And fast the fair child bore;
A veil upon the wind was flung,
A cry—and all was o'er!

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

A considerable number of vessels, are stated to be at hand. It is we believe, without precedent that so great a number were in port at the same time of the year.

The vessels which arriv... esterday fell in with a considerable extent of heavy fl... ice, and a number of ice berge on the banks of N. foundland. There was no ice in the gulf except at Cape North; but it is probable that vessels arriving there later than they did would meet with ice. The Wm. Bensley, only saw a brig in the ice, and met nothing worth notice on her passage. Both vessels might have been up two days sooner had it been known that the ice opposite this port had gone off.

We understand that intelligence is received from which it is conjectured that the Saguenay, of this port, has been lost on the United States coast.

The Emma, Reed, dismasted last fall at Hare-island, which had wintered at Kamouraska, is nearly ready for sea and will sail about the 1st inst.

The following vessels are to sail from Liverpool for Quebec early in April viz: Urania, Hibernia, Carricks, Rapid, Indian, New John, Benson, Charlotte, and Henry Cerf.

The Symmetry, Crum, was to leave Bristol, for Quebec 24th March, and the General Wolfe, Stanworth, Ontario, Wells, Chilton, Galley, and Centurian, Bankier, on the 28th do.

The London, Chapman, from London, was spoken by the Procris off the Seven Islands last Tuesday.

Which was carried.

Mr. ATTY. GENERAL moved, that so much of the order of the day as related to the second reading of the Welland Canal Bill, should be discharged, and that the said Bill should be referred to a Select Committee with power to send for persons and papers, and that the Committee should consist of Messrs. In amendment Mr. HAMILTON moved, that the name of McLean be struck out, and Messrs. Matthews and Beardsly be inserted.

Which was carried.

The Original Question as amended was then put and carried.

On motion of Mr NORRIS it was resolved, that the number of Members who had not served on a Select Committee for the trial of a Contested Election, during the present Session, was insufficient to fulfil the purposes of the Law.

The Minutes were read.

Leave was granted to bring up the Petitions of William Sowden—John Covert and others—and of the Inhabitants of Lancaster and Charlottenburgh, in the Eastern District.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Petition of the Inhabitants of Willoughby and Bertie, praying for aid to build bridges &c—the Petition of Trueman Raymond, praying for allowance of per centage as Deputy Collector—the Petition of the Inhabitants of the Niagara District, praying for the equal distribution of the profits arising from Clergy Reserves—and the Petition of Capt Thomas Marrigold, praying to be put on the pension list, were read

Mr. ATTY. GENERAL, from the Committee, to whom was referred the Petition of the Magistrates of the Home District, reported a bill, which was received and read the first time, and ordered for a second reading on the following Friday.

Agreeably to notice, Mr VANKOUGHNETT moved, that it might be resolved, that an humble Address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor requesting His Excellency would be pleased to acquaint this House if he has received any communication from His Majesty's Government upon the subject of the Bill entitled, "An Act to repeal the Laws now in force granting Poundage to the Receiver General, and to provide a Salary for that Officer in lieu of such Poundage," also, that His Excellency would be pleased to direct the proper Officer to lay before this House a statement of the Poundage that the Receiver General has received upon all monies passing through his hands for the four last years, and that Messrs. Morris, and Lefferty should be a Committee to draft the same Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, 9th March, 1825.

Leave was granted to bring up the Petition of a number of the Inhabitants of the District of Newcastle

Mr. MATTHEWS from the Committee to which was referred the Petition of Wm Lyon McKenzie, complaining of certain abuses existing in the Post-Office Department within this Province,—submitted a Report which was received and read as follows

Your Committee to which was referred certain abuses said to exist in the Post Office Department of this Province, begs leave to report.

That it is in evidence before it that great abuses do exist in the Post-Office Department which ought to be remedied.

That it is the opinion of your Committee that the Post Office Department of this Province ought to be under the supervison and control of the Parliament thereof.

That Deputy Postmasters not being at present under the control of the Parliament of this Province have, in some instances, appeared to be very regardless of their duties, and inattentive to complaints made to any of them, from a knowledge of the difficulties that necessarily must exist in bringin them to justice.

That great abuses exist in contracting for and forwarding the Mails, the Bags being often filled with goods of various denominations, totally unconnected with the Post-Office Departments, to the great injury of the contractor, as well as to the Post-Office Revenue, and that the representations made to that subject to the Deputy Post-Master General do not appear to have been attended with any good effects

That complaints have been made to the Deputy Post Master General, of letters and papers mis-sent, and opened, and inspected, and of other irregularities, which have not received apparently the necessary attention.

That Post Offices are much wanted in some very populous parts of this Province, and that the application made to the Dep'y. Post Master General on that head do not appear to have had proper attention paid to them.

That it is in evidence before your Committee that one penny New York Currency is charged for the conveyance of eve y newspaper across the Niagara River at Queenston, as well going to, as coming from the United States, which is considered by your Committee as a very heavy and improper charge on the public.

That it is the opinion of your Committee that to compel editors of newspapers to pay in advance the postage of their papers to their sub-scribers is a great injury to them, as they are paying for a service not always performed, and are in many cases never repaid. Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the postage should be charged and collected on the postage or letters now is, from those persons who receive them.

That it is the opinion of your Committee that all communications by Post to and from the Members of Parliament of this Province, (while in session) and not exceeding in weight, ounces, should also be free from postage whatever

That if any surplus Revenue is derived from the Post Office in this Province, it is desirable that the proceeds should be expended on the public Roads, Bridges, and many of which are now in a deplorable state, and on a review of the whole, and on the abuses alledged to exist, and of the difficulties, under the present system of correcting them, it is the opinion of your Committee, that it would be attended with manifest advantage to the community to take the entire management of the Post Office Department in this Province under the immediate control of its Legislature, even though some trifling temporary expense should thereby be incurred, but which is not anticipated, and which your Committee confidently anticipates, could not, under good regulations be either heavy or of long continuance.

Your Committee therefore recommends to your Honourable House that the steps necessary for the accomplishment of those objects should be adopted

All which is humbly submitted.

J. MATTHEWS,
Chairman

RESOLVED.—That the House having been informed, since the adjournment on Thursday last, that a deputation from the House of Assembly had been refused admittance, it be no time in expressing their deep regret that so unpleasant an event should have occurred through the misapprehension of their respective rights and so contrary to the instructions of this House, which are to preserve the utmost courtesy in its intercourse with the House of Assembly.

Legislative Council Chamber, }
12th March, 1825 }

RESOLVED.—That on Friday the 4th inst a Message was sent from this House by its Messenger, the Master in Chancery, to the House of Assembly, in the usual manner.

RESOLVED.—That the said Messenger informed the House, that owing to some alteration in the mode of receiving Messages from the Legislative Council adopted by the House of Assembly, our Messenger had declined conforming thereto, and had, with great propriety, returned without delivering the communication with which he was intrusted, to receive the commands of this House

RESOLVED.—That no intimation had been made to this House that any alteration had been adopted in the usual form of receiving Messages from the Legislative Council, by the House of Assembly

RESOLVED.—That to adopt and act upon an alteration on the established mode of communication before such alteration was communicated to this House, is a departure on the part of the House of Assembly from that courteous intercourse so happily established between the two branches of the Legislature, and which it has never ceased to be the earnest wish of this House to maintain.

RESOLVED.—That the reception of the Messenger of this House by the Speaker of the House of Assembly, on Friday the 4th inst. affects the long establ hed privileges of this House

RESOLVED.—That this House deeply regrets the occurrence of an event so entirely unexpected, and which renders it expedient to adopt such measures as shall in its wisdom, best comport with its dignity in preserving its long established privileges unimpaired.

RESOLVED.—That the mode of communication ever since the commencement of the constitution, now more than forty years ago, having been refused by the House of Assembly, without any previous intimation of its intention to this House, the Legislative Council may not so far forget what is due to the place which it occupies in the constitution as to expose itself again, after transmitting the above Resolutions to the House of Assembly to the discourteousness it has experienced.

[Truly extracted from the Minutes of the 12th March, 1825.]
Signed, JOHN POWELL, C. L. C.

On motion of Mr. ROLPH, it was ordered that the House should on the following Monday, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole, to take into consideration the Messages of the Honourable the Legislative Council, and that the same should be first on the order of the day.

To the Honourable the House of Assembly.

The Select Committee appointed to try the matters contained in the Petition of Alexander McMartin, Esq complaining of the undue Election and return of Duncan Cameron Esq Sitting Member for the County of Glengary, have come to the following final determination to wit.

