linen; before him was a pair of horse pistol holsters, in which he kept his sketch-book, papers, pens, and ink, and three or four silk and cambric handkerchiefs, which he was in the habit of dipping in the rivers and springs, and rubbing his forehead with. No man was more particular in the attendance of his servants, and no one had ever less occasion for their services. He kept them for the convenience of his friends alone, and in that particular certainly studied their comforts to the neglect of his own. We took the road to Verona, which was a favorite city of his Lordship's, from a romantic notion which he entertained that the Romeo and Juliet of Shakespeare had absolutely existed within its walls, and he has been heard to declare, that he would point out the ruins of Friar Lawrence's hermitage. In fact, like Gray and Mason with their Druids, Temples of Odin, and Fatal Sisters, his Lordship brooded over darkened scenes, accordant with his imaginings. All he "thought each strange tale devoutly true."

Communications:

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

YORK, 13th May, 1823.

ALLOW me, Sir, to state, that the Z. Y. who appeared in the last OBSERVER, and he who appeared some time before in your Paper under the same Signature, are different persons. I was led to this, by observing a Communication in the OBSERVER under this Signature, respecting the state of the Roads, to which, (whatever may be its merits,) I have no title; and it seems to me hardly fair in one person to communicate his ideas under a Signature so recently used by another, as it must lead the public to believe that they were written by the same person. If any one wishes to embark his literary talents in the public prints, it is but just that he should sail under his own colours, and he should not try the strength of his pinions at the expense of another.

Yours, &c.

Poetry.

For the Weekly Register.

An humble minstrel of an humble but romantic and beautiful spot, solicits from the Editor of the Weekly Register his indulgence to the following tribute effusions They were partly dictated by impressions received from the surrounding scenery, and regret at leaving so sweet a retirement for the more gay and busy world.

From icy winter's cheerless gloom,
Cold and dismal as the tomb—
From sunless skies that scowl, and bring
Tempests wild and withering,—
Sweet is the change when dee away
Those waning storms beneath the ray
That, glowing, sheds o'er earth and sea
Spring's soft and bright tranquility.—
Sweet is each blossom newly born,
Fair pageants of the vernal morn!—
Kiss'd by Apollo's playful beam,
Fair are the wanderings of the stream;
Its Siren murmurs, as it flows,
Lulling the bosom to repose.—
Sweet, as the peaceful waters heave
With the soft swell the wild winds leave.
Beneath the hallowing moonlight smiling.
Beautiful as the heaving breast
Of infants in their guiltless rest.
Nor can that slumber pure beguiling—
Sweet in the dewy hour of even,
When hearts catch, too, the balm of heaven,
And wish, as day's decline we view,
Our exit were as lovely too—
Sweet, when the starry skies are glowing,
And balmy Zephyrs, softly blowing,
Steal through the quivering leaves, and pay
Its sighs their fond farewell to day.—
Sweet, when day's songsters carol too,
That vesper-hymn and lov'd adieu!
'Scap'd from the world's wild, wintry jar,
Sweet, my Cora sweeter far
That winning voice's melody,
Soft as the Zephyr sich of even
That glowing smile and beaming eye
Kind as the laughing ray of heaven—
To dash the tear-drop from this brow
And chase the lingering cloud of woe.
But ah! life's chills will blight the blossom
Nurtur'd in this hapless bosom—
So might I wish for changeless spring,
Or books of everunbowed never,
As hope that smile again will bring
A bliss to me, and bless for ever:
With that no sound but notes of gladness
Would startle thought, and never sadness
Fling its chill silence o'er the grave,
Echoing now with lays of love,
As hope that voice again to me—
Will bring its thrilling witchery.

Yes, my Cora, we must part—
The vernal blossom of the heart,
Love's early flowers there gaily blooming
Beneath those lovely smiles illuming,
Chok'd by the tear and scorching sigh
Must wither now and droop and die.
—Farewell! and shall we meet again,
Ask not the faithless, reckless main!—
Ask not the bark all madly driven,
But raise that angel-voice to heaven.

may come into their hands by virtue of this Act, and to apply the same, after the expenses of carrying this Act into effect, in discharge of such certificates as shall be granted to persons having claims or demands; Provided always, that if it shall so happen that the whole or any of the persons herein named as Commissioners and Trustees, shall be unwilling to act in such Commission and Trust or that any vacancy shall occur therein, then and in such case the Honorable George Herkimer Markland, John Kerby, and John Macaulay, or any two of them, shall, and they are hereby authorised and required to nominate and appoint at their discretion a person or persons to act as Commissioner or Commissioners, as aforesaid; and provided always, that in any subsequent vacancy the acting Commissioners, or a majority of them, shall have power, and they are hereby required to appoint a fit and discreet person to supply such vacancy.

Power of filling vacancies in the Board.

II. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Commissioners, or the majority of them, shall have full power and authority to hear and determine all claims and demands against the said Bank, as well by the Stockholders for the amount of the Stock originally subscribed for or purchased by them, whether declared forfeited by the rules of the said Bank or not, and holders of the Notes of the said Bank for the value thereof, as by other creditors of the said Association, and to grant the claimants certificates of the amount so found due to them, which certificates shall bear interest from the date thereof, and be paid by the said Board out of any monies that shall come into their hands by virtue of this Act, Provided always, That no certificates that may be granted to the said Benjamin Whitney, Smith Bartlet, or either of them, or to any other Director or Officer, or Stockholder of the said Association shall be paid until the certificates granted to other persons shall have been first paid and discharged.

Board to hear thirdly to hear and determine all claims.

III. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Board shall have full power and authority to call before them, by Warrant or otherwise, as may be deemed most expedient, all or any of the Directors and other Officers of the said Company, and to require them to produce all the Books, Papers and other documents of the said Bank, and to examine them touching the affairs of the said Bank, and to reduce their examination to writing to be filed amongst the records of the said Board, and also to commit the said persons or any of them, or bind them in recognizances, either alone or with sureties, according as the Board shall deem expedient, for further examination; and also in case they or any of them shall refuse to make a full discovery of the affairs of the said Bank, or to produce any books, papers, or documents relating thereto in their possession, power or control, when thereunto required by the said Board, he or they so refusing, shall stand committed to the common Gaol of the District where the Board shall sit until he or they shall comply therewith.

And upon refusal to give evidence, &c. to commit them to Gaol.

Board to appoint a Clerk.

IV. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Board shall appoint a Clerk who shall sign all Warrants, Certificates and other papers by order of the Board, who shall receive such a stipend while employed as the said Board shall deem proper, to be paid out of such monies as shall come into their hands by virtue of this Act.

Days and places of meeting to be published.

V. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Board shall from time to time appoint certain days and places, when and where they will sit for the hearing of claims, and shall publish the same in such newspapers as they shall deem expedient.

Persons authorised to administer Oaths.

VI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Board, their Clerk, and all Commissioners for taking affidavits in the Court of King's Bench shall have power to administer Oaths to all persons required to be examined by virtue of this Act, and that all and every person or persons who shall forswear himself or themselves in any affidavit or examination taken in pursuance of this Act, shall upon conviction, incur all the pains and penalties which may be inflicted upon persons guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury by the Laws of this Province.

Penalty of Perjury inflicted for taking false Oaths.

Board to keep an account of all Notes redeemed by them.

VII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said Board shall keep an account of all the Notes presented to them for payment, and for which they shall give such certificates as aforesaid, and shall, upon giving the said certificates, write upon the said Notes in red ink, "Cancelled and certified by the Board," and shall deposit the same with the records of the Board until the affairs of the said Bank shall be fully settled and adjusted.

Parties concerned in the said Bank authorised to bring actions one against the other

VII. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful for the said Board shall find it necessary to appropriate the whole or any part of the share or shares of the profit or stock, found by them to belong to the said Benjamin Whitney, Smith Bartlet, or any other Officer or Director, or Stockholder of the said pretended Bank, they, the said Benjamin Whitney, Smith Bartlet, or other Officer or Director, or Stockholder, or their respective executors or administrators, shall and may severally and respectively have and maintain an action or actions at Law, as for money had and received, the one against the other, his executors or administrators, for any loss sustained by the party bringing such action against the other by whose fraud, defalcation, abstraction or misapplication of the funds of the said Bank, the Board aforesaid may so find it necessary to make such appropriation.

Board to furnish an annual account of their proceedings to be laid before the Legislature.

IX. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Commissioners aforesaid, and all such Commissioners as may be appointed under and by virtue of this Act, shall furnish an annual account and statement of the affairs of the said Bank and their proceedings therein, to be laid before the Legislature of this Province, the first day of every Session, till the final settlement and closure of the said affairs by this Act committed to them.

Sales of the estates of the Directors prohibited until affairs of the Bank are closed.

X. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all sale, conveyance or transfer whatsoever, of the private property or estates of the said Benjamin Whitney, Smith Bartlet, John William Ferguson, Christopher Alexander Hagerman, Henry Murney, John M'Lean, Thomas Dalton, Archibald Richmond, John Cumming, Neil M'Leod, or any or either of them, heretofore made in contemplation of the insolvency or failure of the said Bank, or in contemplation of evading any remedies to be provided by law for the security of the public against losses by the said Institution, are hereby declared to be fraudulent and void, and of none effect; and that no sale, conveyance, or transfer, hereafter to be made by the said Benjamin Whitney, Smith Bartlet, John M. Ferguson, Christopher Alexander Hagerman, Henry Murney, John M'Lean, Thomas Dalton, Archibald Richmond, John Cumming and Neil M'Leod, or any or either of them, or their respective property or estates, shall be good or valid in law, till the final adjustment of the said affairs of the said Bank, except with the consent of the said Commissioners or a majority of them, by instrument under their hands and seals, giving and expressing such consent; Provided nevertheless, That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to repeal any provisions or remedies made and provided in an Act of the British Parliament passed in the fourteenth year of the Reign of George the second, chapter thirty-seven, entituled "An Act for restraining and preventing several unwarrantable schemes and undertakings in his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America."

This Act not to affect remedies under the 14th Geo. 2d. ch. 37.

VOL. II. No. 21.

THURSDAY, MAY 22, 1823.

Colonial Committee.

The Letter of EUSEBIUS has been received and is now lying before us.—It refers to a matter of that the unworthy magistrate. great moral importance, and must be attended to, though we cannot insert it in the present Number of our Publication. The liberty and sacred profession of the Press is not merely an inestimable security of public rights and freedom, but it serves as the cause of private virtue by ever-awing vice, and lashing folly, whenever the moral structure of society is threatened.

We are very desirable there are many subjects for severe and merited animadversion, even in this slanderly peopled community, and we are furnished with some instances that we shall deem it no less easy to bring forward at an early period, in consequence of our private admonitions being unattended to.—The natural tendency of mal practices, long continued, is blindness and obduracy—until the coil of iniquity, is wholly unfolded, and the extremity of the line is found;—then comes the hour of shame and vengeance, and the cowardice which ever marks secret villany, leaves the wretch exposed, under the irresistible lash of universal indignation without a single ray of hope to shelter him ever to rise again.

If the name of the party in the case alluded to by EUSEBIUS is made known to His EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR (who, as is well observed by this writer, "hath taken his station by the side of religion and virtue,") we have no doubt

SELECTIONS FROM BRITISH & FOREIGN JOURNALS.

Death of Lord Keith.—Information has been received of the death of Admiral Lord Keith, G. C. B. near Kinceardine, North Britain. His Lordship was made a Post Captain, March 11, 1778; a Rear Admiral of the Blue, Feb. 14, 1795; a Rear Admiral of the White, June 1, 1795; and Admiral, January 1st, 1801.

He celebrated Generals. Duke [illegible] near London on the 14th of March aged 84 years.

Mr Charles Kemble had gone to Lausanne, to convey his brother's remains to England, for interment in one of the National Cemeteries.

Two men were executed in Ireland, on the 12th March, for the murder of Major Going, on the 14th October, 1821. This unfortunate country still continues in a very unsettled state.

A Tailor has been applied to in London, to ascertain the price at which he will furnish uniforms for 1000 Irishmen, who are about to join the Constitutionalists of Spain.

Barca, Mysterious!—An Algerine squadron sailed Feb 4. for Egypt.—The Dutch Consul had given notice that if they took a Spanish vessel, the Dutch squadron would attack them.

Slavery in England.—It is a curious fact, that so late as the year 1283 the Slave-trade existed in England; as may be seen by the Annals of Dunstable, wherein is the following passage:—"this year we sold our slave by birth Wm. Pike, and all his family, and received one mark from the buyer."

SLAVERY IN BRITISH COLONIES

In the British House of Commons on the 13th of March, Mr. Wilberforce presented a petition relating to slavery in the British Colonies.

Mr. W. remarked that the petition originated with the Society of Friends commonly called Quakers, and it prayed for the gradual abolition of slavery throughout the British dominions. It was to him a matter of much gratification to recollect that the first petition which had ever been presented to Parliament against the Slave Trade proceeded from the same body.—They then, as they did now, appealed to the great principles of humanity and righteousness, contended that the country ought not to pursue a course of conduct,— when justice and humanity prescribed another. The petition was read and ordered to be printed, Mr. F. Buxton gave notice that he would call up the subject on the 23d of April.

There seems to be an intimated acquiescence on the part of the self-styled Liberals of Portugal to the wickedness and oppression of the slave-trade! In the course of yesterday's debate, Mr. Canning mentioned that Portugal had absolutely refused to consider either of the points given up by the government of the Netherlands. The first was, that every ship taken with one slave only on board should be subject to the same consequences as if she carried a cargo of them; and the second, that a ship wrongfully fitted up as a slave ship should equally be regarded as engaged in that traffic.—Both the points Spain had conceded, but Portugal had refused.

Opportune Illness.—The King and Queen of Spain remained ill on the 27th March. The Queen had grown worse. The King had made some further changes in his ministry.—Fifty four persons were arrested at Valencia, on the 9th, and six of them shipped off.

March 29th was appointed for the departure of the King for Seville—and he was expected to be 20 days on the road.

Curious Relics.—It is a fact not generally known, that the sheet which received the head of Charles I. after his decapitation at Whitehall is carefully preserved along with the common pall, in the church at Ashburnham; the blood with which it has been stained entirely covered, now appears black. The watch of the unfortunate monarch is also deposited with the linen, the movements of which are still in perfect. These relics came into the possession of an ancestor of the present Lord Ashburnham, immediately after the death of the King.

Portuguese Patriotism.—In the sitting of the Portuguese Cortes of the 6th, Mr. Moura proposed, and the Assembly approved of, the establishment of National Guards—and, at the conclusion of his speech, the Hon Member, all his Colleagues and the spectators repeated the oath to die, if necessary for the Constitution.

INDIAN CONJURERS.

(From HARRIOT'S Struggles through Life.)

Without any pretension to being thought a conjurer myself, I may venture to give a general opinion of the relative merits of the natives of Europe and those of Asia. In a variety of slight and trifling practices, the Asiatics may be reckoned at least equal to their European brethren, while some of their objects of deception and dexterity appear on a far larger scale and more difficult to account for. As specimens, I will mention an instance or two.

At a chaveau, or treat, given to a large party of officers, in a tope, or grove, of mangoe trees, a travelling conjurer and son made their grand salaam in the course of the afternoon, offering to shew their exploits. The boy, who might be eleven or twelve years old, knelt down at about three or four yards distance; my officer was desired to take a melon and place it on the boy's head. The father, driving a crotch stake into the ground near to us, charged his match lock gun with powder, and then requested any of the company to load it with a bullet which he produced. Kneeling down, he took his aim by resting the point of his long gun on the crotch; and firing, shot through the melon. This he performed three times, and there was no appearance of collusion, the boy being closely watched by officers who stood a little apart on each side of him. We credited the father accordingly for his excellent shot; but he so confidently decried us in some other feats of dexterity, that, at the close of his performances, we concluded there must have been some deception in his firing at the melon, though we could not discover it. One of his tricks was as follows:—

He put the boy into a round basket with a lid to cover it; but first sent the boy with another such basket empty, which he placed on the earth about the same distance he had been fired at. When the lid of the basket was tied down over the boy, the father spoke, and the voice answered as from the boy in the basket close to us. The father ordered his son to remove into the basket that had been carried and placed at the distance of sixty yards or more, empty; and in about the time it might have taken to walk that distance, the son called to his father, the voice sounding as from the farther basket. On this, the father untied the lid, opened and turned the basket up, empty; and, ordering the boy to shew himself, he did so by rising up from the distant basket. This feat, or trick, was repeated, but we could not discover it.

At another time, I have seen a girl, about fifteen years of age, suspended in the centre of a large tent, without any apparent means of supporting her from falling. She was huddled all in a heap and swaddled thick with clothes, so as to shew only her face, which looked sickly. We were not allowed to touch either her or the bundle she was wrapped in, but we cut the air above and below her every way with our swords, as we walked round her, without being able to account by what means the bundle, with the girl in the middle, was suspended. I resign it therefore, for solution, to more able conjurers than myself.

FRANCE.

PARIS, March 15

The Duke d'Angoulême set out this morning for the Army. His Royal Highness left the palace of the Tuileries at four minutes before nine o'clock. After breakfasting with his Majesty, he proceeds first to Perpignan, and thence along the line of the Pyrenees, and the different divisions of the army to Bayonne. A small number of persons assembled to witness his departure, but no particular feeling was manifested. His Royal Highness and suite occupied two carriages; his servants and baggage had been sent away some days ago.

A courier arrived this morning at the English Embassy from Madrid. He left the Spanish capital on the morning of the 7th. Every thing was then tranquil. The Court was preparing for its transfer to Seville.

The noble Commandants of the 22 legions of the National Guards are now ashamed of their orders of the day. They find that in order to be the interpreters of the feelings of their corps, they have given them a language which they indignantly repel. The great body of them are enraged at being declared liable to laws contrary to the spirit of their institution. The denounced sergeant has become not only the object of their applause but of their liberality. It has been announced, that a sword is to be given him by his comrades. In addition to this mark of regard, more than 600 of them have subscribed to offer him a great dinner on the 29th inst. M. Jouve Mabon, a painter, who is employed in repairing the apartments of the Duchess of Berry, being a captain in the National Guard, is to preside. He thus exposes the advantages of situation, to testify his regard to his principles.

PERPIGNAN, March 10

The Baron d'Eroles has established his head quarters at St Laurent de Salanque, and is to complete his army there. 2400 men of the Army of the Faith have been stationed from St Hyppolite to Villeneuve de la Riviere, so that the head quarters are in the centre; 2000 men of the same army are to be cantoned in the neighbourhood of Bayonne, Ayera.

The French Sergeant who refused to execute the order of the Chamber of Deputies against Manuel, has received many marks of attention from the most distinguished characters in Paris. a public entertainment was given to him, and he has been presented with swords, snuff boxes, and many other articles with appropriate inscriptions.—The sentiments expressed by the National Guard, with respect to this celebrated character, have been considered by the nobility sufficient to justify a new combination of that body, by which they will not be permitted to choose their own officers.—This measure sufficiently evinces the degree of confidence which should be placed in the soldiers of France under the present government.

The French Press remains under the most severe restrictions; a Printer has been deprived of his right to print, for a slight infringement of the laws which govern the Press—so much for the freedom enjoyed by the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty.

POMOLOGY.

As the season is at hand for making experiments on Fruit Trees we cannot do better than republish the following striking illustration of facts which may be turned to good account by all those attached to pursuits of this interesting nature.

Fruit Trees—The Rev. Mr. Hempel, Secretary to the Pomological Society of Altenburg, in Saxony, has recently published a small work, entitled, 'An Easy, Simple, and Infallible Method to Force every Fruit Tree to Blossom, and to Bear Fruit.' Of this highly important and interesting pamphlet we present the lovers of horticulture with a translation from the German.

In my early years, I saw my father, who was fond of Pomology, and skilled in that science, cutting a ring on several branches of trees, which already were in blossom, for the purpose of producing by that means, larger fruit than usual. This was to his invention, but, as far as I can recollect, derived from a French Journal. Thirty years ago, when I was a boy, I practised this operation in imitation of him, and thereby obtained large pears and plums.

In repeating this operation of ringing the branches, which I did merely for the purpose of getting larger fruit, I observed that the branches so operated upon always bore the next year. By this repeated appearance I was led to the idea, that perhaps this mode of ringing the bark might be a means of compelling every unproductive branch to yield fruit. With this view, I cut rings upon a considerable number of branches, which as yet showed no blossom, and found, by repeated experiments, the truth of my supposition indisputably confirmed by experience.

The application of this experiment, whereby upon every bough or branch fruit may artificially be produced, is very simple and easy, and the mode of proceeding as follows:

1. With a sharp knife make a cut in the bark of the branch which you mean to force to bear, and notice from the place where it is connected with the stem; or, if it be a small branch, or shoot, near to where it is joined to the larger bough. The cut is to go round the branch, or to encircle it, and to penetrate to the wood. A quarter of an inch from this cut, you make a second cut, like the first, round the branch, so that by both encircling the branch, you mark a ring upon the branch; a quarter of an inch between these two cuts you clean away with the knife, down to the wood, removing even the fine inner bark, which immediately lies upon the wood, so that no connection whatever remains between the two parts of the bark, but the bare and naked wood appears white and smooth. But this bark ring, which is to compel the tree to bear, must not be made at the right time, that is, when buds, nature's buds are strongly swelling or beaking out into blossoms. In the same year a callous is formed at the edges of the ring, on both sides, and the connection of the bark, that had been interrupted, is restored again without any detriment on the tree, or the branch operated upon, in which the artificial wound soon again grows over.

By this simple, though artificial means of forcing every fruit tree, with certainty, to bear, you obtain the following important advantages:

1. You may compel every young tree, of which you do not know the sort, to show its fruit, and decide sooner, whether, being of a good quality, it may remain in its first state, or requires to be grafted.

2. You may thereby, with certainty, get fruit of every good sort, of which you wish to see the produce, in the next year.

3. This method may probably serve to increase considerably the quantity of fruit in the country.

The branches so operated upon are long full of fruit, while the others that are not ringed, often have nothing, or very little on them. This will be easy to be explained from the theory of the motion of the sap; for, when the sap moves slowly to arrive, it produces fruit buds, which is the case in old trees; when it moves vigorously, the tree forms wood, or runs into shoots, as happens with young trees.

Though I arrived at this discovery myself, in consequence of trying the same process with a different view, namely, to increase only the size of the fruit, but not to force barren branches, that were only furnished with leaf-buds, to bear, this latter application being before quite unknown to me; I will, on that account, by no means save myself out for the first inventor of this operation, but I was ignorant of the effects to be produced by this method, and only discovered them by repeated experiments of my own, which I made for the promotion of pomology. Frequent experience of the completest success has confirmed the truth of my observations. Nor do I think that this method is generally known, at least to all those to whom I showed the experiment, the effect produced appeared new and surprising. At all events, the method, supposing it even to be an invention of other date, is, as far as I know, not yet been fully described by any one, who publishes [illegible]

Mr Bostwick in the chair.

The House resumed

Mr. Bostwick reported the Bill amended

On the question for receiving the Report, the House divided.

YEAS	NAYS.
Messrs Kerr, Nichol, Clark, Wilmot, Hamilton of Wentworth, Walsh, Gates, McLean of Stormont Vankoughnet, Hamilton of Lincoln, Hagerman Bostwick, and Ruttan—13	Messrs. Randal, Hornor, Wilson of Wentworth, Jones of Leeds, Shaver, and Casey—6.

Question gained—Majority 7, and the Report was received accordingly

On Motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr Vankoughnet, the Bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time on the morrow.

Mr. McLean of Stormont from the Committee appointed to confer with the Conferrees of the honorable the Legislative Council, on the subject matter of the District Court Bill, reported that they had met the Conferrees on the part of that honorable House, when the following Amendments to the above-mentioned Bill were by them proposed

In the second Clause to expunge the words, "the several days upon," and insert "the Monday of the week in."—The effect of this amendment would be, that the several District and Surrogate Courts would commence on the Monday of the week in which the Quarter Sessions would be held. It was also proposed to insert at the end of the Clause the following words, "And the Judge presiding in each of the said District Courts shall make his precept for summoning the Jury returnable on the first day of each term respectively: Provided always, that no Jury summoned to attend any District Court in this Province, shall be required or obliged to attend at such Court for a longer period than one week."

In the third Clause it was proposed to insert the words, "the expiration of six weeks," and to expunge the words, "any time."—This amendment, if adopted, would give to Defendants a period of six weeks after verdict rendered before any Judgment could be entered up.

It was proposed to expunge the fifth Clause, and in its stead to insert, "And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful for any Plaintiff or Defendant, in any Action now pending, or hereafter to be brought in any District Court in this Province, to sue out a writ or writs of Subpœna, as occasion may require, from the Office of the Clerk of the Crown or Deputy Clerk of the Crown in any District in this Province, to compel the attendance of any witness or witnesses resident out of the Jurisdiction of the District Court in which such Action shall be brought or pending, to give evidence at the trial of such Action; which writ or writs of Subpœna shall be as effectual, and the person or persons disobeying the same shall be liable to the same penalties as if the Action had been commenced and prosecuted in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench in this Province; and the said Court of King's Bench shall have power and authority to proceed against the person or persons disobeying the said writ or writs of Subpœna, as in other cases of contempt."

Your Committee consented to recommend the proposed amendments, with the exception of that to the third Clause, to the adoption of this Honorable House

Your Committee were induced to withhold their consent to the amendments proposed to the third Clause, by the consideration, that if adopted, it would give to Defendants a period of six weeks more than, according to the existing Laws, they are entitled to, before Execution could be issued against them

Mr. Wilmot from the Committee, to whom were referred the Petitions of the Inhabitants of the County of Durham, and of Joseph Losee, and others, of Whitby, Reported, That however desirable it might be to grant to the Petitioners a sum of money for the Repairs of the Highways set forth in their Petitions, yet in the present low state of the Public Funds of the Province, they cannot justify themselves in recommending the Prayers of the Petitioners to the favorable consideration of your Honorable House

Agreeably to Notice, Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Kerr, moved that the Report of the Committee of the whole House on the State of the Province, and the Administration of the Provincial Government, the Salaries and other Allowances to the Officers and Clerks of the several Executive Departments had been considerably augmented.

2nd. That although unacquainted with the cause of such augmentation, they believed it to have been in consequence of the depreciated value of money, and consequent high prices of commodities.

3rd. That the same cause no longer existing, it was expedient that the said Salaries and Allowances should be reduced to their original amount, or as nearly as might be found practicable to the scale authorized previous to the year 1796.

4th That an humble address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, founded on the preceding Resolutions, and praying His Excellency to take the subject into His serious consideration, and thereupon to direct such reduction in the Public Expenditure as might be deemed practicable to be made.

Which was carried.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr Shaver, Messrs Jones of Leeds and Burwell were ordered to draw up an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor pursuant to the Resolution of the House

Agreeably to the order of the day, Harris' Patent Bill was read the second time.

On Motion of Mr. Willson of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Hornor, the House went into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. Randal in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr Randal reported the Bill as amended.

The report was ordered to be received

Mr Boulton Master in Chancery, brought down from the Honorable the Legislative Council, a message informing the Commons House of Assembly that they had agreed to a Conference on the Law Report Bill, and had appointed a Committee for that purpose.

On motion of Mr. Kerr, seconded by Mr. Gates, Messrs. Hagerman, Nichol, McLean of Stormont, and Hamilton of Wentworth, were ordered as a Committee to confer with the Committee of the Honorable the Legislative Council on the Law Report Bill

On motion of Mr Willson of Wentworth, seconded by Mr Hornor, the Bill for granting a Patent to Daniel Harris was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time on the morrow.

Mr Hagerman from the Committee to whom was referred the subject of the Loan to be obtained for the purpose of compensating the losses of His Majesty's Subjects in this Province, sustained during the late war with the United States of America, reported a Bill, which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr Nichol, seconded by Mr. Kerr, the Loan Interest Bill was ordered to be read a second time on the morrow,

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Weights and Measures Bill was read the second time.

On motion of Mr Ruttan seconded by Mr Hamilton of Lincoln, the House went into Committee on the Bill.

Mr Hagerman in the Chair.

The House resumed

Mr Hagerman reported the Bill without amendment.

The Report was ordered to be received.

On motion of Mr Ruttan, seconded by Mr. Hamilton of Lincoln, the Weights and Measures Bill was ordered for a third reading the following day

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Intercourse Amendment Bill was read the second time

On motion of Mr Vankoughnet, seconded by Mr. Kerr, the House went into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. McLean of Stormont was called to the Chair of the Committee.

The House resumed

Mr McLean reported the Bill as amended.

The report was ordered to be received

On motion of Mr Vankoughnet, seconded by Mr. Hagerman, the Intercourse Amendment Bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time on the following day.

Adjourned.

Poetry.

Three Things a Good Wife should be like; with Three Things she should not be like.

A wife domestic, good and pure,
Like SNAIL, should keep within her door;
But not like Snail, in silver track,
Place all her wealth upon her back.
A Wife should be, like ECHO, true,
And speak but when she's spoken to;
But not, like Echo, still be heard
Contending for the last word.
Like a TOWN CLOCK a Wife should be,
Keep time and regularity;
But not, like Clocks, turn tongue so clear,
That all the town her voice might hear.
Young man, if these allusions strike,
She whom as bride you'd hail,
Must just be like, and just unlike,
In every SNAIL, and CLOCK, and STEAD!!

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the Sun—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 22.

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

THE important news of the passage of the Bidassoa by the French army and of a formal declaration of war on the part of France against Spain, which was inserted at length in the Sun, having been contradicted in the most positive manner by the Courier, we have considered it useless to give any account of it in this paper

Symptoms of Bissextile, or Leap Year, have already made their appearance.—We have been favoured with a deeply interesting communication from an "antiquated virgin," which it would be exceedingly ungallant on our part wholly to neglect, although we are not without our suspicions that the lady wears "blue stockings," and is somewhat of the masculine order;—however, as female correspondence is always most delightful to us, and as we may expect to have our hands full next year, when it will be the privilege of many a lovely maiden now languishing in a state of "single blessedness" to make such overtures to the obdurate of the other sex, as to her may seem good—we had better, perhaps, begin by arranging matters first with those who cannot well contain for a few months longer.—it is most probable, therefore, that the powerful appeal sent to us by the fair correspondent alluded to, will appear in our next—together with some pretty verses from the same quarter.

It would give us pleasure to meet the wishes of Mr. ARGYLL, but his communication is too long for our columns, in the present state of public business.—If he gives us permission to abridge, and state his case as well as we can, in our own way, we have no objection to do it—for we really sympathize with him in his disappointments, believing he deserves well of the public.—The Petition of the Saddlers and Harness-makers of York is under consideration.

EUSEBIUS will see his letter in this number.—He is, evidently, an able writer; and, what is better, a man of sound principles.—We hope his communication will have the desired effect. Without being personal, he has pointed to the delinquent with as much delicacy as could be observed in a case of such a nature.—He shall always find us ready to co-operate in any service which has for its object the suppression of vice, and the support and encouragement of that virtue without which, the greatest states and proudest monarchies must gradually moulder away, and be as the cities of the earth whose places may be sought and not found.

Mr. Gourlay has not only once more addressed the Under Secretary of State on the subject of this country, and his own affairs; but, he has induced Mr. Home the "bonny Jem of Aberdeen" to allude to his case, as being one of great hardship, in the House of Commons; in the course of which allusion Mr. H. was so unlucky as to say that he spoke "feelingly" when he observed that it was "hard to a poor man merely to accuse the over-wealthy some" a remark which occasioned much laughter in the House, since there is not, perhaps, any Member of that august assembly so continuously troublesome as himself; and, with all his logic, it would be difficult for him to point out a more legitimate cause for expulsion than that of being criminally troublesome, which was the fact in Gourlay's case: we were pleased, therefore, to find Mr WILMOT rising to assert, that the wandering, crack brained radical "had grossly vilified the Government of Upper Canada."—We suspect the cause of this singular character will not gain much by the change of his parliamentary advocate from Sir James M'Intosh to Mr. Home

Since we began this Commentary, we have received the Albion of the 17th instant, in which we find the following paragraph, which seems to shew that the Sun was not altogether misinformed:—

"We have received private information, from a source on which we can rely, THAT THE FRENCH ARMY PASSED THE BIDASSOA ON THE 24TH MARCH.—Thus the invasion of Spain is at length commenced"—Courier.

Before we conclude, we must notice, (since it is too late to do it in any other part of the paper,) a very calamitous event that occurred about 3 o'clock yesterday morning in Newgate-street in this town. An elegant mansion lately repaired, and to which many conveniences have been added, the property of SAML RIDOUT, Esq. was totally consumed by fire. Mrs. COCKBURN, the amiable and truly respectable mistress of a Seminary for young ladies, well known in this Province, was to have removed, with her whole establishment, into this house in the course of yesterday, and we are sorry to say, that independent of the cruel disappointment and inconvenience to which this deserving lady is subjected by the unforeseen calamity, she has sustained a serious pecuniary loss.—Mr Ridout's property was insured to the amount, as we are told, of £500. What adds to the dark features of this distressing event is the suspicion, there is but too great reason to entertain, that it did not proceed from accident, but was the work of some abandoned incendiary—though one would have thought both the parties interested in the property, thus wickedly destroyed, as free—and as decently free, from personal enemies, as the lot of humanity could permit. We have something to say hereafter on the subject of the Fire-Engine, which it was found would not play, and respecting certain regulations that should be adopted, as precautionary measures for the future, which we cannot now insert.

As the following Card came too late for insertion in its proper place, we cannot refuse it admission at the end of our commentary.

A CARD.

Mr S. Ridout begs leave to return his thanks to the Inhabitants of the Town and to the Officers and Troops of His Majesty's Reg't in Garrison, through whose prompt assistance at the fire yesterday morning, part of his property was saved.

Selections From British & Foreign Journals.

THE KING.

BRIGHTON, April 2, 1823.

It is with much concern we state, that His Majesty experienced a fresh attack of gout in his foot last night, which, however, was as slight as sudden and we have the happiness to add that His Majesty was pronounced much better this morning. At this time (half past 9 o'clock P. M.) the physician's report is equally favourable. A council would have been held at the Palace to day but for the above event; its delay is not expected to exceed a day or two.

BRIGHTON, April 3.

Three o'clock P. M.—The slight but sudden re-visitation of gout in His Majesty was mentioned yesterday. It is with extreme satisfaction we this day add, that the promising symptoms of yesterday were not fallacious. The gratifying report to enquirers at the palace this morning has been, 'His Majesty has had a good night, and is much better to day.'

MADRID, March 20

The King, Queen and Infants attended by the great officers of State left Madrid this morning. There were but few people (not short 200) in the square of the Palace to witness their departure; but a vast concourse assembled at the gate of Toledo through which they were expected to pass, as the Guards had been stationed there from an early hour. Amongst the crowd there was doubtless a variety of different sentiments but all seemed dejected and the common wish evidently was that the King might not leave Madrid. A strong body of troops with artillery were on duty in the Plaza de la Constitution, to repress any disorder which might arise.—The Royal party left the Palace privately in Sedan Chairs a little before eight, and got into their carriages upon a private road, they thus avoided passing through the gate from which the troops were withdrawn about nine. At 9 o'clock all remained quiet. The Cortes will remain for a few days.

The Farmers' Journal says:—We are authorized to state that as soon as the Easter Holidays are over, practical steps will be taken to invite and form an extensive union of the landed interest, and to convene meetings of the same, to take into consideration the condition of the Agricultural and landed property at this important crisis.

A severe shock of an Earthquake was experienced at Palermo, on the 5th March—a number of houses and churches were destroyed and many live lost.

An Aide de Camp of General Guilleminot was arrested yesterday, and delivered into the custody of two gendarmes, who have taken him to Paris. The reason assigned for this arrest, is a military conspiracy in which he is implicated.

Two battalions of volunteers have arrived at Barcelona from Majorca. Ten thousand muskets of English manufacture have been landed at Bilboa.

Contradictory.—The Courier of the 5th April, contradicts the report published in the Sun and some other London papers, that our Government had received the Declaration of War, and that a day had been appointed for its delivery; and asserts that this, as well as the alarm of the French Government lest our sailors should enter the service of Spain are groundless fabrications. The Sun assumed such an air of authenticity, in the publication of these events, that if the reports are really unfounded, it has succeeded completely in mystifying the country Journals. The Glasgow paper from which we copied the news gave it without any remark.

Authentic.—We lately informed the public that the army Surgeons had been applied to with a view to ascertain the number of those who were ready for service.—The application produced the resignation of a great many of the Medical attendants of the army, and we understand that the vacancies are immediately to be filled up by persons who must be ready to take the field with their regiments, at the shortest notice.—London Sun, 2d April.

Russia and France.—It is rumoured in the Dutch papers, that Russia has resolved to send three divisions of 40,000 men each to enter France, and remain there during the invasion of Spain, and that this measure is at the instance of the French Ministers, at the Courts of Russia and Vienna.

It is said the Russian Ministers in Denmark and Sweden, have [illegible] in case of War between France and Spain.

Several French officers, had sailed for Spain.

Polar Sea.—Accounts have reached us from Admiral Krusenstern, that a Russian Officer had accomplished the extraordinary journey of 30 days on the Polar ice, and had arrived at an entirely open Polar sea.

Lord Amherst, Governor General of India, arrived in the Jupiter 50 Gun Ship, at Madeira, on the 20th March, on his way to his new Government.

From a late London Paper

On Wednesday two of the Lords of the Admiralty, attended by the comptroller of the Navy, and Sir H. Davy, Dr. Woollaston, &c attended at the Navy Office, to witness an experiment by Mr. Harris, of Plymouth. A small barge, fitted with a mast, was moored at the Admiralty-stairs, and a small boat stationed at some distance with a loaded howitzer. The object of the experiment was to prove, that electric fluid, discharged from an electrifying battery, and conducted by a wired rope affixed to the top of the mast, would pass down the mast, through the magazine, and into the water, without doing any injury in its passage either to the magazine or mast. The electric fluid, it was then expected, would discharge the howitzer, the water acting as a conductor, without their being any communication between the vessel and the boat, the communication being then continued on the negative side, along another wide rope, would return to a window in the room from which it had started, and fire a small quantity of powder. The result was highly gratifying, it being conclusive as to its infallibility, and the ingenious inventor, no doubt, received much pleasure from the experiment. The object of the inventor is to preserve ships from being struck by lightning at sea, many of which, it is supposed, have gone to the bottom in consequence of such accident.

PRIVILEGE OF FRANKING.—The Literary Chronicle says, "Among the advantages attending the privilege of franking allowed to the members of the British Senate, we do not recollect to have been seen that of franking the tidings of one's own death. Yet that even this may rank among the number, was proved the other day by the following singular circumstance: The late Admiral K——— had franked an envelope for a letter intended to be written to one of his relatives: he died before the day for which it was dated, and the frank was actually used to cover a letter to the same relative, to announce the death of the noble writer

Ireland.—Outrages of a most alarming and extensive nature continue to be perpetrated in that unhappy country—particularly in Cork and Limerick.—After detailing various instances of robbery, murder and arson, the latest papers assure us that the state of the South of Ireland appears to be getting every day worse. The Dublin papers of April 1st, contain nearly thirty bills of burning houses and destroying cattle. In several instances the landlords were successfully resisted, but in all of these the houses appear to have been fortified in such a manner as shews clearly the alarmed state of the country. A letter from a gentleman on the borders of the counties of Cork and Limerick considers in these words:—"Were a foreign enemy landed, and the country under military execution, property could not be more insecure than it now is, or less at the disposal of the owners." It is to be remarked, however, that the Grand Juries are sitting very carefully to the claims for compensation for burning beggars and houses; and in the county of Mayo one claim for £500 compensation for malicious burning was entirely thrown out.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECK OF THE ALERT, DUBLIN PACKET.

Liverpool, March 29.—It is our painful duty to record the loss of one of the packets of this port, by the sinking of which, while on her last voyage from Dublin, it is supposed (according to the report of the few survivors) upwards of one hundred of our fellow creatures, men, women, and children, have suddenly perished. She sailed from Dublin on Tuesday night, and on Wednesday morning made the coast of Wales. The wind had been generally favourable, but about 10 o'clock the Captain finding the breeze abating, the vessel driving towards the West Mouse rock, sent the boat ahead, in expectation of clearing it by towing. The tide however, at this unfortunate juncture, became so low as to render abortive the efforts of the crew, and about 1 drifted the vessel on the rock which she struck, though not with violence, but it was soon discovered that the shock would end the vessel to lock considerably, and the pumps were immediately set to work. The water, in defiance of every exertion soon reached the cabin floor. All who could, now beat every exertion to bail out the water with buckets. The leak continued to increase rapidly, and all efforts to keep the vessel afloat appeared unavailing; and there being no wind, it was impossible to run for shore.—In this desperate situation individuals leaped [illegible] to the sea to reach the boat, which had been towing a head, and which contained the [illegible] never to be penetrated is to be drawn over the terrific scene that closed their earthly career. There were about 120 persons on board.

Greeks.—The cause of the Greeks appear to be everywhere successful, and that of the Turks every where on the decline.

AN ITALIAN PREACHER.

From LADY MORGAN'S Italy.

While at Bologna we were taken to hear the celebrated preacher the Canonico—and his sermon both for its manner and matter, was extremely curious. Like all the Italian preachers, he had a conventional style and [illegible] he commenced each discourse with a sort of whining cant and then suddenly dropping his declamatory tone, he adopted a familiar gossipping manner, the most humorous and diverting that can be imagined, alternately making his cap, taking it off, or putting it on, or appealing to the cushion (which is always affixed to the side of the pulpit in Italy). His subject was "Charity?"—Charity, he said, is the love of your neighbour—I say (he continued emphasing the word) to the lovely expression and homely spirit of the Scripture, meaning literally your neighbour, whom you should love through Christ, (the Church) and not in the vague sense of modern philosophy which talks of humanity and philanthropy, and such jargon; but this sort of charity, my dear Christians means murder and extortion, which is the true object of philosophy. Charity, my dear Christians, is a mantle made not only to cover your own sins, but the sins of your neighbor: Here he paused, and shook a little tin box, on which a Friar went about collecting, and the preacher proceeded: I beg charity in silent on a act, dear Christians. It does not like philosophy, attach vices to a class, or the charity of modern philosophy is to exclaim against the holy mother church With these philosophers Monks are rogues, and Priests, robbers. Here he fixed his eye on some young men, and at his familiar question of, "What think ye my Christians?" there was a general titter. Then putting on his cap, after a long pause, he opened another exordium in the usual nasal whine, which he concluded by saying, "Charity, my Christians, bids you open your mantle wide, and close it upon a sinner, sinners have been gracefully imitated (he said with his own robe); for the sum of charity is to give and to forgive!"—Here again he rattled on box, and his confessor once more resumed his office, and collected from the congregation He preached, as they all do in Italy, extempore; and, after a short pause, resumed his sermon precisely at the character of fresh auditors, who seemed to change every twenty minutes, and to come in, and to go out, as a matter of course.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

It is often asserted, and, no doubt, justly, that wherever the Liberty of the Press exists free from the shackles of arbitrary power, it is impossible that political abuses should either be numerous, important, or permanent. Tyranny cannot bear inspection, for its empire (when not seated in fear) being supported by prejudice, and ignorance of the true principles of rational freedom, must inevitably sink to ruin whenever those principles are fairly understood. But the province of the Press is not limited to mere political concerns;—it legitimately claims a share in the guardianship of public morals, and serves as the honored handmaid of religion. It is an important part of its duty to expose vice and immorality, and convey frequent lessons of useful instruction to every class of mankind. To these purposes I am aware the power of the press is often applied, but I fear not so often as sound principle might require. I am also aware that the state of society renders it rather a delicate task to lash vice effectually, and make a personal application of its necessary antidote in order to induce reform, without resorting to persons in a which would be condemned,—and yet, a man given to vicious habits is not likely to be wrought upon, unless he knows himself to be publicly pointed at. Besides, to theorize and speculate upon virtue, no obligation, &c. in a general way, [illegible] vice, is not likely to do much good. Practice must tread upon the heels of theory in all the concerns of man; and personal, individual application could only answer that end.—A physician would be termed something more than a quack, should he administer labels and recipes to his patients, instead of healing medicines.

Vice to the discerning eye assumes, in the different grades of society, different degrees of ugliness.—Most of our habits are thus ordinations; and we naturally look up to those above us as to several rank for the patterns of our conduct—hence we readily frame excuses from their examples for any moral delinquency;—may, more, we even find precedent for many aberrations from correct principle, which are little else than the twin brothers of crime.—Th se who bear the pulmical fabric upon their shoulders, stand, as it were, a mark for public opinion to shoot at.——ere no influence of dull decisions, fill the place of moral censors which correspond to the st pol ical letters; and in this case they stand equally conspicuous, and are a fatal mark for the public opinion. Their conduct is equally public property, but their bad example is far more pernicious, because it is plenty and imperceptibly goes to sap the foundation of all civil polity, by corrupting the public mind, and weakening the necessary restraints upon vicious principles, which also are capable of retaining men in the bonds of society.

Amongst all the vices to which poor human nature is prone, there is scarce one more dangerous and destructive in its consequences than that forbidden in the seventh commandment.—Indeed if it be been said, that the degree of female chastity existing in a nation ought serve as almost a certain rule by which to estimate that nation's moral, religious, and political character:—and I think there is not much risk in saying that degree as much varied according to the value set upon it by the male sex.

Now, suppose a man of some claim to respectability should be guilty of a gross breach of that commandment—that he was the husband of a virtuous and faithful wife; the father of a numerous and promising family of children, amongst whom were several sons and daughters grown up to maturity;—by, more, that he should be clothed with magisterial authority—that he were a conservator of the public peace, and a guardian of the public morals:—suppose, I say, he were to se uce the daughter of his friend, whom he had received as an inmate of his family, a companion to its daughters: and, what I blush to suppose, that she were their near relation;—that her shame should become public, and the fruits of illicit commerce impress upon her the name and duties of a mother:—that he should forsake his family—leave the partner of his bosom destitute of all a wife should expect from her husband: her sons and daughters destitute of his fatherly counsel and advice, and the lessons of virtue so much needed by the young and inexperienced; and his little children wanting that care and protection none but a father is qualified to give:—that he should transfer the duties of a husband from her who had the only claim upon them, to the an unfortunate being whose prospects in life had contributed so much to destroy, and whose grieving parents he had so deeply injured:—In what light, I pray, should we regard that man? Should he not be looked upon as a monster in vice and depravity, whose sight to the common courtesies of life, and the privileges of friendship was fairly cancelled by his misconduct?—Do we suppose his brother magistrates would sit down with him to the solemn discharge of their important duties, and mock the virtues and good senses of the community by associating the ideas of legal proceedings, of correcting vice, restraining crime, and protecting innocence and virtue, with such a glaring instance of [illegible] in one of their number?—Is it possible they could feel themselves free at home in such a case, with such a man sharing in their deliberations, and giving his voice to their decisions? Ought we not to suppose, out of respect to them and the stations to bring her the infant. He arrived at the place. No sooner had his eyes reached the child, than he was almost struck dumb with horror. A black snake, it said, was coiled a round it—and Aissa believed he beheld him extending his fatal jaws to devour the infant. The father rushed forward; and the serpent, alarmed at his vociferation, retired into the hollow tree. He took up his daughter inhort, and retired to the mother. He gave her child into her arms; and as he was informing her of the wonderful escape of the infant, some travellers appeared, and soon relieved them of all their wants. They proceeded gradually, and came to Lahore—to The Emperor Akbar, at the arrival of Aissa, he his court at Lahore. Asaf Khan, one of that monarch's principal [illegible] attended near the presence. He was a distant relation to Aissa, who was received by him with kindness and friendship. To employ him, he made him his own secretary. Aissa soon recommended himself to Asaf in that station, and by some accident his diligence and ability attracted the notice of the Emperor, who raised him to the command of a thousand horse. He became, in process of time, master of the household; and his genius being still greater than even his good fortune, he raised himself to the office and title of Amaun-ul-Hoon, or high treasurer of the Empire. Thus he, who had almost perished through mere want in the desert, became, in the space of a few years, the first subject in India.—The daughter, who had been born to Aissa in the desert, received, after his arrival at Lahore, the name of Meher-un-Nissa, or The Sun of Women. She had some right to the appellation; for in beauty she excelled all the ladies of the East. She was educated with the utmost care and attention. In music, in dancing, in poetry, in painting, she had no equal among her sex. Her disposition was noble, and [illegible] and satirical, her spirit lofty and unconfined. Selim, the Prince Royal, one day visited her father, when the public entertainment was over; when all, except the principal guests were withdrawn, and the musicians and dancers according to custom, were introduced in their veils. The ambition of Meher-un-Nissa aspired to a conquest of the Prince. She sung—he was in raptures; she danced—he could hardly be restrained, by the laws of decency, to his place. Her stature, her shape, her gait, had already done their work. She was the highest pitch.—When his eyes seemed to devour her, she, as by accident, drop her veil, and shone upon him, at once, with all her charms. The confusion which she could well feign on the occasion height ened the beauty of her face. Her modesty was alarmed by the presence of the Prince, and she withdrew. Selim followed her with his soul into love. He was in a violent during the remaining part of the evening. She endeavored to confirm by her art the conquest which the charms of her person had made. Selim, distracted with his passion, knew not how to procure her. Meher-un-Nissa had been betrothed by her father, to Aly Couly Shere Aigun, a Turkoman nobleman of great renown. Selim applied to his father Akbar, who sternly refused to commit an act of injustice, though in favor of the heir of his throne—of the Prince of Hindostan! and Meher-un-Nissa became the wife of Shere Aigun. The latter, however, suffered in his prospects in life, for not having made a voluntary resignation of the lady to the ensamored Prince. Though Selim durst make no open attack upon his fortunate rival during the life of Akbar, he was often forbidden the rising sun, and threw accumulated disgrace on Shere Aigun. He became disgusted, and left the court at Agra. He retired into the Province of Bengal, and obtained from the Subahdar of that country the superintendency of the district of Burdwan.

Shere Aigun, on the departure of Meher-un-Nissa, which Selim had repressed from a respect and fear of his father, returned with redoubled violence when he himself mounted the throne of India. He was now absolute, no subject could thwart his will or his pleasure. He recalled Shere Aigun from his retreat. He received him with encouragement, and showered upon him the most distinguishing favors. His original name was Aisa Jillo, but he having killed a lion he was dignified with the title of Shere Aigun, or the Overthrower of the Lion.—Under the latter name he became famous in India. In the year 1607 Shere Aigun had served with great reputation. He had distinguished himself in a particular manner under Khan Khanan, at the [illegible] King of Sind, by exhibiting prodigies of strength and valour. Preferments had been heaped upon him, and he was highly esteemed a court during the life of Akbar, who loved to reward a brave action. Jehangire, who succeeded to the throne, was [illegible] of Shere Aigun to the presence. He received him graciously at first, and [illegible] Shere Aigun, notwithstanding his [illegible] was naturally open and generous, returned it [illegible] Jehangire kept his court at Delhy, when he called

DOMESTIC.

Misunderstanding in New Brunswick.

The Government of the Province of New-Brunswick has been thrown into the greatest confusion by events which have taken place since the decease of General Smyth. It will be recollected that the Honorable Ward Chipman was called upon by the Council to administer the Government, the two Senior Counsellors having declined assuming that authority: but Mr. Chipman had scarcely entered upon the duties of his office, when one of the ancients repenting himself of his modesty, and vexed that his nolo gubernare had been taken seriously, put in his claim. We are told that a wordy war of proclamation and counter proclamation has ensued, each Governor professing himself to be the "real Simon Pure," and in this ridiculous state matters remained when the despatch addressed to His Lordship the Governor-in-Chief left Fredericton. Lieut. Winslow, h. p. who is the bearer of it, proceeded by land to Sorel on Thursday, his instructions being to deliver it personally to his Lordship.

On Monday the 1st Division of the 60th Regiment left this place for Kingston, to relieve the 68th Regiment, which is under orders for Quebec, and the same evening the 1st Division of the 70th Regiment arrived in the New Swiftsure from Quebec, which Regiment is to be quartered in this District.—Mont. Gaz.

From the Upper Canada Herald.

His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland and suit arrived in the Frontenac on Saturday last; and yesterday his Excellency inspected the 68th Regiment, which we understand is shortly to leave this Post. The different evolutions performed by that fine Regiment afforded great amusement to the inhabitants of Kingston, a great many of whom were present, and witnessed a sham attack upon Fort Henry, which was defended by Colonel Bredin of the Royal Artillery. We regret that our limited knowledge of Military tactics prevents us from giving a more minute description of this interesting scene.

SONG

For an American Indian.

The whistling sound of the tempest is high,
Swift roll the dark clouds o'er the face of the sky:
The howl of the wolf, and the cry of the fox
Are heard in the wilderness 'mong the steep rocks;
Aloft the bald eagle cowers o'er the tall trees,
The sea-gull laboriously battles the breeze;
See, see! the dark waves break white on the shore,
Borne hurriedly on with a hoarse sullen roar;
The red lightnings flash from the dense murky cloud,
Now follows the thunder, appalling and loud!
Oh, pity Allana! my bright bosom'd fair!
The maid of my soul, with the dark flowing hair.—
She wanders alone in the wilderness far,
Expos'd to the rage of the demons at war!
Oh, spare her! oh, spare her! ye spirits that fight,
And give my Allana again to my sight!

CURRENT COMMENTARY.

The detail of the movements of the French army in Spain occupying much space, our prefatory remarks must be short.—All this rapid success on the part of the French was of easy anticipation—and, though the crusade may differ in its complexion, and results, from that of Buonaparte against Moscow; yet one cannot help the recollection of that fearful and celebrated example crowding upon us at the present moment;—the more especially, as the designs of MINA, a man of known ability and enterprise, are so entirely screened from the public view.—We cannot bring ourselves to believe this revolution will pass away like that of Naples!

Our readers will find an appeal from the Saddlers and Harness makers of York, in a subsequent part of this paper, which, we trust, will have the desired effect of securing what little patronage can be enjoyed in this infant colony, to the legitimate objects. The people of CANADA are continually imposed upon by manufactures from the U. S. of the meanest, and most flimsy description, but with a fair outside.—It is, besides, by no means creditable, either to our patriotism or judgment, to purchase an article from a foreigner and rival, when one of better quality, and at a cheaper rate can be had at home.

A meeting of the York Bible Society was held on Saturday last in the School-house, at which His Excellency the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR presided.—This meeting was very respectably attended; and after an able and highly interesting report was read by the Hon. and Rev. Dr. STRACHAN, Rector of York, several resolutions, having the enlarged objects of this invaluable institution in view, were proposed and adopted.

Selections From British & Foreign Journals.

LONDON, April 4.

At Lloyd's, a policy was effected this day at 1½ guinea per cent premium, to pay one hundred per cent. loss, should any hostilities between France and England take place before the 5th May next.—This is probably a speculation on an action betwixt Sir C. Owen and the French squadron, should the latter attempt to gain a settlement in, or to blockade the Island of Cuba. Another policy at 30 guineas per cent. to pay £100 per cent. should the Spanish bonds of 1821 be sold in London at 40 within four months. The underwriters here have got a large premium, but they run great risk of paying a loss.

The DUKE OF NORFOLK is married to Lady Mary Ann Gage, widow of Sir Thomas Gage,—The DUKE OF ST. ALBANS to Mrs Cuthbert;—and LORD PERTH to Miss Howard.

The celebrated Colonel Thornton.—Died, at Paris, in March, after a long confinement, and at a very advanced age, the celebrated sporting Colonel Thornton. He preserved his faculties and convivial disposition to the last.

MONUMENT TO Mrs. KEMBLE.

We find that it has been determined, at a meeting of the admirers of the late Mrs. Kemble, to erect a Public Monument to her memory. The Earl of Aberdeen presided at the Meeting, and among the names of the Committee who were appointed to superintend the management of the thing, we observe with pleasure the following:—The Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquis of Hertford, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Holland, Mr. Canning, Sir C. Long, Sir J. Mackintosh, Sir T. Lawrence, R. Heber, Esq. &c. &c. The monument is to be placed, either in St. Paul's Cathedral or in Westminster Abbey. Subscriptions are received at Coutts' and Drummonds' and "in consequence," is observed in one of the resolutions "of the great number of individuals who may probably be desirous of uniting in a last tribute to the memory of one from whose exertions they have so often experienced instruction and delight: it is proposed, with the view of rendering this concurrence as general as possible, that the amount of each subscription should be as low as may be consistent with the attainment of the object."

Dreadful affair.—On Saturday evening, about seven o'clock, the neighborhood of Newington, London, was thrown into great consternation. Mr. Briggs, a respectable tradesman of King's-row, left his home and chaise for a short time by the footpath; in the interim of going into his house, three coal-porters passed, and one of them struck the animal, which caused it to plunge on the footpath, and a man was nearly killed. Mr. Briggs, on seeing the transaction, remonstrated with the men on the impropriety of their conduct, when some words arose, and an attack was made upon him, in which he received a severe blow, supposed to be on the jugular vein, which felled him to the ground and instantly caused his death. Mrs Briggs, on being informed of the circumstances, became frantic, and although medical assistance was immediately procured, she is in a deplorable condition, being pregnant with her fourth child. Two of the offenders were taken into custody, and await the result of the coroner's inquest.

Consumption of Liquors in London.—It is calculated that not less than 68,000 pipes of wine, 10,000,000 gallons of spirits, 3,000,000 barrels of ale and porter, are annually drank in that metropolis.

Destruction of Deer.—Five hundred Deer perished in the Earl of Tankerville's Park, at Chillingham Castle, Berwick shire, during the late stormy weather in that neighborhood.

A Wooden Clock at Letaloo.—Some time ago the Missionary Society sent to the King of Letaloo a present of a wooden clock, with three little figures which strike bells, at the hours and quarters This simple piece of mechanism has excited the greatest astonishment in the minds of the natives. Some of them dispute among themselves whether these little figures were made by God or man; they also wished to know whether they ate rice or milk; it was also reported among them that these three admired little men had come in the night in a waggon without oxen.—In short, the clock appeared to them the most wonderful thing ever known to their country.

Blow Pipe.—A new Blow pipe has been invented by Mr Gurney, which includes the wonderful properties of at once perfect safety, and a power equal to at least ten times that of any other instrument of the kind hitherto in use. To those who are acquainted with this subject, it will be sufficient to say that Mr. Gurney's blow pipe is capable of permitting the use of a flame of the mixed gases twelve or fourteen inches in length when required—that no known substance resists its power—that a platinum wire a quarter of an inch in diameter melts before it almost immediately; tobacco pipes have been converted into perfectly transparent glass, and a steel file had a hole burnt through it in less than half a minute. It will be recollected that the flame produced by the common condensing blow pipe is not more than three fourths of an inch long, and that the late Dr. Clarke, in using that instrument, considered it a complete triumph of art to be able to melt a platinum wire the size of a knitting needle. Even this was effected at imminent risk, several destructive explosions having taken place. Dr. C. latterly resorted to the expedient of building up a brick wall between himself and his instrument.—London paper.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

LONDON, April 5.

"Saturday Evening."—The French Frigate la Guerriere has been taken, almost in sight of Brest, by two armed vessels bearing Spanish colors, one of which was a brig of [illegible] or 20 guns. The frigate was peppered in high style. Two [illegible]

The following is also an extract from another private letter dated Paris, April 18:

"All the letters from Bordeaux and Havre express the greatest alarm with respect to the vessels which they expect from day to day. A letter from Bayonne of the 15th inst. announces the capture by a Spanish corsair of a ship laden with grain, which was carried into St. Sebastian. A Spanish ship of war is placed below the river."

The French Funds continued to fall on Saturday.

A communication from Calais announces the receipt there of a telegraphic despatch from Paris, stating that "the advanced guards of the French army had entered Vittoria and Bilboa."

Spain.—The King and royal family arrived on the 1st inst. at Andujar, in Andalusia, which is about 100 miles from Seville. Enthusiastic cries in favor of the "Constitutional King" were every where raised in honor of the Royal journey.

On the eastern frontier no movements have yet taken place. MINA's designs are veiled in darkness, and seem to have filled the French Ultras with more misgivings than they are desirous to avow. Even the Etoile bears witness to the formidable preparations made at Barcelona to receive the invaders: the cannon are mounted; the dismes filled with water; and, in aid of a small corps of Regulars, 18,000 militia have undertaken the defence of the place. On the other hand, much vigor is displayed, especially by her Highness the Duchess of Angoulême, who reviews the troops at Bordeaux, and passes judgments on their appearance.

THE FRENCH IN SPAIN.

The French crossed the Bidasson on the 7th April, having been occupied several days previous in the necessary preparations. The intelligence was communicated from Bayonne by Telegraph, in two hours and a half. An attempt was made by a few French refugees, of whom we slightly spoke in our last, to induce some French regiments to desert, by raising the new powers' cry of "Vive Napoleon!" The answer of the French officer in command was "Vive le Roi!" and a volley, which at once dispersed the hostile bands, of whom no more was seen

As soon as the passage of the Bidasson was effected, leisurely, and in order, the Constitutionalists deserted Irun, and all the posts they held in its neighborhood, and retired to St Sebastian.

French papers, and Telegraphic communications, have been received in London, up to April 20th A series of extracts will best show the position of affairs. The result is, that the French have met with no resistance of consequence —that they are in possession of Bilboa, Tolosa, Vittoria, of the fortress of Guetaria, on the sea side, and in front of St. Sebastian, and probably of Burgos.

St. Sebastian, so famous for the siege it stood against the British, is now invested by the French, as well as Pamplona in Navarre, all which province, as well as that of Catalonia, is in array against the Constitutionalists.

PROCLAMATION.

"The Duke d'Angoulême, General in Chief of the Army of the Pyrenees, to the Spaniards

"The King of France, by recalling his Ambassadors from Madrid, hoped that the Spanish Government, warned of its dangers, would return to more moderate sentiments, and would cease to be deaf to the counsels of benevolence and reason. Two months and a half have passed away, and his Majesty has in vain expected the establishment in Spain of an order of things compatible with the safety of neighboring states.

"The French government has for two entire years endured, with a forbearance, without example, the most unmerited provocations; the revolutionary faction which has destroyed the royal authority in your country—which holds your King captive—which calls for his dethronement—which menaces his life—which calls for his dethronement—which menaces his life and that of his family, has carried beyond its frontiers its guilty efforts. It has tried all means to corrupt the army of his most Christian Majesty, and to excite troubles in France, in the same manner as it now [illegible] Spain.

Nardes and Piedmont. Devoted in its expectations, it has buried traitors, condemned by our tribunals, to consummate, under its protection of treasonable rebellion, the plots which they had formed against their country. It is time to put a stop to the anarchy which have Spain in pieces, which takes from it the power of settling its colonial disputes, which separates it from Europe, which has broken all its relations with the august sovereigns, whose the same intentions and the same views unite with his Most Christian Majesty, and which compromises the repose and interest of France.

" Spaniards!—Kyanee is not at war with your country—Sprung from the same blood as your Kings, I can have no wish but for your independence, your happiness, your glory. I am going to cross the Pyrenees at the head of 100,000 French soldiers, but it is only to unite myself with the [illegible] of order and the laws, to assist them in setting free their captive King, in raising again the altar and the throne, in rescuing priests from proscription, men of property from spoliation, and the whole people from the dominion of an ambitious few, who, while they proclaim liberty, are preparing only the slavery and ruin of Spain.

" Spaniards!—Every thing will be done for you and with you. The French are not, and wish not to be, any thing but your auxiliaries. Your standard alone shall float over your cities; the provisions procured by our soldiers shall be administered in the name of Ferdinand by Spanish authorities; the severest discipline shall be observed; every thing necessary for the service of the army shall be paid for with a scrupulous punctuality; we wish nothing but your welfare since; as soon as we shall have obtained it, we will return to our country, happy to have preserved a generous people from the miseries produced by revolution, and which experience has taught us but too well to appreciate.

LOUIS ANTOINE.

" By his Royal Highness the Prince General in Chief, the Counsellor of State, Civil Commissioner of his Most Christian Majesty. MARTIGNAC."

The Etoile publishes a royal ordinance, conferring on the Duke de'Angoulême, as commander in Chief of the army of the Pyrenees, authority, first, to fill up all vacancies and make all promotions; secondly, to bestow the orders of St. Louis, Military Merit, and the Legion of Honour, and to award such recompenses in general as he shall think fit.

COMMENCEMENT OF HOSTILITIES.

S. Jean de Luz, April 7.—One hundred and fifty, or two hundred French and Italians, presented themselves to day with a tri-coloured flag on the Spanish side of the Bidassoa. The 9th regiment of light infantry, with Gen. Valin at its head, were on that side. The General ordered three canon shots to be fired on this body. Fifteen of them were killed or wounded. Among the former are four French officers, or persons who had fled from justice. The troops wished to cross the river on foot, and pursue the enemy, who immediately fled.

" The Bidassoa was crossed on the 7th, and the Duke d' Angoulême was on the Spanish soil at 9 o'clock.

" De Lamotte, formerly a Captain in the legion of the Seine, and implicated in the plot of the 10th August, 1819, is seriously wounded in the affair. He had been condemned to five years imprisonment and 300 francs of fine.

" The army marches in three divisions—one upon Tolosa, direct for Madrid; one upon Pampeluna; and another upon St. Sebastian.

" The regiment Alexander, in garrison at Irun, evacuated that town on the approach of the French.

TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCH RECEIVED AT CALAIS.

" Calais, Friday, April 18, 1823.

" M le Maire.—A telegraphic despatch of this day announces that our advanced guards have entered Vittoria and Bilboa.

(Signed) " CHAS. DENIQUIS,
Director of the Telegraphs.
(A true copy) " A BENARD,
Mayor of Calais.

" Chevalier of the Royal Order of the Legion of Honour.

PARIS, April 17.

The advanced guard of our army has passed without difficulty the famous defiles of Salinas, four leagues in advance of Vittoria, where the head quarters of the Prince will be on the 17th inst.

His Royal Highness quitted Tolosa, after having installed a Junta, which has given new force to the confidence of the people in the promises of his Royal Highness.

It is asserted that the French Government, on the principle that France is not what may be properly called at war with Spain, will not issue letters of marque, or permit any [illegible] of Constantinople. It is said also, that our royal marine has received orders not to take any but Spanish armed vessels, and to let merchant ships pass. It is added, that the Government has made the arrangement known to the different Cabinets of Europe, demanding, in its turn, that they will not allow of the fitting of Spanish privateers in their ports, nor the sale of such prizes as these corsairs may take.

Preparations are making at the Hotel of the Portuguese Legation, for the departure of the Minister of his most Faithful Majesty. The passports for the Legation have just been delivered at his desire. It seems that his Excellency will depart in the course of next week. It is said, that with those, passports the Minister received a note, expressing the regret that was felt at his having determined to leave this capital, since France has not shown any hostile disposition towards Portugal, nor sent any order to the French Minister at Lisbon, and Consuls of his Most Christian Majesty to quit that Kingdom.

TOLOSA, April 14.

The Spanish people declare so decidedly against the Government of the Cortes, that [illegible] Government on leaving Madrid, shown an intention to defend the approach to this place, they were surrounded on all sides by the population, who obliged them to throw their artillery into the water. This fact is certain. Never was an army seen more obedient to its commander, more attached to its King, than our army. The Spaniards lavish on it the sincerest demonstrations of unlimited confidence.

The country people bring provisions on the road; every thing is regularly paid for. The day before yesterday, while the General was passing through the town, a market was held, which was as numerously attended by country people, and as well supplied as ever.

General Quesada has entered Bilboa.

We have received, by express, the following interesting letters which we hasten to lay before our readers:—

St. Jean Pied de Port, April 14.

The information that I have collected since the French army passed the Bidasoa, states—that the Spaniards receive it with the greatest enthusiasm, and that the clergy every where came to the body to meet the troops as they arrive.

Pampeluna, which, according to the revolutionary papers, was to receive a numerous garrison, and be provisioned for a year, is on the contrary, ill provided with troops, and destitute of every thing. The garrison, including that of the Castle, does not exceed 2,000 men, half of them militia, who, by the accounts of persons worthy of credit, wait only for a favorable opportunity to abandon a cause which they detest, or which they have joined only by force. On the 9th in the night, 100 of the militia rushed from Pampeluna, desirous of being informed of the arrival of the French, and joined Col. Juanito, to whom they offered their services

The young men of Lucsido who had taken arms for the constitution, and who were near St. Sebastian, desert to return home; sixty of them arrived in the night of the 11th. It is affirmed that Andalusia has risen in favor of the legitimate cause, and that 10,000 men are already under arms.

Bayonne. April 14, 8 A.—(by express)—

I have announced to you that Pampeluna had been evacuated by the garrison, composed of 2000 men, 1000 only have left that place to escort to Arragon valuable effects, which had been deposited in that town. The remainder of the garrison is composed of militia, who have neither the power, nor the inclination to defend themselves; if they were to attempt it, the inhabitants are so enthusiastic in favor of the good cause, that they would open the gates themselves.

All the accounts from the army are excellent, and our troops are now before the walls of St. Sebastian, without having experienced the smallest loss. The garrison, wholly confined to the place, has not made any sally since the division of Gen Bourke drove it back figliting; its forced repose, and the departure of the revolutionary necessaries, Nuttil and Fabvier, give every reason to expect a speedy surrender.

Bilboa is occupied by our troops—the news is certain. Many of our vessels, laden with provisions have sailed for that port, which is of great importance.

We have stated that Ballasteros had given up the defence of the defiles of Salina, and retired towards Tudela. Letters of the 14th mention that Gen. Molitor, who has advanced with his corps, has just obliged Ballasteros to evacuate Tudela also.

Thus success every where attends the French army.

Gen Quesada has taken possession of Bilboa at the head of his corps, which consists wholly of Spanish Royalists. A French garrison will however be put into the town, on account of the import.

From Bayonne, April 17.

The Major General to his Excellency the Minister of War

" There is nothing new from the army The troops are in full march.

" The army of Perpignan, which await the arrival of the Duke d'Angoulême on the Ebre, will be in movement from the 20th to the 22d inst.

" In a few days our 100,000 men will be in a line Then the decisive blow will be struck.

" Pampeluna and St. Sebastian are invested; but they have not been attacked, and all the rumors which have been circulated on this point are falsified and ridiculous.

" Insurrections multiply in the interior of Spain "—Journal des Debats.

From the Gazette de France.

Letters from Lisbon of the 26th, and from Oporto of the 25th of March, state that the Count d'Amarante continues in the same position. Rego was still at Amarante. Great dissatisfaction prevailed at Oporto and Lisbon, because the Government delayed and lingered upon any of the troops.

The following is an extract of a letter from the Agents to Lloyd's at Marseilles, dated April 12—" An order, by Telegraph, was this morning received by the authorities of this port, to lay an embargo on all Spanish vessels; this was immediately put into execution, and several of which were outside the port, on the point of sailing, were compelled to return by the boats of the men of war lying here."

FROM THE COURIER.

LONDON, April 22.

We have just received by express, from Paris, the following Telegraphic communication:

PARIS, April 20.

The Port and citadel of Guetaria have been taken by our troops. Two hundred men, among whom were two Colonels, and ten other officers, have been taken, with five pieces of cannon, and provisions.

It is said that the enemy have abandoned Burgos since the 14th. Every where the French army meet with the best reception.

Sweden.—The speech of the King of Sweden, at the opening of the States General, forms a most refreshing contrast to the illiberal and despotic principles which have issued of late from the Holy Alliance. All the notice he takes of any thing out of Sweden, is to say, that the events of our age furnish proofs of the evils of revolutions which generally produce democratic anarchy or despotic oppression. He tells the nobility that they were instituted for the defence of the State, and desires them to continue to imitate the virtues of their ancestors, and to have for their device—" Honor the country and the King." He tells the Clergy to preach concord, peace, and obedience to the laws. He tells the Burgesses to make commerce and industry flourish, which, to a free country are as advantageous as victories. He bids the peasants congratulate themselves as the fostering parent of the present generation, and of those that will succeed; and never to regard with disdain the plough which afford to their fellow countrymen their principal supplies. He calls upon them all to make laws in consistence with the constitution. He tells them that experience has informed him that it is for the advantage of the country that the judicial power should be independent of the Crown; and adds that a message to that effect will be communicated to them. He then speaks of the currency of the country, as a thing to be approached with the utmost caution and to temper carefully with which it ought to produce disagreeable consequences. He then expresses his determination to diminish the public burthens as far as possible: and directs their attention to the public works of the country, and thanks them for the help they have given him towards them. He concludes with stating his intention to marry his son to the daughter of the King of Bavaria.—London paper.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Reviving heat, and kindles genial fires."
VIRGIL.

SIR,

The loyal, patriotic, and constitutional sentiments displayed in the editorial department of the Weekly Register compel me to admire the sound principles of its conductor; and the publication of his Sketch on the Present State of CANADA, inserted in the York Almanac, assures me of the deep interest which he takes in every thing concerning the advancement of this, his adopted, country.

The bounteous hand of nature has given to CANADA an immeasureable tract of highly fertile soil, the greatest portion of which is still teeming with its spontaneous productions.—This fact, Mr. Editor, has led me to lament, with you, the inadequate number of human beings at present to be found on so extensive and productive a soil.—Whatever may have a tendency to remove this complaint will, I am sure, be received by you with that amenity of disposition which characterises the gentleman.

—Now, Sir, Editor, there are among st us a great number of those creatures usually termed Bachelorz, who appear unanimously and resolutely determined not to contribute towards remedying this great evil—I beg of you, therefore, Mr. Editor, to issue a public manifesto, strongly reprobating the pernicious consequences of such unmanly determinations:—let your reproof be conveyed in the most emphatic language:—let it even go beyond that of the Roman Emperor Augustus, on a former occasion, of which I will now beg leave to remind you.—On his return to Rome at the close of a successful war, several complaints were made to him that too many of the young men of quality remained unmarried. " The Emperor, therefore, assembled the whole Equestrian Order, and having separated the husbands from the single, did [illegible] to the former, for the [illegible] of their wives and children; but he told the latter, that their lives and actions had been so [illegible] to censure; that he knew not by what name to call them; not by that of men, for their performed nothing that was manly, not by that of citizens, for the city might perish a thriftstanding their care; not by that of Romans, for they designed to extirpate the Roman name. Then proceeding to shew his tender care, and hearty affection for his people, he further told them, that their course of life was of such pernicious consequence to the glory and grandeur of the Roman Empire, that all other crimes put together could not equal theirs, for they were guilty of murder in not suffering those to be born which should proceed from them; of impiety, in causing the names and honors of their ancestors to cease; and of sacrilege in destroying their kind, which proceeded from the immortal Gods. Therefore, in this respect they dissolved the government by disobeying its laws, betrayed their country by making it barren and waste, and demolished their city by depriving it of inhabitants."

A doctrine so promulgated, and in such language, must surely, Mr. Editor, have a tendency to make these naughty creatures—these incorrigible Bachelors, more corrigible; and abandon their cheerless lives of celibacy, which cannot fail to comfort the heart of HORRIFYING CASE.

Smalzville, Nov. 6.—The following dreadful event lately occurred in this neighborhood. The owner of a lonely cottage being out on a chase, a beggar, to all appearance old and weak, entered it at noon day, and asked alms of the woman who was at home with only her two younger children. The kind hearted woman invites him to rest himself, while she goes out to get him something to eat and drink. After the beggar had satisfied his hunger, he, to the no small astonishment of the woman, assumed a different language, and with a threatening voice, demanded the money, which he knew, he said, her husband had in the house. The wretch rushing on her with a large bread knife, to force her to acknowledge where it was deposited, she declared herself ready to give him what money she had, and for this purpose mounted a ladder in a trap-door leading to the loft above. As soon as she had mounted she drew up the ladder after her, so that it was impossible for him to get at her. Finding that she disregarded his menaces, he seized the two children, and swore he would either kill or maim them, if she did not immediately come down and deliver him the money as she had promised. The woman remained in the loft, and strove to force a hole through the thatch and call for help. While she was thus employed, the monster cut off their ears and noses, and at last killed the poor maimed innocents, scornfully proclaiming to the mother the murder he had committed. For instantly, however, her cries were heard by an officer who was passing by in an open carriage, who sent his servant (while he remained sitting in the carriage) to enquire what was the matter. The servant hastened to the spot, but on entering the cottage was met by the murderer, who plunged the knife into his heart, so that he fell and expired without a groan. The officer, surprised at his delay, went himself to the cottage, where perceiving the horrid scene, he attempted to stop the flight of the murderer, and with his sabre cut off all the fingers of his right hand, but was not able to [illegible] him of the opportunity to escape through the door as it stood open. The woman had, when the officer was passing, made her way through the roof, and run to the village, which was at a pretty considerable distance to fetch assistance. Meantime the husband on his way home meets the blood stained murderer, whom he recognizes as the beggar who frequented that part of the country.

The hypocrite, concealing his fears as he affected lamentation, held up his mutilated hand, saying, " Make haste! there is in your house a murderer, who has killed your children, and likewise a man who attempted to defend them, and from whom I have narrowly escaped in the condition you see." The terrified countryman, while the atrocious villain hastens to escape, flies with his loaded gun to his hand, to his cottage, perceives through the open door the officer and his bloody corpses of the children; takes him of course for the murderer, levels his piece, and shoots him dead on the spot! The wife coming up with the villagers, beholds the dead, sees the officer fall, utters a piercing cry, exclaiming, " You have killed our deliverer—murdered my benefactor!" The husband, whose whole frame is shaken by the horror of the scene, and still more by his own rash deed, stands like a statue, motionless and speechless, falls back in a fit, and expires.

ROYAL ARMORY, HAY-MARKET.

The exhibition of arms and armour, now open in the Haymarket, comprising an extensive and costly collection of military weapons and appointments of every description, to use Shakspeare's expression which has, of late, threatened to extirpate the Roman name. Then proceeding to shew his tender care, and hearty affection for his people, he further told them, that their course of life was of such pernicious consequence to the glory and grandeur of the Roman Empire, that all other crimes put together could not equal theirs, for they were guilty of murder in not suffering those to be born which should proceed from them; of impiety, in causing the names and honors of their ancestors to cease; and of sacrilege in destroying their kind, which proceeded from the immortal Gods. advantages of the old porter's absence, and recovered themselves without discovery into the house. The principal door being bolted at the usual hour, Shere and his family went to bed. Some of the assassins, when they thought he was fallen asleep, stole silently into his apartment. They prepared to plunge their daggers into his body, when one of them, who was an old man, being touched with remorse, cried out with a loud voice, " Hold! have we not the Emperor's orders? let us behave like men. Shall forty full upon one, and that one asleep?" " Coward!" said Shere, starting that instant from his bed—drawing his sword, he placed himself in the corner of the room, there he was attacked by the assassins. In a few minutes, many of the villains lay, weltering in their blood, at his feet—Shere only had escaped without a wound. The old man who had before remonstrated, [illegible] Shere took him by the hand, praised and thanked him for his fidelity, and having enquired about those who hired the assassins, dismissed him with handsome presents to relate the particulars abroad.—Treachery, suspected by nobody, at length disclosed the fate of his life; he avenged his death before he fell on the author of it—but he could not avert the fatal stroke, inflicted on him by six balls, fired into him at once from distant enemies.—The conduct of his widow is different. ly related—important it is, that she afterwards lived many years with Jehangire, and was quite as much his partner in the throne as in retirement!

AN APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC.

We, the undersigned, Saddlers and Harness makers of York, return our sincere thanks to those friends and customers who have given us their support in business.

We beg leave at the same time to enter our humble protest against a practice which has, of late, threatened to establish all domestic manufactures in the line of our profession in this vicinity.—We allude to the importation of Saddlery, &c. on mercantile speculation, from the United States; which, being of a very inferior quality, can be sold at a low price.

For ourselves, we renounce all idea and spirit of combination.—We are ready to afford our services to any private Gentleman arriving in this country with a supply of articles manufactured upon the Canadian Establishment to, and from the United States; and we appeal with confidence to the generosity of all those who have the smallest desire to cherish and protect the struggling efforts of domestic manufacturers in this infant Colony,—for ourselves we have no hardship of our own before a discerning and a generous public to lie in the hope that we shall find our interests protected, and that we shall not be called upon to alter, improve, or repair any articles imported from the United States.

If the quality of the articles is considered, we can afford them at a cheaper rate than our neighbours, so that the plea of saving expence is done away with.—We trust we are above that low trick and artifice which has imposed inferior manufactures upon the Canadian Public by subterfuges to, and from the United States; and we appeal with confidence to the generosity of all those who have the smallest desire to cherish and protect the struggling efforts of domestic manufacturers in this infant Colony,—for ourselves we have no other honorable means of obtaining a support for our families than by the exertion of our professional labours: for the public, generally, the advantage that will be gained by protecting our interests will be the retention of money in this country, that would be otherwise sent away to encourage foreign rivals.

We beg leave to assure the public, that, from the ample supply of materials now at our command, and the quality of the leather which is superior to any thing of the kind heretofore manufactured in this country, we are enabled to execute any orders that may be given to us in the most complete and satisfactory manner, and on the most reasonable terms.

With all respect and humility, we beg leave to subscribe ourselves, the Public's obedient servants,

INDEX AT FRONT.

Parliamentary Register
OF
UPPER CANADA.
No. XIV.

WEDNESDAY, 19th March, 1823.

On motion of Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Randal, the petition of John Carey was brought up, the 85th rule of the House dispensed with, and said petition ordered to be read that day.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the act for making additional provision for the improvement of the Inland Navigation of the Province, was read the third time, passed, and sent up to the Honorable the Legislative Council for concurrence.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the petition from John Carey, praying for further remuneration for reporting debates of last session was read.