RESOLVED.—That it is the opinion of this Committee that the conduct of the Returning Officer, at the late Election for the County of Glengary, in receiving votes upon the Poll, and subsequently ordering them to be struck off was illegal and improper

RESOLVED.—That the Returning Officer went into a Scrutiny without a formal demand from either of the Candidates at the close of the Poll

RESOLVED.—That in the opinion of this Committee, the Returning Officer, at the Scrutiny, improperly and illegally directed votes to be struck off upon oath illegally tendered by witnesses swearing, "that the voters had no votes in the County of Glengary

RESOLVED.—That the Scrutiny not having been completed, it is the opinion of this Committee that the Sitting Member, Duncan Cameron, Esq was improperly Returned

RESOLVED.—That from all these irregularities the Committee think it doubtful, whether the Petitioner or Sitting Member, Duncan Cameron, Esq. ought to have been Returned, and that therefore the Return, in so far as it regards the Return of Duncan Cameron, Esq be declared void, and that a new Writ do issue for the Return of one Member for the County of Glengary

RESOLVED.—That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the irregularities which took place in the conduct of the Poll, and on the Scrutiny, arose only from misconception on the part of the Returning Officer, as to the proper line of his duty, and that there is no ground to impute to him any partial or corrupt motive

RESOLVED.—That the Petition of Alexander McMartin, Esq. complaining of the undue Election and Return of Duncan Cameron, Esq Member for the County of Glengary, is not frivolous or vexatious

RESOLVED.—That the defence of the said Duncan Cameron, Esq. Sitting Member was not frivolous or vexatious.

Editorial Commentary.

AMIDST the showers of abuse lavished upon our House of Assembly by certain prints of both Provinces, MR NEILSON, of the-elder Quebec Gazette, consoles us by saying that the—"good people of Upper Canada should not ascribe any abuse of them or their Representatives, which may appear in certain papers in Lower Canada, as coming from the inhabitants of that Colony, but consider that abuse as a thing of course"!

THERE can be no wonder that such erroneous judgements of places and distances, regarding this country are formed in England when our own writers fall into such blunders as one that may be noticed in the last Mercury, where it is stated that the shores of Rice Lake are "thickly settled" and that the Lake is situated "thirty miles north of Lake Ontario"—whereas it is barely ten miles from one Lake to the other, at their nearest points of contiguity—and there are no more than two families at present resident along the whole southern coast of Rice Lake in a distance of nearly twenty four miles!

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Important Decision.—The opinion of the Bench delivered at Lancaster Assizes on the 14th March last, on the following trial, is so highly important that it cannot be too generally known:

Richard Reed was charged with killing and slaying Ellen Wilkinson, at Chorley, under the following circumstances.—The was a farmer, and amongst his cows he kept one which was notoriously mischievous. He had frequent occasion to know that it was dangerous for any person to go near it; several persons had been hurt by it; and the woman in question at last fell a victim to its fury. She was passing through the field where it happened to be; it followed her out on the road, and mangled her in so dreadful a manner, that she died in a few days after.

Mr Justice BAYLEY told the jury, that if a man kept an animal which he knew to be maliciously inclined and did not take measures to prevent it, either by confinement, or by other means from injuring other persons, he was responsible for the consequences.—Guilty.

Mr. Gourlay and the Chancellor.—Mr. Bennett presented a Petition in the House of Commons from Mr. Gourlay, complaining of the inability of the Lord Chancellor from age and infirmity duly to discharge his duty; and setting forth, in his own, Mr Gourlay's case, that his Lordship had recently given an erroneous judgement, on defective documents.

A Brother of the Thurtells.—Henry Thurtell, a younger brother of these men, was apprehended for stealing a Silver Watch from Mr. Bradbee, landlord of the White-Swan Public house, Chancery lane. The prisoner who was fully six feet in height, had the rough appearance of a sea faring man, and stated that he had been four years and a half absent at sea, he produced written commendations of his conduct from various Officers, and stated that on his return home, he wrote to his father and friends, who replied, that they did not wish to see him or to have any thing to say to him. The prisoner was much affected in making this detail;—he said he found himself pointed at wherever he went, and he did not care where they sent him.—His hearers were so much affected by his manner that many wept with him, the prosecutor declined prosecuting, and Thurtell was dismissed on engaging on going to sea.

APPLES.—It appears from the N. E. Farmer, that there are some apple trees in this State, New York, and New Jersey, which bear apples, of which about one half of each is sweet, and the other half sour. L. Peters, of Westborough, states, that there is one tree in Medfield, and another in Shrewsbury which produce apples without any core. The trees never blossom.

Central Africa.—The Sun, of the evening of the 25th March, announces the return of Major Denham and the mission from the interior of Africa, after a residence of 18 months in central Africa.

The memoirs of a female adventurer calling herself Harriette Wilson, have lately made some noise in London; they contain letters of gallantry pretended to be written from the highest characters in England, to the heroine herself; but as some gentlemen may not desire this notoriety, she abstains from throwing them up for an adequate bribe.—Mr. Edward Ellice has shewn a manly example in resisting a demand from this harpy and has permitted her letter to him to be published in the daily prints.

MEMOIRS OF HARRIETTE WILSON.

(From the Globe and Traveller)

We think Mr. Ellice does but justice to the public in permitting us to publish the following letter, which he received by the post this morning. It displays at once the objects and motives of the authoress and editor of the detestable publication now circulating under the above title. He has desired us to leave blank the names of other parties alluded to, but has left the letter with us for the satisfaction of others who may be better acquainted with the lady's writing than himself:—

"March 8, No. 111, Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, à Paris.

"Sir,—People are buying themselves so fast out of my book "Memoirs of H. Wilson," that I have no time to attend to them should be sorry not to give each a chance if they chuse to be out. You are quizzed most unmercifully. Two noble dukes have lately taken my words and I have never named them. I am sure——would say you might trust me never to publish, or cause to be published, aught about you, if you like to forward £200 directly to me, else it will be too late, as the last volume, in which you shine, will be the property of the Editor, and in his hands. Lord——says he will answer for aught I agree to, so will my husband. Do just as you like—consult only yourself. I get as much by a small book as you will give me for taking you out, or more. I attack no poor men, because they cannot help themselves.

"Adieu—Mind I have no time to write again, as what with writing books, and then altering them for those who frappe * en mort.

"What do you think of my French?

Yours

"Addressed, Edward Ellice, M. P. New-street London."

* We adhere to the lady's grammer, which, like her morality is not closely bound to vulgar rules. The words in italics are underlined in the original

Mining Companies.—The streets and inns of Falmouth at the last dates, were thronged with strangers, engaged for the different mining speculations abroad, and who were about to sail for their various destinations.

Incredible!—Among the numerous companies now forming in England, there is one of a very extraordinary nature. It is to have a capital of four millions, and to be employed in the recovery of cannon balls from the bottom of the sea, in order to reduce the present price of iron.

Mr. Abernethy the north country Pedestrian, completed his match on Friday morning, 18th March through part of England, and Scotland, to Glasgow 412 miles in 6 days, and 5 hours, being one hour within the time.

Preserving Posts.—A Pennsylvanian states that 21 years ago, in planting some gate posts, he bored through them near the ground with a two inch auger, filled the hole with salt and plugged it at both ends. The posts are now as sound as when put down. He has since applied salt to the posts of rail fences, by boring an inch auger hole about four inches above the ground diagonally across the post so as to reach about two inches under ground; filling the whole with salt and closing it with plugs. He has not found any decay among them.

India Rubber.—This elastic substance, which is used for little else in this country, but to take out the marks of black lead pencils, is used for various purposes in South America, being formed into bottles, boots, shoes, torches, &c. Torches made of this substance, burn with great splendor. Any person may satisfy himself of this, by applying a candle to a small piece of rubber. It is said to be superior to leather for shoes, by reason of its elasticity and impenetrability. Some of these shoes have been imported into Philadelphia and a paper of that city advises females to substitute them for the fashionable ladies' shoes now in use.

Indian rubber, called also caouchouc, is obtained by the Indians from a tree that grows in Brazil and other parts of South America. This tree on being wounded, yields a milky juice, which becomes thick on exposure to the air. The juice is spread on clay, moulded into the form of bottles, shoes, birds, &c. in successive layers, until it is sufficiently thick. The exterior is ornamented by various means and then it is suspended over smoke, which hardens and colours it. The clay is afterwards broken up and taken out. Caoutchouc is used for varnish, and it is said that cloth varnished with the fresh juice is rendered perfectly impervious to water. When this substance is exposed to heat it readily melts, and loses its properties. By boiling it for some time, and then pressing two pieces together, they may be united as closely as if they formed one piece. Several trees which grow in the East Indies yield Caoutchouc.—Hamp. Gaz.

Nova Scotia.—Doctor INGLIS was to be consecrated Bishop of Nova Scotia, on the 20th March.

Soap.—A French writer recommends the use of potatoes three fourths boiled as a substitute for soap. We can assure our readers, from long personal experience, that boiled potatoes cleans the hand as thoroughly and easily as common soap; they prevent the chaps in the winter season, and keep the skin soft and healthy. Med. Intel.

Foreign Intelligence.

BUENOS AYRES.