On motion of Doctor Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Hornor, the above petition was referred to the Committee on the contingent accounts, with power to charge in the contingencies of the House any reasonable allowance that they might think him fairly entitled to.

On motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Pattle, the fifth rule of the House was dispensed with, and the Coin Bill was read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Clark, the House went into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. Hornor, in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr. Hornor reported progress, and asked leave to sit again to-day.

The Report was received and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. Clark from the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of John Pettit, Esquire, reported that the Committee had fully examined into the matter set forth in said Petition, and the certificates by which it was supported, and found that the claim made by him upon the Revenue of the Province, was for services of a purely military nature, performed by order of the commanding general in that section of the Province, during the late war with the United States of America. therefore, although from Mr. Pettit's good character, and the highly respectable certificate accompanying his petition, the Committee could entertain no doubt of its justice, yet being for services under the military government, they could not recommend any appropriation from the funds of the Province.

Mr. Nichol from the committee to draft an address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, relative to retrenchment, reported a draft which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Bostwick, the fifth rule of the House was dispensed with in so far as related to the said address, and it was read a second time.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded as above, the House went into Committee on the address.

Mr Vankoughnet in the Chair,

The House resumed.

Mr. Vankoughnet, reported the address without amendment.

The Report was ordered to be received

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Bostwick, the address was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time that day

Agreeably to the order of the day the House went into Committee on Doctor Baldwin's Resolution.

Mr. Gates in the Chair,

The House resumed.

Mr Gates reported progress and asked leave to sit again that day

The Report was ordered to be received, and leave was granted accordingly.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the House went into Committee on the Loan Bill,

Mr. Shaver in the Chair,

The House resumed.

Mr Shaver reported the Bill as amended. The Report was ordered to be received

On motion of Mr Nichol, seconded by Mr. Bostwick the fifth rule was dispensed with in so far as related to the said Bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time that day.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Commissioners appointment Bill was read the second time

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Bostwick, the House resolved itself into a Committee on said Bill.

Mr Walsh in the Chair,

The House resumed, the Black Rod being at the door

Mr. Boulton master in Chancery brought down from the Honorable the Legislative Council the Church Lands surrender Bill, and the marriage confirmation Bill amended,

The above mentioned amendments were then read.

The amendments to the Church Lands Bill were read a second time and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Wilson, of Wentworth, Messrs. Crooks and Bostwick were ordered as a Committee to inform the Honorable the Legislative Council that the House of Assembly had agreed to the amendments made to the surrender of Church Lands Bill

Agreeably to the order of the day, the address to his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, stating to His Excellency that during the Session the detailed accounts laid before the House of Assembly by His Excellency's order, had been examined by a select Committee appointed for that purpose, who had reported that they found under the item of the administration of justice charges to the amount of £370 sterling, for the salaries, and contingencies of various persons in the Judge, King's Council and clerks of assize—that in their opinion the said allowances were made at a time when the country was very thinly peopled, the accommodations bad, the expenses of travelling high, and the salaries and emoluments of those officers, much less than at the present; and also, that the fees and contingent expenses of the King's Council and clerks of assize had increased very considerably in amount, and that it was found that many cases were prosecuted by the crown officers at the public expense, which ought to be inquired of at the sessions, at the expense of the prosecutors individually, viz. assaults and batteries, nuisances, and other minor offences, which were frequently brought forward from vindictive feeling.

The select Committee before mentioned further reported, that an annual charge of £200 sterling for a clerk's salary and the rent of an office, appeared in the accounts of the Attorney General, and that, as that officer received a fee exclusive of his official salary for the performance of everyact of public duty, they did not see the propriety of such a charge, and that in their opinion a very considerable saving to the public might fairly be made in the following items.

Travelling allowances, King's Counsel	£150.
Clerk and Office Rent, Attorney General.	120
Clerks of Assize.	100
Reduction and saving of fees, by removing trials of minor offences to Sessions,	210.
	£570.

That the house having taken the said report into consideration, and having incurred therein, and they being desirous that the revenues of the Province might be relieved from every charge which could, without injustice be dispensed with, most respectfully begged leave to submit to His Excellency's particular consideration the propriety of the savings suggested by the said report.

They further begged leave to request His Excellency's attention to the augmentation which had taken place in the salaries, and other allowances, to the officers and clerks of the several departments of the Executive Government; and, although unacquainted with the cause of such augmentation, as they believed it to have arisen from the depreciated value of money, and consequent high price of commodities, (cause which no longer existed) they humbly submitted to His Excellency's consideration the propriety of reducing the salaries and allowances alluded to, as nearly as might be found practicable to the scale authorized previous to the year 1796—That, while they were desirous that a proper retrenchment, in all practicable cases, should take place, they begged to assure His Excellency, that they were far from entertaining any wish to deprive any servant of His Majesty of a fair and reasonable compensation for the services performed, or attached to his situation.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Willson of Wentworth, Messrs. Walsh and Fattle were ordered as a Committee to wait on His Excellency, the Lejutenant Governor, with the above address

Mr Jones of Leeds, seconded by Mr. Shaver, moved, that the amendments made by the Honorable the Legislative Council to the Marriage Confirmation Bill, might be then read a second time, and that the fifth rule of the House might be dispensed with, as far as related thereto.

On which the House divided

AN APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC.

We, the undersigned Saddlers and Harness-makers of York, return our sincere thanks to those friends and customers who have given us their support in business.

We beg leave at the same time to enter our humble protest against a practice which has, of late, threatened to extinguish all domestic manufactures in the line of our profession in this vicinity—We allude to the importation of slop Saddlery, &c. on mercantile speculation, from the United States; which, being of a very inferior quality, can be sold at a low price.

For ourselves, we renounce all idea and spirit of combination.—We are ready to afford our services to any private Gentleman arriving in this country with a supply of articles in our line, for his own use; but, we conceive it a great hardship and injustice to be called upon to repair work we should be ashamed of turning out of our respective Shops, at any price—to become Cobblers, as it were, to the flimsy manufactures of the United States.—We throw open the peculiar hardship of our case before a discerning and a generous public in the hope that we shall find our interests protected, and that we shall not be called upon to alter, improve, or repair any articles imported from the United States.

If the quality of the articles is considered, we can afford them at a cheaper rate than our neighbours, so that the plea of saving expence is done away with—We trust we are above that low trick and artifice which has imposed inferior manufactures upon the Canadian Public by adventurers in, and from the United States; and we appeal with confidence to the generosity of all those who have the smallest desire to cherish and protect the struggling efforts of domestic manufacturers in this infant Colony.—For ourselves we have no other honorable means of obtaining a support for our families than by the exertion of our professional labours; for the public, generally, the advantage that will be gained by protecting our interests will be the retention of money in this country, that would be otherwise sent away to encourage foreign rivals.

We beg leave to assure the public, that, from the ample supply of materials now at our command, and the quality of the leather which is superior to any thing of the kind heretofore manufactured in this country, we are enabled to execute any orders that may be given to us in the most complete and satisfactory manner, and on the most reasonable terms

With all respect and humility, we beg leave to subscribe ourselves, the Public's obedient servants.

Editorial Commentary.

Early success in a contest like that now carrying on in Spain, is of vast importance to what would appear the weaker party. The following paragraph reached us just as this commentary was going to press.

(Madrid Official Extraordinary.)

Published on the 4th of April, at 11 at night.

"I have this instant (10 p. m.) received by express, a bulletin, which I hasten to communicate to the public.

"Political Government of Valencia.

"Amidst the shouts which resound from every quarter of the city. I have the satisfaction to announce to your excellency, that we may now consider ourselves as entirely freed from the faction by which we were threatened. The gallant Colonel Don Antonio Bazon, Provisional Commander of the Province of Castellon, while on his march from that point on Valencia, encountered between Murviedro and Almanara the rebels assembled to the number of 5,000 men, with three pieces of artillery, and ranged in order of battle, with the avowed intention of disputing the passage. The Colonel had only 1,000 men under his command, but all of tried valour. In less than ten minutes, he gained a complete victory—a victory, perhaps, unparalleled in the course of the eventful struggle which Spain is now making for the defence of her liberties. The result of this memorable day has been 800 of the enemy's force killed, and 200 taken prisoners, with 1,000 muskets and 8 ammunition waggons.—But perhaps the greatest advantage which we shall derive from this victory is, that the remnant of the faction are struck with panic, and dispersed in all directions.

"This affair took place at nine in the morning; and at eight this evening this victorious column arrived, and assembled round the stone of the Constitution, where it raised its songs of triumph.

(Signed) "J. ABISBAIL."

Valencia, 27th April, 1823.

An article under the head of Russia and England, deserving of very serious consideration is introduced this week. It is taken from Bell's Weekly Messenger, a work that has obtained a high character for upwards of twenty years, and upon whose statements, generally, much confidence may be placed. Every motion of the Autocrat should be watched by England with the most scrutinizing jealousy. If the balance of Power in Europe exists any where since the lamentable and profligate dismemberment of Poland, and the crash of the brazen empire of Napoleon, it is in the hands of England, whose moral power, with the means she has of making it felt, is immense, and far beyond that of her more physical strength

The present crisis is in the highest degree interesting to the cause of rational liberty and to the march and progress of enlightened principles. The use of printing—the diffusion of commercial opulence—and the full and ready inter-course which now connects all parts of the civilized world, have given an intelligence and a weight to public opinion which it never possessed in any former period.—And it is now, we thank God, a match for the power of any ruthless Despot, or set of Despots, to arrest the magical influence of that great talisman, Public opinion, as to hide the glorious beams of heaven's great luminary, and cover the fair regions of Europe with the mantle of perpetual night.

The un-holy alliance may well regard the struggles of Spain and of Greece, and the demonstrations of Sicily and Poland, with terror—a terror that must be continued until these infatuated monarchs of the continent yield to the light of knowledge and the spirit of truth.—If they could but appreciate the happy lot of our own beloved Sovereign, whose power and security is equally great with that of His people, in whose hearts and affections he lives and reigns, they would surely cherish, rather than attempt to crush and extirpate, those principles on which so much happiness and prosperity is founded.—But, there are yet some strong holds of superstition and bigotry, and despotism to be overthrown, and much of the rubbish of the ancient schools to be swept away from the continent of Europe, before the evil spirits which have so long prevailed. can be successfully exorcised :—where the carrion lies, there is the vulture and the raven;—and the "Bird of Jove" sits not in the haunts of the owl and the bat, which love to bliuk in darkness

Ever since we perused Mr. Owen's plan for regulating, maintaining, and colonizing the Poor of England, and beheld his "portraiture" prefixed to the said plan, we ventured to clap him down as non compos in our note-book.—A great man, and an admirable writer, has justly remarked that all men are mad upon some particular subject ;—but this gentleman seems cracked at all points—We have published his infallible as a very singular attempt towards a general blending of contrary doctrinal opinions by a demolition of all those little fences and palings with which innumerable sects insane have thought fit to surround their spiritual domains. This fanatical Rasee is at present on a cruise amongst the White boys of Ireland, who are not unlikely to assist in a work of DEMOLITION—no matter the object!

Some comments on friend Carey's speeches, at tributed to Mr. McDonell and Dr. Baldwin, in his Parliamentary Debates, on the subject of Orange Societies, have been received, and will appear in our next.

As a notice from Mr. Angell arrived too late for insertion in the proper department of this publication, we give it in this place.

Selections fro[illegible]rish and Foreign Journals.

The late Fire at Constantinople.—It appears that none of the houses of the Ambassadors have suffered, though that of the Austrian Internuncio was in great danger.—Great alarm was caused by the danger that the powder magazine would be blown up. Happily there was time to ship off part of the powder; the rest was thrown into the sea.

The damage done to private and public buildings, magazines, mosques, &c. is inestimable.—An idea may be formed of its extent, when we consider that it included the suburbs of Tophana, Fundukli, Balibazar, and Rabatsch to Deimabegueche, a distance of a league and a half. The number of houses and shops destroyed, may be 3000, with fifty or sixty mosques and chapels.—No less than 40,000 people are without habitations. Unhappily a considerable number of persons have perished, either being unable to fly on account of sickness, or being overtaken and enveloped in the flames

Though no human power could check the flames, every thing possible has been done to relieve the unfortunate sufferers, both by the Sultan and the great Officers of the State; All classes of inhabitants vie with each other in receiving the houseless, and that the charity peculiar to the Mussulmans shows itself on this occasion in no less a striking light than the resignation and composure of those who have lost by this catastrophe their property, and perhaps what is still dearer to them, their friends.

During so long a scene of terror, when all the magistrates were engaged in exertions to extinguish the flames, there were no means to fear disorders and excesses; the public tranquility and security was not a moment disturbed. That it might not be endangered in the city itself, the Sultan ordered the Aga of the Janissaries to keep them all in their barracks and at their usual guard houses. So expert as free are at Constantinople, it is seldom that such misfortune has made so profound an impression on the minds of the Turkish people as this. With astonishment and consternation they beheld the conflagration consume its devastating fury to the Turkish houses alone, and when it approached the Christian dwellings, as if checked by a Supernatural Power, turn back on the quarters of the Mussulmans; nay, many houses not belonging to Mahometans remained uninjured in the midst of the flames

Ireland.—The London Gazette contains two despatches from the Marquis Wellesley, on the state of Ireland, but not of a later date than Jan 29 He recommends the extension of the act 30 Geo. III, to Ireland, and the continuance of the Insurrection act In reference to the tricks of Whiteboyism, his Lordship relates as follows, viz

"It is a curious circumstance, however, in the character of these transactions, that, in several instances the grain had been artfully separated from the straw, and had been sold, by the proprietor of the stacks, for its full value; and that the same proprietor had destroyed the stacks of straw by fire with a view of recovering from the barony the full value of corn already sold. These cases were not infrequent. The incendiary was of course indiscoverable The fact of such numerous and recent conflagrations, was alledged to be an indisputable proof of general combinations, until the vigilance of the military and police actually detected a considerable number of the stacks of straw, cleared of the grain, and prepared for the fire, and thus discovered the simple mystery of this double fraud."

An Active Schoolmaster.—According to the German Pedagogic Magazine, vol. 3. p. 407, died lately in Spain, a Schoolmaster, who for 51 years had superintended a large institution with old fashioned severity; from an average inferred by means of recorded observations, one of the others had calculated that in the course of his exertions he had given 911,500 canings. 124,000 floggings. 209,000 cuffs, 136,000 slaps with the ruler, and 22,700 tasks to get by heart; it was further calculated that he made 700 boys stand on, pun. 650 kneel on sharp edges of wood, 5,000 wear the fool's cap, and 1,700 hold the rod How vast the quantity of human misery inflicted by a single perverse educator.—Whitehaven Gazette.

Curious Illustration of the Number 2.—There is now living in a neighboring village a man who has been three times married, each of his wives' names were the same; he has had three children by each, and each lived with him three years. He was a widower between each marriage three years, has three children living, the third by each wife, and whose birth days are within three days of each other:—his last wife has been dead three years, and he expects to be married again in three months.—Brighton Gazette.

Emanuel Swedenborg.—A curious circumstance relative to this once celebrated character, and which excites unbounded interest among his numerous followers, has come to light within these few weeks past. It appears that he departed this life about 80 years ago, and was buried in a vault of a small church or chapel in the neighborhood of Ratcliffe high way. Some time after his interment, one of his disciples came over to England, and whether prompted by supernatural inspiration or his own blind superstition, does not appear, conceived the wild, chimerical, and romantic project of digger, to gain admittance to the cemetery where the body was deposited. Here, in the silent hour of midnight, (having previously supplied himself with the necessary implements) he broke open the coffin, and severed the head from the deserted saint, with the former of which he safely decamped to his own country. This relic he preserved with the greatest care and veneration till the day of his death, when it was discovered by his surviving relatives; and from written documents left behind the fanatic, the whole circumstances connected with this extraordinary affair were developed. His friends alarmed at the consequences that might follow such an unhallowed violation of the tomb, and being desirous of atoning in some measure for the sins of him who had been guilty of so great a crime, caused the head to be forthwith transmitted to this country, with a request that the coffin might be re-opened for the purpose of ascertaining if it was the identical head of the saint, and if so, that it might be restored to its original situation. In compliance with this request, the coffin was opened, and the above story proved to be perfectly correct, the trunk only of a skeleton presenting itself to the astonished eyes of those around. The head has accordingly been re-interred with due solemnity in the presence of the Elders of the Church.

Most singular discovery.—We are favored with the following by a correspondent, the truth of which may be relied upon:—"The late arrival from antique lands an opportunity of being gratified with as extraordinary a specimen of sorcery as ever was exhibited in this country. A few days ago, the Royal College of Physicians were presented with a human heart, which was found in a Sarcophagus dug out of the ruins of an Egyptian Temple, and which still retains its full size and fleshy softness. The Sarcophagus was imported from Malta before being opened, where its contents were explored in the presence of several persons, and some of the medical men of the Island. The most persevering force of the hammer and chisel were required before the lid of the sarcophagus could be removed. It was found filled with bituminous matter, and containing a fluid of the colour and appearance of old port wine, and which fluid immediately enveloped this most unique relic of human mortality. This heart is now pre-served in spirits in the manner of anatomical preparations. The fluid is kept in a phial separately, and according to the analysis of Sir Humphry Davy, consists principally of vegetable extractive matter with a portion of resin.

Extract of a letter from Paris.—It is confidently stated here, that the Duke of Angoulême was very reluctant to accept the command of the Army of observation; and when he at last assented, he expressed a wish that "he might be shot in the first engagement, for he foresaw in the war the ruin of his family." Strange, that a Prince taking so just a view of the probable issue of this serious war, should lend himself as an accessory to the commission of an useless crime. M. de Talleyrand, who, whenever his country is in a desperate crisis, is in the habit of contributing a joke for her consolation, has on the present disastrous occasion been delivered of the following bon-mot, which (in its last clause at least) seems to have the merit of truth, if not of brilliancy—La guerre d'Espagne est inevitable et infaisable: War with Spain is inevitable and impracticable.

Rome.—We had the requism of Canova performed at the Church of the Saint Apostoli. All the Academicians attended, and his finest monumental works were ranged in the church in Gesso, and the two noted lions were placed on each side of the door. The church was partially hung with black, and the music and ceremony were very imposing. The poetry was by Mieriti. The same writer mentions that the Duke of Devonshire has bought all the modern sculpture of merit in Rome.

Sicily.—A commercial friend just arrived from Sicily, informs us that the state of things in that Island is still considered at very precarious by the intelligent foreign residents. The people seem to be meditating a new attempt at a revolution. It is said that they have stores of arms and ammunition secretly prepared, and that they are only waiting for a favorable moment to rise against the present government, and establish a government of their own. He states that while lying in the harbor he heard the firing of cannon, and to ascertain the cause of it, he went on shore to the fort of Naples, and to ascertain a government of their own. He states that while lying in the harbor he heard the firing of cannon, and to ascertain the cause of it, he went on shore to the fort of Naples, and to ascertain the cause of it, he went on shore to the fort of Naples, and to ascertain a government of their own. He states that while lying in the harbor he heard the firing of cannon for the distance they fell is not sufficient to bruise them. Probably pears trained in this way would answer well in England.—Trans Hort Soc

FRENCH MODE OF BUTCHERY

(From "Mon Journal des huit Jours" by Rev. W. B. Wake, Curate of Maidstone)

"I had this morning an opportunity of seeing the difference between the English and French character in the article of killing their animals. We perceived a little boy leading a cow by a string fastened to her horns, through a butcher's shop, where hung several joints: my friend observed that they were going to kill her, a remark which I treated with perfect incredulity, replying, that they would hardly take her through the shop, nor would she go so willingly to the slaughter-house. But nothing was more true. The animal walked into a back space, as quiet as a lamb, and instead of being hacked and knocked about as with us, fell dead in a moment, even while I looked upon her. The thread in their ear, and the animal is in all respects the same I understand that Lord Somerville, the patron of the Agricultural Society, some years ago made an attempt to introduce into England this humane mode of killing the larger animals, by simply dividing, or wounding, the spinal marrow, (a practice known amongst us by the phrase, pithing) but that he could not prevail over the obstinacy and prejudice of ancient custom. I was curious to know why the French beast should be so gentle on going to his death, when the English is so restless and outrageous; and I received perfect satisfaction on this point, for the peasantry live on terms of familiarity with the animals, and treat them with such kindness that they will follow them any where; and secondly, the place of slaughter is after every instance of fecundity cleansed from the smell of blood. The butcher who performed this operation had not even an assistant on the occasion; nor was there the least noise except what was occasioned by the tumbling down of the animal. This humane mode is understand, practiced all over the Continent, and no man of common feeling can refrain from wishing it to be adopted by ourselves."

Natural History.

Sea Monster.—The Douglass sailed from New York on the 3d of April, and on the 6th, at 3 P. M. lat. 35 W. long 58 40, discovered, as they supposed, a vessel bottom upwards, three points on the weather bow. The Douglass braced sharp, and came within forty feet of her, or rather of a Sea Serpent, or sea monster of some sort.

The height out of water was about 40 or 12 feet; length, 25 to 30 feet; breadth 12 feet, with flippers like a turtle on each side, one third of the way from the tail. Length of the flippers from 12 to 15 feet, one on each side near the tail, 8 or 6 feet in length, with a tail from 20 to 25 feet long. The head appeared doubled round by the tail, and the monster had a huge lion-face, with large and terrible saucer eyes. —At 30 or 40 rods distance, the shell of the monster looked like a clinker-built vessel, of 25 to 30 tons, bottom upwards —the seams or laps newly paid. There were large barnacles, on the body, and his velocity was about 1 1-2 mile per hour. The last the Douglass saw of this Son of Neptune, he was apparently bearing away for Bermuda

English Gardens.—Since the discovery of the new world, our English gardens have produced 2945 varieties of trees and plants from America, and upwards of 1700 from the Cape of Good Hope, in addition to many thousands which have been brought from China, the East Indies, New Holland, various parts of Africa, Asia, and Europe; until the list of plants now cultivated in this country exceeds 120,000 varieties.—London paper

Durability of Oak.—As a proof of the durability of oak, it may be sufficient to observe, that there is now standing in the hop ground of Mr William Lawrence, at the Chequers, Tudely, in the county of Kent, an oak hop pole, which has been in constant use for these 70 years past. Its present length is 18 feet, and has stood the weather equally with other poles in the same plantation.

Sagacity of the Dog.—Singular Occurrence.—A gentleman of Hampstead had a remarkably fine pointer dog, who, in jumping a gate, happened to break his leg. He was taken to a surgeon at Mill-hill, who set the leg, and put on the proper bandage. After the first or second time, the dog went regularly twice a day to have his leg dressed, till it was well. Some time after the leg was cured, the surgeon, one morning while at breakfast, saw Cato jump the half-door, and immediately shewed signs that he wanted the door opened; on going to which the surgeon perceived to his surprise, that Cato had actually brought him a patient which he had picked up, a poor terrier bitch with a broken leg.!!—

From the Washington Gazette

Faithfulness of the Dog.—Six or eight weeks since, an old man, a shoemaker, died in the house of a farmer, about 10 miles from this Borough, and was buried in the Roman Catholic grave yard; near the turnpike, about 6 miles from the town. When the coffin containing the body was carried out of the house, a large dog which had manifested some signs of attachment to the deceased, and had for some months belonged to this farmer, was observed to smell at it. Some time in the course of next day the dog was observed at or near the grave, where he continued pretty constantly for several days and nights, frequently scratching on and about the grave and bawling. The family at the nearest dwelling did not give him any thing to eat, for 4 or 6 days, supposing by that means that the dog would be induced to leave the place: but seeing no disposition in him to do so, and being informed to whom the dog belonged, they afterwards frequently fed him. He continued his attendance at the grave several weeks, but not so closely as at first.—Frequently rambling over the fields in the day time, but generally returning at night, and lying down on the grave. A man of the family who knew the dog had belonged, called at the grave yard, about three weeks since, to know whether the reports of the dog being there were correct. At his approach the dog showed evident signs of dislike to him, by growling, &c. and would not permit him to enter the yard, until accompanied by a boy who lived near, and with whom the dog had become acquainted. On the 5th inst. the dog was enticed away by a man who had been in the farmer's family during the winter, and followed him to the house of his master, where he was secured a day and a night; but a circumstance occurred which rendered it necessary to loose him in the night, whereupon he came to the yard gate, near the farmer's dwelling, appeared to get on a scent, and immediately disappeared. The writer called on the 10th inst at the nearest dwelling to the grave yard above mentioned, and was informed that the dog had returned there on the night he had been loosed. Any persons who may feel inclined to doubt this statement and feel curious to ascertain the facts, may satisfy themselves, by an enquiry of the family residing near the grave.

A Well authenticated instance of an extraordinary Presentiment fulfilled.

MILES PETER ANDREWS & LORD LYTTLETON

The death of the celebrated and erudite Thomas Lord Lyttleton, from the singularity of the circumstances attending it, cannot fail to live to the memory of those who have heard it. He professed to have been warned of his death, and the time thereof, as follows:—About a week before he died, he said he went to bed, pretty well, but restless; soon after his servant had left him, he heard a footstep at the bottom of his bed; he raised himself in order to see what it might be, when one of the most angelic female figures that imagination could possibly paint, presented itself before him, and with a commanding voice and action, bade him prepare, and prepare himself, for on such a night at the hour of Twelve, he would surely die! He attempted to address the vision, but was unable, and the ghost vanished: and left him ill a state more easily conceived than could be described. His valet found him in the morning more dead than alive, and it was some hours before his Lordship could be sufficiently recovered to send for his friends, to whom he thought it necessary to communicate this extraordinary circumstance. Mr. Miles Peter Andrews was one of the number sent for, being, at that time, one of his most intimate associates. Every person to whom Lord L. told the tale naturally turned it into ridicule—all knowing him to be very nervous, tried to make him believe it was a dream; so they certainly considered it themselves. Lord L. filled his glass with company, and appeared to think as his friends would with him, Mr. M. P. Andrews had business which called him to Dartford, and therefore soon took his leave, thinking Lord L. quite composed on this subject, so that his friend's dream dwelt so little on his imagination, that he did not recollect the time when it was predicted that the event would take place. One night after he left Pitt Place, the residence of Lord L. he supposed he might have been in bed half an hour, when, endeavouring to compose himself, suddenly his curtains were pulled open, and Lord Lyttleton appeared before him at his bed-side, standing in his robe-de-chambre and night cap. Mr A. looked at him some time, and thought if so odd a freak of his friend's, they he began to reproach him for his folly, in coming down to Dartford Mills without notice, as he could find no accommodation however, said he, I'll get up, and see what can be done. He turned to the other side of the bed, and rang the bell, when Lord L. disappeared. Mr. Andrews's servant soon after entered when his master enquired where is Lord Lyttleton? The servant, all astonishment, declared he had not seen any thing of his Lordship since they had left Pitt Place. Pshaw, you fool, replied Mr. A. he was here this moment at my bed-side. The servant persisted it was not possible—Mr. Andrews dressed himself, and with the servants, searched every part of the house and garden, but no Lord L. was to be found! Still Mr. Andrews was not help believing that Lord L. had played him this trick for his disbelief of the vision, till about four o'clock the same day, an express arrived to inform him of Lord Lyttleton's death, and the manner of it, by a friend who was present, and who gave the following particular account of it. That on the morning before Lord Lyttleton died, he entered the breakfast room, between ten and eleven o'clock; appeared rather thoughtful, and did not answer any inquiries made by his friends respecting his health, &c. At dinner he seemed much better, and, when the cloth was taken away, he exclaimed, "Richard's himself again!" but as the night came on, the gloom of the morning returned. However, as this was the predicted night of dissolution, his friends agreed that it would be right to alter the clocks and watches in the house. This was arranged by the steward, without Lord Lyttleton suspecting any thing of it, his own watch, which lay upon his dressing table, being altered by his valet. During the evening they got him into some pleasant discussions, in which he distinguished himself with peculiar wit and pleasantry. At half after Eleven, as he conceived it, he ordered over to bed, and all supposed [illegible] good night, and left them all delighted with his calm appearance. During the day not the least hint was given by any one to him of the dream. But of course, as soon as he had withdrawn, the conversation naturally turned upon it.—The discourse continued till nearly twelve o'clock when the door being hastily opened, Lord L.'s valet entered pale as death, crying out, "My Lord is dying!" His friends flew to his bed side; but he expired before they could all assemble round him! Lord Lyttleton's valet gave to them the following statement, viz. That Lord L. made his usual preparations for bed; that he kept every now and then looking at his watch; that when he got into bed, he ordered his curtains to be closed at the foot. It was now within a minute or two of Twelve by his watch which he held to look at often, and seemed pleased to find it nearly keep time with his own. His Lordship then put them both to his ear to satisfy himself if they went. When it was more than a quarter after twelve by our watches, he said, "This Mysterious Lady is not a true Prophetess, I find." When it was near the real hour of Twelve, he said, "Come, I'll wait no longer; get me my medicine; I'll take it, and try to sleep!" I just stepped into the dressing room to prepare the physic, and had mixed it, when I thought I heard my Lord breathing very hard—I ran to him, and found him in the agonies of death.

Poetry.

THE FIRST KISS OF LOVE.

BY GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON.

Away with your fiction of flimsy romance,
Those tissues of falsehood which folly has wove;
Give me the mild beam of the soul-breaking glance,
Or the rapture which dwells on the first kiss of love.

Ye rhymers whose bosoms with fantasy glow,
Whose pastoral passions are made for the grove;
From what blest inspiration your sonnets would flow,
Could you ever have tasted the first kiss of love.

If Apollo should e'er his assistance refuse,
Or the Nine be disposed from your service to rove,
Invoke them all round, bid adieu to the muse,
And try the effects of the first kiss of love.

I hate you, ye cold compositions of art,
Though prudes may condemn me, and bigots reprove,
I court the effusions that spring from the heart,
Which throbs with delight to the first kiss of love.

Your shepherds, your flocks—those fantastical themes,
Perhaps may amuse, yet they never can move,
Arcadia displays but a region of dreams:
What are visions like these to the first kiss of love?

Oh! cease to affirm, that man, since his birth,
From Adam, till now, has not with wretchedness strove;
Some portion of Paradise still is on earth,
And Eden revives in the first kiss of love.

When age chills the blood, when our pleasures are past,
For years fleet away with the wings of the dove,—
The dearest remembrance will still be the last,
Our sweetest memorial—the first kiss of love.

* The admirers of the "Ayrshire Ploughboy," the sweet "Bard of Coila," will not fail to remark the analogy between this sentiment and the following exquisite lines from the "Cotter's Saturday Night." Ed.

"If Heaven a draught of heavenly pleasure spare,
One cordial in this melancholy vale,
'Tis when a youthful, loving, modest, pair,
In other's arms breathe out the tender tale,
Beneath the milk white thorn that scents the evening gale."

Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province; to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on the twenty third day of June instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—Greeting:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the fourteenth day of May last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 23rd day of June instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby considering, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereon to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well beloved Sir Peregrine Maitland, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, the eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON,
Sec'y.

H. J. Boulton, Solicitor Gen'l.

Executive Council Office,
York, 26th June, 1822.

NOTICE is hereby given, by order of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in Council; that unless Andrew Miller, the original Locatee of the Western Quarter of Lot number fifteen, in the fifth Concession of the Township of Ernestown, in the Midland District, or his representative, do shew cause within six months why the Location should not be rescinded, it will be granted to Mary Robertson, wife of John Robertson, of Ernestown, aforesaid.

JOHN BEIKIE,
Deputy Clerk Executive Council.

4-6m.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have not been lodged from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee as is deemed expedient to reserve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent applications, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1823.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Cl'k Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 8th January, 1819, viz:

Editorial Commentary.

THE American Papers have of late been filled with lengthy and very amusing accounts of the great Horse race between Henry and Eclipse—from which it would appear our neighbours are "repenting fast" towards Carinthian maturity. It is said that upwards of 60,000 persons, from all parts of the States, were present; and, that bets to the amount of more than a Million of Dollars were depending on the event. The match itself, was for 20,000 ₤ a side—Both horses of English extraction.—From the particulars of the race, as narrated in the papers, it is quite clear that an expert English Jockey could have won upon either horse,—and it would probably now prove as profitable for SAM CHERRY, BUCKLE, CLIFT, or JACKSON, to make occasional trips from England in the line of their profession, as for our first rate players in theirs.

It is satisfactory to find there is at length some probability of the Bridges over the Don, in this vicinity being completed. We are, ourselves, the more anxious on this account, from the hope there is reason to entertain—that these, and other improvements, in the neighbourhood, will eventually lead to a draining of the great marsh at the east end of the Town; for, until this is done, it is utterly impossible the place can be healthy at all seasons of the year.—The Public are not sufficiently impressed with the alarming insalubrity of such situations.—We beg to refer our readers to a very interesting letter from DR FREEZEY to Sir JOHN PRINGLE in the Phil Trans. for 1773 and another from DR. Price to DR. HOSSLEY, in the same work for 1774, both on this subject, which throw considerable light upon it. We have it in contemplation to republish these letters in this Work, as being highly interesting to many persons, and applicable to various situations in this country; but, particularly to the neighbourhood of Y—k."

Venerating, as we do, that great and glorious event which secured the BILL of RIGHTS, as the most blessed political inheritance of Englishmen, and which put the finishing stroke to that wonder of the world, the BRITISH CONSTITUTION—we have admitted the communication signed "No Orangeman," thinking his remarks moderate and just—We have a great respect for the worthy member for Glengarry, believing him to be a strictly conscientious man; but, in this instance (if the speech correctly reported) his zeal has undoubtedly led him to cast a reflection upon the memory of WILLIAM III. as severe as it is unwarrantable,—it being quite evident to an impartial reader of the work to which he alludes, as to the otherwise known facts of the case, that the King imposed upon, whilst abroad, by the representations of the EARL BREADALBANE and Sir JOHN DALRYMPLE, and was led to exclude certain persons, amongst whom were Mr. DONALDS of Glenco, from a general pardon that was extended to those rebels who laid down their arms and submitted, by a certain day.—But there is surely no passage in the work referred to which can be strained to prove any positive order being made by the King for the terrible massacre of Glenco—the honour of which was peculiar to the Right Treachery and ferocity of the times in cases where a small feud existed.—It is evident, to us, that the EARL of BREADALBANE stretched his authority, and availed himself of the circumstance of Mr. DONALD of Glenco being a rebel, and under the displeasure of his Sovereign, in order to gratify his revenge by committing one of the most cruel—detestable,—and horrid crimes ever heard of.—But in honest, sober, truth it does really appear to us quite as unjust to lay that shocking outrage to the charge of KING WILLIAM, as it would be for any future historian to attribute the barbarous outrages now daily committing in Ireland to the present Ministers and Government of this Empire.

Accounts of excesses continue to be received from IRELAND, of bitter scenes for the precincts of Pandemonium than for a country of Christians. We shall give some extraordinary notices from them in our next.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

The Prince Regent of 120 guns, was launched at Chatham last week, amidst an immense concourse of spectators. She is the largest vessel in the navy, her length being 244 feet, her greatest depth 64 feet, and greatest width 53 1-2. She has four decks, her burthen is 2,600 tons, and she is capable of mounting 132 guns. The stern is nearly the same shape as the bows, the advantage of which is, that she can bring at least four guns to bear upon the enemy in any direction.—She has been seven years on the Stocks, and is supposed to have cost 200,000*l*. She went off in the finest possible style.

English Commerce.—The press of business, of late, at the Liverpool Custom House, has been unusually heavy. The exports to all parts of the world have been greater than at almost any former season. During the quarter, ending the 5th inst. there have been exported 41 1-2 millions of square yards of printed calico, and the amount of the debentures payable thereon (including other excise goods exported within the same period) exceeds 168,000*l*. So great has been the demand for cottons at Liverpool, that their wages have increased to 4*l*. and 4*l* 10*s* per month, in vessels to British America.

The Spanish Character.—The Spaniards are generally short, thin, and well proportioned. Their complexion is olive, their manners are grave and slow but graceful. They are distinguished for their national and personal pride. These prevent them from stooping to the more grovelling vices. They are credulous, superstitious, and bigoted; but at present not intolerant. They are revengeful; but assassination are less frequent than formerly, and are not common except in Andalusia and Grenada. Jealousy was formerly a common characteristic of the nation, but it has been succeeded by a more criminal indifference. One of the most striking of the present national manners and customs is the common practice of adultry under the mask of religion. The cicisbeo has appeared as a distinct class of men in Italy several centuries since, and were soon found in Austria, Spain and Portugal. In France they were unnecessary. In Italy they are usually gentlemen. In Spain they are often monks and ecclesiastics. They are called cortejos, and often discover a singular degree of fidelity and constancy in their criminal attachment.

In general the Spaniards are patient, cautious, distinguished for their sobriety and temperance, charitable, friendly, faithful, and strictly honest in their dealings. They are obedient to the laws, and willing to undergo any sacrifice for the honor of their country.

The manners of the different Provinces, have each also their peculiar characters. The Catalans are the most industrious, active and ingenious. They are fond of property. Their manners are rude and vulgar. The Valencian is mild and supple in his manners, idle, subtle, and false. All the mountebanks and tumblers come from Valencia. The Andalusian is well made, nimble lively idle, vain, extravagant and licentious. The Castilian is haughty, grave, distant, dignified, mistrustful, and usually well informed and intelligent. The Gallicians leave their own country, and are employed in the rest of Spain in the lowest occupations, as in sweeping chimneys, and cleaning shoes. Most of the servants are Asturians; they are faithful, not very intelligent but exact in the performance of their duty.

SPAIN was anciently called Hesperia, or Western, on account of its being the most western part of the world known to the ancients, and Iberia, from the river Iber, now the Ebro.

Isle of Man.—A Court of Gaol Delivery, [illegible] at Castle Rushen, Isle of Man, on Tuesday, the 10th ult. before his Grace the Duke of Athol, for the trial of John Cannain and Catharine Kinread, for wilful murder, by administering arsenic to the wife of John Cannain. This attrocious case arose out of a criminal connexion between the prisoners, who connected the dreadful scheme of destroying the wife by means of poison. It was proved, in the clearest manner, that the husband had purchased arsenic, and that the female prisoner administered it to the deceased, mixed up in a bason of milk. The body had been interred for some days; but, in consequence of strong suspicion falling upon the prisoners, it was taken up, and after being opened, a large quantity of arsenic was found in the contents of the stomach. The trial lasted the whole of the day, and was conducted, with great attention, by James Clarke Esq. the Attorney General of the Island. The prisoners were convicted, and received sentence of death, which will be carried into effect as soon as the King's pleasure is made known. This dreadful murder has excited, as it well might, a strong sensation throughout the Island, where a trial for murder has not before occurred for the last 30 years.

Ingenious Penmanship.—A correspondent informs us that Mr. Beckett, residing at Ottery St. Mary, Devon, has been induced to produce another specimen of his extraordinary performance of penmanship. Having observed, in the 37th part of the Percy Anecdotes, (ingenuity, p 37) that a gentleman now living at Liverpool has written Goldsmith's Poem of the Traveller (408 lines) in a square 3 1-2 inches by 3 1-2 inches. (which is there inserted as a wonder,) Mr B commenced his arduous task, and wrote with the greatest facility Goldsmith's Poems of the Traveller, Deserted Village, Retaliation, Hermit on Women, Hermit on Inhabiting of Quebec, and a Sonnet, without any abbreviation; that is in a square 3 1-2 inches by 3 1-2 inches, the whole comprising 1,008 lines, and about 40,000 letters!! It may be distinctly read with a magnifying glass, and by some without that help.—Various things of the kind have been produced by others, but this is considered to be the greatest piece of ingenuity that has ever been written. It will be placed in the British Museum.—Exeter Flying Post.

Coursing Extraordinary.—Last week the following curious circumstance took place in the Island of Sebeen: G Cupis, Esq. in company with a friend, was walking over he grounds, followed by his celebrated dog Dick, when suddenly a brace of hares started from their forms at the same instant. Dick espied, and picked up one in great style without a single turn, which he left, and taking of his own accord after the other, run a long straight mile in view, when he succeeded in turning, and ultimately killing her. On the gentleman taking up the first, and proceeding towards the last spot of action, they were met by Dick returning with the second hare in his mouth.

Cabriolets in London.—Cabriolets, like those used in Paris, (says a morning paper,) are to be introduced in London in a few days. It is scarcely necessary to say that the Cabriolet is nothing more than our one horse chaise, with a hood as a shelter from the rain. "The coachmen are to be seated," a correspondent informs us, "at a little distance from the passengers, and in order to render this circumstance palatable, the proprietors of the Cabriolets set forth, that none but men of acknowledged good character shall be employed, who are also to be provided with decent clothes by their employers; likewise the men are to be shaved every morning, and compelled to have three clean shirts on a week. But the greatest attraction will be a saving of fourpence in a mile. The proprietors of the Cabriolet not requiring more than eightpence per mile. Another advantage is, that the safety of the passengers has been considered; in fact, if the horse should trip or even fall down, the persons seated in the Cabriolet cannot be thrown out. With respect to being hired they will take their stands, and have numbers similar to hackney coaches. In cases of emergency, in order to admit three persons, provided one of them could handle the reins, the coachman will ride behind."

Singular title.—The following remarkable title puts us in mind of those used in the puritanical times in England. It is copied from an American paper. Ed.

Strange Advertisement.—We copy the following singular advertisement from the Lancaster Press.—A few copies of "A BRIDLE FOR DEVILS," being an evangelical curb to muzzle them, who, having been bitten by the Old Serpent, grow under the infernal poison. By a lover of whole bones, has been left at this office for sale.—Price 6 1-4 cents.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Mr. Canning appears to have offended the Courier, if we may judge from the following paragraphs.

In commending on the papers connected with foreign relations the Courier calls the question of Portugal "Tinkling" and concludes thus:

"In short, it is impossible to look at the actual state of affairs, and not feel that the neutrality of this country is suspended by a hair.

The whole paragraph is obviously intended as a hit at Mr. Canning!

Praising the late Lord Londonderry, the Courier says!—"That honest and sincere Statesman, who would have parted with his life rather than his principles, disdained to warp them, even for a moment, for the sake of a little vulgar popularity; he would have found a way to preserve the honour and dignity of the empire without exasperating Foreign Governments by the violence of invective and reproach."

Variorities.—Mr. Hugh Bell and Mademoiselle Marcandotti were married at Banff church on Palm Sunday. The Earl of Fife gave away the bride. Mr. Bell gave the officiating minister 100gs. The happy pair arrived at Ramsgate on Sunday week, on their way to Dover, where they embarked for Ostend. The lady is not the daughter of Lord Fife; she is the legitimate daughter of a Spanish gentleman of good family. When his lordship first became acquainted with the mother, then a widow, Mrs Bell was already five years old.—Lady Cochrane is making great preparation for her departure for South America. Her baggage and suite will embark in the course of the ensuing week.

The young Duc de Reichstadt (son of Napoleon) received, on the 20th of March, (his birth-day,) an ensign's commission from his grandfather, the Emperor of Austria. It is curious enough that the appointment of the Duke of Wellington's son, (the Marquis of Douro) to an ensigncy bears the same date.—James Tennis has undertaken to walk 5,000 miles in 18 days (Sundays excepted) on the road between Doncaster and Sheffield, to commence on the 14th inst. He is a native of Ottrington, in Yorkshire, and in his 51st year.

Hyson Tea.—The fact has been demonstrated, that the genuine Hyson Tea may be successfully cultivated in the State of North Carolina. The experiment has been tried, and the result has been the most satisfactory.

Miscellaneous.

From the French Causes Celebres.

Remarkable Resuscitation.—Two men in trade, who lived in the street St. Honore, in Paris, nearly equal in circumstances, both following the same profession, and united in the closest friendship, had married each a child, much about the same age. These children were brought up together, and conceived a mutual attachment, which, ripening with years into a stronger and more lively sentiment, was approved by the parents on both sides. This young couple were on the point of being made happy by a more solemn union, when a rich financier, conceiving a passion for the young maid, unfortunately crossed their inclinations by demanding her in marriage. The allurements of a more brilliant fortune induced her father and mother, notwithstanding their daughter's repugnance, to consent to the change. To their astonishment, however, she was obliged to yield, and sacrifice her affections by becoming the wife of the financier. Like a woman of virtue, she forbade her ex-lover the house. A fit of melancholy, the consequence of this violence done to her inclinations, by entering into an engagement of interest, brought on her a malady, which so far benumbed her faculties, that at length she was given over by the physicians, apparently dead, and was accordingly laid out for burial. Her former lover, who had once before beheld her in a similar situation, believed himself that she might possibly be again in a trance. This idea not only suspended his grief, but prompted him to bribe the grave digger, by whose aid he dug up the body in the night time and conveyed it home. He then used every means in his power for recalling her to life, and was overjoyed on discovering that his endeavors were not ineffectual. It is not easy to conceive the surprise of the young woman on her resuscitation, when she found herself in a strange house, and as it were in the arms of her lover, who soon informed her of what had taken place on her account. She then comprehended the extent of her obligation to her deliverer; and love, more pathetic that all his persuasions to unite their destinies, determined her to escape with him into England. This was effected, and they lived for some years in the closest union.

At the end of ten years, they conceived the natural wish of revisiting their own country, and at length returned to Paris, where they took no precaution whatever of concealing themselves, being persuaded that no suspicion would attach to their arrival. It happened, however, by chance, that the financier met his wife in one of the public walks. The sight of her made so strong an impression on him, that for some time he remained motionless with astonishment. Soon, fully convinced of standing the language she made use of to impose upon him, he left her with the conviction that he was not deceived at finding her a living substance. The singularity of this event gave more charms to the woman in the eyes of her former husband than she before possessed. He therefore acted with such address, that he discovered her abode, notwithstanding all her precautions, and reclaimed her with all the regular formalities of justice. It was in vain the lover maintained the right which his cares for his mistress gave him to the possession of her; that he represented her inevitable death, but for him; that his adversary divested himself of all his own rights, by causing her to be buried; that he ought even to be accused of homicide, for want of having taken proper precautions to secure himself of her death; and a thousand other ingenious reasons, which were suggested to him. But, finding that the judicial law was unfavorable, and that it was not it prudent to wait the result of a definitive judgment, he fled with his mistress into a foreign country; where they passed the remainder of their days without further molestation.

Arts and Sciences.

Curious Machinery.—From the Leeds Mercury.—On Wednesday last, a highly interesting experiment was made with a machine, constructed by Messrs. Fenton, Murray, and Wood, in this place, under the direction of Mr. John Blenkinsop, the patentee, for the purpose of substituting the agency of steam for the use of horses, in the conveyance of coals, on the iron rail-way, from the mines of J. C. Brandling, Esq. at Middleton, to Leeds. This machine is, in fact, a steam engine, which, by the intervention of a few trifling assistance of cranks turning a cog wheel, and iron cogs placed at one side of the rail-way, is capable of moving, when lightly loaded, at the speed of ten miles an hour. At four o'clock in the afternoon, the machine ran from the Coal-staith to the top of Hunslet-moor, where it was, afterwards, met by eight waggons of coals, each weighing 3 1-2 tons, were hooked to the back part. With this immense weight, to which, as it approached this town, was superadded about fifty of the inquisitives mounted upon the waggons, it set off on its return to the Coal-Staith, and performed the journey, a distance of about a mile and a half, principally on a dead level, in twenty three minutes, without the slightest accident. The experiment, which was witnessed by thousands of spectators, was attended with complete success; and when it is considered that this invention is applicable to all rail-roads, and that upon the works of Mr Brandling alone the use of fifty horses will be dispensed with, and the corn necessary for the consumption of at least two hundred men with a saving proportionably similar to the hard breathing or snorting of a horse—the escaping steam representing the breath at his nostrils, and the deception altogether aided by the regular motion of the engine-beam, and the rapidity of motion rendering accurate observation, to the ascent, the rate is about four miles an hour, and, on level ground, from five to six.

New Invention.—An invention has just been brought to perfection for the cutting, spreading, and twisting of the wicks of candles, by which piece of machinery a single person can cut, spread, and twist, five reels in one minute, by which more than one half of the manual labour in the making of candles will be saved.

From a French Journal.—Lithography.—Lithography continues to add to its honours, and daily to make new conquests. Not only are lithographic engravings impressed in colours, but there is even a process by means of which oil paintings may be printed off. M. Malapeau, to whose researches we are indebted for this discovery, took out a patent at the end of last year; to secure to himself the advantages of his invention; and he has since that time made many new applications of the process, all of which have perfectly succeeded. It is not for us to describe here the various means which M. Malapeau employs, to take off upon canvass a faithful copy of an original painting. Suffice it to say, that neither the drawing nor the colouring, nor even the handling of the master, suffer from this method of multiplying the best productions of the art of painting in oil. Another advantage not to be passed over in silence, is, that pictures thus copied by lithography may be sold at a very moderate price.

Natural History.

THE STORK.

Rastock in the Duchy of Mecklenburg—On the 31st of May, 1822, a Stork was shot on the estate of Count Von Bothmer, on the coast of the Baltic, not far from Wismar, in the Duchy of Mecklenburg. This Stork had an arrow, which was probably discharged at it by some African savage, sticking perpendicularly in its neck. The arrow was two feet seven inches in length, of black wood, with an iron head of rude workmanship, which was fastened to the wood with a string. It projected by nearly one third of its length above the back of the Stork, and the lower part about an inch in breast. It was observed that several other Storks endeavoured to free their companion from this ornament, which it doubtless brought from its winter Africa. A draughtsman of the name of L. Laithe, drawing of it on stone; it was afterwards stuffed, and preserved in the Museum of Rostock.

EAST COAST OF GREENLAND.

Liverpool, Sept 24th, 1822.

The ship Baffin, capt. Scoresby, jun. arrived here on Thursday, from Greenland, with 165 tons blubber, the produce of nine whales. During the intervals of the fishery capt. S. employed himself in making observations on the geography and natural history of the long lost eastern coast of Greenland, which was wholly unknown for three months.—The result, we understand, is a survey of the eastern coast of that almost unknown country, from lat. 75 north to 60, comprising an extent of coast, reckoning its numerous indentations, of 800 miles; capt. S. discovered some extensive inlets from the number of which he is induced to consider the whole country a large assemblage of islands. He landed on various parts of the coast, and on each visit to the shore, discovered recent traces of inhabitants, and obtained fragments of their implements.

It is important to geography to know, that the Island of Jan Mayen, which is laid down in all charts, is very unlike what it is represented in our best charts, and that it is erroneous in longitude, in most cases, was not less than 15 degrees. We understand that he has made large collections of plants and minerals, particularly of geological specimens. The Baffin left the coast of Greenland on the 20th of Aug. soon after encountering a tremendous storm, in which the Prince of London was dismasted. This vessel (the Duncan) was afterwards towed out of the land ice by the Baffin. Capt. Scoresby, jun. and attended by her until well equipped with jury masts, and put into a state considered fully capable of performing the passage to Liverpool.

Sea Serpent.—The animal recently caught in the waters of Jersey, and now exhibiting in Broadway, is really a curiosity. It is no shark, nor horse mackerel, and whether fish or flesh, it is really a sea monster of no ordinary kind. It has two huge muscular fins, or rather wings, a little back of the gills, and two very large pearly, silver feet back of the fins, about the size of a man's leg, and the fore leg somewhat resembling the fore half of a human foot, with a toe about an inch long, on the heel. On the back is a single fin, with a fin on the top of it. The tail is peculiarly constructed, and when the animal was in motion, was curled about six or seven feet. The mouth and throat are enormously large. The animal had no heart, and the liver was situated back to the tail. There was not a bone in the body; the whole texture substance, (of which we have a specimen) being a kind of elastic gristle. The skin is of a dark brown colour, and entirely without scales. The animal must have been of immense power, and in the water might well have been taken for a sea dragon, worthy of being rode by Neptune himself. After all, we know but little of the wonders of the mighty deep.

A mallet set—A tree, lately felled in Halifax co. to cut into bungs, was found to contain in a hollow, 4 racoons, 3 flying squirrels, 4 grey squirrels, one fox squirrel, a scorpion, hornets nest, and a screech owl. Five gallons of honey were obtained from the nest of bees.

Anecdotes.

Extraordinary Female Duel.—Notwithstanding the great number of duels which are continually occurring, the history of late years does not present us with those of female heroines. I am apt to doubt it. That we are the most artful and cunning of created beings is true; but does that prove that either Dodd, me, or you are rational? Dodd was one of the best tempered men on earth; generous, charitable, and happy to serve and assist every man who required his time, his purse or his advice. He had great susceptibility, and went through what was worse than a thousand deaths during his long confinement. Visiting him one morning, I asked him how he had slept? "I have slept none to night," said he, "they have been all night, unrivetting and knocking off the chains of the felons who suffered to day, and every blow they gave was to me as the stroke of death." The last time I saw him, (going unfortunately when Mrs Dodd was taking her last farewell of him,) I found them with their hands closed in each others, lost and insensible to every object, which surrounded them with such distress of mind pictured on the countenances that I should have thought it an act of charity had some benevolent hand struck them instantly dead. A mother at such a hurtful sight, would shudder, and horribly affecting. It was the misfortune of my whole life in which I coveted power. I quitted the room but the scene never can be effaced from memory

I am persuaded that though both their eyes were wide open, and their hearts were fluttering with inconceivable agitations, they neither of them had the power of sight, speech, or motion! That was the minute to have been a king!

After Dodd's death I heard of some transactions of his which grieved, though not removed, my concern for his fate.

When I arrived in England from France, I asked the custom-house officer for news. He told me a Doctor of Divinity was in Newgate for forgery; and I thought (I know not why) said in my mind, Then it is Dr. Dodd!

P THICKNESSE.

Communications.

(For the Weekly Register.)

MR. FOTHERGILL,

Being aware you are no party-man, and having noticed your objections, on a former occasion, to admit the angry philippics of individuals incensed against each other, on questions merely of a party nature, in the columns of your strictly impartial paper, it is possible you may decline publishing the few remarks sent her with; but I assure you, Sir, it is the cause of truth alone I wish to serve.

The Observer has put some strange language and assertions into the mouths of Mr. McDonell and Dr. Baldwin in his Parliamentary Debates, respecting Orange Societies, which I find some difficulty in placing to the credit of those Gentlemen. It is not easy to separate the memory of William III. from the Glorious Revolution of 1688, which placed him on the throne of England, and on the merits of which there is a remarkable unanimity amongst all classes of politicians; and, it must follow, that, if there are few or no Scotchmen who revere the memory of those times, the thousands and tens of thousands of Scots, who so largely shattered our present Gracious Sovereign upon his late visit to the land of cakes, must have been decided hypocrites; since it is impossible to forget that it was in consequence of the Revolution, and the election of King William, the Royal House of Brunswick so happily succeeded to the British Throne.

Dr. Johnson once observed, that "a Scotchman must be a very sturdy moralist, who does not love Scotland better than truth"—In this instance, a love of both,—of truth and of the country—it could indence a Scotchman to venerate that memorable event, since there is no part of the British Empire more deeply and extensively indebted to it than Scotland, which has advanced in civilization, wealth, and consequence, in the most wonderful manner during the last hundred years.—Yet we are told by the worthy Member for Glengary, that few or no Scotchmen can venerate the cause of so many great results.

As to the Orange Processions in Upper Canada, about which so much fuss is made, it is hard to say which is most surprising, whether any human biped, older than a child of nine or ten years, should take pleasure in flourishing a bit of coloured rag in the air, and marching like geese to a duck pond, at certain times,—or, that men pretending to some sense, should take offence at it! But, if large, bearded, children, from 20 to 40 years old, and upwards, should wish to amuse themselves in this truly childish way, why, in God's name, let them, and leave the gravity and wisdom of Parliament for the consideration of weightier matters. For an exposition of the extreme absurdity of attributing an intention to assassinate the Viceroy of Ireland, on a late occasion to Orange men and the ridiculous consequences of that attempt, I must refer the reader to a speech of Mr. Brownlow's in the British Parliament, on the 14th of April last, supposing you can spare no more room on the present occasion, permit me, notwithstanding what I have written, to subscribe myself

UPPER CANADA.

No. XV.

WEDNESDAY, 12 March, 1823.

On motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Walsh, Messrs. Bates and Rostwick were ordered to wait on address to His Excellency pursuant to the forgoing resolution.

Mr. Bates reported a draft of an address on the subject of the Clergy Reserves, which was received once and read a first time.

On motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Rostwick, the fifth rule was dispensed with, and the address was read the second time.

On motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Rostwick, the address was adopted and ordered for a third reading the same day.

Mr. Hagerman reported that the Committee of the Commons House of Assembly, appointed to confer with the conferees of the Honorable the Legislative Council, on the amendments made by that house unto the two reports bill, had agreed to recommend to the adoption of the house, the following amendment, viz

The striking out of the last clause of the bill and the insertion of the following.

And be it further enacted &c. That the said treasurer of the said law society shall pay into the hands of his Majesty's Receiver General of this Province, for the time being, the several sums of money to be by him received under the provisions of this Act, to be applied towards the payment of a salary not exceeding the sum of one hundred pounds of lawful money to a reporter, to be appointed by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person administering the Government of this Province, the same being a member of the law society, whose duty it shall be to report the cases and decisions of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench in the said Province; Provided always that the said reports may be sold for the benefit of the reporter

And be it further enacted &c. That the salary herein delivered to be payable to the said reporter, shall be paid by the Receiver General of this Province, out of the monies which may hereafter be paid into his hands by the treasurer of the law society aforesaid, in discharge of such sum or sums warrant or warrants as may from time to time be issued by the Governor Lieutenant Governor or person administering the Government of this Province, and be accounted for to His Majesty through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, for the time being, in such manner and form as his Majesty the Heirs and Successors shall be graciously pleased to direct.

Also to agree to the amendments made by the honorable the Legislative Council to the other Clauses of the said Bill.

On motion of Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, the House went into Committee to take into consideration certain resolutions respecting the public accounts.

Mr. Randal in the Chair.

The House resumed, the Black Rod being at the door Mr. Boulton, Master in Chancery brought down from the Honorable the Legislative Council, a message intending the House of assembly that the Honorable the Legislative Council had agreed to the amendments proposed at the free conferences in and to the two reports Bill.

Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Vankoughnet, moved that the amendments recommended by the free conferees of the two reports Bill ought to be concurred in.

On which the House divided.

The amendments were accordingly concurred in, and information sent to the Honorable the Legislative Council to that effect

The House went again into Committee on the Resolution respecting public accounts.

Mr. Randal in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr. Randal reported that the Committee had agreed to a resolution, which he was directed to submit for the adoption of the House.

The report was received, and it was resolved that the Committee on public accounts had been unable to make a satisfactory report, from the perplexed manner in which those accounts were made up.

That it occasioned a great portion of the time of the Committee in extracting and clearing the disbursements charges from the Receiver General's account, of warrants paid by him for various services.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

That these warrants being issued at broken periods, and no account rendered of the outstanding claims to complete the year, occasioned much confusion.

That the want of detail of all monies paid for the services specified in the Bill of supply, as also the resources from whence those were paid, precluded the committee from an opportunity of making any remarks whatever upon any extraordinary or improper expenditure, thereby rendering their report extremely unsatisfactory to themselves and to the House, placing the House, in the embarrassing situation of either voting away the public money without being able to assign to their constituents any other or better reason than the blind confidence of implicit acquiescence, leaving it for the unfortunate destitute of the means of carrying on the public service by withholding the supply, from their inability to judge of the necessity of granting it.

That an humble and respectful address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, founded on the preceding resolutions.

On motion of Mr Hamilton of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, Messrs. Nichol and Baldwin were ordered as a Committee to draft an address to his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor pursuant to the above resolutions.

Mr Nichol from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Markland of Kingston, and others, reported the following resolutions which were received and adopted by the House.

Resolved, that by the 30th clause of the trade act it is among other things enacted, that the expense of improving the Saint Lawrences shall in future be defrayed by such measures, and in such proportions as the arbitrator to be appointed under the provisions of this act, shall determine upon the prayer of either Province Provided always, that no such determination shall be carried into effect until same be framed and enacted by the Legislatures of both the said Provinces.

2dly That by an Act of the Provincial Parliament of the Province of Lower Canada, passed in the 46th year of His Majesty's Reign, certain rates and duties payable at Chateauguay and Montreal were imposed on all Scows, Rafts, & Cribs, passing the rapids between Chateauguay and Montreal, and were appropriated as a permanent fund for the improvement of the navigation of the River Saint Lawrence between Lake Saint Francois and Montreal.

3dly That it appears from a printed statement of the public provincial accounts of Lower Canada for the year 1821, the amount of rates levied under the said Act, and mentioned on the 1st November in the said year, was £5203 6s. 7d.

4thly That a large proportion of this fund was levied upon the trade of Upper Canada

5thly That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, founded on the above Resolutions, and praying His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor to direct the attention of the Arbitrator on the part of this Province, to this important subject; and to recommend that from the said fund provision be made for obtaining an accurate survey of the River St Lawrence, by an Engineer properly qualified, to report on the improvements that may be made therein; that the same may be referred to the consideration of the Legislatures of both Provinces at their next Session, in conformity to the provisions contained in the said Act of the Imperial Parliament.

On motion of Mr Nichol, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, Messrs Hamilton of Wentworth, and Hagerman were ordered to draft an address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the resolutions of the House.

Mr Hamilton of Wentworth reported the draft, which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr Clark, the address was ordered to be read a second time on the morrow.

On motion of Mr Crooks, seconded by Mr Burwell, the House went into Committee of Supply and the 5th rule was dispensed with as far as related to the same.

Mr. Hamilton of Lincoln in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr Hamilton reported two resolutions, which report was received, and it was resolved, that it was expedient that the sum of Five thousand Pounds should be raised by way of Loan, for the purpose of opening a passage for vessels into Burlington Bay from Lake Ontario;—And that it was expedient that a toll should be levied on vessels, boats, craft, rafts, and all articles passing the said canal, to pay the interest on the said loan, and to redeem the principal thereof.

On motion of Mr. Crooks, seconded by Mr. Bostwick, Messrs. Hagerman and McLean of Stormont were ordered as a Committee to draft Bills pursuant to the resolutions of the House.

Leave of absence was granted to Charles Jones, Esquire Member for Leeds, for the remainder of the Session.

Adjourned.

THURSDAY, 13th March, 1823.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor requesting that His Excellency would be pleased to direct the printing one thousand copies of the Statutes for the years 1820, 1821, and 1822, for distribution, was read the third time, passed and signed by the Speaker.

Mr. Horner in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr. Horner reported progress, and asked leave to sit again that day three months.

On the question for receiving the Report, the House divided.

YEAS.	NAYS.
Messrs. Nichol, Casey, Kerr, Vankoughnet, Cook, Gates, Burwell, Hagerman, Shaver, & Bostwick —10.	Messrs. Clark, Randal, Wilmot, Horner, Baldwin, Hamilton of Lincoln, & McDonell—7.

Question gained—majority 3—the Report was received and leave granted accordingly.

Agreeable to the order of the day, the House went into Committee on Dr Baldwin's Resolutions.

Mr Gates in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr Gates reported progress, and asked leave to sit again that day three months.

On the question for receiving the Report the House divided.

YEAS.	NAYS.
Messrs Nichol, Casey, Gates, Burwell, Hagerman, Shaver, McDonell, Bostwick, & Hamilton of Lincoln—9.	Messrs Clark, Randal, Wilmot, Horner, Baldwin, and Cleveland—6.

Question gained—majority 3—the Report was received and leave granted accordingly.

Agreeable to the order of the day, the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the subject of Lower Canada Lumber duties, was read the second time.

On motion of Mr Nichol, seconded by Mr. Clark, the House went into Committee on the address.

How bright a gem doth virtue seem
Exshrin'd in form so rare!
Love ne'er illumin'd votary's dream
Ecstatic, with celestial beam,
Nor gilded aught so fair —
Meek, "modest worth" around her glows,
And from her lip such music flows,
Contentment lends her pliant ear,
Nor roves in quest of sounds more dear;
Ah! happy who the while
Beast by such witch a willing yoke,
Begets her heavenly smile.

York Subscription Bridges.

On Friday evening last, pursuant to Public Notice given in the U. C. Gazette, a meeting of the Subscribers, and other inhabitants of the Town of York, was held at the house of Mr. Phair, in the Market place, for the purpose of taking into consideration the circumstances in which the Engineer has been placed by constructing a Bridge, (the charges of which were to have been defrayed by Voluntary Subscriptions,) over the mouth of the river Don, when the following Resolutions were proposed and adopted:

That, Mr Edward Angell, being duly appointed as Engineer to construct a Bridge over the mouth of the river Don, according to a Plan and Estimate submitted to, and approved and signed by, a Committee at a former meeting of the Subscribers, held at the Mansion-House Hotel, in the Town of York; and, having conducted himself in every thing relating thereto with skill and attention, is honorably entitled to the further protection and support of the Subscribers, and of the Inhabitants of this Town generally, the funds already contributed being wholly inadequate to meet the exigences of the undertaking.

That, a Committee be again appointed to examine into the present state, and progress, of the Building, and to take into consideration the circumstances in which the Engineer has been unexpectedly placed by a failure in the amount of the first Subscription; and, that a second Subscription be forthwith solicited from all classes of persons, and that a report of the measures adopted be laid before an early subsequent meeting, in order that the Bridge may be finished with all possible dispatch.

That, the following Gentlemen constitute the said Committee, viz.

Henry J. Boulton, Esq. Sol. Gen. — Charles Small, Esq. and Allan McNabb, Esq.
Dr. Widmer.
S. Heward, Esq.

That, the Committee be requested to draw up a Memorial, setting forth the claim which the inhabitants of York conceive they are entitled to urge in consequence of the operations of the late war with the United States of America, by which their former Bridges over the Don were destroyed; and, that the same be laid before the Commissioners recently appointed by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, (under 9th Geo. 4th of the last Session of the Provincial Parliament,) to inquire into, and pay, the losses sustained by sufferers on that occasion.

That, the thanks of this Meeting be given to Mr. Angell for his unremitting attention in constructing the present Bridge, under the many inconveniences and disappointments with which he has had to contend; having embarked solely with the Subscribers in the fullest confidence of being defended from all pecuniary loss, without taking into account any recompense at all for his own professional services, which have displayed much talent.

That, this Meeting be adjourned until Friday Evening next, at seven o'clock, when it is hoped the Committee will be able to report progress.

That, the thanks of this meeting be given to Charles Fotheroill, Esquire, for his gentlemanly and impartial conduct in the Chair, and for his exertions in promoting the welfare of all concerned.

The Magistrates of Montreal have certainly much to answer for, in permitting those scandalous outrages of all decency called Charivaris.—&c.

Charivary—In taking notice of the lamentable transactions of the last few days, we are so much hampered by the various reports in circulation, that it is an impossibility to relate a narrative of the occurrences of Monday and Tuesday nights without being in danger of making some serious misstatement. We shall therefore confine ourselves to a general relation of the principal facts, leaving the various merits of the case to be decided by the proper authorities. On Monday night the Charivary party while parading before the house of one of the gentlemen at whom their exertions were directed, had a serious rencontre with the persons within, during which several shots were fired from the house upon the crowd assembled in the street, and volleys of stones were precipitated against the windows, which did great injury to the house and moveables. Unfortunately one person was wounded so seriously that he died a few hours after, and several were materially injured. We do not intend to offer an opinion as to which party were guilty of the first aggression, as at present the public mind is in a dreadful state of suspense, and while the legal authorities are investigating the affair we shall withhold any further remarks upon the transaction.

The unfortunate man who lost his life in this affair was John Swails a person of excellent moral character, and who was in the house from which the firing came during the former part of the evening.

The night succeeding the above transaction a body of men armed with clubs, at about the hour of eleven o'clock repaired to the house of the person who had opposed the Charivary, and finding no one within, the dwelling was in a manner demolished. All the inner part of the house was destroyed, every door and window smashed, the furniture broken, and the whole building rendered uninhabitable.

The Military, under the immediate order of the Magistrates have paraded the town every night since the above transaction.

On Thursday last a Coroner's Inquest was held on the body of Swails, and after a minute investigation, we understand that the Jury returned a Verdict of Wilful Murder against one, and as accessary, against the other, whose names, we forbear for the present to publish.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on the twenty third day of June instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—Greeting:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the fourteenth day of May last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 23rd day of June instant, at which time at our Town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and the em to do as may seem necessary, and hereon follow.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this eighth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

H. J. Boulton, Solicitor Gen'l.

Executive Council Office,
York, 26th June, 1823.

NOTICE is hereby given, by order of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in Council; that unless Andrew Miller, the original Locatee of the Western Quarter of Lot number five, in the fifth Concession of the Township of Cornwall, in the Midland District, or his representative, do show cause within six months why the Location should not be cancelled, it will be granted to Mary Robertson, wife of John Robertson, of Ernestown, aforesaid.

JOHN BETHUNE,
4—6m. Deputy Clerk Executive Council.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been with-held from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will, in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General, in all similar cases, be declared vacant and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

A Township North of Mariposa, subveisted from the Surveyor General's Office on the 19th of October, as Eels, to be called Eldon.

Editorial Commentary.

The Greeks continue successful, and promise to work their own deliverance without ostensible aid from any foreign power,—European prints are silent as to the movements and designs of Russia and Prussia.—Austria has received a severe galling insult from the Greek Navy in attempting to veto the blockade of the Turkish ports in the Morea and Epirus;—an insult she seems obliged to put up with, her own marine being in a state of great weakness.

The armies of France have nearly reached the bait in the Spanish trap—the moment it is touched retreat becomes difficult, if not impossible. It is no longer the occupation of the capital of an invaded country which determines the fate of modern warfare—Madrid, though comparatively an open city in the heart of an extensive country, is not without her natural circumvallations.—A very cursory view of a map of Spain must convince even an ordinary observer, of the extreme hazard which an invading army must run in such a country filled with narrow defiles —In many of the Provinces a regular army seems scarcely necessary.—the guerilla system appearing the best adapted for the annoyance and final destruction of an enemy —Something of importance relating to the present situation of the French army may be gathered from the following interesting paragraph from a late Courier.

The Courier of the 5th May states, that advices had been received in London of the Duke d'Angoulems having experienced difficulties of a nature which he did not anticipate, when he calculated on an easy march to Madrid, and which had the effect of inducing him to relax in his operations until he received reinforcements from Paris. The nature of those difficulties is not explained; but the Courier communicates, on "authority" the fact that 30,000 additional troops had been ordered to proceed to the Pyrenees from the northern parts of France, in consequence of the urgent demand of the Duke d'Angoulems to hasten their march The unexpected resistance offered by the strong hold of St Sebastian, Pamplona, and Figerorus, seem to threw some light on this requisition for additional levies But we apprehend there is a stronger inducement for this, not mentioned in any of the French papers. The little opposition which the invaders have met from any thing like regular armies since their entrance into Spain, and the fact that the road from Burgos to Madrid lies through mountains where the guerillas and the main body of this part of the Spanish army, are stationed, must have created an apprehension in the mind of the French that a snare has been laid to entrap them in these fortresses; for how reconcile the cordial reception which the French are every where said to meet with from the inhabitants with the circumstance of the principle fort resses refusing to surrender, without supposing that some plan of this nature had been resolved on by the Cortes?

We are glad to find the subject of Duelling taken up by an able writer as our correspondent Eusebius although we can scarcely hope he will be successful in a cause which requires the upsetting of prejudices which custom has so long sanctioned, and fashion so often applauded —His essay, we are afraid, will suffer from division, because it rises in strength and energy as it proceeds with the argument;—but is at too long, for us to insert in one number—we must therefore be compelled to postpone the concluding part until next week.

Of all the professors of Christianity, the Friends, or Quakers, approach the nearest to moral perfection in this particular. —They know that nothing short of implicit obedience can be pleasing or satisfactory to the Divine Lawgiver;—they know that it is quite impossible for them to leave a right to take away that which they can never give.—Life;—they know that no quibble can avail the polluted soul when placed in shuddering nakedness before the dread tribunal of an offended God? and may not one of these humble followers of a crucified Redeemer utter the feelings of his heart in language like this! —Alas! how long shall mere outward profession assume the rank of vital religion?—Dost thou consider, wretched man that thou art! whose life is thou art attempting to mock? a Being of Almighty and Infinite Power!;—even that Being whose mere word millions on worlds sprang instantaneously into existence, who said, "Let there be light!," and there was light!—Had thou the blaspheming hardihood to equivocate with such a Being?—Is there any darkness to any mystery, any clause, any reservation open or secret, in this Law?—Is it not simple, plain, and untwistable?—

"Thou shalt not kill"!—No human wickedness in the shape of ingenuity can put in, or infer a clause here;—these are four simple words of unsophisticated import.—Here can be no evasion, no exception, no permission given to man to murder each other under this or that pretence. The command is express, positive, and unchangeable.—"Vengeance is mine," saith the Lord.—Go to, now, thou foolish one! thou man of fashion; thou man of honor, stained with the blood of thy brother, and say who shall be thy counsellor, and who shall be thy advocate in that dark and terrible hour when the crash of the universe is in thine ears, and returning chaos, illumined by the conflagration of an expiring world yawns at thy feet?—Alas! alas! unhappy man that thou art, painted bubble of this world's honor will retain its shadowy forms no longer, and thou must stand a poor, miserable, convicted, despairing contemner of thy insulted Saviour—but Justice must condemn thee!

The sweet effusion from Nero will appear in our next.

It is with great pleasure that we announce the early appearance of a new literary work in this Province, to be conducted by Ja's M Caswell, Esq.—It is entitled "Theologia Hand-book for the encouragement of Loyalty, Genius, and Merit,"—It will be published quarterly, in a 12mo. form :—the terms One Dollar per annum, payable in advance.—The specimen we have seen, and which is in press, is highly creditable to the author; and the low price at which it is published seems to promise a general circulation.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals

Sir Robert Wilson has left London for Spain.

The Bishop of Calcutta and Arch deacon Loring have both fallen sacrifices to their unremitting exertions in the promulgation of Christianity in India.

Mr Canning has very properly assumed as imperative a tone towards the Dutch government, that Mosher must either act justly, conform to his will, and restore the specie lost in the Lutine frigate, or go to war, instanter, with John Bull, who in this instance is not willing to be bullied out of his right.

France and Spain.—The French are proceeding towards Madrid with the greatest caution.

The French army had entered Lagrono, on their march to Pampelune. The Duke of Angoulems had crossed the Ebro on his way to Madrid. The inhabitants abandoned their houses on the approach of the invaders, and the municipality of Logrono, before the army entered the city, sent out a deputation to meet the Duke, and to request that he would not destroy the city.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Angoulems had entered Bordeaux. She was received by the loyal subjects of King Louis with the greatest enthusiasm.

Lord Cochrane.—In addition to the intelligence from Rio Janeiro, by the ship Corbinian, at this port, we learn that Lord Cochrane had arrived there and entered into the Imperial Brazilian service. He had taken the command of a fleet consisting of a seventy-four, some frigates, smaller vessels, and fire ships, and had sailed for St. Salvador for the purpose of destroying the King's fleet lying there. The manning of Cochrane's fleet was the cause of the impressment of sailors, and the embargo of which we have heard, was doubtless laid to prevent a knowledge of the expedition reaching St. Salvador.

House of Commons.—Sir F. Burdett brought forward a motion that it was incumbent on the House to enter into a full and strict examination of the conduct of the Sheriff of the city of Dublin at the trial of the men concerned in the attack on the Marquis of Wellesley, in the Dublin theatre After some discussion, the motion was carried by a majority of 44.

In the House of Lords, on the 23d, Lord Holland moved for copies of all communications made to the government since September, 1822, relative to any assistance to be afforded by Portugal against the invading armies He understood that a paper of this description was in existence.

The Earl of Liverpool could not, at the present moment, produce the document alluded to The case then stood with Portugal: if she was attacked without provocation on her part, England would be obliged to intervene, but if it were with provocation. Great Britain was not bound to interfere. He wished the motion withdrawn, at least for a short time.

Among the papers communicated to Parliament on the 14th April, with reference to France and Spain, is a despatch of Mr Secretary Canning to Sir Wm. A'Court, the British Ambassador at Madrid. It contains the following paragraphs which are decisive of the views and designs of His Majesty's government :—

"Such is the summary of the present state of things, on which depends the fearful alternative of peace or war. We earnestly desire the former; not only for our own interests, as Mr San Miguel suggests, but for the larger interests of Europe, those of Spain included, in which ultimately, if not immediately, our own no doubt may be involved.

"We wish for peace therefore in Europe; but peace for ourselves we are determined at all events to preserve; and should our efforts to maintain it be seen France and Spain prove abortive, we shall have the consolation to have discharged the duty towards both of a faithful and disinterested ally; and shall retire thenceforth within the limits of a strict neutrality

"This last topic you cannot state too clearly, our press too strongly upon M. San Miguel; as there are not wanting those who may wish to inspire him with the notion that the anxiety which we manifest to recede Spain from the war, is an earnest of a determination to join her in the war, if it should come upon her. I have discouraged in the most decided manner some obscene indications of a wish and hope of this kind, in the Spanish mission in this country.

Gamonds.—When Robespierre had been guillotined at Paris, a Gascon officer in the French army thus expressed the dread he had entertained of that tyrant:—As often as the name of Robespierre was mentioned to me, I used to take off my hat, in order to see if my head was in it."

Unlucky Simplicity.—The Irish papers, in describing a late duel at Waterford say, that one of the combatants was shot through the fleshy part of the thigh bone!—But this is nothing to the real Irish bull of a man, named Hendrick who a few days ago, lodged a complaint at the Dublin Police Office against a comrade, named Twiney, for cheating him out of his share (the produce of a set of harness which they had stolen out of a coach house that morning Hendrick told his story with great naïvete, and mentioned where the horse had been sold, but was quite astonished when the Magistrate ordered him to Newgate Search was immediately made for Twiney.—Carlisle paper.

"Poor auld Eyreland again"—A piece of news from an old magazine :—April 21, 1791, one William Peters was committed to jail, in Ireland, being found alive, on a journey, three days after he had been executed for horse stealing.

Variation.—The Fahrenheit scale of [illegible] degrees in the province of Kussuh, the south west corner of China have suffered from a fall of snow. Various families, and their cattle have perished, 93 families remain, on whom by order of the emperor, no duties are to be levied for three years. The emperor of China has dismissed all the tutors of his fourth son, a boy of fourteen, because he found him unable to write verses! and the emperor himself was able to write them at thirteen.—At the Somerset assizes, G. Clark, theDriver of a stage-coach between Bristol and Bath, was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to 12 months hard labor at the tread mill, for causing the death of a passenger by furiously driving, while in a state of intoxication, and overturning the coach. This is the first conviction in that country under the recent act of parliament, which empowers the judge to transport for life; but as this was the first case under the statute, Mr. Justice Bayley, after the above sentence only, in the hope that it would act as a warning to the fraternity.

From the Christian Observer for March. 1823.

Education in Egypt.—Mr Salt has lately communicated the following intelligence from Cairo. We would earnestly hope that under the course of policy pursued by the present enterprising Bashaw of Egypt, that country will become an extensive field open to the progress of education and Christian light.

"This morning," says Mr. Salt, I had a conference with the Bashaw; His Highness observed that he had a visit from Mr. Wolff, with whom he expressed himself much pleased; that that gentleman had proposed to him to establish a school on the new system adopted in England at Soulak near Cairo.—His Highness said, I must first explain to you that a project of this kind has great difficulties. In Europe people pay consideratly for the education of their children; here, on the contrary, at our Lyceum at Soulak, I am obliged to pay some forty, some an hundred piastres per month; and even then difficulty can I persuade them to come, so ignorant and barbarous are the people of this country, whether Copts or Levantines. I feel ample of the liberality of the gentlemen who have commissioned Mr Wolff to make the proposal, and if they are willing, shall have great pleasure in having their assistance in such a work; but I recommend that it should be at my Lyceum. Let them send clever men, capable of teaching the new system of education and the sciences, and I will afford them every facility; that is, I will collect for them as many scholars as I can get together; Let them teach the languages, Italian French and English Trigonometry, or measuring of land and weighing, connected with the sciences of engineers; but let these they send be men of abilities; I shall be glad so contribute towards the payment of such men"

Mr. Wolff, the gentleman mentioned in this extract, has been travelling at the expense of some gentlemen in England, as a Christian Missionary, chiefly to the Jews in Syria and other parts of the East. He had projected the establishment of a school or college at Aleppo, and his proposal is united to have met with warm approbation from the inhabitants; but the earthquake having set aside the project for a time, he transferred his views to Cairo, where we shall rejoice to hear that it has been carried into effect.

IRELAND.

Dublin papers of the 28th April have been received by the Eliza from that port, bringing London dates to the 28th of that month, inclusive, but furnishing no later intelligence from the French army. The accounts from Ireland continue of the most alarming nature, Limerick and Cork are the most turbulent Counties, they are disgraced by daily scenes of conflagration and pillage, and even the neighbourhood of the capital is not exempt from such outrages. The Southern papers are filled with details of the most atrocious acts, notwithstanding the strong force of Military and Police on duty in the disturbed Districts the influence of Capt. Rock appears undiminished. By a Proclamation of the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council of the 22d. The baronies of Uppercross and Newcastle, part of the county of Dublin, are declared to require an extraordinary establishment of Police. Thus has the nefarious and unprincipled system of spoliation and mischief, by the infatuated peasantry of the country, reached almost to the very verge of the metropolis. What their objects are, other than to commit wanton outrage, no person out of their own sphere can tell. It is evident from this new call for an extraordinary establishment of Police so near the metropolis, where misery and want could not be said to predominate, that it is not the wildest and most distressed part of the country that is alone subject to these lawless acts of confederated guilt. The quarter of Ireland were wretchedness may be said to exist in its most appalling characters, such as Connaught, is tolerably free from disturbances, while other places, where the condition of the peasantry is much better, are exposed to their midnight violence. We know not when or where these disturbances will end, but we trust some immediate means will be taken by Parliament to protect the peaceable and well disposed inhabitants of the country.