We learn by the arrival of the Liverpool Trader, at Boston, that the British Consul General at Buenos Ayres, (Woodbine Parish, Esq) on the 20th of Jan. officially announced to the General Congress, then in Session, that he was authorised to conclude a commercial treaty, with the United Provinces. His communication was received in the most flattering manner, and Mr. Secretary Garcia, was nominated to treat with Mr. Parish on the subject.

All was quiet at Buenos Ayres, on the 1st of Feby. The rejoicing for Bolivar's great victory had continued up to that time, and the public funds had risen in consequence of that event.

MEXICO.

The news of the British recognition of Mexican Independence was received every where in the Republic with extraordinary exultation. The Secretaries of Foreign Affairs and the Treasury had been appointed to negotiate with the British Commissioners a Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Mexico.

A number of the principal merchants of the city of Mexico, have petitioned the government to reduce the high rates of the customs.

The widow of Iturbide has petitioned the Congress for liberty to reside in this country without forfeiting her pension.

THE ABORIGINEES.

We have known little of what may be denominated the interior character of the Indians—that is, their peculiar customs, habits, superstitions, and traditionary legends. Mr. Schoolcraft has, in his travels, gone far to illuminate this dark part of the red man's history. If this kind of intelligence the following may serve as a sample

"The Chippewas, after the interment of a person preserve a fire for four nights upon the grave. This is founded upon a romantic tale, that a warrior being once as it was believed, mortally wounded, was placed against a tree. When his party returned victorious, this man followed the party, and though he saw them, could not himself be seen, and though he heard them speak, could not himself be heard. He had an interview with his wife in this predicament, and still not being able to convince her that he was present, resolved to return and see if his body was in reality sitting by the side of a tree. He accordingly went, and was obstructed by fire, which he finally passed through, and on his return awaked from a trance in which he had remained for eight days and returned home with his body."

The fire is preserved by the Chippewas upon the grave for four nights from the intelligence imparted by this man, that the spirit had four days journey to make before he could arrive at the land of souls, and that he visited his grave every night to warm himself while on his passage.

INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

The following interesting anecdote is from the journal of a Missionary at Green Bay, Michigan Territory.—"One day, as I was telling the children the import nce of being prepared for death, which was the certain fate of all, while life was very uncertain, a lad asked in a low tone when he should die?—I answered it was unknown to me, but was perfectly known to God, who is the sustainer of our lives and the father of our spirits. I then endeavoured to impress upon them the importance of prayer. The Lord's prayer was then repeated to them, and they were told it was the best of prayers, and was first us d and recommended by the Saviour of the world,—and that it specified all for which it was necessary for us to pray, both for soul and body. They were told that all good people and children prayed to God both morning and evening."

The boy related to his grandfather all he had heard, and continued from day to day his entreaties to have him pray, and observed to him, "you cannot be good unless you pray." At length the old chief called, and informed me of his desire to hear what we must say when we supplicate the Great Spirit. The Lord's Prayer was repeated to him, and he continued for several days, often aiding with a view to hear that prayer repeated to him.

The boy at length came to me, with his countenance expressing the greatest joy saying, "my grandfather is good now." Why? said I. He answered, "because he prays." And what does he say when he prays? "He says, 'O Father thou dwellest in the highest heavens.'" Here he paused—What else does he say?—"Let thy name be great in all the earth."—What else? "Let thy cheerfulness be over all the world—let thy will be on earth, the same as in heaven.'" I asked the boy what made him so rejoiced? "Because," said he, "my grandfather will now be a good man, and when he dies he will not go to a dark place, but to that country where the light is very bright, very bright indeed."

I was quite agreeably surprised at the language of the child, and almost ready to conclude that his tender heart had been illuminated by him who has declared that he is "the light of the world."

"Whereas, by an act of the British Parliament of the year 1825, duties were laid on American produce imported into Montreal and Quebec, which are extremely burdensome to the inhabitants of the northern section of this state, bordering on the river St. Lawrence, who from their situation, have been necessarily led to resort to those markets and operate as a prohibition of some of the most valuable articles, the growth and produce of their soil; And whereas, the British Government notwithstanding the efforts made by negociation on the part of United States, has steadfastly adhered to this system, and to the policy it is intended to promote of giving the decided preference or the monopoly of those markets to the inhabitants of the Canadas. Colonial Commentary.

AMIDST the showers of abuse lavished upon our House of Assembly by certain prints of both Provinces, Mr NEILSON, of the elder Quebec Gazette, consoles us by saying that the—"good people of Upper Canada should not ascribe any abuse of them or their Representatives, which may appear in certain papers in Lower Canada, as coming from the inhabitants of that Colony, but consider that abuse as a thing of course"!

THERE can be no wonder that such erroneous judgements of places and distances, as regarding this country are formed in England while our own writers fall into such blunders as one that may be noticed in the last Mercury, where it is stated that the shores of Rice Lake are "thickly settled" and that the Lake is situated "thirty miles north of Lake Ontario"—whereas it is barely ten miles from one Lake to the other, at their nearest points of contiguity—and there are no more than two families at present resident along the whole southern coast of Rice Lake in a distance of nearly twenty four miles!

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Important Decision.—The opinion of the Bench delivered at Lancaster Assizes on the 14th March last, on the following trial, is so highly important that it cannot be too generally known:

Richard Reed was charged with killing and slaying Ellen Dickinson, at Ghorley, under the following circumstances—the was a farmer, and amongst his cows he kept one which was notoriously mischievous. He had frequent occasion to know that it was dangerous for any person to go near it; several persons had been hurt by it; and the woman in question at last fell a victim to its fury. She was passing through the field where it happened to be; it followed her out on the road, and mangled her in so dreadful a manner, that she died in a few days after.

Mr Justice BAYLEY told the jury, that if a man kept an animal which he knew to be maliciously inclined and did not take measures to prevent it, either by confinement, or by other means from injuring other persons, he was responsible for the consequences.—Guilty.

Mr. Gourlay and the Chancellor.—Mr. Bennett presented a Petition in the House of Commons from Mr. Gourlay, complaining of the inability of the Lord Chancellor from age and infirmity duly to discharge his duty; and setting forth, in his own, Mr Gourlay's case, that his Lordship had recently given an erroneous judgement, on defective documents.

A Brother of the Thurtells.—Henry Thurtell, a younger brother of these men, was apprehended for stealing a Silver Watch from Mr. Bradbee, landlord of the White-Swan Public house, Chancery lane. The prisoner who was fully six feet in height, had the rough appearance of a sea faring man, and stated that he had been four years and a half absent at sea, he produced written commendations of his conduct from various Officers, and stated that on his return home, he wrote to his father and friends, who replied, that they did not wish to see him or to have any thing to say to him. The prisoner was much affected in making this detail;—he said he found himself pointed at wherever he went, and he did not care where they sent him.—His hearers were so much affected by his manner that many wept with him, the prosecutor declined prosecuting, and Thurtell was dismissed on engaging on going to sea.

APPLES.—It appears from the N. E. Farmer, that there are some apple trees in this State, New York, and New Jersey, which bear apples, of which about one half of each is sweet, and the other half sour. L. Peters, of Westborough, states, that there is one tree in Medfield, and another in Shrewsbury which produce apples without any core. The trees never blossom.

Central Africa.—The Sun, of the evening of the 25th March, announces the return of Major Denham and the mission from the interior of Africa, after a residence of 18 months in central Africa.

The memoirs of a female adventurer calling herself Harriette Wilson, have lately made some noise in London; they contain letters of gallantry pretended to be written from the highest characters in England, to the heroine herself; but as some gentlemen may not desire this notoriety, she abstains from shewing them up for an adequate bribe.—Mr. Edward Ellice has shewn a manly example in resisting a demand from this harpy and has permitted her letter to him to be published in the daily prints.

MEMOIRS OF HARRIETTE WILSON.

(From the Globe and Traveller)

We think Mr. Ellice does but justice to the public in permitting us to publish the following letter, which he received by the post this morning. It displays at once the objects and motives of the authoress and editor of the detestable publication now circulating under the above title. He has deserved us to leave blank the names of other parties alluded to, but has left the letter with us for the satisfaction of others who may be better acquainted with the lady's writing than himself:—

"March 8, No. 111, Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, à Paris.

"Sir,—People are buying themselves so fast out of my book "Memoirs of H. Wilson," that I have no time to attend to them should be sorry not to give each a chance if they chuse to be out. You are quizzed most unmercifully. Two noble dukes have lately taken my word, and I have never named them. I am sure——would say you might trust me never to publish, or cause to be published, aught about you, if you like to forward £200 directly to me, else it will be too late, as the last volume, in which you shine, will be the property of the Editor, and in his hands. Lord——says he will answer for aught I agree to, so will my husband. Do just as you like—consult only yourself. I get as much by a small book as you will give me for taking you out, or more. I attack no poor men, because they cannot help themselves.