The investigation of the conduct of the Sheriff of Dublin is fixed for the 22d May, is a Committee of the whole House of Commons.

We must say, that at present it is give the perusers alluded to, we copy the following from a late number of the Glasgow Courier.

"Our columns to-day contain a fearful list of cruelty, crime and outrage, committed in the south of Ireland.—There is not, we believe, on the surface of the globe, a country, scarcely excepting even the most savage state, that exhibits such a scene of violence and brutality as the south of Ireland do-at this moment. The voice of humanity, the precepts of religion, the principles of justice and the arm of the law, are alike outraged, insulted, darted, violated. Were the country covered with foreign hosts, and subjected to military execution, properly, say eye witnesses, could not be more insecure than at this moment. It must be a barbarous foreign enemy indeed if, under such circumstances, it could be as insecure as it now is. Above 30 houses have been burnt. In one, the miscreant monsters locked up a poor man, his wife and seven children, and set fire to the building, with the intention of burning them to death From this dreadful fate they were rescued by the timely arrival of a magistrate. At one place, nine cows, and at another six cows, were roasted alive—a mare was ripped open—cattle mutilated, maimed and killed murders daily taking place—arms searched for and seized—grain and houses burned down on every hand. Such is the outline of a picture neither exaggerated nor overcharged.

At one place, a respectable man, who had been called to the assizes as a witness, was found dead, supposed to be murdered.—At the assizes at Mullangar lately, a clear and atrocious case for murder was tried. The evidence was most satisfactory. Eleven Protestants and one Roman Catholic composed the jury. The latter stood out declaring, that though he had no doubt of the man's guilt, yet as Protestants in other places refused to find Orangemen guilty, he would not find the culprit before them guilty! The murderer escaped.—This outrage upon law and justice may be laid to the doors of that prostituted periodical press, which so unjustly raised the hue and cry of trifling with their oaths against the grand jury of Dublin, when the indictments of the miserable theatrical rioters were before them.

We insert also a proof of Roman Catholic Bigotry and intolerance in Ireland, in the case of a woman who had abjured her tenets. Surely the laws of the country can protect individuals from such scions of inquisitorial depotism and superstition as the sons of this female are, however great their number and light their degree. When the Roman Catholics learn more tolerant principles, then, but not till then, let them call out for an equal vote and an equal voice in the political scale of this Empire. Let us not be deceived nor clamored out of our senses, our safety and our liberty. Ireland is in a terrible state, and we are much deceived if matters are yet at the worst. We learn, from competent authority—authority which has no interest in misleading and deceiving us, that, unless timely measures be prevented, a general rising on the part of the Roman Catholics next spring will take place, to endeavor to extirpate the Protestants in that country. The first of April next is set down amongst the bigoted votaries of Popery in that country, as the day of their complete triumph, by the total destruction of all who bear the Protestant name.—The pretended prophecies of Pastorini affixing that as the period, and these as the consequences, are widely circulated in Ireland by the teachers of Popery, implicitly believed by their ignorant and credulous votaries, and determined to be acted upon to the utmost limits of human vengeance, as the most grateful and peace-making offering to the Creator and Preserver of the Universe. However incredible these statements may appear, still we are assured they are facts, and the hour is numbered when the deceived people of Ireland will lament their ignorance and credulity, when they see Ireland covered with desolation and innocent blood."—Mont. Gazette

BIGOTRY

Excommunication of a Bride—The Dublin Evening Mail, contains a letter dated Limerick, March 25th, and subscribed Matthias Harrold, the substance of which is as follows:—

About a fortnight since, Mr. Harrold married a Roman Catholic, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Established Church, previously stipulating that his wife should renounce the errors of the Roman Church, which, from conviction, she had determined to do On the Sunday following, the Roman Catholic Curate of the parish of Kilmeedy, in which the bride resided, solemnly denounced her from the altar of his chapel, stating, that one of his parishioners had married a Protestant, and after calling on her to come forward which she refused, he stated, that the bed she lay in was accursed—that the ground she trod on was cursed—and that she lay at night in the arms of the devil—together with other similar expressions." On the following Friday (3) Mr. H read her recantation in St. John's Church (before the Rev. Mr. Fitzgibbon) after which Mr. Harrold waited on the Roman Catholic Curate, the Rev. G J Woulfe, with Mr. Fitzgibbon's certificate of the act of recantation, but such the Rev Mr. W would not condescend to look at. Mr H. then warned him against any further public allusion to his wife's name.

On the following Sunday, as Mr. Harrold and his wife were returning home from attending divine service in St. John's Church, they were assailed at the church gate, by a Popish mob, of about one thousand persons, men women, and children, who (and here we resort to Mr Harrold's own words) addressed my wife in the most insulting manner, calling her by the most opprobrious names, all of which were coupled with heretic, and heretical, in consequence of which we were obliged to fly for shelter into the Parish Clerk's house, where we remained for some time, the mob still remaining outside, and collecting in every avenue leading to my dwelling. The Rev. Mr. Fitzgibbon, finding the situation in which we were placed to be one of peril, came to our aid, attended by a gentleman who just left church, conceiving that we might proceed without further insult, when attended by them. But, Sir, this but not the desired effect, as we had not proceeded fifty yards, when we were obliged to seek refuge in another, as violent were the people in their abuse, and so great the increase of mob from all quarters. Finding it in vain to think of proceeding, having some distance to go before we could reach home, the Rev. Mr. Fitzgibbon went for the Police, and it was not until three of the ringleaders, two men, and a woman, were taken into custody, they were permitted to proceed. Those three persons Mr Fitzgibbon lodged in Captain Drought's Police Office, and I yesterday lodged informations against four more, who have been committed to jail, as being concerned in this dreadful outrage." Mr Harrold's letter further states, that during this barbarous and bigoted outrage, the Rev. Messrs. Woulfe and Taylor, Roman Catholic Curates of the parish, were looking from Mr. Woulfe's windows apparently enjoying the atrocious and disgraceful scene, without any interference to put a stop to it. Mr. Harrold concludes his letter in the following appropriate terms:—

"I ask, was a person, who never was, or ever will be, of that (the Romish) creed, was to be held forth to a congregation as a devil, to be hooted and insulted, and his life, and that of his wife, to be endangered, returning from the temple of God? If such is to be the case, and that we are to call on the military and police to protect us in our dwellings, after we have been lifting up our hearts and hands to the Deity in his sanctuary—if, I say, such is to be the case, we must then forget that we are living in a free country, and under a respected laws."

Agriculture.

CARROTS.

Memoranda respecting the culture of Carrots, abridged from a Paper drawn up by order of the Board of Agriculture in England, by the Secretary, in the Repertory of Arts for 1820.
—Vol. 37 p. 37, 99, & 174.

Carrots thrive in Scotland; therefore, the climate of the rest of the island affords no objection to this branch of cultivation. They do well on all dry soils. The best soil for them is a rich deep sand. More depth is not essential. In a shallow soil, the root, although ill shap d, will be good for Live Stock as if its form were regular. The following are sets of Crops are recommended: 1. turnips; 2. carrots; 3 barley; 4. clover; 5. wheat; also, 1. turnips; 2. barley; 3. carrots; 4. barley; 5. clover; 6. wheat; and is the soil be loam. 1. turnips; 2. carrots; 3. barley; 4. clovers; 5. wheat; 6. beans; 7. wheat; also, 1. turnips; 2. carrots; 3. barley; 4. clover; 5. beans; 6. wheat; 7. winter tares; 8. barley or wheat. But there are Farmers in Suffolk who have continued carrots four or five years successively on the same land. The same practice has also obtained in Scotland. Some have sown on very old pasture.

They plough but once immediately before sowing. They get what depth they can by one plough following another in the same furrow. It is an error to give autumnal and repeated spring ploughings. The importance peculiar to carrots is thrown being raised without dung. No other fallow Crop (winter tares, peas and buckwheat alone excepted,) can be raised to advantage without dung; but to give it to this plant would be erroneous In Suffolk the seed is sown about the 25th of March Other seasons have been tried, and, also, much experience, rejected. Five pounds of seed per acre is the general allowance The seed should be new, as old seed is always a week later in coming up. Good seed, when rubbed in the hand, yields a pleasant aromatic scent The most careful Cultivators steep it 48 hours in water, and it is sometimes mixed with earth, with the same view. It is absolutely necessary to break the clinging fibres of the seed, as they prevent the sowing it well. It must be sown on a calm day The general practice in Suffolk is to sow the seed in two rows to be 9 or 10 inches asunder They proceed greatly in drills. In this manner 660 and 900 bushels per acre have been raised, the intervals being 14 inches; 660 bushels at 12 inches, and 990 hundred bushels at 11 inches. The produce of the very worst soils may be estimated at 200 bushels; of middling land, at 450, and of the best soils, at 700 The best method of distributing the seed hitherto known appears to be that of taking most carefully saw dust with the seed, and drilling it with the wife's name. Thinning and weeding must be so effectually done as to keep the land absolutely clean. Mowing the tops is highly mischievous.

In suffolk. the carrots are left in the ground, and are taken up as they are wanted through the winter. The method of taking them up is, for a man to strike a spade or a four pronged fork into the earth against the root, and loosening it. A boy draws, cuts off the tops and throws the roots into heaps for the carts. The heaps are made in danger of being frozen, by calling her by the most opprobrious names, all of which were coupled with heretic, and heretical, in consequence of which we were obliged to fly for shelter into the Parish Clerk's house, where we remained for some time, the mob still remaining outside, and collecting in every avenue leading to my dwelling. When well dried they may be stored in a boarded building, with a very little straw surrounding them, or in a circular form, four feet in diameter and six or seven in height A very thin coat of thatch will be a sufficient defence against frost.

We prefer sand, which can be made to force the seed to sprout soon by dampning it every day for about a week previous to sowing it, by which some time is gained. By this method we have had good crops after a July sowing.

EDITOR.

In the Carrot District of Suffolk the root has formed the chief winter support of horses far beyond the memory of the oldest man living 50 years ago For horses, one bushel per day saves all the oats. Two bushels per day, with only a little hay at night, were found sufficient for horses that were hard worked. If it is necessary to wash the roots before giving them to the horses, they should be kept till absolutely dry before feeding The fattening of oxen and cows is a very profitable application of this crop; it may be safely relied on as a very beneficial article for fattening oxen Grown oxen, according to their size, from one to three bushels per day. With an Essex Farmer four acres fattens fifteen bullocks. Carrots are an excellent food for cows, in relation to the condition of the stock, the quantity of milk and the flavour of the butter. Mr. Coope gave his cows two bushels per day. Mr. Quilter, by one bushel per day with oat straw, produced two pounds per week of the first butter in January. They have been found superior to potatoes They are peculiarly beneficial for weaning calves In Flanders they are esteemed the best of all food for cows, and their milk never gives a bad flavour to milk They are excellent food for sheep; twenty six sheep ate, on an average, four bushels per day, and mangled well an acre of land Mr Coope was never disturbed for absorption of liquid and any other beasts In corroboration of this account is given in the Bermuda Gazette, of the practice of the proprietors of the salt Fish Ponds in that Island, of feeding the grouper in the same way. A person wishing to purchase a fish, goes to the owner, who goes to the pond, calls the fishes to him, and while feeding them, takes out any one that the purchaser may select." The whole scene, for severity of exercise, seen a collection of tame Wampum-snikes, Rattle-snakes and Adders!

Enormous Seal.—An animal of this description, weighing 900 lbs is stated to have been caught in the river St. Lawrence, opposite Montreal, on the 6d instant.

Cultivation of Grapes.—The Dublin Patriot in November, announced an important discovery made by a Gentleman of that country, in the method of cultivating grapes whereby it is said the soils of England and Ireland may be made subservient to the production of the most delicious wines of France, and on as favourable terms as the inhabitants of that country enjoy them, and to as unbounded an extent. Nor is the importance of this discovery limited to the cultivation of grapes merely. It applies to every description of fruit, native as well as exotic, and to most of the productions of the vegetable world, whereby their quality may be increased and improved to an inconceivable extent. So sanguine are they as to the importance of the discovery, that they already talk of their being enabled by it to have not only a home supply of all the fruits of the earth, but to have as much to spare, as will enable them also to export to their colonial possessions a full supply of it, thereby keeping to themselves the immense sums of money annually paid to France and countries bordering the loss sustained by the adoption of the cotton manufactures in that country, the productive source of such wealth to Great Britain, and of comfortable employment to thousands now almost destitute. Nothing is said as to the newly invented process by which such results are to be produced, because the inventor wished to secure a patent before his secret was made public; but the editor says he holds an authenticated certificate, stating that a vine, which, in the poorest of its years, never produced more than 33lb. 10oz weight, did, under his management, last season, produce 1cwt 1Qur 16lbs. 4oz. unequalled perhaps for size and number, and 14lb. 6oz. of an inferior size. The small grapes were used at table, and much admired; the larger were pressed, and promised to produce a wine of excellent quality. If there has been such an improvement, (and the accounts does not wear the appearance of a hoax) its importance will not be less in this country than in Great Britain.

Natural History.

From the Edinburgh Philosophical Journal.—Singular Storm at Enghien.—In a very interesting work, entitled Journal of a Horticultural Tour, performed by a deputation of the horticultural society of Paris, and published in 1822, we find the following account of a singular storm, which took place at Enghein, on the 12th September, 1817. "A dense black cloud was seen advancing from the east, and as this cloud developed itself and increased in magnitude, one half of its contents assumed a globular form, four feet in diameter and six or seven in height. Both sides of this globe were of a brilliant white, while the other half of the form remained clear, with the sun shining bright As the black cloud approached, the sun's rays ringed it of a dull copper colour, and the reflected light caused all the streets and houses to assume the same lurid and metallic hue". A sort of whirlwind which even raised the small gravel from the streets, and dashed it against the windows, preceded the rain, which fell in heavy drops, but lasted only a short time. The sun now became obscured, and the air converted into night" The deputation were at the house of M. Parmentier during the storm, and so great was the darkness, that they were obliged to use candle light to examining some valuable continental publications connected with botany and horticulture, which were shewn to them by M. Parmentier.—Horticultural Tour, p. 329 330.

* Mr Neill informs us, that this effect was so remarkable, that every thing had the same appearance as if it had been made of copper. ED.

Feeding Fish.—It is stated in some of the English papers, that "there is now to be seen in a pond, near the Ponder Mills, Fersham, three trouts which have become so domesticated, as to come at the call of the person who feeds them, and actually leap from their native element to eat out of his hands In corroboration of this account is given in the Bermuda Gazette, of the practice of the proprietors of the salt Fish Ponds in that Island, of feeding the grouper in the same way. A person wishing to purchase a fish, goes to the owner, who goes to the pond, calls the fishes to him, and while feeding them, takes out any one that the purchaser may select." The whole scene, for severity of exercise, seen a collection of tame Wampum-snikes, Rattle-snakes and Adders!

Enormous Seal.—An animal of this description, weighing 900 lbs is stated to have been caught in the river St. Lawrence, opposite Montreal, on the 6d instant.

Remarkable Act of Rule in the Tropics.—The following singular and almost incredible statement, is given in Prichard Sullivan's American Journal of Science, vol iv. p. 278, in the shape of a letter from M. Reunion, captain of a vessel, dated Cayenne, 28th February 1820. "You will perhaps learn with no inconsiderable interest, the following meteorological fact; the accuracy of which I am able to certify. From the 11 to the 26th of February, there fell upon the isle of Cayenne Twelve feet seven inches of water.—This observation was made by a person of the highest veracity; and I assured myself, by exposing a vessel in the middle of my yard, and there fell in the city the same quantity of water between eight in the evening and six in the morning of the 16th and 16th of that month From these facts you will conclude a inundation from which every plantation has suffered.

Mahogany.—The history of this wood, of which almost all articles of furniture are now made, is rather singular. A young planter Captain, about a century ago, brought over some planks as ballast, and gave them to his brother, Dr. Gibbons, a physician of great eminence, who was then building a house. The workman, however, found the wood too hard for their tools, and it was thrown aside. Sometime afterwards, his wife wanted a set to hold candles; the doctor thought of the West India wood; and, in spite of the difficulty which was still found in working it, had the box made. He admired its colour and polish so much, that he had a number of articles of the same kind brought so beautiful harness made of it also; and this was the first introduction of it into this country. Among others, the Duchess of Buckingham came to see it, and begged enough of the wood to make her a bureau also. From that moment the demand was so great, that it became a regular article of trade; and so long as the mines of Honduras last, it is likely to continue so. There is reason to believe that the tree would grow in England, as there are some flourishing plants in the neighbourhood of London, which have been raised from seed.

Anecdotes.

Sir Isaac Newton—Was indisputably one of the greatest philosophers the world ever produced; and, as his epitaph states, may be regarded as the ornament of the human race. Yet he made no appearance at the levees of the monarch, nor any thing worthy of notice, it is said, is to be attributed to patience of thought than to any native superiority of mind; for (added he) I accustom myself in my researches to keep the subject constantly before me, and wait till the first dawnings open slowly by little and little into a full and clear light." He told Dr. Pearce, "that he had spent thirty years at intervals in reading over all the authors, or parts of authors, which could furnish him with materials for the chronology of ancient kingdoms, and that he had re-written the work sixteen times with his own hand." But that (says an excellent writer) which reflects the highest honor on this great and good man, is, that amidst all his superior talents and attainments, he retained and manifested the modesty, the self diffidence, and the humility of a little child, which he embraced and loved the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Wonderful Memory.—Mr Von Nieburhr, a celebrated German scholar, was once a clerk in the bank of Copenhagen; in that capacity he gave proof of the miraculous power of his memory by restoring from recollection almost the whole number and amount of the notes which had been lost by different customers, at a time in the night when he had been long by fraud or accident.—Ed Review.

British Tars.—A sailor, at the battle of Trafalgar, who was actively employed at one of the guns on the quarter deck of the Britannia had his leg shot off a little below the knee, and observing an officer, who was ordering him to be conveyed to the cock pit, said—"That's but a shilling touch, your honour, as luck higher, and I should have had eighteen pence for it!" alluding to the scale of pensions allowed for wounds, which, of course, increase according to their severity. The same resolute fellow, as they were lifting him on a brother tar's shoulders, said to one of his friends, "I say, Bob, take a leaf for my leg, and give me the silver buckle out of my shoe; I'll do as much for you another time!"

Sir Francis Burdett.—The following notice of this independent and talented Englishman, is copied from Alexander Stephens' Anecdotes, and, though it may be somewhat extravagantly coloured, probably gives a tolerably just idea of the singular character of the man;

"On asking this Baronet why, as he was able to effect so little in parliament, he considered it worth his while to hold a vest, he replied that it was a protection, and that without it a public man was not independent of power. I once advised him to give dinners to his friends, like other men of his consideration. He complied, and I was of his party; but I found it had been served from a tavern, and, even in this way, he said he found it so inconvenient while with his convenience that he would never give another. His habits are too unsettled for the forms of society: he rises at all hours,—goes to bed at all hours,—eats any hour, and in any way—and is in all things, from hour to hour, the creature of his passions and feelings. From this cause he never answers letters,—often does not open them. Etc. in his private concerns, he is the most uncertain man alive. He is steady only in his devotion to the principles of liberty; but constantly even in his measures regarding them. The best of men, yet, from bad habits and personal indolence, the least useful man of his age."

Budget of Valuable Receipts.

No. 8

37. To kill Cabbage Lice.—As these vermin infest cabbages, and not unfrequently impede their growth very much, the following recipe is given in substance as we find it

Make a strong decoction of tobacco, and when cool, apply it to the plants by means of a syringe. This syringe should be about two feet long and an inch in diameter, having a cap of lead or tin perforated with very small holes, to prevent the liquor from falling with too much force upon the plants. One application a day, for two or three days will generally destroy all the vermin.

38. Receipt for curing Hams.—For every 100 lbs. of Ham take five ounces saltpetre, two quarts molasses, and as much salt as can be dissolved in a quantity of water sufficient to cover the hams. Boil this pickle and skim it; place your hams loosely in a barrel, pour your pickle boiling hot upon them, cover the barrel and let it remain six or eight days, then take out the hams and smoke them in the usual manner. Salt must be added while the pickle is boiling, until it will dissolve no longer.

39. To prevent Vippers in Bacon.—Take of red pepper finely pounded, one spoonful to every joint of meat, and rub it on the meat with the salt when it is first put up

40. Receipt for Sausages.—For 10 lbs of meat, take 7 ounces of salt, one ounce of pepper, and sage and other herbs to your taste.

41. To destroy Caterpillars.—The smell of coal tar is said to be very destructive to caterpillars and the flies from which they are bred. The best method of applying it, and in that manner gooseberry bushes have been well preserved, is to dip a piece of cloth or cotton into it, and rap it round the foot of the tree or bush.

42. To destroy Skippers in Cheese.—The "New England Farmer," (published at Boston) hich is well filled with agricultural matter, lately prescribed elder juice as effectual against skippers in cheese. The experiment was tried in a dairy in Vermont on several cracked cheeses, and perfectly succeeded

RECEIPT FOR THE CURE OF HYDROPHOBIA.

43. From the Original "A. of Dr. Lerh, of Mountaineach, New York.—An herb (the scullcap) grows in low land, mostly at the outlet of swamps; it has square stalks, and notched leaf, and at the root; a purple blow-seed in shape of a bell. It must be gathered before or after dog days when there is from the sun. Cut it up fine, and make it as strong as common tea, and give a child of three years of age one gill at night, and one in the morning, both fasting. Take it two days in like manner, one miss one—the day you miss, take a portion of sulphur and mix it to move the person.

A child of six or eight years old, a gill and a half, a child twelve years old, a half pint—eat nothing greasy—drink no spirituous liquors—keep clear from getting your feet wet—continue as forty days following the above direction strictly, and it will prove an effectual cure.

44. Strawberries a cure for the gout.—The celebrated Linnæus, when he was 43 years of age, was subject to such violent attacks of the gout, that they deprived him of sleep and appetite. During the fit he happened once to eat strawberries, after which he had a refreshing sleep. The next day he ate, at intervals, a large quantity, and on the second day after was quite recovered, and able to quit his bed. In the summer of the following year he again dispelled attacks of the disease, by taking ripe strawberries. The third year the attacks were renewed, but in a slighter degree than in the preceding year. After this Linnæus never neglected to eat strawberries every summer

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

Several circumstances which have lately transpired in this Province, have led me to deep and serious reflection upon the practice of Dueling. I always thought it a custom both barbarous and criminal; but now, upon more mature consideration, I feel myself constrained to regard it in the same light as that crime commonly designated murder. That, to be sure, is a hard word, and rather a rough definition for a thing which most people persuade themselves to view under favorable colors; but I am confident of its being the true one, and humbly conceive I can fairly support my opinion.

I am aware that, amongst many, in giving my voice against that fashionable amusement, I shall risque the imputation of a being a man of humor, and of entertaining low and vulgar ideas of that part of the economy of polite life, comprehended under the terms, "rules of honor," "dictates of honor," &c. &c. But I beg of those who would be quick to censure, to suspend their sentence a moment, and patiently hear, and candidly examine what I have to advance.

The word honor, carries that in its sound which imposes upon the mind the idea of something noble and exalted. It has a charm which even the vulgar acknowledge; and they pride themselves upon feeling and being influenced by its dictates. It seems to be one of those comprehensive words which stood as the single representatives of a whole species, and, like the title of a book, convey to the conception the complex notion of a system complete in all its parts. By associating the idea with that of a man, we have depicted upon the canvas of the imagination, the idea of that dignified being, (clept, in modern phraseology, A MAN OF HONOR! By associating the same idea with things of a moral nature, we are enabled to conceive of those termed affairs of honor. By a proper combination of these several ideas, we may easily figure to ourselves a man of honor, actually engaged in the proper pursuit of his own appropriate occupation. Now if we should inform a stranger of the comprehensive meaning of the word, without going into a detail of the minutiæ of its use and application, and tell him that a man of honor, attended by one or more confidential and trustworthy friends, had gone out to settle an affair of honor, he would, doubtless, wonder what that particular thing could be, and conclude, most probably, that he was entrusted with some very important mission by his sovereign, in which the interests of the state were deeply involved. Should he be told that the man of honor had come to the heroic resolution of killing or being killed before he left the field of honor, his expectations would rise in proportion with the sedate complexion of the enterprise, and he would be tempted to be prodigal of panegyric upon the noble disinterestedness of the self devoted champion. He would eagerly ask, what could be the cause of all this? On being told the man of honor was not executing the high commands of his sovereign, nor preserving his country or friends in the work of danger, he would be confounded beyond measure, and certainly conclude an affair of honor could be nothing less than some wonderful prodigy. But on being informed that the man of honor was a gay young spark whose gallantry had been called in question by another saying he could despoil him of his mistress by only administering a few potions of high-seasoned flattery; that the invidious and hateful words had caused his whole soul to boil with rage, and his eyes to dart the fierce fires of fell revenge; that he had sent by the hands of a trusty friend a challenge to his foe, to meet him ready armed with the instruments of death; and that, with equal magnanimity and undaunted bravery, the author of the portentous words had accepted and returned the threatening message, and manfully resolved to stake his life and all in the bloody combat—what, I pray, would be his astonishment? Could he give credence to the entire volting relation? Could he fancy he had been listening to a tale of truth, a sad, a lamentable fact, instead of a wild and ridiculous falsehood? Contemptible and pitiable wretch! he would be led to exclaim, why do you thus madly and wickedly rush upon your own destruction? Why do you disgrace that honorable appellation, under which you would profanely cover a deed of darkness that would stain the name of a savage! Why are you suffered to run at large, and insult the laws of the land and pollute your own hitherto fair name by daring to make an unreserved profession of such diabolical principles?

Original Poetry.

A Fragment.

'Twas low amid surrounding hills;
'Twas watered by a thousand rills
That rippled o'er the pebbled ground;
And made a gentle stirring sound;
Where flowers along the valley green,
Of every lovely hue were seen.
Whose balmy odours, through the air
Were spread, by zephyrs sporting there;
Where trees and shrubs, all waving, made
A grateful and sequestered shade;
Where warbling songsters, through the day,
Poured forth the softly-melting lay?
That, in a graceful attitude,
A weeping maiden fair, I viewed
Reclined on mosses soft and green,
Beneath the pleasing sylvan scene;
She negligently was attired—
Here looks the tenderest thoughts inspired,
And pity's self, with ruling sway,
Bore every ruder wish away —
A plaintive ditty wild she sung;
And thus the feeling accents rung:—

SONG.

I will sing to the winds, as they pass o'er my head,
Plaintive notes full of sorrow and woe;
They shall bear to my friends, when my days are expired,
For sway the salt waters bed we!
Deep deep, 'neath the wave,
Is his chilly cold grave.
Where the Ocean rolls roughly along;
Ashey pale he lies dead.
And he pillows his head
The dank weed and coral among!—

I will view the swift clouds as they pass through the sky,
I will hope that my William is there;
And as oft as I gaze on the heaven so high,
I shall see my love glide through the air!

In the night will I travel the bright stars among,
And my harp shall be tuned to my voice;
I will raise, said the sphere, such a soft pleasing song,
That my William himself shall rejoice!

I shall see—I shall see him, and the bright throng,
Who will pensively list to my lay!
He will know me again by my sad mournful song,
And I shall be blest as the day!

MURDER.—Mrs M'Kay, a young woman of reputable character, and the wife of a master shoemaker in St. Anne street, was murdered on Saturday in open day, a short time after noon, in a ditch between the walls of the fortifications in the rear of the esplanade. The body was discovered through accident by a corporal of the sappers and miners—shockingly mutilated, the skull having been pierced by four bayonet wounds. The inquiry before the police is now in progress; four persons are in custody; and there can be no doubt, that through the activity and penetration of the magistrates, the perpetrators of this inhuman act will be discovered and punished. The circumstances of the case have created very general alarm.—Quebec Gazette

The late Murder.—We understand, from unquestionable authority, that a civilian now in custody, charged with the murder of Mrs. M'Kay, has made a full confession of his guilt. He has no accomplices. The instrument with which he perpetrated this bloody act was a claw hammer, which he had concealed under his jacket previous to leaving his house in company with the deceased. No bayonet was employed in the horrid deed. This we are particularly bound to notice, because we formerly followed the Gazette in stating, that the wounds, four in number, appeared to have been inflicted with that weapon. The Gazette was fully warranted in this statement; We know that one of the police Magistrates, and we believe a medical gentleman, who examined the wound, were of that opinion. Some soldiers, who, from being drunk and absent from their quarters, and probably from being in company which they did not choose to know, on the day on which the murder took place, could not satisfactorily account for themselves, were committed to jail on suspicion; but we are happy in adding, that no guilt attaches to these men; nor are any of the military implicated in an act of barbarity so little corresponding with the general conduct of the British soldier. Quebec Mer.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,

Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on the twenty third day of June instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the fourteenth day of May last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 23rd day of June instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereto to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

H. J. BOULTON, Solicitor Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, one third of the Patent fee to be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settlement Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, C'k Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

Vol. II. Our endeavour will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"— we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 27.

THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

As it is seldom we have any room to spare, we make it a rule to avoid giving at any considerable length what our judgment tells us are mere idle rumours; accordingly, this week we shall content ourselves with a brief notice of some reports, which, could we believe them true, would deserve a more ample consideration.

One of these rumours declares that the French have captured Pamplona;—another, immediately following, asserts that the Duke d'Angoulême has been assassinated;—that the funds had fallen 1 per cent;—that the King of France had renewed his connexion with Decazes, and that as Talleyrand was in close union with Decazes, the natural consequence was a change of ministers, and a return to pacific measures;—that a negotiation was about to take place between France and the Cortes.—Other reports state that great battles have been fought, and that the French have been generally worsted, and that the hospitals at Vittoria are full of the wounded, &c. &c.;—that a vessel has arrived in the United States from Cadiz, bringing an invitation from the Liberals to King Joe to resume his sceptre;—that Lord Byron has joined the Greek standard, determined to stake his all in the conflict for freedom, &c. &c.' &c.

These and many more of a like nature, we cannot help considering as mere idle rumours, manufactured especially for local and temporary purposes. But there are appearances which indicate an immediate extension of the evils of war.—It is ascertained that Russia is assembling an army in Poland—and what is a more certain index to our apprehensions is the equipment of fleets, on the part of England, much more formidable than what are required for the mere purposes of observation.—Prophets, and especially political prophets, being without honor in their own country, it might be a vain thing for us to lay down our predictions with the solemnity of oracular authority; but, we have little doubt the curtain will shortly draw up for the exhibition of a frightful drama in Europe, for which the actors have been long preparing in secret.—sooner or later a great catastrophe must happen—for the lessons which have been taught in the field of blood for the last 30 years, have not produced the results that might have been expected, and which it is probable they were intended to produce. Those lessons must be repeated.' It is as impossible for knowledge to retrograde, in these times, amongst an entire people, as it is for the sun to go back in his ordinary course.—Ignorance has been long permitted to stretch her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world;—but that sceptre is broken, and the evil genius herself about to be buried from her throne, we doubt not, for ever.—You may persecute—you may oppress—you may strip naked, and utterly despoil—but you cannot dip into the region of thought, into the spiritual existence of another, and pluck from the sanctuary of the mind the treasures of its knowledge.—You might have chained NEWTON himself down upon a bed of straw, in the deepest dungeon of the earth—but you could never have prevented his soul from wandering far beyond your reach, in the regions of light, and revelling in the fields of immortal glory.—The whole universe, physical and moral, is governed by certain first principles, which, when once in action, cannot be stayed by any other hand than that of the OMNIPOTENT—until all things are accomplished according to his will;—and it cannot be presumed, consistent with His will, that a single individual, or confined set of individuals, should hold millions of their fellow-creatures in a state of perpetual bondage!

But, to return to matters nearer home, we beg Mr. BURWELL, of Post Talbot, to accept our thanks for his very interesting communication published under the head of Natural History.—It is a subject of regret to us that we do not more frequently receive information of this nature as kind from various parts of the country; because, as this is in a great measure an unexplored country, our friends at a distance expect, from time to time, to see notices tending to illustrate its Natural History;—and nothing, surely, can be more generally interesting.

We are happy to announce the safe arrival on this side the Atlantic of Mr. Commissioner ROBINSON, who is daily expected here with his family.

Postscript.

VERY LATE FROM EUROPE.

The London Sun of the 14th May, announces with much confidence, that the basis of an amicable adjustment between the French and Spanish nations, had been laid at Seville.—The obstacles at London and Seville had been removed.

A rumour, by passenger in the Canada—32 days from Liverpool, says, that Mina had succeeded in his original purpose of carrying the war into France.

The state of Ireland, it is said, has at length caus. the most serious uneasiness to the British Government.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

In his speech in the House of Lords on the 24th, Lord Liverpool said—that "he considered the success of France in Spain as most unlikely, and he looked with great apprehension to the effects which the contest would produce in France if her arms did not succeed. It was better for England to remain at peace, taking the chances of the failure of the French force, rather than rashly to encounter the evils and inconveniences of war."

In the Commons, on the same day, Lord John Russel's motion for Parliamentary Reform, was lost by a majority of 111.

London April 25.—There has been a complete panic at the Stock Exchange to day. Consols, which were 77 3/8 7/8, suddenly fell to 77 1/4; Spanish Bonds from 34 1/2 to 33 1/4. Reports were circulated of a fall to the French funds, of 2 per cent.—of transports taken up for the conveyance of Russian troops to Spain, &c. &c. The rentes on Wednesday closed at 88¼ to 85c. The only cause is a considerable fall in the funds in Holland.

Sir Robert Wilson, and one of Lord Erskine's sons had left London for Lisbon. The former was about to join the Spanish army.—Prior to his departure he addressed a letter to his constituents in which he observes, "I attach myself to the fortunes of Spain in the hour of her pressure and peril, prepared to share her toils; and I trust I may prove as emulous as any of her defenders to participate in her dangers."

Mr. Nollekins.—Nollekins, the Sculptor, recently deceased, has left 60,000£ to his consort Majesty, 30,000£ to Dr. Kerrick the public librarian at Cambridge, 20,000 to that most excellent person, Francis Douce, Esq who is also made residuary legatee, by which he will get 90,000£ in addition.—Nollekins died worth £300,000.—Morning Paper.

It is said of Nollekins, the Sculptor, who lately died in England, leaving immence wealth, that he was so parsimonious as to deny himself the common comforts of life. He would step into a barber's shop to wash his hands, in order to save the expence of soap at his own house.

Thomas Kidd, Esq. a young gentleman of fortune, lately committed suicide in London. He was in his 25th year, a great lover of pugilistic sports. He had backed Acton the day previous, to the amount of several thousands, and lost, which it is said, led to the consolation of the act. In addition to his income, he had lately been left a sum of his mother, and 1000£ a year.

The celebrated vocalist Incledon, was lying dangerously ill at his house in Brighton, from a severe cold which had fallen on his lungs. His physicians entertained but little hope of his recovery.

Improvisatori.—An extraordinary phenomenon has appeared at Amsterdam in the shape of a Dutch Improvisator. This individual, a distinguished merchant, of the name of Clercq, although perhaps not equal to the Italian Improvisatori, has nevertheless astonished all the literati of Amsterdam. Although only 27 years of age, M. Clercq has contrived in his leisure hours to acquire a thorough knowledge of history, and of Greek, Latin, Spanish, Italian, French, English, German, and Dutch literature, and to obtain the gold medal of the Institute in 1822. He recites by turns, and with enthusiasm, the Poems of Calderon, Tasso, Voltaire, Byron, and Schiller.—To all this knowledge he joins the inspiration which alone creates a poet; and which is very extraordinary, his poetry is almost wholly extemporaneous. Frequently, when in a circle of his friends, if any one will name a subject, he rises, meditates for only a minute or two, and then, full of the god, pours forth a torrent of original ideas and images, clothed in the most beautiful and poetical diction. Among the subjects which have thus been illustrated by his genius, one of the most remarkable was 'Melpomene,' proposed to him in the presence of the Institute. Commencing with the dramatic art in its feeble infancy, he followed it in its vigorous youth, under Eschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides; depicted in several brilliant passages (the truth of which was acknowledged by the learned Greek scholars of the Institute), the distinguishing character of each of those three poets; and then passed to Italy, to France, to England, to Germany, and back to Holland; taking a rapid, but admirable view of the dramatic literature of those various countries. To this rare talent, Mr. Clercq adds the most amiable temper, and the most simple and engaging manners.—London Literary Gazette.

Tastes of War.—The London Courier of May 7th, says—"Rendezvous houses have been opened on Tower-hill, for the reception of able and ordinary seamen for eleven ships of the line, four frigates, six sloops of war, and two cutters."

It is stated in the Oriental Spectator, printed at Smyrna, dated 14th of March, that the corps of 100 men, taken in the Morea by Kephallo, of Olympus, is broken up, and the greater part had returned to Europe. This corps was from Germany.

Every exertion is making for the immediate equipment forsea, of his Majesty's ship the Prince Regent, lately launched at Chatham; and the Revenge of 76 guns, the flag ship of Vice Admiral Sir H. B. Neale.

Chain Bridge.—A chain bridge is in estate of forwardness, over the Menai, an arm of the Irish Sea which separates Anglesea from North Wales. It will have the unprecedented length of 560 feet between the two supports one on each shore; and its height above the water will be 120 feet, so that ships may pass beneath it under full sail. The abutments are of masonry, surmounted by wood pyramids 50 feet high, over which the chains pass. The bridge is 28 feet wide, containing a foot path of four feet wide in the middle. It will cost £70,000 sterling.

Ingenious Robbery.—A surgeon apothecary not 100 miles from Salisbury, desirous of, having a subject, for the benefit of his pupils, agreed with some of the night people to procure him one. At about half past eleven on Saturday night last, a subject was accordingly brought, and placed in the parlour for the night. The surgeon retired to rest; and early on the following morning he went to the parlour for the purpose of removing his purchase to the dissecting room. The bag was there, but the subject had left—taking with him a plate to the amount of 40£.

UNION HALL.

Ludicrous Adventure in the King's Bench Prison.—On Wednesday, considerable merriment was excited by the examination of an Irish youth named Thomas Tooley, relative to a gentleman named Wigmore, a prisoner in the King's Bench, [illegible]

Colville, one of the turnkeys to the above gaol stated, that at ten o'clock the preceding night, there was a disturbance on No. 6 stair case, occasioned by three ladies of a certain character, who were disputing with each other as to their right to remain in the prison. Witness told them the rules of the prison prohibited their remaining, in the prison all night; and desired them to go out. Two of them did go out, but the third, Mary Ann Crowd, who was in the habit of visiting Mr. Wigmore, went into his room. Witness told Mr. W. that he was acting wrong by allowing her to stay, and insisted on expelling her; upon which Mr W said, he would go down stairs he would bring her down, and he should go out. Witness assented, and presently Wigmore came down with the prisoner under his arm, dressed in the clothes of Mary Ann, and walked towards the gates. On getting to the first gate, Mr W. said. "Good night, Mary, I am sorry you have had to remain so long," to which witness facetiously replied, "Thomas, you mane, Sir," and then the trick was exploded, and Thomas was taken to the watch house.

"Well, Mr. Thomas Toosey, so you are not a female?" said the Magistrate.

"No, please your worship, I am Thomas Toosey, God knows," replied the unfortunate Thomas.

Magistrate—You have got yourself into a pretty scrape by your adventure.

Thomas—Fait your worship may say that.

Magistrate—What have you to say for yourself?

Thomas—I'll tell your honour, if you please. Meself is wed to my master, that is to Mr. Wigmore, and a good crater he is. Last night, you honour, my master's mistress wanted just to set in the chair all night—but the gentleman, I mane the gnoler, would not let her, so my master made me put on my clothes, and my master's mistress pulled off hers; and then my master dressed me up like a female, and mistress dressed herself in mine, and he got me to the gate, he said, "Good night!" and called me "Mary;" and meself forgetting the intrigue, was the manes of myself being locked up in the watchhouse.

The Magistrate discharged him, but ordered him to strip off the female dress, and desired that it might be kept till the owner should apply for it.

On poor Thomas being dissected every person present was convulsed with laughter; his breasts were formed of a large potatoe, cut in halves, his head decorated with a false front; he had on a blue cloth pelisse, beaver hat and feathers, and a scal-skin muff.

Extraordinary Birth.—A Birmingham paper says.—On the 15th March the wife of Joseph Ley, a labourer, residing at Nuneaton, was safely delivered of four children, two males and two females. Both she and they are doing, as baptised by the Rev. Hugh Hughes; their names were Faith, Hope, Patience, and Charity. The mother, we understand, is in a fair way of recovery; but the children did not live more than twelve hours. As soon as possible after their death a coffin was made to contain their bodies; and several hundred persons have called on the parents, in order to witness so extraordinary a sight.—Lon. Pap.

New Carriage Bonnet—A new carriage Bonnet has been introduced in London the present Spring. It is made in the Gypsy form (short at the ear,) front inclined, of a Maria Stuart, and trimmed with lutring, with wild roses placed in front of the crown.

Sir W. Scott—The author of Waverly is elected a member of the Edinburgh Club, and it is understood as certain, that in case the mysterious person should be found wanting when called for, his chair will be occupied by Sir WALTER SCOTT.

Calico Trade.—The Stockport Advertiser mentions that a single house in that town lately paid the sum of 3864*l.* sterling to the collector of excise for 6 weeks duty on printed calicoes, shipped by that house.

Greeks.—The following striking paragraph is given at the conclusion of a letter from Mr. Bethouse, in Greece, to the Greek Committee in London.

"ALMIGHTY God is for us.—He has confounded the Councils of the Sultan, who has destroyed, one after the other, all the principle protectors of his empire. He first made away with Ali Pacha, the pillar of Turkey; next with the great Cimariotic Pacha; then Selim Pacha; Ishmael Pacha; seven other Pachas; and the Grand Vizier himself. At last he slew all his own Ministers, and amongst them the celebrated Haleb Effendi. So that the high offices of State are now filled with common Janissaries; and his Vizierats are given to the inexperienced slaves of the seraglio. To add to the perplexities of our enemy, Ortchan Bey is at war with Persia; and the Pacha of Asia has revolted, and defeated three Pachas sent against him. I should mention that the Sultan also beheaded all the Commanders of the fleet who escaped into the Dardanelles, because they failed to disperse our fleets, and to relieve Napoli and the other besieged fortresses.

IRELAND.

The horrors of the south are thickening to an extent almost inconceivable. Perhaps there were never in the history of Ireland any scenes comparable to those which have been enacted, for the last three or four months, in Cork and Limerick. Even in the rebellion of 1798, there were not, we are almost convinced, during its entire continuance, so many houses burnt; and though more property must have been destroyed throughout the whole Kingdom, yet certainly no two counties have suffered so severely as Cork and Limerick are doing at this moment.

The insurrection is spreading along the banks of the Suir in the counties of Waterford and Tipperary. The following is part of a notice exhibited in the neighbourhood of Carrick-on-Suir. It was served on Edmund Shea, a farmer at Ballyfinch:—

"Remember if you do not part with that Stralag man, that we will leave him in the Condition that the Priest will not overlake him, and we will use the man of the house worse.—This is the following Oath that all the men have been sworn to.

"I, A. B. do solemnly swear, by our Lord Jesus Christ, who suffered for us on the Cross, and by the Blessed Virgin Mary, that I will burn, destroy, and murder all Strangers, and their masters, and till up to my Knees in Blood.

"So help me God, &c. &c. &c.

"G. P. R."

This was written in blood, and directed as follows:—

"Edmund Shea, Ballylinch, Take Notice of what this paper doth Express. The Foresaid time mentioned in the Notice will be shortly out."

Such a horrible and appalling system continues for any length of time, it will be impossible to remain in the south of Ireland. Indeed we have learned from a gentleman very conversant in the condition of the South of Ireland, that emigration, which was principally confined to the North, has begun with great activity in Munster. From the neighbourhood of one town, Borrowhane, thirty Roman Catholic families have recently emigrated to America. Maryland, which is in some respects a Catholic State, and Philadelphia is the destination, we believe, of these and other families

SPAIN.

The French begin already to feel, not only at St Sebastian but throughout their whole line, the deficiency of provisions. Flying columns of Guerillas now attack every day the Pyrenees and the Ebro. The Pastor commands one party of 1,500, and displays all his former activity. These parties hover round us, march, harass them, and leave them nothing to eat, except what they have in their immediate possession. Most urgent orders have been sent to Bayonne to forward supplies at any cost or risk.

The Asia is sailing before St. Sebastian. It was not expected that St. Sebastian would hold out as it has done.—10,000 francs were offered to the Governor, to induce him to surrender.

London, May 8—The letters received to-day at Lloyd's repeat that great exertions are making by the French to obtain an ascendency on the ocean. The Thames and Constance sailed on the 23d, to cruize off St Sebastian. The Centaur, of 80 guns was to sail in a few days for Corunna and Toulon. Several line of battle ships were in the Roads ready for sea.

The resolute opposition of the town of Figueras to the French, will probably be imitated by other places in that part of Spain, for this is one of the five fortresses which Mina considered the most important to be defended, and accordingly supplied with sufficient garrison. The others are Urgel, Hostalrich, Barcelona, and Montjuich. In these alone he can confide, and all the rest, whose defence was relinquished, were entirely dismantled.

General Morillo commands the army of reserve in Gallicia. He takes a position between Leon and Astorga with from 15 to 25,000 men.

The Bayonne papers inform us, that the Constitutional corps under the Count Abisbal and Gen. Morillo, amounting to 40,000 men were about to unite, and to offer battle to Marshal Oudinot, while Ballasteros was to keep in check the corps of Gen. Molitor. Were we to credit every thing we see in the French papers, we would be compelled to believe that Morillo and Ballasteros were nearly deserted of troops; and we shall, likely be amused with stories of the nature until we receive intelligence from another source of what is going on in the peninsula. The little which now and then transpires independent of the French accounts, inclines us to believe that the cause of "legitimacy" is not going on so prosperously as some would have us to think; and we are [illegible] which London Courier states, what it considers a fact, "that a Russian army is undoubtedly assembling in the Duchy of Warsaw;" but continues the editor, "whether to be used for the purpose of overawing France in the absence of her own soldiers, or as a body of troops to join the French in Spain, we cannot pretend to say." From this it might be inferred, at least, that apprehensions were entertained among the crowned heads, of a failure in their designs against Spain, or of some reverse in France, should the government of Louis be left alone in the struggle. Accounts from Vienna, of a recent date, mention, that the communications between that Court and St. Petersburgh had again been actively resumed; and advices from Lausanne repeat that the Austrian troops which were about to evacuate Italy, had unexpectedly halted on the frontiers of Lombardy. From all this, concludes the Courier, "we think it requires no extraordinary sagacity to presage the coming events." Or, in other words, that Russia and Austria, agreeable to the pledge already given, finding that the overthrow of liberty there was an undertaking of too great a magnitude to be accomplished by France, had determined on bringing into the field their immense legions. And we foresee would be the case contemplating the probability of the French armies invading Spain; and when we more observe the [illegible] making in England, and in several northern ports to cover the ocean with numerous fleets, it may, we think, be presumed that the flames of war are on the eve of spreading throughout all Europe.

The following is the spirited reply sent by St Miguel the Commandant of Figueras, to Marshall Moncey, on being summoned to surrender that fortress:—

"Senor General—The fortress of St. Fernando de Figueras, which the union has entrusted to my care, and to whose confidence I desire to make a return before that true Spaniard, and a free man, shall not be surrendered, nor placed in the hands of the royal armies of France and Spain, as your excellency requires in your letter delivered by Capt. Lesserre your aid de camp; and its garrison, penetrated with the same sentiments as myself, are resolved to bury themselves under its ruins, rather than fall in the observance of their honor and their oaths. I am sensible to the fact, and lament the prospect, that precious blood must flow on both sides; but it is not in my power to prevent it. With your excellency and your army alone resides the power to prevent the calamities which you deplore, by uniting yourselves with a people who so much desire liberty, instead of unjustly and forcibly imposing chains upon a nation which enjoys that liberty, and which neither solicits nor will ever acknowledge, the right of any other power to interfere in the political concerns, or receive at foreign diction, laws alone it must frame for itself. As I am far from accepting the proposals of your excellency, I lay aside, as entirely irrelevant, the proclamation which the Royal Highness the Duke of Angouleme has addressed to the Spaniards, which can only be good and useful for perfidious Spaniards, and unnatural children of their country, but not to true sons of that mother, whom they so highly adore, and for whose prosperity and happiness they are disposed to sacrifice themselves. This is the only answer I have to return to your excellency. Wishing not to fail in civility, I determined to admit the first flag of your excellency; but I must apprise you that I shall not treat in the same manner the second which comes with the same mission.

TEA.

Effects of the East-India Company's Monopoly on the Price of Tea.

We beg leave to call the attention of our readers to the following statement of the prices of tea in London and New-York. The prices, in both instances, are exclusive of duty. The London prices are those for which the sale at the Company's last sale, and lodged in their ware houses, are now selling; and the New York prices are those of teas in the London ware-houses, and are literally copied from the "Price Current," published in that city on the 16th of November last.

	London Prices		New-York Prices
Teas	Average		Average	Difference
Bohea	2s 8d per lb.		0s 11d	1s 6d
Congo	2s 2d		0s 8d	2s 2d
Souchong	4s 4d		1s 6d	2s 10d
Teranbay	3s 6d		not quoted
Hyson Skin	3s 4d		1s 3d	2s 1d
Hyson	4s 8d		1s 3d	2s 0d
	17s 11d		7s 0d	10s 11d

The difference in the average of the five species of tea, and they are those in general use, quoted in both places, is just 2s. 2d. per pound, and supposing the difference in the [illegible] to be [illegible] per pound. It will follow, inasmuch as there are about 25 millions of pounds weight of tea annually consumed in Great Britain, that the East India Company's monopoly costs the British public, in the article of tea only, the enormous sum of 2,708,750l! It is impossible either to controvert or dispute this statement. It is founded on official documents, whose accuracy neither is or can be denied. Neitherean it be contended that the price of tea is naturally higher in London than in New-York;—on the contrary, we have the authority of some of the best informed and most extensive merchants in the kingdom, for saying, that were the trade thrown open, teas could be imported into England for twenty per cent. less than into America. Here, therefore, we have a tax of about 2000 per cent sterling, imposed on one of the prime necessaries of life for the exclusive advantage of a company of private merchants. It remains to be seen whether the public will submit to continue to pay such a sum for such a purpose. If they do not enter the field to procure relief from so scandalous an imposition, on what face can they seek relief from taxes levied for public objects? So long as they submit to have their pockets picked by a monopolist, they certainly deserve [illegible]

The statements we have now under view, that it was a very great to suppose, as is very generally done, that the comparatively high price of teas in this country, is mainly a consequence of the duty payable to government. The duty is an ad valorem one of 100 per cent, and consequently just doubles the prices at which teas are sold by the Company. If the Company sell Souchong at 4s. 4d. per lb. to the consumer, after the duty has been paid, will he not be but if the Souchong were sold to the wholesale merchant, as it is sold in New-York and on the Continent, for only 2s. 2d. per lb. (the price, at 1s 6d, its price, inclusive of duty, would be only 3s or 3s less than at this moment? The government, therefore, as well as the country in general is interested in getting the measure of monopoly put down, and the tea trade thrown open. The fall of price that would thus be occasioned, would greatly extend the consumption of tea; and the duty, though levied on a cheaper article, would really produce a larger revenue.

We are told, perhaps, be told, what is indeed true, that teas are put up by the East India Company, at their sales, at a much lower price than that for which they are knocked down! But this statement is too flimsy to impose on any body. The Company have the monopoly of the market; and by under stocking it, as they always do, they necessarily force the nation to be carried to the highest pitch. If they can afford to sell their teas at the prices at which they put them up, why do they not bring to sale as large a quantity as the country could take off at those prices? David they do this, the prices at which their teas are sold, compared with the prices for which they might be bought from the free trader, must be held to be the measure of the sum unjustly gained by them at the expence of the public—a sum which, we have seen, is very little short of it does not exceed three millions sterling, or twice the amount of the salt tax!

The above is copied from the Scotsman. We ourselves saw not long since an ounce or two of gunpowder tea, the remains of a small quantity brought by a passenger in on the line of 90,000 francs were offered to the Governor, to induce him to surrender.

Natural History.

For the Weekly Register.

Sir,

I beg leave to send you the following account of a very extraordinary phenomenon which lately occured in the waters of Lake Erie, which you are at liberty to use in any way you think proper.

I am, &c.
A. H. Burwell.

Port Talbot,
June 20th, 1823

On or about the 30th May last, a little after sunset, Lake Erie was observed to take a sudden and extraordinary rise, the weather being fine and clear, and the Lake calm and smooth. It was principally noticed at the mouths of Otter and Kettle Creeks, which are 20 miles apart.—At Otter Creek it came in without the least previous intimation, in a swell of nine feet perpendicular height, as was afterwards ascertained, rushed wide up the channel, drove a Schooner of 35 tons burden from her moorings, threw her upon high ground, and rolled over the ordinary beach into the woods, completely inundating all the adjacent flats.—This was followed by two others of equal height, which caused the creek to retrograde a mile and a half, and to overflow its banks where water was never before seen by seven or eight feet. The noise occasioned by its rushing with such rapidity along the winding channel was truly astonishing. It was witnessed by a number of persons.

At Kettle Creek, several men were drawing a fish net in the Lake, when suddenly they saw the water coming up them in the manner above mentioned; and, letting go their net, they ran for their lives. The swell overtook them before they could reach the high bank, and was thrown forward with great force; but, being expert swimmers, they escaped unhurt. The man who was in the skiff, pulling in the sea line was driven with it a considerable distance over the flat, and grounded upon a small eminence until the water subsided. There were three successive swells, as at Otter Creek, and the effect up the creek were the same, with this difference, the water only rose seven feet. In both cases the Lake after the three swells had spent their force, gradually subsided and in about twenty minutes was at its usual height and tranquility. It was observed at other places along the Lake shore, but the high steep banks did not admit of the same observation. In all, however, there was a general correspondence as to the height of the rise.

Conjecture will doubtless be awake as to the cause of this most remarkable phenomenon; but it must only be conjecture; for it was unattended with any circumstance that could possibly [illegible] that is a perceptible cause. But such was the fact and it must [illegible]

But what must the mistress be of a cess like this? Were she endowed with that virgin modesty, that chaste and retreating timidity, that meekness, gentleness, and compassionate tenderness which impart such peculiar and overpowering charms to their possessor, she would blush with the deepest confusion, and shrink back from the tea trade thrown open. The fall of price that would thus be occasioned, would greatly extend the consumption of tea; and the duty, though levied on a cheaper article, would really produce a larger revenue

We are told, perhaps, be told, what is indeed true, that teas are put up by the East India Company, at their sales, at a much lower price than that for which they are knocked down! meets—in the field of honor?—Nay, say—in the skulking place of murderous revenge—prepared for the mortal combat? Does meekness and humility accord with that haughty and unyielding disposition, that will not brook a trifling affront, much less an serious injury? Does it look like forgiveness to take the life of him who offends you, before your stubborn temper will relent? And even suppose you had suffered the most grievous wrongs, could you calmly and fearlessly kneel down upon the fatal ground with the instrument of vengeance weapon-ed in your hand, and the presence of immediate death before you, and implore God to forgive your trespasses as you forgive them that had trespassed against you, and then, at the next breath, aim the death commissioned instrument at the heart of your enemy! Could you have one solitary feeling in strict unison with your [illegible] Could you [illegible] Could you [illegible] Could you [illegible] even in "a safe and certain hope" of being acquitted before His righteous tribunal? And could you expect your solemn petition to be accepted otherwise than as impious, unmeaning, that God would immediately inflict that vengeance upon yourself you sought to take of your enemy?—O shame! you advocates of duelling!—Bring your principles to this test, which will one day try all. Lay aside those false and partial close notions of honor, and adopt the maxims of the Gospel of peace! Let honor indeed be your motto, but let your conduct be honorable in the sight of God and man. Let a Christian temper reign in you, and you will never need recourse to the sword to adjust your temporary concerns. Judge this the only perfect universal law of life here, and you shall receive present and future peace and happiness.

Finally, duelling is one of the remains of brutheaish barbarity alike repugnant to reason and religion, which both united have not yet been able to disengage from the iron grasp of deep rooted prejudice. Yet it is one that resolutely marks time with the march of improvement, and proudly strides with the haughty step of insolent revenge, claiming the post of honor in the ranks of civilization. It arrogantly takes its stand above all authority, human and divine, spurning disdain upon the sacred seats of legislative wisdom and executive power; and, usurping the sword of justice, meeting invades the province allotted to the common executioner. If intestates men to destroy each other by mutual compact, and enlists accessories in its cause to see that its bloody work is done according to an established etiquette, and then swindles justice of her unalienable right, by providing a safe retreat for the surviving transgressors to the general consent to screen them from deserved punishment—and it is high time the cruel monster were banished from human society

The subject, Mr. Editor, has led me further than I anticipated when I first took up my pen. Such a field for animadversion opened upon me, that I knew not how to proceed. To have said less, I humbly conceive, would have been to refuse the subject its just due; and to have said all I found to say, would far have exceeded the limits usually assigned to newspaper essays. But I shall probably resume the subject at a future period, because I have deeply several experiments in this essay that I am conscious will be harsh and ungrateful to many whom I would not willingly offend. In the mean time I must crave that indulgence, your goodness extended towards me on a former occasion. Indeed, did I not esteem you a candid, sensible, and impartial Editor, I should not trouble you with my incubrations

Agreeably to the order of the day, the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the subject of Public Accounts was read the third time, passed and signed by the Speaker, and is as follows:

TO HIS EXCELLENCY SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND,

&c. &c. &c.

May it please Your Excellency,

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave respectively to represent to Your Excellency, that much trouble and confusion arises from the perplexed manner in which the Public Accounts are made up from the different charges in the Receiver General's account of Warrants paid by him for various services not being executed and classed under distinct heads, and from these warrants being issued at broken periods, and no account rendered of the outstanding Claims to complete the year, that the want of detail of all monies paid for the services specified in the Bill of Supply, as also the resources from whence they are defrayed, precludes His Majesty's faithful Commons from an opportunity of enquiring into what they may conceive any extraordinary & improper expenditure, thereby placing His Majesty's Commons in the embarrassing Situation of either voting away the public money without being able to assign to their constituents any other or better reason than the requisition of the Executive, or leaving the Government destitute of the means of carrying on the Public service, by withholding the supply, from their inability to judge of the necessity of granting it, and to request that Your Excellency will be graciously pleased to direct the proper officer to lay before this House at an early period of the next Session of Parliament, the Public Accounts in such manner and form as to obviate the difficulties alluded to, as also such other detail as may be necessary to put His Majesty's Commons in full possession of the information required.

On motion of Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, seconded, by Mr. Kerr, Messrs Burwell and Chisholm, were ordered as a Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the address, and to request to know when it would be convenient for His Excellency to receive the improvement of the Saint Lawrence, and the public accounts.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded, by Mr. Hamilton, it was ordered that the resolution of the House at its last Session, relative to the sergeant at arms, should be referred to the select Committee on the contingent accounts.

House adjourned.

FRIDAY, 14 March, 1823.

On motion of Mr. McLean of Stormont, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, the Canal Bill was recommitted.

Mr. Casey was called to the Chair.

The House resumed

Mr Casey reported the Bill as amended.

How thou canst charm this truth will tell,
(Enchantress as thou art,)
Love triumphs in my bosom's swell;
Estranged from thee he had nor spell
Nor power to fix my heart—

Much did I scorn his fabled wiles,
And much did he endure;
"Could treachery lurk in infant smiles?
No, never!" still I sought his toils,
And deemed myself secure.—
Beset at last, around abides,
Behold me chained and scoffed by love.— Nano.

IMPROMPTU.

Pam'd Atalanta, lov'd by many,
Refus'd to yield her charms to any,
And, trusting to her nimble pace,
Dar'd all her lovers to the race,
And ne'er was caught, till on a day
A golden apple cross'd her way;
Struck with delight, she seiz'd the spoil,
And thus was caught in Hymen's toil.
Our modern Atalanta fair,
Of wond'rous charms, of prudence rare,
Beset by suores, eludes them all,
Till fate presents the GOLDEN BALL.
Thus modern maids, like those of old,
All own th' omnipotence of gold;
And thus we solve the point so knotty,
Why Ball eloped with Mercandotti.

It is with indescribable pleasure we refer our readers to the advertisement of Mr. D. Fisher, in our paper of this day, wherein 10 Hhds. of Upper Canada Leaf Tobacco, are mentioned as being for sale.—This, we believe, is the first [illegible] notice of so large a quantity of that article, the growth of Canada, being advertised; but we trust that very few seasons will pass, before we shall have not only a sufficient quantity for our own consumption, but also be enabled to export to Great Britain, where, we hope, encouragement will be given to the produce of her Colonies in preference to that of foreign States. The culture of the plant will be of incalculable advantage to this Country, and it is to be wished that every attention may be paid to the production of an article of such universal consumption.—Con Courant.

The De Salaberry Steam boat, has been totally consumed by fire, on her way from Quebec to Chambly, several lives, and property to a large amount, were lost. The fire was occasioned by some wood being placed too near the boiler.—No blame is attachable to the Captain, who is a great pecuniary sufferer.

JOHN SMALL, C. E. C.

Government House, 6th March, 1820.

HIS Excellency the Lieutenant Governor is pleased to direct that no Location requiring Settlement Duty shall be Confirmed by Patent, without a Certificate from the Land Board of the District in which such Location may be situate, that the Settlement Duty required by the Order in council has bona fide been performed within the time specified by the Location Ticket.

JOHN SMALL Clk. C.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

Midland District, } BY virtue of a Writ of Fieri Facias issued out of His to wit. } Majesty's Court of King's Bench at York, and to me directed, against the Lands and Tenements of Philip Smith and William Edgar, at the suit of Reuben Clarke, I have seized and taken in Execution, Lots No. 23 and 24 in the 4th Concession of Fredericksburgh, and 40 Acres of the South Part of the West Half of Lot No. 2, 4th Concession of Ernestown, in the Counties of Lennox and Addington, and in the Midland District, which I will offer for sale at Public Auction, at the Court House, in the town of Kingston, on Saturday, the 31st day of May next ensuing, at 12 o'clock, A. M. and absolutely judge the same to the highest bidder, for cash.

JOHN McLEAN,
Sheriff, Midland District.

4-6m Deputy Clerk Executive Council.

JOHN BEIKIE.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been with held from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee as deemed expedient to relieve the settler from the forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this Date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office, York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

THE FIRST PROSPECTUS OF A NEW WORK TO BE ENTITLED

THE

Canadian Annual Register;

OR,

A VIEW

OF THE

History, Politics, Literature, and Growth

OF THE

CANADAS,

IN ALL THAT CONSTITUTES THE WEALTH OF NATIONS.

TO BE CONDUCTED AND PUBLISHED ANNUALLY

BY CHARLES FOTHERGILL,

His Majesty's Printer in U. C.

THE lapse of sixty-five years since the commencement of DODSLEY'S Annual Register in England has shewn the vast importance, and increasing value of that great work;—a work which has become an authority of the highest respectability and consideration on every subject connected with English History (indeed one may say with the History of Europe,) since the period of its commencement;—and, if there be any cause of regret, it is that such an undertaking was not begun at an earlier period.

The number of editions which that work has passed through,—the high price it bears,—and the fact that no library is considered at all complete without it, sufficiently proves its great value and utility.—It forms, indeed, no inconsiderable library in itself; and, if a man had no other book, except it, he could never want either amusement or instruction.

It is impossible but that a similar work, though it might be conducted with no more than mediocral ability, would prove of equal value and importance to other countries; and particularly to those in a state of comparative infancy—CANADA, especially, presents a fine field for such an undertaking.—All that is known, or ever can be known, of its early history may be comprised in little more than an octavo volume; after which, by a similarity of plan with that adopted in the Annual Register of England, all the transactions, events, discoveries, and improvements of each year, worthy of preservation, may be given to the public at a very moderate expense,—less than the cost of the meanest Newspaper in the country;—gradually forming a library, which would contain every thing interesting, or having any reference to the NATURAL and CIVIL HISTORY of the COUNTRY, and becoming a book of such important reference as all the other books in the world, put together, could not supply.

Besides the more serious business of the State, which must necessarily occupy a large portion of the pages of such a work; now, that Newspapers and Magazines are generally conducted by men of respectable talents and attainments, it must occur to readers of every class, that articles of great interest and utility are continually occurring in those periodical publications, which deserve a more lasting record;—such a record is found in an Annual Register on the plan proposed, at a price considerably less than that of any respectable Newspaper, taken singly.—This Work will contain all that is considered worth preserving in the various Newspapers, Magazines, and all other Miscellaneous Publications, both of the old and new world.

That such of the readers of this Prospectus as are unacquainted with the plan of DODSLEY'S Annual Register, (which, with some alterations, additions, and improvements will be pursued in the present undertaking,) may form some judgment of its merits, we shall now proceed without further preface to give an outline of the

PLAN
CANADIAN ANNUAL REGISTER.

SECTION I.

Will contain the ANCIENT HISTORY and ANNALS of the COUNTRY from its DISCOVERY to these TIMES.

SECT. II.

GENERAL POLITICS, and present situation of the BRITISH PROVINCES of NORTH AMERICA.—In time of war, this department of the work will be occupied with the details of that war.

SECT. III.

The CHRONICLE, comprehending a narrative, chronologically arranged, of every domestic incident, of the smallest interest to the public, which may have occurred during the year in any part of the British Provinces; but, more especially in the two Canadas. No event, or accident, of any importance, whatever may be its nature, will be omitted in this department.

SECT. IV.

The APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE will contain Marriages, Births, Deaths, Promotions, Removals, &c. &c. &c. with average prices of Provisions, and articles of domestic growth for exportation—state of markets—shipping lists—arrivals—departures, &c increase or decrease of foreign trade—abstracts of population—revenue, &c. &c. &c.

SECT. V.

PARLIAMENTARY REGISTER; containing a complete History of the proceedings of the Parliament of both Provinces, with the Speeches, Resolutions, &c &c. and Lists, with the titles of the Acts passed during the session.

SECT. VI.

STATE PAPERS;—Proclamations; Orders of Council; Memorials; Petitions; Manifestos; Correspondencies; Acts and Debates of the Imperial Parliament, having any reference to this country, &c. &c.

SECT. VII.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES of Extraordinary Characters connected with Canada.

SECT. VIII.

NATURAL HISTORY; containing, not only the New Discoveries made in various parts of this vast continent; but, also, such extracts from new and valuable Books of Travels as describe, or have particular reference to any part of it.

SECT. IX.

AGRICULTURE.—This important section will contain Notices and Details of every species of practice and discovery that may be of the slightest utility here.

SECT. X.

USEFUL PROJECTS.—New Pieces of Mechanism; Implements; Experiments; Inventions; Patents, &c. &c.

SECT. XI.

ANTIQUITIES, will contain such Details and Discoveries as tend to throw light upon the Ancient History of the Country.

SECT XII.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS—or such Original Productions contained in the more ephemeral publications of the day, week, or month, as may be worth preserving.

SECT. XIII.

POETRY, to be confined as much as possible to Original Productions, and great care will be observed in the selections.

SECT. XIV.

Account of Books, and other new publications having reference to the country.

Should any important changes occur in Europe, at all likely to affect this country, they will be also noticed under a suitable head.

As it is presumed that the work, even if conducted with no more than moderate skill and industry, will gradually become a standard book in this quarter of the world, it is unnecessary to have recourse to any of those arts which are commonly practised by the Booksellers and Reviewers in Europe to puff off their new publications. It is hoped this simple sketch of the design, and the manner in which the first volume (for the present year) will be got up, will be sufficient to obtain that patronage which is so necessary to the support of such an undertaking. If this work is encouraged, it will gradually become of vast importance to public men in every profession, as a book of reference, and in process of time will, in itself, contain an immense body of Canadian History, such as no other book or books could afford. Had such a work been commenced in England soon after the gloom of the middle ages began to disperse, instead of the year 1758—its value would have been now beyond all price.

It being necessary to insure the sale of at least 300 copies before the work is put to press; this Prospectus is thus early published, in order to ascertain the degree of patronage it is likely to obtain. The price to subscribers will be $3½ per annum—to non subscribers, $4—printed on fine English paper, and handsomely done up in boards, and lettered.—No payment will be required, or desired, until the work is delivered—but an early intimation of the name and address of Subscribers is earnestly requested, either at the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or at any of the various Agents for the Weekly Register.

KINGSTON BANK NOTES,

Are purchased at a liberal price by Mr Thomas Money, A. G. L. York.

NOTICE.

APPLICATION will be made to the Legislature of this Province, at its next meeting, to divide the County of Halton, in the District of Gore. 25th June, 1823.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 28.

THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

THE Address of the President, Senior CALDERON, at the opening of the Spanish Cortes, will be read with a lively interest. It expresses all the dignity and firmness of the Spanish character, and teaches us to hope the best things for that heroic country.

We have no very important news by the latest arrivals, if we except a report that the disaffected in the South of France are only waiting the arrival of MINA, with his forces, within the French territory, to rise en masse and display the Tri-coloured flag.

The following extracts from the Quebec papers will shew, that commerce is not quite so brisk in that port, during the present season, as was anticipated.

The number of vessels arrived at this port up to the present date is 191, carrying 46,407 tons and bringing 4,374 emigrants. The number arrived at the same period last year was 282, carrying 77,092 tons and bringing 4,302 settlers. The quantity of timber which has come down is now very great, indeed the market seems completely overstocked, and no reasonable price can be obtained by the raftsmen. The circumstance that there are few or almost no vessels to sail makes business in this, as it is in every branch extremely dull.—Gazette.

The American Brig Euphemus cleared at New York on the 18th June for this port. The Brig Emerald sailed from this port on the 26th for Boston, with a full cargo of 15,538 bushels of oats, 80 tons junk and 30 bales hay.—Ibid.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals

The King—We are much concerned to state that His MAJESTY is by no means in good health. He has been visited with repeated attacks of the gout, attended with fever. The last bulletin, however, announces him convalescent, and we hope his intended excursion in the channel will completely restore him to his usual state of health.

M. Chateaubriand.—The following extract from a speech delivered by this accomplished Nobleman in the French Chambers of Peers, is a very dignified notice of those calumnies and insults, which have lately been applied to him from various quarters.

"Gentlemen, let us not inflate such examples; the existence of Representative Governments would be impossible if their tribunes were to retort; imprudent recriminations would soon convert Europe into a field of battle. It is for us to set an example of parliamentary moderation. Wishes have been expressed against us; let us wish the prosperity of every Power with which we preserve amicable relations. Some have dared to raise their voice against the wisest of Kings and his august family! What have we to say of the King of England, Stanislas, except that he is a Prince whose policy is more upright, and whose character is more generous, no Prince who, by his sentiments, his manners and his conversation, gives a more finished idea of the monarch and the gentleman. The French Ministers have been severely criticised. I know the Ministers who now govern France; their situation, perhaps, does not possess the esteem and consideration which they enjoy. I have been the particular object of insults. What matters it? you, Gentlemen, consider that I have only incurred them by having well served my country? Do not fear that my wounded vanity can make me forget what I owe to my native land; and whenever it is a question to maintain good harmony between two powerful nations, I shall never recollect that I have been offended.

Legal Process.—At the Lancaster Assizes, held last week a violent quarrel ensued between Mr. Scarlett and Mr. Brougham, in which both parties were highly enraged. This last circumstance occurred during the trial of a civil case, in which Mr. Scarlett in his passion, designated Mr. Brougham a frothy declaimer. This called from Mr Brougham one of the most severe and well merited chastisements Mr. Scarlett ever received, and which so enraged the latter, that, as an eye-witness observed, had the two gentlemen been sufficiently near each other, he (Mr Scarlett) would assuredly have dashed his brief in Mr. Brougham's face. The judge said he must put a stop to the trial, and call in a fresh one, unless the quarrel immediately ceased.—Cyclist Journal

Young Napoleon.—Vienna, April 23.—The young Napoleon is much liked by the Emperor, who was never remarkably fond of children; whilst his son is treated as an infant, although he is nearly thirty years of age, yet his grandson is the delight of the family, and put forward upon all occasions. His Governor is Count M. Dietrichstein, a staid old man strict to his studies, (in which he is much advanced) and in all other respects. When the Emperor wishes to correct him, he tells him he will inform Count Leichtenstein, but never does it himself. Last week he was dressed in his uniform as an Austrian Cadet, and after riding a few hours with Belgrado, (the Governor of the Hereditary Prince) asked him, in joke, how many battles he had served in? Napoleon replied—"Put that question to me this day 20 years."

The Emperor, however, placed him one error, lost credit, and judge what it was for—he marked with chalk a mere O on the back of the King of Naples's coat, who is on a visit to this Court. It was in joke, and whether meant to be understood, I leave you all to determine;—but the anecdote is excellent in itself, and worthy of record.

Slaves.—The United States, called a free country, contain more than one and a half millions of human beings deprived of freedom.

Insurrection afloat.—An extract says, "The letters of the Duke d'Angouleme, give the most alarming account of the progress of desertions. They state that two fifths of the soldiers, in the service have got a most strange and absurd idea into their heads, that Napoleon is alive, and in Spain, and they are burning to join him. They called him le Mal-Mort. Singular to say, this opinion prevails also among the peasantry; they cannot be persuaded of his death. When you speak to them of it, they laugh slily and incredulously." The German, shaking his head, when told that Bonaparte was dead, replied, "Ah! you don't know him."

Premature Interment.—Dr. Crichton, physician to the Grand D. he Nicholas, brother to the Emperor of Russia, relates that "a young girl, in the service of the Princess of ——, who had for some time kept her bed with a nervous affection, at length to all appearance was deprived of life. Her face had all the character of death—her body was perfectly cold, and every symptom of death was manifested. She was removed into another room and placed in a coffin. On the day fixed for her funeral, hymns, according to the custom of the country, were sung before the door; but at the very moment when they were going to nail down the coffin, a perspiration was seen upon her skin, and in a few minutes it was succeeded by a convulsive motion in the hands and feet. In a few moments she opened her eyes, and uttered a piercing scream. The family were immediately called in, and in the space of a few days her health was completely re-established. The account which she gave of her situation is extremely curious. She said she appeared to dream that she was dead, but that she was sensible to every thing that was passing round her, and distinctly heard her friends bewailing her death; she felt them carry her in the shroud, and place her in the coffin. This sensation gave her extreme agony, and she attempted to speak, but her soul was unable to act upon her body. She describes her sensations as very contradictory, as if she was and was not in her body at once and the same instant. She attempted in vain to move her arms, to open her eyes, or to speak. The agony of her mind was at its height when she heard the funeral hymns, and found that they were about to nail down the lid of the coffin. The horror of being buried alive gave a new impulse to her mind, which resumed its power over its corporal organisation, and produced the effects which excited the notice of those who were about to convey her to a premature grave."—European Magazine.

South Seas.—A letter has been received from New Zealand, dated Nov. 19, 1822, which states that the Ceres whaler, Captain Lancaster, of London, was lost on the desolate Island of Tonsula (one of the friendly Islands.) on the 28th of Aug. 1821. The crew saved the ship's sails, the greater part of their clothing, four casks of bread and flour and sixteen pieces of pork. "This being a small provision for thirty-one persons, the captain sent twelve men, in two boats, to a neighbouring island, to endeavour to obtain food, until an opportunity should occur of their being taken off. The natives behaved very treacherously; their pretended kindness soon changed into cruelty: they murdered five of them, stripped off their clothes, and sorely cut and bruised the other seven. The natives after, went over to Tonsula, pretended they came from a different island, and knew nothing of their fellow-sufferers. But here they soon killed the Captain, the cooper and the boy, and forced the remaining fifteen poor fellows to put off in their boat, with only one oar. After being two days and nights at sea, having neither food nor drink, they reached the volcanic island of Mateo, where they received the same treatment, their food being only cocoanuts. They were at length taken off the island by the Missionary Society's ship St. Michael, of Port Jackson, and landed at that place.

Duelling.—There has lately been a singular law case in

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Virginia. Col. Richard Graves was presented by proper authority for violating the law to suppress dueling. It appeared that Captain Archibald Lacy, in March last sent a challenge to Graves to fight him with the fist. Lacy was a stout corpulent man, and perhaps thought he should get stand as even chance in fighting Graves with a pistol. Graves was a member of the Legislature, and declined fighting until after the session, fearing he might lose his seat by accepting the challenge. At the proper time, Graves proposed to meet Lacy with two cups—the one to be filled with water and the other with poison.—That two tickets, one blank and other marked P should be rolled up and drawn from a hat—he who drew the ticket P was to drink the deadly poison, and the other the water. Lacy refused, after these, and other curious propositions to him, which were also rejected. Some weeks afterwards Graves took the customary oath to qualify him on receiving a Lt. Colonel's commission. Complaint was immediately made that he had perjured himself, in making oath that he had not been concerned in challenging or fighting a duel. Under the circumstances, the jury found no difficulty in acquitting Graves.

NEW-YORK, June 4.

Extraordinary Fact.—A novel sight was presented yesterday in Maiden Lane, by the removal of a three story brick house a considerable distance back from the street, entire, and without the slightest injury to it. It is a building lately occupied by Messrs Clark & Sons, Druggists, and as it stood on the eastern side of Maiden Lane, was destined to the fate of the neighboring houses, which have been all swelled to the ground. The ingenuity of Mr. Brown, however, has saved, at small expense, which was otherwise inevitable, for by gradually removing the foundation, and replacing it with large timbers formed like the ways used in launching a ship, he prepared it for a removal of twenty one feet back, which he has already nearly effected. The new level of the street is to be from 14 to 15 inches higher than the old, which made it necessary to give the ways a corresponding elevation This ponderous mass of brick was slowly moved up an inclined plane by the force of five iron screws, three of which are applied horizontally to the front of the building, and one at either end in the cellar. So smooth and gradual was the motion, that not the slightest injury was visible, though we observed glass vessels standing on one of the mantle pieces; and the full adequacy of the force to the object, is proved by the fact that a considerable number of people were in the house, and were walking about the chambers in the third story during the removal

Mr. Brown is a son of great mechanical genius, and a native of Massachusetts. It is hoped he will receive the encouragement due to so ingenious a useful an invention; which may save a large expense to the city every year. He has made other successful attempts of this sort, among which that of the house at Richmond-Hill is the most remarkable, where he removed a large frame house like a villa, with brick, and deposed it about 30 feet, with two stacks of chimnies standing. But this is the first experiment he has made on a building entirely of brick, and it bids fair to be equally successful.—Daily Adv.

Gold Mine.—We extract the following article from the first number of a newspaper entitled the "Cheraw Intelligencer and Southern Register, printed at Cheraw, S Carolina. The editors have certainly come out with a glittering article to set off their first paper. We have heard before of the discovery of gold mines in North Carolina, but none of the purity of this ore, which it appears "sells readily in its crude state at 91 cents the penny weight."

If the mine should prove extensive, and lumps continue to be found weighing 28 ounces, gold coin will be found as plentiful hereafter as the shillings in their season. We shall look with some interest to the Cheraw Intelligencer for further facts respecting this wonderful mine,

Gold Mine.—In the county of Anson, N C two miles from Rocky River, and about thirty five miles from this place, there has been discovered an extensive gold mine; in exca vating which, twelve workmen are employed with very considerable success. We have conversed with a Gentleman who a few days since visited this mine; from him we learn the ore is exceedingly pure, and sells readily in its crude state, at 91 cents the penny weight While he was present, one piece was dug up, weighing twenty-two ounces, equal to $340 40 cts. One other piece had previously been found weighing forty ounces, equal to $720. Gold is not found deeper than three and a half feet below the surface. There is a small creek running directly through this mine, the bottom of which being covered with millions of particles of gold, glittering through the limpid stream, presents a very interesting and beautiful appearance.

LONDON, April 20—24

Extraordinary charge.—Bow street.—Yesterday Lord Prod hoe waited on Sir R. Birnie, accompanied by a man named William Martin, who, his Lordship said, was desirous of communicating some adventures of rather an extraordinary nature, which he stated to have befallen him while at sea on a voyage from Shields to London.