"Adieu—Mind I have no time to write again, as what with writing books, and then altering them for those who frappe * en mort.

"What do you think of my French?

"Don't trust to beg with your answer,

Mining Companies.—The streets and inns of Falmouth at the last dates, were thronged with strangers, engaged for the different mining speculations abroad, and who were about to sail for their various destinations.

Incredible!—Among the numerous companies now forming in England, there is one of a very extraordinary nature. It is to have a capital of four millions, and to be employed in the recovery of cannon balls from the bottom of the sea, in order to reduce the present price of iron.

Mr. Abernethy the north country Pedestrian, completed his match on Friday morning, 18th March through part of England, and Scotland, to Glasgow 412 miles in 6 days, and 5 hours, being one hour within the time.

Preserving Posts.—A Pennsylvanian states that 21 years ago, in planting some gate posts, he bored through them near the ground with a two inch auger, filled the hole with salt and plugged it at both ends. The posts are now as sound as when put down. He has since applied salt to the posts of rail fences, by boring an inch auger hole about four inches above the ground diagonally across the post so as to reach about two inches under ground; filling the whole with salt and closing it with plugs. He has not found any decay among them.

India Rubber.—This elastic substance, which is used for little else in this country, but to take out the marks of black lead pencils, is used for various purposes in South America, being formed into bottles, boots, shoes, torches, &c. Torches made of this substance, burn with great splendor. Any person may satisfy himself of this, by applying a candle to a small piece of rubber. It is said to be superior to leather for shoes, by reason of its elasticity and impenetrability. Some of these shoes have been imported into Philadelphia and a paper of that city advises females to substitute them for the fashionable ladies' shoes now in use.

Indian rubber, called also caoutchouc, is obtained by the Indians from a tree that grows in Brazil and other parts of South America. This tree on being wounded, yields a milky juice, which becomes thick on exposure to the air. The juice is spread on clay, moulded into the form of bottles, shoes, birds, &c. in successive layers, until it is sufficiently thick. The exterior is ornamented by various means and then it is suspended ever smoke, which hardens and colours it. The clay is afterwards broken up and taken out. Caoutchouc is used for varnish, and it is said that cloth varnished with the fresh juice is rendered perfectly impervious to water. When this substance is exposed to heat it readily melts, and loses its properties. By boiling it for some time, and then pressing two pieces together, they may be united as closely as if they formed one piece. Several trees which grow in the East Indies yield Caoutchouc.—*Hamp. Soap.—A French writer recommends the use of potatoes three fourths boiled as a substitute for soap. We can assure our readers, from long personal experience, that boiled potatoes cleans the hand as thoroughly and easily as common soap; they prevent the chaps in the winter season, and keep the skin soft and healthy.—*Med. Foreign Intelligence.

BUENOS AYRES.

We learn by the arrival of the Liverpool Trader, at Boston, that the British Consul General at Buenos Ayres, (Woodbine Parish, Esq) on the 28th of Jan. officially announced to the General Congress, then in Session, that he was authorised to conclude a commercial treaty, with the United Provinces. His communication was received in the most flattering manner, and Mr. Secretary Garcia, was nominated to treat with Mr. Parish on the subject

All was quiet at Buenos Ayres, on the 1st of Feby. The rejoicing for Bolivar's great victory had continued up to that time, and the public funds had risen in consequence of that event.

MEXICO.

The news of the British recognition of Mexican Independence was received every where in the Republic with extraordinary exultation. The Secretaries of Foreign Affairs and the Treasury had been appointed to negotiate with the British Commissioners a Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Mexico.

A number of the principal merchants of the city of Mexico, have petitioned the government to reduce the high rates of the customs.

THE ABORIGINEES.

We have known little of what may be denominated the interior character of the Indians—that is, their peculiar customs, habits, superstitions, and traditionary legends. Mr Schoolcraft has, in his travels, gone far to illuminate this dark part of the red man's history. Of this kind of intelligence the following may serve as a sample

"The Chippewas, after the interment of a person preserve a fire for four nights upon the grave. This is founded upon a romantic tale, that a warrior being once as it was believed, mortally wounded, was placed against a tree. When his party returned victorious, this man followed the party, and though he saw them, could not himself be seen, and though he heard them speak, could not himself be heard. He had an interview with his wife in this predicament, and still not being able to convince her that he was present, proceeded to return and see if his body was in reality sitting by the side of a tree. He accordingly went, and was obstructed by fire, which he finally passed through, and on his return awaked from a trance in which he had remained for eight days and returned home with his body."

The fire is preserved by the Chippewas upon the grave for four nights from the intelligence imparted by this man, that the spirit had four days journey to make before he could arrive at the land of souls, and that he visited his grave every night to warm himself while on his passage.

INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

"Because," said he, "my grandfather will now be a good man, and when he dies he will not go to a dark place, but to that country where the light is very bright, very bright indeed."

I was quite agreeably surprised at the language of the child, and almost ready to conclude that his tender heart had been illuminated by him who has declared that he is "the light of the world."

Navigation of the St. Lawrence.—In the Legislature of the state of New York, the following Resolution was offered by Mr. VANDENHEUVEL, Representative from St. Lawrence County.

"Whereas, by an act of the British Parliament of the year 1825, duties were laid on American produce imported into Montreal and Quebec, which are extremely burdensome to the inhabitants of the northern section of this state, bordering on the river St. Lawrence, who from their situation, have been necessarily led to resort to those markets and operate as a production of some of the most valuable articles, the growth and produce of their soil; And whereas, the British Government notwithstanding the efforts made by negotiation on the part of United States, has steadfastly adhered to this system, and to the policy it is intended to promote of giving the decided preference or the monopoly of those markets to the inhabitants of the Canadian Provinces—therefore Resolved., By the Senate and assembly of the State of New York, That the Senators of this State in Congress be instructed, and its Representatives be requested by this Legislature to use their endeavours to procure the repeal of so much of the act of the 2nd March, 1799, entitled an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage, as was intended to secure to British subjects, the reciprocal rights secured by the treaty of the 19th November, 1794, and the explanatory article of the 4th of May, 1795, and the enactment of a law establishing a port of entry on, or near Barnhart's Island, in the river St Lawrence, and imposing countervailing duties on the property of the subjects of Upper and Lower Canada, conveyed on that river, through the territory of the United States the proceeds of which to be applied for the term of ——years, after the passing of the act to the completion of the Military Turnpike from Sackett's Harbor to Platsburg, or in constructing a canal from the river St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain, in order to facilitate the communication of the inhabitants on the St. Lawrence with the markets of their own State "

Our limits will not permit our transcribing the whole of Mr. V's. remarks on this subject; there are some of them, however, which deserve our attention being intimately connected with this country. He commenced by stating his regret that hitherto as attention had been paid to the northern frontier of the State of New York than it deserved—He represented it as comprising an area of 3000 square miles of land well adapted for cultivation, that its population within 30 miles of the river St. Lawrence, amounts to 50,000 inhabitants and is rapidly increasing. With respect to the trade of this place, Mr V. mentions its having drawn his information from the different collectors, and other sources equally authentic—hence reliance may be placed on the following representation as correct:

The exports of this Northern frontier he observed, consisted chiefly of Pot and Pearl Ashes, Lumber, Flour and Salt Provisions, of which the two first were the principal Its trade from the first settlement of the country, was exclusively to Montreal and Quebec, by the medium of the River St. Lawrence, and was in no instance interrupted until the act of the British Parliament of the 5th of Aug 1822 imposed duties which were virtually prohibitory of two of these articles, Lumber and Flour. In the year 1821, the whole exports from the Northern frontier and Lake Champlain to Lower Canada, was as follows:—

From Jefferson County,	$350,000
St Lawrance,	450,000
Franklin,	150,000
Clinton County by Lake
Champlain, by estimation,	250,000
	1,200,000

Since that period the increase of the exportation of Ashes from St Lawrence county has been $300 000 —thus making the amount of exports which would have been annually transmitted to Lower Canada from the Northern frontier of the State, and Lake Champlain had the duty on Lumber not have been laid, $1,500, 000; about one eight of the whole foreign exports from this State.

In 1821, there was $300,000.; and 1822, there was $7.250; in 1823, $5.100 exported No return had been furnished for 1824; but, as there was probably no material difference in that fr the two succeeding y rs, it appears there has been a loss to the county of St. Lawrence, since the operation of the British Act of about $900,000 in the article of Lumber "

After stating the various reason for bringing forward this resolution, Mr. V. proceeds to notice some inquiries that might arise from the subject. " 1. Does the Government of the United States possess the power to impose countervailing duties on Canadian produce, conveyed on the river St Lawrence? 2 Will the measure proposed be an effectual remedy? In respect to the 1st point, the resolution proceeds upon the fact, that by the determination of the northern boundary of this state, by the Commissioners under the Treaty of Ghent, the line along the river St Lawrence, has been established around a certain island, called Barnhart's Island between which and the Canadian territory is an imperfect channel of navigation, leaving the main channel, between that island and the American shore, entirely within the territory of the United States The right which British subjects ever possessed freely to enter our waters could only have been a conventional right; and it appears that by treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1794, called Jay's treaty, the reciprocal right was guaranteed to each power, freely to pass and repass into the waters of each other, which right was on the part of the United States, confirmed to British subjects by the 104 sect. of the act of Congress, of 1799, entitled an act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage," and a similar confirmatory law was enacted by the British Government The treaty of 1794, was annulled by the state of hostilities, which subsequently accrued between the two powers, and Great Britain by enacting the law of 1821, imposing discriminating duties on American produce admitted into Canada, has virtually repealed her confirmatory act. It merely remains therefore, for the United States to repeal so much of the act of Congress of 1799, as guarantees those reciprocal rights to British subjects, which is provided in the resolution submitted, and they will thenceforth, possess no greater right to enter freely into the waters of the U. States, than those of any o ther power—no other claim to the free passage of Barnhart's Channel, han to a free entry into and exercise from any of our Northern bays, mouths of rivers, Sackett's Harbour, Oswego or Genessee. 2 But will the remedy be effectual? On this subject he believed it would not be difficult to satisfy the Committee. The exports from Upper to Lower Canada, as near as can be estimated were not less than $3 000.000 annually. This information he derived from one of the Collectors of the Northern District The imports of the Upper Provinces are, probably, not inferior. On this passing trade of six millions, a countervailing duty would be a tax which the Canadian Provinces would be very willing to throw off to obtain from the British Government a concession to our citizens of a more liberal trade in their ports. " A duty of 5 per cent ad valorem on this trade would amount annually to $330,000, which if applied to the manner proposed in the resolution, would afford a relief continually increasing to our Northern citizens, and furnish them at length with another outlet for their produce—a domestic in stead of a foreign market—should the measure fail of having the intended effect to induce the British Government to repeal or modify her restrictions on our trade And is it pretended the Canadian Provinces can urge this countervailing duty as a ground of complaint against the United States—as a vigorous and illiberal enactment. Mr V. begged to call the attention of the House to the duty imposed by the British act on American Lumber imported into the Canadas, which was twenty one shillings sterling, per thousand feet or more than four dollars and a half The whole amount of Lumber which was exported in 1821, from the counties of Jefferson. St. Lawrence and Franklin to those provinces, was $650,000; estimated according to the price of that article before exportation, which was between five and six dollars The duty being thus but one fifth less than the original cost, it is evident had the whole amount of Lumber exported in 1821, been continued, the Canadian Provinces would have derived annually, from this state, on this article of our exportation alone, the sum of $600,000. And why has it not been derived? Because the extravagant duties have prohibited the exportation of it from our northern frontier, except in those cases which have sometimes occurred, when the British act has been evaded by intermediate sales to Canadians, who contrary to fact, and in violation of the law export it to Montreal as Lumber of the Provinces."

This is all very fine in support of the side of the question, Mr V wished to advocate but there is obviously a strange singularity in the procedure, and nature has placed obstacles in the way of its accomplishment which neither the Legislature of New York, nor the whole Congress can overcome. It is not necessary here to enter on a refutation of the arguments Mr V. uses; but it will appear strange to the most superficial observer that at a moment when the soundest politicians are wisely throwing open a free trade as far as possible, and removing restrictions from commerce, that being the best means of improving it in all other nations the United States alone, are entwining their trade with shackles and talking of subjecting it to restrictions, under the shape of countervailing duties in all directions. With regard to the point in question the imposition of countervailing duties at Barnhart's Island; there is an absurdity in it, admitting that the navigable channel by which the craft descend the river, lies within the territory of the United States; it is no less true that there is a channel by which they ascend on the Canadian side of the line, even in its present state. This channel could be cleared out, or a canal might be cut on the Canada side of the river to admit the passing of vessels and rafts: and what then would be the avail of the duties demanded by the United States?

From the New-York Albion.

REPEAL OF RESTRICTIONS.

In our last we announced to our readers, that Mr. Huskisson had brought before the House of Commons, his great plans for the repeal of restrictions, and for freeing commerce from the trammels under which it has so long groaned We then stated, that the Right Hon. Gentleman had divided his subject into three parts. 1. The Colonial Trade. 2 Foreign Manufactures. 3 The Shipping. We at the same time gave the Speech of the enlightened Member upon the first division of his subject, together with a summary of its principal features. We have now the satisfaction to present to our readers, Mr Huskisson's second Speech, delivered on the 25th of March, in which the other two branches are taken up, the perusal of which, will, we are sure, afford unmingled satisfaction We certainly live in a most singular and eventful epoch; for, while one nation is imposing prohibitory duties with a view to drive all foreign manufactures from its shores, England, clearly and essentially a manufacturing country, is repealing all duties, and resorting, it would seem, to every expedient to entice them to hers. The two courses are diametrically opposite, and one or the other must be wrong. Time will show with whom the wrong lies. We have compiled the following, which may be considered as the project of the New Tariff from Mr. Huskisson's Speech and other sources.

1. The first duty to be repealed, is that on cotton-worked goods The existing duties upon the importation into England of all foreign cotton manufactures, are £75, £67 10s and 50 gs. These duties are now to be reduced to £10 per cent. In 1765, the import of cotton wool amounted to £3,350.000 In 1823, it amounted to 150 millions! Cotton goods were exported last year to the amount of 30 millions sterling.

2. The duty on wollen goods to be reduced from 50 to 10 per cent. Of these goods £6,926,000 worth were exported last year.

3. That duties on linen goods, now ranging from 40 to 180 per cent., to be reduced to 25 per cent. ad val.

4 Books to be reduced to sixpence, and Paper to three pence per pound.

5 Foreign wine bottles to be reduced from 1s. 6d to 3d. each.

6 French looking-glasses and mirrors, from £30 to £20 per cent.

7. Earthen ware and china, from seventy-five pounds per cent. to one.

8 French gloves at 30 per cent. instead of the prohibition.

9. Copper from £54 to £27 per ton.

10, The duty on tin to be reduced from £5 to £2 per hundred weight That upon Spelter, from £28 to £14 ad. val

11 All non-enumerated articles, if manufactured, to be reduced from 50 to 20 per cent. if a raw material. from 20 to 10 per cent.

The Shipping Interest.—Mr. Huskisson stated that he should now propose the following regulations for the relief of the Shipping Interest.

1. The abolition of all the Quarantine duties.

2. The abolition of fees on all commerce to our colonies.

3. The removal of the transfer duty in transferring vessels either in shares or otherwise, and the renewal of the Registers to be effected without expense.

4. The stamp duty on bonds given by exporters for the due delivery of certain articles at the place designated to be reduced from 40s. to 4s.

5. The stamp duty on Debentures to be repealed.

6. All consular fees to be abolished, and the consuls to be placed on specific salary to be paid out of the civil list For services, however, which may be termed extra consular, such as notorial acts, the consul is to be allowed still to make a charge, provided it does not exceed two dollars, in each instance.

7. The consuls in the Levant hitherto appointed by the Levant Compay to be appointed by the Crown.

8. The charter of the Levant Company to be surrendered by agreement to the Crown. The Company's funds to be assigned over to the public revenue, and all the impositions, taxes which have been enforced by this Company for 200 years, and to be abolished.

STEAM ARTILLERY.

There is an interesting article in the New Monthly Magazine on this subject, from which we extract a few passages:—" One cheering principle would result from the use of steam weapons in war, viz:—that it would give the most civilized nations the advantage and tend to make the wisest still more powerful. England, America and France, might adopt them in the fullest extent; but Russia, Turkey, and even Austria, in their present state, would have little chance against the scientific combinations and the mechanical adroitness that could perfect a hundred effective steam-engines, while they laboriously produced one. The navies of England, France, and America will, ere long, be navigated and fought by steam. On shore, the art of war will be quickly changed to the advantage of humanity. In the field, battles will be quickly terminated. No dense smoke will arise to intercept the dead aim of the steam-weapon; and masses of men cannot be manœuvered under the showers of balls which steam-batteries will pour upon them. Defensive positions will, in many cases, be impregnable; and small fortified ports will take an enormous time to reduce. Let us suppose a fortification casemated and bomb proof, with steam guns, 60 pounders. The walls would literally rain upon the besiegers metal of this enormous weight, every gun projecting 50 or 60 balls a minute. In case of attempting an escalade, or of storming a breach, if one could be made in the face of the besieged under such a defensive fire, not a man would pass the ditch alive, while it was flanked by a single gun, such a hail of death might be poured forth with unceasing energy. England will fortunately have no difficulty in getting the start of other countries in forming a steam navy Its elements are peculiarly her own and if the prejudices of the Navy-board give way to the necessity of the case, she will have nothing to dread The steam gun, in its present incomplete state, has been tried before the Duke of Wellington, and I understand, as far as the experiment went, its sufficiency was not called in question a moment." "Whatever contributes to protract a state of warfare, will, by increasing its expenses, operate in a way friendly to the interests of humanity. Governments, however, inclined to rush heedlessly into war on every feeble excuse, will pause more than ever before they bring about the ruin of their finances. Nations of scanty population will be able to offer a long resistance to the strong and war will become an affair of defence rather than aggrandizement. A change in the art of war, which may render fortified places impregnable to every thing but famine, or capable of a very protracted defence, will be friendly to the stability and entegrity of empires."—Liverpool Paper.