Martin was desired to tell his own story, and he began with stating that he had been more than 20 years in the service of Sir D. W. Smith, Bart in Northumberland. About a fortnight ago, in consequence of some disagreement between him and his master, they separated, and being anxious to get to London as cheaply as possible, he hastened to Shields, where he engaged a passage on board a trader, but she sailed without him, in consequence of his being a little too tardy in leave taking, and he would have lost his trunks had not a boat belonging to the customs, brought them ashore for him. While standing on the beach, ruminating upon his misfortune, and the best mode of remedying it, the Hope, a fine north country brig, bound to London, hove to off the harbor. He put off to her, engaged with Capt. Rutherford, who commanded her, for his passage, and got his trunks on board. Capt. Rutherford requested him to go below when they were about to put to sea, but he objected, observing that the want of sleep, occasioned by the night's work, would disorder his stomach. The Captain, however, insisted upon it, and he said he would explain the reason another time. He went below, and shortly after they had put to sea, he heard the sound of female voices in the next birt. He heard them at intervals during that day and the next, and on the second night, at a very late hour, he was dreadfully alarmed at hearing the same female voices, (he judged there were three or four) supplicating for mercy, and imploring that whatever else might be done to them their lives might be spared. To these supplications a man's voice replied, "It is no use, you must submit to your fate!" Shrieks followed this awful declaration—a scuffle was heard, and all again was silent for a time; but he afterwards heard heavy steps ascending the "stairs" to the deck. He lay all this time sweating with horror at every heavy pace, but fearing to make any noise lest the Captain should find out he was awake. When he went upon deck, he looked fearfully at the Captain and crew, but said nothing, because he thought they would have little hesitation in getting rid of him if they should discover the extent of his knowledge. He observed that the Captain looked more than usually pale at him, and sundry obscure hints were thrown out; the Captain, for instance, remarking "that the old lady had walked farther that night than she had done since they had left Shields"—an observation which he had no doubt applied to one of the unfortunate women he had heard. At length, overcome with terror, he threw himself on his knees, and begged them only to spare his life and he would give them all he had in the world, upon which they seized him by the arms and legs, dragged him into the hold, and fastened him with his back to the same spot as the opinion they kept him until they arrived in London, when they set him on shore. He went to Northumberland house, where he was known to all the servants, and Lord Prudhoe, who also knew him in Northumberland, and who happened to be in town

Gates, were ordered as a Committee to confer with the Conferees of the Honorable the Legislative Council, on the subject of the amendments to the Bill for the relief of George Dulong, and others.

On motion of Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Chisholm, the Bill for providing for a second circuit was ordered to be read a second time on that day three months.

Mr. Fattie reported delivering the address relative to retrenchment, and that His Excellency had been pleased to make thereto the following reply:

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

Your observations on the allowances to the Judges and other Officers, in lieu of travelling expenses, shall receive my serious attention; I cannot, however, refrain from stating to you that His Majesty's Government considered the same compensations reasonable when they were defrayed from the Treasury of the mother country.

The salary of a Clerk, and the rent of an Office, for His Majesty's Attorney General, commenced with the other allowances, and were equally authorized by the King by the tenor of His Commission also, the Attorney General is confirmed in all the profits and advantages enjoyed by his predecessors. I must express my regret that this Officer, whose duties and emoluments are those most particularly objected against in your address, should be absent at this time from the Province, in the performance of a public service, with the nature of which the House of Assembly is not unacquainted.

No augmentation whatever in the scale of salaries and allowances to the Officers and Clerks of the different departments of the Executive Government has taken place since a portion of those charges has been assumed by the Colonial Legislature.—The reduction of the scale of 1793, would necessarily have the effect of placing many respectable men long exercised in the faithful discharge of public duties in the situation of struggling against actual penury, with the gloomy prospect of starting in old age, and it would I am persuaded, prove in the event, an economy not less detrimental to the public, than unjust to the individual.

You may be assured, however, I shall not fail to institute a careful enquiry on all the subjects adverted to in your address, and any reduction that can with propriety be made in the expenses of the administration of justice, or in any other branch of the public expenditure; I shall be found, as I always have been ready, either to adopt or to recommend, when the case requires it, to His Majesty's gracious consideration.

Mr. Nichol from the Committee on the amendments to the Dulong's Relief Bill reported meeting the Committee of conference.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, the amendment to the Bill for the relief of George Dulong, and others, were read a second time, and concurred in.

A Committee was then sent up to the Honorable the Legislative Council, to acquaint them of the same.

Mr. Boulton, master in Chancery brought down from the Honorable the Legislative Council the District Attorney's Bill, with some amendments, and having withdrawn, the amendments were read.

On motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Casey, the amendments to the District Attorney's Bill were ordered to be read a second time, that day three months.

Adjourned.

MONDAY, 17th March, 1823.

Mr. Boulton Master in Chancery brought down from the Honorable the Legislative Council, the Bill granting to Daniel Hayes a Patent for a punch boiling machine, with some amendments, and having withdrawn, the amendments were read.

On motion of Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, the amendments were read a second time and adopted.

Information was then sent to the Honorable the Legislative Council of the same.

Mr. Burwell from the Committee to wait upon His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, with the address relative to Public Accounts, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency had been pleased thereto, to make the following reply:

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I little thought, that any thing would happen during the course of this Session, that could possibly disturb the good understanding which prevailed between me and this branch of the Legislature.

It is therefore, with great concern that I have attended to the address, in which there is matter of such a nature, and effect, with respect to my Government, as makes it necessary for me to animadvert thereupon in the most decided manner. I would not willingly suppose that you have apprehended me with the deliberate intention of misrepresenting my administration, but how have shall I account for your address, that such confusion and perplexity exists in my manner of accounting for the application of your Supplies, that you are compelled to return to your constituents without being able to give them any other reason for having the Public money, than the pleasure of the Executive; and that such is the want of details, that you have not the opportunity of enquiring into any improper or extraordinary expenditure; the state of things, which you have thus described, can proceed from nothing short of the will, or utter incompetency when the misrepresentations of individuals exceed certain bounds, the law provides a remedy, and protects the public peace.

On the present occasion, my appeal must be addressed to the honor of this House, and the particular conscience of each and every one of its members. But if the matter which you have just pronounced, is to be considered as proceeding from mature reflection, how will you explain to your constituents the fact of your having just unanimously voted the Supply?—Will you attribute it to your feeling for the necessities of the public service?—I am answerable for the public service, at this time, as well as you must be answerable to me. You must be sensible, while you thus complain of the confusion and perplexity of the public accounts, that they are given to you in the same shape that has been satisfactory to this Legislature for more than thirty years: nor can any one of you be possibly ignorant, that an account in detail is rendered each Session to your House for every service that has been defrayed from your supply, not a fraction of which has been expended that has not been as duly accounted for—I attest the printed copies of the Public Accounts, published by your order, to place this matter beyond all doubt.

In order that you might be thoroughly informed, the usual accounts were laid before you soon after the opening of the Session; had they equalled in volume those of the Parent State, you might undoubtedly have been masters of them before you voted the supply. No despatch was required of you; they were not recommended, as is frequently the case, to your early attention; the public service would have been put to no inconvenience whatever by your doubling the period for examination, if you thought it necessary; and no explanation respecting the application of your supply has ever been solicited of me in vain.

But if your object has been, as your address, in part, appears to imply, to obtain a control over those means which by the British enactments that establish our constitution vested with the Lords of His Majesty's Treasury in behalf of the King, it would have been manly and candid to have applied for them in distinct terms, and you would have found me authorized to express my Sovereign's pleasure on that subject. I must add, that any information solicited from me by courtesy, and not as a matter of right, even with respect to these documents has never been refused; they have been occasionally placed in the hands of members of your House of Committees; and has never been the rule of my Government, nor is it congenial with my disposition; but be assured I will never compromise the rights of my Sovereign, in order to avoid the pain of contending against unmerited misrepresentations.

I trust that I shall always be found as ready to consult and protect the just rights and interests of this loyal people, as any branch of this Legislature; if, therefore, you are not conscientiously satisfied with your investigation of the public accounts, I earnestly recommend that you should revise them. The Bill of Supply, although it has passed two branches of the Legislature, has not yet been confirmed by the Royal Assent. I can yet afford you the opportunity of recalling those members who returned into their own Counties, after your unanimous vote of Supply, impressed with the belief that the important business of the Session was concluded, and before this address was brought forward: I notice this in justice to your House. Should you consider it desirable to adopt the measure I have suggested, you will find me still ready to afford you in the prosecution of it, every light and assistance which you can with propriety require.

Poetry.

We extract the Indian War-Song below from an American Paper, not merely because it has considerable merit in itself; but, as being one of the best resemblances we have seen of the spirit and literal sense of the War Song so common amongst all the tribes and families of the Chippawayans over a country of several thousand miles in extent.

Ed.

For an American Paper.

The following lines were suggested by some observations made on a party of Passamaquoddy Indians, who were lately in our village. They seem to have [illegible] are, I think, rather stupid than otherwise. I asked one of them if he could sing the war song—which he did, though not with much spirit. They have a superstitious belief that sometimes before a war between two tribes, they can hear this song, when sung as the signal of its commencement, at the distance of several hundred miles. They also suppose that those who thus hear it, will gain the victory. It seems to be only an air, and is sung with a slur, and changing turn of voice, in some such sounds as are given in the chorus.

WAR SONG.

The Cal'met is Broken,
The Whampum is stained:
The cup of our friendship
Is empty and drained—
Hu, aw, la,—hu, aw, la—kee aw.

The war din is sounding,
The hatchet is keen:
The peace tree is falling,
And fading is green—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

The spirit that soothed us,
Its high top has flown:
Its leaves are all scattered,
Its branches all hewn—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

The strong bow is bended,
The battle blade bared:
The death fires are lighted,
The victims prepared—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

Fair suns to our kindred,
Spring groves to our friends;
To foes blood and torture,
And hate that ne'er ends—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

The demon is stalking,
The march is begun,
That ne'er shall be slacked,
Till red rivers run—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

The battle is joining,
The war whoop has broke:
And brave men are falling,
For brave men have struck—
Hu, aw, la, &c.

Our fathers are o'er us,
In dances and glee,
And we will dance with them,
Or shout "Victory."
Hu, aw, la, &c.

APPOINTMENTS.

Government House, July 9th, 1823.

His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to make the following appointments:—viz.

Thomas Taylor, Esquire, Reporter to the Court of King's Bench.

John M'Donell, Esquire, to be a Member of the Board of Education for the Ottawa District.

George H. Reade, Esquire, to be a Member of the Land Board, for the District of Bathurst.

Notice is hereby given, by order of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in Council; that unless Andrew Miller, the original Locatee of the Western Quarter of Lot number fifteen, in the fifth Concession of the Township of Ernestown, in the Midland District, or his representative, do shew cause within six months why the Location should not be rescinded, it will be granted to Mary Robertson, wife of John Robertson, of Ernestown, aforesaid.

JOHN BERKIE,
4-6m. Deputy Clerk Executive Council.

Whereas by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General to all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1823.

Whereas it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

Be it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

Whereas it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the location, at the reduced Scale of 8th January, 1820, viz.:

A Township North of Matilpaul, advertised from the Surveyor General's Office on the 19th of October, as Zeus, to be called Elton

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on the twenty-third day of June instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—Greeting:

Whereas, by our Proclamation bearing date the fourteenth day of May last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 23rd day of June instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed Witness our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K.C.B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this eighteenth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three and in the fourth year of our Reign.

THE FIRST PROSPECTUS OF A NEW WORK
TO BE ENTITLED
THE

Canadian Annual Register;

OR,
A VIEW
OF THE

History, Politics, Literature, and Growth

OF THE

CANADAS,

IN ALL THAT CONSTITUTES THE WEALTH OF NATIONS.

TO BE CONDUCTED AND PUBLISHED ANNUALLY,
BY CHARLES FOTHERGILL.

His Majesty's Printer in U. C.

THE lapse of sixty-five years since the commencement of DODSLEY'S Annual Register in England has shewn the vast importance, and increasing value of that great work;—a work which has become an authority of the highest respectability and consideration on every subject connected with English History (indeed one may say with the History of Europe.) since the period of its commencement;—and, if there be any cause of regret, it is that such an undertaking was not begun at an earlier period.

The number of editions which that work has passed through,—the high price it bears,—and the fact that no library is considered at all complete without it, sufficiently proves its great value and utility.—It forms, indeed, no inconsiderable library in itself; and, if a man had no other book, exclusive of his Bible, he could never want either amusement or instruction.

It is impossible but that a similar work, though it might be conducted with no more than mediocral ability, would prove of equal value and importance to other countries; and particularly to those in a state of comparative infancy—CANADA, especially, presents a fine field for such an undertaking—all that is known, or ever can be known, of its early history may be comprised in little more than an hundred pages; after which, by a similarity of plan with that adopted in the Annual Register of England, all the transactions, events, discoveries, and improvements of each year, worthy of preservation, may be given to the public at a very moderate expense,—less than the cost of the mean-

[illegible] annual work would gradually form a library, which would contain every thing interesting, or having any reference to the NATURAL and CIVIL HISTORY of the COUNTRY, and becoming a book of such important reference as all the other books in the world, put together, could not supply.

Besides the more serious business of the State, which must necessarily occupy a large portion of the pages of such a work; now, that Newspapers and Magazines are generally conducted by men of respectable talents and attainments, it must occur to readers of every class, that articles of great interest and utility are continually occurring in those periodical publications, which deserve a more lasting record;—such a record is found in an Annual Register on the plan proposed, at a price considerably less than that of any respectable Newspaper, taken singly.—This Work will contain all that is considered worth preserving in the various Newspapers, Magazines, and other Miscellaneous Publications, both of the old and new world.

That such of the readers of this Prospectus as are unacquainted with the plan of DODSLEY'S Annual Register, (which, with some alterations, additions, and improvements will be pursued in the present undertaking,) may form some judgment of its merits, we shall now proceed without further preface to give an outline of the

CANADIAN ANNUAL REGISTER.

SECTION I.

Will contain the ANCIENT HISTORY and ANNALS of the COUNTRY from its DISCOVERY to these TIMES.

SECT. II.

GENERAL POLITICS, and present situation of the BRITISH PROVINCES of NORTH AMERICA.—In time of war, this department of the work will be occupied with the details of that war.

SECT. III

The CHRONICLE, comprehending a narrative, chronologically arranged, of every domestic incident, of the smallest interest to the public, which may have occurred during the year in any part of the British Provinces; but, more especially in the two Canadas. No event, or accident, of any importance, whatever may be its nature, will be omitted in this department.

SECT. IV.

The APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE will contain Marriages, Births, Deaths, Promotions, Removals, &c. &c. &c. with average prices of Provisions, and articles of domestic growth for exportation—state of markets—shipping lists—arrivals—departures, &c. increase or decrease of foreign trade—abstracts of population—revenue, &c. &c. &c.

SECT. V.

PARLIAMENTARY REGISTER; containing a complete History of the proceedings of the Parliament of both Provinces, with the Speeches, Resolutions, &c. &c. and Lists, with the titles of the Acts passed during the session.

SECT VI.

STATE PAPERS.—Proclamations; Orders of Council; Memorials; Petitions; Manifestos; Correspondencies; Acts and Debates of the Imperial Parliament, having any reference to this country, &c. &c.

SECT. VII.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES of EXTRAORDINARY CHARACTERS connected with CANADA.

SECT. VIII.

NATURAL HISTORY; containing, not only the New Discoveries made in various parts of this vast continent; but, also, such extracts from new and valuable Books of Travels as describe, or have particular reference to any part of it.

SECT. IX.

AGRICULTURE.—This important section will contain Notices and Details of every foreign practice and discovery that may be of the slightest utility here.

SECT. X.

USEFUL PROJECTS.—New Pieces of Mechanism; Implements; Experiments; Inventions; Patents, &c. &c.

SECT. XI.

ANTIQUITIES, will contain such Details and Discoveries as tend to throw light upon the Ancient History of the Country.

SECT XII.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS—or such Original Productions contained in the more ephemeral publications of the day, week, or month, as may be worth preserving.

SECT. XIII.

POETRY, to be confined as much as possible to Original Productions, and great care will be observed in the selections.

SECT. XIV.

Account of Books, and other new publications having reference to the country.

Should any important changes occur in Europe, at all likely to affect this country, they will be also noticed under a suitable head.

As it is presumed that the work, even if conducted with no more than moderate skill and industry, will gradually become a standard book in this quarter of the world, it is unnecessary to have recourse to any of those arts which are commonly practised by the Booksellers and Reviewers in Europe to puff off their new publications. It is hoped this simple sketch of the design, and the manner in which the first volume (for the present year) will be got up, will be sufficient to obtain that patronage which is so necessary to the support of such an undertaking. If this work is encouraged, it will gradually become of vast importance to public men in every profession, as a book of reference, and in process of time will, in itself, contain an immense body of Canadian History, such as no other book or books could afford. Had such a work been commenced in England soon after the gloom of the middle ages began to disperse, instead of the year 1758—its value would have been now beyond all price.

It being necessary to insure the sale of at least 300 copies before the work is put to press; this Prospectus as thus early published, in order to ascertain the degree of patronage it is likely to obtain. The price to subscribers will be $3½—to non subscribers, $4—printed on fine English paper, and handsomely done up in boards, and lettered.—No payment will be required, or desired, until the work is delivered—but an early intimation of the name and address of subscribers is earnestly requested, either at the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or at any of the various Agents for the Weekly Register.

KINGSTON BANK NOTES,

Are purchased at a liberal price by Mr Thomas Mosley, A. & B. York.

NOTICE.

APPLICATION will be made to the Legislature of this Province, at its next meeting, to divide the County of Halton, in the District of Gore.

25th June, 1823.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 29.

THURSDAY, JULY 17, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

A document of great importance was brought to us by the last arrivals from the Lower Province. This is the regular return of the population of Lower Canada for the year 1822, published in the Quebec Gazette—It has been obtained through the medium of the Clergy, at the instance of Government, and is therefore of an official character, and as perfect as such a statement can well be—This return has given rise to many serious and interesting reflections, at least in our mind, and we deeply lament the impossibility of embodying in language what we feel on the subject, in a form so compact as to be fitted for the columns of a Newspaper. However, we shall seize some other opportunity for an essay of the kind we would intimate; in the mean while we shall content ourselves with a brief notice of the suggestions most obtrusive at the present moment.

The first emotion was that of astonishment and disappointment on finding, after every exertion had been made to swell out the list of souls, and even with the enlistment of several Indian villages, that the Grand Total (including estimates.) was no more than 364,646 inhabitants—We could not have anticipated so small a result!—It is now manifest that our own population, (of U C.) in spite of all impediments, is increasing in a ratio far more considerable and rapid;—and, as this Province is in debt, and has an immediate call for a large sum of money for the payment of Sufferers during the late War, our Financiers would do well to apply themselves to the consideration of the fact, which has been long suspected, but which is now fully apparent—that we have been shamefully enjoled, tricked, injured, and imposed upon, in respect of the share of the import duties justly due to this Province—If a scale of the comparative population of the two Provinces, which at first sight seems fair enough, is to be the guide of the respective shares of the import duties—we are, at this moment, fully entitled to 1-3d instead of 1 5th of those duties, which have not only been most unwillingly acceded, but which have been actually withheld.—We are inclined to go further, and assert (what we think we should have but little difficulty in proving) that we are, in the strictness of justice entitled to one half, by the very scale which has been determined upon as the rule of decision in this case—In a short time we shall be prepared to prove—taking this Quebec return to be a correct one for the Lower Province—that our population, in the actual consumption, directly or indirectly, of imported articles, is nearer 200,000 souls than the population of L. C. is to 400 000!

We wish those gentlemen, (and they are sufficiently numerous in the Province,) who have been so desirous of burthening our Statute Book with new and unnecessary enactments, destructive of the innocent amusements and liberties of the subject, to consider the peaceable and inoffensive manner in which the 12th of July, or Orange Anniversary, was celebrated in York—Nothing like disturbance, riot, outrage or breach of the peace occurred; unless a body of from 3 to 400 persons going in procession to Church—then hearing an excellent sermon from the Hon. and Revd Dr. Strachan—and, afterwards dining together, and passing the remainder of the day in joyful conviviality, talking over the days of "auld lang syne," can be considered disturbance, riot, and outrage; and calling especially for the interference of the Legislature, and the strong arm of the law to put it down!!—We repeat, we are no party-men, but we venerate the constitution of our country, and have a natural dread of coercive power unnecessarily extended.

Our limits are quite too narrow to allow us to give the sort of answer we could wish to return Capt. MATTHEWS, for his communication from Lobo. We doubt not the rascality of his neighborhood:—but we entertain many doubts that the Honorable Commissioners could be imposed upon to any material extent. They are men generally well acquainted with the operations of the war; and they have, in their Secretary, a gentleman of the law, of great talents and professional skill whom it would be excessively difficult to impose upon.—Besides, there is a wide column reserved in the Book of Record of Claims, for the details of evidence, which are well considered and weighed before the final decision is made.—As to the permanent tax spoken of, we must take another opportunity for discussing that point. In the mean time, we think that Captain MATTHEWS, for whom we entertain great respect, may rest assured that no serious imposition will be practised on the Commissioners.—We could not refuse the publication of Captain M's letter, because it may be the means of preventing improper applications being either offered or received.

The account of the celebration of the 12th of July, from the Loyal Orange Association arrived quite too late for insertion in this number.

No foreign news of particular importance this week.—It is every day more apparent that there will be no immediate interference in the quarrel between France and Spain, on the part of Russia, Prussia, or Austria; consequently, England remains, and is likely to remain, neuter.

PRUSSIA

The King of Prussia is represented to be in a state of great melancholy, which has led to the placing of the prince royal at the head of the ministry and the council of state. The king's disorder had reached so great a height, that all the members of his family, some of which were in the Netherlands, had collected at Berlin

HOLLAND

The Dutch Government, as a precautionary measure during the continuance of hostilities between France and Spain, had ordered a frigate another vessel of the royal navy, to be stationed in the downs, on the English coast, for the purpose of conveying merchantmen under the flag of the Netherlands, which may be stationed there, or may require protection to any of the ports of France and Spain.

FROM THE LEEDS INTELLIGENCER.

Astonishing accumulation of value from raw materials—There is no instance hitherto unnoticed in the annals of English industry, where, by the manufacturer, an article is raised in price from one half penny to the amount of thirty-five thousand guineas! This takes place in the making of watch springs, every one of which is sold for half a guinea, and weighs only the tenth of a grain; after deducting for waste, there are in a pound weight 7000 grains, it therefore affords steel for 70,000 watch springs, the value of which, at half a guinea each, is thirty-five thousand guineas

Extract of a letter from a respectable House in Belfast, March 4th.

"For some time past a manufacture has been carrying on here and in England to an amazing extent, in an article imitating Irish Linens, Lawns, &c. the warp of cotton, and the weft or filling, linen thread; when bleached, so great is the deception, that it can only be detected by trying the strength of the article from selvage to selvage, when it will be found to tear with ease, which is exactly the reverse of cloth composed entirely of flax. As the character of our staple may suffer by goods of the above description, I think it would be just to put dealers in the article of Irish Linens, on your side of the Atlantic, on their guard, to prevent their being imposed on."

A SINGULAR CASE. The Plymouth Journal says—"A young woman residing in Stonehouse, returning home with her brother, who carried in his hand an Indian barbed dart, dipped in poison, entangled it in her clothes, and in their endeavour to extricate it, unfortunately grazed her hand so slightly as not to be noticed at the time; after a few hours had elapsed, the last was discovered by the violent effects produced;—strong applications were immediately resorted to, and though it is some time since the accident occurred, she has not yet the use of her hand."

A blunder—A poor cavalier corporal being condemned to die wrote the following letter to his wife the day before he expected to suffer, thinking it would come to hand the day after his execution:

"Dear Wife—Hoping you are in good health, as I am at this present writing, this is to let you know, that yesterday, between the hours of eleven and twelve, I was hanged, drawn, and quartered. I died very penitently, and every body thought my case very hard. Remember me kindly to my poor litterless children.

Yours till death, W. B.

It so happened that this honest fellow was relieved by a party of his friends, and had the satisfaction to see all the rebels hanged, who had been his enemies. A circumstance must not be omitted, which exposed him to raillery his whole life after. Before the arrival of the next post, which would have set all things clear, as to the matter, a scrub of husband, who lived in the peaceable possession of her, and the corporal, who was a man of plain understanding, did not care to stir in the matter, as knowing that she had the news of his death under his own hand, which she might have produced upon occasion.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Treadwheel.—Mr Secretary Peel, in January last, addressed a circular to the visiting magistrates of the twenty divisions, and houses of correction, where the treadwheels have been established, "asking how long the treadwheel had been in operation, and whether they had found any injurious effects had been produced by it, on the bodies and legs of the prisoners who had worked thereon?" The replies of the magistrates were, that no injury of the sort was complained of; on the contrary, that the treadwheel conduced to health rather than otherwise. At Brixton it is stated by Harrison, the magistrate, that [illegible] the wheel a month, and who went to [illegible] with a rheumatic complaint, being asked how she felt when she went away, replied that her rheumatism was completely cured.

Time and trouble saved by the Clergy.—A clergyman residing in Somersetshire, wrote a letter to another in holy orders residing in Birmingham, proposing an exchange of forty sermons, which was immediately complied with to the mutual gratification of the Rev. Gentlemen.—London Paper.

Polygamy extraordinary.—A soldier, aged 25, was tried at Paris, during the French Revolution, for polygamy. He had married 26 wives, and had as many children. He was sentenced to a fortnight's imprisonment.

France.—Two French artists, MM. Bouton and Daguerre, have invented a new method of exhibiting scenes of painting, differing from the panorama, in that two separate objects are exhibited at the same time. It is called the Diorama, and the idea is borrowed from the panorama.—The scene is the interior of some grand building, or the view of some beautiful valley, which the observer sees from only one point of view. The spectator mounts a staircase, lighted by a single lamp, to render contrast more striking; he then enters a handsome room, and before him is a window look ing into the interior of a church; that at present exhibiting is the chapel of the Trinity, at Canterbury; the room then turns on a pivot, and the spectator is surprised at seeing before him the valley of Sornen, in Switzerland. The picture is placed at a fixed distance from the spectator, and is lighted from the sides as well as from above, while it is so contrived that the eye of the spectator shall be kept upon the picture, and gass over the space between without notice.—By this means the illusion is almost perfect, and the looker-on can scarcely imagine himself otherwise than looking at nature from a window. The management of the light displays great judgment, and upon that the deception in a great measure depends.

SPAIN.

REPORT OF A GREAT BATTLE IN SPAIN.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser, June 26.—By the arrival of the Brig Canton, from the north of Spain, we are furnished with the best intelligence from that country some days later than the advices before received. The only event of importance related, is that a French army had been defeated in the battle with General Mina with heavy loss. It is probable, therefore, that a battle has taken place, but from the nature of the information, which is very vague, and in some respects manifestly inaccurate, it is impossible to judge how important it may have been. As far as an opinion can be formed from the state of affairs as furnished by previous information from the state of affairs as furnished by previous information from the state of affairs as furnished by any decisive event has taken there is reason to doubt whether any decisive event has taken place. The particulars will be found in the following statement.

From the Merchants' Hall Reading Room Books.—The Canton arrived at St Andero, [or Santander, a town in the North of Spain, in the province of Burgos, and a hundred miles west from St. Sebastians,] 27th April, and Captain Imlson has favoured us with a Journal of events from that date to the day of his departure—some extracts from which follow:—April 27th, Gen. Longa entered St. Andero at the head of 300 militia. In opposition to the Constitution, and immediately pulled down the stone on which was inscribed "Long live the Constitution," and erected another in the same place, on which was engraved "Long live Ferdinand the VII." May 3—3000 French troops entered St. Andero, commanded by Gen. Dubois, on their march to Madrid May 5—the French left St. Andero, leaving the Spanish General, Longa, to keep out the Constitutionalists. At 10 o'clock at night, one of the Longa's spies brought intelligence that a party of the Constitutional troops were within six leagues of St. Andero. Longa, with all his men immediately embarked in boats and crossed the harbour to the opposite shore, leaving upwards of 100 stands of arms behind them. May 8—General Longa and all his men entered the town again, who were supported by 1500 French troops in their rear.

May 10th—the French troops entered the town, consisting of 1500 men, and at 6, P. M. left it again for St. Antonio, or Santona, to attack that place, in co operation with a French squadron which was blockading it. St. Antonio is about six leagues east of St. Andero, and is very strongly fortified. The garrison consists of 3000 constitutional troops, commanded by good officers, all of which have sworn never to surrender. The squadron blockading St. Sebastians are two frigates, one corvette, and three brigs of war.

May 20.—By this day's post, the defeat of the French was confirmed—the battle was fought within a few leagues of Catalonia (in Catalonia). The two armies amounted to 20,000 men each—the loss of the French is stated to have been 5000 men, that of the Constitutionalists army, 3500. May 22 — [illegible] from the garrison of St. Andero, [illegible] French detachment was captured by about 200 men, with from 4 to 500 mules, laden with stores and ammunition of various kinds, with 1000 dols. in money, all intended for the French army, which they supposed to be besieging that place May 24.—At 9 A. M. the officers of the custom-house, and all the people of the town that are in opposition to the Constitution, left St Andero and crossed the harbor to the opposite shore.

This flight was occasioned by a report that 400 Constitutional troops were within two leagues of St Andero—at 4, P. M the Canton left the harbor of St Andero—at 6, saw the French squadron to leeward. The Canton was 32 days at St. Andero, during that time the town was left four times at the Governor's, and not a single person to transact any kind of business in the custom-house All the Spanish vessels in the harbor were obliged to put on shore their fire arms; those of the Canton were also demanded, but not given up.

In addition to the foregoing, we learn verbally from Captain Imlay that he saw a copy of the official account of the battle mentioned under date of the 20th May, which represented the French to have been completely defeated The Spanish forces were commanded by Gen. [illegible] The greatest enthusiasm prevailed at St. Andero and in the neighborhood [illegible] and even the females volunteered their services to the Constitutional army in defence of their country.

[illegible]—Seville, May 11.

"It is more than a month since the French passed the Bidassoa, and as yet nothing has happened which we had not foreseen; but on the contrary, they have done much less than they thought they should. Thus far, then, Spain has no reason to repent of her resolution; while the French Government must have felt very strong to take so precipitated a step.

"If we have believed their threats, we should have expected by this time to have found them masters of the capital, and the greater part of the provinces separated from the general government All this was to be the work of a few days. Their march to Madrid was to be a triumphal entry; deputies were to arrive from all the Provinces; and 'the faction' was to be instantly overthrown.

"The towns they pass through remain passive, our soldiers are zealous and brave, and Spain has increased her moral and physical force threefold in one month; and every day the French are suffering loss—Spaniards! be constant, and the victory is ours!"

The following intelligence, by the way of Bayonne, gives a strong indication of the general state and feeling of Spain; and augurs very favorably for a successful issue of the contest.

Bayonne, 11th May.—Private Correspondence.—We learn from travellers that the constitutions government has forbidden any intercourse, dated from the 1st instant, with the parts of Spain occupied by the French. It is true, as we have stated, that the greater part of the families at all easy in their circumstances, fly at our approach Segovia was evacuated five days ago. Expecting some field pieces, which the scholars of the artillery school carried off to Rodrigo, all the materials was abandoned for want of means of transportation to Madrid is almost deserted. Every body is retiring to the Andalusias.—The roads are encumbered with emigrants carrying off their most valuable effects. There is, however, no defection among the troops, and the bands of the faith do not increase The occupation of the capital was foreseen, and no one appears alarmed at the thought the necessity of escorting the convoys is already felt, as certain information has been received of the formation of several guerilla corps in the provinces. We know that the prisoners to the number of 60, made at the affair of Logrono, have arrived at Vittoria. The efforts, however, to incorporate them with the bands of the faith proved unavailing, all refused, declaring with the greatest energy, that they preferred to be shot

Anecdotes.

Anecdote of the Lord Chancellor.—In no profession are the [illegible] instances of the rewards of talent and perseverance than in the law; and it is well that it is so, or it would be difficult, perhaps, for one host of adventurers to bear up in hope. Does a young man doubt of ultimate success, as he contemplates the host of competitors he has to contend with in the race?—then he turns to the legal authority, and finds consolation Does he fear that his fortune will not hold out till he meets with a return?—then he casts his troubled eye along the living bench, and there he again finds consolation and hope. The present Lord Chancellor Eldon is well known for having borne up against adverse fortune, and persevered to the end—and his Lordship tells with pleasure of the difficulties with which in his early days he was surrounded, and over which he triumphed. We give an account of his early success, as he related himself at the table, to a friend:—"Yes," says the Chancellor, "and I borrowed thirty pounds to go to the northern circuit, but I got no briefs. And, sir, I borrowed another thirty, and went with no return.—After some time as this game, I had determined to borrow no more—when I was prevailed on by a friend to try again, and I did so. At York I had a junior brief, and Davenport, then a leading counsel on the circuit, was retained on the opposite side. The cause was called on in the morning, and Davenport was engaged in the Crown Court I, 'says the Chancellor,' begged the Judge to postpone it; but he replied, 'You lead me, Mr. Scott,' and I did so; it was an action for an assault—two Yorkshire ladies had quarrelled at cards, a scuffle ensued, and one of them was turned off her chair to the ground; this was the nature of the assault. It happened, proceeds the Chancellor, 'that I set the Court into a roar of laughter, and succeeded for my client; retainers began to flow in, and the prospect brightened the proceedings in Carlisle, a fortunate circumstance occurred;—I had retired early to bed the night before the Assizes, when I was aroused by a knock at my door. On getting up; I found Mr. ——, the solicitor, he observed to the party, that he thought it large enough for both of them to lie in, and signified a wish to be buried in the same grave. This not being objected to, he placed himself in a standing position over the grave, with his arms stretched out, and gave the signal to fire, when the brother of the deceased Indian placed a rifle at his breast and discharged its contents through his heart. He dropped into the grave and instantly expired.—Gazette.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

I observe from your last papers, that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor has appointed a Commission to investigate, or rather to re-investigate, the claims of sufferers during the late war in this Province. I observe also, that the Commissioners, so appointed, have addressed those sufferers on that subject. Now, Sir, if I understand the case rightly, a sum of money is to be borrowed for the liquidation of a part only of those claims; and that the interest of that money, so borrowed, and so to be paid, is to be collected in form of a tax, or taxes, of some sort or other, to be levied on the inhabitants, and their successors in this Province for ever; forming, in fact, the foundation of a National or Provincial Debt; this, considering the difficulties and distresses which attend the present amount of taxation, and looking to the dreadful results of a similar system in our Parent Country, is a consideration not to be passed over lightly; but, admitting that the sufferers ought to be paid, and that they ought to be paid by a general contribution of those in whose cause, and in the defence of whose property they have suffered, still another very important consideration and objection arises, which I think the system proposed ill calculated to remove. Sir, I have reason to believe that I live in the neighbourhood of [illegible] A most vicious and unprincipled society which this province can produce; it would make me miserable to believe that such scenes of depravity as I have witnessed can be common in other parts of the Province; I, however, have no hesitation in the expression of my firm belief, that altho' I was not an inhabitant thereof during any period of the late war or had the smallest interest in it, that I nevertheless, with the assistance of a little coaxing and familiarity, and a little whiskey, could obtain certificates, and even (if I had the honor to be a magistrate) affidavits, of considerable losses that I sustained during its ravages.—That there are persons sufficiently unprincipled to do this, and that impositions equally gross have been, and will again be, attempted, I have reason to believe—and to what, Sir, does this lead? Why, that as a certain proportion only of these claims can be paid, every successful attempt of that nature, not only robs the first claimant of his fair proportion of what is due to him, but is a robbery of the government also; and a tax for ever levied on the inhabitants of this Province, to reward rascality and imposture. The object, therefore, of this letter is to obtain, if possible, through the medium of your valuable Paper, a general statement or knowledge of the claims made, before they are ultimately paid, or granted; and if this system were adopted, I am persuaded that it would have a tendency to put [illegible] to excess the dreadful evil of which I complain, and to ensure comparative justice and indemnification to those who are best entitled to it.

I am, Sir, Yours, &c.

TOBACCO.

(From the Montreal Gazette.)

The culture of Tobacco is a subject which has of late very much occupied the attention of the Agriculturists in the Western Districts of Upper Canada. At a period when agricultural produce in general is reduced to so low a value, and in a country whose foreign and domestic markets for such produce are so unsettled, so distant, and so precarious, we know not an object more highly deserving of encouragement than the rearing of an article, the universal use of which must ever secure to it a remuneration adequate, at least, to the expense of its culture and exportation. Indeed, so far as the truth of this observation forced itself upon the minds of the farmers of Upper Canada, that many of them have already spared neither pains nor expense to arrive at a state of more perfect acquaintance with the cultivation of Tobacco; and the first fruits of their industrious perseverence was the importation last year into this city of upwards of a hundred casks of Tobacco. It is this year expected, not only that this quantity will be doubled, but that a very large exportation will be made to Europe. It would be unpardonable to expect that the quality of so large a lot of Tobacco thus for the first time brought into one market for immediate consumption would reach in general to a competition with what had been brought from more favoured climates and through the hands of more experienced manufacturers; yet we are informed, upon very respectable authority, that much of what was sold in Montreal was fully of as good a quality as that which is imported from Europe or the United States—and, what is more to the purpose, fetched the very same price. This then, by a use and perseverving industry, is opened up to the agricultural community of these provinces, a path to the attainment of sure markets, and a liberal remuneration for a portion, at least, of the produce of the soil; and, from all the information which we have been able to collect upon this important subject, we will not hesitate to say, that it will wholly be their own faults, if, from the careful cultivation of the Tobacco leaf, they do not reap advantages as great as they will be permanent. Nor does it appear that one part of this country, either in soil or climate, is much less adapted for the growth of this plant than another; for though it may be true that the small and detached plots of Tobacco that are raised through out this province, and part of Upper Canada, have hitherto failed in the attainment of that flavour, taste, and fineness which are applicable to Virginian Tobacco, yet we are assured that a little more care and attention to the culture would accomplish a rivalship with the produce of that state far from being, either despicable or discouraging. Would it not, then, be a most desirable and prudent thing in the landed interests of these provinces to give all the encouragement in their power to the growth of a commodity so much and constantly in demand in the European Markets as to afford a most remunerating price, notwithstanding the high duty imposed in British ports upon its importation? These duties, indeed, are the only obstacles that we can at present see in the way to a complete attainment of our most sanguine expectations relative to a more general cultivation of Tobacco in this country, and to the immense source of commercial enterprise which must consequently be added to our local prosperity. But this is a consideration which we think should not in the smallest degree, interfere with the resolutions of our more spirited agriculturists in the improvement of their resources, nor deter them from adopting any method for the acquirement of a more thorough knowledge in the practical means of attaining an object, in our opinion, far more valuable than it is possible for us at present even to conjecture. In this country, Tobacco had never before now been cultivated as a commodity for exportation, and the limited scale on which it was raised for private use, could only go the length of convincing a judicious observer, that it was a plant at one indigenous to our soil and climate, and the source from whence must one day be derived both individual wealth and general agricultural improvement. Now, however, that the spirited attempt has been made to introduce its cultivation to a more extended scale, and that that attempt has been crowned with unqualified success, it is neither difficult nor unnatural to suppose, that the British Government will when applied to, make great advances in facilitating the obstacles with which the cultivation as well as the exportation of Tobacco, is at present surrounded.

From the 29th of George III. Cap. 66, it appears that no distinction was drawn betwixt the duties imposed upon Tobacco imported into Great Britain from foreign states, and that imported of the growth of His Majesty's Colonies or plantations; for by the second section of that law it is enacted that, "For every pound weight of Tobacco of the growth or produce of Ireland, or the growth or production of His Majesty's Colonies, plantations, islands, or territories in America, or of the United States of America, imported into Great Britain, there shall be paid a Custom duty of sixpence; and also an Excise duty of ninepence." Now, though it may be acknowledged, that at the period of passing this act—which it is almost unnecessary to add is still in force—no circumstances existed sufficient to justify any distinction in the import duties favourable to the British Colonies or plantations, yet it cannot fail to be anticipated, that the moment the British American Provinces shall appear in the English market with a proportionable quantity of Tobacco, some considerable deductions will be made in the importation duties, and many other privileges secured to them, in respect to this trade, at least as the urgency of their present circumstances demands, and a more extensive cultivation of Tobacco would most unquestionably justify. The expectation should not be forgotten or dispaired of. Every individual in the two Provinces is intimately concerned in its realization; and our Provincial Boards of Trade—as taking upon themselves the management of all matters relating to the public interests of commerce, should lose no time in stating to the Imperial Government the prospects which a more extensive cultivation of Tobacco is about to open up to the country, and in demanding that encouragement and security to the trade which we have no doubt the wisdom and liberality of His Majesty's Ministers will be glad to cherish and advance.

Having ventured to say so much upon a subject which must be interesting to all our readers, we deem it not improper to close our remarks with a brief historical account of Tobacco, with the nature of the soil to which it is indigenous, and the sort of culture which is necessary to bring it to that maturity which alone can render it of general utility.

INDIAN MANNERS.

Arkansas, April 29.

The following facts, in relation to the murder of an Indian, and the subsequent execution of the murderer, which took place in Miller County, some time last month, were related to us by several respectable gentlemen, who have recently returned from that county.

A Choctaw Indian, calling himself Doctor Sibley, and belonging to a wandering tribe of that nation, who have resided in the neighbourhood of Red River for some years past, while in a state of intoxication, murdered another Indian in the heart, who immediately expired. After the murder, a brother of the deceased Indian came to Sibley, and told him that he must have revenge for the death of his brother, by taking his (Sibley's) life. To this proposal Sibley readily assented, and proposed that his execution should take place on the following morning, which was also assented to by the other party. In the mean time Sibley was kept under no restraint whatever, but was permitted his freedom as usual, without showing the least disposition to make his escape. When the morning arrived on which he was to suffer death, Sibley went out with the rest of the party, and aided in digging a grave for the deceased Indian. After it was finished, he observed to the party, that he thought it large enough for both of them to lie in, and signified a wish to be buried in the same grave. This not being objected to, he placed himself in a standing position over the grave, with his arms stretched out, and gave the signal to fire, when the brother of the deceased Indian placed a rifle at his breast and discharged its contents through his heart. Indeed, so far as the truth of this observation forced itself upon the minds of the farmers of Upper Canada, that many of them have already spared neither pains nor expense to arrive at a state of more perfect acquaintance with the cultivation of Tobacco; and the first fruits of their industrious perseverence was the importation last year into this city of upwards of a hundred casks of Tobacco. It is this year expected, not only that this quantity will be doubled, but that a very large exportation will be made to Europe. It would be unpardonable to expect that the quality of so large a lot of Tobacco thus for the first time brought into one market for immediate consumption would reach in general to a competition with what had been brought from more favoured climates and through the hands of more experienced manufacturers; yet we are informed, upon very respectable authority, that much of what was sold in Montreal was fully of as good a quality as that which is imported from Europe or the United States—and, what is more to the purpose, fetched the very same price. This then, by a use and perseverving industry, is opened up to the agricultural community of these provinces, a path to the attainment of sure markets, and a liberal remuneration for a portion, at least, of the produce of the soil; and, from all the information which we have been able to collect upon this important subject, we will not hesitate to say, that it will wholly be their own faults, if, from the careful cultivation of the Tobacco leaf, they do not reap advantages as great as they will be permanent. Nor does it appear that one part of this country, either in soil or climate, is much less adapted for the growth of this plant than another; for though it may be true that the small and detached plots of Tobacco that are raised through out this province, and part of Upper Canada, have hitherto failed in the attainment of that flavour, taste, and fineness which are applicable to Virginian Tobacco, yet we are assured that a little more care and attention to the culture would accomplish a rivalship with the produce of that state far from being, either despicable or discouraging. Would it not, then, be a most desirable and prudent thing in the landed interests of these provinces to give all the encouragement in their power to the growth of a commodity so much and constantly in demand in the European Markets as to afford a most remunerating price, notwithstanding the high duty imposed in British ports upon its importation? These duties, indeed, are the only obstacles that we can at present see in the way to a complete attainment of our most sanguine expectations relative to a more general cultivation of Tobacco in this country, and to the immense source of commercial enterprise which must consequently be added to our local prosperity. But this is a consideration which we think should not in the smallest degree, interfere with the resolutions of our more spirited agriculturists in the improvement of their resources, nor deter them from adopting any method for the acquirement of a more thorough knowledge in the practical means of attaining an object, in our opinion, far more valuable than it is possible for us at present even to conjecture. In this country, Tobacco had never before now been cultivated as a commodity for exportation, and the limited scale on which it was raised for private use, could only go the length of convincing a judicious observer, that it was a plant at one indigenous to our soil and climate, and the source from whence must one day be derived both individual wealth and general agricultural improvement. Now, however, that the spirited attempt has been made to introduce its cultivation to a more extended scale, and that that attempt has been crowned with unqualified success, it is neither difficult nor unnatural to suppose, that the British Government will when applied to, make great advances in facilitating the obstacles with which the cultivation as well as the exportation of Tobacco, is at present surrounded.

From the 29th of George III. Cap. 66, it appears that no distinction was drawn betwixt the duties imposed upon Tobacco imported into Great Britain from foreign states, and that imported of the growth of His Majesty's Colonies or plantations; for by the second section of that law it is enacted that, "For every pound weight of Tobacco of the growth or produce of Ireland, or the growth or production of His Majesty's Colonies, plantations, islands, or territories in America, or of the United States of America, imported into Great Britain, there shall be paid a Custom duty of sixpence; and also an Excise duty of ninepence." Now, though it may be acknowledged, that at the period of passing this act—which it is almost unnecessary to add is still in force—no circumstances existed sufficient to justify any distinction in the import duties favourable to the British Colonies or plantations, yet it cannot fail to be anticipated, that the moment the British American Provinces shall appear in the English market with a proportionable quantity of Tobacco, some considerable deductions will be made in the importation duties, and many other privileges secured to them, in respect to this trade, at least as the urgency of their present circumstances demands, and a more extensive cultivation of Tobacco would most unquestionably justify. The expectation should not be forgotten or dispaired of. Every individual in the two Provinces is intimately concerned in its realization; and our Provincial Boards of Trade—as taking upon themselves the management of all matters relating to the public interests of commerce, should lose no time in stating to the Imperial Government the prospects which a more extensive cultivation of Tobacco is about to open up to the country, and in demanding that encouragement and security to the trade which we have no doubt the wisdom and liberality of His Majesty's Ministers will be glad to cherish and advance.

Having ventured to say so much upon a subject which must be interesting to all our readers, we deem it not improper to close our remarks with a brief historical account of Tobacco, with the nature of the soil to which it is indigenous, and the sort of culture which is necessary to bring it to that maturity which alone can render it of general utility.

INDEX AT FRONT.

The name given to Tobacco in botany is Nicotiana.—Of this there are seven species, of which the most remarkable is the tobacum, or common tobacco-plant. This was first discovered in America by the Spaniards, about the year 1560, and by them imported into Europe. It had been used by the inhabitants of America long before; and was called by those of the islands yoti, and petun by the inhabitants of the continent. It was sent into Spain from Tobago, a province of Yucatan, whence it takes its common name. Sir Walter Raleigh is generally said to have been the first that introduced it into England about the year 1585, and who taught his countrymen how to smoke it. Dr. Cotton Mather, however, says, that in the above year our Mr. Lane carried over some of it from Virginia, which was the first that had ever been seen in Europe. Tobacco is commonly used among the oriental nations, though it was uncertain by whom it was introduced among them. Considerable quantities of it are cultivated in the Levant, on the coasts of Greece, and the Archipelago, in Italy, and in the Island of Malta. There are two varieties of the species to which we have alluded, and which are distinguished by the names of Oronokoe, and sweet scented tobacco. They differ from each other only in the figure of their leaves; those of the former being longer and narrower than the latter—Mr. Carver informs us, that the Oronokoe, or, as it is called, the long Virginian tobacco, is the kind best suited for bearing the rigour of a northern climate, like ours, the strength as well as the scent of the leaves being greater than that of the other. The sweet scented sort flourishes most in sandy soil, and in a warm climate, where it greatly exceeds the former in the celerity of its growth; and it is likewise, as its name intimates, much more mild and pleasant.

Tobacco thrives best in a warm, kindly, rich soil, that is not subject to be over-run with weeds. In Virginia, the soil in which it thrives best, is warm, light, and inclining to be sandy; and therefore, if the plant is to be cultivated in the Canadas, it ought to be planted in a soil as nearly of the same kind as possible. Other kinds of soil might probably be brought to suit it, by a mixture of proper manure; but we must remember, that whatever manure is made use of, must be thoroughly incorporated with the soil. The best situation for a Tobacco plantation is the southern declivity of a hill, rather gradual than abrupt, or a spot that is sheltered from the north winds: but at the same time it is necessary that the plants enjoy a free air; for without that they will not prosper. As Tobacco is an annual plant, those who intend to cultivate it ought to be as careful as possible in the choice of the seeds. The seeds ought to be sown as early in the spring as possible, in a bed prepared for this purpose in such soil as has been already described, mixed with some warm rich manure. In a cold spring, hot beds are most eligible for this purpose, and gardeners imagine that they are always necessary: but Mr Carver tells us, that he is convinced when the weather is not very severe the Tobacco seeds may be raised without doors.

Tobacco is subject to be destroyed by a worm; and without proper care to exterminate this enemy, a whole field of plants may be soon lost.

OF

UPPER CANADA.

No. XVIII.

MONDAY, 17th MARCH, 1823.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, &c. &c. &c.

May it please Your Excellency,

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave respectfully to assure Your Excellency, that our regret at the occurrence of any circumstance tending to disturb the good understanding which prevailed between Your Excellency and the House of Assembly is as ample and sincere as that expressed in Your Excellency's Reply to our Address on the subject of the Public Accounts; and that, reverting not only to our own motives, which were collectively, and individually, free from all intention of personal offence to Your Excellency, but also to the Parliamentary and Constitutional Pledge, interchanged between Your Excellency, and your Commons assembled, through our Speaker, at the opening of the present Parliament, "that the most favorable construction would be put on all our words and actions," we felt secure from the reproach of addressing our Sovereign's Representative with any deliberate intention of misrepresenting his administration.

It is not possible that we could give a more decided proof of our confidence in Your Excellency's integrity and honor than that, while informing Your Excellency of the defective form of the Public Accounts, we have unanimously passed a Bill of Supply for the current year.

We respectfully beg leave to remark to Your Excellency that although the present form of the Public Accounts have been in use for thirty years past, yet experience has shewn that those forms are unfit to be continued, as in truth occasioning all the perplexity and confusion complained of in our late Address to Your Excellency on this subject. In addressing Your Excellency on a branch of your administration so peculiarly under our care, we deem ourselves discharging an important duty, interwoven with our constitutional rights; we, therefore, humbly hope, that with this explanation Your Excellency will be pleased to recognize in our Address an anxiety for the discharge of our public duties—and an anxiety without doubt as acceptable to Your Excellency, as to our Constituents; and that Your Excellency, thus assured of our sentiments, will please to give to our Address your most favorable construction, which must preclude the idea of any intention of reflecting on Your Excellency's Administration.

Doctor Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, moved that Messrs. Hamilton of Lincoln, and Crooks, should be a Committee to wait upon His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, to know when His Excellency would be pleased to receive the foregoing address and to present the same, Which was carried.

The House then adjourned.

TUESDAY, 18 MARCH, 1823.

Mr. Hamilton of Lincoln, from the Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the Address of the House, in reply to His Excellency's Answer to the Address on Public Accounts, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor had been pleased to make thereto the following reply:—

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

ALTHOUGH I understand, from what I have now heard, that you do not desire to avail yourselves of my suggestion respecting the revision of the Public Accounts, having been entirely satisfied of their accuracy in your former investigation of the full details which were laid before you, yet I feel much gratified that you have enjoyed an opportunity of removing the erroneous impression that your journals, which it is part of my duty to transmit to His Majesty, would otherwise have given, respecting the admirable sentiments and conduct which have characterized this House of Assembly

My warmest acknowledgements, are justly due to you for the readiness with which you have granted your Supply in aid, on the present, as on former Sessions, but also in the present, in which you have given an additional value to your vote by entire unanimity.

You may be assured that I shall most readily cause any practicable alteration to be effected in the method of accounting to you for the Supplies voted by this House, that that can have the desired effect of making the details more easily understood; and I must add, that the slightest intimation, in either of your former Sessions, that you had desired such a change, would have been sufficient to have ensured my order for its immediate adoption

I am advised that I have entrenched upon usual observance, in alluding, in my answer to your Address, to the absence of many Members from your House.—Feeling always anxious to avow an invariable practice, I take the earliest opportunity of making this acknowledgement.

Original Poetry.

We think the following lines possessed of considerable energy and poetical merit; and, in several passages, especially the prophetic lines towards the conclusion, applicable to the present struggle in Spain.—ED.

THE DEATH OF GENERAL MOORE.

WHEN war's loud trump first sounded to alarms,
And peaceful nations heard the din of arms,
Affrighted Gallia shook through all her bounds,
And Albion's shores re echo'd to the sounds;
Devoted Austria heard the storm afar,
Return'd the shock, and snatch'd the shafts of war.—
Each jealous Power the proud defiance hurl'd,
Till war's broad ensign wav'd o'er half the world.
Vain were the task, and endless to relate,
The chain of woes that seal'd each country's fate:
Fierce o'er the strife, the scourge of human kind
Majestic rose, for bloodiest deeds design'd.—
High Heav'n assents, and all his projects crown,
Till kings and kingdoms bend at his beck,
Imperial States reluctantly obey.
And conquer'd nations own the tyrant's sway.
Long struggling Spain the overwhelming pow'r with stood,
And saw her plains deep drench'd in patriot blood.
In vain her toils—in vain she long mourn'd
A captive Prince—a kingdom overturn'd;
Fainting, to Heav'n she rais'd her sick'ning eye,
Deplor'd her fate, nor knew a friend was nigh;—
But gen'rous Britons saw the unequal strife,
Relum'd the flame, and round it told life;
Bade Hope revive, when every hope was lost,
And pour'd her squadrons on the affrighted coast!
Long had proud Gallia echo'd with their fame,
And learnt to tremble at the British name!
Appall'd she hears—and starting in alarm,
With threw their numbers, dreads the assailing arm;
Ev'n War's stern Lord, his secret fears reveal'd,
And throng'd new armies on the embattl'd field,—
The opposing bands collected in their might,
Behold the foe—and kindle at the sight;
A nation's Genius prompts the impulsive fire,
And bids each arm to noblest deeds aspire.
True to the call, and eager for the event,
They seek the fight, and spurn each cold restraint;
Britannia's Ensigns to the wind unfurl,
And on the foe the impetuous thunder hurl—
Quick pour their arms around the plaining coast,
And rescued Cities hail the victor host.
Th'exulting ally now no longer mourn,
But smiles in hope, and with new ardor burns.—
Around their standard patriot armies swarm,
And rest secure on the protecting arm,
Till o'er the Realm their mutual conquests swell,
And from their fertile plains the usurping foe repel.
But oh! what muse shall sing the dire disgrace
And base dejection of the paltry race!
First, doubting Spain unmanly fears betray'd,
And jealous view'd the power that lent her aid,
Envied that valour which her own excell'd,
And her best friend with cold mistrust beheld.—
Then gallant MOORE first saw, alas, too late,
Her heartless Ally destin'd to her fate;
Stung with the thought, his brest indignant burns,
Collects his host, and from the strife returns;
That shameless host which Gallia's strength defied,
And glorious strife where her best warriors died—
Fierce from the foe, the wreath of Fame he bore,
And with his legions sought Corunna's shore.—
Expecting vessels hail the Chief homeward to recede;
And ready wait to waft him o'er the main—
In vain they wait—his country's debt he pays,
Nor e'er shall hear that country sound his praise.
Encircling armies now his march impede,
Hang on his rear, and force him to recede;
Secure in strength, his little power defy,
And thrice they charge—and thrice repuls'd they fly!
Unaw'd he stands amidst the deathful fray,
Points out bright glory's path—and leads the way.
Ah! fatal scail!—the rest let actions tell,
For there the first of all her warriors fell!
When now the Hero felt the mortal wound,
Serene he smil'd, and view'd the carnage round—
"This day," he cried, "my Country's love repays,
"To her I ever hoped to end my days."
Nor heeds the wound, nor quits the ensanguined scene,
Till Gaul's proud squadrons fly the hostile plain;
Fir'd at the sight, "The day is ours!"—he cries,
And in that breath his martial spirit flies—
Ah, luckless Chief!—ah, conquest bought too dear,
For thee each generous Briton drops a tear,
Tell all thy toils and all thy triumphs o'er;
Then strikes his breast to think thou art no more:
Yes, noble warrior!—long thy honor'd name
Shall shine conspicuous in the rolls of Fame,
And haply from thy sacred dust shall spring
A Race whose deeds, like thine, some muse shall sing;
Like thee, the pride of each proud nation,
And bid their triumphs sound from shore to shore:
Shall round the world, midst death and fierce alarms
Impress the terror of the British arms!

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,

Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of June last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 24th day of July instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby countermanding, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Monday the first day of September next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed WITNESS our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

Editorial Commentary.

THE statements given in the Courier, and which will be found in this day's publication, lead us to anticipate an early conclusion to the Spanish war—a war that has exhibited a novel character throughout.—The state of parties was such in that unhappy country as to render compromise necessary, and as the only way by which destruction could be avoided—Whatever may be the final result, we have no doubt much good will arise from the events which have occurred;—and compromise is far better than bloodshed.

The present, or perhaps we may now say the late, Constitution of Spain, was undoubtedly imperfect, as all political constitutions must be, without a proper mixture of Aristocracy—A Chamber of Peers or Nobles was wanting in Spain.—If the power of the King is left under proper and reasonable checks;—if a Chamber of Peers is established;—if the representative system by an Assemblage of the Cortes;—if the formerly enormous power of the clergy remains curtailed, and the Inquisition is suffered to slumber in its ashes—and we look for all these things;—it cannot be said the revolutions, the struggles, and the embarrassments of Spain, have been without results of the most satisfactory nature.

Although some respectable papers in the United States seem to treat with ridicule the report of the cession of Porto Rico to the British Crown—we are inclined to give full credit to the statement, as we have received it—thinking it, at least, probable, that such an indemnification would be given. The only circumstance creative of doubt in our mind is the total silence in all the English papers of the sailing of such an armament!—If it be true, as we hope it is, we trust that Cuba will next sparkle as an additional gem in the British diadem.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM SEVILLE.

Despatches were yesterday received from Seville by Ministers, containing intelligence of a character so decisive, that we can scarcely hesitate for a moment to consider the question of the war in Spain as at an end. We shall proceed to lay before our readers the substance of these despatches.

It is true that the Count Abisbal has declared against the Constitution, but not that he has gone over to the French, in the invidious sense of that expression. He has made propositions, and they embrace the following points:—1st, He admits the Constitution requires amendment, and that it must be altered—2d. The King must be set at liberty, and return to Madrid—3d, The present Cortes to be dissolved, and a new one assembled, comprising Delegates from all parts in Spain, for the purpose of forming a new Constitution—4th, He protests against any foreign interference in the new modelling of the Constitution; but for the sake of preserving the peace of Madrid, he is understood to have sent to the French head-quarters to urge their immediate advance, and the speediest possible occupation of the Capital.

Such is the information; and, convinced as we are of the entire indifference with which the late Constitution, and its adherents, are viewed by the people of Spain, we have no doubt that this movement of Abisbal will terminate in a quiet arrangement of the affairs of that distracted country. Should it prove so, and the event is brought about, as we trust it will, in a way consistent with the honor of Spain, as an independent nation, we CONGRATULATE EUROPE, and conclude with Earl GREY,

(From the Courier of May 28.)

We have received this morning, under date of Bayonne, the following official account of the movements of the French army, which we extract from the Moniteur, of yesterday evening, received by the mail of yesterday morning:—

"The Duke d'Angoulême entered the capital of the Asturias on the 23d. This information reached Paris by a telegraphic despatch, and consequently nothing could be added as to the reception which the invading army met with.

"Count de l'Abisbal had retired with his troops upon the Tagus.—We can state confidently, that the reports of his having arrested and confined the Chiefs of the Constitutional party, are not credited in the highest political circles of either Paris or London.

"It seems there is little doubt that Abisbal, before he took the decisive step he has taken, had communication with the other Constitutional Generals. It is this circumstance which creates the belief, that pacific arrangements will grow out of the transaction. In fact, if the army, which proclaimed the Constitution, now chooses to modify it, we do not see why its will should not be as omnipotent one way as the other, especially if the modifications are of a nature to secure the co-operation of the invaders. We must await for particular details before we can understand the precise bearings of recent events; but if Abisbal continues to be followed by his troops, we would not be surprised to find him ere long employed in escorting FERDINAND back again to Madrid from Seville. Their summons the Cortes and the Ministers would vainly attempt to dispute.

PORTO RICO

BY JAMES DE VEAU, May 21.

The following is copied from the Guiana Chronicle of the 10th May:—

Occupation of Porto Rico by the British.—The Trinidad Gazette, of the 10th ult. received this morning, gives the following account of this important piece of information:—

"By the arrival of the Active, in 35 days from Porto Rico, we learn that on Tuesday last, the 6th inst. ten ships of war and five transports arrived at San Juan, the capital, direct from England, with necessary credentials from the Spanish Government for the delivery of that important Colony over to England, which was accordingly done, and the British flag substituted for that of the Spanish. This, we understand, was not suffered to take place without consideration on the part of the Spanish Authorities, three or four days having elapsed before permission was given for the entry of the whole of the armament into the port, notwithstanding the authority produced by the British. This supposition, no doubt, must have passed Antigua some time since; but no secret has this affair been conducted on the part of our Government at home, that not even a hint or suggestion had transpired of any such measure being in contemplation, as that of sending out a force in addition to the one under the command of Commodore Owen, which it was generally supposed was intended for this service."

We give the following description as the most recent and best account of this valuable acquisition we know of.—Ed.

Puerto Rico—Puerto Rico, or the Rich or Golden Land, is, in geographical order, the next Captain Generalship, and inferior only to Cuba, and scarcely so, in fertility, beauty, and variety. It is in magnitude not inferior to the kingdom of Ireland, but as infinitely superior to it in beauty and produce, as in its bright and southern climate. It obtained this name from its manifest opulence, and, under skilful cultivation, would well deserve it.

Upon landing upon this island, after a voyage from Europe, nothing can exceed the picturesque scene which extends itself before the eyes of the traveller—a land of hill and valley, a gently undulating surface, beautifully diversified by water, is closed in the distance by a line of mountains, wooded nearly to the top, and embellished by the white houses of the plantations of the inhabitants. A southern sun sheds its dazzling brilliancy over the whole scene, whilst the heat is tempered by the abundant rivulets which diversify the face of the country. The remoter parts of the interior are still covered with the original forests and their thick underwood, in which roam the descendants of the wild dogs, which the early Spanish colonizers employed in hunting the natives.

The forests abound with parrots and other tropical birds, whose rich and highly colored plumage add much to the character of the landscape. Cattle of a very superior quality, originally brought from Europe, and now exceedingly multiplied, are the prize of every one who can take them; poultry of all kinds is cheap and plentiful, and the rivers and sea supply the inhabitants with every variety of fish. Living is thus considerably cheap and easy to those who choose to live in the country, and who will make use of their gun.

(From the Courier of May 29.)

Despatches were received yesterday evening by Government from Sir Charles Stuart, communicating the intelligence of the entry of the French advanced guard into Madrid on the 23d instant, (on Friday.) His Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulême entered the capital on the following day. This information reached Paris by a telegraphic despatch, and consequently nothing could be added as to the reception which the invading army met with.

Count de l'Abisbal had retired with his troops upon the Tagus.—We can state confidently, that the reports of his having arrested and confined the Chiefs of the Constitutional party, are not credited in the highest political circles of either Paris or London.

It seems there is little doubt that Abisbal, before he took the decisive step he has taken, had communication with the other Constitutional Generals. It is this circumstance which creates the belief, that pacific arrangements will grow out of the transaction. In fact, if the army, which proclaimed the Constitution, now chooses to modify it, we do not see why its will should not be as omnipotent one way as the other, especially if the modifications are of a nature to secure the co-operation of the invaders. We must await for particular details before we can understand the precise bearings of recent events; but if Abisbal continues to be followed by his troops, we would not be surprised to find him ere long employed in escorting FERDINAND back again to Madrid from Seville. Their summons the Cortes and the Ministers would vainly attempt to dispute.

PROCLAMATION.

INHABITANTS OF MADRID!—If military operations, and a desire not to compromise the generous inhabitants of Madrid, compel me to evacuate the capital, I will not abandon it until the garrison, destined to preserve public tranquility, is replaced by an army's force, introduced by a Convention authorised by the laws of war. If some ill designing men flatter themselves with the hope of pillage and disorder, let them renounce their criminal project, and be assured that exemplary chastisement will be inflicted for every movement not authorised by law.

I have respected, and I respect, the opinions of all, because I am persuaded that a libera Government ought so to act, so long as those who are not agreed as to the merits of established laws, do not, nevertheless, fail in punctual obedience to them; but I will not suffer party fury to stain with blood the soil of the capital of the most enlightened nation, or the ambitious and perfidious views of a small number of individuals to compromise the tranquility of a city distinguished for its patriotism and talents.

(Signed) The Count DE L'ABISBAL.

Madrid, May 16.

The question of the Spanish war assumes a totally new aspect from these events which have taken place at Madrid, but in reasoning upon them, we must not forget that there is still much to ascertain before any conclusive inferences can be deduced. One very important consideration is, whether Abisbal has acted in concert with the other Constitution Generals, or whether, having the defence of the Capital entrusted to him, his surrender of it has been merely an isolated act of negotiation. If we are to suppose the former, then we should say, there remains no chance of Spain making a successful resistance; but if the latter should turn out to be the case, then, whatever may have been hitherto the probabilities or ultimate triumph, they will not be materially diminished by the transaction.

The letter from Abisbal to Count Montijo, contains, in the way of suggestion, the propositions which we yesterday stated had been made by him as the basis of his negociation with France. It would seem, indeed, that at the period of writing this letter, he had not fully determined upon the course he would pursue; for though he distinctly enough intimates what he would consider as the right and proper one, still he prefaces the intimation by repeated assurances of his determination to obey the orders of the Government de facto, and which he maintains, it was his duty to do.—But he makes one remarkable omission. "I am fully convinced," says he, "that unfortunately for the nation, the Ministry which governs it, is incapable of rescuing it from danger to which it is reduced by the unskilfulness of preceding Ministers, and by the unpardonable imprudence of the last, who have provoked the present war, without displaying the energy necessary for upholding the dignity of the nation." In proposing those consistency means, that might have united the minds of the Spaniards, and have prevented foreigners from the daring attempt to interfere in the private disputes of Spain, by violating the territory of the nation without any previous declaration of war."

If this be so, what monstrous folly and wickedness it implies in those, who, without possessing adequate means to defend the country, exposed it to all the calamities of invasion.

"ST. PETERSBURGH, May 9.

"The Chamberlain Kriesnow is appointed Counsellor of State and Civil Governor of Tula, and Colonel Mirouow, Counsellor of State and Civil Governor of Tambow."

(From the Courier of May 29.)

Despatches were received yesterday evening by Government from Sir Charles Stuart, communicating the intelli-

— INDEX AT FRONT.

The southern coast is the most healthy, as well as the most fertile. It produces as articles of commerce and use, sugar, coffee, cotton, cocoa, flax, ginger, and odoriferous gums; the three first articles in vast quantity. The northern side of the island is supposed to contain mines of gold and silver, but from the want of capital, they have not been as yet worked.

The population of the island is estimated at about 150,000. The capital of the island is Puerto Rico, which is a strong town and very pleasantly situated. It is one of the towns of which we read in the romantic voyages of Sir Francis Drake, who made an attack on it in one of his buccaneering adventures, and very deservingly failed in his attempt. In the year 1797, our troops [illegible] failure.

The plantations of the island are very numerous, and, from the extreme fertility of the soil, very productive. The cultivation, however, might be very [illegible] capital, or, in other words, British commerce, should find its access to this island. Sugar and cotton might be raised in any quantity, and Jamaica grows nothing which might not equally be produced from Puerto Rico and Cuba.

There are no accounts of the exports and imports of this island, but they may be rendered [illegible] less than one million pounds English, and, under an intelligent system of commerce, might be increased.

There are a great number of free labourers in this island. The neighbourhood of Hayti has caused the slaves to be well treated, and generally speaking, they are not dissatisfied with their condition.

Puerto Rico would extremely well suit an English settler with a capital from two hundred and fifty pounds to one thousand.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 10.

It is generally asserted here, that the Greeks will not negociate with the Porte, except on the basis of their entire Independence. Lord Strangford appears to endeavour to effect an arrangement. The negociations with Persia are not near to a termination.—The Porte is said even to have declined the mediation of Lord Strangford. The new firman regulating the trade of the Black Sea, is very disagreeable to the Franks, as it is nearly equivalent to a toll in the passage of the Dardanelles, and is likely to be great hindrance to the commerce of all foreign nations.

Retribution.—The Courier of the 19th, says—"The Merchants of the city who have had property seized in South America, by the different insurgent governments, to an immense amount, and from the various changes which have taken place, were unable to obtain redress, are put into the highest spirits by the orders which have been transmitted to the British Admiral, Sir Thomas Hardy, which are to demand restitution of all property seized, without any exception, provided it can be proved to belong to British subjects."

Shocking.—We have been favored with a Belfast paper of May 21st, from which, among other extracts, we make the following. We hope that if ever the vessel mentioned reach this port, the competent authorities will secure the Captain for so daring a breach of the laws, by which the lives both of the passengers and this whole community are endangered. Several passengers in this same vessel, it may be remembered, were seen sick last year on Jones' Wharf, the death occurred in the open air, and created some excitement.—Gazette.

Revenue Officers forcibly carried off to America.

On Thursday last, Mr. Tutor, Police Magistrate, accompanied by Mr. Farrell, Chief Peace Officer, proceeded to Dunleary, in pursuance of an order from Mr. Gregory, Under Secretary of State, to take measures for preventing a vessel called the "William of Dublin," from getting out to sea, in consequence of the want of necessary accommodation for the passengers on board, during their voyage to Quebec.

Mr. Tutor and Mr Farrell found the vessel riding at anchor in Kingstown Bay, ready to put to sea; her burden was but ninety three tons, and she had on board one hundred and fifty six passengers, being the number of one hundred and nine persons more than the allowance per ton, as very properly and humanely directed by the Act of Parliament. The passengers were all labourers of the lowest description, and the want of ventilation, the crowded state of the hold, the absence of all arrangements for comfort, cleanliness, decency, or convenience, occasioned a horrible stench; several were totally unprovided with a place to lay themselves down, and the whole presented a scene not very unlike the shocking tales related of slave ships.

The Magistrate and Mr. Farrell waited on board all day for the Captain, and as he did not appear at night, they left two revenue officers on board in charge of the vessel, and returned to town.—During the night the Captain came on board, and knowing his case to be desperate, he determined on a desperate remedy, and actually put to sea with the officers on board. As soon as the circumstance was discovered, two revenue cruisers were dispatched after him, but as yet (May 21st) no account has been received of him.

Sir Robert Wilson, speaking of the English dinner, said, Sir Robert Wilson, on the 4th day of May, 1823, in front of the Local National Militia of Vigo, at the time but deceitful words.

"The moment is arrived when I ought to take the oath to the Constitution." King of Spain, to his Government, to the Spanish Nation, during the war that the latter may have to sustain against the French Government (not against the Nation) in defence of its Independence, and of the rights of all free men. For this purpose I have left my country, and the object of my greatest care; and I have even suspended my duties as a Member of the British Parliament. I pended my duties as a Member of the British Parliament. I and my companions have come to fight by your side, and to shed our blood, if required, in the defence of a common cause. We hope that our example will produce its due influence upon her aberrating sons (Filhosetaravilados) numerous by the pay of belonging to Spain, who are carrying on a sacrilegious war against their mother country, to throw around it the most shameful chains of the very slaves to whom they have themselves become enslaved. Every Englishman bleeds in your cause his hopes and regrets.

"This will not be the first time that I have fought by the side of the brave Spaniards. In the late war for independence, I had on various occasions many thousands under my command; and on the field of battle I learnt to appreciate the rare and illustrious qualities of this invincible nation. The pretended war in favour of the independence of Europe, it was then I acquired the honourable title I wear suspended, and which are not owing to the favour of the Allied Sovereigns, nor to the reward of servile actions, I and many others have been deceived by them; for, instead of being the liberator and protectors of European independence, they have converted themselves into the iron and despotic Sovereigns. The same decorations adorn the present uniform of a Spanish soldier of the army of liberty, to prove to them that is not I who have abandoned my principles, but they who have violated the obligations contracted with their subjects, with their allies, and with the whole civilized world.

"Now by the sacred name of my country, in the presence of God, and in the front of these colours of liberty, I beg your Excellency to receive from me and my companions the oath of defending them."

POLICE.

THE FRENCHMAN AND THE CLERICAL HORSE DEALER.

A complaint, which has caused a great deal of conversation in Bath, was made a few days ago by a French Gentleman, named Lafu, against a clergyman who resides in the neighbourhood of the city, and who is remarkable for dealing very profitably in horses. The magistrate applied to us on the occasion recommended that the circumstances should be stated in a court of law, after having the following account from the lips of the Frenchman:—

"I go to buy a horse from him, and he ask me 40 guinea. I say no, by Gar! I no give that. Well, say the clergyman, I tell you what; you shall have him for 35 guinea; but d—n my eye, you shall no have him less."

Magistrate.—You could not think of dealing with a clergyman who was so ready to swear.

Frenchman.—Oui. I did; I thought a clergiman would not swear any thing but true; so I paid the money. Well, I got upon him, and he go beautiful. Then I put him up in the Bell's stables, and I ride him next day, but he go upon three leg; so I put him on again, but he still go upon three leg, and then I gave him a doctor; but, by Gar, he walk upon his knee, and so I say, If you walk upon your knee, I do not walk upon your back.

Magistrate.—You mean that the horse was unsound?

Frenchman.—Oui, he got the gout.

Magistrate.—I never set horses down on the gout.

Frenchman.—But he was a clergyman's horse, and they both have the gout. The horse's leg was SWELL, and so was the master's Magistrate.—Well, I suppose you sent back the horse?

Frenchman.—No; the clergyman said, d—n his eye he'd no have him; but I ask Mr. Bell to buy him for thirty five guinea; but he said no, I not give more than 31: so I keep him in the stable twelve week, and then I send him to be sold; and what do you think I get?

Magistrate.—Why, perhaps, 51.

Frenchman.—No, by Gar, I get 45l.

Magistrate.—Well I think you received more than you had a right to expect in your transaction with this worthy clergyman.

Frenchman.—Receive! Why I receive nothing. I got the 45l. to pay for the dinner.

Magistrate.—For dinner!

Frenchman.—Oui, For my horse's dinner for the 12 week in Mr. Bell's stable.

The unfortunate Frenchman thus lost, by his dealing with [illegible] about 20*l.* at least over [illegible].

Natural History.

Grasshoppers.—In Major Long's Journal of his expedition to the Rock Mountains, we find it observed that, upon the summit of James' Peak, the loftiest of the range—the elevation of which is 10,000 feet, where the Thermometer sunk to 42°, the travellers were "astonished to find the air filled, in every direction, with clouds of Grasshoppers, which appeared to extend upwards to the limit of vision, as their wings sparkled in the sun."

These are called Grasshoppers but there can be no doubt they were Locusts, and probably distinct from the common species. Ed.

Black Snake.—During the few warm days we had in the month of April, a yoke of oxen, belonging to Mr. Richard Jackson, of this town, were feeding in a meadow—they came by a small thorn bush, and put their noses down apparently to smell of something there, when a huge black snake with incredible velocity, fastened himself around the neck of one of the oxen—the oxen which were yoked together, ran and bellowed terribly—a young man who observed their movements, hastened to see what was the matter, and with difficulty got near enough, to give the snake a blow with a stick, which caused him to lose his hold and fall off—he was completely clenched round the ox's neck—his tail being wound round his own head and neck—he was killed and found to be six feet long—there is hardly a doubt, that if no person had been near to render assistance, the poor ox would soon fallen a prey to the reptile, by being shocked to death. —Goshen paper

PYRENNEAN MOUNTAINS.

As these mountains are about becoming once more the seat of European war, the following short description of them may not be uninteresting to the reader:—"This prodigious range of mountains extends from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean, a distance of two hundred miles, and many parts of them are one hundred miles in width. The roads or routes are four in number. The first and greatest is that which Joseph Bonaparte took on his route from Bayonne to Madrid. This road, for about 22 leagues, lies through the Pyrenees. The second pass is from Perpignan to Barcelona, a distance of 50 miles through the mountains, where in many places one hundred armed peasants may arrest the march of the army, and where neither horse nor any provisions, nor accommodations can be found. The third pass leads from Bayonne to Pampeluna, the capital of Navarre; this difficult defile is only passable between the months of May and October; The fourth road is that which leads from Perbes, in Biscaye, to Saragossa. It is a tract merely pervious to muleteers during the summer, but in winter the wolves and snows render it totally impassable.

"There are nearly sixty other narrow passes, called openings, most of which are rugged, intricate and hardly passable for laden beasts, and even those are frequently blocked up with snow

USEFUL INVENTIONS.

The following was published in the English News-papers several years ago; but, as the machine now made in the United States, and which, by a recent Act of our Parliament may now be imported, duty free, at a very small expense, we think it may be of benefit to our farmers, whose interests we have at heart, to republish it in our columns.

NEW METHOD OF PREPARING FLAX.

Respecting Mr. Lee's method of dressing flax Dr Thomson says, "I consider Mr Lee's invention as the greatest improvement ever introduced into the linen business, and as likely to occasion a total change in the whole of our bleachfields.—Mr. Lee neither steeps his flax nor spreads it on the grass. When the plant is ripe, it is pulled in the usual way. It is then thrashed, by placing it between two grooved wooden beams shod with iron. One of these is fixed; the other is suspended on hinges, and is made to impinge with some force on the fixed beam; the grooves in the one beam corresponding with flutes in the other. By a mechanical contrivance, almost exactly similar, the woody matter is beaten off, and the fibres of the flax left. By passing these through hackles, varying progressively in fineness, the flax is very speedily dressed, and rendered proper for the use for which it is intended. The advantages of this process are manifold. The expense of steeping and spreading is saved; a much greater produce of flax is obtained; it is much stronger, the fibres may be divided into much finer fibres, so as to obtain at once, and in any quantity, flax fine enough for the manufacture of lace. But the greatest advantage of all remains yet to be stated. Flax manufactured in this manner requires only to be washed in pure water in order to become white. The colouring matter mixes with the fibres, and renders the subsequent bleaching process necessary. Thus, by Mr. Lee's process, flax and hemp are obtained in much greater quantity, of much stronger quality, and much finer in the fibre than by the common method, and the necessity of bleaching is altogether superseded. The great importance of such an [illegible] Mr. Lee's patent machines has been brought to Scotland. It is expected in a few days to be exhibited at work in Carnwarth; and afterwards at Airdrie.

Account of a Well for Preserving and Filtering Rain-water, for domestic purposes, where a supply of Spring-water was not easily to be obtained.

TO MR. NICHOLSON.

SIR,

You may perhaps deem the following account of a filtering rain water well, which has been successfully tried here by the Earl of Caernarvon, not undeserving of notice in your valuable Journal. His lordship has lately erected upon a dry gravelly eminence in his park, an ornamental circular building, consisting of a room and open colonades above, and apartments for cottagers upon the basement floor. Considerable discussion arose upon the mode of supplying them with water, from the depth to which it was necessary to sink, in order to obtain an effective well.—My friend, Mr. John Loat, builder, of Clapham, who had furnished the plan, for the construction of the dome roof, mentioned to me a contrivance of his father's to meet a similar difficulty, which had been attended with invariable success, and Lord Caernarvon immediately determined upon carrying it into execution.

Following Mr. Loat's instructions, we sunk two wells, 30 feet deep by 4 feet diameter each, which for greater perspicuity I shall call No 1 and 2 They are a trifling distance asunder, and were carefully clayed, to prevent percolation into the surrounding soil, and lined with bricks in the usual manner. A well secured communication was made between the two wells, by a small leaden pipe inserted two feet from the bottom All the pipes from the roof were directed into No. 1; and an oak floor, bored full of small holes, and supported upon posts, was laid in at No 2, just above the pipe of communication. Upon this floor was first placed a stratum of well washed gravel, then one of finer, next a stratum of coarse sand, and finally one of the finest sand we could procure, making altogether two feet in thickness of siliceous substances. The water which is received into No. 1, passes through the leaden pipe into No. 2. and filtrates by ascent through the strata of sand and gravel, the space below the level of the oak floor in both wells, acting as a cesspool, receives all sediment The pump is of course affixed in the filtering well. Both wells are covered up, but plenty of air is admitted to them, through apertures made for this purpose.

You will immediately perceive, that the merit of this plan consists altogether in the filtration by ascent, with a competent space under the apparatus. The interstices of the sand are thus never clogged, and its power is preserved unimpaired for an indefinite period The well fully answers its intended purpose, and the water is altogether excellent. I have been [illegible] to submit this statement, from a persuasion that there are few houses, which may not be made in this manner to supply excellent water in sufficient quantity for domestic consumption; and that situations abound, where the filtrating well may be resorted to with equal comfort and advantage.

MASONIC.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

York, 14th July, 1823.

SIR,

By a Resolution of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free, and Accepted Masons of Upper Canada, it is ordered that the accompanying Address of the Right Worshipful the Deputy Provincial Grand Master to that Body be published. In obedience thereto I beg to transmit it to you, and request you will be pleased to publish it in the next Weekly Register.

I have the honor to be
Sir,
Your most Obedient Servant,
B. TURQUAND.
G. Secy.

BRETHREN,

Having disposed of the Preliminary business of this Grand Lodge, I beg leave to address to you a few observations which have suggested themselves to my mind as deserving of our most earnest attention.

Believing that the principles of our Order will have a most harmonising effect upon the minds of the People of this Province, composed as we are of persons of various Creeds and Country, I beg to impress upon your minds the important consideration, that Freemasonry is not, among us, of so much value for the purpose of relieving distress, (very little of which, thank God, is to be found in the Province;) as it is for the more important and Godlike purposes of teaching us to be one another's friends, and to assist one another. Not that description of cold regard which is sometimes shown to preserve appearances, but that disposition of the heart which makes us feel pleasure in looking a brother in the face, and delight in proving our affection to him by doing for him any and every service in our power.

The prejudices of the world heretofore have been so great that we need not wonder some of them should now be found in the minds of many people in this Province. Our population being made up of persons of many nations, languages and religions, it is not surprising that we should sometimes hear the offensive terms of insolent Englishman! selfish Scot! savage Irishman! cunning Yankee! And do we not all know most valuable characters of these several nations?

Without adverting to the national casualties which have grown out of these bad qualities of the human heart, we have abundance of evil to encounter in family feuds, in heart burnings between neighbours, in religious differences and dislikes between sects, and though last, not least, in political animosities, all of which arise from the false causes which be pointed, by the exercise of a truly benevolent expression of the countenance of a warm hearted man; how much more cheering are the kind words and actions of such a man! Let us all, my Brethren, carefully and constantly cultivate these good dispositions, nor faint in our course, though we encounter neglect, ingratitude and scorn.

Thus we shall contribute to the building up of a social edifice in our Province, worthy of the principles of our order, productive of infinite blessings to ourselves, and unbounded gratitude to the Great Giver of all good.

OF

UPPER CANADA.

No. XIX.

WEDNESDAY 19th March, 1823.

Mr. Nichol, from the Committee on Contingent Accounts, reported, that the Committee had examined the various accounts and claims referred to them, and classed them, and respectfully observed, that the contingencies of the last and present Sessions greatly exceeded those of previous Sessions, [illegible] and the increased number of Members, the very important matters discussed, and the great quantity of printing ordered during both Sessions. The employment of a Reporter by the House, which had occasioned so great an addition to the Contingencies, though a novel measure in Legislation, having been ordered by the tion to the furtherance of Education, not only of the youth of the Province, but of all who may in any way be made more useful by it. A noble beginning has been already made by our Government; it remains for us to contribute by every means in our power to give full effect to the laws and regulations already established on this subject, which is of all others the most important to the present and future happiness of the human race. I hope I shall live to see the day when this Fraternity shall be found, proceeding upon a well organized system; to give effect to Schools already established, to establish new ones wherever and wherever wanted; to the formation of Libraries in every Town and Township; proceeding, in short, to make war upon Ignorance, which is of all evils the greatest enemy of Man, with a skill and energy deserving of success. If above by the destruction of ignorance that the happiness we are capable of enjoying [illegible] secured. Let the light of our good actions, my Brethren, so shine as to guide our neighbours through the mazes of ignorance, to the regions of truth and soberness, and mutual good will.

We are blessed with a Government and Laws which dispense equal justice to all; we possess civil and religious liberty in a degree never exceeded by any people, but I fear we do not always enjoy it. In the absence of all perception from our rulers, do our people not sometimes persecute one another? And are not such persecutions often more destructive of peace and happiness than those of an oppressive Government? Assuredly they are; for the acts of a Government are not often felt, but the misery caused by our own bad passions, or by those of our neighbour, are ever with us, and therefore exceed every other beyond all comparison.

Let us then, my Brethren, carry on our warfare, first of all, against the evil in our own hearts, and having, by the help of God, succeeded there, we shall find that our neighbour has already observed our progress, and is, in all probability, profiting by our example. All attempts at moral improvement, which do not commence with the Teachers themselves, will produce few advantages, and their effects will be of short duration. In consideration of this single error, may, in a great degree, account for the little progress made in times past, towards subjecting the passions of men to the government of religion and of reason

I will conclude by affectionately entreating each Brother in the Province to call up all his powers, and to exercise them in the improvement of the minds of his Wife, his Children and every individual in his Family.

More can be done by Parents towards the banishment of ignorance and vice, than by all other human means whatever. The seeds of virtue sown in the first years, will soon [illegible] sown within the domestic circle; and we all know how much easier it is to prevent than to cure If we were to confine all our thoughts and all our efforts to the improvement of our own Families, without regarding a single individual else, we would do a mighty good to the neighbourhood we should not help admiring our good conduct, and who must be more or less prompted by it to follow our example

Let no modest humble individual say, "I am too insignificant to be observed, and to have my example influence those around me" Such is not the fact.—I have closely observed the exercise of kind-heartedness and good will by individuals, even in the humblest walks of life, and I have ever found it productive of the happiest effects. Often has the brow of care been smoothed, the suffering mind soothed by the benevolent expression of the countenance of a warm hearted man; how much more cheering are the kind words and actions of such a man! Let us all, my Brethren, carefully and constantly cultivate these good dispositions, nor faint in our course, though we encounter neglect, ingratitude and scorn.

Thus we shall contribute to the building up of a social edifice in our Province, worthy of the principles of our order, productive of infinite blessings to ourselves, and unbounded gratitude to the Great Giver of all good.

JAMES FITZ GIBBON,

—INDEX AT FRONT

House, the expense, however high, must of course be defrayed.

With respect to the other Items of the accounts, the Committee having submitted them in a condensed form, with the vouchers, to the consideration of the House, they forbore to make any observations upon them, with the exception of the sums applied for by the Serjeant at Arms, Messenger and Door-keepers, which the Committee were of opinion, ought to be allowed, as the allowances to those officers were very moderate, and the Sessions much longer than when these appointments were first made

An application had been made by the Printer of the Laws, from Attention in the provision for paying for Services; which application was in the words of the Address to be founded.

The Printer was desirous to be paid for the quantity of work performed at the regular price of the trade, and not by a specific sum. The Committee, therefore, recommended, that an Address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying His Excellency to advance whatever sum might be necessary for defraying that charge, after the appropriation should be expended on that account.

The Committee, in conclusion, recommended, that it might be resolved, that an humble Address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying His Excellency to issue his Warrant to the Receiver General in favor of John Powell, Esquire, Clerk of the Honorable the Legislative Council, for the sum of one hundred and ninety five pounds, fourteen shillings and eleven pence half penny, for certain contingent expenses thereof during the Session.

Also in favor of Willian Lee, Esquire, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, for certain contingent expenses of the Honorable the Legislative Council during the Session, for the sum of one hundred and fifty-seven pounds, seventeen shillings and one penny half penny.

Also in favor of Grant Powell, Esq. Clerk of the House of Assembly, to enable him to pay the contingencies of his Office for the last and present Sessions, and also to enable him to carry into effect the orders of the House, for the sum of one thousand six hundred and ninety six pounds four shillings and a halfpenny.

Also in favor of Allan McNabb, Esq. serjeant at arms, to enable him to discharge sundry contingent expenses of the last and present Sessions, two hundred and ninety pounds, seven shillings and sixpence halfpenny.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, the House went into Committee of the whole on the foregoing report.

Mr. Randal was called to the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr. Randal reported several resolutions which he was ordered to submit for the adoption of the House.

The Report was ordered to be received, and it was

1st, Resolved, That in addition to the sum of one hundred pounds voted, during the present Session, the sum of twenty five pounds be voted to compensate the Printer, Carey, for newspapers containing the debates of the House after the close of the Session

2d. Resolved—That in addition to the sum of seven pounds ten shillings, recommended by the Select Committee to compensate James Lumsden for his services during the present Session the sum of five pounds be granted.

3d, Resolved—That in addition to the sum of five pounds to the Serjeant at Arms, the additional sum of seven pounds ten shillings be granted for superintending Repairs.

4th, Resolved—That in addition to the sum of twenty pounds per annum allowed to Hugh Carfrae, door keeper to the Honorable the Legislative Council, the sum of twenty pounds be granted.

5th Resolved—That Robert Nichol Esquire, has rendered great and important service to this Province, in its financial concerns with Lower Canada for many years past.

6th, Resolved—That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying that he will be graciously pleased to advance to Robert Nichol Esquire, the sum of £ and to assure His Excellency that this House will make good the same.

On the seventh resolution being put, the House divided.

YEAS.	NAYS.
Messrs. Hornor, Randal, Hamilton of Wentworth, Chisholm, Wilson of Wentworth, Kerr, Burwell, Crooks, Wilmot, McDonell. —10.	Messrs Clark, Walsh, Casey. & Baldwin.—4.

Question gained, majority 6—and it was Resolved, that the Blank should be filled up with two hundred and fifty pounds, and that the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds should be granted for that purpose, and that the House would make good the same at its next Session.

On motion of Mr. Burwell, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, Messrs. Crooks and McDonell, were ordered to draft an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in pursuance of the Resolutions of the House on the Report of the Committee on Contingent Accounts.

On motion of Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Chisholm, Messrs. Wilson of Wentworth, and Wilmot, were ordered to draft an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, pursuant to the Resolutions of the House, respecting Robert Nichol, Esquire.

Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, reported a draft of an Address respecting R. Nichol, Esquire, which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Burwell, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, the Address was read the second time.

Mr. Crooks, reported a draft of an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, relative to the Contingent Accounts of the Session, which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Burwell, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, the Address on Contingent Accounts was read the second time, concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time the same day.

Agreeably to order, the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in pursuance to the Resolution of the House, on the Report of the Select Committee on Contingent Accounts, was read the third time, passed, and signed by the Speaker.

On motion of Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, seconded by Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying him to advance a sum of money to Robert Nichol, Esquire, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time that day

Messrs. Baldwin, and Hamilton of Wentworth, were ordered to be a Committee to wait upon His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, with the address on Contingent Accounts, and to present the same

Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. McDonell, moved an address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the resolution of the House relative to the printing of the Laws, which was received and read the first time

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. McDonell, the Address was read the second time, concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time the same day.

Agreeably to order, the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, stating to His Excellency, that it had been represented to them by His Majesty's Printer, that the sum appropriated by statute to defray the expenses of Printing the Laws was insufficient for that purpose; and they being desirous of providing for the same, humbly prayed, that His Excellency would be pleased to direct the advance of such sum as might be necessary to cover that expense, and that the House would make it good at its next Session, was read the third time, passed, and signed by the Speaker.

On motion of Mr. Nichol, seconded by Mr. Hagerman, Messrs. McDonell, and Crooks, were directed to carry up the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, and to present the same

Agreeably to order, the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, requesting His Excellency to be graciously pleased to advance to Robert Nichol, Esquire, the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds, for various and important services by him rendered in matters relative to the financial concerns between this Province and Lower Canada, which the House of Assembly would make good at its next Session, was read the third time, passed, and signed.

Mr. McDonell, from the Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, with the several addresses of the House, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency had been pleased to make thereto the following Replies:

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I shall, in compliance with the request contained in your Address, direct warrants to be prepared for defraying the Contingent Expenses of the Honorable the Legislative Council, and House of Assembly.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

In this, and all other cases, in which my consent to an application of the public money is solicited, I am directed by His Majesty's instruction to with hold my assent, except it be for the Contingencies of either House of Parliament, unless the requisition be made with the concurrence of both branches of the Legislature.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

You will always find me ready to make any advance for the Contingencies of either House of the Provincial Parliament, but in all other respects I am constrained, by His Majesty's instructions, from assent, unless at the concurrent request of the two branches of the Legislature.

Mr. Wilson of Wentworth, seconded by Mr Hamilton of Wentworth, moved, that the Honorable the Legislative Council should be requested to join in an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying that he would be pleased to advance a sum of money in aid of the appropriation for printing Statutes;—And also, in another Address, praying His Excellency to advance a sum of money to remunerate Robert Nichol, Esquire, for service by him rendered to this Province respecting our financial relations with Lower Canada.

Which was carried.

Mr. Burwell, seconded by Mr. Wilmot, moved, that it might be resolved, that if the Honorable the Legislative Council concurred therein, that a joint Address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying him to advance a sum of money in aid of the appropriation for printing the statutes, and also to Robert Nichol, Esquire, to remunerate him for the services mentioned in the foregoing resolution.

Which was carried.

Messrs. Burwell, and Wilmot, were ordered to carry up the Honorable the Legislative Council the Resolutions, and request their concurrence thereto.

Mr. Burwell reported delivering the Resolution.

At half past one o'clock, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, was pleased, after giving the Royal Assent to the Bills, to prorogue the Parliament to the 26th April following.

Poetry.

ONE ROSE IS NOT A THORN.

The flower in all its sweetness,
Must wither and decay;
And soon, my friend, time's fleetness
Will bear thy frame away.
Though on thy cheek is blended
The rose and lily's bloom,
Death, ere thy day is ended,
May call thee to the tomb.

Give not a sigh of sadness
For joys that cannot last;
Prepare to live in gladness
When all these scenes are past;
Let Sharon's Rose be braided
In youth's uncertain morn;
'Twill be through life unfaded,
The rose without a thorn.

In the dark night of sorrow
'Twill be thy constant friend,
And at the coming morrow
Give all thy woes an end.
And when in pain reclining,
About to leave all care,
Sweet Sharon's rose, unpining,
Will shed its fragrance there.

Although the following Epigram is rather too Prurient-it is so admirable in its kind, we have found ourselves unable to refuse it a place in this corner.

And so on the whole,
He was sent back to dip in the Jordan!

LOYAL ORANGE ASSOCIATION.

THE Members of the Loyal Orange Lodge assembled at their Lodge-Rooms on Saturday, the 12th inst. in order to celebrate the Anniversary of King William the Third, Prince of Orange.—At two o'clock, they proceeded to Church, accompanied by the Band of the East York Militia, where a most excellent, edifying, and instructive Sermon was preached on the occasion by the Hon. and Rev. Doctor Strachan.—They then returned to their Lodge-Room, where an elegant dinner was prepared by Mr. Phair, in his accustomed good stile. The utmost decorum and conviviality prevailed.

The following Toasts were given:—

King George the Fourth.—Four times three.
The Memory of our late Sovereign.—Silence.
The Duke of York and the Army.—Three times Three.—Duke of York's March
The Duke of Clarence and the Navy.—Three times three.—Rule Britannia
The Duke of Wellington.—Three times three.—St Potrick's Day.
The Memory of the late Duke of Richmond.—Silence.
Sir Peregrine Maitland.—Three times three.—British Grenadiers.
The Hon. and Rev. Doctor Strachan.—Three times three.—An Anthem.
The Militia of Upper-Canada.—Three times three.—York Quick Step.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of June last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 24th day of July instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby consoling, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Monday the first day of September next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed WITNESS our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL. Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

Editorial Commentary.

It appears that 276 Vessels, bringing 6,107 Passengers, have arrived at the port of Quebec, from Great Britain, during the present season.

The accounts from Spain are contradictory; but we see no reason to change the opinion expressed in our last number The Greeks manage their revolt with a degree of skill, courage, and perseverance, infinitely surpassing what has been displayed by any other of those oppressed nations of Europe who have lately endeavoured to free themselves from the scourge of despotism:—a long continued and horrible system of oppression and insult, inflicted upon them by a race of cruel and barbarous infidels, has not been able utterly to destroy that noble spirit which has distinguished their country from the earliest ages.—and Greece has still her sages and heroes worthy of immortal record—Her day of freedom is at hand—the pale crescent of the Barbarians is waning fast, and must shortly set for ever on the fair regions of Europe.

Having lately observed some Communications, both real and affected, in several American papers, and in one or two of respectability in the Lower Province, bemoaning the introduction of scientific boxing after the fashion of England, into this Continent—we cannot forbear making a few remarks on the subject We have no intention to vindicate a practice which has been pretty generally denounced, although we might be able, probably, to urge some considerations in support of the late MR. WINDHAM's doctrine on the same subject. But, when we see the editor of the New York Evening Post concluding his philippic in these words "In the name of decency let us refrain for manners sake, at least, at present not say England at once, the only country where scientific honorable boxing is practised), in this particular," our recollection is involuntarily fixed upon the savage, brutal, & cannibal-like mode of fighting invented, we will not say adopted, by the U States, for in no other country under the sun, civil or uncivil, is there any thing half so beastly and revolting.—This inconsistent revilement of a more honorable and manly practice, is of a piece with the boast of liberty, by a people who tolerate slavery, in its most disgusting aspect, in what they are pleased to term free states!—" Out upon the varlets!"—We will say to Jonathan, in the language of Scripture, " pull out the beam from thine own eye, then shall thou see more clearly [illegible]

The meanest scoundrel in England would scorn to strike his opponent when prostrate before him—much less would he borrow the gnawing and ravenous propensities of the hyæna, or glutton, and bite off his nose, or his ears, or tear out his eyes with his fingers or thumbs—or seek to emasculate him in a manner too infamous to be named. Jonathan, inflated with vain-glory, may search England through and through, & he will find no such scenes as are occasionally exhibited in almost every village throughout the Union, but especially in the Southern States—where men (calling themselves, when in their sober senses, the children of light,) may be seen biting and tearing each other on the ground, like dogs worrying vermin.—An exchange of this heart-sickening brutality for the deprecated system of boxing, as practised in England, would certainly not be for the worse, notwithstanding all the affected superiority and squeamishness of our superlative brother Jonathan, whose conceit in this particular is ridiculous and unbearable.

We have received the Prospectus of the CANADIAN MAGAZINE, but it is too late, either for publication, or further comment this week.

LONDON, May 30.

The Moniteur of Tuesday contains an article from Petersburgh, dated the 1st of May, which states as certain, that the war between France and Spain will not cause any change in the harmony existing between Great Britain and Russia, and that the latter, "following the example of the Cabinet at St James's is resolved under all circumstances, to maintain the strictest neutrality.

British Parliament.—Sir J. Mackintosh, pursuant to notice, made a motion for a reformation of the criminal laws of Great Britain In the course of his speech, he remarked, that in France there were only six capital felonies, and in England there were 800; that in France, capital punishments had decreased, while those in England were increasing. Sir J. Mackintosh wished to substitute transportation and imprisonment in place of the many laws for capital punishment There was a majority of ten against the resolution as offered by Sir J. Mackintosh.

Mr. Martin rose for leave to bring in a bill to prevent Bull-baiting. Mr Brougham wished to know whether his honfriend intended to extend his bill to hunting, dog-fighting, pigeon shooting, and fishing. The last sport he considered should certainly be included, for he recollected the late Mr. Windham had described this as the most barbarous of all sports, since it inflicted double torture—it tortured the bait, and it tortured the fish. Unless the sports he had mentioned were included, he should oppose the bill. After some debate, the motion of Mr. Martin was rejected—for the question 18—against it 47—majority 29.

Sinews of War—Letters from the French capital estimate the expenses of the war in the Peninsula at no less than £40,000 sterling per diem!

THE GREEKS AND TURKS.

If the Spaniards, with ten-fold advantages, had shown one half the spirit and energy that the Greeks have done, there would not now have been a hostile Frenchman in the Peninsula.

A letter from Malta, dated April 21, says:—"Several vessels, amongst which are some English and Maltese, have been latterly chartered to carry Greek prisoners from Turkish ports to Alexandria, Tripoli, Tunis, &c. where they have been sold as slaves This Government has given notice of their determination to put a stop to such proceedings, and persons so offending are to be proceeded against in the Court instituted in this island for the trial of piratical offences."

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 26.

On the 23d of this month, several discharges of artillery announced the birth of a new imperial prince, who has been named Abdul Medschid; since then all the mosques and minarets have been illuminated. The Sultan is gone to his summer residence, which is called Bekitasaf The new born child has just been attacked with an epileptic fit.

The Captain Pacha is still on the point of setting sail for the Archipelago. A very considerable Greek fleet, divided into three squadrons, and having several fire-ships, is lying in wait for him at the entrance of the Dardanelles.

A private letter from Frankfort, of 27th April, states, that a Greek fleet had attacked and defeated, in the waters of Candia, an Egyptian squadron, convoying a large fleet, laden with arms and munitions of war, destined for the Ottoman armies in that quarter.

Mynheer brought to his senses.—The Dutch Government have, at last, agreed to restore the treasure found in the wreck of the Lutine frigate, (£1,000,000) Mr. Canning having threatened to enforce the demand, if not voluntarily complied with.

High crimes and misdemeanors!—The chiefs of the Army of the Faith charge it as crimes against the Constitutionalists, that they have destroyed the Inquisition, suppressed monasteries, and expelled the Jesuits.

RUINS OF BALBEC.

Dr. Richardson, who visited the ruins of the magnificent temple at Balbec, in Syria, in his late travels, is of opinion that this was first built by Solomon and rebuilt by the Romans. The workmanship of the bottom stones is similar to that of some that were cut at Jerusalem in the time of that king. In the walls of this temple are some of the heaviest stones that were ever moved by human hands or human machinery. Dr. R. measured one stone, which was 67 feet long, 14 feet broad, and 9 fee thick; two others were nearly of the same dimensions, and the three were placed more than 20 feet above the foundation. In no other building on earth can such ponderous masses be found This temple has been a place both of pagan and Christian worship. The ruins are about 40 miles north of Damascus.

From the New York Patriot

The Mariner's Compass.—Capt. Scoresby, in the journal of his voyage to the northern whale fishery, on the coasts of Spitzbergen and Greenland, in 1821, in the ship Baffin, makes the following remark on the local attraction of the ship on the compasses:

"The Baffin having an iron tiller, and much heavy ironwork about the rudder, has an extraordinary deviation in her compasses. In her first voyage, (1820) it was still more considerable, and not a little dangerous, before it was discovered. It produced an error of 4 degrees of latitude in one day's run on a N. E. by E. course—the deviation on that point being 22 degrees. On carrying a pocket compass round the quarter deck, to ascertain the cause of attraction, I discovered that it was principally owing to the piping or cuimney of the cabin stove, which had been inadvertently made of sheet iron, and had consequently an attractive energy, (according to Mr. Barlow's investigations) equal to a pillar of solid metal of the same quantity and diameter. On removing this chimney, though eight feet distant from the binnacle, the deviation was diminished more than two-thirds."

We do not recollect to have seen any observations on the effects produced on the compass, by the very general introduction of the iron cable, as a substitute for cordage:—Some of our new ships too, have the addition of iron machinery, and tillers at the head:—We have no doubt that valuable observations have been made on this subject, by many of our able and intelligent ship-masters, engaged in the packet lines to Europe, and we hope, for the general interest of the sea service, as well as of science, that they will communicate them to the public.

Diminution of the Sun!—Baron Lindenau has recently published some observations respecting the diminution of the solar mass. It will be found, he says, that the sun may have been imperceptibly subject to successive diminution since the science of astronomy has been cultivated. The Baron supposes the sun's diameter to be 800,000 miles—1,204,000,000 feet, or nearly 2000 seconds We have not, he observes hitherto possessed any instrument for measuring the diameter of heavenly bodies to a second. The sun may therefore diminish 12,000 miles of its diameter, or 2,162,000 feet, without the possibility of its being perceived. Supposing the sun to diminish daily two feet, it would require 3000 years to render the diminution of a second of its diameter visible.

THE DESERTED WIFE.

Letter from a deserted wife in America, to a faithless Husband.

"MY DEAR HUSBAND,—I who had expected your return from Europe with painful anxiety—who had counted the slow hours which parted you from me—think how I was shocked at hearing you would return no more, and that you had settled with a mistress in a distant state. It was for your sake I lamented. You went against my earnest entreaties; but it was with a desire which I thought sincere, to provide a genteel maintenance for your little ones, whom you said you could not bear to see brought up in the evils of poverty. I might now lament the disappointment, in not sharing the riches which I hear you have amassed, but I scorn it.—What are riches compared to the delight of sincere affection? I deplore the loss of your love, I deplore the frailty which has involved you in error, and will I am sure, as such mistaken conduct must, terminate in misery. But I mean not to remonstrate. It is, alas! too late; I only write to acquaint you with the health, and some other circumstances, of myself and those little ones whom you once loved.

"The house you left us in could not be supported without an expence which the little sum you left behind could not long supply. I have relinquished it, and have retired to a neat little cottage, thirty miles from town. We make no pretensions to elegance; but we live in great neatness, and, by strict economy, supply our moderate wants with as much comfort as our desolate situation will allow. Your presence, my love, would make the little cottage a palace.

"Poor Emily, who has grown a fine girl, has been working a pair of ruffles for you; and as she sits by my side, often repeats with a sigh,—" When will my dear Papa return?" The others are constantly asked me the same question; and little Henry, as soon as he began to talk, learned to lisp in the first syllable he ever uttered,—" When will Papa come home?" Sweet fellow! he is now sitting on his stool at my side, and as he sees me drop a tear, asks me why I weep, for Papa will come home soon He and his two brothers are frequently riding on your walking-cane, and take particular delight in it because it is Papa's

"I do assure you I never open my lips to utter one sentence of your absence; but I cannot prevail on myself to bid them cease to ask when you will return, though the question frequently extorts a tear (which I hide in a smile), and wrings my soul, while I suffer in silence. I have taught them to mention you with the greatest ardour of affection in their morning and evening prayers, and they always add of themselves a petition for your speedy return.

"I spend my time in giving them the little instruction I am able. I cannot afford to place them at an eminent school, and do not choose that they should acquire meanness and vulgarity at a low one. As to English, they read alternately, three hours every morning, the most celebrated poets and prose writers; and they can write, though not an elegant, yet a very plain and legible hand

"Do not, my dear, imagine that the employment is irksome; it affords me a sweet consolation in your absence. Indeed, if it were not for the little ones, I am afraid I should not support it. I think it will be a satisfaction to you to hear that by retrenching our wants and expences, we are enabled to pay for every thing we have bought since we are out of debt, and consequently live in a state of independence and happy from the want of any necessary.

"Pardon my interrupting you; I mean to give you satisfaction—Though I am deeply injured by your error, I am not resentful. I wish you all the happiness you are capable of, and am your once loved, and still affectionate

"EMILIA.

IRELAND.

There has been no relaxation in the system of outrage which has existed in the South of Ireland for so long a period; nor is there the least sign of returning tranquillity.—The details received in the latest Provincial Journals, prove that the spirit of insurrection is rather gaining ground; and that the means hitherto adopted to put it down have been ineffectual. The only change which has taken place in the arrangements of Captain Rock, is, that murder seems to be interdicted; even this is a boon; for the destruction of property is of a trifling importance when compared with that of life. Something or other, however, more operative in its nature, must be applied to the disorders of Munster, and that speedily, or else the entire face of the country must, of necessity, become a barren wilderness.

From the Cork Advertiser.

The following notice was received through the Post Office [illegible] Rogers, a gentleman engaged in the butter trade, who may be said to live within the city, at least very much within the suburbs—His residence is on the Wellington Road, and but a short distance from the turn to the Barracks.

"SIR,—I am sorry to be under the necessity of troubleing you with those few lines which I hope you will comply with my wishes and if not so sure as you do refuse me so sure with the Assistance of God my men shall visit you and then mark the consequence you have not a single pens worth within or abroad but shall be consumed to ashes and if not you shall be watched day and night and you shall share the same fate of Mr. Hoskings and the other gentlemen of the county if we cant get at yourself your son will Do as well as I under stand he goes to the Country riding about for as pleasure and my wish is that you should discharge both your inside and out side servants men.

"if you Do this you shall have a good friend in me and shall never trouble you any more but if you no that it is in my power to Do you a warning and let ther be no necessity of any this but you may rely on this and depend upon it.

"No more at present But remains your sincere friend the Brave united and Commander of the united forces.

"CAPT. JOHN ROCK

"minds what I tells you again and in partical by the onside servant."

(From the Cork Chronicle of Wednesday)

We copy the following "raw head and bloody bones" notice from The Constitution, or Cork Morning Post. Upon attentively perusing it, it will not require much sagacity to pronounce it "a weak invention of the enemy;" a minute inspection of the phraseology and spelling, badly blended as it is, will readily shew this awful notice to be nothing but a designing hoax, by a party we need not name.

All sworn to walk knee deep in orange blood.

Done at midnight in full assembly of the Royal Irish levellers this 15 day of may 1823 the last year but one for Tirants.

From the Dublin Journal.

Perseverance in the execution of the insurrection act will, no doubt, finally subdue the obdurate spirit of the insurgents; [illegible] and what I have to [illegible] is carried by their agitators, [illegible] and notwithstanding the horror expressed in Parliament against the application of martial law, it is yet a question whether the objects of humanity would not be soonest attained by it than by the slow process of trying them at Special Sessions. None will accuse us of harbouring sentiments either unconstitutional, or tinctured with the least feeling of cruelty; but it would be kindness to the people themselves, to convince them, that their objects are utterly impracticable—that society could not subsist under the law they wish to establish—and that were it possible to realise their views—namely, the occupancy of the land without paying rent or tithe—through force, a civil war would immediately commence among themselves, in the strong would claim a larger share than the weak—and the elements of rapine and bloodshed would be engendered from the very nature of their new circumstances; but before the insurgents could ever arrive at the first point in their system, the whole power of the civilized community of Great Britain and Ireland would be exerted against them, and a war of extermination would leave the field without occupants.

It is probable the peasantry do not calculate upon a result of this kind, and also, that they will not listen to any salutary advice, either from the Judges at the Sessions, nor from the Clergy at the Altar, and therefore, considering them incorrigible, as far as persuasion and the power of the insurrection-act ought to have influence, we see no reason that martial law should be deemed a measure of terrible severity, for truly, if the insurgents shall pursue their plans of outrage much longer, the well effected part of the community will be left no other resource for defence and protection against savage barbarity.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

The London Sun of the 31st May, assures the public that what they "have previously said respecting negociations between France and the new Spanish Ministers has been confirmed, that they are now actually in progress, and that the whole has been arranged with the full knowledge and sanction of the British Government. It is added, that many of the Cortes have really been absented themselves, upon the understanding that they are not to be molested when the new order of affairs is established." The paper further says, that "there is no foundation for the report that Austria was assembling an army, and that we may confidently add, that Austria, Russia, and Prussia have determined to adopt the same neutral policy which regulated the conduct of the British Ministers. The next information expected from Spain will, it is supposed, state the return of the King to Madrid and the final adjustment of the differences between France and Spain; and from the same quarter we learn that the terms offered by the former are such as will be satisfactory to Europe in general."

Very like Military Occupation.

It is affirmed says, the Journal de Toulouse, that the grandees of Spain and the ancient Cortes assembled at Madrid, are to confer the title of Regent of the kingdom on the Duke of Angoulemo till king Ferdinand be set at liberty.

MINA.

In 1810. Colonel M. Ximenes, who was, with a number of other Spanish prisoners, on their way to France, set free by Mina, who destroyed the escort, published an account of this celebrated Chief, of which the following is a translation—From this it will be seen that he is now but little more than forty.

"Mina is a well made man, of a florid complexion, robust, and about five feet eight inches high, a man of few words, frank in his manner, detesting women, for he will not allow one to be with an officer or a soldier of his party, nor, indeed, will he keep an officer or a soldier with him who is attached to them; he is between 30 and 30 years old, scarce ever eats, and never sleeps more than two hours in the night, and then always with his loaded pistols in his girdle, and his room always locked on the few nights he ever passes in a village. He is very thoughtful; never communicative; his officers never, by any accident, know where he intends to march. The instant the drum beats, whether it is for roll-call or not, he insists upon their all appearing, and the officers mounted, (that is, the captains, for none others are allowed horses) and their mules with baggage loaded. When least expected, he places himself at the head of his army, saying, "Follow me!" and often he marches them in this way thirty miles. Whenever a volunteer of infantry joins Mina, he is not allowed to bring any thing but a pair of sandals, half-stockings, breeches, and jacket.—Whenever his shirt is dirty, he goes to the first house near him, enters, and exposes the shirt, and says he has been robbed, &c. and that it is dirty, give me a clean one." The countryman changes with him; and, if at the time, washes it, and gets his own back; if not, he keeps Mina's, and Mina the countryman's. His arms are all ready on the outside, but he is particularly careful to have them well cleaned within, and good locks and flints this cavalry, at this time, consisted of 180 intrepid and ant men, dressed like hussars, with jackets and blue pantaloons; caps like the rest of the army, with this difference, that they have about a yard of red cloth hanging down their backs, in a point from the cap, and a gold tassel at the end.

Whenever a youth wishes to enlist in the cavalry, after being well examined by Mina, and questioned, he calls the commanding officer of the infantry and says—" This boy wishes to serve in the cavalry; take him first with you, and let me know how he behaves." The first action they are engaged in, this captain who commands the infantry, and is on horseback, keeps the boy close to him during the whole of the action, and watches narrowly how he behaves; and after having been four times in action, and if he distinguishes himself, the captain brings him to Mina, and says, "this lad will do; he is worthy to die for his country." Mina then furnishes him with arms and horse, closely watching him himself, to see how he behaves. By these means, his corps is composed of the most desperate and intrepid Spaniards that live.

Anecdotes.

ACCOUNT OF SOME SINGULAR VOWS MADE BY THE KNIGHTS IN THE TIMES OF CHIVALRY.

In the history of Bertrand du Guesclin, it is recorded, that Du Guesclin, before he departed for a course of arms, proposed by an Englishman, heard mass; and, when he was making the offering at the altar, he also offered to God the arms he promised to use against the infidels, if he became victor. Soon after this, he made a challenge to maintain against another Englishman; the Englishman, throwing down his gage of battle, swore he would never sleep in bed till he had accomplished it. Bertrand, taking up the gage, vowed to eat only three cops in wine, in the name of the Holy Trinity, till this oath was over. These facts, from histories, justify the old romance writers, and enlighten some obscure passages in Dante, and other ancient authors.

"Personal valour dictated also singular vows: "James d'Endelée says Froissart, in his History, had made a vow, that, in the next battle in which the King of England, or either of his sons, should appear, he would be the first assailant, the best warrior on their side, or that he would die in the attempt"—Du Guesclin, being at the seige of Montcontour, swore never to eat meat, nor put off his clothes, day or night, till he had taken the place; and his squire of honor at the siege of Breffiere, in Poitou, promised, before God, to plant, that day, on the tower of the city, the banner of his master, which he carried, crying, "Du Guesclin! Du Guesclin!" and he performed it.—The same history reports, that the besieged made vows to eat all their beasts, and, as their last resource, to eat one another, in the rage of hunger, rather than yield the town; while the besiegers, on their part, swore to maintain the siege through their lives; and die in battle, or take the place by the force of assault."

What a simpleton knave, and what he don't know!—A well known simpleton, who had for many years been employed in carrying the corn to mill for the poor house in the town in which he lives, was one day accosted by the miller in the following manner: "John, they say you are a fool—that you don't know any thing." "Hah, hah!" said John that can't be true, for I do no some things, though I may not know other things. "But I can tell you what I do know, and what I don't know." "I am glad of it," replied the miller, "now let us hear John, what you do know" "I know," answered John, "that the miller's hogs grow fat." "Very well, that's true, John; now please to inform me what you don't know," "I don't know," said John scratching his head, "whose corn they are fed on."

with his snuff box in his hand, and said, "Well, my boys, what's the matter? Eh, cannon! Well, if it kills you, it kills you, that's all, my boys; march on, and never mind it."

Cornish Anecdote—The following anecdote is related by a late traveller in Cornwall:

About three years ago two young farmers came to me, and after their accustomed obeisance, the following dialogue took place between us:

"Farmer—Your Reverence, Zir when woul it be convenient for you to cum and berry feyther?

"Parson—Why, sir, about three months ago.

"Farmer—Why, sir, I hedn't time you may depend.

"Parson—What! no time to bury your father!

"Farmer—No, sir, 'twere harest time, and we were busy, the horses and all.

"Parson—How did you keep him.

"Farmer—Why, sir, I do hope you'll not be angry, but when feyther died, mother put on a white shirt, and set 'en up in chimmer"—and mother put a nub of salt in his mouth, and a nub or two in his eyes, and he kept very wall; for feyther war a main spare man. So maister Trewern, our tailor, coomed in 'nother day, and he says, "Well, how's maister then?" "Oh, (said mother) he's up in chimmer." So Maister Trewern went up in chimmer, and when he went up close to feyther, he seen'en dead in his white shirt, and the nub of salt in his mouth and eyes—he were frietned, and he geed a jump back, and hitched his foot in a hole in the planching which drowed'en down, and broke his arm—and so mother said she won'nd't keep feyther any longer, and sent Will and I over to know when woul be convenient for you to cum and berry feyther."

45. Easy method of breaking Glass in any required direction

Dip a piece of worsted thread in spirits of turpentine; wrap it round the glass in the direction that you require it to be broken, and then set fire to the thread, or apply a red hot wire round the glass, and if it does not immediately break, throw cold water on it while the wire remains hot. By this means glass that is broken may often be fashioned, and rendered useful for a variety of purposes.

Mode of Dyeing Cotton Nankeen colour.

46 Mr. Hess, of Zurich, gives the following process for dyeing Nankeen colour:—

Boil leaves of the willow in very clear water, afterwards past the decoction through a linen cloth strainer, and add isinglass till the liquor is entirely limpid. The willow leaves, besides the colouring matter which they contain, have still the property of tan, a property that would weaken the colouring matter, and render it unsolid, if isinglass was not added to this preparation. The water will serve to dye thread or cotton stuffs, and the shades of it can be varied at pleasure. To render this dye more perfect, the stuffs will be soaked in a wash of nitrous acid covered with water—which renders the colour more brilliant, and prevents it from turning pale. Besides the beauty of this colour, the process is so simple, and gives so fine a dye, that any one can prepare it without the assistance of a dyer.

47 Barley Coffee.—A bachelor in the habit of using two parts rye and one foreign coffee mixed, discovering lately a great improvement in his morning beverage, called his cook to task for her extravagance in using all foreign coffee, when it was found that barley malt had been used, and no coffee at all. This discovery was made nearly twelve months ago, and the barley has been substituted ever since, the gentleman declaring it very little inferior to best Java. The barley is sprouted and dried, and then toasted and prepared like other coffee.—Winchester Rep.

Application of Virgin Honey

48 The following article appeared in a late Italian news paper:—

"A woman at Florence, after losing 4 children by cutting their teeth, saved 5 others by rubbing their gums with virgin honey on the first indication of pain and repeating the operation whenever the children showed signs of uneasiness. It is added, that the same experiment has been tried with equal success on other children."

49. Russia Leather—The preparation of fine Russia leather so well known for its quality and peculiar smell, is described at large in the 3d vol. of Mr. Took's "View of the Russian Empire."—The hides are first put into a weak alkaline lye, to loosen the hair, and afterwards scraped on a beam. If finer are calves' hides, they are reduced by dog's dung and a sour oatmeal drench, and afterwards tanned with great care and frequent handling. The bark used here is seldom oak, but, where it can be got, the bark of the black willow, or, if this cannot be had, birch bark. They are then dyed either red or black, these being the two colours most esteemed. For the red, the hide is first soaked in alum, and then dyed with Brazil wood; the black is procured as usual with an iron liquor. The leather is then smeared with birch tar, (this gives the peculiar smell so much prized in book binding as it possesses the valuable property of protecting the book from worms) and it is then finished by various manipulations. The streaked or barred surface is given to the leather by a very heavy steel cylinder wound round with wires.

50. A valuable Receipt for the Strangles in Horses, never

Take half a pint of sack or any strong sweet wine; and a quarter of a pint of salad oil, and give the mixture every other day, for four times; adding, afterwards a table spoonfull of sharp white wine vinegar, and blowing a small quantity of the same into each nostril: keep warm, and ride mode rately.

Natural History.

The description below, which it is said may be relied upon, is so like that of an enormous Turtle, we cannot help supposing it to be no other than a large species (hitherto undescribed) of the tribe of marine animals to which the common edible Turtle belongs. Ed.

From the New-York Statesman.

Sea Monster.—The following is a more particular description than has been published of the animal lately discovered by Capt. Brown, denominated in some of the papers the Sea-serpent or Sea-devil. Dr. Mitchill derived his description from a conversation with Capt. Brown and his crew, and it may therefore be relied on as authentic.

Capt. J. Brown of the ship Douglass, was on a voyage from New York to Curacoa, and on the 6th day of April, 1823, in latitude 35.04, and in longitude 68 deg. 30 min. west from Greenwich, saw a very uncommon creature on the surface of the water. He descried the object at the distance of between 4 and 5 miles, and it being to windward, he bore up towards it under an impression that it was a wreck or vessel in distress.

The weather was fine, the air clear, and the sea unruffled. The time was 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He approached it within fifty or sixty feet. There was every opportunity to make observations, on the part which was above the surface of the sea. It was soon discovered that the object was alive, and had limbs in motion; and that it had a progressive course at the rate as was estimated, of one mile and a half per hour.

The figure was elliptical, and the highest part was at least twelve feet above the surface, though in the opinion of some persons on board, it was twenty or twenty five. The length of the bare or exposed part was estimated by him to be between twenty-five and thirty feet, though some of the beholders thought it was as much as forty. The whole surface seemed to be divided by seams lengthwise, like the bottom of a clinker built boat turned upside down. The arms, fins, or organs of motion, propelled the body with its big end foremost, as if by the operation of skulling or rowing. The fins were four, two on each side, and the pair nearest the eyes were shorter than the other two. The length of the longest he judged to be from twelve to fifteen feet; and of the shortest from five to six.—The limb projecting from the head, or place where the eyes were situated, was estimated at fifteen or twenty feet; though some of the beholders considered them all a third longer.

The colour was a dark brown, and the stripes or seams, black like a boat whose bottom had lately been paid with pitch. The surface was beset with barnacles.

The creature took no notice of the ship, and made no alteration in its course. It was judged prudent to give it no disturbance. Accordingly Capt. Brown, after observing the enormous production as long as he pleased, left it and pursued his voyage.

The number of persons on board, who witnessed this uncommon spectacle, was thirteen. The eye was as large as a breakfast plate, and the colour appeared to one of the observers to be reddish.

Agriculture.

FROM THE AMERICAN FARMER.

On the various ways of preparing and employing Indian Corn.

There are many things the rich have no need to do, the doing of which would be of infinite advantage to the poor, if they had the knowledge necessary to turn that product of their labour they have most in their power, to their own comfort. You may perhaps smile when you perceive this preamble is to usher into notice the virtues of Indian Corn. I will allow you to do so, if you can find in my enumeration one use to which I put that valuable grain, unworthy of being generally known.

—In order to swell the list, I mention some of the purposes for which it is used, that are known to every one, before I enter into the detail of preparing a dish which I consider the best, healthiest, and most palatable food we have. I will begin with it before the head is perfectly formed—it can then be made, if properly done, a fine pickle. We all know how delicious roasted ears are; when fit for this use it will make a superior starch; it scalded and dried, you may have roasting ears in the middle of winter. When the grain is hardened, you have food for all the domestic animals in the shocks, tops, &c. The leaves of the shock or hucks by slitting them finely, make excellent matrasses or under beds.

Original Poetry.

The following lines were written by a very young lady, highly gifted, and full of genius and sensibility—who fell an early victim to the tomb in a foreign land.—They were never before published.—Ed.

TO ANNA:—On seeing her shed tears as she read the poem upon the Death of my Father.—

What first awoke affection's sigh,
And drew the tear from pity's eye,
And ting'd your cheek with crimson dye?
'Twas Sympathy, swe Anna!

What cheer'd a hapless child of woe,
And bade her anguish'd bosom know
Bright hope's reanimated glow?
'Twas sympathy, sweet Anna!

What sooth'd an ORPHAN'S drooping heart
With friendship's ever magic art,
A balm delightful to impart?
'Twas sympathy, sweet Anna!

Lives there then a fairer flower,
Still born in life's eventful hour,
'Neath these skies where tempests lower,
Than sympathy, sweet Anna?

Is there one, whose heavenly dew,
And breathing sweets, and lovely hue,
So fair, so bright appears to you
As sympathy, sweet Anna?

"No," answers every failing tear,
"No glowing flow'rets' tints appear
So bright, so lovely, and so dear
As sympathy, to Anna!"

Dear Girl! preserve it in your breast,
Its charms will make that bosom blest,
For pity's dew drops stand confest
In sympathy, sweet Anna.—

Death.

Died at Drummond's Island, on the 20th ult. Col. Robert Dickson, aged 55, late Superintendant of the Western Indian Nations, in His Britannic Majesty's service. During the late war he was active in saving the lives, and alleviating the wants of our prisoners among the Indians.—Buff. Pat.

Mr. Dickson was a native of Dumfries, in Scotland, and emigrated to Canada, we believe, nearly forty years ago. The greatest part of his life since he has been spent amongst the Indians, as a trader in time of peace. During the late war, he used his influence amongst those savages (which was very considerable) to the benefit of his King and Country, and to mitigate their ferocious disposition as much as possible towards the enemy, when any of those were in their power.

In Charlottenburg, on the 22d ultimo, in the 80th year of her age, Mrs. ANN M'KENZIE, relict of the late Mr. JOHN M'KAY, who died 14th March, 1820 aged 85. They were both natives of Dunrose, Sutherland-shire North Britain, which place they bade farewell to, in the Autumn of 1773.

"Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way."—Gray.

PROPOSALS

FOR PUBLISHING MONTHLY, AT MONTREAL,

THE

CANADIAN MAGAZINE,

AND

LITERARY REPOSITORY.

THE encouragement which Literature has obtained in the United Kingdom, may be attributed, in a great measure, to the monthly Publication of every thing which emanates from the Press, abounding in a variety of original Biography, and other pieces, written solely for works of this description, which residents in this remote quarter of the globe find it difficult to obtain without considerable expense. As much of the contents of these Publications is doubtlessly of a local nature and devoid of interest to the Canadian reader, it is only intended to take the most valuable pieces of a general character for the REPOSITORY; thus affording to the public at large, in these Provinces, those literary gratifications which our friends and society generally, throughout the British Dominions in Europe, have so long enjoyed from the genius and ability of our countrymen.

It is not the intention of the proposed work to enter into political discussions, foreign or domestic; when, however, impartial and well written articles are received from home, they will be re-printed; the remaining part of the undertaking will, it is conceived, be most appropriately disposed of in giving publicity to local communications relating to the condition of our Townships and Settlements; in promoting the cause of Religion Virtue, Morality, Education, and the general diffusion of Agricultural and other useful knowledge.

A regular supply of the most popular and esteemed British publications, are received, and no effort will be spared to render the selections of the CANADIAN MAGAZINE worthy of the patronage which is anticipated in both Provinces.

A brief summary of Foreign and Domestic News, Army Promotions, State of the Montreal Market, Agricultural Report, State of the Weather, Shipping List, &c. will be found at the end of each Number.

CONDITIONS.

1st—The July number will be published early in August; it will be printed upon fine paper, and be properly arranged for binding half yearly. Each number will contain nearly 100 pages.

2d—The Subscription to be SIX DOLLARS, payable half yearly in advance: the first half year will be collected after the delivery of the first number. Postage payable by the Subscribers.

3d—Gentlemen desirous of obtaining the first Number, will please to affix their names to a Subscription List before the 24th instant; every Subscriber will be at liberty to withdraw his name at the end of six months.

4th—Subscription Lists will be found at the principal places of public resort, in Montreal and Quebec, and at the Post Offices of the principal Towns in the Upper Province.

Communications connected with the avowed object of this work (post paid) are requested to be addressed to the Editor of the Canadian Magazine, at the Book Store of the Publisher, Mr NICKLESS.

Montreal, 11th July, 1823

☞ Mr. JOSEPH NICKLESS, Bookseller, Notre Dame Street, Montreal, is authorised to make the necessary arrangements in the City and Quebec, to receive the signatures of Gentlemen disposed to patronize and subscribe for the proposed Magazine; and also to correspond on the same subject in the Upper Province.

PROPOSED CANAL BETWEEN LAKES ERIE AND ONTARIO.

Pursuant to Public Notice, a Meeting of the most respectable Inhabitants of the Niagara District, was this day convened at the Beaver Dam, to take into consideration and adopt measures for opening a Canal between Lake Erie and Ontario.

GEORGE KEEFER, Esq. of Thorold, called to the Chair,

GEORGE KEEFER, junr. was appointed Secretary

1st—On motion of John Clark, Esq. seconded by Mr. J. Northrop, the Report of Mr. Tibbet, the Engineer, appointed to level the route to the head of the Twelve Mile Creek, was read, and unanimously approved of. Ordered to be printed and circulated as general as possible.

2d—On motion of Mr. Thomas Dennis, seconded by Mr. Wood, Esq. an address to the Inhabitants of Upper and Lower Canada was read, approved of, signed by Chairman, and ordered to be printed.

3d—On motion of G. Adams, Esq. seconded by Mr. Woodruff, ordered that public notice be immediately given, that we intend petitioning the Legislature the next Session, for an Act to incorporate a Company, for the purpose of connecting Lake Erie and Ontario, with a commencement on Lake Erie, by the Twelve Mile Creek, and from the Grand River to Chippawa, and for the erection of Machinery on the route.

4th—On motion of S. Wood, Esq seconded by Mr Woodruff, moved that some suitable person be appointed to act as general agent, to be invested with as full power as the nature of the case will admit, to receive and make all communications, until the act is passed to incorporate the said Company, when he must call a general meeting of the stockholders in the most convenient situation, for them to adopt such measures as they may think advisable.

5th—On motion of Mr. R. Woodruff, ordered, that Wm. Hamilton Merritt, Esq be appointed to act as our Agent on this occasion.

6th—On motion of J. Clark, Esq. the thanks of the meeting be given the Chairman for his able management in the Chair.

Chairman.

Beaver Dam, 26th June, 1823.

ADDRESS TO THE INHABITANTS OF UPPER AND LOWER CANADA.

GENTLEMEN,

THE extraordinary exertions which our neighbours, the Americans, have made, and which they continue with the greatest perseverance for the improvement of their internal navigation, point out to those who wish well to this country, not only the importance of the subject, but the necessity which exists for similar exertions amongst ourselves; for on the success of efforts so speedily made, and continued with equal spirit and determination, the direct tendency of their skill and industry operating with our own sparingness, must be the actual loss of a great part of our trade.

On an examination of the state of the two countries, it must be evident, that the natural facilities possessed by this Province for such improvements, are, beyond comparison superior to those of our neighbours. The two great Lakes, which furnish so extensive a portion of our internal navigation, are in one part, so nearly connected, as to require an artificial cut of only two miles by which the water communication between them would be uninterrupted.

The ease with which so desirable an object might be effected, has been long known to many individuals present, and it must afford them pleasure to be enabled to communicate to the Public this interesting information, corroborated by the Report of an able and scientific Engineer.

The object of the present meeting, is to submit the outline of a plan, by which a very desirable matter might be carried into effect, in order to its being maturely weighed and well understood. Notice has been given, of an intention to petition the Legislature at its next Session, for an Act to incorporate a Company, with permission to raise a capital of twenty five thousand pounds, for the purpose of opening a Canal by the most eligible and convenient route, from Lake Ontario to the River Welland (Chippawa) and from thence to the mouth of the Grand River. The dimensions to be similar to the Erie Canal, in the state of New York, or capable of carrying boats from twenty to forty tons. And as the supply of water is abundant, it is in contemplation to divert part of it in favorable situations, for the use of machinery. In this scheme it is proposed to raise the above sum of twenty five thousand pounds. The shares to be six pounds five shillings each. Ten per cent. of which will be required at the time of subscribing, and the remainder when called for at a month's public notice. The principal reason for making the shares small, are, that almost every individual may have an opportunity of taking one or more, and that it may be as general as possible.

Officers and managers, as usual on such occasions, will be chosen by the stockholders, when a sufficient amount shall have been subscribed. When ten thousand pounds of the stock shall have taken, it is proposed to commence cutting at Chippawa, and from thence in the direction of the Twelve Mile Creek, to Lake Ontario; and no doubt is entertained, but this part of it may be completed in one year from the time of commencement. The communication between the Chippawa and Grand River, will be undertaken as soon afterwards as the state of the subscription will allow, that is, when the whole, or major part of the stock shall have been taken up.

Agents will be appointed at Montreal, Quebec, Amherstburgh, and the most convenient intermediate situations, for the purpose of ascertaining at an early period, the amount of stock which the inhabitants of each place will be inclined to take, should our application to the Legislature for an Act of Incorporation be successful. It is desirable that the returns from those places should be furnished by the 1st October next, in order, (if favorable) that arrangements may be made to facilitate the work our next year, by commencing the 1st day of May ensuing.

The expence attending the cutting of the Canal, and the same particulars as to the expence which must be incurred in making the second cut; but one route which has been explored, between the Chippawa and Grand River is only five miles, the other, proposed three; and as the ground throughout both routes is favorable for cutting, it is presumed, the expence cannot exceed two thousand five hundred pounds.

A material advantage will result to the Western Districts of this Province, and those parts of the United States, which border on Lake Erie, if this last part of the design be effected, in consequence of the easy access to the mouth of the Grand River; it being always open for navigation at a much earlier period in spring, than the Ports of Buffalo and Fort Erie. It is the primary object of the Merchant, to save time and distance in the conveyance of his produce to market, and the route by the Grand River will unite these advantages. Such inhabitants as are settled on the upper part of the Grand River, and in the townships adjoining, will in common, with settlers on the Western shores of the lake, partake of the advantages of this early navigation; as the spring floods, by enabling them to float down their produce, will, when this part is completed, gain immediate access to the lower lake, and enable them to reach Montreal, while Buffalo and Fort Erie, remain enveloped in ice. An important benefit must likewise be derived by the owners and occupiers of land, within reach of the lake, and the banks of this river, from the certainty, that much of their valuable timber, will find easy and ready access to market after being converted into staves, and other descriptions of lumber, which are in constant demand at Quebec, for the supply of our West India Colonies. It is a melancholy subject, to reflect upon the immense tracts of fine timbered land, which, for want of such facilities, are at present not only unproductive to the owner, but acting as a constant drain upon the purse, whilst the time of remuneration seems from day to day to elude his pursuit, and after years of protracted hope, ends in final disappointment.

Need it be mentioned, that the farmers and others, the actual occupants of the soil, are not, (though undoubtedly great sufferers,) the only losers in this state of things.—No, the lower Canadian Merchant also equally, though not so immediately in the loss. He suffers from the deterioration in value of the property of his debtor, in the Upper Province, from the difficulty that debtor meets with in converting the produce of his farm and industry into a tangible shape for the creditors' satisfaction; and again, from the reduced value of such land as he holds in security, or has accepted in liquidation of debts contracted to him under a more favorable state of trade—the latter is interim, interesting from the profits of his mercantile pursuits;—in fact, it is for the general interest of the farmer, the mechanic, and the merchant, that something effectual should be undertaken, to promote their joint welfare.

Another source of profit to the immediate stockholders, will arise from the judicious use of the superfluous water, for the purposes of driving machinery, &c. and which, by proper management, might be made to reimburse them in a very few years for the entire outlay of their capital. This, too, is not something with the public convenience in part of the country where mill streams are both scarce and scant, is far from being one of minor importance. From Long Point, on the shore of Lake Erie, round to Dundas at the upper end of Lake Ontario, the only mill, now using a sufficient supply of water to carry on business, to an extent that may be considered mercantile, is that of Messrs. Clerk and Street, at the Falls.

The production of wheat, in a soil and climate so well adapted to its culture, must, of course, be considered one of our principal staples; but, to render this valuable to the farmer, it is necessary he should possess the means of converting it into a fit state for use, so that he may not only reap most of the benefit arising from the manufacture, but reduce the bulk and weight of his exportable commodity, so as to be able to enter the market less unfavorably, with respect to the transport charges, than at present.

As this Company will be justly entitled to all the advantages that will result from the command of the water through out the route of the Canal, the Mills now erected on that part of the Twelve Mile Creek, (which will be benefited by an additional supply of water,) must be purchased at a fair valuation, from the present proprietors, and be the property of the Company, after the completion of the cut.—Two flouring Mills of the best description, and other machinery, should be erected by the Company; a flouring mill, as near Chippawa as possible, to receive wheat and produce coming downwards from Lake Erie, and another as near Lake Ontario, to receive produce from the banks thereof, and dispose of all the intermediate situations.

Subjoined is a calculation upon good data, of the probable expence of the undertaking, contrasted with a sketch of the profit, which it is presumed would accrue to the Company.

To estimate of 1st Cut. from Chippawa, to Lake Ontario	£. 10,000 00
" Probable amt. of valuation of the different Mills, &c. on the Twelve Mile Creek, which it will be necessary to purchase,	4,000 00
Erecting two Grist Mills, Saw Mills, &c. with other Machinery,	5,625 00
Cut of GREEN 2d.	2,500 00
	£22,125 00

Hal'e. Cur'y.

By rental of machinery to be erected by the Company	£. 2000 00
" Interest on sale of the Intermediate Sites for Hydraulic purposes.	300 00
" Rental of Mills now erected	500 00

The proceeds from the sale of the Intermediate Sites, for Hydraulic purposes; the increased value of the Mills now erected, and the rental of the Company's two Grand Establishments on each end of the Canal, will, of itself, bring in a handsome Dividend to the Stockholders, on the amount necessary to complete the whole—leaving out the reasonable expectation, of a large sum that must be derived from the transportation of various articles. A Boat, carrying forty tons, will be taken up at the same expense, that two teams can be conveyed with a waggon at the present period.

If a sufficient degree of public spirit should not be found in the two provinces, to complete so great and noble an object, we trust, private interest will induce individuals to embark a portion of their Capital in a fund where a profit will be immediately realized, continue, and increase with the growing prosperity of the country.

GEORGE KEEFER, Chairman.

Beaver Dam, 28th June, 1823.

REPORT.

Having been called upon to level the ground between the River Welland, or Chippawa, and Lake Ontario, Report as follows;

—COMMENCED at Chippawa, on the 6th instant, 10 miles from its mouth, as stated to me, on Mr. John Brown's farm, Township of Thorold; explored from thence two routes, to the head waters of the 12 mile Creek; find the ridge of land between the two, requires a Cut of 26 feet on an average, for two miles; from thence, to the road in New Holland, 60 chains; from thence to Captain John Decou's—there is a fall of 17 feet in a distance of 20 chains; from thence to the brow of the Mountain, 71 chains; from thence to the foot of the Mountain, and on the surface of the west branch of 12 mile Creek, 50 chains—fall 242 feet; thence to Thomas' Mill, 107 chains 50 links—fall 5 feet—fall at the Mill, 12 feet 8 inches; thence to Campbell's mill Pond, 118 chains—fall 2 feet 4 inches; thence to mill, 14 chains—fall at the mill, 7 feet 10 inches; thence to Merritt's mill Pond, 139 chains 50 links—fall 9 feet 2 inches; thence to Adams' Mill 75 chains 60 links—fall at the Dam, 4 feet—from this did not measure or level to the Lake. I am informed, the distance is about 4 miles—do not suppose the fall to be more than 2 feet. The whole distance from Lake Ontario, to the mouth of Chippawa, is 27 miles and 50 links.

It will be necessary for the purpose of navigation, to make the above Cut 4 feet lower than the suface of the Chippawa, 7 feet wide at the bottom, and 19 feet at top or surface of the water, which will draw off as much as may be required. 4 feet above this, a tow path must be formed 8 feet wide on one side, and a Beam of 3 feet wide on the other, which will stop all the earth that may crumble off the sides from falling into the water; from those professions the bank may be raised a moderate elevation, leaving the top of the Cut 44 feet wide; the whole makes 310,780 cubic yards. From the great depth of the Chippawa at this place, the inhabitants having dug wells to a greater depth on each end of the Cut, and from the quality of the quality of the soil, which is clay, I do not apprehend the least danger of meeting with rock. From the peculiar advantages derived from this situation, the excavation can be effected at a comparitively trifling expence. A deep navigable river being situated at the commencement of the Cut, Boats can follow every foot of the way, and be so constructed that one man can unload them without loss of time. To give a clear and simple idea of this method, construct on each end of the Scow, a box similar to a Cart Body, which will be filled and discharge any quantity of earth in the stream. Suppose the farthest end of the Canal 2 miles, 2 men will man 2 Boats, or one man and a horse, while the one Boat is loading will take the other to Cole sea, (a 20 minute, and return in 20 minutes, [illegible] one hour at farthest,) and carry 20, 30, or 40 tons of earth, and so on alternately, and will keep 12 men at least, digging to supply the Scows; whereas, on the American Canal, it requires 2 men to remove the earth as fast as one man digs it, and the expence of Barrows and Plank, will be equal to the Scow; the average price of digging from 9 to 10 feet, is 8 cents per yard I am therefore confident, this Cut can be effected at 10 cents, or thirty thousand dollars. and Contractors will offer to take it for less money. (Tunnelling has been mentioned to me to be the cheapest method, but having never witnessed the practical part of it—cannot give an opinion.) From the termination of this Cut, the water will flow with an easy and gentle descent to Capt. John Decou's. It will be necessary to widen the stream, and cut off the points in many places; but as Mr. Hall Davis, will carry it through his farm, and Mr. Hiram Swayze, the greater part of his, the expence will be too trifling to form an item. From Mr. Decou's mill Dam, it will be necessary to carry the water through the farms of Messrs. Burnetson and Cooper, where nature has formed a ravine or Cut to the hand for the means. The expence of this Cut at 10 cents per yard, will not exceed seven hundred dollars. From this to the waters of the west branch of 12 mile Creek, on Mr. Adam Brown's farm, nature has continued her favours; the ravine extends with a gentle descent, or regular inclined plane the whole way, and one rail way may be formed to take up boats at once, or two can be constructed, if necessary, or more convenient. I am not sufficiently informed on this subject, to give a correct estimate, but will forward one as soon as I can obtain the necessary information. I am satisfied, however, from the favorable situation of this ravine, it can be locked with 24 good wooden locks, for twenty thousand dollars. It will be necessary to construct at Thomas' Mill, a wooden Lock, which from its height, will cost one thousand dollars; at Campbell's Mill, the Lock will cost five hundred dollars; at Merritt's Mill, the Lock will cost five hundred dollars; and at Adams' Mill, three hundred and fifty; from thence there is plenty of water to the head of Lake. I have likewise examined the Harbor, but am not sufficiently informed to give an opinion, as to the effect the water may produce on it for the purpose of deepening the Channel to admit Vessels. It will cost for a tow path through the woods, one hundred dollars per mile—but a small proportion of this distance passes through them—I will therefore compute it at fifty dollars per mile, at the extent making fifteen hundred dollars. The whole expence of the entire, exclusive of rail way, is thirty-four thousand five hundred and fifty dollars. I would suggest an improvement that will of course follow in a few years, viz: a Lock at the head of Mr Merritt's mill Dam, taken from a race way that can be dug at a trifling expence, from the foot of Mr. Campbell's mill Dam. A Lock on Col. Johnson's farm, at the head of Mr. Campbell's mill Dam, to another race-way at the foot of Mr. Thomas' mill Dam, and one between Capt. Decou's and the Chippawa—Those three will not average more than one thousand dollars each, and make the stream a regular Canal, the whole distance, with the exception of the Mountain.

Boats from 20 to 40 tons will navigate this stream with ease, and 2 men and a horse will take one from Lake Ontario, to Chippawa, in a day, or a day and a half at farthest. They navigate from 25 to 30 miles per day on the Erie Canal, on an average, and the Mountain here, will only cause a detention, of probably about 2 hours, in the ascent.

THE FIRST PROSPECTUS OF A NEW WORK
TO BE ENTITLED
THE
Canadian Annual Register;
OR,
A VIEW
OF THE
History, Politics, Literature, and Growth
OF THE
CANADAS,
IN ALL THAT CONSTITUTES THE WEALTH OF NATIONS.

TO BE CONDUCTED AND PUBLISHED ANNUALLY.
By CHARLES FOTHERGILL.
His Majesty's Printer in U. C.

THE lapse of sixty-five years since the commencement of DODSLEY'S Annual Register in England has shewn the vast importance, and increasing value of that great work;—a work which has become an authority of the highest respectability and consideration on every subject connected with English History (indeed one may say with the History of Europe,) since the period of its commencement;—and, if there be any cause of regret, it is that such an undertaking was not begun at an earlier period.

The number of editions which that work has passed through,—the high price it bears,—and the fact that no library is considered at all complete without it, sufficiently proves its great value and utility.—It forms, indeed, no inconsiderable library in itself; and, if a man had no other book, except this work, he would not want for instruction or amusement.

It is scarcely to be supposed, that a similar work, well conducted, would fail in proving of equal value and importance to other countries; and particularly to those in a state of comparative infancy—CANADA, especially, presents a fine field for such an undertaking—All that is known, or ever can be known, of its early history may be comprised in little more than an hundred pages; after which, by a similarity of plan with that adopted in the Annual Register of England, all the transactions, events, discoveries, and improvements of each year, worthy of preservation, may be given to the public at a very moderate expense,—less than the cost of the meanest Newspaper in the country;—gradually forming a library, which would contain every thing interesting, or having any reference to the NATURAL and CIVIL HISTORY of the COUNTRY, and becoming a book of such important reference as all the other books in the world, put together, could not supply.

Besides the more serious business of the State, which must necessarily occupy a large portion of the pages of such a work; now, that Newspapers and Magazines are generally conducted by men of respectable talents and attainments, it must occur to readers of every class, that articles of great interest and utility are continually occurring in those periodical publications, which deserve a more lasting record;—such a record is found in an Annual Register on the plan proposed, at a price considerably less than that of any respectable Newspaper, taken singly.—This Work will contain all that is considered worth preserving, and that is of interest to this country, in the various Newspapers, Magazines, and other Miscellaneous Publications, both of the old and new world.

That such of the readers of this Prospectus as are unacquainted with the plan of DODSLEY'S Annual Register, (which, with some alterations, additions, and improvements will be pursued in the present undertaking,) may form some judgment of its merits, we shall now proceed without further preface to give an outline of the

CANADIAN ANNUAL REGISTER.

SECTION I.

Will contain the ANCIENT HISTORY and ANNALS of the COUNTRY from its DISCOVERY to these TIMES.

SECT. II.

GENERAL POLITICS, and present situation of the BRITISH PROVINCES of NORTH AMERICA.—In time of war, this department of the work will be occupied with the details of that war.

SECT. III.

The CHRONICLE, comprehending a narrative, chronologically arranged, of every domestic incident, of the smallest interest to the public, which may have occurred during the year in any part of the British Provinces; but, more especially in the two Canadas. No event, or accident, of any importance, whatever may be its nature, will be omitted in this department.

SECT. IV.

The APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE will contain Marriages, Births, Deaths, Promotions, Removals, &c. &c. with average prices of Provisions, and articles of domestic growth for exportation—state of markets—shipping lists—arrivals—departures, &c. increase or decrease of foreign trade—abstracts of population—revenue, &c. &c. &c.

SECT. V.

PARLIAMENTARY REGISTER; containing a complete History of the proceedings of the Parliament of both Provinces, with the Speeches, Resolutions, &c. &c. and Lists, with the titles of the Acts passed during the session.

SECT. VI.

STATE PAPERS;—Proclamations; Orders of Council; Memorials; Petitions; Manifestos; Correspondencies; Acts and Debates of the Imperial Parliament, having any reference to this country, &c. &c.

SECT. VII.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES of Extraordinary Characters connected with Canada,

SECT. VIII.

NATURAL HISTORY; containing, not only the New Discoveries made in various parts of this vast continent; but, also, such extracts from new and valuable Books of Travels as describe, or have particular reference to any part of it.

SECT. IX.

AGRICULTURE.—This important section will contain NOTICES and Details of every foreign practice and discovery that may be of the slightest utility here.

SECT. X.

USEFUL PROJECTS;—New Pieces of Mechanism; Implements; Experiments; Inventions; Patents, &c. &c.

SECT. XI.

ANTIQUITIES, will contain such Details and Discoveries as tend to throw light upon the Ancient History of the Country.

SECT XII.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS—or such Original Productions contained in the more ephemeral publications of the day, week, or month, as may be worth preserving.

SECT. XIII.

POETRY, to be confined as much as possible to Original Productions, and great care will be observed in the selections.

SECT. XIV.

Account of Books, and other new publications having reference to the country.

Should any important changes occur in Europe, at all likely to affect this country, they will be also noticed under a suitable head.

As it is presumed that this work, even if conducted with no more than moderate skill and industry, will gradually become a standard book in this quarter of the world, it is unnecessary to have recourse to any of those arts which are commonly practised by the Booksellers and Reviewers in Europe to puff off their new publications. It is hoped this simple sketch of the design, and the manner in which the first volume (for the present year) will be got up, will be sufficient to obtain that patronage which is so necessary to the support of such an undertaking. If this work is encouraged, it will gradually become of vast importance to public men in every profession, as a book of reference, and in process of time will, in itself, contain an immense body of Canadian History, such as no other book or books could afford. Had such a work been commenced in England soon after the gloom of the middle ages began to disperse, instead of the year 1758—its value would have been now beyond all price.

It being necessary to insure the sale of at least 300 copies before the work is put to press; this Prospectus is therefore published, in order to ascertain the degree of patronage it is likely to obtain. The price to subscribers will be $3½—to non-subscribers, $4—printed on fine English paper, and handsomely done up in boards, and lettered.—No payment will be required, or desired, until the work is delivered—but an early intimation of the names and address of Subscribers is earnestly requested, either at the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or at any of the various Agents for the Weekly Register.

VALUABLE LAND IN OTONIBEE,

POSTSCRIPT.

Nearly the whole sheet being occupied by the Gazette, in consequence of the number and length of the Advertisements for insertion this week, The Register will be published on a separate Sheet, as a Supplement, on Saturday next, in time to be forwarded to the Country Subscribers by Monday's Mail.—Two Articles only, left to be continued from the last Register, being inserted in this Postscript.

MINA.

(Concluded from our last.)

The French call Mina the King of Navarre. In whatever town he enters he is sure to find every thing that he wants; the whole province thinks it an honour to have him as a guest. No officer in Navarre pays for his meals; every thing is brought out to him gratis. This extraordinary man has found means to get rid of all French Spies cleverly enough, and without putting them (the Spies) to death. Whenever any of his partizans have brought him any, he strips him stark naked to see if he has any papers, plans, or drawings; and, if he finds any thing of the sort, he calls instantly for one of the soldiers of his guard, and says—"Take this fellow—and let's spy—out of his right ear."—The soldier (who has had pretty good practice at this work) draws his sword, and performs the operation as cleverly as a regular surgeon. This operation being finished, he heats an iron (mark, red hot!) and stamps upon his forehead "Viva Mina!" With this mark the man remains during the rest of his life; and I have been assured that, so ashamed are those who have suffered this operation, of shewing themselves, that they have been found stingy in the mountains even to be served to death. Mina has an hospital for his sick and wounded, near a beautiful little village called Estella, close upon the brow of a mountain.—Six women attend upon the sick, with two excellent surgeons. They are well supplied with every thing gratis. The French know the spot where the hospital stands, and have made several attempts to surprise it, but never with success. In this mountain he has a cave, where he fabricates his own gunpowder, and with this he is pretty well supplied. Mina encourages the people of Navarre to trade with the French; he gives them passports to do so, by which means he secures many articles for the comfort and advantage of his men, that he could not obtain otherwise, and in this way he obtains what he wants gratis. If those who wish to trade are such as he can confide in, he gets from them, which goes towards the pay of his soldiers, but more particularly to his spies, to obtain information of the movements of the French. To these men he is unbounded in his liberality, and he is supplied with the most correct information of the motion of the enemy. Not a man can stir that Mina is not informed of it. If the Alcaldes (or justices of the peace) of the village are ordered by the French to make any requisition, and if they do not instantly inform Mina of it, he goes himself to their houses in the night and shoots them; he has done this to no less than nine of these fellows. If they inform him, Mina then takes steps accordingly either to intercept their communications, or cut off their soldiers, or molest them in one way or other. Every volunteer has plenty of wine, meat, and bread. Every thing he takes in an action is his own; however, it must be after the battle is over—he shoots every man that plunders while he ought to be fighting. His tactic is reduced simply to forming line of battle, column charging, and great care never to fire without being sure of hitting the object. He never allows gaming, nor a pack of cards, either amongst the officers or soldiers. Plunderers at all times he shoots. Officers and soldiers are punished alike, when they forget their duty. He never takes either a regular soldier, or a regular-bred officer into his corps. He says "They pretend to have too much theory; and he sees they fail in their attempts." His second in command is Gurutchaga; who is somewhat about his own age, taller and thinner, of a most violent and hasty temper, moderate talents, brave to a degree that is incredible, impetuous in action, and a powerful arm with the sword.—Mina is very fond of him, and he is the only man in whom he places implicit confidence, and sometimes consults. This man is severe with the troops, and makes himself feared and respected. He is, in general, the observer of the conduct of the army in battle; and, according to his report of their individual value, they are promoted. Mina has a perfect knowledge, as well as all his officers and soldiers, of the whole country, and all the passes in the mountains; and, whenever it is necessary, he disperses his people, appointing a particular quarter—distance—to meet, where they never fail to arrive, although the country is surrounded by the French.—On a recent occasion, he practised this with great success; he was surrounded by 20,000 French, who had received orders to destroy him and his corps at all hazards. Mina knew the peril of his situation; but with his 3,000 men, he remained in the mountains 15 days, treating the French with the utmost contempt. At length, about dusk in the evening, he saw himself surrounded by four columns of the enemy, who were pressing down upon him. With the greatest coolness he called all his men around him, and said, "Gentlemen, we are in an unpleasant situation here, let every captain take care of his company. Let the rendezvous be at such a place (naming one)—Mina the rallying word—and now let every man disperse, and make the best of his way." They immediately dispersed. The French deployed their columns at day-light in the morning, and, when they thought they had these people in their power, they found the whole of them had escaped. In five days afterwards Mina was at the head of his men committing depredations on the French, ten leagues from the spot where he last left them, without a single individual.

This is Mina's own account of this circumstance. After we came into the power of Mina, by the capture of the French convoy, who were escorting us, Mina's whole care was to provide for our security. He marched us through different villages, and across mountains, sometimes close to the French lines, where we could hear the drums beating to arms in every village. He endeavoured, if possible, to get us to Valencia, for which purpose he sent to Duran and Empecinado, to desire them to co-operate with him, and to pass along the banks of the Ebro, in order that they might protect our passage across the Ebro. He waited with anxiety 12 days for an answer from Duran, but got none. (Unfortunately Empecinado had been made, but got none.) (Unfortunately Empecinado had been made, but got none.) (Unfortunately Empecinado had been made, but got none.)

his arm got well; and he would stake £200 of his own money on the issue of the contest. Hudson also has offered to back Neale for £100 to £200; or if that does not fit, he has got Neale for £100 to £200; or if that does not fit, he has no objection to have a slap at Pogg. This is a bold offer of Hudson's, as the friends of Pogg have offered to back him against the new champion.

The story of Mrs Fry, the Quaker Lady, having undertaken to reduce Spring not to fight, has been contradicted in the London papers by her husband, friend Joseph Sterling, and the belligerent had other fish to fry.

Freemasonry.—Capt. Harris, late of the Brig Reuben and Eliza, captured by the pirates on the southern side of Cuba, has furnished the editors of the N. Y. Mercantile Advertiser with a narrative of the outrages of these wretched men—and with a narrative of the outrages of these wretched men—and with a note is added, stating, that "he was indebted for his life to the circumstance of his being a freemason, having met with several masons among the pirates, who interceded for him." It is strange that freemasons should be found among pirates—but how much more strange is it, that men who have abandoned the laws of God and nations, who shrink not at murder itself, when convenient or thought necessary, should respect the bonds of freemasonry, and succour a brother in distress.—Niles' Reg.

PERILOUS ENTERPRIZE

Great interest has been excited in Manchester by what has been considered as a perilous attempt on the part of an ingenious workman, to remove the ball and cross from the summit of St. Mary's church spire.

The peculiarity of the proceeding has consisted in the absence of any portion of scaffolding, and in the use of common ladders only. The spire is a lofty one, and has been so nested upon by a tremendous storm of wind some time ago, and mounted each ladder in regular succession to secure it by ropes and cramps, which lie fixed into the stone work, till he had secured the summit.

The placing the last ladder, and the securing it, appeared to be a most arduous point—Every motion was watched by thousands of admiring and many trembling spectators, with intense feeling. When accomplished, Mr Wootten actually stepped from the ladder on the crown of the spire, and gave three cheers, standing upright, quite composed and unembarrassed, with his hands free. The multitude below responded the cheering of the heroic craftsmaster most heartily.

This was effected on Saturday week about noon; but the wind then became too high for him to proceed further with his operations. On Tuesday morning he resumed his labors and continued to file the rod on which the ball and cross were suspended, after having secured the whole mass of ropes, all fixed by his own hands, but connected with a block and other ropes, which were attended to by his son, and assistants, placed below.—After some time, the whole mass was safely brought down, and with perfect facility, though amounting to little less than three hundred weight.

Mr Wootten began to point the spire. This he effects by a swing ladder, hanging from its summit, by which he can traverse regularly round the spire, and descends gradually, as his work may render it necessary.

Yankee.—This term came into vogue in Europe at the commencement of the revolution that gave independence to the United States of America. The word is derived from the Indian epithet Yankoo, which signifies in the Indian language, the quality of Invincible Courage; and was used by one of the chief tribes of North American Indians, as a name to designate them as being free and triumphant over the surrounding nations; and it was also used as the name of the Chief, or King, of the tribe to which the term applied.

It is rumoured, and generally believed, that Prince Leopold has offered his hand to the widow of the Ex-Emperor Napoleon, and met with a decided refusal.

Marshal Daroust, Prince of Eckmuhl, died at Paris on the 2d of June, of a disease of the lungs.

An opening for Emigration.—A project has lately been formed in Mexico for establishing a colony, or an asylum, as it is called, in the province of Yucatan 180 miles long, 120 wide, and containing 60.0 square miles. The object appears to be to open a rich and fertile district, most of which is now in an uncultivated state, as a place of refuge for military officers of merit, and for foreigners of talent, enterprise and industry. It is to be under the protection of the Mexican congress, entitled to one representative, and exempt from taxation for 5 years. General Echavari is at the head of the society, who has issued a long prospectus of the conditions and advantages of the settlement.

Excuses for not attending public worship by exemplary Christians.—Overslept myself—could'nt dress in time—Too cold—too hot—too windy—too dusty. Too wet—too damp —too su-ny—too cloudy. Don't feel disposed. No other time to stay—Love to stay at my drawers. Put my papers to rights.—Letters to write to friends. Taken a dose of physic. Been bled this morning. Mean to walk to the bridge. Going to take a ride. Tied to the stores six days in a week. No fresh air but on Sundays. Can't breathe in church, always a fresh air but on Sundays. Can't breathe in church, always so full. Feel a little feverish. Feel a little chilly. Feel so full. Feel very lazy. Expect Company to dinner.—Sham'd my poet too. Got a head ache. Caught cold last night at a party.—Must watch the servants. Can't leave the house for fear of fire.—Servants up to all mischief when I go to church.—Friend turning myself to day. New bonnet not come home. Tore my muslin dress coming down stairs. Got a new novel must be returned on monday morning. Wasn't shaved in time.—Don't like a Liturgy—always pray for the same thing. Don't like an extempore prayer—don't know what is coming. Don't like an organ—it's too noisy. Don't like singing without music—makes me nervous. Can't sit in a draft of air—windows or door open in summer. Stove so hot in winter, always get a head ache. Can't hear an extempore sermon—too loudly. Dislike a written sermon—too pressing. Nobody to day but our own minister. Can't always listen to the same preacher. Don't like stranger—too bombastical. Can't keep awake when at church—Snored aloud last time I was there—don't risk it again—Tired to stand standing to pray.—Hate to kneel—makes my knees stiff. Mean to inquire of some sensible person about the propriety of going to so public a place as church. Will publish the result.

At the Eton Montem, on Tuesday, the 20th inst we are informed that a pleasing rencontre took place between the two great political opponents, Messrs. Canning and Brougham, who met in the school-yard, and shook hands in the most cordial manner.

Dr Webster, in his account of the island of St. Michael, states, that in the orange groves, every tree yields annually 6000 or 8000 oranges or lemons; and that 26,000 are known to have been gathered from a single tree.—The proprietors, to whom speculation would be a intigue, sell the produce to English or American merchants, whose agents travel over the country, purchasing all the fruits, even before they are ripe. Dr Webster calculates the annual exports of fruit at nearly 60,000 chests; what remains in the island he rates at 40,000.

A person at Rochester, near Uttoxeter, a few days ago, who had obtained various credits of the credulous public, died and was buried. A few days after, reports were abroad of his ghost being seen; and suspicions arose on the subject of his decease, on which the coffin was taken up, and found to be filled with stones. The defunct debtor is still at large, and suspected to be practising on the living in some other place.

A gentleman having a horse that started, and broke his wife's neck, a neighbouring squire told him he wished to purchase it for his wife to ride upon. "No," says the other, "I will not sell it—I intend to marry again myself."

IRELAND.

We have been very much gratified by a perusal of the following address, which we doubt not will impart the same satisfaction to our readers;—This reciprocity of kindness and conciliation on a subject which is so apt, (far too apt), to occasion acrimonious feeling amongst so many of the Christian Families in that part of the Empire, is singularly delightful.—Ed.

ADDRESS

Of the Presbyterian Church in Cork, to his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel.

The documents which we subjoin, comprising the address of the Presbyterian congregation of Cork, to the Archbishop of Cashel, and his Grace's answer thereto, possess peculiar interest—indeed we may add importance—at the present moment. It is soothing, in the midst of the religious strife which is waging in that unhappy country Ireland, to find at least, one denomination of Christians, claiming for themselves, and conceding to others, the right of exercising conscience in all spiritual matters; and paying a tribute of approbation to the instructive lessons of kindness and conciliation which lately proceeded from the distinguished prelate whom they have addressed. It is equally, if not more gratifying, to witness the kindred spirit which pervaded the reply of this distinguished personage. We do not think the visitation charge of his Grace made a greater impression on the public mind than his brief, but beautiful record of true Christian feeling and opinion.