KINGSTON, April 29th 1825.

It may be well to caution the public against a new attempt at counterfeiting five dollar bills of the Bank of Canada. The bill we have seen is dated 1st June, 1823, letter C. No 522, Reed and Stiles, sculptors, is payable to S. Armour. The signature of the cashier and president are tolerably well imitated. The vignette represents a female figure sitting with her left arm reposing on a box marked five, and holding in her right a rudder—further to the right, is a stern view of a vessel on the stocks. As respects the general execution of the bill, it is coarse and clumsy, and the forgery may easily be detected.

Resolved,—That the said Rule having since been communicated to the Honourable the Legislative Council, the House of Assembly trusts to an undisturbed continuance, between the two branches of the Legislature, of that harmonious intercourse which has happily subsisted for a long period.

Resolved,—That the personal censure, by the Resolution of the Honourable the Legislative Council, of the Honourable the Speaker of this House is unparliamentary and a high breach of the privileges of this Assembly.

Resolved,—That the Master in Chancery on the twelfth day of March inst. after the communication of the said twenty-first Rule to the Honourable the Legislative Council, was charged with messages from that House to this Assembly, and being within the Bar, as the custom is, he the said Messenger, again attempted to obtrude the said Messages upon the Honourable Speaker of this House, instead of delivering them on the Clerk's table according to the said twenty-first Rule

Resolved.—That the House of Assembly, while it accepts as satisfactory, the explanation given by the Honourable the Legislative Council of the refusal of their Officers to admit its Messengers on Thursday the 10th inst trusts the Legislative Council will regard the forbearance with which this House waited for such explanation, as an evidence of its disposition to preserve unimpaired the good understanding so long established between the two branches of the Legislature.

Which was carried

The original Question as amended, was then put and carried.

Mr ROLPH from the Committee appointed to inquire into the manner of receiving Messages in the House of Commons, from the House of Lords in England, reported as follows:

Your Committee appointed to inquire into the manner of receiving Messages in the House of Commons, from the House of Lords in England, beg leave to report,

That they have been informed by a gentleman of the highest respectability conversant with the usages of the British Parliament, that Messengers from the Lords to the Commons are first announced by the Sergeant at Arms, who introduces them, and the nature of the Message is stated; the Bill or papers then given to one of the Clerks (which the gentleman alluded to considers as equivalent to being laid on the table, and a matter of convenience adopted in consequence of the construction of the House) and the Messengers having in the mean time made the usual reverences and retired the Speaker reads to the House the inscription of the Bill or paper so brought down, the Messengers are generally Masters in Chancery, but sometimes the Judges Officiate

The foregoing Statement is corroborated by an Honourable Member for Hastings, and the practice of the House of Assembly of Lower Canada

Your Committee beg leave further to remark, that upon reference to Comyn's Digest they find the following passage, "these (the Messengers) being admitted in the House of Commons, after three Congees at the table, inform the House, that the Lords have passed such a Bill and they read the Title," from which passage, Your Committee infer that the Messengers conclude their duty at the Clerk's Table.

Signed, JOHN ROLPH,
CHAIRMAN.

The Report was ordered to be received, and it was read as follows

The Select Committee to whom was referred the Petitions of so many Inhabitants of this Province on the subject of Clergy Reserves, are of opinion that the Lands set apart in this Province for the "maintenance and support of a Parliament Clergy" ought not to be enjoyed by any one denomination of Protestants, to the exclusion of their Christian Brethren of other denominations equally conscientious in their respective modes of worship, and equally entitled, as spiritual subjects, to the protection of His Majesty's Government

Entertaining the view of the subject, and learning that a portion of the said reserves are to be sold, your Committee beg leave to suggest to your Hon. House, the propriety of addressing His Majesty humbly praying that His Majesty will be pleased to grant an appropriation of the proceeds of such sale, to be made to assist in the support of the Protestant Clergy of every denomination throughout this Province

Committee Room of Assembly. } 18 March, 1825 }

On motion of Mr. THOMSON it was ordered, that the Report of the Committee on the Clergy Reserves, should be referred to a Committee of the whole on the Monday following.

The Chairman reported the Address amended

Mr D JONES from the Committee, to whom was referred the Petition of P. Des Jardine and others informed the House that the Committee had agreed to a report which he was ready to submit.

The Report was ordered to be received, and was read as follows

The Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Peter Des Jardine and others, having duly considered the same, and received such information upon the subject as Mr. Des Jardine has in prepared to lay before them, beg leave to report, that from the particular situation of the ground in the neighbourhood of the Village of Coots Paradise, in the Township of Ancaster, and lying to the East and thereof and from the boundaries of certain Lots in the First Concession of such Township, as described in the grant of them, it appears to the Committee that doubt may be entertained respecting the true course of the Boundary line between the said Township and that of Flamboro West.

It may be important to the Public as well as satisfactory to the petitioner that such line should be clearly ascertained and permanently established, and the prayer of Mr Des Jardine for an allotment of the Marsh opposite certain Lots in the said Township of Flamboro for the purpose of opening a Canal through the same, having been allowed by the Council, and he having expended a considerable sum in the formation of such Canal it is essential to his interest that it should be done.

At the public Highway, commonly called Dundas Street, seems to be the boundary between the said Township and that of Ancaster as the intermediate Village of Coots Paradise, its protraction on that course has been assumed as a proper boundary between them throughout. The Committee, however, are not prepared to point out, or recommend, any particular line or course as the most eligible to form such boundary between the second Township, considering that the mode of ascertaining and establishing the same can more properly be determined by the House.

(Signed.)
DAVID JONES,
CHAIRMAN.

House of Assembly, Committee } Room, 18th March, 1825 }

On motion of Mr. JONES the Report on the Petition of Des Jardine and others, was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the whole on the morrow.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor thanking him for his several messages of Tuesday the third inst was read the third time, passed and signed by the Speaker and is as follows

To His Excellency Sir P Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c &c &c

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament Assembled humbly thank Your Excellency for Your several messages of Tuesday the third instant, transmitting a Copy of the Report of the Commissioners for the improvement of the Internal Navigation of this Province and a Copy of a Supplementary Report from the Commissioners for opening a Canal between Burlington Bay and Lake Ontario.

To amendment Mr. RANDAL moved, that after the word "that" in the original motion, the whole should be expunged and the following in stead thereof "it is the undoubted right of this House to declare such rules and regulations for their guidance as they may deem necessary.

Editorial Commentary.

Much excitement is said to exist in Paris in consequence of a memorial reported to have been issued by the Russian Government on the future lot of unfortunate Greece, which, according to that document, is to be disposed of for the benefit of the Holy Alliance. The Mores to have a constitution, under a Russian Prince, and the remainder of the revolted Provinces to return under the protection of the Porte, on the same conditions as those which have been imposed upon Moldavia and Wallachia. The Greeks have heroically declared their resolution to die rather than submit to the fate announced to them by the Russian Cabinet, and have claimed the protection of England. Mr Canning has expressed his doubts of the authenticity of the document alluded to.

Probert, the accomplice of Thurtell, has been condemned to death for horse-stealing.

The contest between the Lion, Nero, and six mastiffs, of the true English breed, announced in another part of this paper—has been decided in favour of the Lion, who is said to have made very short work of it.

It is gratifying to learn that Major Denham's party, lately returned from central Africa, have been successful beyond their most sanguine hopes

Instead of the puerile, vulgar, and senseless retort given to some late remarks of ours, by the Kingston Chronicle just received, its editor would have done much better to acknowledging the error which had led him to assert what was not true—an act of all others, when coolly and deliberately done, the most contemptible and wicked As one of the communications, which he affects to be so desirous of seeing, bears strongly and directly on his own publication, and as the castigation it has lately received, we will endeavour to favour him with it next week

The new steam boat Toronto started yesterday on her first trip to Niagara—literally with "drums beating and colours flying," and a large party of pleasure. We sincerely wish her the success which we doubt not is awaiting the meritorious exertions that have been made

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Remarkable Fact.—"Madam Campan related to me a fact so extraordinary, that I cannot refrain from recording it here. The Marchioness de Forges, whose husband was grand falconer, resided at Versailles, in the year 1775. The Marchioness was pregnant; and, during child birth, some unpleasant intelligence was communicated to her. If I recollect rightly, she was informed that one of her houses had been burnt down. The pains of child birth immediately ceased, and the Marchioness continued pregnant for space of twenty five years. At the expiration of that period she died; and, on her body being opened, the child was found petrified. A few years previous to her death, the Marquess de Crequi said to her, in a drawing room, 'Madam I think you would do well to swallow a tutor for your son; his beard must be beginning to grow by this time"

Rise in Colonial Produce.—Grotjian's Philadelphia Sale Report assigns the reasons for the opinion that the rise in most of the articles he quotes (tobacco not one of them) will not be transient." He assigns the following as the principal causes:

"1. The total overthrow of the Spanish power in Mexico and South America and the late recognition of their independence by Great Britain.