"May it please your Grace,

"We, the ministers and elders of the Presbyterian church in Cork, [illegible] beg leave to offer to your Grace our respectful congratulations on that event.

"Dissenters for conscience sake, from that national church in which your Grace enjoys an elevated rank—yet finding believing that the seeds of salvation are sown in every church which confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father, and that it is of far less importance to any society of Christians to say that, 'they are of Paul, they are of Apollos,' they are 'of Cephas, thou they are 'of Christ,' —we feel ourselves called upon to express our approbation of those sentiments of Christian charity and love breathed throughout your Grace's primary visitation charge—sentiments which must cha acterise the first act of your Grace's archiepiscopal functions, not only as an expression worthy of distinguished literary talent), but also honourable to the feelings of your Grace's heart.

"The liberal and enlightened views of Christian brotherhood which that admonition holds to all the societies of the Lord Jesus Christ are calculated to calm the tumults raised by the bursts of intemperate zeal—to repress that spiritual intolerance so unbecoming to the Christian minister, and to inculcate in the minds of all those who are labouring in the vineyard of their great Master—that, as they are fellow travellers through a world of trial, they are fellow sharers of errors, weaknesses, and infirmities; and though differing in opinion in what your grace has denominated 'forms not essential to salvation,' yet are they fellow worshippers of the same God—fellow expectants of the same mercy, through a Redeemer, and the divine dwell in the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace.

"Although fully conscious that your Grace, in the discharge of your high pastoral duties, seeks not the praises of man, but the praise of God; yet residing within the bounds of your Grace's archiepiscopal jurisdiction we cannot refrain from thus publicly expressing our sentiments of grateful respect, and assuring your Grace of our unfeigned wishes that you may enjoy, in this world health, prosperity and peace; and may finally inherit the promise of your Redeemer, where they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

To which his grace returned the following answer:

"Permit me to assure you, that I am very much flattered by your kind congratulations on the commencement of my connection with the province of Munster.

"Conscientiously attached to the established church, I cannot but feel a particular gratification in the candid approval of those who so conscientiously dissent from it

"In this our imperfect state of being, it is impossible for us to think all alike; our minds take various bents from education, habits, and numerous external as well as internal causes, not always subject to our control; so that it seems almost as unreasonable to quarrel with each other for the differences in our opinions as for the differences in our statures, complexions, and features.

"Amid the din of parties and the ebullition of sectarian zeal—for that zeal, I mean, which would appropriate the character of God's elect to one denomination of Christians alone, it is pleasing to witness the avowal of more liberal principles. We are not all members of the church of England, but WE ARE ALL MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST; and I cannot but rejoice to find that the ministers and congregation of the Presbyterian church in Cork participates with me in what appears to their minds, as well as to my own, the genuine feelings of Christian charity and true science.

SECRET TREATY OF VERONA.

From the London Morning Chronicle.

The following state paper (in French) was communicated to us by a correspondent, with an assurance of his making ground for believing in its authenticity. We publish it as we received it, without giving any positive opinion on the subject:

"The undersigned plenipotentiaries, especially authorised by their sovereigns, have come to the resolution of the treaty of the holy alliance, after having exchanged their respective full powers, have agreed upon the following articles.—

"Art. I.—The high contracting parties, well convinced that the system of representative government is incompatible with the monarchical principle as the maxim of the sovereignty of the people is opposed to the principle of divine right, engage in the most solemn manner to employ all their means, and unite all their efforts to put an end to the system of representative government wherever it is known to exist in the states of Europe, and to prevent it from being introduced into those states where it is not known.

"Art. II.—As it cannot be disputed that the freedom of the press is the most efficacious means employed by the pretended defenders of the rights of nations, to injure those of princes, the high contracting parties reciprocally promise to adopt every possible measure for its suppression, not only in their own states, but in all others in Europe.

"Art. III.—Being of opinion that religious principles are those which may still powerfully contribute to maintain nations in that state of passive obedience which they owe to their princes, the high contracting parties declare it to be their intention to support each in his own states the measures which the clergy, who [illegible] have recommended to the people, and which they have constantly enabled to carry into effect for the purpose of maintaining the authority of princes, and they in common offer their good offices to the Pope for the part he has already taken in this respect, soliciting his constant co-operation with a view to the subjection of nations

"Art. IV.—The situation of Spain and Portugal uniting unfortunately all the circumstances to which this treaty refers, the high contracting parties, in confiding to France the task of putting an end to them, assure her of a mission which may least compromise them with their people and with the French people by means of a subsidy on the part of the two Empires of 20,000,000 francs each per annum, reckoning from the day of the ratification of this treaty, and during the whole term of the war.

"Art. V.—In order to effectuate in the Peninsula the restoration of the state of affairs existing previous to the revolution of 1820, and to secure the entire fulfilment of the views pointed out in the stipulations of this treaty, the high contracting parties give a reciprocal assurance, that so long as their object shall remain unaccomplished, they will, reckoning every other interest of utility or expedience, cease to act by the most precise orders to all the authorities in their states, and to all their agents in foreign parts, to the end that the most perfect agreement may be established between those of the four contracting powers, with reference to the object of the [illegible]

"Art VI.—This treaty shall be renewed, with the alterations required for its object, and adapted to the circumstances of the moment, either at a new congress, or at one of the courts of the high contracting parties, as soon as the war with Spain shall have terminated.

"Art. VII.—The present shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris within two months.

LORD BYRON AND THE GREEKS.

The following interesting letter, has been addressed by Lord Byron, to the committee in London, for devising ways and procuring means of aiding the Greek cause. No man of any ordinary powers of reflection but feel a particular gratification at the principles contained therein, and the wants of this people, then Lord B. who, with all his faults, is an unrivalled lover of freedom

"The principle material wanted by the Greeks appears to be, first, a park of field artillery, light, and fit for mountain service; secondly, gunpowder; thirdly, hospital or medical stores. The readiest mode of transmission is, I believe, by Ithica, addressed to Mr. Negris, the Minister. I meant to send a certain quantity of the two latter—no great deal, but enough for an individual to shew his good wishes for the Greek success, but an passing, because, in case I should go myself, I can take them with me. I do not mean to limit my own contribution to this merely, but more especially if I can get to Greece myself, I shall devote whatever resources I can muster, of my own, to advancing the great object. I am in correspondence with Signor ——— (well known to Mr. Hobhouse) who is now at Zante, but his latest address merely states, that the Greeks are at present employed in organising their internal government, and the details of its administration; this would seem to intimate security; but the war is, however, far from being terminated. The Turks are an obstinate race, as all former wars have proved. Turks are an obstinate race, as all former wars have proved. Turks are an obstinate race, as all former wars have proved.

veal to mind the vegetation of Europe. Looking down from this terrace, one sees, with surprise, at the bottom, a country, producing the palm, the banana, and the sugar-cane. This cannot arise from the difference of height; as we know, that no very great change of temperature can be produced by a difference of level of 570 feet. M. Humboldt only hints, that it is probably owing to the shelter which the high country affords to the low.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

It might awaken feelings of curiosity to ascertain why Mother C—— always manifests a certain degree of malignant hatred against the London District, whenever she can catch at any thing upon which to play off her cupids, and notes of admiration, were not the cause to be traced to herself.

For, that she possesses some inherent principle, which continually urges her on in such a course of conduct, may appear evident from several circumstances. She has always behaved towards it consistently with her general resentment. She has never been sparing of the most foul and shameless abuse of Colonel Nichol, (one of the Representatives of that District, and who deserves well of it in regard to his public duties,) that the natural turpitude of her evil genius could supply. On one occasion, she gave currency to a most infamous falsehood upon the inhabitants of that District, which was manfully rebutted by a Mr. J. W. Clark, the circumstances of which must surely be remembered, especially as the chaste old matron has quietly reposed herself, for a number of months, under the imputation of acting, in that affair, from the basest motives, without daring to attempt that justification of her conduct which Mr. Clark challenged.

Now, she has caught at another pretext for displaying this predominent propensity.—I allude to a letter signed by "J. Matthews," of "Lake near Delaware," which appeared in the Weekly Register, of July 17th. That letter, doubtless, may be regarded as a most valuable document, as it is to be honored with a place in the archieves of Mother C——y. After noticing said letter, she adds: "It is, however, to be hoped that the mild and tolerant individuals of that settlement (County," (meaning Middlesex) who united in prosecuting a useful and pious Clergyman, a few years ago, to transportation, are not involved in the black catalogue of charges preferred by Mr Matthews."

Here we have a distinct recognition of our Matron's ruling principles, upon which, a few words—To certain offences, the law affixes certain punishments—The "pious Clergyman" was guilty of one—He was convicted upon evidence, by a jury of his peers. The law has cured the punishment, and "the mild and tolerant individuals," who were instrumental in teaching this "pious Clergyman" to, pay, at least, outward respect to the laws of the land, are, therefore, richly deserving a visitation from Mother C——y.—Here she is in character with herself.

This virtuous Matron's "pious" labours for the common weal have so often been the source of panegyric and examination for the display and development of their excellence and consistency, particularly by yourself, Mr Editor, that I am somewhat at a loss to imagine how her well known modesty can suffer the pain of bearing so much applause, without blushing her into the world of departed spirits

But this Mr. J. Matthews, of Lake near Delaware, I fear, has not acted the part of a skilful general, or legitimate son of Mars. He has, for some time past, amused the public, and employed almost all the news papers in America, in puffing the value of his premises in Lake, near Delaware, and even threatened the polite world with a barter of them "for "any eligible situation on any part of the frontier between "Fort Erie and the Outlet at the Head of Lake Ontario, or "on the sea coast between New York and Halifax, or on the "sea shore of England, Scotland, or Wales." Now, he publicly announces that "he has reason to believe" his desirable domains are situated "in the neighborhood of the most precious and unprincipled society which this Province can produce," and as reason for "firm belief," that, "with the assistance of a little cozzing, and familiarity, and a little whiskey," and, "if he had the honor to be a Magistrate, he could prevail upon his society to swear through thick and thin for him." If this Mr. Matthews, of Lake near Delaware, really wishes to dispose of his "fine property," one must certainly conclude him in a state of mental derangement. If that is not his object, he undoubtedly carries the fun of hoaxing to a most unprecedented length, and must, one might imagine, be determined to abide upon the premises, and mould-on himself to the manners and customs of his "neighbourhood."

TRIM.

London District, 25th July, 1823.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Lobo, 2d Aug. 1823.

Sir,

My Communication to you of the 4th of July last, and your Comments upon it, have raised the exact sort of alarm which it was desirable and natural to expect.—"The rogues are in an uproar," and are full of abuse and misrepresentation of the motives of your humble servant; while the honest and just shew that they are so, by their smiles and approbation.

That letter, Sir, has already become a sort of touchstone: All honest men must, and do, approve of the principles therein laid down; and all those who were rogueishly inclined, particularly in the case alluded to, must, and do, as decidedly condemn it.—That letter was intended to produce, and will produce, the exact effects suggested in the last paragraph of your excellent comments; and that real honest claimants might not be robbed of any part of the proportion allotted to them by a just and generous Government, by the false but cautious and well proved claims of the unprincipled.

I should not have troubled you again on this subject, but that certain of those latter sort of gentry have been endeavouring to represent my letter as calling all my neighbours without any exception, Rascals; and, to make the offence as great as possible, they have endeavoured to make what they are pleased to call "my neighbourhood" as extensive as possible; the motives, however self-evident, like other conscious pick-pockets, they hope not to be objects of such particular notice, if they can only get into a crowd; but surely, Sir, a man may live in a very rascally neighbourhood, and yet have some very honest neighbours, particularly if the circle of his neighbourhood is greatly extended. In my own, particularly so extended as these gentlemen affect to consider it, there are certainly very many that I very much respect. In justice, therefore, to their feelings, as well as to my own, I beg of you, Sir, (apologizing for taking up so much of your time and room) to insert these observations in your valuable paper.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obed. and obliged Servt.
J. MATTHEWS.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Altho' personal animadversions are generally to be avoided in newspaper discussions, yet I hardly conceive there are occasions when they are not only allowable, but when they become necessary. I know it to be an ungracious task, and altogether unpleasant to a mind valuing the social and domestic virtues, and the peace and quietness of a private life, to be called upon to name individuals publicly, and to examine their words or actions. But when they put themselves forward with that offensive officiousness which is sometimes to be met with, and transgress the rules of moderation, Christian charity, and neighbourly courtesy and decorum, in the most public manner, it cannot be an act of wantonness as publicly to remind them of their error.

A communication which appeared in the Weekly Register of July 17th, signed "J. Matthews," seems to me one that ought not, for the reasons above stated, to be suffered to pass unnoticed, especially as it goes to the crimination of a whole neighbourhood, and heaping upon them what might be termed the grossest of slanders. Who is there that would not feel indignant at seeing himself accused of such corruptionality, and that by his neighbour, as to be the perjured instrument of the most consummate wickedness, and only rating his iniquitous services at the value of "a little coaxing and familiarity, and a little whiskey?" Yet such is the degree of depravity in which, it appears, he would involve his neighbourhood.—And I must beg your indulgence in commenting a little upon that communication, through the same channel by which it found its way to the world.

It is hardly possible that a new settlement, like that of the vicinity mentioned in the above named article, can exhibit such a lamentable degree of wickedness as the writer of it imagines. The materials that compose it are not of the completion necessary to the display of so much moral turpitude. Vice and crime do not choose the seat of their operations in a country where they cannot find an employment by which to support their votaries. Industry is indispensably necessary to existence in a place where the first employment is reducing the wilds of nature to a state of cultivation and improvement. Hither the man who would live by the artsand wiles of systematic knavery would not come; because here being no field for their exercise, he must relinquish them, and pursue some honest avocation. The men of the above mentioned vicinity came into the woods with the previous intention and expectation of being conformed to fixed and steady habits, and of obtaining a livelihood by the only possible means, that is, praiseworthy industry and economy.—Surely there it appears like wanton barbarity to rest misrepresentation, to consign a whole neighbourhood to the foulest infamy in one general and sweeping declaration.

One should expect the sphere of life in which Mr. Matthews has moved, would have been to him a more discreet and faithful schoolmaster. The lessons of wisdom to be obtained in so extensive a field for human observation, as he has travelled over, ought certainly to produce correspondent effects upon a man's mind, and enrich it with the golden currency of exemplary moderation, Christian forbearance, and those excellent social and moral virtues which impart their peculiar and distinguishing lustre to their happy possessors, whenever they are exemplified in the private walks of life.—The domestic circle, and the bounds of neighbourhood are their own appropriate province; for certainly it is not amongst those we do not know that our usefulness in them is displayed. One might confidently look to a man if his experience, for the bringing into active operation all those amiable and endearing qualities which distinguish the man of sense, the sincere and humble Christian, and the philanthropist of large and well directed benevolence. Admitting the men he must call his neighbours, were of the character he attributes to them, it were unbecoming and imprudent to stigmatize them thus publicly. On the contrary, should he his duty and constant endeavour to teach them better things by good example, and live amongst them as one well furnished with the true philosophy of life. By a dignified condescension and conciliating amenity of manners he should win their confidence and belief in his integrity; and he should also turn that influence to the best advantage by kind admonition, and reproof when necessary, instead of arming them with weapons by which to carry on a war of retaliation against himself, and adopting the most certain means of securing their determined and systematic hostility.

THE GLOW WORM AND THE NIGHTINGALE.

[A DUET.]

Look! brother, look! in the green hedge row shining,
The sparkling glow worm, the gem of the night,
The vesper-star's rival, in ocean declining,
How beauteous its colour, how lucid its light!

Yes! sister, yes! but its radiance playing,
But lures the destroyer, but lights to its prey,
As exquisite beauty too often betraying,
Leaves the maiden who boasts it to pine and decay.

Hark! brother, hark! the lone NIGHTINGALE pouring
His song of deep melody! love-breathing strains!
The shadows of night and its silence adoring,
Still choosing his haunt where mute solitude reigns.

Yes! sister, yes! but that minstrel, believe me,
E'en now dooms the glittering glow worm his prey,
And let not his voice of enchantment deceive thee,
For lo! where he bears the bright insect away.

Then learn, my dear sister, this lesson in youth,
And never may repentance obscure thy bright day!
That falsehood may speak with the accents of truth,
And beauty be given alone to betray!

We have the pleasure of announcing the safe arrival on the 3d inst. of the Governor-in-Chief at Halifax, where he was received with every mark of affection and respect. An address was presented to his Lordship from the Council, Magistrates, and principal Inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood, couched in terms expressive of such high regard towards himself and the Countess of Dalhousie, as must have been most grateful to his Lordship's feelings. Indeed we cannot imagine any circumstance affording more exalted satisfaction to a noble mind than such a greeting paid to him in his individual character, and affording the most unequivocal proof of the merited regard of, and the benefits derived from, his public acts by the people whose welfare and happiness have been intrusted to his care.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of June last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 24th day of July instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Monday the first day of September next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K.C.B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

J. B. ROBINSON, Att'y. Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct, by Public Notification, that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

PROPOSALS
FOR PUBLISHING MONTHLY, AT MONTREAL, THE CANADIAN MAGAZINE,
AND
LITERARY REPOSITORY.

THE encouragement which Literature has obtained in the United Kingdom, may be attributed, in a great measure to the monthly Publications of merit which emanate from the Press, abounding in a variety of original Biography, and other pieces, written solely for works of this description, which residents in this remote quarter of the globe find it difficult to obtain without considerable expense. As much of the contents of these Publications is doubtlessly of a local nature and devoid of interest to the Canadian reader, it is only intended to take the most valuable pieces of a general character for the REPOSITORY; thus affording to the public at large, in these Provinces, those literary gratifications which our friends and society generally, throughout the British Dominions in Europe, have so long enjoyed from the genius and ability of our countrymen.

It is not the intention of the proposed work to enter into political discussions, foreign or domestic; when, however, important and well written articles are received from home, they will be re-printed; the remaining part of the undertaking will, it is conceived, be most appropriately disposed of in giving publicity to local communications relating to the condition of our Townships and Settlements; in promoting the cause of Religion Virtue, Morality, Education, and the general diffusion of Agricultural and other useful knowledge.

A regular supply of the most popular and esteemed British publications, are received, and no effort will be spared to render the selections of the CANADIAN MAGAZINE worthy of the patronage which is anticipated in both Provinces.

A brief summary of Foreign and Domestic News, Army Promotions, State of the Montreal Market, Agricultural Report, State of the Weather, Shipping List, &c. will be found at the end of each Number.

CONDITIONS.

1st—The July number will be published early in August; it will be printed upon fine paper, and be properly arranged for binding half yearly. Each number will contain nearly 100 pages.

2d—The Subscription to be SIX DOLLARS, payable half yearly in advance: the first half year will be collected after the delivery of the first number, Postage payable by the Subscribers.

3d—Gentlemen desirous of obtaining the first Number, will please to affix their names to a Subscription List before the 24th instant; every Subscriber will be at liberty to withdraw his name at the end of six months.

4th—Subscription Lists will be found at the principal places of public resort, in Montreal and Quebec, and at the Post Offices of the principal Towns in the Upper Province.

Communications connected with the avowed object of this work, (post paid) are requested to be addressed to the Editor of the Canadian Magazine, at the Book Store of the Publisher, Mr NICKLESS.

Montreal, 11th July, 1823.

☞ Mr. JOSEPH NICKLESS, Bookseller, Notre Dame Street, Montreal, is authorised to make the necessary arrangements in this City and Quebec, to receive the signatures of Gentlemen disposed to patronize and subscribe for the proposed Magazine; and also to correspond on the same subject in the Upper Province.

THE FIRST PROSPECTUS OF A NEW WORK
TO BE ENTITLED
THE
Canadian Annual Register;
OR,
A VIEW
OF THE
History, Politics, Literature, and Growth
OF THE CANADAS,
AN ALL THAT CONSTITUTES THE WEALTH OF NATIONS.

TO BE CONDUCTED AND PUBLISHED ANNUALLY
BY CHARLES FOTHERGILL,
His Majesty's Printer in U. C.

THE lapse of sixty-five years since the commencement of DODSLEY'S Annual Register in England has shewn the vast importance, and increasing value of that great work;—a work which has become an authority of the highest respectability and consideration on every subject connected with English History (indeed one may say with the History of Europe) since the period of its commencement;—and, if there be any cause of regret, it is that such an undertaking was not begun at an earlier period.

The number of editions which that work has passed through,—the high price it bears,—and the fact that no library is considered at all complete without it, sufficiently proves its great value and utility.—It forms, indeed, no inconsiderable library in itself; and, if a man had no other book, exclusive of his Bible, he could never want either amusement or instruction.

It is scarcely to be supposed, that a similar work, well conducted, would fail in proving of equal value and importance to other countries; and particularly to those in a state of comparative infancy—CANADA, especially, presents a fine field for such an undertaking.—All that is known, or ever can be known, of its early history may be comprised in little more than an hundred pages; after which, by a similarity of plan with that adopted in the Annual Register of England, all the transactions, events, discoveries, and improvements of each year, worthy of preservation, may be given to the public at a very moderate expense,—less than the cost of the meanest Newspaper in the country;—gradually forming a library, which would contain every thing interesting, or having any reference to the NATURAL and CIVIL HISTORY of the COUNTRY, and becoming a book of such important reference as all the other books in the world, put together, could not supply.

Besides the more serious business of the State, which must necessarily occupy a large portion of the pages of such a work; now, that Newspapers and Magazines are generally conducted by men of respectable talents and attainments, it must occur to readers of every class, that articles of great interest and utility are continually occurring in those periodical publications, which deserve a more lasting record;—such a record is found in an Annual Register on the plan proposed, at a price considerably less than that of any respectable Newspaper, taken singly —This Work will contain all that is considered worth preserving, and that is of interest to this country, in the various Newspapers, Magazines, and other Miscellaneous Publications, both of the old and new world.

That such of the readers of this Prospectus as are unacquainted with the plan of DODSLEY'S Annual Register, (which, with some alterations, additions, and improvements will be pursued in the present undertaking,) may form some judgment of its merits, we shall now proceed without further preface to give an outline of the

CANADIAN ANNUAL REGISTER.

SECTION I.

Will contain the ANCIENT HISTORY and ANNALS of the COUNTRY from its DISCOVERY to these TIMES.

SECT. II.

GENERAL POLITICS, and present situation of the BRITISH PROVINCES of NORTH AMERICA —In time of war, this department of the work will be occupied with the details of that war.

SECT. III

The CHRONICLE, comprehending a narrative, chronologically arranged, of every domestic incident, of the smallest interest to the public, which may have occurred during the year in any part of the British Provinces; but, more especially in the two Canadas. No event, or accident, of any importance, whatever may be its nature, will be omitted in this department.

SECT. IV.

The APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE will contain Marriages, Births, Deaths, Promotions, Removals, &c &c with average prices of Provisions, and articles of domestic growth for exportation—state of markets—shipping lists—arrivals—departures, &c. increase or decrease of foreign trade—abstracts of population—revenue, &c. &c. &c.

SECT. V.

PARLIAMENTARY REGISTER; containing a complete History of the proceedings of the Parliament of both Provinces, with the Speeches, Resolutions, &c &c. and Lists, with the titles of the Acts passed during the session.

SECT VI.

STATE PAPERS;—Proclamations; Orders of Council; Memorials; Petitions; Manifestos; Correspondencies; Acts and Debates of the Imperial Parliament, having any reference to this country, &c. &c.

SECT. VII.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES of EXTRAORDINARY CHARACTERS connected with CANADA.

SECT. VIII.

NATURAL HISTORY; containing, not only the New Discoveries made in various parts of this vast continent; but, also, such extracts from new and valuable Books of Travels as describe, or have particular reference to any part of it.

SECT. IX.

AGRICULTURE.—This important section will contain Notices and Details of every foreign practice and discovery that may be of the slightest utility here.

SECT. X.

USEFUL PROJECTS.—New Pieces of Mechanism; Implements; Experiments; Inventions; Patents, &c. &c.

SECT XI.

ANTIQUITIES, will contain such Details and Discoveries as tend to throw light upon the Ancient History of the Country.

SECT. XII.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS—or such Original Productions contained in the more ephemeral publications of the day, week, or month, as may be worth preserving.

SECT. XIII.

POETRY, to be confined as much as possible to Original Productions, and great care will be observed in the selections.

SECT. XIV.

Account of Books, and other new publications as they issue from the Press.

Should any important changes occur in Europe, at all likely to affect this country, they will be also noticed under a suitable head.

As it is presumed that this work, even if conducted with no more than moderate skill and industry, will gradually become a standard book in this quarter of the world, it is unnecessary to have recourse to any of those arts which are commonly practised by the Booksellers and Reviewers in Europe to puff off their new publications. It is hoped this simple sketch of the design, and the manner in which the first volume (for the present year) will be got up, will be sufficient to obtain that patronage which is so necessary to the support of such an undertaking. If this work is encouraged, it will gradually become of vast importance to public men in every profession, as a book of reference, and in process of time will, in itself, contain an immense body of Canadian History, such as no other book or books could afford. Had such a work been commenced in England soon after the gloom of the middle ages began to disperse, instead of the year 1758—its value would have been now beyond all price.

It being necessary to insure the sale of at least 300 copies before the work is put to press; this Prospectus is thus early published, in order to ascertain the degree of patronage it is likely to obtain. The price to subscribers will be £3 —to non-subscribers, £4—printed on fine English paper, and hand-somely done up in boards, and lettered.—No payment will be required, or desired, until the work is delivered—but an early intimation of the names and address of Subscribers is earnestly requested, either at the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or at any of the various Agents for the Weekly Register.

APPRENTICES WANTED.

TWO Apprentices to the Printing Business who can be well recommended and of respectable connections, with the necessary smartness and acquirements, are wanted.

Apply at the U. C. Gazette Office.

TERMS
OF THE U. C. GAZETTE AND WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOUR DOLLARS per annum (Postage included) payable half yearly in advance. Three months notice is required previous to the discontinuance of any Subscription.

PRICE OF ADVERTISING.

Six lines and under, two shillings and six pence, and seven pence half penny, every subsequent insertion.

Six to ten lines, five shillings, and one shilling and three pence subsequently.

All exceeding ten lines, four pence per line for the first insertion, and one penny subsequently.—A discount of 25 per cent. allowed to those who advertise by the year.—Advertisements cannot be received after Twelve on the Wednesday afternoon immediately preceding the day of Publication.—Advertisements unaccompanied with positive directions as to the exact number of insertions to be given them, will be considered, and accordingly forbidden.—To avoid the Day of Sale (if alluding to Sales) and charged accordingly.

☞ Advertisements from the Country must be post paid, with the price of insertion; or, a reference in Town who will pay when demanded, or discontinued.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

THE KING.—His Majesty has so far recovered his health that he has gone to Windsor. He attended Ascot races during three days. The 24th of June the yachts are ordered to be ready at Portsmouth to take his Majesty on board, for a cruise in the channel.

THE LATE FIGHT.

It appears that a Quaker Lady (though not Mrs. Fry) did actually interfere to prevent the late fight between Spring and Neate. The following is given as a correct statement of what occurred on the occasion.

A fine old Lady of the Society of Friends, with a couple of her daughters, came in their carriage to the Angel, at Maidro' during the time Neate was in training. The two daughters remained in the carriage, at the door, while the old Lady made her way into the Angel. She ascended the stairs, and found Belcher in a room, sitting by himself. Neate having retired to change his clothes. Tom thought the Lady had mistaken the apartment in the above Inn, till she addressed him. "Thy name is Belcher, is it not, friend?" "Yes, Madam," was the reply. Tom was in hopes to get rid of the Lady before Neate returned, but she waited till the Bristol hero made his appearance. "I understand, friend Neate, thou set about fighting a prize battle. Does thou not know it is very sinful? Be advised, friend, and give it up." Neate urged that he was bound in honour, and that if he gave it up, he was likely to lose £500 by it.—"What is £500 in comparison with thy poor soul? Think of that, friend. Give it up, I beg of thee; and I will see if the £500 can be raised for thee.' After an expostulation of nearly two hours, impressed upon Neate with tears, the old Lady retired without obtaining the desired effect. The Bristol hero, by way of consolation, thanked the old Lady for the interest and kindness she had taken in his fate, and promised her that he would not fight any more.

We understand it is the intention of Spring to "tie up prize-milling," and attend to business.

On the first deposit of £60 being made good at the Castle Tavern, Holborn, towards the above match, Spring offered to take Tom Belcher £100 to £20 that he drew first blood; also that Neate did not knock him down during the battle; and, ultimately, he should win the fight.

Mr. Jackson collected for the losing man, on the ground, £24.

In less than six years, Spring has fought his way to the Championship.

Challenge to the new Champion.—We are requested to state that several gentlemen of the Counties of Berkshire and Gloucestershire will back Morris Pope (who displayed so much courage and agility in his recent battle with Samy Parsons) against Spring, for £200 a side.

The Princess Augusta is about to return to England from the continent.

The meeting of the different Pitt Clubs in all parts of England have been most splendid. The provincial papers are crowded with the most interesting particulars respecting them. The Courier of the 10th mentions no less than fifteen of those patriotic meetings

The Most Noble the Marquis of Salisbury, died June 16, at 6 o'clock, at his seat, Theobalds, Hatfield, Herts.

Tread Mills.—There are now nineteen counties in England, into which the tread-mill has been introduced, and it has uniformly followed, that those persons who have been subject to the discipline of that machine, have at the expiration of the terms of their imprisonment, shown a strong disposition to forsake their former dissolute habits, and have returned into society with improved ideas of rectitude and morality.—Glou Journal.

Honey.—The sum of £340,000 is sent annually out of Britain annually to purchase the produce of the bee. All of which might be retained at home, if the culture of those valuable insects was duly regarded.

[These industrious insects, it is to be regretted, are destroyed by thousands, and wantonly robbed of their hard earnings.]

Trinidad.—A petition was presented to Parliament by Mr. Marryat from the inhabitants of Trinidad praying that the British laws might be extended to that Colony.—Indeed!

Parliament was expected to be prorogued about the 10th July.

"Constantinople, May 10th.—The whole of the Turkish flotilla, with numerous transports, have now left this port some days for the Dardanelles;—the Captain Pacha quitted the 3d instant. It is concluded that all the merchant vessels which have lately left this place, bound downwards, will have been detained at the Dardanelles, until the fleet shall have sailed.

Interior of Africa.—We have received Royal Gold Coast Gazettes and letters from that settlement to the 27th of January, at which time Sir Charles M'Carthy was at the Gold Coast on a tour of inspection. These papers contain a very interesting account of the travels of a Mr. Dupuis, who at the age of twenty years, it seems, had found his way from Tripoli through the heart of Africa, to Cape Coast Castle, by a route that no white man probably ever traversed. He is a native of Astrachan, by name Wargeca, and at the age of fifteen was made prisoner by the Turks, who carried him to Constantinople, where, in the course of time, he became a considerable trader, and travelled as such to many distant parts both by sea and land, from Calcutta on the east, to Gibraltar on the west. On his last tour, which had lasted nearly two years, he had visited Timbuctoo, which he describes with great minuteness. The slave trade, we regret to state, was still carried on with activity, both by French and Portuguese vessels, no less than ten of which had been captured in the preceding six months on that coast. Since April, 1822, when Cape Coast was transferred to the crown, and added to the government of Sir C. M'Carthy, a road has been cut thence to Annamaboe, over woody mountains and plains hitherto impassable.

Marble Quarries.—Some quarries of white and green marble have been discovered in the west of Ireland, of very superior richness and beauty.

Female Cricketers.—A Cricket Match was lately played at Hockwold-cum-wilton between 11 married and 11 unmarried females for 11 pair of white gloves, which terminated in favour of the latter. The parties were dressed in jackets and trowsers tastefully decorated with blue ribbands.

Shooting Butterflies.—A shooting match lately took place in England for a wager, which could hit the greatest number of butterflies at 30 yards.

Knavery Outwitted.—We copy from a German paper the following feat, which occurred lately at Warsaw. A Jew, the proprietor of an hotel in that city, was intrusted with a casket containing valuable property to the amount of £50,000, by a wealthy Englishman, who gave it to his host for greater security. When the Englishman asked for his property, the Jew positively denied having received any such thing. In despair, the Englishman proceeded to the Archduke Constantine, who summoned the hotel keeper before him. This Prince used his utmost efforts to induce the Jew to surrender the casket, but in vain. Pardon was even offered, but to no purpose; the Jew persisted in the denial. His Imperial Highness then turned the conversation to some other subject, and after some minutes drew out his watch, and on looking at it said, "I believe it is not right, let me see what is it o'clock by your's." Then seeming to take a fancy to it, the Grand Duke asked the Jew to exchange watches—to which the Jew, unsuspicious of any design, readily consented. The Prince then withdrew into his cabinet, and dispatched a trusty messenger with the exchanged watch to the hotel, desiring him to tell the landlady, on the part of her husband, to send the casket immediately, as he wanted it much in order to arrange some business with the Grand Duke. The landlady, on seeing her husband's watch, suspected nothing, and instantly gave the casket to the Duke's valet. The Grand Duke, when he had received the casket, offered full pardon to the rascal provided he would admit his having received it; but the Jew denied all knowledge of the casket, and even swore to the truth of his denial. He was then, by order of the Prince, handed over to the Military Tribunal, who sentenced him to be shot by twenty Jews.—The latter, however, executed the sentence so badly that the culprit suffered excruciating agony for two hours.—Journal des Debats.

HOLY ALLIANCE AND THE GREEKS.

From a Speech by Sir J. M'Intosh.

"A handful of Greeks took refuge in Russia, among their brethren in religion. They received orders to retire into the interior."—a soft mode of saying they must go to the wilds of Siberia, or the snows of Kamschatka. They then presented themselves on the frontiers of Austria. Austria repelled them at the point of the bayonet. They then ventured to apply to Piedmont; but Piedmont refused to allow them to approach to Genoa, new and ill acquired dominion. They then approached France, the country of His Most Christian Majesty; but His Most Christian Majesty denied them access to Marseilles; Switzerland, however, received them and fed them with the most benevolent charity.—The Holy Alliance, which had solemnly guaranteed the independence of Switzerland, in order to show the value which it set upon its own guarantee, gave order to the Diet to expel forthwith these refugees from its territories!—Such was the manner in which the continental powers justified their right to the title of the Holy Alliance.—Such was the manner in which they displayed their respect for the independence of nations, and in which they associated the Grand Turk into their Holy Brotherhood."

A Swedish officer went to a physician, and desired to be inoculated—the physician agreeably to his request, proceeded to the operation, but his inoculation did not take. He repeated the operation a second and third time, but still it did not take.—I am greatly surprised, said the doctor—" not so much as I am," returned the Hibernian, "for when I was inoculated ten years since, I took the first time."

Father Cotton, the Jesuit, had acquired such influence over Henry IV. of France, that it was a common saying, that Henry was a good Prince, and loved to hear truth, but that he had Cotton in his ears.

Malherbe, at a very advanced age, challenged a young man who had killed his son in a duel. His friends represented to him the rashness of his conduct, as he was then 80 old. "For that very reason," said Malherbe, "I will have my revenge. I hazard only a sou against a pistole."

An English house has just obtained the privilege of lighting with gas, throughout the whole Russian empire, for the next ten years; and M. Pflug, a merchant of Petersburgh, has defied from England a machine, by means of which 30 ship cables may be manufactured in a day.

Cheap times.—Hasted tells us that a gentleman of the name Northwood entertained King Henry V on his coming about return from France, at the Red Lion Inn at Sittingbourne; and though the entertainment was plentiful and befitting the dignity of his guest, yet such was the difference of the times, that the whole expense amounted only to 6s. 9d. wine being then sold at 2d. a pint, and other articles in proportion.

THE PROPHETIC CHARLES FOX.

"'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore,
And coming events cast their shadows before."

Napoleon Bonaparte used to say he was grateful and bound to Mr Fox, that he was the British wint Cassandra was to the Trojans. It was the fate of both to speak important truths which were disbelieved until it was too late. One of our country man's prophecies is now in course of fulfilment. While debating on the Address grounded on the preliminaries of peace with the French Republic, then laid before Parliament, Mr Fox defied all who heard him to produce, in the history of the world, "a more accursed object of war than the restoration of the Bourbons." "My undisguised opinion (he continued) is, that if the coalition for the restoration of the Bourbons had succeeded, the consequence would have been, amongst all the Kings of Europe, a perpetual guarantee against all people who might be oppressed by any of them in any part of the world. All countries, therefore, must be benefited by the failure of such a project, but more than Great Britain. To the people of this country the consequences would have been fatal. Refer to the page of history. Had the coalition in the reign of Charles the First, established such a guarantee, would the liberties of the people have been preserved against the House of Stuart, or would Hampden have gained the immortal victory he did? To come lower down; had such a guarantee existed in later times, would the Revolution of 1688 have been able to maintain itself? I say, therefore, that there could not have been any greater misfortune to the world than the success of that coalition for restoring the Bourbons to the throne of France."

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

SWITZERLAND.—GENEVA, May 21.

By a resolve of the 19th inst. the Council of State, in virtue of the authority delegated to them by the law of last April, have suspended the liberty of the Press, by requiring that every publication treating, directly or indirectly, of religion politics, shall be submitted to censors. The same step has been likewise taken within a short time by the Canton of Vaud, without any other avowed motives than the extremely vague allegation, of the gravity of circumstances. It appears that the different Cantons have all, according to their manner, taken measures to prove their entire condescension to the wishes of foreign powers.

BERLIN, May 14

The superior committee of censors has allowed the sale out of the states of the confederation of works printed in the German language; but has recommended to book sellers extreme vigilance in rejecting all books which may contain dangerous political principles, or act which the latter shall be unbecoming, warning them that offenders would be punished with the loss of their brevets, or licenses to sell.—Augsburg Gazette.

From a late London Paper.

GAOL DISCIPLINE

A bill was read a third time and passed the house of commons on the 25th ult. for amending the laws relating to gaols, which contains some very important improvements in gaol discipline. The bill repeals the whole, or parts of twenty four acts, so far as relates to prisons to which this act is to be applied, and then lays down 28 new regulations, respecting the residence of the gaoler and the matron (who is to superintend the female prisoners) iii such gaol, and their duty inspection of the prisoners; a record of punishments and occurrences; a compellance of the prisoners to perform their hard labor; total separation of males and females, who are to be confined in separate buildings, or parts of the prison, so as to prevent them from seeing, conversing, or holding intercourse with each other; and each sex to be divided into distinct classes, care being taken that prisoners of the following classes do not intermix with each other; first, debtors; then prisoners convicted of felonies; prisoners convicted of misdemeanor; prisoners committed on suspicion of felony; prisoners committed on suspicion of misdemeanor; vagrants, and prisoners intended to be examined as witnesses in behalf of the prosecution shall be kept separate; total number of classes, 14. Prisoners are to be employed in the household work of the building; female prisoners to be attended by female officers; prayers, selected from the liturgy of the Church of England, to be read daily; provision to be made for the instruction of all prisoners, in reading and writing; and to attend divine service on Sundays, for the performance of which Chaplains are to be appointed by justices. No irons to be used but under peculiar necessity, and the continuance to be approved by a justice. Necessaries to be furnished to poor prisoners; prisoners' fare trial and for debt, only receive maintenance from their friends. Not to receive wine, unless under special circumstances; all prisoners may be seen by their friends at stated periods, and under regulations made by the justices. Prisoners not to be discharged if ill until the surgeon declares their convalescence; to be found clothes if they have none, and not committed for wearing party coloured prison clothes before trial, such clothes to be then plain. Prisoners to have separate beds; soap, towels, and combs, to be provided; as much air and exercise to be allowed as may be deemed proper for the preservation of health. No spirits ever allowed, and only a regular quantity of beer, &c; no gaming; no garnish or other money to be taken; the coroners, justices, and nearest relations to have notices of all deaths. Reports are to be made at each session and quarter, and to the secretary of state; visiting justices to be appointed. but any justice may visit and report; prisoners on their discharge to be assisted to their house. The gaoler may punish by solitary confinement and bread and water diet, for sundry enumerated offences committed in gaol, but capital punishment to be by the orders of the justices. Justices to have power to purchase houses or ground to enlarge prisons agreeably to the act; in cases of contagious diseases, prisoners may be removed; rates may be mortgaged to pay for enlargements; parties must sell such ground and buildings as are wanted, the price to be settled by a jury if needful; expenses to be paid out of such rates as exist by present law. Gaolers may be superannuated, and allowed a pension.

SINGULAR ADVENTURE OF A BRITISH SOLDIER.

AT A CAMPAIGN IN AMERICA.

In the year 1776, when the war with America was conducted with great vigour upon that continent, a division of the British army was encamped on the banks of a river, and in a position so favored by nature, that it was difficult for any military act to surprise it. War in America was rather a species of hunting than a regular campaign. "If you fight with us," said Washington to the soldiers, "you are sure to be defeated. Acquire discipline enough for consert, and the uniformity of combined attack, and your country will recover the best of the engineers." So true was this maxim of the American general, that the English soldiers had to contend with little else The Americans had incorporated the Indians into their ranks, and had made them useful in a species of war to which their habits of life had peculiarly fitted them. They rallied out of their impenetrable forests and jungles, and with their arrows and tomahawks committed daily waste upon the British army, surprising their centinels, cutting off their stragglers, and even when the alarm was given, and pursuit commenced, they fled with a swiftness that the speed of cavalry could not overtake, into rocks and fastnesses whither it was dangerous to follow them

In order to limit as far as possible this species of war, in which there was so much loss and so little honour it was the custom with every regiment to extend its outpost to a great distance beyond the encampments, to station centinels some miles in the woods, and keep a constant guard round the main body.

A regiment of foot was at this time stationed upon the confines of a boundless wood. Its outposts were guarded by every avenue of approach to the main body; the centinels, whose posts penetrated into the woods, were supplied from the ranks, and the service of this regiment was thus more hazardous than that of any other. Its men were therefore perpetually surprised upon their posts by the Indians; and, what was more wonderful, they were borne off the centinels without communicating any alarm, or being heard of after.

Not a trace was left of the manner in which they had been conveyed away, except that, upon one or two occasions, a few drops of blood had appeared upon the leaves which covered the ground. Many imputed this unaccountable disappearance to treachery, and suggested as an unanswerable argument, that the men thus surprised might at least have groaned, which, in the confusion and consternation of the contiguous posts. Others, however, who could not be brought to consider it as treachery, were content to receive it as a mystery which time should explain.

One morning, the centinels having been stationed as usual over every avenue, the guard went at sun rise to relieve a post which extended a considerable distance into the wood. The centinel was gone! The surprise was great; but the circumstance had occurred before. They left another man, and departed, wishing him better luck. "You need not be afraid," said the man with warmth, "I shall not desert."

The relief company returned to the guard-house.

The centinels were replaced every four hours, and, at the appointed time, the guard again marched to the post. No centinel was to be seen. The whole establishment the man was gone! They searched round the post, but no traces could be found of his disappearance. It was necessary that the station, from a stronger motive than ever, should not remain unoccupied; they were compelled to leave another man, and returned, ruminating upon this strange circumstance, to the guard house. The superstition of the soldiers was awakened, and the terror ran through the regiment. The Colonel being apprized of the occurrence, signified his intention to accompany the guard when they relieved the centinel they had left. At the appointed time they all marched together; and again to their unutterable wonder, they found the post vacant and the man gone!

Under these circumstances, the Colonel hesitated whether he should station a whole company here, or whether he should again submit the post to a single centinel. The cause of these repeated disappearances of men whose courage and honesty were never suspected must be discovered; and if secured not likely that this discovery could be obtained by persisting in the old method. Three brave men were now lost to the regiment, and to assign the post to the fourth seem nothing less than giving him up to destruction. The poor fellow whose turn it was to take the station, though he spoke with considerable resolution, trembled from head to foot. "I must do my duty," said he to the officer, "I know that; but I should like to lose my life with more credit."

"I will leave no man," said the Colonel, "against his will."

A man immediately stepped from the ranks, and desired to take the post. Every month commended his resolution. "I will not be taken alive," said he, and you shall hear of me." All events I will fire my piece if I hear the least noise. If a crow chatters, or a leaf falls, you shall hear my musket. You may be alarmed when nothing is the matter; but you must take the chance of that, as the condition of my making the discovery."

The Colonel applauded his courage, and told him he would be right to fire upon the least noise which would be ambiguous He commended a shook hands with him, and left him with a melancholy foreboding. The company marched back and told the event in the guard-house with the most anxious curiosity.

An hour had elapsed, and every ear was upon the rack for the discharge of the musket when, upon a sudden, the report was heard. The guard immediately marched, accompanied as before by the colonel, and some of the most expert hunters of the regiment. As they approached the post, they saw the man advancing towards them, dragging another man on the ground by the hair of his head. When they came up to him, it appeared to be an Indian whom he had shot. An explanation was immediately required.—"I told your honour," said the man, "that I should fire if I heard the least noise The resolution I had taken has saved my life. and led to the discovery. I had not been long on my post, when I heard a rustling at some short distance; I looked, and saw an American Indian, man, as common in the woods, crawling along the ground, and seemingly looking for nuts under the trees and amongst the leaves. As these animals are so very common. I ceased to consider it for some minutes; but being on the constant alarm and expectation of attack, I scarcely knowing what was to be considered a real cause of apprehension, or what was not, I kept my eyes vigilantly fixed upon it, and marked its progress among the trees; still there was no need to give the alarm, and my thoughts were, notwithstanding, directed to danger from another quarter. It struck me, however, as somewhat singular, to see this animal making, by a circuitous passage, for a thick coppice, immediately behind my post. I therefore kept my eye more constantly fixed upon it, and as it was now within a few yards of the coppice, hesitated whether I should not fire. My comrades, thought I, will laugh at me for alarming them by shooting a pig? I had almost resolved to let it alone, when, just as it approached the thicket, I thought I observed it give an unusual spring. I no longer hesitated: I took my aim; discharged my piece;

[illegible] groan which I conceived to be that of a human creature. I went up to it, and judge my astonishment, when I found that I had killed an Indian! He had enveloped himself with the skin of one of these wild hogs so artfully and completely, his hands and feet were so entirely concealed in it, and his gait and appearance were so exactly correspondent to that of the animal's, that, imperfectly as they were always seen through the trees and jungles, the disguise could not be penetrated at a distance, and scarcely discovered upon the nearest subject. He was armed with a dagger and a tomahawk."

Such was the substance of this man's relation. The cause of the disappearance of the other centinels was now apparent. The Indians, sheltered in this disguise, secreted themselves in the coppice; watched the moment when they could throw it off; burst upon the centinels without previous suspicion, and, too quick to give the alarm, quickly severed their pieces, either stabbed or scalped them, and bore their bodies away, which they concealed at some distance in the leaves. The Americans gave these rewards for every scalp of an enemy which they brought. This circumstance appears of wonder may appear in the present relation, there are many now alive who can attest its authenticity.

SPAIN.

The court of Common Council of London, had by a vote of 74 to 35, appropriated from the city Funds the sum of £1000, in aid of the suffering people of the Peninsula

SEVILLE, June 2.

Despatches from the Marquis Castelldosrius, dated 21 of May 27, states, that on the second ult. Mina, with his vanguard at Talavera, his advanced posts, which were at the bridge of Alberche, sent a report that the enemy were in sight—that the troops were immediately ordered to form in the Prado until the number of the enemy could be ascertained, in that two battalions of Guadalaxara passed on the wooden bridge, to cover the passage and retreat of the baggage to the left of the Tagus; whilst the cavalry, with the two grenadier companies of Cuenca and Guadalaxara, and the light infantry of the latter, and two field pieces were ordered to advance; that at eight o'clock, the fire began on the part of the guerillas; and that, although the French lancers charged the regiment of cavalry, the fire of grape shot from the artillery, and the severity with which they were received, obliged them to retire—that shortly after, it was discovered, by the dust, that the enemy were going to attack their left—on perceiving which General Castelldosrius ordered General Zayas, who was with the guerillas and cavalry, to fall back—that General Zayas did retire in admirable order, insomuch that, though the enemy pursued them at first, he charged them with the squadron of cuirassiers, and obliged them to retreat—that about a mile from Talavera, Gen. Zayas halted with the cavalry, and alighted; but that the enemy did not continue their attack—that in the mean time, General Espelera, who arrived in the preceding evening, with the Garrison of Madrid, was retreating with the two battalions which passed to the left of the Tagus over the wooden bridge—that the nature of the ground, and the quantity of dust raised by the columns, did not permit the force of the enemy to be calculated, which, however, they state to have been far greater than their own, particularly in cavalry; that, nevertheless, the composure of the 5, which troops inured to war with success, for which reason General Castelldosrius felt the greatest satisfaction in reporting, that all the troops preserved the utmost order and discipline, and behaved with valour; but that the knowledge, discipline, and example of General Zayas, in particular contributed more than any thing else to the executing of that movement in such a manner as to reflect as much honour on the troops as victory itself. The despatches further state, that the loss of the Spaniards is confined to 30 or 12 wounded; but that it was not possible to ascertain what that of the French amounted to, though the former persuade it must have been more considerable by reason of the good direction of the Spanish artillery—that the latter troops were encamped on the left bank of the Tagus, beyond the bridge; and that, when on the projected plan would no longer be pursued, which orders to keep a vanguard on the right bank, in order to secure resources for the army, its rear of corps would, on the following day, occupy the towns and villages between that place and Almaraz; the head-quarters removing to Toquilo.

INDEX AT FRONT

Havana papers to the 14th July, instant, have been received at Charleston, extracts from which have been forwarded to us in a slip from the office of the Charleston City Gazette.

The victory of Mina, over the French army in Catalonia, is stated to have been most glorious, illuminations and salvoes of artillery took place at Santona, on the 27th May, in consequence of the success of that General.

Morillo issued a patriotic proclamation to his soldiers at Vigo, on the 3d of June. So far from flinching, the Spaniards appear more determined than ever. "We have sworn (says this General) to maintain the Spanish Constitution—the King, too, has sworn, and our oaths shall not be taken in vain."

There has been some bloody fighting near Talavera, on the passing of the bridge of Alberche. A Coruna date of June 6th, says, that letters to distinguished individuals, and from Reus and another from Villanueva, mention that Colonel Lovers was attacked by six thousand French, about twelve leagues from Barcelona. The Colonel had an advantageous position, though with little more than 1200 men, and completely routed the enemy.

Since the French have entered Madrid the greatest disorder and riot reigns there. Quarrels, imprisonments and assassinations are described as daily occurrences. A private letter from Madrid of the 28th May, says, that "the French and Spanish guards conduct themselves with the greatest attentiveness; the names of religion, and of the blessed saints come from the mouths of 'the Defenders of the Faith' mingled with most obscene and ferocious expressions. No woman dares to walk abroad alone or accompanied, who is not surrounded and insulted. In fine, such scenes take place, that were they put upon paper, would outrage modesty and humanity—* * * They live like brutes—* * * The unhappy women suffer every enormity of violence.—* * * * Nothing can describe the French soldiers, and the low Spanish, [la canalla de Espana.]

COUNT ABISBAL is the same individual who, whilst in command of the troops collected some years ago at Cadiz, and intended for the expedition against South America, was said to have first corrupted them, and then betrayed, disarmed, and embarked a portion of them. He has a brother latterly in the Constitutional service, who has betrayed his trust, gone over to the French, and has obtained a command in the army of the Faith.—Union.

ALEXANDER OF RUSSIA.

The British Press of June 14, in commenting on an article from Berlin respecting disturbances in Russia, says:—"A conspiracy against the life of Alexander is said to have been discovered, in which several of the first families in his dominions are reported to be involved. The communication is stated to have been made by an ecclesiastic to the Empress-mother, and to be of such moment that the northern despot has abandoned all thoughts of proceeding on his journey through Italy, and there consummating the plans of the Holy Alliance against the freedom of that fine and oppressed country and Spain; and conspiring further against the repose and happiness of Europe. Alexander's grandfather, the haughty Peter, and his father, the frantic Paul, both fell by the hands of assassins. Strong discontent has prevailed throughout Russia since the deep designs against the Turkish provinces were abandoned. Since Alexander withdrew his ravenous hordes from the Pruth, and transferred them to Poland, the murmur of dissatisfaction has been frequent and loud. The war against the Ottoman was popular from two motives—first, from fanaticism and religious attachment to the Greeks; and next, from the thirst for spoil and plunder. Strong reproach throughout all Russia has fallen on Alexander, for his vile duplicity and conduct to the Greeks. He first incited them to revolt, and then abandoned them to their fell oppressors. He shrunk from the contest with the Moslem, disarayed by the jealousy of Austria and the persevering interference of Great Britain. He thought, too, to take the Turk unprepared, and he saw his fanaticism enkindled, and the sabres and staghers of the Janissaries flashing in the sunbeams. Wide spread murder, rapine, and violation, succeeded among the deluded Greeks; the sun went down for weeks together amid the shrieks of exterminated victims, and the moon slept for nights upon an ocean of blood. Divine or human justice would not be accomplished unless the perfidious despot tasted in his own person a portion of the indescribable suffering his fiends and falsehoods had entailed on luckless thousands. This is not the first conspiracy hatched against him; another broke out in the Imperial Guards before His fall would be a public benefit to Europe; his existence and power are incompatible with its safety or freedom. We are no friends to conspiracies, and would wish to see him fall otherwise than by the assassins' hands; but it would be well for the civilized world and its happiness that he was no more."

Antiquities.

THE ORIGIN AND ANTIQUITY OF CARDS.

[From Rouce's Doctrine of Chances.]

CARDS were always made of paper, and seem to have been invented about the year 1390, to divert Charles VI. of France, who had fallen into a melancholy disposition. One Jaquemin Gringonneur, a painter in Paris, appears to have been the inventor, from the following article in the Treasurer's account:

"Paid 56 shillings of Paris to Jaquemin Gringonneur, the painter, for three packs of cards, gilded with gold, and painted with divers colours and divers devices, to be carried to the King for his amusement, &c." A great price in those times; but their carving and guilding required much art—The four suits were meant to represent the four classes of men in the kingdom. The hearts denoted the ecclesiastics; the nobility or prime military part of the kingdom were represented by the points of lances, or spades: diamonds depicted the order of merchants or tradesmen: and the trefoil leaf, or clubs, allusive to the husbandmen and peasants. The four Kings represented David, Alexander, Cæsar, and Charlemagne, which names were on the French cards formerly—they exhibit the four celebrated Monarchies: Judea for the Greeks, Romans, and Franks: by the Queens are represented Argine (anagram for regina) Esther, Judith, and Pallas—typical of birth, piety, fortitude, and wisdom: by the Knaves were designed the servants to Knights, or the Knights themselves—The first certain notice of their having been known in England, occurs in a record in the time of Edward IV. on an application of the card-makers to Parliament, (A. D. 1463,) when an act was made against the importation of playing cards, 3d Edw IV. c. 4. From this statute it appears, that cards were then made and card making were known and practised in England before this period, or about 50 years after the era of their supposed invention.—Mr. Gough observes, the use of cards among the Chinese is evident, not only from a Chinese painting representing their playing with something much like cards, but also, from a pack of Chinese cards in his possession, made of the same materials as the European, but the devices are very different. The method of making playing cards seems to have given the first hint to the invention of printing, as appears from the first specimens of printing at Haerlem, and those in the Bodleian library.

CHEAP TIMES.

An extract from "A Sermon preached by the Rev. Father H. Latimer, before our late Sovereign Lord, of famous memory, King Edward the Sixth, within the preaching place, in the Palace at Westminster, 1549, the 8th of March."

"YOU landlords, you rent-raisers. I may say you step-lords, you unnatural lords, you have for your possessions yearly too much. For that I hear before went for XX or LX pound, by years, (which is an honest portion to be had gratis, in one lordship, of another man's sweat and labour) now is let for L or C pound by the year.—Of this too much cometh the monstrous and portentious dearth made by man notwithstanding God doth send us plenty. Also the fruits of the earth, specifically, contrary to our deserts.—The poore men which live of their labour, cannot with the sweat of their face, have a living, all kind of victuals is so deare. Pigs, geese, capons, chickens, egges, &c. These things, wise others, seem to unreasonably enhanced, and I think verily, that if it thus continue, we shall at length be constrained to pay for a pigge a pound!—I will tell you my Lords and Masters, this is not for the King's honor.—My father was a yeoman, and had no lands of his own, only he had a farm of three or four pounds by year at the uttermost, and hereupon he tilled as much as kept half a dozen men. He had walke for an hundred sheepe, and my mother milked thirty kine.—He was able, and did find the King a harnes, with himselfe and his horse, while he came to the place he should resort for the King's wages. I can remember that I buckled his harnes, when he went to Blackeheath fielde.—He kept me to school, or else I had not beene able to have preached before the King's Majesty now. He married my sisters with five pounds or XX nobles a peece, so that he brought them up in godliness, and fear of God. He kept hospitality for his poore neighbours, and some alms he gave to the poore, and all this he did of the said farme.—Where hee that now hath it, payeth sixteen pound by the yeare, or more, and is not able to do any thing for his Prince, for himselfe, nor for his children, or give a cup of drinke to the poore."—(Bishop Latimer's Sermons, printed at London, by Thomas Cates, for the Company of Stationers, 1635.)

No. 51.—CURE FOR THE FEVER AND AGUE.—As the fever and ague is more or less prevalent, we have been requested to state, that a glass of strong Boneset Tea, taken at the approach of the ague, will ordinarily arrest the disease on its first trial—and reserely ever fail on the second. Besides, it is represented as an excellent preventive to this disorder.—We are somewhat acquainted with this herb, and are persuaded that its medicinal qualities ought to bring it into more general use. In the family of our informant it has been in use for years—and in the above complaint, it has never known to fail. It is scarcely necessary to state, that so abundant is the growth of this herb in this vicinity, that it may be gathered by cart loads.—Query—What is Boneset?

No. 52.—CURE OF PUTRID FEVERS.—The following remarks on the application of Animal Charcoal (Ivory Black) in the cure of yellow fever in its putrid or malignant stage is respectfully submitted to the physicians of New York.

From a series of experiments, it has been found that Animal Charcoal claims a decided preference as an Antiseptic, in the animal fluids, to any article hitherto discovered.—Its action on the Viscera is extremely mild, and its beneficial effects on the system, when combined with Sulphuric Acid in the following manner, will be observed in a few hours:—

To one table-spoon full of Animal Charcoal add one pint of Milk; let them be well mixed, and administer one-third every two hours. Fifteen minutes after each dose let the patient drink freely of water, with 30 or 40 drops of sulphuric acid to each pint.

P. S.—METHOD OF MAKING GREEK FIRE.—When the following composition, which has been a desideratum in pyrotechny, is burned in a reflector, it sheds a beautiful green light over surrounding objects. It may likewise be employed in fire works.

Flowers of Sulphur,	13 parts,
Nitrate of Barytes,	77
Oxymuriate of Potash,	5
Metallic Arsenic,	2
Charcoal,	3—13.

No. 54.—TO PRESERVE FISH, &c.—It is stated in the London Magazine, that Dr. Macculloch has preserved salmon, whiting and cod, in a dry state, and perfectly fresh, by means of sugar alone, and even by a very small quantity. Fresh fish may be kept by this means for several days, and when the cards, but also, from a pack of Chinese cards in his possession, made of the same materials as the European, but the devices are very different. The method of making playing cards seems to have given the first hint to the invention of printing, as appears from the first specimens of printing at Haerlem, and those in the Bodleian library.

Domestic.

ST. JOHN, N. B, July 8.

Dreadful effect of lightning.—A lamentable and appalling occurrence took place at Miramichi, in the last month. A flash of lightning struck the east end of the house of Major M'Donald, (which was just finished in the neatest manner, being built of stone and covered with slate,) rended that end to pieces, killed his son, a boy about 11 years of age, wounded his daughter and himself, so that his life is despaired of; the electric fluid struck him a little below the breast, and in its descent burnt him in a most shocking manner—tore the shoes on his feet to atoms, and what is most singular, it destroyed his drawers, while his pantaloons remained unfigured.

Died.

At Montreal on the fifteenth instant, at his residence in this city, aged 75 years, the Honorable GEORGE HENRY MONK, Brother of the Chief Justice of the District of Montreal, and formerly one of His Majesty's Justices of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia—He was a long time a resident in that Province, and before he occupied a seat on the Bench, had filled many offices of trust and respect ability. His conduct as a Judge had been so upright, so impartial, and so satisfactory, that when he withdrew from that elevated situation, the Assembly of Nova Scotia voted him in the most kind manner a liberal salary during life—His judicial virtues are recorded in the Statute Book of that Province,—his social virtues in the hearts of all those who knew him. Possessed of such qualifications as those with which he was endowed, of politeness, which proceeded from the heart, of a spirit of hospitality which came from the same source, it is needless to add, that he sunk into his grave with the sincere esteem and unfeigned regret of all those who had the honour of his acquaintance. His end was, like the whole tenor of his life, marked with manly energy. In his approaching dissolution, he saw the inevitable issue of the infirmities of old age, and the cheering dawn of a more happy existence

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of July instant, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of June last, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the 24th day of July instant, at which time at our town of York, you were held and commanded to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby considering, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Monday the first day of September next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces the city of York, the twenty-fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

PROPOSALS
FOR PUBLISHING MONTHLY, AT MONTREAL, THE CANADIAN MAGAZINE, AND LITERARY REPOSITORY.

THE encouragement which Literature has obtained in the United Kingdom, may be attributed, in a great measure, to the monthly Publications of merit which emanate from the Press, abounding in a variety of original Biography, and other pieces, written solely for works of this description, which residents in this remote quarter of the globe find it difficult to obtain without considerable expense. As much of the contents of these Publications is doubtlessly of a local nature and devoid of interest to the Canadian reader, it is only intended to take the most valuable pieces of a general character for the REPOSITORY ; thus affording to the public at large, in these Provinces, those literary gratifications which our friends and society generally, throughout the British Dominions in Europe, have so long enjoyed from the genius and ability of our countrymen.

It is not the intention of the proposed work to enter into political discussions, foreign or domestic ; when, however, impartial and well written articles are received from home, they will be re-printed ; the remaining part of the Miscellany shall be conceived, be most appropriately disposed of in giving publicity to local communications relating to the condition of our Townships and Settlements ; in promoting the cause of Religion Virtue, Morality, Education, and the general diffusion of Agricultural and other useful knowledge.

A regular supply of the most popular and esteemed British publications, are received, and no effort will be spared to render the selections of the CANADIAN MAGAZINE worthy of the patronage which is anticipated in both Provinces.

A brief summary of Foreign and Domestic News, Army Promotions, State of the Montreal Market, Agricultural Report, State of the Weather, Shipping List, &c. will be found at the end of each Number.

CONDITIONS.

1st—The July number will be published early in August ; it will be printed upon fine paper, and be properly arranged for binding half yearly. Each number will contain nearly 100 pages.

2d—The Subscription to be SIX DOLLARS, payable half yearly in advance : the first half year will be collected after the delivery of the first number. Postage payable by the Subscribers.

3d—Gentlemen desirous of obtaining the first Number, will please to affix their names to a Subscription List before the 24th instant ; every Subscriber will be at liberty to withdraw his name at the end of six months.

4th—Subscription Lists will be found at the principal places of public resort, in Montreal and Quebec, and at the Post Offices of the principal Towns in the Upper Province.

Communications connected with the avowed object of this work, (post paid) are requested to be addressed to the Editor of the Canadian Magazine, at the Book Store of the Publisher, Mr. NICKLESS.

Montreal, 11th July, 1823.

☞ Mr. JOSEPH NICKLESS, Bookseller, Notre Dame Street, Montreal, is authorised to make the necessary arrangements in this City and Quebec, to receive the signatures of Gentlemen disposed to patronize and subscribe for the proposed Magazine ; and also to correspond on the same subject in the Upper Province.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To Axe-men, Labourers, and Husband-men, (in want of Farms) generally.

SEVERAL valuable Estates of 50, 100, and 200 Acres each, with improvements of various extent upon them, and the Land of unexceptionable quality, in the District of Newcastle, may be had on reasonable terms, with FREE DEEDS, and wholly unincumbered, by any sober and industrious man, or set of men, who may be willing to work either at chopping, logging, fencing, ditching, or general agricultural labour.

Several years' credit may be had, if desired, on proper security being given, and THE ENTIRE PAYMENT WILL BE TAKEN IN LABOUR, as the proprietor has some Improvements in view that will require many hands.

Mr. PITT'S BIRTH-DAY.

From the Dublin Journal June 2.

LONDON, MAY 30.—The grand triennial celebration of Mr. Pitt's Birth-Day took place on Wednesday, according to custom, at Merchant Tailor's Hall. The Duke of Richmond was to have presided, but in consequence of indisposition, his place was occupied by Lord Kenyon His Lordship was supported on the right by the Lord Chancellor, and on the left by the Earl of Westmoreland. The Earl of Liverpool, the Duke of Wellington, Earl Bathurst, the Earl of Harewood, and other noblemen and gentlemen of distinction were present. The attendance generally was more numerous than we remember for some years.

"Ashes. The sales of the week amounted to 100 barrels Montreal Pot and Pearl at 44s. 167 barrels United States Pot at 40s.—and 100 barrels United States Pearl at 40s to 41s.

BY THE LATE ARRIVALS.

LONDON, JUNE 20

Not less than eight French vessels have been posted on Lloy's books to-day, as having been captured by Spanish privateers, two or three of which were noticed in the French papers of yesterday. The most valuable is the Penelope, which was taken in the neighbourhood of Marseilles, and being from the East Indies, has been insured at Lloyd's for about £60,000, and not £100,000, as stated in the Evening Papers It is calculated that by the capture of all these vessels the underwriters will be losers to the amount of £300,000. These successes, no doubt, will hasten the sailing of a great number of Spanish privateers which have been fitting out on different parts of the coast. The principal French naval force has been cruising lately off Cadiz, under the expectation that Ferdinand would attempt to make his escape by sea, so that the Spanish privateers in their directions have been very little molested.

On the 13th June, a most interesting meeting was held in the London Tavern, to take into consideration the best means of affording assistance to the Spaniards—Lord Wm. Bentick in the chair—the meeting was numerously attended—the great hall is said to have been completely filled at an early hour, and if a hundred who were desirous of being present, were obliged to go away with their wishes ungratified—Among those present were Earl Grosvenor, Earl Gosford, Lord Erskine, Lord Lyndoch, Lord Elorington, M. P; Lord J. Russell, M. P.; Sir James Mackintosh, M. P; H. Brougham, Esquire, M. P.; T. Denman, Esq. M. P.—Several eloquent speeches were delivered on the occasion Sir James Mackintosh with his usual ability addressed the meeting at some length.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE,

AT DEVONSHIRE HOUSE.

Last evening at nine o'clock, Earl Gower, eldest son of the Marquess Stafford, led to the Hymeneal altar Lady Harriet Howard, the amiable and interesting daughter of Lord Morpeth. The ceremony was performed in the great drawing-room, by the Archbishop of York, in the presence of:—The Marquess of Stafford, Duke and Duchess of Rutland, Duke of Norfolk, Earl and Countess of Surry, Viscount and Viscountess Belgrave, Earl of Carlwillian, Earl of Carlisle, Viscount and Viscountess Granville, Lord and Lady Francis Leveson Gower, Dowager Lady Cawdor, Lady Anne Vernon, Hon. George and Mrs. Lamb, Hon. Geo. Howard, Hon. Henry Howard, Miss Howard Mr. and Mrs. Agar Ellis and Mr. Lock, Mr. and Lady Gertrude Sloane Stanley.

—Previous to the ceremony, a new piano forte was given in the Banqueting Hall, of which the whole party partook, except the Earl of Carlisle.

The Bride was dressed in a magnificent robe of Valenciennes lace, with a veil of the same material, extending to the feet from the head. The two Misses Leveson Gower were the bride-maids.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy pair set off in a new post chariot and four for the Marquess of Stafford's villa at Richmond, there to pass the honey-moon.

The Bride entered into her 18th year the preceding week; the Bridegroom is in his 36th year —LONDON, May 19th.

LONDON, June 19.

A Spanish Cabinet Messenger arrived last night in London. He was despatched by the Mock Regency at Madrid to Mr. Canning, and we know that the letters which he brings for the British Government, dated the 8th inst are for the purpose of requesting that England will acknowledge the Regency, according to the example given by the Courts of Austria, Prussia and Russia.

It was reported in London, that they new Regency of Spain had determined on refusing to recognise the debts contracted by the Constitutional Government. Seven expresses having arrived from Paris on that subject, in a few hours, this had occasioned considerable excitement in the money market; but it appearing from the French papers, that the statement rested on the authority of a private letter, doubts had arisen as to its authenticity

If we are to credit the London Courier, the British Government were about to check the proceedings of those who were raising money in aid of the Spanish patriots. The Corporation of the City of London is said, in the same paper, to have acted illegally in voting money to support the same cause.

The public funds in London as well as in Paris were on the decline when the last account came away

A vessel was about to leave England for Spain with 1000 barrels of gunpowder and several thousand stand of arms on board.

It was rumoured, that the three great Northern Powers had withdrawn their Ambassadors from the court of Stutgard; an event which, according to the Paris papers, would our prior the public The cause of this sudden movement is not even conjectured

The London Courier of the 16th June, contains extracts of letters from Sir Robert Wilson, to J. G. Lambton, Esq. He says, 1000 men have been sent to the army from Vigo, and every man in the town is enrolled in the Militia; that the province of Gallicia could be defended with 12,000 troops against the whole army of the Duke d'Angoulême; that Coruna is attached to the Constitution Between Vigo and Coruna he had seen 5000 men, wanting nothing but supplies, and discipline to make them the best troops in the world. for a Spaniard with water and a bit of bread, "or a kind of pea," will march 40 miles a day. With some good officers and non-commissioned officers (British) Sir Robert pledges himself to raise an army of 25,000 men in two months, if he can only get arms and equipments

Bell and Lancaster's System of Education.—A meeting was held in London on the 29th of May last, of the "National Society," established for the purpose of promoting Bell's system of Education, at which the Archbishop of Canterbury presided. The report read on this occasion stated, that the number of National schools had within the last year increased considerably, and that 100,000 British children were now flourishing under the admirable system of education introduced by the society

The celebrated Englishman, Capt. Cochrane, who is famous both in and out of Europe. for his long excursions on foot and in a boat, been for two years engaged in such a tour in Siberia, to discover whether in the Northern Lattes, would our any connection between the continent of Asia and America, has married in Kamtschatka, a native of that country, and is now on his return. He has not found any junction of the two continents.—Hamburgh paper.

Sugar.—There was an importation into England last year from the West Indies, 3,363,698 cwt of sugar besides a quantity from other parts, which formed a whole of 3,643,127 cwt The duty paid for the same amounted to upwards of £3,579, 000.

Swimming.—The London Courier remarks, that a number of experiments have lately been made at Paris, with a swimming machine, called a Ronanelle, from the name of the inventor M Ronan It is made of tin, and has the appearance of two canes lengthened into a tapering form, and very strongly united. It is fixed under the arm pits, and whoever has it on may cross a river, even if loaded with a burden, without any apprehension.

The daughter of a Greek called Aspasia, has traverse the islands in the garb of a warrior and sailed upon the young men to enlist under the banners of their country. She recruited, by her activity and enthusiastic eloquence, sixteen companies of 80 men each, placed herself at their head, and proceeded with them to Napoli di Romania.

Marriage.—The following appeared in an English paper, at the time when a bill was under consideration to prevent clandestine marriages—They were intended as salutary clauses to be added to the bill, in order to prevent unhappy marriages; and the penalties to be inflicted on the delinquent as follows:—

"When two young thoughtless, fools having no visible way to maintain themselves, or any thing to begin the world with, yet resolve to marry and be miserable let it be deemed petit larceny If a younger brother marry a noble woman, purely for a maintenance, let it be called a defendants. When a rich old fellow marries a young girl in her bloom I would have it made felony without benefit of clergy. When two old creatures, that can hardly bear one another speak but lamb and cough night and day, and propose not the least comfort to themselves, yet will marry to be more miserable let them be deemed non compos, and sent to a mad house. When a lady marries a coachman, and a gentleman his cook maid, (especially if there be children by a former marriage) let them both be transported for fourteen years When a man has had one devil of a wife, and has buried her, and will marry a second, let him be brought in fele de se, and doomed in his high way accordingly When a woman in good circumstances marries a town rake not worth a groat, if she is betrayed into it, let it be called accidental death, if she knew it, make it simple felony, and singe her in the fist. When a man with no children marries a woman with five or six, or nice vices, let the delinquent stand thrice in the pillory lose both ears, and suffer one year's imprisonment. If a man marries a woman of ill fame, knowing her to be so, let him have a pair of horns painted on his street door, in perpetuam rei memoriam; and if she be a known scold, then a couple of neatly tongued as an additional ornament to the street door And also a man or woman marries to the disinheriting of their children let them suffer as in cases of high treason When a woman marries a man deeply in debt, knowing him to be so, let her be sent to the house of correction, and kept at hard labour for three months; and if he deceives her, by not letting her know his circumstances, let her be acquitted, and he be doomed to beat hemp all the days of his life."

Trotting Matches.—Major R Gough's two matches took place yesterday, at Hinton Park Surrey They were for two hundred sovereigns each The first match was to trot six miles in three mare 3 miles in 11 minutes, and carry feather weight The first mile was done in three minutes and thirty five seconds the second in three minutes and thirty-eight seconds, and the third in three minutes and forty seconds—The match was won by seven seconds within the even time.

The second match was to trot a horse, bona fide his own property, sixteen miles within one hour, and carry eleven stone. The match was done over a two-mile piece of ground.

It was a close race, and won with difficulty.

A very remarkable circumstance has lately occurred in the family of a poor woman residing at Headington Quarry.—Three years ago she was confined with a child born blind, with congenital cataracts, which was operated on by Mr. Cleobury, at five months old, and restored to sight—The child can now see the smallest objects About four or five months since the poor woman was again confined, and the second child was also born blind, and is to undergo a similar operation —For the consolation of parents whose children may be afflicted with this great calamity, we have Mr C's authority to state, that he never yet experienced an instance of the operation failing. The above gentleman also observes, that the watching practice Segnefortuna, the more perfect will the organ be as an optical instrument, as the eyes partake of the proportionate growth of the other parts of the body. Hence nature will have an opportunity of supplying in some measure the deficiency of the lens; the infant will possess greater power over the voluntary muscles of the eye, and thus be able to fix the organ more steadily on the object. It will be a better judge of distance, and above all, its education will not be impeded.—Oxford Paper.

Legal Mules.—The Lisbon Gazette of the 12th June, contains a long list of officers, naval and military, who, when the King of Portugal made his triumphal entry into Lisbon on the 5th, unharnessed the mules of his coach, and drew the vehicle themselves a considerable distance. The list gre sents colonels, captains, &c. bearing some of the most distin guished names of Portugal, and was published officially after having been solemnly read in the presence of the parties who had the honor to supplant the mules.

A picture of Mrs. Siddons, as the tragic muse, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, was sold in London, by public auction for seventeen hundred and fifty guineas! Earl Grosvenor was the purchaser.

An eminent builder has computed that there are now 26, 000 new houses contracted for in and about London. If an average of four inmates to each house be allowed, this would make an increase of population within the bills of mortality of upwards of 100,000 souls.

The Ambassadors of Austria, Russia, and Prussia, have been withdrawn from the Kingdom of Wurtemberg—the cause alledged is something connected with their Constitution, which is a representative one.

An English ship laden with wheat has arrived at Rio Janerio in South America from Near-Holland This fertile spot, colonised only a few years ago, has already entered into the great competition of this market with bread stuff. The wheat was of a superior quality, but did not realize a price sufficient to encourage further shipments.

Ireland continued to be the scene of the greatest disorders. In an affray between Orangemen and Ribbonmen at a country fair, the latter were routed with the loss of 8 killed and 6 wounded.

IRELAND.

We are happy in noticing an article copied from the Dublin Evening Post, which states that the annual custom of decorating the Statue of William the III. in Dublin, on the 12th July, is recommended by the Grand Orange Lodge to be discontinued; this absurd practice, so grating to the feelings of Catholics, and productive of so much ill blood, has been too long suffered to disgrace the Irish metropolis.

A fatal riot recently took place at Maghera, county Derry, Ireland. A large number of Ribbonmen made an attack on a house in which an Orange Lodge met, and broke the wind ows. The military were called to suppress the riot, but being few in number they were compelled to retire to their barracks, after being severely beaten. The Clergymen of the town was attacked, and the windows of the houses of Protestants were broken. Orangemen defended themselves, and kept up a constant fire upon the assailants from the windows of the Lodge room. A party of yeomanry from Tubbermore entered the town, when the Orangemen rallied and drove the Ribbonmen out of Maghera, nine Ribbonmen were killed and between 60 and 70 wounded. One Orangeman was killed and several wounded. At Magherafelt a riot took place on the same day. One man was desperately wounded with a hatchet.

Captain Rock's party continue to rob, destroy and murder. One of the murderers of Mr. Crofts has been taken. His name is Callaghan, and lived near Ballyclough, or rather Coppstown.

CORK, June, 6

Horrible Outrage.—Last night an armed party attacked the house of Richard Crofts, Esq. (father of the sheriff elect of this city) situated near Ballyleg (Glyn, and on the high mail coach road, between Mallow and Butterant. Mr. Crofts, not having any arms, was obliged to admit them, and on their demanding ten pounds in money, which he refused to give, alleging that he had it not, one of the ruffians fired at him; the shot took effect, and we deeply regret to learn, that he was considered in imminent danger at the time the messenger left him. He was a most respectable gentleman, of mild and amiable manners, and, we have heard, remarkably popular among the lower classes Who then can reckon himself safe in this carnage against life and property? Mr. Crofts is since dead.

One Terence M'Manus, in the North of Ireland, lately taken up for sheep-stealing, wrote an account of the same to his friend, in the following words. "As we wished to have some mutton to our turnips, we went to Squire Carroll, who had more sheep than his neighbours; they were very wilde, and the pasture very large, and we were obliged to take a new method to entice them by force to come near us. As this method may be of some service to you to no, I think it my duty to tell you of it; Pat Duggen and me wrapt ourselves up in hay, and as the sheep came round to ate it, we cut their throats. But a search being made, five hind quarters belonging to too of them, was found in my cabin.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

The news from the seat of war is of a very indecisive character, and not possessed of much interest. The French troops continue without any interruption, their march towards Seville, where the King still remains.

The new Regency has issued a decree granting amnesty to the constitutional soldiers, who will return to their allegiance and present themselves to make submission to the King.

It is stated that Count d'Abisbal has arrived at Bayonne, and that he owes his life to a French Regiment which arrived at the moment he was about to be shot.

The intrepid Mina, it is said, has entirely evacuated the District of the Country called the Cerdagne, where the French troops have been in pursuit of him, and retired by the Valley of Ribas, with 2000 men, 90 cavalry, and 20 mules loaded with money and material.

It is stated as positive information, and known in France, (although their journals are prevented from disseminating it,) that Mina had completely beaten Donnadieu in Catalonia, and had taken a convoy of 300 mules laden with a million and a half of francs, in gold and silver, and 4,000 Spaniards, the escort, were completely routed.

The arrival on the 16th, at Havana, of the Spanish schr. Maria Antonia, in 37 days from Cadiz, confirms the above intelligence.

Governor Vives, has had published a spirited and patriotic address to the inhabitants of Havana. His indignant remarks, that while another country had been basely invaded and insulted, the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba will tamely look on the glorious struggles of their fathers and brothers, for liberty and national independence? Will they behold with indifference the outrages of tyranny over a liberal government? Can they remain tranquil when a Constitutional King and Cortes are to have their duties and their legislative proceedings profaned by a band of adventurers and invading foreigners, who wish to bow the neck of Spain under their iron galling yoke?

External outcry and approbium to the inhabitants of Cuba, if they do not sympathise and unite with their brethren of the Peninsula. The fate of ancient Spain can never be indifferent to Cubians United by blood, by feeling, by religion, by habit, they passionately participate in her adversity and her prosperity. The very agitations of her capital are communicated to this island, and move the Cubians as they move their brethren in Spain. The most sacred rights of justice and the public welfare, invite you to inscribe your names in the registry of citizens, which the constitutional authorities of the Island present to you. You will inviolably preserve the magna charta which gives to Spaniards the "RIGHTS OF MAN." You will defend and strengthen your ties with the parent government.

Your provisional deputation will recommend such measures as are necessary to retain the dignity of the country in this trying crisis. The greatest confidence is reposed in the generosity and patriotism, which on the most important occasions, have been evinced by the faithful Havana; and the inhabitants generally of the island of Cuba. Every sacrifice is expected by the political Chief and Captain-General."

Havana, 20th of July, 1823.

Late accounts from Peru, state that 3000 Colombian troops sailed from Guayaquil for Callao on the 20th of March; 2000 more were to follow in a short time. Gen. Bolivar remained at Guayaquil, waiting advises from the Congress at Bogota, were killed and between 60 and 70 wounded. One Orange- before he proceeded in person. Another detachment of Colombian troops was about to proceed from Quito against the Spaniards in Peru.

LATEST FROM SPAIN.

Arrival of the King at Cadiz,

The King of Spain and suite arrived at Cadiz at half past six in the afternoon of the 16th of June. The troops of the garrison, and the national militia occupied the public square, and an immense crowd filled the streets, windows and balconies. The municipal authorities received the King at the entrance of the town; before the door of the fortress delivered to him the keys of the city with the usual formalities, and he was congratulated on his arrival in the name of the inhabitants.