2. The Burmese war carried on in India, chiefly by the British East India Company.

3. The great activity which now prevails in England as it regards her manufacturing population.

4. The immense sums of surplus wealth scattered amongst the labouring class of the people of that country, by the stupendous undertaking of internal improvement.

Grotjian contends, that the independence of the South American States opens a large field for manufactures; and hence an additional demand for raw materials particularly cotton. The Burmese war has turned many of the British ships from conveying the productions of those climes to Europe, the transportation of troops, provisions, &c. to the seat of war," &c. &c

THE LION AND THE MASTIFF FIGHT.

Worcester race course is the place fixed for the approaching fight for 5,000 sovereigns, between Mr Wombwell's Lion, Nero, and the six mastiffs. A temporary amphitheatre will, it is said, be erected, and a circular den, 36 feet in circumference, made in the centre, while a sufficient space will be left between the bars for the dogs to get in and out The Lion is 5 years old, stands 4½ feet high, and is 13 feet in length

FRANCE.

From the Paris Constitutional of March 29.

The Editor of the Etoile, accuses us of having invoked war, and agreeably to his views the Cabinet of Europe now enjoys that profound peace which nothing can shake or interrupt. What we have said, we still continue to affirm, that Great Britain and Russia are already in a degree in diplomatic hostilities; there can be no doubt on that subject. The correspondence and acts of the two cabinets, already exhibit evident proofs on that head; still more every speech of Mr. Canning bears hard on the Russian government, and cannot fail to mortify the cabinet of St. Petersburg.—The Holy Alliance looks upon the movements of Great Britain, with a very suspicious and jealous eye. Do not the British Ministerial Gazettes, even of yesterday, speak with great arrogance, insinuating that Austria will take great care how she gives umbrage to Great Britain, and that France was too much occupied with her intestine quarrels to have any influence upon any political question whatever. This is mortifying language for a Frenchman to hear—let our ministerial news papers come out and disown such attacks from foreign ministerial papers.

INDIA.

Calcutta, Dec. 24.

The following is an extract of a letter from Rangoon dated the 9th inst.—"Since I last wrote we have been besieged here by the great Bandola, with 40,000 men the details of the siege you will see by the despatch.—I do not know when or where we shall go next; they [the British forces] appear determined to advance from Rangoon, and now only wait for cattle, carts and followers, and even then I think they will meet with a great many obstacles in their way, and the Bandola's army, tho' defeated, will stockade themselves every half mile of the road. It is the general opinion here, that they will not be able to advance farther than Prome this season"

The following extract of a letter from Pisalbarree, in Cachar, dated the 12th inst:

"The troops here, are at present lying on their oars, quite ignorant of their future destination, but expect to march into Munnipore immediately. We are told, that the enemy have evacuated Munnipore and are concentrating their forces for the protection of their own capital, threatened (as we are told) by a large army of Siamese.

UNITED STATES.

The Court of Inquiry for investigating the conduct of Commodore Porter, convened at the Navy Yard in Washington on Monday—present, Commodore Chauncey, and Captains Crane and Read. Commodore Porter took exceptions to the composition of the Court, on the ground that a majority of the members were his juniors in the service:—but on a reference to the Secretary of the Navy, the objection was overruled, on the ground that the time of making the objection had passed.—On Tuesday the examination of witnesses was commenced. Among the witnesses attending, are Capt. Dallas, Cassin and Finch.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Cuba.—There are strong indications of an attempt on the part of Mexico, and Colombia to emancipate Cuba. Much alarm appears to have been excited among the Spanish authorities at Mantanzas, and precautionary measures are adopted. The inhabitants, we presume are pretty generally disposed to accept of independence, be it offered by whom it may. There are certain, powers in Europe, however, which have for some time past, cast a longing eye towards this island; and it is probable that they will not regard with indifference any effort to place it beyond their grasp.—Spain herself, perhaps, will scarcely remain an idle spectator of such effort. True it is, that she has not the force, supposing she has energy enough to prevent the emancipation of Cuba, by any direct exertion of her influence; but she may negociate away either to France or Great Britain, any claims she may possess on the island, and thus induce one of those powers to interfere. We hope this will not be the case; but when we cast our eyes on the map of North America, and see the importance of this little tongue of territory issuing out of the mouth of the Mexican Gulf; and then look to the unwearied assiduity which England displays in the cultivation of her commercial connexion with Mexico we may stand excused if we feel some apprehension on the subject.—National Journal.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

LIVERPOOL, CATHOLIC PETITION.

To the Right Honourable the Lords, spiritual and temporal, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Ireland, in Parliament assembled,

The Petition of the undersigned Roman Catholic Inhabitants of the Town of Liverpool and neighbourhood.

Humbly Showeth,

That your petitioners are still subjected to many civil disabilities and penalties from which their more favoured, but not more deserving, fellow subjects are exempted

That without troubling your Lordships with a detail of their grievances, your petitioners cannot but allude to the deprivation of their proportionate, or indeed any substantial share in the legislature of their country; for not only are they excluded from both Houses of Parliament, but debarred the right enjoyed by every Freeholder and Freeman in the empire, save by every Freeholder and Freeman in the empire, save by the British Catholic, of voting for those who are eligible to serve in Parliament.

That even in domestic life your petitioners feel themselves grievously affected by the existing matrimonial laws, which, while it recognises the marriages of Jews and of Quakers, declares those solemnized by the ministers of the Roman Catholic religion to be null and void, injures and insults their offspring by subjecting them, in a legal sense, to all the ignominious effects of illegitimacy.

That your petitioners could submit with calmer resignation to the political degradation implied by the preceeding and other civil disabilities under which they labour, if they felt a conscientiousness that there was any thing objectionable, either in their tenets as Christians, or conduct as British Subjects, which warranted their imposition. But whilst they feel and evince as much loyal attachment to their King—love and serve their country with as disinterested and ardent a zeal—and fulfil all the duties of social life in a manner as exemplary as the most privileged class of their fellow subjects; they cannot but consider it as a peculiar hardship to be excluded from the full enjoyment of the blessings of the British constitution, reared in a great measure by Catholic hands, for no other cause than a steadfast adherance to the religion of its founders.

Your petitioners therefore most humbly pray that your Lordships, taking into consideration their civil disabilities, and the general propriety of their political and social conduct, will be graciously pleased to remove the stigma thus affixed to their religion, and place them, being British-born subjects, who have never forfeited their birthright, upon a level in regard to the unrestrained exercise of their religion, with His Majesty's subjects residing in the conquered Provinces of Canada, or living under the absolute government of Hanover. And your petitioners will, as in duty bound ever pray.

MR. O'CONNEL'S LETTER,

To the Chairman of the Catholic Association of Ireland.

London, 7th March, 1825.

Sir,—I deem it a duty I owe my respected brethren of the Catholic Association, to state to them the following facts, and to mix with my statement some advice, which is certainly honest in intention:—

First,—The Bill for the suppression of the Association will be read a third time this day. It cannot get the Royal Assent for some days—and it will not be in force or operation for ten days after it receives the Royal Assent. I hope I shall be in Ireland within that period, to assist in such an arrangement as may be most suited to the dignity and the interest of the Catholic body, without being in any, even the slightest degree, inconsistant with that dutiful and ready obedience which we have always paid, and in every fortune will pay, to the law of the land. Obedience to the law is our first duty—our next is the peaceable and loyal pursuit, by all the constitutional channels left open for us, of that Emancipation which would not be the victory of party, but would be the means of consolidating the empire, by making the people of Ireland part and parcel of the common strength of the great British nation

Secondly.—I am able to state, that the cause of religious liberty, which we advocate, is certainly gaining ground in this country; much of the opposition to us I was in the habit of attributing to bigotry, and to an old dislike to the Irish. Since I came here, I am convinced I was in error, and that there is but little bigotry remaining, and still less of an anti-Irish feeling. No! The opposition to us at present, such as it is, is occasioned solely by an ignorance of the merits of our claims, and by the prejudices created by Orange calumniators I have perceived that it is quite sufficient to give an Englishman accurate information on the subject of the oppressions under which we labour, and the extent of the relief we seek, to convert him from an opponent into a steady and warm friend. The explanations before the Committees of both Houses in this way, have done great good; and our cause is winning its way on the English mind, by its native merits, in that friendly mode which is most desirable for the purpose of consolidating both countries in that cordial manner which would increase the wealth and strength of both.