"The enthusiasm," says the Cadiz Gazette "of which was that he was considered in imminent danger at the time the messenger left him. He was a most respectable gentleman, of mild and amiable manners, and, we have heard, remarkably popular among the lower classes Who then can reckon himself safe in this carnage against life and property? Mr. Crofts is since dead.

One Terence M'Manus, in the North of Ireland, lately taken up for sheep-stealing, wrote an account of the same to his friend, in the following words. "As we wished to have some mutton to our turnips, we went to Squire Carroll, who had more sheep than his neighbours; they were very wilde, and the pasture very large, and we were obliged to take a new method to entice them by force to come near us. As this method may be of some service to you to no, I think it my duty to tell you of it; Pat Duggen and me wrapt ourselves up in hay, and as the sheep came round to ate it, we cut their throats. But a search being made, five hind quarters belonging to too of them, was found in my cabin.

Entrance of a letter, dated Cadiz, June, 19.

"The French fleet have this moment sent a flag of truce, which will state how the blockade is to be understood.

Rendered in the new tariff. Every thing is allowed to be imported, even colonial produce.—What we want much are provisions.

Our board of health has issued an order, by which, until the 30th of November, no vessel from the United States, Gulf of Mexico, &c. will be admitted here without performing first forty days quarantine at Mahon. This measure cannot possibly be put in force."—French Gaz.

MINA'S VICTORY!—Under the head of Cadiz, June 8, we read this best cheering intelligence. An express had arrived from Catalonia, which gives to General Mina, a victory over the French, and Factious, in which the latter lost 424 men killed, and 300 prisoners, numerous quantities of arms and ammunition, three cannons and large quantities of stores and provisions. "Despatches of such import," says the account. The battle continued an entire day, without cessation of fire, and in the evening when the superior numbers of the enemy had pushed Mina too closely, and almost surrounded the forces under his immediate command, this gallant General was timely re-inforced by the division of Colonel Manso, and that of Zorraquin, who attacking the French upon their rear, in unison with the regiments of the line (Canarias, Asturias, and Numancia) effected their entire defeat. The cavalry, it is added, blunted the swords of their foes on the perfidious enemies of their country.

The Expectador of the 19th June, contains a despatch, to the government at Cadiz, from Lopez Banos, General in chief of the third army of operations, (Abisbal's) dated Seville, 16th June, in which he states, that having heard of the disorders and anarchy reigning in Seville, he had proceeded to that city with his troops, by forced marches, doubting, however, whether he should reach it before the French army On the 16th he arrived, was feted upon from the streets and houses, and the populace without loss on his own part, killed some of them, and restored order.

On the 18th at Cadiz, the minister of war ad interim, Don Stanislaus Sanchez Salvador, was found dead, with his throat cut with a razor. The following note written with his own hand, was found in a window of his chamber.

"Life is becoming every day more insupportable to me. The conviction of this truth has driven me to the horrible resolution of putting an end to my existence. The only consolation which I can have in my solitude is wife, to my dear children and friends, is, that I descend to the tomb with a conscience which does not accuse me of ever having committed crime or offence. I mean to despatch myself with a razor, and I mention this, in order that no other person may in any manner be accused, or implicated. Night of the 17th and 18th of June.

The riots at Seville, the sudden invasion of Andalusia by the French, and other circumstances which affected his mind as Minister of War, are stated as the causes of his suicide, But it was verbally reported, that at Seville, he had betrayed the constitutional cause, and endeavored to connect from his colleagues and the Cortes, the approach of the French to that city.

The Expectador of the 21st June, says, "the government has received information from General Lopez Banos, that the French were to enter Seville yesterday. The general was marching with his forces towards Huelva The government is taking every necessary measure for the defence of the island."

Constitutional guerilla parties were forming in every direction; several of the provinces had sent deputations to England to obtain arms and ammunition; Ballasteros was besieging Murviedro by the 4th of June, and expected to be master of the fort in two days; there was no indication of discord or fixability in the Cortes.

THE GREEKS.

The Greeks have terminated the maritime armaments destined for the campaign of 1823.—Their fleet has received a new organization, and consists of the half of the last two campaigns. A single arrangement will suffice to give an idea of this superiority. Each Greek vessel forming part of the fleet is arranged in such a manner that it may be converted in five minutes into a fire ship; to an extreme case the captain is to set fire to his ship rather than abandon her to the enemy, even though he should be blown up with her. It will be seen how the Christians embarked on board the Turkish fleet will respond to this resolution of the intrepid seamen of the Archipelago. Almost all those Christians composed of people very ignorant, known by the name of Dalmatians, Sanlvotians, &c. who occupy the eastern coast of the Adriatic belonging to Austria. The Greeks will probably endeavor to blow some of them into the air, in order to disgust the other with a conduct so little Christian.

In the Island of Candia the Greeks have seized the fort of selina. The numerous Turks who occupied it, repulsed with great loss towards the north of the island, have taken refuge in the fortress of Candia, which is thus much encumbered by the augmented numbers of the Musulmen inclosed in it, and who furnish new aliment to the plague which is making its ravages. This advantage is very important from the consequences resulting from it. Already two districts between Selina and the fortress of Candia, which from their situation remained inactive, have taken up arms immediately after this event. On the other hand, the Greeks who were hitherto compelled to divide their force between Selina, in the south of the island, and the three fortresses in the north, have now concentrated all their troops in the latter point, and blockaded the enemy more strictly than ever.

For some time past the Greeks have paid particular attention to the Island of Eubea or Negropont, which is in several respects worthy of attention. The island is one of the seven largest in the Mediterranean, and by its position it commands on one side the greater part of the Cyclades, and on the other the whole coast of Greece from Cape Sanium in Attica, to the south of Thessaly—By means of its possession, it would be easy to make advantageous excursions on the whole of these coasts, and thus disturb the flanks of the enemy who occupy them.

LITERATURE.

Copyright of a Newspaper.—On the 4th curt the Court of Session (Second Division,) determined an important point regarding the copyright of new-papers.

John and Peter Wilson, in 1803, established a newspaper called the Ayr Advertiser, or West Country Journal, which speedily became a lucrative concern, and thenceforward belonged to them equally. In 1809, Peter Wilson sold his half share to a third person, receiving a premium or price for the copyright, exclusive of the stock. The purchaser afterwards sold it to two strangers, receiving the same premium as he had paid.

John Wilson retained his original half share till his death in May 1821. Conceiving it to be a valuable part of his estate, he by his will conveyed his half share of the copyright to his testamentary trustees In all the changes of partners or proprietors, from the first establishment of the newspaper, there had been no written contract of copartnership betwixt them.

John Wilson's trustees were about to sell his half share, when the two persons who had last purchased the other half presented a bill of suspension and interdict to have the trustees restrained, upon the allegation that there was no such thing as the copyright of a newspaper; that the right to print and publish a newspaper exercised by two or more persons associated together, just resembled any other trade; and that upon the death of any partner, there being no written contract providing otherwise, the good will, as it is called, of the business accrued to the survivors. Lord Meadowbank, in the Bill Chamber, appointed the Bill to be answered, and granted the interdict. On advising the Bill, with answers, Lord Cringletie appointed parties to prepare memorials to the Court. In these memorials the case was fully argued.

The Court were unanimously of opinion, that the right of printing and publishing a newspaper, or the share of such a right, however anomalous it may be in point of principle, and whether it might be called copyright, privilege, property, or by whatever other name, is a valuable right, now perfectly known and understood, and is by the common law both transferable inter vivos, and transmissable to heirs, independently of any written contract betwixt partners or proprietors. They therefore recalled the interdict, and refused the Bill with full expenses.

KRUITZNER; OR THE GERMAN TALE. BY HARRIET LEE

The declaration of Lord Byron in his preface to the tragedy of "Werner," that this work contained the germ of much that he had written since the perusal of it, at the age of fourteen, could not fail to create extraordinary anticipation and unbounded curiosity That Byron should have paid this tribute to the memory of any cotemporary without its being a palpable truth to the perception of every reader, was not to be presumed; therefore, the anxiety produced in the literary world to get a sight of the work which, from his own acknowledgement, had made a most powerful impression on the mind of one who has puzzled half the world to conjecture what manner of mind he was possessed of, was certainly not to be wondered at, and it accordingly, in London, ran through five editions, in a shortness of time unparalleled.

This work exhibits a most singular power of mind, and a clear and vivid conception never surpassed in a similar production—an exalted, though perfectly natural tone of feeling, equally capable of estimating that domestic heart born felicity, effected by every day occurrences, as the more refined and less lovely system of happiness consequent upon an adherence to the principles of moral philosophy—it is a work upon pure Christian principles, and the lessons of morality it inculcates are powerful as they are beautiful—it fully illustrates the important truth, that an adherence to our duty at any one period of our lives, will spare us more than half its sufferings.

VINES.

Way to preserve Vines from Bugs.

"As soon as the young plants appeared, we put over them a box consisting of four pieces of shingles, or thin boards, nailed together, one foot long, and about eight inches broad—over the top of this box is stretched a thin piece of worn out muslin or millinet, and edges fastened with tacks to the side of the box. This cover while it admits the air and light, protects the plants effectually from bugs and flies, and shields them from cold winds and frosts. The difference in the growth of the plants thus covered, and those which were left unprotected, was almost incredible, and I observed that while the latter were parched with drought, the soil round the others was constantly moist, and their leaves in the morning were loaded with dew" American Farmer.

TO PRESERVE CUCUMBER PLANTS FROM BUGS.

From the Berkshire Star.

It is said, that if you plant Buckwest with Cucumbers, Mellons or Squashes, the yellow bugs will not attack or often destroy those young plants will prefer the Buckwest to the plants; by which method said plants may get age and strength, so as to escape in a great measure the said destroyers and then the remaining Buckwest may be pulled up. This easy method is worthy of a fair trial.

Another correspondent in the N England Farmer, relates a method of raising cucumbers, which he has used with much success, and which he thinks preferable to the ordinary way of rearing that vegetable. The process is as follows:—A hole measuring two feet in depth and two in circumference, is dug in the ground. This hole is filled with old hay or coarse straw, and then covered with small stones. Three inches from the edge of the hole, the cucumbers are planted around the whole circumference, and as they begin to spread their vines, bushes are stuck in the ground, about 9 inches from the roots. These bushes are similar to those used for peas but in this case they are stuck in the ground in a slanting direction, diverging from the centre of the hole, so that the top end may rise about a foot from the earth. As the vines continue to advance, another row of bushes is placed in the ground, about half way between the top ends of the first row, and the place where their butt ends are in the ground. This second row has the same slant, outward from the circle, given them A third and fourth row of bushes may be added, as the growth of the cucumbers require. By means of the rows of bushes so placed, the vines are born up several inches from the ground, outwards from the edge of the hole, and will continue to bear much longer than those suffered to run directly over the ground. The hole in the centre filled with old hay and stones, is intended to give the vine a sufficient supply of moisture, without the inconvenience of turning the water directly upon them. The gardener, by throwing a certain quantity of water in the hole, has the degree of wet entirely at his command

A barren soil may be made very productive, if it is protected from the rays of the sun, and at the same time exposed to the action of the atmosphere. Earth under a woodshed, a dwelling house, or any other building, if the air has free access to it, soon becomes fertile without manure.

Poetry.

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES.

The following song is set to one of Ireland's merriest planatics, and composed in honor of her far famed WHISKEY. The second verse requires a little explanation. The unfortunate Irish peasant who cannot well pay the exhorbitant rent of an absentee landlord, and is quivering under the fangs of a "middle man," or agent, betakes himself to the loftiest and most unfrequented mountains, where he manufactures the native beverage, by the smuggled sale of which he hopes to disincumber himself. His small uncouth rustic still, and the green turf on which he is obliged to use in the process, gives it the smoke flavour which is alluded to in the second stanza The licenced or lawful whiskey is called the Parliament by the peasantry, and is held by them in great abhorrence—what do you think was once brought before Baron M'Clelland on a charge of smuggling, and was this addressed by his Lordship—"Well, my lad, I remember you. What have you got to say for yourself this time?" "In troth little enough, my Lord, for you kill my witness?"—"I kill your witness!—what do you mean?" "No offence at all, my Lord, but sorry a word of lie there's in it—we were all safe traind at the last assizes, that my poor Paddy would'nt touch a drop ever since except the Parliament, and it finish ed him fairly—my Lord, you know well it'd poison the devil."

AIR.—Paddy O'Rafferty.

Never was philter brew'd with such power
To charm and bewilder as this we are quaffing:
Its magic began when in autumn's rich hour,
As a harvest of gold in the fields it stood laughing;
Then, having by nature's enchantment been fill'd
With the balm and the bloom of each kindliest weather,
This wonderful juice from its ours was distill'd,
To enliven such hearts as are here brought together!
Then drink off the cup—you'll find there's a spell in
Its very drop 'gainst the ills of mortality—
Talk of the cordial, that sparkled for Helen,
The cup was a fiction, but this is reality.
As I though perhaps—but breathe it to no one—
Like caldrons the witch brews at midnight so awful,
In secret this philter was first taught to flow on
Yet—'tisn't less potent for being unlawful.
What though it may taste of the smoke of that flame,
Which in silence extracted its virtue forbidden
Fill up—there's a fire in some hearts I could name,
Which may work too its charm, though now lawless and hidden.
So drink off the cup—for oh, there's a spell in
Its very drop 'gainst the ills of mortality;
Talk of the cordial, that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.

Horrid Murder.—On Friday morning a young woman of the name of Thomson, who has been these few months past a servant in the house of A. M'Nab, of this town, was committed to gaol for the murder of her new born infant—On suspicion being first awakened, proper measures were instantly had recourse to for investigating the affair. For some time the unfortunate woman steadily denied the fact, but at length a full confession of her guilt was obtained, and accompanied by a medical gentleman of this town and others, she led to the grave (dug by herself at a short distance from the house) where the body of the infant was found. It was immediately discovered the child was full-grown—marks of violence were discernable on the head and cheek bone, and on further investigation, a triangular fracture of considerable extent appeared in the skull as if inflicted by a stone. It seems the wretched mother evinced but little concern during the investigation

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K.C.B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, June, 29

It is anticipated that the financial exposé of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will be of the most gratifying description.—The Courier says the revenue during the present quarter will be found, we believe, to be productive almost beyond precedent, and the general flourishing condition of the country furnishes ample ground for congratulation.

On Friday the 20th of June, in the House of Commons, Mr. Wilmot moved a grant of £15000 for promoting emigration from the south of Ireland to the Canadas, and the Cape of Good Hope. The motion, after some discussion, was agreed to.

The state of affairs in Ireland grow more and more alarming—even a rebellion was forboded. Troops were pouring into the agitated districts It was stated by Mr. Peel, in the House of Commons, that out of 84 days that that body had been engaged in business, 69 of them had been occupied in the discussion of Irish subjects.

Mr. Robinson, the King's Messenger, arrived in town yesterday morning, with despatches from Spain. In the afternoon a Cabinet council was held at the Secretary of State's office for Foreign Affairs, which continued sitting about an hour and a half; at the breaking up of which, it was expected, as soon as Mr. Canning could prepare his despatches. Mr. Ward of the British Embassy at Seville would leave town for Spain, with the reply of the British Government to the important despatch of which he was the bearer last Wednesday, from Sir W. A'Court, conveying the account of the removal of the King of Spain from Seville A messenger was despatched to his Majesty at Windsor, with the result of the Cabinet Council. The deliberations of the Cabinet yesterday were a continuation of those of Thursday upon the same subject.

From the Liverpool Mercury of 27th June.

We learn from good authority that the person sent to this country from the new Regency of Madrid, was dismissed from the Foreign Office with a more receipt for the despatches which he delivered. He also waited on the Spanish Minister, Admiral Jabat, to deliver despatches from the Regency, but was ill missed with a declaration that he knew no such body and could not receive the communication which he tendered. London paper.

It is said that Sir Hudson Low is appointed to the Governorship of Demerara.

LONDON, June 16.

The Adjutant General, Sir Henry Torrens, is superintending the practical effect of various alterations and important improvements intended to be introduced in the field exercise and movements of his Majesty's Forces. Sir H[illegible] the author of the improved system, which will, after it has undergone some revision, be promulgated to the army.

This distinguished Officer has already revised and simplified the rules and regulations for the Government of His Majesty's Forces; the improved Code was promulgated to the Army on the 1st January, 1822.

The exclusion of the ladies from the gallery of the House of Commons is thus accounted for:—A Bill being under discussion, which greatly affected the interests of a noble family of high and extensive connections, the galleries were daily crowded with the female relatives of the party, most of them as may be easily imagined, in full possession of the highest possible attractions, as youth, beauty, wit, &c. Upon which a member got up and begged to put the question to the Speaker, whether the credit and character of the House did not most peremptorily require, that in all their deliberations they should be free from any undue or extraordinary influence, and whether any of that Honourable House could cast their eyes up to the galleries, and say that they were so at that moment. He should therefore move, that bevy of beauties should immediately retire. The ladies obeyed, and have never been admitted since in the same manner."

England is an improving nation.—Who, twenty years ago, would have supposed that, in the year 1823, ladies and gentlemen would be forced from London Bridge to Calais in twelve hours, by a kettle of boiling water: or that, while we were stirring our dressing-room fire, we should be leading the ladies at our ball-door? Every thing has improved—how much is [illegible] that [illegible] Dancers are singing Ethiopian ballads through the streets, we have Savoyards, gaily dressed, playing foreign airs. Instead of two long parallel rows of people jumping awkwardly about a room, by way of dancing, we have the attitudinising quadrille, and the twirling waltz; our shops are saloons; our country boxes villas. A time; our pockets are yachts; our country boxes villas. A man who cures deafness is an aurist; a man who cooks one's dinner is an artist; a gig, with a head, is a cabriolet; a boys' school is a seminary, and a girls' school an establishment. An actor's benefit is appointed now—not fixed (like Sylvester Daggerwood's.) Instead of common-place exhibitions, such as we had of old, we have fourteen coloured prints stuck on a wall, and called a cosmorama; we have a terrestric panorama of the coronation; we have equestrian exercises instead of horsemanship, and gymnasia instead of tumbling; even Punch himself has grown genteel.

Scotch Attainders.—We understand that a Petition has been presented to His Majesty, praying for the restoration of the titles of those Peers of Scotland who were attainted in the years 1715 and 1745, and that His Majesty graciously consenting that the families of those Peers have already sufficiently suffered under the penalties inflicted upon them arising out of the attachment of a long line of ancestors to the cause of an unfortunate family, has been pleased to signify his will that the titles should be restored. The petition has been referred to His Majesty's Ministers to be acted upon accordingly.

Spanish Subscription.—On the 21st June, the subscription in aid of the Spanish cause amounted to near £2000 in money, besides many subscriptions in guns, swords, pistols, muskets, shoes, and warlike accoutrements of various kinds. Admiral Jabat transmitted the sum of £350 from the gentlemen of the Spanish Legation, of which the Duke de San Lorenzo subscribed £100 and the Admiral £300. The committee in delicate terms declined to accept the generous proposal, as they were unwilling to add to the great sacrifices which the Legation and all Spaniards would be called upon to make in the sacred cause in which they were embarked.

A GREAT NAME.

To the Editor of the Liverpool Mercury.

"Good 'name' in man or woman
Is the immediate jewel of the soul."

GENTLEMEN,—On the 8th day of March, 1790, the Princess of Asturias was brought to bed, at three o'clock in the morning, of a Prince, who was soon after baptized by the Cardinal Patriarch. His names were, Charles, Dominick, Eusebius, Raphael, Joseph, Anthony, John, Nepomucenus, Gabriel, Julian, Vincent, Ferrer, Andrew, Avelin, Louis, Ferdinand, Angel, Francis, Pascal, Joachim, Cayetan, Ignatius, Emanuel, Raimond, January, and Francis de Paul. For the truth of which, I refer you to the 1st vol. of the New Annual Register, for the year 1790.

Pray can you inform me if this Prince is now living, or any of the same family, and their names, if they will not take up too much room in your columns?

ROME.

There are in Rome 19 Cardinals, 27 Bishops, 1450 Priests, 1528 Monks, 1464 Friars, and 963 Seminarists. The population of Rome, in 1821, without reckoning the Jews, amounted to 146,000 souls.

The diving bell, recently employed in Plymouth Sound under the superintendence of Mr. Sisley King, Harbour-Master, has been removed to Portsmouth, after having rendered the most essential service to the above anchorage.—During its operation in the Sound, two rocky ledges have been reduced—one nearly ten feet, and the other six feet; so as to admit of line-of-battle ships sailing over at all times of tide, besides affording about 200 yards more room in that part for large ships to work in and out. The quantity of stone taken off the above-mentioned shoals exceeds 600 tons, and the cold and cheerless winter months have not prevented the work being persevered in.

Cure for the gout.—A gouty gentleman, who has resided in the South of France for some years, informs us that he has remained free from gout for four years, in consequence of wearing oiled silk stockings over fine worsted ones, day and night. Previous to their use he has been subjected to a paroxysm every six months. This practice is common in the south of France, and throughout Italy.—London paper.

A correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury, of the 7th Feb. last, under the signature An Old Woman, sent in the following prophetic parody for publication.—

The King of France,
And one hundred thousand men,
Went up the Pyrenees,
And came down again—

And such is the fate,
I anticipate,
Of Louis the great.

A notorious pirate, named Johnson, was executed at Basseterre on the 16th July. He had killed 4 men, and caused bodies on the 16th July. He had killed 4 men, and caused bodies on the 16th July. He had killed 4 men, and caused another to jump into the sea to avoid his ferocity, out of a crew of eight persons that were on board the vessel that brought him to the above port.

Wonderful Shot!—At Mr. George Stiles of Wellsbeen, was returning home from shooting one day last week, he was surprised at the sudden appearance of night, it being then just three o'clock in the afternoon; on looking up to ascertain the true cause of this phenomenon, he perceived immediately above his head a flock of wild geese—with extraordinary presence of mind, he fired his fowling piece (a single barrel, led gun of Mr. Joseph Manton's) into the centre of the body, and, miraculous to say, brought down three hundred and seventy-eight birds at one shot! This, however surprising as it may appear, is equalled (curiously by the adventure which he subsequently encountered, for, having with great dexterity, secured the birds, by tying them round his waist, he observed a number of ladies standing on a hill, whom previously surprised and alarmed at finding them prostrate, but recollecting himself suddenly flung into the air by ment when he found himself suddenly flung into the air by the resuscitated captives, who, it appeared, had been more frightened than hurt; and which carried him over a large tract of country, and finally alighted in the sea, within seven miles of Hastings, where upon wading to the water, he had the presence of mind to disentangle himself by cutting the waistband of his breeches with a pocket-knife. Thus disencumbered of his birds, he continued swimming till midnight, when he was espied by the look out man of the brig Fanny, of Hull, discovered floating in the water by the lights at the mast head, and sent a boat to his relief, and one day last week he returned to his disconsolate family, with little other injury than fatigue. We were favoured with an account of this by an eye witness of the whole transaction:—John Bull!!

Qualifications of a Cook.—The qualifications of a cook are thus described in a scarce book, entitled. "The English Housewife:"—"First, she must be cleanly, both in body and garments; she must have a quick eye, a curious nose, a perfect taste, and ready ear; she must not be butter-fingered, fast taste, and ready ear; she must not be butter-fingered, sweet-toothed, nor faint-hearted—for the first will let every thing fall; the second will consume what it should increase; and the last will lose time, with too much cleanness." "In and the last will lose time, with too much cleanness." "In the same volume it is recommended, as a preservative from the plague," "To smell on a nosegay made of the unrolled end of a ship-rope."

Singular Intermarriage.—A Mr. Hardwood had two daughters by his first wife, the eldest of whom was married to John Cosbick; this Cosbick had a daughter by his first wife, whom old Hardwood married, and by her he had a son; therefore, old Hardwood married, and by her he had a son; therefore, John Cosbick's wife could say as follows;

My father is my son and I'm my Mother's Mother;
My sister is my daughter, and I'm grandmother to my brother.—Eng Paper.

A curious circumstance took place, to our knowledge, in Conception Bay, Newfoundland. The parties were well some time since, and it is probable they are yet in good health.—

John P. married the mother of Wm. S. and William S. married the mother of John P.—By this singular intermarriage William S stood in the double relation of Father and Son to John P. and John P. was both Father and Son of William S.

Over the door of a house in a village in the West of England is hung a board with this inscription:—"Schooling for little boys and girls at 3d. per week; them as larns manners pays 2d. more."

—INDEX AT FRONT.

"A batch of new peers having just been made, a lady of rank was not sure whether she was in the habit of visiting (that is, exchanging cards) with one of the new peeresses: and she referred to the footman in waiting, who was accustomed to deliver such messages. "Tell her I will Lady if," was the question: to which the servant replied, "Your grace has not visited her since the Creation."

Anecdotes.

From the Itinerant.

DRAMATIC ANECDOTE.

Mrs. Jordan.—The late Mrs. Jordan possessed a heart susceptible of the most tender and humane emotions, and these were called into instant action by the least approach of misery and distress. During her short stay at Chester, where she had been performing, her washer-woman, with three small children, was, by a merciless creditor, thrown into prison. A small debt of forty shillings had been worked up, in a short time, by law expences, into a bill of eight pounds. As soon as Mrs. Jordan heard of the circumstance, she sent for the attorney, paid his demand, and observed, with as much severity as her good natured countenance could assume, "you lawyers are certainly infernal spirits sent on earth to make poor mortals miserable." The attorney, however, pocketed the affront, and with a low bow, made his exit.

On the afternoon of the same day the poor woman was liberated. As Mrs. Jordan, with her servant was taking her usual walk on the Chester walls, the widow with her chil dren followed her; and just as she had taken her shelter from a shower of rain in a kind of porch, dropped on her knees, and, with much grateful emotion, exclaimed, "God forever bless you, madam! you have saved me and my family from ruin." The children beholding their mother's tears, added, by their cries, to the affecting scene; which a sensitive mind could not behold without strong feelings of sympathy. The natural liveliness of Mrs Jordan's disposition was not easily damped by sorrowful scenes; however, though she strove to hide it, the tears of feeling stole down her cheek, and stooping to kiss the children, she slipped a pound note into the mother's hand, and in her usual playful manner, replied, "There, there, now it's all over; go, good woman. God-bless you—don't say another word." The grateful creature would have replied, but this good female Samaritan insisted on her silence and departed.

It so happened that a violent shower had taken shelter under the porch, and witnessed the whole of this interesting scene, who as soon as Mrs. Jordan observed him, came forward, and holding out his hand, he exclaimed with a deep sigh, "Lady, pardon the freedom of a stranger, but would to the Lord the world were all like these!" The figure of this man bespoke his calling; his countenance was pale, and a suit of sable, rather the worse for wear, covered his tall and spare person.—The penetrating eye of Thalia's favorite votary soon developed his character and profession, and with her wonted good humour, retreating a few paces, she replied, 'No, I won't shake hands with you." "Why?" Because you are a methodist preacher, and when you know who I am, you'll send me to the devil!" "The Lord forbid! I am, as you say, a preacher of the gospel, which deals us to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and relieve the distressed; and do you think I can behold a sister cheerfully obeying the commands of my great Master, without feeling that spiritual attachment that leads me to break through worldly customs, and offer you the hand of friendship and brotherly love?" "Well, well, you are a good old soul I dare say, but—I—I don't like fanatics; and you'll not like me when I tell you who I am." "I hope I shall." "Well then, I tell you I am a player;" the preacher sighed; "yes I am a player; you must have heard of me—Mrs. Jordan, is my name." After a short pause, he again extended his hand, and with a complacent countenance, he replied, "the Lord bless thee, who ever thou art; his goodness is unlimited; he has bestowed upon thee a large portion of his spirit; and as to thy calling, if thy soul upbraid thee not, the Lord forbid that I should."

Thus reconciled, and the rain having abated, they left the porch together; the offer of his arm was accepted, and the female Roscius of comedy, and melancholy disciple of John Wesley, proceeded arm and arm, to the door of Mrs. Jordan's dwelling. At parting, the preacher shook hands with her, saying, "Fare thee well sister; I know not what the principles of thy calling may be, thou art the first I ever conversed with; but if their benevolent practice equals thine, I hope and trust, at the great day, the Lord will say to each: Thy sins are forgiven thee.

Lord Kenyon.—A cause having been tried before Lord Kenyon, and a verdict given for the plaintiff, the defendant, not content with the verdict, called the plaintiff a perjured rascal. An action was brought for slander, and which was brought before Lord Kenyon, one of the witnesses was called to prove the words. "What else did he say?" asked Lord Kenyon. "Why, my Lord, " he added, "you were a rascal and the jury all a parcel of d—d fools." Upon which the learned judge directed a verdict to be entered for the defendant, as the words (his Lordship said) had been spoken in rash blind passion, that he was not likely to be seriously believed.

Henry Erskine.—A gentleman of very plain understanding once asked the Hon. Harry Erskine, what was meant by that passage in scripture, "He is clothed with curses?"—" No thing," said he, " but that the man had got a habit of swearing."

A dispute about precedence once arose between a bishop and a judge, and, after some altercation, the latter thought he should quite confound his opponent by quoting the following passage: "For on these two hang all the law and the prophets." "Do you not see," said the lawer, in triumph, " that even in this passage of scripture we are mentioned first?"—" I grant you," says the bishop, "you make first!"

A Highlander entered a haberdasher's shop the other day, and asked for a piece of scarlet cloth, to make him a waistcoat. The rustic manner of the Gael set some young women, who were at the counter a-giggling, and the shop man, willing to afford them sport, began to play off his small wit upon the stranger.—" So good man, ye want a piece of scarlet?—Would you know scarlet if you saw it?" " I think I would," replied the mountaineer. The shop-man threw down a piece of blue cloth; " Is that scarlet"—Hoot no, no; that no be it." A piece of green cloth was then produced; the same question was repeated, and received a similar answer, to the great amusement of the querist and his female friends, who put on their grins in concert with their master. The Highlander took revenge in his own way. He put his nose to the cloth, and affected to judge of the colour by the smell. The shopman, at his request, did the same, but the moment he bent his nose towards the counter, the Highlander seized him by the ears and made his nasal promontory undergo the same violent contact with the boards, that the blood spring from it. That 'said the Highlander, 'is the colour o'scarlet t'ye noo, lad,' and he walked away.—Glasgow paper.

Fact.—A gentleman, who fills every situation necessary to constitute him "the head of the village," and who had taken a wife—" I have no objection, sir; whose wife shall I take?" An equivalent to, if not the original of which we remember to be of some standing in Warwickshire, Sir——, a justice of the peace, had frequently had before him at the suit of the parish, Farmer B——, whose love of intrigue often brought him into paternal scrapes. One day, while his worship sat with my lady, it was announced that the worthy farmer, in charge of the constable, attended for a hearing touching one of his usual mi-doings. My lady was requested to leave the room during the examination; and on going away, met the querist. "John Dutton!" said she "why do you meddle so with the girls? Why don't you get a wife?" Poor John scratched his head apologetically, and replied "Co I does ma lady sometimes, but then their husbands are so fonmed mad."

The belief that punishment of the cruelty, oppression, or misconduct of an individual transcends an act on his children to the third or fourth generation, was not confined to the common people. All ranks were influenced by it, believing that if the curse did not fall upon the first or second generation, it would inevitably descend upon the succeeding.—The late Colonel Campbell, of Glenlyon, retained this belief through a course of thirty years' intercourse with the world, as an officer of the 42d regiment, and of marines. He was grandson of the Laird of Glenlyon, who commanded the party that put to death the Laird of Glenco, and who lived in the Laird of Glenco's house, where he and his men were hospitably received as friends, and entertained a fortnight before the massacre of Glencoe. The war-spirit at length with his family when the first shot was fired, and the murderous scene commenced. Colonel Campbell was an additional Captain in the 42d regiment in 1743, and was put on half pay. He then entered the marines, and in 1762 was Major, with the brevet rank of Lieut. Colonel, and commanded 800 of his corps at the Havanah. In 1771, he was ordered to suppress and the execution of the sentence of a court martial on a soldier of marines, condemned to be shot. A reprieve was sent, but the whole ceremony of the execution was to proceed until the criminal was upon his knees, with a cap over his eyes, prepared to receive the volley. It was then he was to be informed of his pardon. No person was to be told previously, and Col. Campbell was directed not to inform the firing party, who were warned that the signal to fire would be the waving of a white handkerchief by the Commanding Officer. When all was prepared, and the Clergyman had left the prisoner on his knees, in momentary expectation of his fate, and the firing party were looking with intense attention for the signal, Col. Campbell put his hand into his pocket for the reprieve, and pulling out the packet, the white handkerchief accompanied it, and catching the eyes of the party, they fired, and the unfortunate prisoner was shot dead.

The paper dropped through Col. Campbell's fingers, and clapping his hand to his forehead, he exclaimed, 'The curse of God and of Glencoe is here; I am an unfortunate ruined man.' He desired the soldiers to be sent to the barracks, instantly quitted the parade, and soon afterwards retired from the service. This retirement was not the result of any reflection or reprimand on account of this unfortunate affair, as it was known to be entirely accidental.—The impression on his mind, however, was never effaced. Nor is the massacre and the judgment which the people believe has fallen on the descendants of the principal actors in this tragedy, effaced from their recollection. They carefully note, that, while the family of the unfortunate gentleman who suffered is still entire, and his estate preserved in direct male succession to his posterity, this is not the case with family, posterity, and estates of those who were the principals, promoters, and actors in this black affair.

SCOTLAND.

AYR, June 12.

The monument in memory of Burns is now in such a state of forwardness, that we understand the elegant guilded tripod, with which it is to be surmounted, will be placed on the building on or about the 24th of this month. According to ancient custom, certain ceremonies have been observed in placing ornaments of this kind, and we understand that it is in contemplation to finish the building, as it was begun, with a masonic procession.

GREENOCK, June 20.

More British ships have gone to the Russian dominions, this year, than in any since the peace of 1815, particularly to Petersburgh and Libau in the Baltic Sea.

A meeting has been called at Edinburgh to consider the propriety of a subscription in aid of the Spanish constitutionalists.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

From the National Gazette of August 4.

On the 17th and 18th June, the municipal bodies of Cadiz, presented to the Cortes, by deputations, addresses in which they congratulated themselves and Spain, on the presence of that assembly in Cadiz, and recurred to the circumstances of the constitution having been formed there in 1812, defended there in the last resort, and there proclaimed anew, and re-established in 1820. They anticipated that peace and prosperity would again be diffused from the same impregnable citadel of freedom, and answered for the resolution of its inhabitants to perish rather than submit to French control.—The Cortes held their sittings in the same hall in which the constitution was framed in 1812.

Gen. Lopez Banos, was appointed on the 17th June, Political chief of the department of Seville. He levied a contribution of $50,000 upon the ecclesiastical council of the city, as retribution for the excesses committed by the populace.—The Cortes committed in the plunder of the effects of the government and individuals embarked on the river, was immense. The Cortes decreed that the first opportunity should be taken of inflicting the severest punishment upon the rioters.

The Cadiz Espectador of the 20th says, " Why should we not succeed, notwithstanding the trials and conflicts which all lovers of their country now pass through, that the cause of liberty and independence will triumph. We have yet five armies, and hold possession of all our fortresses—we are yet masters of two thirds of the soil of the Peninsula—we have the king and executive government and the Cortes in our island, safe from the numerical superiority of our enemy—we have national honor, steel and arms.—Without money, arms, or government, we contrived to destroy the armies of Napoleon. Those who reasoned from probabilities in our last war of independence, found themselves at the end of a few years completely mistaken.

The Cadiz Editors express great indignation that on the birth day of King Ferdinand, the Original Members, as they call this partizan, should have been permitted to appear by the side of the Duke d'Angouleme in the uniform of a Spanish camp-marshal. The French officers and soldiers are said not to be able to conceal their contempt for their allies of the Array of the Faith. Constitutional Guerilla parties hovered in the immediate neighborhood of Madrid.

The text of the 187th article of the Constitution, under which the Cortes created the Regency when Ferdinand refused to go to Cadiz as king, is this:

" The Kingdom shall be governed by a Regency, whenever, through physical, or moral reasons, it becomes impossible for the King to exercise his authority."

It is stated in the Expectador that the French expected to succeed at Seville by a coup de main. A body of Cavalry, marching with the utmost celerity and secrecy, was to surprise the city, seize the person of the king, and attack and disperse the Cortes and national militia. Their plan and approach were discovered and revealed by two Spaniards—one employed in the department of war, the other a captain in the Seville guard—to whom, says the Expectador, our country owes a tribute of special gratitude and esteem. The Minister of War, who afterwards cut his throat at Seville, kindly accompanied it, and catching the eyes of the party, they fired, and the unfortunate prisoner was shot dead.

CADIZ, June 20.

Address of General Charles Lallemand to his old fellow soldiers.

FELLOW SOLDIERS,

Circumstances and the misfortunes of France have separated us; but we remain united in feeling and principle. Shall we do nothing for France? My friends, her fate is in your hands. You have but to will it, and her wrongs will be avenged; her servitude and degradation averted; her glory and prosperity restored. You know the wishes of the French people. Assemble their deliverers—emancipate France from the yoke of the strangers who dishonor her—chase away that miserable faction of Coblentz, against whom you fought so long, and who have never ceased to array Europe against you. Expel a government which daily brings fresh disgrace upon France, as the price of permission to oppress her.

The enterprise is worthy of you: it is great; it is generous—success is certain, as it depends upon yourselves. Who could beat down France and Spain United? Do not think, would Belgium—Germany, all wait the signal from you? All not all nations applaud the intrepid and self devoted men who shall give it? Will you not have the aid of all nations who want only a rallying point? Dare to become as much renowned as your country. You will be the most splendid glory of your country: she will bless the saviours, the benefactors of your country: she will bless you—you will become the heroes of your time, and open for yourselves the finest path to immortality.

My friends—be not deaf to the voice of a fellow soldier, whose frankness and disinterestedness must be known to you. Admit not the idea of personal ambition on my part you. Admit not the idea of personal ambition on my part in the Pyrenees. I have long had taken place in his mind.—He acknowledged the justice of his condemnation to an ignominious death, and exhorted the crowd of spectators around the scaffold, to take warning by his untimely end, and bitterly lamented that he had no knowledge of a Saviour until the few last days of his life.

GREEKS AND TURKS.

It had been reported, and the report was reiterated in letters from the Turkish frontiers, that the Turkish fleet, soon after it quitted the Dardanelles had been attacked by the Greek fleet and very roughly handled; that the Greeks had even cut off the Captain Pacha with a frigate and three brigs. The Tartars who brought the report to Belgrade, are stated to have left Constantinopole on the 29th of May. According to letters from Pestic, it was also generally reported at Bucharest, that some great misfortune had befallen the Turkish fleet.—Considering the usual uncertainty of the accounts received by this channel, it is taken for granted that these accounts require confirmation.

Letters from Durazzo of 31st May assert, that the brave defender of Patras, Jusaf Pacha, had left his second in command in that place, and had sailed for Prevesa to take the command in Epirus. This would fully confirm the news of the raising of the Blockade by sea. Other letters received at Vienna from Calamatta say, that the castle of Lepanto has been taken by Mark Bozzaris, who, however, was severely wounded in the attack. Other accounts say the Turks had been defeated near Arta.

The squadron, properly called Turkish, which be composed of about 40 vessels of different sizes. United with the Egyptian flotilla, and that of the Barbary powers, it is calculated that it will amount to the imposing number of 120 vessels.—The French consul-general, de Choisi, has returned from Athens. The French consul, de Choisi, has returned from Athens. The French consul-general, de Choisi, has returned from Athens, where he had carried twelve Greeks, of whom we have forborne to name, to exchange them for a more considerable number of Turks, and in consequence, there have been twenty nine individuals of that nation, women and children, brought here.—There are still remaining some at Athens in the hands of the Greeks, who are not willing to give them up, because they have a prospect of making another exchange. Ulysses still commands in that city, the citadel of which is defended by three thousand men. At the 21st of March the Turks continued masters of Patras, of Modon, of Coron and Corinth. This last city must ere long be in want of provisions, and the Greeks already flatter themselves, which to be sure is not the first time, that this place at the end of twenty days must be forced by famine to surrender.

Smyrna, (seven days' journey from Salonica) April 1—The attack, (seven days' journey from Salonica) April 1—The attack of Ibrahim Pacha against the Greeks is reckoned to be On every side of this country motions are making. Chaster of troops are made for the Morea. It is said that more than eighty thousand men are to be put on foot. They are to be commanded by new Pachas. The Pacha of Adrianople is to march at the head of 12 thousand men. Each Bey will be followed by a thousand or fifteen hundred soldiers. The Bulgarian Greeks are also enrolled as they were the preceding year. Some of the Greeks of Macedonia and Wallachia are also said to be preparing to march, but only in the quality of domestics. The insurgents in the Peloponnesus are making on their side, also, great preparations, as I am informed by people from that quarter. They expect to be attacked in a very serious manner this year, and they are taking all necessary measures to make a vigorous stand against the Ottomans. They mean to make a vigorous stand against the Ottomans. They mean to make a vigorous stand against the Ottomans. They mean to attack the places of which the latter are in possession, but at first to fight the enemy which advances towards the peninsula. They have fortified the Isthmus of Corinth, and they have transported their boats and cannon over. They, it is said that if they are victorious in this campaign, as they are nearly certain they shall be, they will then turn to the place of war, and the fortresses which still hold out, and which sooner or later will be forced to surrender. In the meantime, they say, they have provisions for a long time. They are not supplied with provisions from land or sea.

WEST INDIES.

BARBADOES, Barbadoes, July 16.

On Wednesday last, there was a Court of Vice Admiralty at the Town Hall, at which was present the Hon. A. A Beckles as Deputy Judge, when one Seaman was tried and found guilty of piracy and murder. This seaman arrived here in the Spanish brig Maria Dolores, (as stated in our paper of the 30th June last) with only two others, of the number of eight that were on board after the vessel was captured by the Aguila. Natural History.

FROM THE AMERICAN FARMER.

Extract to the Editor, dated Allentown, N. J. June 10, 1823.

Extraordinary power of Locomotion, or Quadruped turned Biped.—A few days ago, in passing a flock of sheep, at some distance from me, I observed something of unusual appearance amongst them; it was owing, I found upon approaching nearer, to be a lamb, following its dam, walking upon its fore feet; with its body erect. Its hind feet, I was told upon exa[illegible], and legs, as far as the gambles, were thrown off the sta[illegible]. It was lambed, and very soon afterwards acquired this extraordinary [illegible] of motion. It is [illegible] months old, quite fat, and of ordinary size for its age. It grazes and sucks, resting wholly upon its fore feet, with its body in the position just mentioned; and will walk, if not urged too fast, a quarter of a mile at ease, without inconvenience.

The above fact may be familiar to the sheep districts of colder countries, but to me, and as far as I can learn, to the people of this neighborhood, it is altogether novel, and exhibits the resources of the animal economy for the purposes of locomotion, to an extent of which I have heretofore had no conception.

Remains of the huge extinct quadruped named Megatherium—On further examination the teeth disinterred in Georgia, and deposited in the Mitchill museum, by Mr. Taylor, prove more interesting to zoologists and geologists than was first supposed. There is solid grounds to conclude they belong to the huge clawed animal, and a skeleton of which was found in Paraguay, south of the river La Plata, and placed in the king of Spain's museum at Madrid, some years ago. The engraved figure published by royal authority there, and forwarded by Mr. Consul Hackley, fully warrants the inference. A careful survey of the osteology, has led to a decision, that the creature inhabited the land, and belonged to a family of the Bradypus or Sloth, none of which is known to be an inhabitant of this globe at the present day. He was upwards of 15 feet long, and almost 6 feet high. What are the dimensions of the skeleton, near the mouth of Savannah river, can only be known by connecting and measuring them. It is suggested to the proprietor of the land, Robert M. Goodwin, Esq. that he can scarcely perform any act so serviceable to natural science, as to gather up the fragments of the Megatherium, and forward them to New York, for full investigation.

The only other species of this extinct race, is the Megalonyx or Great Claw, described by Mr. Jefferson, as found in one of the lime stone caverns of Virginia. We offer the strongest exhortation, for procuring the remainder of the Georgia skeleton.

THE GORGONIA LEPADIFERA.

In those profound depths is found the remarkable gorgonia lepadifera of Linnæus, considered rare by the inhabitants of those parts, who, when they accidentally meet with it, hang it up as a curiosity. This extraordinary zoophyte grows in the form of a tree, or branch; and its similarity is such, that few indeed, after even a minute investigation, would suppose it possessed life, or imagine it was any thing but what it has heretofore been considered, a vegetable. This idea, which long prevailed with respect to the class of zoophytes in general, has been gradually exploded, as the attention of the naturalist has been directed to marine productions. * * * *

"On a first inspection of this gorgon, we behold nothing but a mere branch, singular indeed in its appearance, and covered over with whitish scales, which seem like scales hanging in every part of it: how extraordinary then does it appear, when we are told that it is an animal, with not only bone and flesh, but even possessed of minute muscles and tendons! The stem of the branch, which is the inward support or bone of the animal, appears to be formed of different distinct layers or circles of a hard calcareous matter, and in the living state is surrounded by a fleshy substance. This is thickly powered with a small whitish tubercles which appear like barnacles hanging on it, and are the cells that contain the numberless animals of which the gorgonia consists, protecting their delicate parts from injury. These they have the power of contracting and opening; and from them the tentacula of the polypus extend themselves to procure nourishment, which is afterwards conducted to the main stem or body.

A prodigious quantity of the largest crystals ever known was discovered in 1720, in a cavern of the Grimsel. Some of these crystals weighed from four to eight hundred pounds, and the value of the whole was estimated at 30,000 florins; a few more were discovered, and the value would sink to nothing at all. The ancients spoke of a crystal of thirty pounds as wonderful. The largest of the crystals discovered in 1720 may be seen in the Cabinet of Natural History, Jardin des Plantes, at Paris, measuring three feet and a half by two feet and a quarter.

There is at present in the chapelry of Grisdale, in the parish of Greystoke, Cumberland, a remarkably fine Lamb, which has eight legs, four ears, and two tails. One of the tails is a little shorter than the other; the ears are like those of other lambs, and the four extra legs have no joints in them and do not quite reach the ground. This lusus naturæ is said to be in a thriving state.

The Elm.—Madame de Genlis speaks of an Elm of great size in this country, in the hollow trunk of which a poor woman gave birth to an infant, and she afterwards resided for a long time. This tree, which is a great curiosity, is still standing in the village of Crowley; but, as the parish is not willing to be burdened with all the young elms that might have been brought forth from the trunk of this singular tree, the lord of the manner has very wisely put up a door to the [illegible] of the style, or at most, one [illegible] except upon particular occasions, when the neighbours meet to enjoy their pipes and tell old tales in the cavity of this elm, that is capable of containing a party of more than a dozen. The interior of this tree is paved with bricks, and in other respects made comfortable for those that it embarks.—Devizes Gazette.

Four horned Ram.—The brig American, from Rio Grande, has brought out three four horned rams, two horns on the head elevated, and the others bending downwards, with the usual crooks in them.

Kingston, Aug. 15.—We last week mentioned that a Gooseberry of monstrous size was reared this season in the garden of Messrs. Smith and Butterworth. This morning a similar berry was produced in town, from the garden of Mr. Oliver of this place, weighing 10dwts. 12grs. It is with much pleasure we observe a spirit of emulation in Horticulture shewing itself among the inhabitants of Kingston.

Poetry.

BRITISH HEROES.

When Chatham in his Country's cause
Upheld her right with fainting breath,
Stood forth the champion of her laws,
Nor sear'd till grasp'd by key death;
His spirit, from its bonds set free,
Sought the bright realms of Liberty.

When Wolfe on Quebec's bloody field
First heard the shout,—"They run, they run!"
And saw the flying squadron yield.
"Great God!" he cried, "my duty's done;
My soul with joy I yield to thee,
For thou hast gained the victory!"

When Nelson on the gore-stain'd deck
Receiv'd his last, his fatal wound,
His gallant spirit felt no check,
Though bloody slaughter rag'd around.
"Great God!" he cried, "my Country's free,
For thou hast gain'd the victory!".

Britons! their glorious tract pursue,
Walk in the paths their feet have trod,
Keep freedom's glorious cause in view,
Your King, your Country, and your God;
Then may you hope, from toil set free,
O'er Death to gain the Victory!

QUEBEC AUG. 12.

This morning His Excellency the Governor in Chief and Commander of the Forces, returned from his excursion to Nova Scotia, and disembarked from H. M. S. Niemen,——Sibley, Esq. Commander, under salutes from the Ship and Citdel. His Lordship was accompanied by Capt. Hay, A. D. C. and Capt. Parker, D. A. Q. M. G.

Mr. Maule, A. D. C. & Asst. Mily. Secretary, arrived last night, having quitted the Frigate at Saint Thomas.

This day, being the anniversary of His Majesty's birth-day, the Regiments in Garrison, with the Artillery and a Brigade of Field Guns, paraded on the Plains of Abraham, and fired a feu de joie in honor of the day; His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie was upon the ground, attended by the general and [illegible] Staff.——Notwithstanding the threatening aspect of the weather, a considerable concourse assembled to witness the parade; the troops made a fine appearance.— MERCURY.

ST. JOHNS N. B. JULY 29.

A private letter from an officer of the 74th Regiment in London, mentions the appointment of Sir COLIN HALKETT, K. C. B. and G. C. H. Lt. Governor of Jersey, as successor to the late Lieut. Governor SMYTH, in the command of this Province:

Unprecedented Dispatch.—To those who have been accustomed to the Navigation of the St. Lawrence between Lachine and Kingston, and have witnessed the delay and fatigue of ascending the several rapids on the route, it will appear incredible that a voyage which usually occupies from 12 to 15 days to effect, should have been performed in the short space of five days and a half.

On Saturday the 3d instant an Officer of the Commissariat left Lachine at half past nine, A. M. in a Batteau heavily laden with Specie and Stores arrived at Kingston on the Wednesday following, at 4 o'clock P. M. where he remained 21 hours, and returned to Lachine on Friday of the same week at 4 o'clock P. M. thus performing the voyage (if the time which he remained at Kingston be deducted) in somewhat more than four days.

The passage downwards was performed in 24 hours.—Mon. Herald.

A few days since, an American, having two Tea Chests neatly packed up in his waggon, was met between Laprairie and Longueil, by two Custom-house Officers, who immediately seized the Chests, and hired a carter to take them to Laprairie. On their arrival the boat which should have brought them to Montreal was gone, they had the Chests carried to a store for the purpose of having them deposited till its return. After the storekeeper had taken them in charge, they demanded a receipt for two chests of Tea, to which he refused until he had seen what they contained; on the chests being opened, to their utter astonishment they were found to contain only manure.

OBITUARY.

Died.—At his residence, in Williamstown, Glengary U. C. on the morning of the 5th instant, Roderick McLeod, M. D. in the 31st year of his age.

His opportunities in the University of Edinburgh, and in the Army, for attaining professional eminence, were numerous, and well improved; for to a retentive memory were added a discriminating judgment, persevering application, and a laudable predilection for the scientific and operative branches of the healing art. In the various departments of his profession, few practised more extensively, or were more eminently successful—for his affability and courtesy of manner, and his fervent solicitude for their recovery, secured him the entire confidence of his patients. To a form peculiarly graceful and dignified were joined those qualities of mind that strongly endeared him to his acquaintances. He possessed the open engaging airs of the soldier, the urbanity of the citizen, and the polish of the gentleman. In domestic life, he discharged, with all the native warmth of an affectionate heart, the filial, conjugal, and fraternal duties towards a most dutiful mother, an amiable wife, and a circle of beloved brothers and sisters. His final indisposition which was lingering, and of the fatal issue of which he was fully aware, afforded him that desirable leisure for the duties of piety which he assiduously improved, and which enabled him to look forward with equanimity to an event which few can anticipate without anxiety. His remains were attended to the place of interment by a very numerous concourse of sympathizing friends, who testified by every mark of respect and condolence, their conviction of his singular worth, and of their own irreparable loss. Many, very many, paid to his memory the tribute of their tears, and appeared deeply to feel that, "take him all in all, they ne'er should look upon his like again."

"No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Nor draw his frailties from their dread abode;
(There they alike in trembling hope repose)
The bosom of his Father and his God."

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

To Let, or for Sale,

A Tract of Land, of prime quality, and well watered, consisting of Four Hundred Acres, with nearly Thirty Acres Cleared, and a good Log Dwelling House and Barn erected thereon. The above Land is situate in the Township of Albion, within thirteen lots of the Gore of Toronto, about twenty-five miles from York, and within one mile and a half of a Grist Mill. This property is most desirable for a few families of Emigrants, who wish to settle together, and will be sold entire or separate, as may be agreed on. It is also one of the best situations in this Province for a Distillery, as it is in the heart of a good settlement, and no Distillery at present within a circle of eighteen miles. The above Property will be sold dog cheap for Cash, or merchantable wheat, delivered at York, and the purchaser can be accommodated with provisions on the premises sufficient for one or two families for one year. If not sold in a few weeks, it will be let to any industrious settler, on shares, or for clearing a certain quantity of land yearly.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

We shall avail ourselves of the facilities given by our situation to call upon the Clerks of the Peace, throughout the Province, to urge their respective Town Clerks to an immediate transfer of detailed accounts of Population. If these Gentlemen were fully aware of the vast importance of correct and regular returns in this particular, at the present time, in order to substantiate our claims on the Lower Province for a due share of the import duties, they would surely be more attentive and punctual in a matter of such serious consequence. Let them reflect for a moment how much better it must be for all of us here to receive a large debt, actually due to us, than to suffer a degree of taxation by no means inconsiderable, in lieu of that debt, should we be unable to prove our claims for want of correct returns of our Population!

There are no less than one hundred recorded Townships from which no returns at all have been made. It is true there, are some of these without inhabitants, but the greater part have settlements. Besides this extensive defalcation in the returns, there are two whole Districts, namely, the Ottawa and Niagara (the latter of which had 14 or 15,000 inhabitants two or three years ago,) from whence no returns have been made since 1820; and, from the Eastern, Johnstown, (including Bathurst,) Midland, and the Western District, together containing not less than 60,000 souls two years ago, there are no returns since 1821. This neglect is absolutely criminal, because, under our present circumstances, it is productive of consequences highly injurious to the public weal.

It is to be lamented that the law, regulating Population returns, is not sufficiently compulsatory on the Town Clerks, who are too indifferently paid for their trouble; and the penalties for non-compliance with the provisions of the existing statute, are much too light. Some of the blame, beyond doubt, lies with the Magistrates in Quarter Sessions, whose duty it is to see that returns are made, and that they are justly compensated. At the next meeting of Parliament, we hope to see measures adopted for a General Census throughout the Province.

The great Canadian Empire will assuredly be to the westward of the present limits of Lower Canada, the cultivatable parts of which form a mere valley, (a grand one to be sure, since it is watered by such a river as the St. Lawrence,) compared with the large and rich extent of this Province. Our out-ports and, perhaps, our grand bazaar will be there; but, the great business of agriculture must be carried on here, and it is here, and to the westward, that our population is to spread. We are already gaining fast upon the Lower Province in respect of the number of our souls, and it is preposterous in the extreme, that we should suffer ourselves to be bamboozled in the way we have been, for want of making our just claims more clear.

We feel greatly indebted to the Editor of the Montreal Gazette for the handsome manner in which he has announced our ANNUAL REGISTER to the Lower Province, by the following paragraph:—

"In the Upper Canada Gazette we observe with pleasure the [illegible] of a new work proposed to be published in York, with the title of the "Canadian Annual Register." Such a publication can be more permanently useful than such a work; and as the plan upon which it is proposed to be conducted seems extremely judicious, we hope no encouragement will be wanting to forward the views of the publisher, to whose public spirit we conceive, the people of these Provinces are very much indebted, [illegible] and a durable archive to every circumstance of importance that can interest them."

The encouragement we have hitherto received is certainly not so flattering as we anticipated, but we are so well assured that when the plan of the work is better understood, and a volume of it seen, that more encouragement will be given, we shall by no means relinquish our purpose, until compelled to do so by the heaviness of our loss.

Believing the public cannot be much further interested by the dispute between Captain MATTHEWS and some of his neighbours, we think it better to decline publishing any more communications on that subject; but wishing to act with impartiality and justice to both parties, and as the last letter from Capt. M. is published in this number, we cannot very well refuse Mr. SCHOFIELD a place in our next. The controversy must then cease so far as we are concerned.

It gives us pain to notice a melancholy instance of arson which occured within the last fortnight in the new village of Scadding's Town, situated in what is called the Big-Bay, in the Township of Whitby—A Store and Dwelling House, under one roof, belonging to a Mr SMITH, containing goods, property, and plate to a considerable amount, was first plundered in the night, and then set on fire, by some incendiaries, of whom no trace can be discovered. The building stood on the lake shore, and it is supposed the villains both came and retreated by water. The loss to poor Smith is total, no insurance having been effected!

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Perkins's Steam Engine.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of the Boston Centinel, dated London, June 27, 1823.

"It gives me much pleasure to inform you, that our mutual friend, Jacob Perkins, Esquire, of this city, has at length made proselytes to his Steam Engine improvements, even of the most faithless. I was present, a day or two since, when Sir Humphry Davy, and the Duke of Wellington spent more than an hour in examining this wonderful invention. They both expressed themselves highly gratified and astonished at what they witnessed. The crowds of people from all parts of the three kingdoms, which are daily calling to view it, are beyond my powers of computation. So great is the number, that Mr. P. is compelled to deny admission to three quarters of them, or be obliged to spend his whole time in explanation. I regret my inability to give you a description of this machine, in which I know you feel a deep interest. But I send you a London Journal, in which you will find a well written article on the subject."

Horrible Case.—The west end of London has been agitated by a dreadful occurrence. On Monday, at the house of Mr. Wynn, Maddox Street, Bond Street, Col. Thomas Grant Griffiths and his family occupied lodgings. His son, Mr. Abel Griffiths, was frequently spoken to by his father respecting his expensive mode of living, and domestic lends arose. Soon after twelve o'clock on Monday, the son came in, and went to his father in the drawing room; a violent altercation between them was heard, and after a slight pause, the inmate of the house heard the report of fire arms. The servants rushed up stairs, and on bursting into the room, were horror struck at seeing both father and son stretched weltering in their blood, and lifeless. In the evening, an inquest was held. The room was an entire stream of blood, and an universal thrill of horror ran through the jury on entering the room, on the horrid spectacle of father and son deprived of existence.—From the evidence adduced, it appears the latter has for some time led a life of dissipation and extravagance, and has recently been threatened with arrest. On the father refusing to relieve him from his embarrassments, a violent quarrel arose, when in a moment of frenzy, the [illegible] and afterwards himself. The inquest was adjourned till next day, when evidence was brought forward to shew that the son was in a state of madness; but a verdict was given—"That T. G. Griffiths was wilfully murdered by his son, Abel Griffiths, at a time when he (the said Abel) was in a sound state of mind, in which he afterwards shot himself." The body was ordered to be interred in a cross road, which took place accordingly on Thursday morning. Considerable anxiety was excited in consequence of the extreme secrecy which the officers observed as to the hour and place of interment, and several parties placed themselves at the back and others in front of St. George's work house, to which the body had been removed on the Wednesday evening, suspecting that it would be privately carried away; however, about half past one o'clock on Thursday morning, the body was borne out on the shoulders of four men, through the principal entrance of the workhouse leading into Mount street.—The solitary procession was attended by constables and watchmen, and a number of individuals, and proceeded up Mount street down South Audley street, into Stanhope street; thence into Park lane through Hyde Park Corner, along Grosvenor place to the grave, at the cross roads formed by Union street, King's road, Grosvenor place and Pimlico. On the arrival of the bier at the ground, the constables formed a circle round the grave, to keep off the crowd. The body of the unfortunate man was then taken out, wrapped in a winding sheet, stained with blood. The corpse presented a horrible spectacle; it was immediately wrapped in a large piece of Russian matting, tied with a strong cord, and instantly dropped into the grave or hole, about five feet in depth.—The surrounding persons, apparently amounting to nearly 200 in number, seemed shocked at the disgusting ceremony. The grave was in a few moments filled with earth, no time being thrown over the body; the other disgusting custom, driving the stake through the body, was omitted, and in a moment not a vestige of any thing that could lead as a guide to the grave was observable.

Relort Courteous.—A self conceited coxcomb was introducing an acquaintance to a large company, whose physiognomy was not very prepossessing; thinking to be extremely clever, he thus addressed the company, who rose at his entrance—"I have the honour to introduce to you Mr.——, who is not so great a fool as he looks to be." The young man immediately added, "Thanks, consider the difference between my friend and me."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE ALLIES AND THE KING OF WURTEMBURG.

Mr. Brougham asked the Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether there was any foundation for the story in the public papers, that the Allied powers had withdrawn their Ambassador from Stutgard,—caused, he believed by a protest from the king of Wurtemburg against the invasion of Spain and his refusal to suppress a certain newspaper, and to make alterations in the Constitution of his kingdom.

Mr Canning objected to the interrogatory; adding, however, that no official advices had been received, although some accounts of that nature had reached Ministers. England was no party to the proceedings of the Allied Powers; she in this case was merely a spectator.

Mr. Brougham protested against being understood to concur with the Right Hon Gentleman, that this country could be a mere tame spectator of such transactions. The principles of the Allies were utterly detestable in themselves, and ruinous to the liberties of the world.

A Good Shot.—A duel was recently fought in Paris, in which one of the seconds who stood too near his principal was dangerously wounded.

A woman, lately, in Edinburgh, who got her living by begging, being in want of a story well calculated to touch the feelings, in concert with her husband, made out a sad tale that he had suddenly deceased, &c. The story succeeded, and after being well provided with things necessary, had also a coffin sent to her house. Having got rid of her other presents, the husband set himself to work in splitting up the coffin to make brimstone matches.

A wag, who heard of this, observed, that it was [illegible] —this wise aphorism might be very true in his day, and in his country, but we have lived to see many changes, which controvert the dicta of philosophers; a hanged man, at this day, becomes at once a good subject, whatever his proportions, his defects or his crimes, and his worth is £14 or £15. Very few living subjects, however honest and proper men, would fetch half that sum with the condition of keeping them alive.

POLICE.

An Irishwoman, named Katty Creedon, came before Alderman Cox, and charged her husband, for having killed her on Saturday night.

Katty said to Alderman Cox, that her villain of a husband was in the habit of 'smeiling' her and 'tearing her limb from limb,' and that he had often 'cut her to pieces;' but in particular on the night in question, he had given her a deal more exposed to go about, she felt so destroyed in the inside.

Alderman Cox, to whom this kind of exaggeration was quite a novelty, desired the poor woman to describe her cruel husband's conduct more correctly, for badly as he might have acted, the object of his inhumanity was still in the land of the living.

Mrs. Creedon persisted in saying that her husband had killed her, and she wondered how any one could think otherwise, who heard her say that he had 'smeiled her.'

Alderman Cox was at a loss for the exact meaning of the word smeiling, but Mrs. Creedon's husband explained it, by showing the marks of nails upon his face, which his partner had scratched into a comparison with the Indian tattooing. He said, his wife put him in that condition, and that he never in his life kill her.

Mrs. Creedon—Oh Paddy! how can you say that, when you know you're always murthering me?

Mr. Creedon—well! and how can I help it? An'at you always murthering me?

Mrs. Creedon—Never Paddy; never, but when you deserves it. Your worship, I know what he's about. I keep him in victuals and drink: instead of keeping me, he wants to keep a woman.

Alderman Cox—Oh! now I see how it is, there is a little jealousy in the case.

Mr. Creedon declared there was a great deal. His wife was a little cold, and did'nt like to see him look at a young woman. She had but a few days ago thrown a pail of dirty water over him as he lay in bed; so I thought your worship, I might give her a lash or two, and I only touched her just promiscuous, and she happened to fall.

Alderman Cox—Well, the best thing I can do is to bind you both over to keep the peace towards each other.

Mrs. Creedon declared she did'nt care what became of her, so that her 'thief' of a husband was locked up; and Mr. Creedon thought any state happy from which his wife was excluded.

They were then ordered to find bail, which failing to procure, they were sent to the Compter, and ordered to be kept in separate appartments. The wife went away declaring that she would be master of the fellow yet.

Singular Theft Discovered.—Some days ago, the servants at Mrs. Preston's, in the Minster yard, York, laid a lace cap on the grass-plot in the garden to dry. Soon afterwards it was missing. On the alarm being given, one of the family recollected to have seen a thrush taking its flight over the adjoining garden, with something white in its bill. Inquiry was made in the neighbourhood, when it appeared, that a thrush had lately begun to build its nest in the garden of William Grey, Esq. (between 200 and 300 yards distant from Mrs. Preston's,) and suspicion fell on this bird as the culprit. Without making application for a search warrant, Mrs. Grey's servant, having procured a ladder, ascended the tree in which the nest was building, and found the lace cap within the nest, carefully spread by way of lining. The unlucky bird was instantly deprived of its plunder, and might think itself happy in not being committed to St. Peter's prison, to take its trial before the Justices of the Liberty, at the next Midsummer Sessions. The speedy detection of this new species of robbery will, we should hope, operate as a warning to all thrushes within the limits of the circulation of this paper, not to build their nests with such expensive materials as the lace caps of ladies. A similar circumstance occurred some time ago, at Vaughall, near this city, from which a piece of lace, belonging to Mrs. Barber, was taken away, and found in a rook's nest, on the top of a high tree.—Yorkshire Gazette.

Irish Time.—A Dandy seeing a newly arrived Irishman passing the gates of the prince's Dock, at Liverpool, cried out 'Arrah, Pat, what's o'clock by your red stockings?' 'Just Breaking one,' said Paddy, at the same moment flourishing the exquisite with his shillalah.

Conversion of the Jews to Christianity.—The late annual meeting of the Society in London for promoting Christianity among the Jews, was very numerously attended. Upwards of 500 ladies were present. Sir T. Baring, Bart. took the chair, and near him sat Lord Bexley, Lord Gambier, Lord Calthrope, one of the Russian Princes, the Bishop of Glocester, &c. From the annual report, which is extremely long, containing much intelligence transmitted by the missionaries from distant nations, as well as accounts of the branches which are shooting out in different parts of Great Britain from the parent stock, we gather the following:—The total amount of the subscription for the last year, exceeded £10,000 of which Ireland had contributed, notwithstanding the privations under which that country had recently labored, no less than £1,000. Within the year, 8,824 copies of the New Testament has been issued, and no fewer than 74,000 tracts. An additional number of missionaries were going out to Poland, where the efforts of the society were strongly felt. In Holland a steady progress was making, notwithstanding many and peculiar difficulties which arose from the great diminution the Jews there felt at the state of their own religion. The report cited cases of infidelity cured by means of the society, and one case of a thief, who had been condemned to imprisonment in the House of Correction for a long period, but who there became a convert to Christianity, whom the society [illegible] on the contrary offered to intercede to abate the term of confinement, on condition that the convert would follow strictly the precepts of his own religion; the offer was refused—the Jew was baptized, remained in prison until he expiated, and was now in the service of a man who placed the most unbounded confidence in him. The report concluded with a call for more funds. In his speech, Lord Bexley declared, that not one of the great institutions of the country deserved support more than this. The Jews had been trampled upon every where, which was one great cause of their non-conversion to Christianity. Our forefathers were deep in the guilt of that oppression, and we should endeavour to atone for the crime by a speedy reparation. Dr. Rickerton remarked in his speech, that "the Jews loved Palestine. In Holland they strewed a handful of the earth brought from Palestine in the graves of their dead, to fix their repose."

IRELAND.

LONDON, June 23.

The Duke of Devonshire made his promised motion respecting the state of Ireland, in the House of Lords. In this motion His Grace made mention of every cause of the distress of Ireland, except those which have sufficient reasons of all Absenteeship; and the consequent want of materials for an efficient magistracy. The three greatest landed proprietors in Ireland are,—the Duke of Devonshire, the Marquis of Londdown, and Earl Fitzwilliam, and all of these were ABSENTEES. It is impossible not to regret that these Noblemen do not more frequently visit their large possessions in that unhappy kingdom, and personally inspect the condition of their tenants and the peasantry. We see no other hope for Ireland; she must continue miserable, whilst she is in the hands of Factors and Middlemen. The use of a resident gentry is in a large circulation of money in labour; a more liberal charity, and in the systematic maintenance of their tenants and peasantry in a degree of comfort and sufficiency, as part of their own estate and influence. In Kerry, for example, the tenants of very few of our high nobility are rack-rented, because no nobleman or gentleman could live in a neighbourhood which he should heavily oppress. For the same reason in England there could be no such thing as Middlemen, and no such thing as underletting or dealing in Leases by Land Factors. For the same reason, (namely from a due consideration by a proprietor of his own case, and his own respectability and character,) there can be no such thing as that infinite subdivision of Farms into small tenements of one, two, or three acres, and in many cases half an acre for potatoe patches, which causes much of the misery of Ireland. It would be endless to go through this enumeration of the evils of Absenteeship; undoubtedly the main cause of the miseries of Ireland.—Bell's Messenger.

The Irish papers contain nothing very memorable, unless it be that the system of outrage and atrocity continues. Serjeant Torrens appears to consider it a task of no less necessity and difficulty to teach the Magistrates, than to quell the insurgents. The temper of the country may fairly be judged from the record of a single trial. A farm servant was brought into Court for having served a notice from Captain Rock on his own master, requiring him to reduce a certain portion of his own ground, and to let it at a low rate. The farmer complied through sheer terror. He gave evidence, however, against the accused; on which, as there was no defence, the latter was convicted: but mark the contrast between the injured and offending parties. The unfortunate farmer delivered his evidence in an unfeigned agony of apprehension, that he should expiate the act with his life, whilst the criminal went off to be transported, exulting and encouraging the spectators to avenge him. Such is the miserable condition of a kingdom where the laws are destitute of moral influence.—Ib.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

It appears now to be pretty well ascertained that Cadiz may be supplied with provisions and other necessaries in small vessels, without interruption from the blockading squadrons. So long as this is the case, there is little chance of the French succeeding in the great object they had in view—the obtaining possession of the person of the King, in whose name they might have for a season at least, overturned the Constitutional system. While the Cortes are true to the cause; while the armies continue to fight; and while the strong holds of Spain resist all attempts to induce them to surrender, we shall never despair of the final triumph of the patriots.

The blockading squadron from Algesiras, which touched at Gibraltar, on the 3d July, sailed again on the 4th for Cadiz. The Spanish privateers had captured several French merchant-men off Algesiras. The Governor gave the vessels up on a demand of the French Admiral, who threatened to fire on the town if his request was not complied with. The American squadron was at Port Mahon. Flour was £10 per bbl. at Gibraltar—It had sold for 7 five days previous.

BOMBARDMENT OF CADIZ!

We learn from a gentleman passenger in the schooner Zion, which arrived here last evening in 9 days from Barts, [illegible] brig Bolivar, Capt Almeide, had arrived at St Barts two days before the Zion sailed, in 17 days from a cruise off Cadiz—He understood from the officers of the Bolivar, that a French squadron was cruising off Cadiz—that the French army was now in the service of a man who placed the most unbounded confidence in him. The report concluded with a call for more funds. In his speech, Lord Bexley declared, that not one of the great institutions of the country deserved support more than this. SKETCH OF AN ARAGONESE GUERRILLA.

From Recollections of the Peninsula.

"He was wounded in the leg, and of course for a time incapable of service. The circumstance of his situation, the fate of his family and his language, will explain the nature both of the formation and feelings of many of these Guerrilla corps, better perhaps than a far longer and more detailed account of them. I asked him where he lived, and under whom he served. 'Senior,' said he, 'I have no home, no relations, nothing save my country and my sword. My father was led out, and shot in the market place of my native village; our cottage was burned; my mother died of grief; and my wife, who had been violated by the enemy, fled to me, then a volunteer with Palasos, and died in my arms, in an hospital in Saragossa. I serve under no particular chief. I am too miserable: I feel too revengeful to support the restraint of discipline and the delay of manœuvre. I go on any enterprise I hear of; if I am poor, on foot; if chance or plunder has made me rich, on horseback; I follow the boldest leader; but I have sworn never to dress a vine or plough a field till the enemy is driven out of Spain.'—Such was the desperate, the undying hatred to the French which many of these Guerrillas cherished—a hatred which often had its source in wrongs and loses like those I have related.

AFFAIRS OF GREECE.

ASTROS, April 22.

The factions are reconciled, and the Greeks begin to act unanimously; they are engaged in the revisal of the organic law of Epidaurus, and in the discussion of other matters important to the nation. Among the propositions under consideration, are two very important ones, viz:—"Whether those whose native country is still subject to the Turkish dominion, and those who are absent in other parts of Europe, are to be employed in official situations, unless they have resided in liberated countries, the first for five, and the second for three years.

Amongst the transactions of the Congress, the following are to be noticed:—

"I. Whereas the partial Governments, such as Gerusia, Areopagi, &c. have been proved prejudicial to the public welfare, the National Congress decrees that all these Governments shall be dissolved, and that all the provinces of Greece shall be dependent on the National Congress.

"II. Whereas the Government of Greece is composed of two parts, the Deliberative and the Executive, according to the organic law of Epidaurus. The National Congress will appoint a committee to perfect this law; but its fundamental principles will be considered to be unalterable, and it will retain the primitive name of the Law of Epidaurus.

"II. Whereas the command of the land and sea forces belongs only to the Governments, the title of General in Chief either of Greece generally, or of the Peloponnesus, of the East or West Greece, or Creta, or other places particularly, is incompatible with the nature of the Government, and will never be allowed except in the case of an expedition.

"III. Whereas the situation of Greece makes military discipline indispensable, the commanders of its land and sea forces are required to act a military and naval code from those of civilised Europe.

"IV. The War Office will be composed of three military officers, one from the Greek Continent, one from the Peloponnesus, and one from Spetza (Matina.) The Naval Board will, likewise, consist of three members a Hydriot, a Spezziot, and a Psariot."

The oath of the members of the National Congress is this:

"I swear, in the name of God and of my Country, true patriotism, sincere conscience, and perfect disinterestedness."

TRIPOLIZZA, May 4.

The Greek national assembly, after completing its labours in peace and tranquility, broke up on the 30th of April. All the provincial governments existing before this meeting, those of Peleponnesus, of Western Greece, and of Areopagus, are abolished, and all Greece is now under one central democratic government, consisting of two branches, the legislative authority of which, the President, a George Conduriotti, of Hydra, brother of the celebrated Lazaro Konduriotti, who is at the head of the affairs of Hydra; and the executive, the President of which is Pedro Manrecordato, formerly Prince of Maine, and known by the name of Pietro Bey. The government has already issued many ordinances; it has also addressed a proclamation to the European Nations, in which it returns thanks for the assistance which individual friends of humanity have hitherto afforded to the cause of the Greeks.

in a focus where the effects of multifarious circumstances are concentrated, which impart life and utility to his own actions, and add each their quota to the advantages derived from free and social intercourse. He, in return, reflects them in as many various directions, and contributes his average portion to that whole, which is the general fund of his enjoyments, in common with his fellow men. Remove him from that focus, and he is totally destitute, though the general mass can hardly perceive it; because he only furnished his part in the proportion of one to the many; whereas his case was as the many to one. Riches cannot be a gratification to their possessor, unless the community guarantee to him their free and virtuous use. Neither will his treasures supply him with food and raiment, if the labor of others place them not within his reach. Indeed, if he obtain them by inheritance, he was once dependent upon their former master: if by other means, upon numberless other circumstances.

[illegible]

This thought might be spun out to a great length; but the above may sufficiently show that man is a dependent creature, and that his situation as such is manifested in every thing that surrounds him.—Even the elements, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the products of the ground contribute no inconsiderable amount to his comforts and enjoyments.—And we may add; All these are dependent upon God.

Independence of mind is very little different. The opinions of men, from continually undergoing such variety of modulation, from the influence of surrounding objects, that, were it not for some free prominent features of intellect, like the features of his face, which preserve enough of their original identity to be the objects of recognition, a history of one man might so entirely efface another's mind had been, as that it should not be known by what it now is. The youthful mind is, in a great measure, dependent upon the system and mode of education by which it is to be formed, and, generally, receives, during the time of tuition, most of its peculiarities. In manner life it continues to be acted upon by books, conversation, new impressions, prejudices, &c. &c. and always receives, in some degree, a new bias from every thing that strikes it as a matter of importance. It can arrive at certainty in but few things; and even in these it merely depends upon the information of others. From these causes its mode of thinking varies from one stage of existance to another; and as its comprehension enlarges, it rejects the presumed independence of a state of comparative ignorance and error. The difficulty of ascending that lofty eminence from which it could look down upon the surrounding scene with the eye of acute and rapid discrimination. The farther it advances on the road of improvement, the less liable it is to seize and fix upon opinions with the foolish confidence of certainty knowing their truth. It becomes more and more aware of the necessity of depending upon certain fixed principles, and that sober, careful investigation alone is the means by which to arrive at any knowledge of them, and vigilant watchfulness the only way of keeping within the limits they prescribe.

But there are qualities which are often taken for independency of mind, which are totally destitute of any resemblance to it. Party spirit sometimes assumes it, and claims to be independent under the most servile devotion to violent prejudices. A disposition of quarrelsome contrariety, very frequently imagines it to consist in angry disputation, and absurdly measures the degree of it by the quantum of opposition it may be able to bring into the field of contention; forgetting that the demon of discord bears there a tyrannical domination, to the utter exclusion of every thing like moderation and temperance, which are constant companions of the mind that aspires to aim at such a commanding quality.

Many extravagancies proceed from a licentiousness which is the true offspring of such a rash assumption; and under its influence the man of independent mind often commences indiscriminate warfare with every thing sacred, venerable and valuable in human institutions, and seeks to overturn the wisdom and experience of ages upon the anarchy and confusion which it is his chiefest ambition to establish. The restraints of sober reason, joined to moral obligation, are no its upon the worthies of this school; while they discard as unworthy of a serious thought, that principle of subordination which forms the only bond of union and safety in all that really interests man.

Many, from various selfish motives, lay claim to be independent; but we may safely say, there is but one such being in existence; and he the man who approaches him the nearest in this great perfection, is he whose mind is the best stored with the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and who conscientiously performs the duties that reason and truth discover to him, in cheerful obedience to the express commands of that most glorious Being.

EUSEBIUS.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

It is a common remark, that such, or such a man is either independent purse, or mind. If you please, I will submit a few remarks upon both supposed cases.

Independency in pecuniary and worldly matters, can only exist in a very limited sense of the term. Human Society as one great whole, made up of numerous parts, has a natural relationship and dependence amongst each other. The interest of every individual has a bearing and influence upon the general interest in exact proportion to his specific consequence in the scale of human concerns. He is placed

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

I agree with you, that my last communication to you stood in your publication of August 9th, fairly betrayed and overwhelmed by the heated Trio and Screes, but, that they press me closely, or indeed at all. I deny. The observations of every individual are alike malignant and silly, and give fair grounds for belief, that he is not only the chameleon, but also one of the crew whose rascality I have been endeavouring to put a stop to. He is also from his own shewing, a stranger to the general principles of truth, and honor, and honesty.

Does it follow, sir, that a desirable property cannot exist in an unenlightened neighbourhood? And was my desire to dispose of my property, to prevent me from exposing a system of profligate dishonesty, defrauding alike the government and the community? Could I have been prevented doing so, by any considerations of that nature, I should have deserved much severer censures than Mr. Trim's.

Instead of being in a state of mental derangement, therefore, as Mr. Trim suggests, my Communication if it proves any thing on that point, it is, that I value justice in my country, more than I do my own interests: and an idea which it seems, never found its way into the selfish breast of Mr. Trim.—Disinterested duty to one's country, is in Mr. Trim's estimation, proof sufficient of madness!! Well done Trim! You have at any rate, with all your cleverness, and cautious, [illegible] screen you, [illegible] or other, and that soon, be in my power to introduce you to your neighbours, when I hope you will not deny your own sentiment.

Dull also indeed, Sir, have proved Mr. Trim's efforts at wit; and at any rate, this subject is not of a nature for the exercise of it, and for the future, I recommend to him, to leave off calling nick-names, which never yet has strengthened an argument, nor has it ever been considered gentlemanlike.

Trim, I doubt not, is bursting with his own gall, but still I think his good sense (if he has any) would have induced him to have been silent on this subject, had not the knaves looked up to him as their champion, to throw a little mud at me, as they have often before, (with the assistance of Trim) interfering with their knavery. This also, Sir, has been, and is the sole cause of the injuries I have heretofore sustained, and of the animosities now existing against me; and not as they are pleased to represent, because I bought a confined estate, which, I believe, gave not the smallest offence to any body; but the knaves are strong, Sir, though I believe not very numerous, and they have a set of worthless dependents, ready at any time to perform any dirty work they are pleased to set them about; but Sir, I am clothed in the armour of truth, I have God and my conscience for my witnesses, and from my heart I disregard, and utterly despise them all.

There, however is, I suspect, another reason for this attack of Trim's; you must know the that some of my neighbours have occasionally talked, though perhaps not seriously, of endeavouring to send me to the Commons House of Assembly at the next Election; and the knaves are already alarmed at this, and they are making every exertion to represent me, every where, as having villified and insulted my neighbours in a manner I have been, never, very well know who were mean; but in the absence of truth, they seize her shadow, and to do me injury they graft their own falsehoods upon it, and call it mine; but, Sir, if my neighbours are such fools as to be so imposed upon, I am sure the honor of being Representative would be very flattering to me; but there are some men who, like Trim, disregard honor, and think alone of the profits they may make, and who consider disinterested service, seen to one's country, a proof of mental derangement!!