Thirdly—I have the happiness to state my conviction that the Emancipation Bill will pass this session. I may be too sanguine, but that is my opinion. We can never be too grateful to Sir F. Burdett for the manner in which he introduced the measure, and for the unwearied exertions he has made, and is making, for the unwearied exertions he has made, and is making, for our cause. Mr. Plunkett, also, I am bound to say, and I say it willingly, that Mr. Plunkett has shewn himself most hearty, and sincere, and indefatigable, in this business I cannot be deceived on this point—I can pledge myself to the people of Ireland, that Mr. Plunkett is doing all that man can do—and more than, perhaps, any other man but himself could do, to carry this Bill

Fourthly—I have further the gratification to state, that it has been permitted to me to draw the rough draft of this Bill, in which I am engaged, and hope to have it ready on Wednesday next.

Fifthly—That this Bill, it it shall, as I do firmly expect, pass into a law, will put Catholics and Protestants on a level as to Civil rights—excepting the succession of the Throne, in the present Protestant family, which no person amongst us ever wished to see altered, and in which, as at present stated, we heartily concur—and except the offices of Lord Chancellor of England and Ireland.

Anecdotes.

YOUNG NAPOLEON.

A letter from a person of rank at Vienna, gives the following particulars relative to the Ex-King of Rome, who will be fourteen years of age on the 14th of next month. It is not true, as has been said, that his education is neglected, or merely such as would fit him for the ecclesiastical state. On the contrary it is on a much more liberal plan, and more likely to render him a military character. Besides reading books of general instruction, great care is taken to perfect him in all manly and robust exercises. His countenance, though handsomer than that of his father, has still that character of expression His constitution is strong, and his health uninterrupted, he possesses, for his age, a rare degree of sagacity. The Emperor sees him frequently, and seems to take much delight in him; he indulges him in all his boyish fantasies. He has already though so young, read the greater number of the memoirs relative to his father, but though the fineness of tact, extraordinary for his age, he never mentions the name of his father. Lately the Emperor made him a present of a little Horse, which happened to resemble a favorite Arabian Horse of Napoleon, called Le Vrais. The Emperor asked him what name he should give to his horse; "I wish to call him," said the child with great animation, "Le Vrais, because," here he hesitated for a moment, and then added, "because SOMEBODY that I love very much had a horse of the same name."

SIGNOR ANGELINI.—In the Pilote is the following curious article. "All the English papers have mentioned the circumstances of one Angelini, who offered himself to be hanged instead of the late Mr Fauntleroy. A Frenchman, who was travelling in Switzerland, happened to remain a few days at Friburgh, to enjoy the picturesque scenery of the environs. One day having extended his walk two leagues from Friburgh, he observed some steps cut in the side of a mountain — His curiosity being wakened, he followed the steps, and came to a door, over which was writen, "In the name of the Burgomaster of Friburgh, all passengers are requested to respect this austere asylum" The door being open he entered, and came to a wooden staircase which he ascended, and found himself at the opposite side of the mountain, at the bottom of which was a torrent, he turned on one side, and discovered a grotto, which he entered; and at a little distance saw a hermate seeming lost in deep contemplation, who happened to raise his eyes, met those of the stranger, whom he received with an "ave mon frere," in the Italian accent. In the course of the conversation, he informed his visitor, that he had lived there three years: that vegetables, the fish he caught in the river, together with the milk which the young female peasants brought him in exchange for religious reliques, constituted his only means of subsistence. He observed, that he had the pleasures of the world as well as the pains: and piously added, that hippiness was only to be found in God. After this he bade his guest farewell, and bestowed upon him his blessing. The traveller returning from his tour by the way of Friburgh, called upon his friend the hermit, but finding the abode of this holy man deserted, made inquiry of the people in the neighborhood and learned that he had been driven from his cave, and from his country by the authorities, for seducing the peasants who brought him food.—This holy man was tired of the pleasures of the world and meant to die in obscurity, lamenting his sins. This statue of weeping sin, whose only idea of hippiness was in the other world—was il Signor Angelini."

BALLAD.

Over the land, and over the sea,
Youth of my heart! will I follow thee.
See, I have doff'd my silken train,
My lace 'kerchief, and golden chain;
For cap and p'ume I've chang'd my veil,
And my pearl-wreath'd braid of the lily pale;
And for satin slippers, a buskin tied,
Made of the red deer's stiffen'd hide;
And my heavy length of yellow hair,—
Look on the river—'tis floati-g there.

Last night, I stood in my father's hall,
With broider'd robe, and Indian shawl:
Lovers caught each breath of my sigh,
And vassals watch'd the turn of mine eye;
A sandal-wood lute was in my hand,
And my step was the first in the saraband.
To-night I stand in the hunter's dress,
Belying my weak loneliness.
Instead of music, and dance, and song,
And serviteurs, and a courtly throng,
Is the quiet shade of the greenwood tree;
And for many false hearts, a true one in thee.

And I am happy. Oh! love should live
But for the sw-t life itself can give.
Where are gems like the lily, wet
With tears it has kiss'd from the violet?
Where is the lamp in a lady's bower,
Like the first pale star of the twilight hour?
What hand ever waked from the lute a tone
Like the nightingale's voice when she sings alone?
Not to the dark city, not to the false court,
Will health, and truth, and love, resort:
Their dwelling is made with the leaf and the flower,
Amid summer sun-shine and April shower;
They live by the brook and the forest tree,
In a wild sweet home, such as our's will be.

Emigration.—Late letters from Ireland agree in stating that a greater number of emigrants will sail this year for the Canadas, than in any former one.—Most of the vessels from that country for Quebec were waiting for passengers, and would not sail before the 15th April.

HALIFAX, April 23.

East India Trade.—A small company associated to trade with the East Indies has been undertaken in Halifax. It is to consist of 150 shares, of £100 currency each. It is intended to send one vessel only, as an experiment. The undertaking is highly creditable to the spirit of this mercantile community. We awaken by degrees from the long protracted torpor.

Extract of a letter from St. John's N. B.

St. John's, April 7, 1825.

Our Governor, Sir H. Douglas, is able and zealous, he is cordially supported by the country in his plans for promoting its advancement, and we are I think, on the full tide of prosperity. For the population of the Province, its revenue and commerce are astonishing. Our population is about 75,000 souls. The last year's revenue near £45,000 currency, the imports upwards of £500,000 sterling, and the exports full as much, including upwards of 16,000 tons of new shipping, built principally for sale, or for merchants in England, and to be fairly considered as exported manufactures: the value of the new shipping may be reckoned at £10 sterling per ton.

Mr. MORRIS moved, that it might be resolved, that the connecting the Lakes Erie and Ontario by a Canal Navigable for Sloops and Schooners, would tend greatly to the amount of Exports from this Province by placing it on a more favorable footing on terms more nearly equal with those on the St. Lawrence, that the consequent increase of the general trade of the two Provinces of Canada would be alike beneficial to both and that it may not therefore be unreasonable to hope that the Legislature of Lower Canada will manifest a disposition to concur in affording to so important an enterprise, their countenance and aid.

COPY.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Military order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c. &c. &c.

May it please Your Excellency.

The only Surviving Commissioner appointed under the authority of an Act of the Provincial Parliament of Upper Canada, passed in the thirty-fifth year of His late Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to provide for the erection of a Monument to the memory of the late Major General Sir Isaac Brock &c.

Most respectfully begs,

That the Commissioners on making inquiry found that the sum of One Thousand Pounds appropriated by an Act, was inadequate to erect any Monument worthy of the distinguished personage who had sacrificed his life in defence of the Province resource was therefore had to private subscriptions, but not with the success that the Commissioners had anticipated. In the mean time there was much difficulty in determining what sort of a Monument to construct upon the limited means in their power and several plans were examined and rejected on account of their great expense.

It was not till last year, that the Commissioners (all then alive) came to the Resolution of erecting a Column near the place where the gallant General fell, which they were in hopes might be finished for the sum in their hands, which from subscriptions interest and rate of exchange amounted to nearly Two Thousand Pounds.

According a plan and estimate were approved of, and the work began, but it was discovered as the Column was about to be finished that the shaft was not sufficiently long, and that the whole would be entirely out of proportion. The Commissioner were therefore advised to suspend the work in order to procure a more correct model, and the additional means of its completion

The other two Commissioners, Thomas Dickson and Robert Nichol, Esqrs. being dead, it became my duty to ascertain the additional sum requisite for finishing the Column in the proper manner, which an Engineer of eminence computes to be about Six Hundred Pounds.

All which is most respectfully submitted,
(Signed,) THOMAS CLARK,
Surviving Commissioner