There is yet another reason, Sir; an underhand attempt is now making to obtain signatures to a petition to divide this District, and to have the new establishment at Kettle Creek, newly named Saint Thomas's, (out of compliment, I believe, to the Hon Col Thomas Talbot. There are certain gentlemen possessing property in that neighbourhood, (and Trim I guess is one) who are, it seems, very dishonestly anxious, thereby to encrease its value. Others expect to fill the offices of Judge, Clerk of the Peace, Sheriff, Attorney, &c. &c. (and Trim I guess is one.) They of course will make great exertions; they expect to pocket the cash, careing but little for the distresses of those who will have to pay; and as they live in that neighbourhood, it would be inconvenient to them, to have it here; but, Sir, Saint Thomas's happens to be quite on one side of the proposed new District, and therefore I oppose it, and so I would, if my property lay at Saint Thomas's, on the principle that it would be inhuman and unjust to compel all the future inhabitants of this District, perhaps for ages, to travel to an outside, instead of to a center, in the pursuit of justice; and that merely for the accommodation of a few really very unimportant persons, the greater part of whom, will in all probability in twenty years, have found rest, and will have ceased from troubling either themselves or their neighbours.

This, however, I guess has made Trim's gall froth out at his mouth; and in it, in an uncharded moment, or perhaps accidentally, he happened to dip his goose quills. I trust, however, that an honest and independant House of Assembly, will once more shew these gentlemen of wonderful great influence here, that they possess wonderful little indeed there. In the hope I leave Trim.

What Sense means by "offensive officiousness," I know not, unless he means that every detected rogue may consider the person that detects him, very offensively officious, and as to his assertion that my Communication goes to the extermination of a whole neighbourhood, I have denied any such intention, and have done it again; and you, Sir, have very clearly demonstrated in your Comments on this Correspondence, that such reasoning will never do.

Sense also, either knows nothing of this neighbourhood, or he wilfully misrepresents the state of its society. It has been a principal lumbering station for very many years. Detroit, Sandwich, Amherstburgh, &c. has been built with the lumber taken from this immediate neighbourhood, in which, within three miles of me, are no less than three old established saw mills. Is Senex acquainted with the profligacy which these permits lead to? Does he know any thing about chopping, logging, damming, sawing, rafting, thieving, whiskey-drinking, &c.?

This also has been, and still is, a considerable Indian station; it is also a celebrated fishing station. Does Senex know to what these things tend? In short, Does not Senex know these things to be true? If he does not know them, he should have kept his strictures to himself; and if he does know them, and I suspect he does, his principles are not much better than his feeling. Observe, Trim. The only material difference is, that Trim admits learning and wit, and an gentleman, morality, moderation, and religion; and in his great goodness, is pleased to instruct me in my social duties (he knows of no instances wherein I have failed in their due performance, (though it has nothing to do with the present question, which is entirely a public one,) let him avow his name and say so; he has my entire permission. If not, let him pass for what he is, a canting hypocrite, who is probably endeavouring to write himself into notice and favor, and perhaps into the living of St. Homer's; but who while he is affecting to recommend morality, w in fact defending and extenuating roguery.

I have written thus fully in reply to those worthless anonymous champions of knavery, Messers. Trim, Senex, & Co. in the hope that it may prevent the necessity of returning to a subject very disagreeable to me; and I have now only to thank you, Sir, with great sincerity, for your very able and excellent comments; and for the good opinion you have so handsomely expressed of me; and when I deservedly forfeit it, I trust you will tell me so with equal freedom.

I am, Sir, your obdt. and obliged servt.

SONG, ON THE OCEAN.

Bright, from Ocean's wavy bed
The moon refulgent rears her head,
Her sparkling beams, with golden glow,
Shine on the burnished sea below;
And as she mounts the starry sky,
And shines in silent majesty,
I muse upon my Mary.

And when Aurora's blushes gay
Usher in the welcome day,
And when dark tempests rend the sky,
And roll the laboring surges high;
And when the waves unruffled lie,
My every thought—my every sigh
Is still for charming Mary.

Dearest, fairest—when shall I
Again behold thy sparkling eye;
See thee smile, and hear thee talk,
Or fondly with thee, roving walk;
When shall I press thee to my heart,
Never, never more to part,
My dear, my lovely Mary?—

STANZAS.

Ah! see yon star, so brightly beaming
Through the western purple's hue,
Its golden rays so sweetly streaming
O'er the soft, the liquid blue!

Like the Eolian harp's wild measure,
Gently touched by Evening's wind,
It imparts a mournful pleasure,
To the pensive, musing mind.

Yet fleet and transient is its glory,
Like all earthly prospects vain;
It sinks in Ocean's bed so hoary,
Again to rise, to sink again!

Important Case.—We have inserted in our columns of this day a report of the Judgement pronounced in the Court of Vice Admiralty by Mr Justice Kerr, in the case of the Brigantine "William," which lately arrived in this Port from Dublin, crowded with settlers, mostly of the lower orders of Irish, who appear to have suffered the greatest misery from the crowded state of the vessel, only ninety three tons burthen, in which were stowed upwards of 140 human beings, exclusive of the crew, and if they escape those dreadful maladies which are engendered in the pestilential hold of a slave ship, it is only to be attributed, under the blessing of Providence, to the different climate they encountered. The apposite and humane remarks made by the learned Judge, upon the enormous crime committed by those concerned in this nefarious traffic, leave us little to add upon this subject, we have only to express our hope that for the sake of example, the delinquents in this case may not escape punishment through any judicial informality; for we have heard it suggested that the Court of Vice-Admiralty has exercised a jurisdiction which it does not, in fact, possess; it is foreign to our purpose to enquire into this point, we know that a great evil exists in the frequent infraction by unprincipled speculators, of the salutary Act passed for regulating the number of passengers in vessels of this description; hence, not a season passes without the health of our citizens being endangered by the importation of typus and malignant fever, or other highly infectious disorders in their most alarming shapes. We feel ourselves fully authorized in stating that a confluent Small Pox, of the worst nature has been, and at this moment is, raging in the Suburbs of this City; that (as we stated on a former occasion) many cases of this disorder have proved fatal, and that this distemper has been imported by Emigrants from Europe: we conceive, therefore, that so long as the tide of Emigration is directed to our shores, a Health Office, under the superintendance of a competent Medical Practitioner, and under due Regulations, supported by the active co-operation of a vigilant Police, is essential to the safety, not only of this City, but of the whole Province.

Court of Vice-Admiralty, } Monday,
Lower Canada. } 11th Aug. 1823.

WILLIAM WILSON.
INFORMANT:
WILLIAM NORRIS.
DEFENDANT:

JUDGE KERR—

This information has been preferred against William, Norris, Master of the Brigantine William, of Dublin, for penalties to the amount of £2500, for having taken from the Port of Dublin, and brought to Quebec, fifty Passengers more than are permitted by law to be carried in the said Brigantine, in contravention of the 57th of his late Majesty, c. 10.

I am free to confess, that in granting process against the Defendant, I had some doubts as to the jurisdiction of this Court over the offence alledged to have been committed; and to this point I was desirous of hearing the Defendant by Counsel; but Mr. Norris, though personally served with a citation, has not thought proper to appear, in any stage of the proceedings; and the Court must in this matter be entirely guided by its own judgement, assisted by such lights as have been cast upon it by the Advocate of the Informant.

The statute declares, that the penalties and forfeitures to be incurred under that act, shall and may be recovered in a summary way, in any Court or Courts of Session having jurisdiction in the Port or place in which such vessel shall arrive." If no former statute had granted to this Court a right to entertain prosecutions for penalties and forfeitures under the Trade and Revenue laws, I should have felt much doubt whether the words "Court or Courts of Session" in the statute, gave any jurisdiction in civil cases matters to the Courts of Vice Admiralty. But the 49th of his late Majesty, c. 107 in most express terms gives to the Vice-Admiralty Courts cognizance in such cases; for it provides by the first section, "that all such penalties and forfeitures" (speaking of such penalties and forfeitures as relates to the trade and revenue of the Colonies,) "which may have been heretofore, or may be hereafter incurred, shall and may be prosecuted, sued for and recovered in any Court of Record, or of Vice-Admiralty, having jurisdiction in the Colony or Plantation where the cause of prosecution arises."

In this view of the question, the Court is not unsupported in its claim to a concurrent jurisdiction with other Courts, in all prosecutions for penalties and forfeitures under the Trade and Revenue laws, by a district legislative enactment, providing against past and future violations of them; and I am necessarily led to this conclusion, that by the words (Court or Courts of Session) this Court is included.

The trite maxim ast judicis ampliare jurisdictiones," which is to be applied with great caution, may in truth and justice be called in aid of this construction of these words; for if this Court have no jurisdiction over the penalties in the 57th George III. then the provisions of it will become nugatory, there being no other Court which has jurisdiction over the Port of Quebec in Session at this time, nor will any other but the Court of Vice-Admiralty meet before the 21st September, and before that time the Defendant may leave this province, all the witnesses may disperse; and thus the provisions of the act will be elided.

The question then is resolvable to a short inquiry of fact, whether the Defendant has incurred all or any of the fifty penalties for which the Informant proceeds in demand in his libel; and after reading over the evidence taken in support of it, I must say that it exhibits a case of as lawless behaviour and moral turpitude as is rarely disclosed in a Court of Justice.

It appears from the evidence of Thomas James the mate, that the Brigantine sailed from the Port of Dublin, on the 14th May, and on the same day came to anchor opposite Dunleary New Harbour; that Norris, the Master, was on board, and went on shore in the same evening, or next day in the morning; that he returned on board in the night of the 15th, at 11 o'clock; when he returned he said, that when he was on shore he had heard that the ship had fouled her anchor, and that he must heave it up. Here, he threw aside the veil, and touching the witness on the arm, he added, "don't take any notice of my being in a passion or what I may say, but the ship must go to sea immediately; that if she did not go to sea that night, she would be stopped and not allowed to go."—He farther states, that there were then two Custom-House officers on board, and that by the Master's orders, the anchor was weighed and the ship proceeded to sea, when touching at Howth Harbour, about day-light on the 16th, the Custom-House officers were landed, and the Brig proceeded on her voyage to Quebec.

(To be Concluded in our next.)

THE UNION.

Letters have been received in town a few days ago, which confirm the expectations that were held out relative to this important subject. Previous to the prorogation of Parliament, it was agreed that some member of the Lower House should start a question relative to the proposed Union of the Canadas, which would afford an opportunity to the Secretary for the Colonies to make the statement which was always understood to be the sentiments of Ministers—that the Union had long since been a topic upon which they were unanimous, and that so far from yielding to the arguments made use of in the petitions of the anti-unionists, they had, by means of these very documents, themselves become more and more sensible of the necessity of the union of the two provinces. Nothing further, however, was to have been done in the business, during the present Session.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PERE-GRINE MAITLAND, K.C.B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

By authority.

Government House, }
Sept. 6th. 1823. }

HIS EXCELLENCY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has been pleased to make the following appointment.—

ANTHONY SWALLWELL, Gentleman, to be a Surveyor of Land within this Province.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Locations or Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period; to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk. Exc. Coun.

York, February 7th 1821. }

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Exc. Coun.

Executive Council Office, }
York, 7th Nov. 1821. }

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter mentioned on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Locations, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

A Township North of Mariposa, advertised from the Surveyor General's Office on the 19th of October, as

SETTING FORTH THE ANTIQUITY, EXCELLENT DESIGN USE, OFFICE, AND JUST PRIVILEGES OF

JURIES,

By the Law of England.

FIRST WRITTEN

BY SIR JOHN HAWLES, KNIGHT,

SOLICITOR GENERAL TO WILLIAM III.

AS the security of our persons, our reputations, our properties, and our liberties, depends upon Juries, it can never be unseasonable to inform, or to remind them of their Duties. While they remain ignorant of the nature of their station, they cannot determine with propriety; while they feel not its importance, they will not conduct themselves with spirit. When questions, however, which relate to the welfare of the People, are agitated in a Court of Justice, instructions of this kind become of more than ordinary importance. Errors upon these occasions may be attended with fatal consequences, since powers will be introduced, which may in the end, overturn the constitution.

But it is not upon the good intentions of Jurymen only that we must depend. If they should be prevented, either by fraud or force, from discharging the trust reposed in them, their endeavours will avail little to the protection of the subject. Their rights ought, therefore, to be guarded against all attacks, especially as men of great eminence in the law have publickly declared that they have lately been invaded:—and to be defended, they must be understood.

A knowledge, then, of whatever relates to the office of Juries, seems at this time essentially necessary; since from hence alone can arise the proper Execution of its Duties, and the Preservation of its Rights.—To promote this end, the following Pamphlet is now republished. Its character for perspicuity and strength of reasoning, is so well established, that it is needless to enlarge on it here. If it meets with the success which its merit deserves, it will, perhaps, be a principal means of preserving the Trial by Jury, in its full force, to posterity.

Editorial Commentary.

Our readers will find the best account of PERKIN'S New Steam Engine, in this Week's Register, that has yet been made public.—In our opinion it is the greatest discovery for this country that could have been made at this particular period of our history, as it will enable the proprietors of lands to place mills in every accessible situation, where they may be wanted, throughout the country;—an inexhaustible supply of the finest timber may be thus got at;—and the mills, by this method, may be actually rendered portable.—The expense of fuel, instead of being an objection, is in this country an additional benefit—because the owner is clearing his land, and manufacturing Pot and Pearl Ashes, (a most valuable article of foreign commerce, by which he may bring in plenty of money to carry on his other improvements,) by the very means which are necessary to drive his Mill.—By the use of water nothing is gained but the power, and much loss is continually occurring by wear and tear of dams, &c.—By the use of Steam, on this principle—the expence of clearing land, to a capitalist, would become merely nominal, and his mechanical power, to carry on all sorts of works, gained, not at a heavy cost, but, through an actual profit, by the manufacture of Pot and Pearl Ashes, to a vast extent!—The advantages likely to be derived from this mode of applying steam, appear to be incalculable, and the name of PERKINS promises to rank high amongst those who have most benefited mankind.—

We hope the campaign has terminated in the London District, and that peace will be ratified, by all parties agreeing to return the ablest man amongst them, whoever he may be, to be their representative in Parliament at the next General Election.

HAMILTON, BERMUDA, Aug. 2, 1823.

State of the West Indies—On Sunday last, H. M. S. Pyramus, Capt Newcomb, passed these Islands on her way to Barbadoes—having conveyed a fleet of 43 sail of homeward bound merchant men, from Jamaica up to latitude 36, where she parted with them on the 19th ult.—all well. The Pyramus left Jamaica on the 2d July

The modifications which have been proposed in England, for the improvement of the condition of the Slaves in the West Indies, have produced much excitement in all the Islands from which we have as yet had any information upon the subject; and there is no doubt the same apprehensions will be entertained generally throughout all the British West India Colonies.

Some of the writers in the West India Papers have recommended a Congress of Delegates from all the Islands to meet at any appointed place, and there to deliberate upon the present aspect of affairs, and to devise such measures as may appear advisable under existing circumstances.

Flourishing state of England—A London Paper of July 3, states, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had presented to the Commons a most flattering statement of the Finances of England, which produced great exultation among the members.

Ship Building.—Official returns for the last five years of vessels built in the British dominions, introduced at a meeting of ship owners in London, shew that ship building has been rapidly on the decline in that country during the above period. In 1818, the amount of tonnage built in the British dominions was 104,366 tons; in 1819, 112,176 do; in 1820, 94,548 do; in 1821, 74,967 do; in 1822, 69,334 do.

It is also stated that since the restoration of peace, British shipping has declined in value full one half and the remaining half has for the most part been unproductive of income to the owners.

LONDON, July 4.

The bill in favor of the reciprocity of duties with foreign countries, has passed to a third reading in the House of Commons, by a majority of 76.

The grand ball in honor of the Spanish Constitutionalists, took place at Covent Garden yesterday, (July 4) at which were present the Duke of Sussex, and a great many members of both Houses of Parliament.

The four brothers Rothschild, bankers of London, were at Paris, it was surprised, negotiating for the 22 million loan.

Marshal Ney—A story is running through the papers of this country, that Marshal Ney, and Captain Michael Rudolph, a Captain of Lee's Legion, in the Revolutionary War, is one and the same person, and the story is supported with some ingenuity, but very little probability; and, as it will soon be shown, without the possibility of truth.

Setting aside the almost entire impossibility of the Marshal's being a foreigner, and the fact not to be known to any one in France, not even to his wife, (for the Marshal had a wife and children) or any of her family, other circumstances will be noticed that ought to put this story at rest.—At what time Captain Rudolph, so often mentioned in Lee's Memoirs, became a Captain in that corps, is not known to the writer of this article. The first notice of Captain Rudolph is at page 253 of the memoirs: about the beginning of December, 1780. Lee's corps joined the army of General Green, a few days after which the attack on Georgetown was planned, in which the Captain took his usual part.

On his trial, to one of the questions propounded to him, the Marshal answered, "my name is Michael Ney, born at Sau Louis, the —— Feb. 1769." Now, if the Marshal was the writer of this article. The first notice of Captain Rudolph is at page 253 of the memoirs: about the beginning of December, 1780. Lee's corps joined the army of General Green, a few days after which the attack on Georgetown was planned, in which the Captain took his usual part.

On his trial, to one of the questions propounded to him, the Marshal answered, "my name is Michael Ney, born at San Louis, the —— Feb. 1769." Now, if the Marshal had any reason to conceal the place of his nativity, there could be no motive to conceal the time; indeed, on such a solemn occasion, one can scarcely supposes falsehood would be stated of no importance in the trial. The Marshal, then, was born in February, 1769. Captain Rudolph was driven to a captaincy of cavalry, in December, 1780; at which time the Marshal, according to his own account of himself, had not attained his twelfth year!

It would be well, if those who instruct the public, were to be less fond of the marvellous, and more attentive to facts.—Norfolk Herald.

Sale Works of the U. S.—The following calculation gives the amount of salt manufactured at Salina and the works adjacent. At Salina there are about fifty blocks of buildings, at Liverpool twenty, at Geddes thirteen, averaging fourteen kettles each, and making in the whole eighty three blocks; these are all capable of making fourteen bushels of salt per day, which amounts to three thousand three hundred and twenty bushels, or six hundred and sixty four barrels, which it is said, will commend a ready sale at 14s and 14s 6d per barrel. Thus making the amount manufactured each day to be equivalent to one thousand one hundred and sixty-two dollars, exceeding three hundred thousand dollars a year.—Formerly there were many complaints respecting the quality of the salt, but a law passed the last session of the legislature, requiring the inspection, renders it impossible for the manufacturer even if so disposed, to defraud the public.

Henry Unwin Addington, Esquire, is received and recognized by the Government of the United States, as the Charge d'Affairs of Great Britain, in the absence of the Minister.

Sacrilegious Robbery.—It is truly astonishing to think that a debauch which has begun at five in the afternoon, and all the liquor drunk, should be renewed at eight or nine in the morning, shall be taken down in short hand, written out, and corrected to make sense of the speeches (which they are not generally always when spoken, and hardly at all when first committed to paper) printed,—struck off by thousands after correction of the press—distributed by the newsmen—and on every breakfast table in London at the said day, before the speakers have left their beds—and within four and twenty hours read in Devonshire and Yorkshire.—Edinburgh Review.

Scotch Intelligence.—The carpet manufacturers in Kilmarnock, are at present doing well. There are about 330 carpet looms employed in making the different kinds of carpeting. The wool necessary for the carpets is so brisk at present that the carding mill near Dalry keeps two sets of workers, and the machinery goes night and day. The bonnet making is also brisk in Kilmarnock. About 280 dozen bonnets are weekly finished in that town.

A Boiled Toad.—A remarkable accident happened at Mr. Strickland's, at Chalwell Farm, England: to be sure his family, consisting of a wife and five children, were drinking tea in the afternoon, he observed, after drinking two or three dishes, that the tea looked of a darker color than usual, and had no flavor to it, upon which, after various surmises as to what could be the reason, the kettle was examined, when, to their great astonishment, they found a large toad, boiled to that degree, that the legs were separated from the body; upon this alarming circumstance, they all seemed greatly indisposed, conceiving themselves poisoned, and repaired instantly for an apothecary, who very prudently gave each of them a large dose of salad oil, which both purged and vomitted them plentifully, and they all happily recovered.

A Wholesale Dealer in Love Letters.—Marshal de Bassompiere, in his memoirs, says, that he was informed by the Duke of Espernon of Cardinal Richelieu's designs to have him arrested. "On Feb 24, 1631," continues he, "I rose before day, and burned more than six thousand love letters, which I had formerly received from different women, apprehending lest, if I were committed to prison and my house searched, something might be found to the prejudice of some person; these being the only papers that could be injurious to any one."

Qualifications of Members.—About the year 1682 or 1683, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed a resolution that "no member thereof should come to the House barefoot, or eat his bread and cheese on the steps."

Resurrection from an Earthquake.—The following very remarkable epitaph was lately copied by a traveller, from a burying ground in Spring Path, over against Port Royal Jamaica:—"Here lies the body of Lewis Galdy, Esq who died Sept 23, 1739 aged 90. He was born at Montpelier, in France, which place he left for his religion (being a Protestant) and settled in this island; where in the great earthquake in 1692 he was swallowed up, and by the great providence of God, by a second shock was thrown out into the sea, where he continued swimming till he was taken up by a boat and miraculously preserved. He afterwards lived in great reputation and died universally lamented."

The Dead—David Morrison has been sentenced to seven years banishment by the Scotch High Court of Justiciary, for violating the sepulchres of the dead.

The practice of robbing graves to supply surgeons with subjects for anatomy is carried to an extent truly revolting. We were informed some time since, by a physician of eminence, that upwards of 2000 subjects are yearly furnished to the various hospitals, &c in London.—County Chronicle.

Depreciation of Property.—A valuable marsh farm, in the county of Kent, near Rochester and Gravesend, containing upwards of 920 acres of fine land was sold at Garraway's on Thursday last, for the sum of £10,000; which a short time ago, had been valued at treble that sum. We understand an Alderman of the city was the purchaser.

Frightful Calamity—Extract of a letter received by a gentleman in the city of New York, from a friend who went passenger in the brig Ann, Harrison, Master, which sailed from Philadelphia for London in May last.

"On our passage we encountered eight gales, when about 200 miles from land, the wind changed and came ahead, blowing pretty fresh—the captain had just quitted the deck and turned in at midnight, when we were suddenly alarmed by a heavy crash. All hands flew to the deck to learn the cause, which proved to be that we had run foul of a large sloop—great consternation prevailed on both sides, the sloop calling for a rope and to lower our boats, and we hailing her to stand by, as she had stove in our bow, and we were sinking.

We, however, on sounding the pump and examining more closely, found we had not suffered so much as was at first feared. Efforts were then made to beat towards the sloop, but our rigging was too much injured to get to windward—but unfortunately no small boat was attached to our brig, and the jolly boat and deck were lumbered with cotton—every exertion was however made to get the boat out, but we were fast drifting to leeward as their cries became more faint. We flowed signals of distress and lanterns. At length one dreadful and piercing shriek of despair seemed to announce the climax of their sufferings, and the absence of all hope; after which not a sound was heard.

By the time our boats were in tackle for lowering, their fate seemed to be sealed; with the little hope of success, and a dangerous sea running, it was considered too hazardous to man the boats, lest they should be swamped, and thus increase the calamity. The captain therefore determined on lying to during the night, for the small chance of seeing them in the morning, or picking up any thing that might lead to a further knowledge of the unhappy sufferers, but not a vestige was to be seen, nor could we flatter ourselves there was the least possibility of their being able to make sail for the land.

This occurrence for many days cast a gloom on all aboard, and every one became nervous at the sight of a sail after sunset."

The Un-Holy Alliance.—The Sovereigns of Austria, Russia, and Prussia have withdrawn their Ambassadors from the Court of Stutgard, because the King of Wurtemberg has declined yielding obedience to their despotic demands, that he should put down the Constitution which he has given to his State! It seems that at Verona the three Great Powers had already signed their wishes to the Kings of Bavaria and Wurtemberg, and the other States of Germany who have free Constitutions, and the Prince Metternich was charged with the completion of their projects. This meddling spirit of the ex-accomplice of Napoleon was not at all relished by the German Sovereigns; and Count Winzingerode, the Wurtemberg Prime Minister, sent a Circular to the Wurtemberg Ministers at the different Courts of Europe, complaining of the conduct of the High Allies. The publication of this document was considered exceedingly offensive by the Despotic Powers, as it exposed designs and transactions on their part, which they never intended should be divulged! And after many remonstrances on the subject, they have at length manifested their displeasure, as we have stated above, by the withdrawing of their Ambassadors from Wurtemberg. In furtherance of the views of that Alliance, the Diet of Frankfort has thought proper to order the King of Wurtemberg to suppress a Newspaper published at Stutgard, called the German Observer, and to interdict the Editor from editing any periodical publication for the next five years. The Ambassador of Wurtemberg declined voting on this occasion, and we hope the King of Wurtemberg will not be bullied into a compliance by the three ex-accomplices of Bonaparte. Now, the most singular part of this affair is, that the Hanoverian Minister at the Diet voted in the spirit of the Holy Alliance!!! The offence of the German Editor was, that he censured the job of the Inquisition established at Mayence by virtue of the Congress of Carlsbad, each of the members of which has for four years past received £4 sterling, per diem, for doing nothing! Who knows, but that in a little time the Ambassadors of Austria, Russia, and Prussia will be withdrawn from England. Indeed, we know that the Austrian and Prussian Ambassadors intend shortly to leave this country, and that their successors have not yet been appointed!—British Monitor.

A BACCHANALIAN LECTURE.

[From the Dublin Evening Post]

THE PYRAMID OF DRINK.

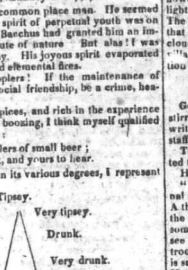
Most of my male readers have, doubtless, been drunk once at least in their lives. Let them not be offended with this supposition—if it be not true, so much the worse for them selves. Their sobriety is no virtue—no more entitled to approbation than the sobriety of a horse; an animal proverbial for making a very sober meal. But though they may have been drunk once or many times, it is not probable that they have philosophised so deeply as I have on this subject. In truth I have had glorious opportunities in my long life, of trying various experiments, and to do myself justice, I have not made the most of them. It is not easy to say whether my imagination was most benefited by getting drunk or getting sober.

My grand-uncle was one of the most renowned topers of his day, and I received my education under his immediate eye. His favorite liquor was strong punch. Ale, he used to say, was only fit for boors, and wine for milk-sops. The only wine he would ever touch was Port.

It was a joyous thing to see this old boy after dinner at the head of his own table. He always sat in a curiously orna mented oaken chair, considerably raised above the rest of the company. By his side stood a tremendous jug, containing about three or four gallons of punch. From this reservoir half a dozen smaller jugs were kept constantly supplied, and sailed unremittingly round the table, at the rate of ten knots an hour. The reservoir itself, when exhausted, was replenished by the punch-maker, an old domestic, whom long service and exemplary drunkenness had raised to this honorable post.

I think I now see this venerable King of Good Fellows seated on his throne, such as I recollect him at the age of 76. He was tall and portly, his eye piercing, black, and full of fire, a profusion of white hair combed back from his lofty forehead hung over his shoulders, and his face was resplendent with the rosy light of Bacchus. His sceptre was an ebony cudgel, with which he knocked down the company—for toasts and songs. The series of the former he set out himself, roaring out the only stave he was master of—

My name is Jack Hall,
Chimney sweep, chimney sweep;
I rob both great and small,
Chimney sweep, chimney sweep, &c.



My Grand-Uncle was no common place man. He seemed born never to die—the fresh spirit of perpetual youth was on him. I used to fancy that Bacchus had granted him an immunity from the usual tribute of nature. But alas! I was mistaken. He died one day. His joyous spirit evaporated and mingled with the kindred elemental fires.

Farewell! Prince of Tipplers! If the maintenance of good humour, mirth, and social friendship, be a crime, heaven help the poor soul.

Educated under such auspices, and rich in the experience of forty years of perpetual boozing, I think myself qualified to philosophise on drinking:

Then list, ye guzzlers of small beer;
'Tis mine to speak, and yours to hear.

The operation of drink, in its various degrees, I represent by a pyramid, as thus—

Sobriety is a state, unfortunately, too well known to need description; suffice it to say that the sober moments which immediately succeed to dinner are the most miserable in existence. The languor, the sense of utter inefficiency, mental and bodily, are dreadful. After a few glasses, you ascend the first step of the pyramid and become comfortable. In this state you are not disposed to talk. There is a tranquil luxury in your feelings, and a reverie comes on, which, if you drink no more, is likely to terminate in sleep. A philosopher sel dom passes this point except in company.

Drink on and you step up to the lively. Now you begin to talk, and your remarks are smart and pertinent. You have the reasoning power in high perfection, but aided with al by a happy fertility of illustration This may be considered as a mental aurora announcing that the sun of fancy is about to rise from the 'purple wave.'

Fresh.—There is more fire and colour in your ideas now, for that sun has risen. You grow more eloquent and less logical. Your jokes are capital—in your own estimation. Your perceptions, however, are still tolerably clear beyond yourself.

Very Fresh.—Your conversation is more and more high coloured. Your eloquence is impassioned, and you overwhelm your companions with a flood of talk. You begin to suit the action to the word. Ideas not quite coherent, but language still tolerably distinct and correct.

Tipsey.—Now on the top of the pyramid, you begin to grow giddy. Gestures very vehement, and epithets much exaggerated Argumentative, but not rational. Words con siderably abridged and ideas lamentably obscured.

Very Tipsey.—You find out that you have a turn for vocal music, and regale your friends with a solo Specify in inco herent language, and evince a most decided tendency to mischief and locomotion. Proud as a peacock, stout as lion, and amorous as a dove.

Drunk.—Perversely quarrelsome, and sturdily good natured. Dealing much in shake hands, and knock-downs.—Legs and mammas unsteady, and feet unsteady.

Very Drunk.—Abortive efforts to appear sober. See every thing double. Balance totally lost, you drift about like a ship in a hard gale. Incoherent rodomontade and a few interjections.

Stupidly Drunk.—Head and stomach topsy turvy. Eyes fixed and glaring. Utter incapacity of speech and locomotion, accompanied with an indistinct, yet horrid, consciousness of your situation.

Dead Drunk.—An apoplectic sleep, and confused dreams of the Devil or your Creditors.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

Character of the Spaniards.—(From Article No. 11. on Spanish Romances, by Mr Bowring, in the London Magazine.)—"I love Spain as a country, and Spaniards as a people.—In other lands I single out special objects for my regard, and indicate their names on the tables of friendship and sympathy—in Spain my affections pervade and cling to the whole population.—The national characteristic is fine and heroic.—Hospitality, generosity, dignity, valour; these are all Spanish virtues. I have found them elsewhere, it is true; but in the Spaniard they are blended with something indefinable, which gives all these admirable qualities a peculiar energy and relief of which I only know that it breathes of the old romance, though it makes no parade of its ancestry.—It is romantic, spiritual, chivalrous.—It is the soul of the soil—of song the universal element in Spain.—There is not a hill, nor a valley, nor a streamlet, which it has failed to consecrate The very beggar decorates his petitions with poetical imagery; he asks a blessed alms for tenderness, for one in flower of whose life has been blasted, or from whom "the light of heaven has been shut out by a celestial visitation."—The muleteer chaunts his ever-varying concion to a strain that varies never; but while the sun shines, and it is seldom clouded, his voice is always heard; and there is scarcely a "lugar where some repentista (improvisore) has not his portion of poetry and praise."

MADRID, July 2.

(By an Extraordinary Gazette.)

Gen. Morillo has just declared against the Cortes, and has stirred up all Galicia and the Asturias against them. He has written to Gen. Bourk, and is about sending an officer of the staff to the Baron d'Angoulême.

The famous Quiroga, Captain General of the Militia, rejected the overtures of Morillo.

He has embarked on board a vessel.

"In vain (says the Constitutional) does the Treasury journal present to us its glowing pictures of approaching peace. A thick cloud is gathering over them. Daily does it repeat, the war is finished, and yet daily communicates the result of some fresh combat—the war is said to be over, and yet we see General Mina concentrating on the Rhone with troops, in order more rapidly to reach Catalonia—the war is said to be over, and yet Marshal Lauriston is going into Navarre with a fresh corps—the war is said to be over, and yet the Garrisons of Hostalrich and St. Sebastian are attacking our troops—the war is said to be over, and yet sieges are being undertaken; and Ballasteros, whose army was scattered, re-appears with 10,000 men—finally, the war is said to be over, at the very moment when the two parties in Spain are declaring deadly hostility against each other, and when the Regency of Madrid prescribes the Regency of Seville; sequesters all the property of the members of the Cortes, and that of all the exiles at Seville, and condemns them, in mass, to death—and all this under the eyes of our troops at Madrid."

Madrid, June 23.—The Regency yesterday issued the following decree:

"Art. 1. An exact list shall be drawn up of the existing Cortes; of the members of the pretended regency of Seville; the ministers and officers of the pretended ministry; the chief and Seville, who ordered the removal of the King from Seville to Cadiz, or who have lent their aid in said removal.

"2. The personal effects of the individuals on this list shall be immediately sequestrated, until further orders

"3. All the members of the Cortes who have taken part in the deliberations in which the King was suspended, are declared, for this act alone, guilty of the crime of treason, and the punishment pronounced by the laws for this crime shall be adjudged by the tribunals, on the mere recognition of identity.

"4. Those who shall efficaciously contribute to the deliverance of the King, shall be exempted from the consequences of the preceding article, and also be suitably and honorably rewarded.

"5. The generals and officers of the troops of the line and militia who followed the King to Cadiz are individually declared responsible for the lives of their Majesties and their Royal Highnesses, and shall be tried before the military tribunals to be named on the members of the royal family, and which they had it in their power to prevent."

Private Correspondence.

PERPIGNAN, June 21.

"The column of Spaniards made prisoners at Valcebollera, arrived yesterday. It is composed of 632 officers and men. They reached Perpignan at mid day. The officers marching at the head of the troops; the three field officers on horseback. Both men and officers appeared unsubdued by their defeat, and among the officers, was recognised M. Pastore des Geroms, brother-in law of M. Campedon, one of the ministers of that city. All the prisoners, without distinction of rank, were thrown into the military prison. The Mayor had prepared one of the rooms of the military prison House for the reception of the officers, but this was countermanded.

"According to the best information we can obtain, every thing along the route of this column indicated that the check received by Mina, was not considered discouraging, that the officers and men composing it, maintained their confidence in the ultimate triumph of the cause they were defending.

"Much constancy, and the greatest resolution are necessary in the sort of war which Mina has undertaken for the defence of Catalonia. Its difficulties are scarcely to be conceived. He who undertakes to conduct such a war, should possess great intelligence, in order to be able to comprehend at a glance the difficulties around him—great circumspection, united to great daring in his plans—great intrepidity in action, and presence of mind amid dangers—to keep the field with a small body of troops, watch his adversary, harass him in all his movements, rout him, or at least embarrass him very much, cause him to change his plans, cut off his supplies, know how in all cases to supply by stratagems the want of them, &c. &c. &c. Mina possesses all these qualities in a most eminent degree, and is not only a skilful leader in his marches and counter marches; these are the characteristics of this war, which are little understood by other officers, however great their merit.

"We must not, therefore, be surprised at what the papers have said of Mina and his operations; at one time the Baron d'Eroles had him in his power; at another, the sword of General Donnadieu was driving him amongst precipices, whence escape was impossible; whilst, in fact, Mina, when ever was his position, was always the master of his own movements and plans. His aim is well known; it is to harass, fatigue, and finally rout the French army, and put an end to its operations in Catalonia. From the day when he first lured to Bens and Portella the first division of the French army, commanded by the Marshal in person, he has never ceased an instant to perplex, and give full occupation to the greater part of that force. Now at Olot, then at Gironelle, to day before Manresa, to-morrow before Vich; at one minute in front of General Donnadieu, and then again upon his rear, he has for two months dragged the Baron d'Eroles over the lofty mountains of Catalonia, making him run to Solsona when he was at Palou, to Ripoll, when he was at Torrella, to Olot, and Torrella, when tyrannised of the high mountains which separates Catalonia, he was marching over into Cerdagne, thus obliging Eroles to return upon Olot, Ripoll, Ribas, and the Col de Tosas, on our own frontier.

"Such is the result of the knowledge of localities, which no body possesses in a higher degree than Mina; who marches himself at the head of his troops with a musket on his shoulder, and is the first to sound the defiles filled up with snow.

"Monsen Anton, (an officer of the faith) is dead of his wounds."

The Jesuits have been restored in Spain; but they are likely to produce but little effect at present, as in consequence of their suppression in the days of Charles III. they are very poor, and their whole number in the Peninsula is said not to exceed 800.

The Courier of the 2d. declares that if the King of Spain is re-invested with his authority at Cadiz; the British Government will probably acknowledge the constitutional court, as simply if the King of Spain considers the presence of Sir Wm. A'Court necessary to his security.

Several French soldiers, taken in arms among the Constitutionalists, have been condemned to death.

News arrived on the 3d, that the chief exiles, Cadiz Regency has been dissolved, and that the government is exercised in the name of the King.

The London Courier of the 2d July contains the following sentiments, as those entertained by the Government—"His Majesty of Spain ought to be placed in a situation to declare his will with the utmost freedom, not nominally, but in reality."

The King of Spain is watched very closely. The Constitutionalists fear he intends endeavouring to escape by sea.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,—

I find in your paper of the 17th ult. a Communication from my neighbour, Captain Matthews, which on a hasty perusal, I considered unworthy of the slightest notice, inasmuch as the first point alluded to was dictating to the Government in the execution of their duty; a business, with which the public had nothing to do; and in the second, so general a charge against his neighbourhood, not a character in which could consider himself discriminated; and his having been an Artillery Gentleman, and in the habit of firing big guns and blank cartridge, the report could in no wise be injurious to the public, though its offensive noise might for a moment disturb their tranquility; from these considerations, I at first resolved on hearing them to judge agreeable to the old maxim, the greatest ——cry —— first; but on a second and more deliberate consideration, viewing the disgrace and slander which the neighbourhood stands charged with in the public prints, the probable result of public opinion, should the charge remain uncontroverted, and the malignant principle which gave existance to it unexposed, I resolved, humble as my abilities are, to make a few brief remarks on each of the two points upon which the Captain dwells with such admirable ingenuity.

As it respects the first and political point, I have only to observe that this Gentleman appears to express a much greater regard for the interest, than he does for the reputation, of the Government, or he would not have interfered in the adoption of more interesting measures; and, as regards the second, in which he alludes to the neighbourhood in which he has the honor to reside, and which he asserts is composed of the most vicious and unprincipled set of rascals the Province can produce, capable of being bought with Whisky, and flattery, and to be guilty of perjury, I must candidly and pointedly say that I think in this respect he wilfully and maliciously calumniates them, for I have now resided more than four years among them, and have found them on all occasions a moral, industrious, quiet, and respectable society of people, a number of whom, before the big gun was fired on the 4th July last, was inclined to support him at the ensuing election to represent them in Parliament; but, I have too high an opinion of the ability and steadiness of these people, to believe that one solitary individual will condescend to entrust him with such an important and respectable duty after being well aware of his total disregard for their reputation.

It may, perhaps, be considered from my taking up the pen and voluntarily becoming the advocate of my neighbours, that some open warfare exists between the Captain and me, but this is not the case, my only object is to wipe off the foul aspersion from my neighbourhood and let off the accuser as easily as possible, by putting the most favourable construction on his wanton design, that the truth will admit of, which I shall endeavour to explain in two ways, leaving the Captain to accept which he likes best, and the public the one most probable.

In the first place, when the gentleman was making out his report on the 4th July last, publicly and unreasonably accusing his neighbours of being, in effect, guilty of every crime which could debase the characters of men, he might feel so exasperated against one or two individuals, that he was not aware of the consequences and impropriety of including the whole county, (which in fact is only one neighbourhood in this wilderness) when he only alluded to a few individuals; and being a military man, and not yet much acquainted with the customs of civilians, he might think it no harm to accuse the whole on the fault of a few. In the second place, when he announced to his friends an intention of being a candidate at the ensuing election for the purpose of representing his neighbourhood in parliament, he might not be aware of their being possessed of what he considers such vicious, unprincipled, rascally, dispositions. I doubt not but those imaginary scenes of depravity alluded to have occurred. I have witnessed the like in other parts of the Province in the same electioneering pursuits, after filling those jockeys with whiskey, and supposed to have obtained their influence they would turn against me and laugh at my empty bottle. In my humble opinion a novel of this nature is the greatest cause the gentleman has to complain so generally of his neighbours, and on the 4th July resolved to abandon his first intention, and loads up his big gun with such combustibles as he supposed would make a deadly slaughter on the characters of the constituents of the county, in order to render the representation as disrespectful as possible.

IRA SCHOFIELD.

Arts and Sciences.

From Tilloch's Philosophical Magazine.

Mr. Perkins' Steam Engine.—Mr. Perkins' invention is founded on a most valuable discovery—that water is capable of enduring an elevation of temperature even to a red heat, or perhaps an indefinite extent, by being subjected to a very high degree of pressure; which pressure, while it permits the expansion of the molecules of water as a fluid, prevents their further expansion, or the liquid assuming the gaseous form of steam.

Mr. Perkins's boiler, or steam generator, Mr. P. substitutes a cylinder, which he terms the generator. This cylinder is made of gun-metal (the most tenacious and least liable to oxidation) of about three inches in thickness, closed at both ends, with a valve in the top, opening outwards; which valve is loaded with weights equal to the state of the pressure from the expansion of the heated water within. The cylinder is placed vertically in a cylindrical furnace; consequently it becomes surrounded on all sides with the fire, and upon acquiring a temperature of 400° to 450° Fahrenheit. The production of steam is effected by an injecting pump, throwing in water at one part of the generator, which displaces through the valve an equal volume of hot water from the generator. This water, at 400°, passing into the induction or steam pipe, instantly expands into steam, communicates with the working cylinder, and gives motion to its piston, which is placed in a horizontal direction, for the more convenient application of its power to machinery. The reciprocal action of the piston opens and shuts the apertures of the induction and eduction pipes, by means of rotary valves, as usual in some other engines. But the operation of generating and condensing the steam effected so instantaneously by this engine, that the piston performs about 200 strokes in a minute, when the engine is at full work. Indeed considering the small extent of the surface, the power of this engine is almost incredible, the generator containing only about eight gallons of water, and the working cylinder not exceeding two inches in diameter, with a stroke of the piston about 15 inches in length. The piston rod gives motion to a crank and fly wheel similar to other engines.

A most decided improvement is also made by Mr. P., in condensing the steam under a very great degree of pressure, and at a temperature of about 320°, and in this state returning it into the reservoir for the successive supply of the generator. In consequence of this economical arrangement, the space occupied by the engine with all its appurtenances, does not exceed an area of 6 feet by eight. The present model is calculated as equal to 4 horse power; and Mr. P. considers the whole of the apparatus of a sufficient size for a 30 horse engine; with the exception of the working cylinder and piston. The consumption of coal for this engine is within two bushels per day, when at full work.

All risk of accident is effectually provided against, by the following ingenious contrivance. It should be remembered, that owing to the small extent of surface exposed to the expansive force of the steam, and the latter being generated only to sufficient quantity for each succeeding stroke of the piston, there is much less liability to accident from this engine, than in most other high pressure engines. To prevent, however, the possibility of such an event, the induction pipe, in which the steam is supposed, is calculated to withstand an internal force of 4000 pounds to the square inch, and it is also provided with a thin copper tube, which is calculated to burst at a pressure of 1000 pounds; while the pressure under which Mr. P. works the engine, does not exceed 500 pounds on the square inch.

In order to demonstrate the perfect safety of the operation of this engine, notwithstanding this immense internal pressure, Mr. Perkins has on several occasions urged the power of the steam till it burst open the fusible copper tube, without occasioning the smallest risk, either to the spectator or to any other part of the apparatus. This mode of allowing the escape of the steam by rendering open the sides of the ball, (which is made of a determinate strength) is probably superior in the certainty of its operation to any modification of safety-valves.

It is also a very remarkable fact, that the steam which escapes in this case is not by any means of that elevated temperature which might have been expected from its tremendously expansive force. This fact seems to involve some points connected with the doctrine of latent heat, or the conversion of fluid into gaseous matter and vice versa, with which we are at present but very imperfectly acquainted. We understand Mr. P. is further engaged in some very important enquiries on this most intricate branch of natural philosophy.

We have not heard any comparative estimate of the price of Mr. P.'s engines, but we apprehend their original cost will be considerably lower than that of others; while they can be worked with one tenth part of the fuel, and occupy only a fifth part of the space required for those of the low pressure construction. The latter point is one of considerable importance, in situations, where manufactures are limited for room, as in the metropolis and other great towns.

The very superior economy of these engines over all others, not only in the consumption of fuel and water, but in the weight of materials, must also render them peculiarly adapted for locomotive engines; and we entertain little doubt that steam carriages will, ere another 20 years have elapsed, become as generally adopted among us as steam vessels are at the present. And when we take into consideration the immense savings in the consumption and tonnage of coals, we are of opinion that Mr. Pa's invention will infinitely extend the use of the steam engine in navigation.

FROM THOMSON'S SELECT SCOTTISH MELODIES.

SONG.—"DIANNA HALLIE."

Air.—"Woo'd and Married and a'."

The bride she is winsome and bonnie,
Her hair it is snooded sae sleek;
And faithfu' and kind is her Johnie,
Yet fast fa' the tears on her cheek.
New pearlings are cause o' her sorrow,
New pearlings and plenishing too;
The bride that has a' to borrow
Has e'en right mickle ado.
Woo'd and married and a',
Woo'd and married and a'
And is na she very weel aff
To be woo'd and married and a'?

Her mother then hastily spake:—
"The lassie is glaiket wi' pride;
In my pouches I hadna a plack
The day that I was a bride.
E'en take to your wheel and be clever,
And draw out your thread in the sun;
The gear that is gifted, it never
Will last like the gear that is won.
Woo'd and married and a',
Tocher and havings sae sma',
I think ye are very weel aff,
To be woo'd and married and a'."

"Toot, toot!" quo' the grey-headed father,
"She's less o' a bride than a bairn;
She's ta'en like a cout frae the heather,
Wi' sense and discretion to learn.
Half husband I trow, and half daddy,
As humour inconstantly leans;
A cadel maun be patient and steady
That yokes wi' a mate in her teens.
Kerchief to cover nae naet,
Locks the wind used to blaw!
I'm baith like to laugh and to greet
When I think o' her married at a'."

Then out spak the wily bridegroom,
Weel waled were his wordies, I ween
"I'm rich though my coffer be toom,
Wi' the blink o' your bonny blue een;
I'm prouder o' thee by my side,
Though thy ruffles or ribbons be few,
Than if Kate o' the Craft were my bride,
Wi' purples and pearlings anew.
Deer and dearest of ony,
Ye're woo'd and bookit and a',
And do ye think scorn o' your Johnie
And grieve to be married at a'?"

She turn'd, and she blush'd, and she smil'd,
And she lookit me bashfully down;
The pride o' her heart was beguiled,
And she play'd wi' the sleeve o' her gown:
She twirl'd the tag o' her lace,
And she nippit her bodice sae blue,
Syne blinket me sweet in her face,
And aff like a mawkin she flew.
Woo'd and married and a',
Married and carried awa';
She thinks herself very weel aff,
To be woo'd and married and a'.

TRIAL OF WILLIAM NORRIS.

(Concluded from our last.)

The witness produces a paper which he says was given to him by Norris, shewing the number of families, to whom, as mate, he was to serve out water during the voyage; and this list contains, in number, as far as I can understand from it, 119 souls.—His evidence also goes to prove that there was hardly room to work the ship; that part of these families slept in the Long Boat on deck; and of the number, happily, only eleven children died, a circumstance that he attributes to the coldness of the weather.

James Hunt, a passenger, states that he, his wife, 27 years of age, with a child, and two relatives, embarked on board of the brig on the 14th May; that neither he nor his family had a birth excepting his wife, who was nearly starved with cold, and was permitted, for three nights, to sleep in the Cabin; that during the first ten nights, they were obliged to sleep between the births; and, at other times, in the Long Boat upon deck. For the last three weeks of the passage, he says, that they lay in the hold on some ropes, where the child he had with him died, and where his wife was delivered of another! He does not know the exact number of passengers, but he says that there were number of passengers, but he says that there were more than seventy grown persons, and upwards of thirty children, exclusive of eleven who died on the passage.

Walter Silensin swears that there were at least 140 passengers, and that though he was promised a birth by the owner, a Mr. Ellis, of Dublin, he was obliged to sleep in the Long Boat on deck, by which he lost his health and is now extremely ill. He says that he paid four guineas to the owner for his own and his cousin's passage.

Though it appears that the passengers far exceeded the number restricted by the Statute, which is, "One adult person, or three children under 14 years of age, for every one ton and a half of that part of the ship or vessel remaining unladen." Yet they all differ as to the precise number, which is not to be wondered at, considering the crowded state of the ship. However the testimony of Mr. Fife, the Custom House Officer, who boarded the Brig on her arrival and who counted the passengers in the presence of Clifford, the other witness, enable the Court to say with correctness that there were, exclusive of the crew, ninety-seven grown persons and forty-four children, that were brought from Dublin in the Brigantine William, a vessel of only ninety-three tons burthen. Mr. Fife states that the ship was so filthy, and the smell between decks so offensive, that he did not venture to go below.

These are the facts which this Informant discloses, and certainly the case is a deplorable one. It is in vain that the civilised nations unite to abolish the slave trade, and to mitigate the miseries of mankind, if, from the vile passion of avarice, which is "semper infinita, insatiabilis," a traffic like this is permitted, with impunity, to be carried on between our shores, by which numbers of our fellow subjects are taken hoodwinked from their homes, and consigned to miseries which can be compared only to those of the Black Hole of Calcutta. Happily, in this instance, the mortality was not great, considering the crowded state of the ship; but, had the weather been warm and the winds less favourable, I do not think that one of the number would have lived to tell the tale of their sufferings.

Following the dictates of my heart and understanding, I find the fact and the law with the informant, and the facts being proved, the law points with unerring hand to this conclusion, that the penalties for the recovery of which the Informant proceeds in demand have been incurred, and I decree that the sum of £2500, sterling, be paid by the Defendant, William Norris, one moity to His Majesty, and the other moiety to the Informant.

The Hon. Mr. Primrose for the Informant.

Effect of suffering Yankee Crimps in Scotland.

The following paragraph has excited some serious and painful reflexions in our mind.—We cannot help wishing that our Government at home were apprized of such facts; when it is probable that men like friend Ward of Marietta would be laid hold of, and prevented from taking either a cabin or steerage passage any more to that country.—Ed.

From the New York Evening Post.

Emigration.—In the ship Commerce, of Greenock, which arrived here on Tuesday evening, came as a cabin passenger, Nahum Ward, Esq. of Marietta, Ohio, formerly of Shrewsbury, Massachusetts, and between 80 and 90 passengers in the steerage, most of whom are young farmers, and of good character, for settlement on Mr Ward's lands in the district of Marietta.—These enterprising young men, together with about fifty that sailed from Greenock on the 4th of April last, with the same intention, are but the van of a much larger colony that are winding up their concerns in the mother-country, and will shortly be transplanted into the fertile vale of Ohio. This will be no small advantage to our common country, while it will be gratifying to our sister state of Ohio, virtuous men being a real acquisition to any land. Mr. Ward, who has spent the last twelve months in Europe, but much the greater part of his time in Scotland, making known to the farming class of that country the many advantages of the flourishing state of Ohio, is of opinion that 1000 individuals will have left North Britain for the vale of the Ohio, from the 1st of April to the 1st of October next, and that each succeeding year 2000 will follow their example. We may safely calculate, that each person will bring 200 dollars, which will add to the capital of Ohio for 1823 the sum of 200,000 dollars, and for each succeeding year the sum of 600,000 dollars; and as industrious good men are more valuable than money, we may double those sums in behalf of this state.

This is certainly very pleasing in the prospective, and we believe there is very little doubt of its being fully realized. Our country bids every virtuous foreigner a hearty welcome; and no people make better citizens than the Scotch; They are moral, religious, sober, and industrious, almost to a proverb: and the least we can say is, that he who has spent much time and money solely for the purpose of making the advantages of his country known to European farmers, is deserving well of his fellow citizens.

Copper Mines of Lake Superior.

As we have abundance of copper on our side of Lake Superior, the following passage will be read with interest in Canada, as well as in the United States.

[From the Detroit Gazette.]

Extract of a letter to one of the Editors, dated Mackinaw, July 17th

Dear Sir,—I have just returned from a journey of ten days to Pauwayteeg village, at the Sault Ste Marie. Many improvements have been made since last season. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Schoolcraft there, and of examining his very extensive collection of mineralogical and geological specimens, and of "Indian curiosities."

He has just obtained through the Indians, from the east fork of the Tenaugnon river, the largest mass, (except one) of native copper which I have ever seen. It weighs forty-two pounds avoirdupois. On examining it critically, he discovered in several parts of it points of native silver. This is the first native silver found in this region. A vein of copper ore has also been discovered on the south shore of Lake Superior, on a point of land, and just at the water's edge. It is reported to be extensive. Mr. S. has in his possession many specimens of this ore; and the same kind is stated by Professor Cleaveland to yield seventy-five per cent.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—Greeting:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

In TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, the twenty third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON,
Sec'y.

J. B. Robinson, Att'y Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Know that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain Townships, for encouragment thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

A Tract of Land, of prime quality, and well watered, consisting of Four Hundred Acres, with nearly Thirty Acres Cleared, and a good Log

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Dwelling House and Barn erected thereon. The above Land is situate in the Township of Albion, within thirteen lots of the Gore of Toronto, about twenty-five miles from York, and within one mile and a half of a Grist Mill. This property is most desirable for a few families of Emigrants, who wish to settle together, and will be sold entire or separate, as may be agreed on. It is also one of the best situations in this Province for a Distillery, as it is in the heart of a good settlement, and no Distillery at present within a circle of eighteen miles. The above Property will be sold dog cheap for Cash, or merchantable wheat, delivered at York, and the purchaser can be accommodated with provisions on the premises sufficient for one or two families for one year. If not sold in a few weeks, it will be let to any industrious settler, on shares, or for clearing a certain quantity of land yearly.

CANADIAN'S RIGHT

ENGLISHMAN'S.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN A BARRISTER AT LAW AND A JURYMAN.

SETTING FORTH THE ANTIQUITY, EXCELLENT DESIGN, USE, OFFICE, AND JUST PRIVILEGES OF

JURIES,

By the Law of England.

FIRST WRITTEN

BY SIR JOHN HAWLES, KNIGHT,

SOLICITOR GENERAL TO WILLIAM III.

AS the security of our persons, our reputations, our properties, and our liberties, depends upon Jurors, it can never be unseasonable to inform, or to remind them of their Duties. While they remain ignorant of the nature of their station, they cannot determine with propriety; while they feel not its importance, they will not conduct themselves with spirit. When questions, however, which relate to the welfare of the People, are agitated in a Court of Justice, instructions of this kind become of more than ordinary importance. Errors upon these occasions may be attended with fatal consequences, since powers will be introduced, which may in the end, overturn the constitution

But it is not upon the good intentions of Jurymen only that we must depend. If they should be prevented, either by fraud or force, from discharging the trust reposed in them, their endeavours will avail little to the protection of the subject. Their rights ought, therefore, to be guarded against all attacks, especially as men of great eminence in the law have publickly declared that they have lately been invaded:—and to be defended, they must be understood.

A knowledge, then, of whatever relates to the office of Juries, seems at this time essentially necessary; since from hence alone can arise the proper Execution of its Duties, and the Preservation of its Rights.—To promote this end, the following Pamphlet is now republished. Its character for perspicuity and strength of reasoning, is so well established, that it is needless to enlarge on it here. If it meets with the success which its merit deserves, it will, perhaps, be a principal means of preserving the Trial by Jury, in its full force, to posterity.

Colonial Commerce.

9,178 Passengers; and 376 Vessels, had arrived at Quebec during the present season up to the first of September.

It seems necessary to give another hint to those Clerks of the Peace who neglect sending in the Population-returns of their respective districts—as this paper is sent to every gentleman holding that office, throughout the Province, the plea of ignorance, as to the necessity of this business being attended to, cannot be urged. We must repeat that this general neglect is, at the present moment, not merely an inexcusable, but a DEEPLY CRIMINAL, offence! The Clerks of the Peace have been already informed of the necessity there is to prove the extent of our Population, and of our consumption of imported goods, subject to duty, before our Commissioners can talk to the gentlemen of the Lower Province in that decisive tone it is now necessary to assume. This Province has been, and is, grossly imposed upon, in the respect alluded to, and it is high time that justice was rendered. We are entitled to at least one third and we find the greatest difficulty in realising one fifth share of the import duties; and, it would seem as if our own Clerks of the Peace were engaged in the confederacy against us, since they so obstinately and criminally refuse to send up the necessary documents on which to ground an official statement of the U. C. Population. We must not be guilty, however, of indiscriminate censure—We are happy to be able to make two exceptions—The Clerks of the Peace for the HOME, and the LONDON Districts have made their returns for the present year 1823; but the remainder stand thus:—

The Eastern District,	no return since		1821
Ottawa,	do.	do.	1820
Johnstown,	do.	do.	1821
Midland,	do.	do.	1821
Newcastle,	do.	do.	1822
Gore,	do.	do.	1822
Niagara—no effective return since,			1820!!!
Western,			1821

We hope this second warning will be attended to!

For many years we have been subscribers to BELL'S WEEKLY MESSENGER, a paper of the highest character in England, and one which has secured the respect of all parties—But what are we now to think of that publication, when such idiotic and unprincipled views regarding this country are developed, as those contained in a paragraph quoted amongst our Selections in this day's register? A paragraph that must fill every Canadian reader with astonishment and contempt! Yet, that same writer when descanting on the profligate dismemberment of POLAND, which laid the foundation of so much political iniquity in Europe; or, on the cause of the GREEKS, or of SPAIN, can preach up true patriotism, and give us the doctrines of wisdom—Now; when he talks of an invaluable part and parcel of the British Empire, destined, as it is, to become the right arm of England, he runs wickedly and raving mad! Could we be certain these remarks might reach his eye they should (like the famous ministerial effusions alluded to by Buonaparte), draw blood at every line! all the indignancy of a wounded spirit should be suffered to have vent, and the pen of our resentment should indeed be dipped in gall. As it is, the matter shall rest for a more convenient opportunity, when our opinion of such an abandoned, and idiotic policy shall be forced onto his notice, and, as we would hope upon his conviction, in a manner that must at least command respect.

A time undoubtedly was when ENGLAND, great as she now is, dealt in the horrid traffic of human slavery, even in the slavery of her own and dearest children.—But the law was Roman.*—It was borrowed for a time from a southern region—So foul an exhalation could never rise from the hills and forests of the north, where freedom had her birth, and liberty a throne.

It is remarkable, however, that England owes her name and much of her early renown to this very law—The tale is interesting; and, as it cannot be known to by far the greater part of our readers, we shall be inclined to give it a place next week, for we have not now room—But, whatever may be the degree of nonsense and wrong-headed policy spawned upon us by the great Mr. BELL, we may rest assured in the consolation that Great Britain is not generally blind to her true policy, as it respects this country, and she must be well aware that the Canadians, no matter their origin, or whether native or naturalized—have too high a spirit, and too much of national pride, power, and intelligence, to allow themselves to be bought and sold like slaves in a market!

* See DIONYS. lib. ii c 27, p. 97, wherein is this very singular limitation, "Vendendi filium patri potestas esto. Si pater filium ter venundarit, filius a patre liber esto." The in ther may sell his child, but if he has sold him three times, the child shall be free!

EUSEBIUS has again our thanks.—His last communication will appear in our next.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

Parliament was yesterday prorogued by Commission, his Majesty not deeming it advisable to risk the possible consequence to his health, of going through the fatigue of the ceremony.—The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Harrowby, Earl of Liverpool, and Earl of Westmoreland.

The House of Commons were summoned to the bar at 2 o'clock precisely. The commission for giving the royal assent to certain Bills, and for proroguing the Parliament, was then read, and the several bills having received the royal assent, the Lord Chancellor proceeded to deliver the following speech:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by his Majesty, in releasing you from your attendence in Parliament, to express to you his Majesty's acknowledgements for the zeal and assiduity wherewith you have applied yourselves to the several objects which his Majesty recommended to your attention at the opening of the session.

"His Majesty entertains a confident expectation that the provisions of internal regulation which you have adopted with respect to Ireland will, when carried into effect tend to remove some of the evils which have so long afflicted that part of the United Kingdom.

"We are commanded to assure you that you may depend upon the firm, but temperate exercise, of those powers which you have entrusted to his Majesty, for the suppression of violence and outrage in that country, and for the protection of the lives and property of his Majesty's loyal subjects.

"It is with the greatest satisfaction that his Majesty is enabled to contemplate the flourishing condition of all branches of our commerce and manufactures, and the greatest abatement of those difficulties which the agricultural interest has so long and so severely suffered.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We have it in command from his Majesty to thank you for the supplies which you have granted for the service of the year, and to assure you that he has received the sincerest pleasure from the relief which you have been enabled to afford his people, by a large reduction of taxes.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty has commanded us to inform you that he continues to receive from all Foreign Powers, the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country.

"Deeply as his Majesty still regrets the failure of his earnest endeavours to prevent the interruption of the peace of Europe, it affords him the greatest consolation that the principles upon which he has acted, and the policy which he has determined to pursue, have been marked with your warm and cordial concurrence as consonant with the interests, and satisfactory to the feelings of his people."

Parliament was then prorogued to Tuesday the 30th September.

Present to the King.—A British frigate lately brought to England from India, a present to the king from the Nabob of Oude, of several articles valued at £200,000. Among them is a sword set in diamonds, a belt, a sword knot of diamonds and other costly jewels, with an emerald of great value suspended to it.—This emerald is said to be the largest extant, and nearly the size of an egg. The ship has also brought out a Bird of Paradise alive, it being the first attempt of the kind which has been made with success, and as a present to the Princesses, a bull and cow of a small white breed, which the Hindoos worship.

Admirable reply.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining with great earnestness the doctrine of Vox Populi, Vox Dei, against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy of the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum, and said, "I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."—"Yes, (she replied, mildly,) it cried, 'Crucify him, crucify him!'" A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.—Literary Gazette.

Long Prayers.—A Madrid article announces that prayers of forty hours are continued in all the churches for the deliverance of the King and Royal Family.

Bell's Weekly Messenger of the 7th July says; we have long made up our minds that Canada is not worth the expense it costs us; and that happy would it have been for this country, if it had been given to the United States in the peace of 1784. We should think any minister deserved well, both of the Canadians and of the English, who by mutual consent of the governors and the governed, should get a couple of millions from the Americans in purchase of our sovereignty of that territory."

Repeal of Taxes.—Since 1816, the British government have repealed 22,256,202 pounds of annual taxes. An intelligent London editor adverting to this fact, observes—

"It is quite absurd, therefore, to allege that Great Britain can never go to war again, if occasion and national interests should require it, on account of her financial embarrassment, since the simple reimposition of the above taxes, would enable her to undertake a war upon as large a scale as ever, without the aid of loans."

DANGEROUS ILLNESS OF THE POPE.

The Pope has met with a serious accident.—On the evening of the 6th he fell, in rising from his chair, and fractured the neck of the femoral bone (he was alone at the time), but his cries brought in his attendants, and he was removed to bed. The surgeons had not informed him of the fracture. On the evening of the 7th, he was seized with fever, and on the following day it was reported in Rome that his Holiness was in great danger.

Rome, July 8.—I hasten to communicate the details of a deplorable accident which happened to the Pope on the evening of the 6th inst. His Holiness being left alone, was in the act of raising himself from his chair by placing one hand upon the table and endeavouring with the other to reach a cord attached to the wall for the purpose of support. In this however, he failed, and fell with great violence against the marble floor, between his chair and the table. His head did not strike against it as he fell upon his left side, which had to support the whole weight of the fall

His cries brought several persons to his assistance, by whom he was put to bed. Several convulsive movements showed the violence of the fall. On the first arrival of the surgeons they declared that the thigh bone was broken. This opinion was confirmed at a consultation on the following morning. He passed the night in a very agitated manner, but without fever. His pulse was in an almost natural state. The patient is not aware of his dangerous situation: he has not been told of the fracture.

The Cardinal Gonsalvi hardly leaves the bedside of his Holiness for a moment.

The persons who are in attendance upon his Holiness experience great embarrassment, because, ignorant of his situation, he is constantly expressing his unwillingness to remain in bed.

It is a remarkable coincidence that this accident has happened upon the anniversary of the fatal 6th of July, 1809, when his Holiness was forcibly removed from Rome by Napoleon.

In the night of the 7th his Holiness experienced an attact of fever and the report in Rome this morning is, that he is in the greatest danger.

Fox's foresight.—In one of the speeches of the late Charles Fox, during the debate which arose in Parliament upon the address to the throne on the preliminaries of peace with the French republic, this acute and far-seeing statesman defied all who heard him to produce in the history of the world "a more ACCURSED OBJECT of war than the RESTORATION OF THE BOURBONS," and added. "My undisguised opinion is, that if the coalition for the restoration of the Bourbons had succeeded, the consequence would have been, amongst all the Kings of Europe a perpetual GUARANTEE AGAINST ALL PEOPLE who might be OPPRESSED BY ANY OF THEM in any part of the world." Have not these words at this day the air of prophetic inspiration? One would think that the eye of this minister had actually seen the Congress of Verona.

She has no head, and cannot think—no heart, and cannot feel!—When she moves, it is in wrath—when she pauses, it is amid ruins; her prayers are curses—her God is a demon—her communion is death—her vengeance is eternity. Her decalogue is written in the blood of her victims—and if she stops for a moment in her infernal flight, it is upon some kindred rock to whet her vulture fang —and replume her wing for more sanguinary desolation.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

Bell's Weekly Messenger of the 7th July asserts that the British Cabinet had determined, notwithstanding the proceedings of the cortes at Seville, that Sir William A'Court should proceed to Cadiz, and there ascertain, by an interview with Ferdinand himself whether he was under restraint, and if it appeared he was, that Sir William should withdraw from the Spanish territory.—E Post.

The defection of Morillo is confirmed, he had hitherto proved one of its most firm and success ul defenders, but it is alleged that the conduct of the Cortes towards Ferdinand had disgusted him, and [illegible] has been forced into Barcelona, the Capital of Catalonia, and a strong fortress on the Mediterranean. The operations for its blockade have been officially communicated by Marshall Mouncy, and terminated on the 8th and 9th July. Several vigorous rencontres took place during them, and the French, as usual, say they came off victorious.

Pampeluna, St. Sebastian and the other fortresses still hold out.

Cadiz, according to Spanish accounts is well provided with all necessaries, and the inhabitants, although blockaded, continue to entertain the strongest enthusiasm for its defence.

Upon the whole it cannot but be doubted how this struggle will terminate. That the opposition is still considerable, no better proof can be given than the constant march of French troops towards Spain, and the transportation of provisions and warlike stores into the country; that there should have been found patriotic feeling enough, and such strong indignation at the principles on which this aggression is founded, as to have produced such energy when under such despoiding circumstances, and after such a period of ill successes, is extraordinary, and redound, we think, with honor to the character and the high mindedness of the Spanish nation.

CORUNNA. [Galicia] JULY 11. This place is capable of resisting the attack of 20,000; and the factious are daily turning liberal. The Military commanders of Santiago, Orense, and Vigo, have denounced MORILLO; and declared their determination to support the Constitution. Gen. QUEROGA has also issued a spirited proclamation in answer to that of Morillo—He accuses M. of unparalleled treason. Has called around him a Junta, assumed the civil and military authority, and had promulgated a number of severe decrees for the defence of the country, the cause of the Cortes, and the Constitution of 1812.

Marshal Mouncey announces, that on the 9th inst. an aid of Count Curial presented to him General de Sarsfield, who declared he came to put his person under the protection of the French arms. He was received with the regard due to his rank and reputation.

Sir Robert Wilson.—A letter has been addressed by Sir Robert Wilson, to the people of Portugal, in which he states that the violence offered him in Braga, on his way to Lisbon, was instigated and excited by the Priests. So violent was the mob, that nothing but the protection of the military saved his life and those of his companions. They were under the necessity of desisting from their intended journey, and of returning to Vigo, in the Spanish territory, under a military escort.

FROM LISBON.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Lisbon, dated July 21:—

"From all our latest accounts Spain rather *look*s up, and strong hopes are entertained of her ultimate success; A Col. Watson and Major Bristo are here. They are from Cadiz, bound to Coruna, to join Sir Robert Wilson. Major B. has been employed in making a treaty with the Spanish Government for Sir R. W. and which was concluded before he left Cadiz. He is of Sir Robert's Staff, and is an elegant man, of fine talents—full of information and zeal. Col. Watson appears to be a plain, judicious gentlemanly man, older than Bristo.—They are very sanguine as to Sir R's raising 8, or 10 thousand men, and in the ultimate success of the Spaniards in supporting their government; but they are a little enthusiastic, some ollowance is to be made in their opinions. They say that unless the French troops near Cadiz receive considerable reinforcements soon, they will be compelled to retire to a greater distance.

The prospects of the Spanish Government in relation to money has improved lately and there is a probability of their succeeding in obtaining sufficient loans.

"Col. Watson and Major Bristo assured me, that if the most intelligent and best friend to the Spanish cause could have been allowed to mark out the proceeding and management of the French Army, he could not have proposed a system more favourable to Spain than had been pursued thus far, by the French Army and their Allies. "the troops of the faith," as the insurgents are called."

BRASILIAN AFFAIRS.

LONDON, July 10.

The Walsingham packet has brought the following details of Lord Cochrane's recent encounter with the Portugues fleet off Bahia —"Lord Cochrane sailed with his squadron from Rio about the last week in March, consisting of a 74 gun ship, a frigate, 2 sloops of war, and 2 schooners, and fell in off Bahia, with the Portuguese fleet, viz. one 74, 2 large frigates, 2 small do 6 armed merchantmen, 1 sloop of war, and 2 schooners. He bore down with his 74, keeping the remainder of his fleet to the windward, and endeavoured to c...t off one or two of the small ships, but the Portuguese fleet kept close, and could not be seperated. His Lordship then passed from one end of the line to the other, engaging each as he came up and passed; all of them endeavoured to avoid him. When he had passed the headmost (the 74) he hauled his wind to join his consort. The Nightingale, brig, commanded by a brave fellow, followed some time after the 74, and also fired a broad-side at almost every ship in the Portuguese line. In one of the ships Lord Cochrane engaged, there were five killed, and forty four wounded. After this affair, his Lordship landed a body of soldiers in the Rio Tauro, near Bahia, with ammunition, field-pieces, &c. It was expected he would be joined about the middle of May by a frigate, a sloop, 2 fire ships and 2 schooners; a ship had arrived at Rio, from Liverpool, with nearly 200 seamen, which he was much in want of. Gen. Labater, who was before Bahia, attacked and defeated a battalion of the Louisianian Legion, and took a great many prisoners. The Bahia lines were too strong for Labater to enter; yet the morning the Walsingham packet left, he was making a general attack from one end of the line to the other.—Generl Madeira had out of all his troops (which had amounted to 20,000) only 2000 doing duty, so great has been the mortality from sickness and the war; they are now on half allowance; and as soon as Lord Cochrane's reinforcements can come up, it is firmly believed they must surrender."

From Bahia and Pernambuco.—We have this morning recieved from our Boston correspondents, (the Editors of the Centinel and Patriot, the following important intelligence from the Brazils, conveyed to Boston in a letter from Pernambuco "On the 1st and 2d of July, Gen Madeira evacuated Bahia and embarked his troops on board the Portuguese men of war and merchantmen, then in the harbor, and immediately sailed. The Brazilian army then took possession of the city. Lord Cochrane, who was cruizing off the harbor, gave chase to the Portuguese and before the 6th succeeded in capturing thirteen of the merchantmen transports, which after disabling, either by starting their water, or cutting away their mainmasts, or taking most of their sails from them, he ordered back to Bahia, or the nearest ports, and continued in chase of the men of war. This account was brought to Pernambuco by the brig of war Bahia, with four large prizes in her charge. Pernambuco was illuminated three nights on receipt of the news. During the stay of the Bahia, she captured by her boats a ship and Brig under the Portuguese colours, and sent them in. Before the brig of war arrived, the Portuguese flag was admitted at Pernambuco.

"It was presumed that the Portuguese fleet intended to stop at Maranham for a supply of provisions, and that Lord C. would succeed in capturing nearly all them. Three English vessels were lying at the Moro with flour, waiting for the fall of Bahia, and permission had been given at Rio to load for that place, but they were under bonds not to go in until it was given up.—The brig Collector, of Salem, arrived at Pernambuco with provisions in sixty days, and immediately sailed again for Bahia."

BATTLE OF BORODINO.

[From the London Literary Gazette]

MEMOIRS OF GENERAL RAPP.

Having introduced the General to our readers, we think they will have sufficient intercourse with him by the end of this paper, to admit of his making his bow.

The following account of the battle of Borodino, is extremely characteristic:

"Night came on. I was in attendance; I slept in Napoleon's tent. The part where he slept was generally separated by a partition of iron from that which was reserved for the aid-de camp in attendance. The Emperor slept very little: I waked him several times to give him in reports and accounts from the advanced posts, which all proved to him that the Russians expected to be attacked. At three in the morning, he called a valet de chambre, and made him bring some punch; I had the honor of taking some with him. He asked me if I had slept well; I answered, that the nights were already cold, that I often been awaked. He said, 'We shall have an affair to day with this famous Koutousow. You recollect, no doubt, that it was he who commanded at Braunau, in the campaign of Austerlitz. He remained three weeks in that place, without leaving his chamber once. He did not even get on horseback to see the fortifications. General Benigsen, though as old as he is more vigorous fellow than he I do not know why Alexander has not sent this Hanoverian to replace Barclay.' He took a glass of punch, read some reports, and added, 'Well, Rapp, do you think that we shall manage our concerns properly to day?'—'There is not the least doubt of it, Sire; we have exhausted all our resources, we are obliged to conquer'—Napoleon continued his discourse, and replied: 'Fortune is a liberal mistress; I have often said so, and begin to experience it.'—'Your Majesty recollects that you did me the honour to tell me at Smolensko, that the glass was full, that it must be drunk off'—'It is at present the case more than ever; there is no time to lose.—The army moreover knows its situation: it knows that it can only find provisions at Moscow, and that it has not more than thirty leagues to go This poor army is much reduced, but what remains of it is good; my guard besides is untouched.' He sent for Prince Berthier, and transacted business till half past five We mounted on horseback; the trumpets sounded, the drums were beaten; and as soon as the troops knew it, there was nothing but acclamations. 'It is the anniversary of Austerlitz —Let the proclamation be read.'

"SOLDIERS

"Let us be the battle that you have so long wished for!—Henceforth victory depends on you; we want her; she will give us abundance of good winter quarters, and a quiet return to our country Behave yourselves as at Austerlitz, at Friedland, at Witepsk, at Smolensko; and let the remotest posterity quote your conduct on this day, and let it be said of you, 'He was at that great battle under the walls of Moscow.'"

"The acclamations redoubled, the troops were incessantly demanding to fight, the action soon began.

"The wings were composed of Italians and Poles; Napoleon acted on the left of the enemy's masses. Beyond this we had no precise information; women, children, old people, cattle, all had disappeared; there was not a person left who could give us the least information. They marched towards the enemy, and broke through them with that force, that impetuosity, of which he had given so many proofs.—We carried the three redoubts which supported the enemy [illegible] which were to contain a bridge in our rear. [illegible] The Russians already crowned the crest of the ditches. The King of Naples sees the danger, flies to the spot, alights from his horse, enters, mounts the parapet; he calls and animates the soldiers. The redoubt is strengthened, the fire becomes terrible, the assailants were not try the assault.—"Some squadrons appear; Murat mounts his horse, charges, routs, the columns scattered over the plain. We retake the intrenchments, and finally establish ourselves in them. This trait of boldness decided the fate of the day.

A new Hydraulic Machine.

A prospectus has been circulated in Paris, of a [illegible] which will, if carried into execution, [illegible] tors, will entirely overturn the present system of hydraulics. They engage to supply a small steam engine, which will raise water to the height of 60 feet, at the rate of 15 quarts per minute. The machine will, it is said, consume but a penny worth of coals in an hour, in which time it will raise 900 quarts to the specified height. It is to cost 600 francs, and to last more than a hundred years. No payment is required until the engine has been tried and gives satisfaction; until it is fixed, and raises the water from the well to the roof of the house, which will thus be secured against the destructive ravages of fire.—The proprietors likewise offer, at a progressive advance, machines which will raise double, treble, and decuple heights, (i. e. 120, 180, or 600 feet,) and thus in infinite progression. They at first concealed their names, and this mysterious conduct excited suspicion: they have since, however made themselves known, and prove to be Messrs. Croissons, brothers, both of them pupils in the Polytechnic school, and one of them a commandant of artillery, whose talents are said, in the Parisian circles, to inspire the greatest confidence.—They keep their discovery a secret, and will not divulge it till they have raised subscriptions for twenty thousand inches of water, according to their mode of calculation.

Manufactory of Diamonds.

It is said that Professor Silliman, whose scientific researches have contributed so largely to the reputation of our country, has made a most important discovery, which will form an era in science, and place his name upon the same roll with that of Franklin. It has long been known that the diamond is composed of carbon, in its pure state, but although diamonds could be converted into carbon, yet none have ever been able to convert carbon into diamonds, until therecent experiments of Professor Silliman. It appears by the last number of his Journal of Science, that, by the power of a philosophical instrument called the deflagrator, invented by Professor Hare of Philadelphia, charcoal, plumbago and anthacite, have been fused and transmuted into diamonds!

N. J. Eagle.

Steam Engines.—It appears that the number of steam engines at present in action in this country may be reckoned at 10,000; that one with another each may be estimated at equal in power to twenty horses; that each horse will do the work of six men, and that consequently the acting powers of our steam engines are equal in effect to 200.000 horses, or 1,200,000 men. If we contemplate this immense accession of strength, much of the wonder that is naturally excited, by comparing the magnitude of the external and the internal capability of Great Britian with its territorial superfices, will vanish; for it will be seen that with a population of about 14,000,000, we are employing an active force that could not be obtained, independently of these means, with double the number. We might further to recollect that the power thus produced is more concentrated, and consequently more efficacious, than it could possibly be under the circumstances, that the capacity of these machines becomes effective in various instances in which human strength could by no possibility be employed, as in draining mines and similar operations. Under this point of view, therefore, the steam engine ought not to be considered not merely in the sight of an ingenious mechanical construction, but as a most gigantic national resource, claiming equally the attention of the philosopher and the political [illegible] See p. 274

Natural History.

In answer to the Query of the Editors of the National Intelligencer we beg leave to inform them that many instances of the kind alluded to below are to be found in Barrington's Miscellanies.—Ed.

Amphibious Birds—A writer in the National Intelligencer has revived the opinion that the water is the place of the winter residence of the Martin and the Ortolan. The sudden disappearance of the Martin in the Autumn, is well known, and it is a very remarkable fact that the place of their winter abode has never been discovered.—The writer in the Intelligencer states, as a fact, that a few years ago a flock of Martins were observed by a person of high standing in society, hovering over, and descending by two's and three's into the bosom of the water. It is also stated that an old resident of Washington, (since dead,) was a witness to this rare sight. The editors ask, "If the water is the abode of the Martin for one half of the year, why has one never been taken from that element by nets, or by any other chance?"

Jasmine.—We are told that a Duke of Tuscany was the first possessor of this pretty shrub in Europe, and he was so jealously fearful least others should enjoy what he alone wished to possess, that strict injunctions were given to his gardener not to give a slip—not so much as a single flower to any person. To this command the gardener would have been faithful, had not love wounded him by the sparkling eyes of a fair but portionless peasant, whose want of a little dowery and his poverty alone kept them from the hymeneal altar.—On the birth day of his mistress, he presented her with a nosegay, and to render the bouquet more acceptable, ornamented it with a branch of jasmine. The Povera Figlia, wishing to preserve the bloom of this new flower, put it into fresh earth, and the branch remained green all the year. In the following spring it grew, and was covered with flowers; it flourished and multiplied so much under the fair nymph's cultivation, that she was able to amass a little fortune from the sale of the precious gift which love had made her; when with a sprig of jasmine in her breast, she bestowed her hand and wealth on the happy gardener of her heart. And the Tuscan girls, to this day preserve the remembrance of this adventure, by invariably wearing a nosegay of jasmine on their wedding day; and they have a proverb, which says, a young girl worthy of wearing this nosegay is rich enough to make the fortune of a good husband.

Sea Serpent Musket proof.—The public curiosity can, at this day, scarcely be excited by accounts of the re-appearance of this animal. He has already been so often described, and all the accounts of his appearance so much resemble each other, that we begin to pass them over as a thing of course. A recent account from Cape Ann, gives us a full length portrait, taken, it would appear, from a near and deliberate inspection, and we do not doubt, given with fidelity. A Mr. Smith, passenger in the sloop Traveller, thus writes. "He represented a row of kegs on the water, as near as any thing I could think of—his motion was vertical, and very slow. I saw him several minutes before he disappeared—he went in very near to the opposite shore from the wharf where we were standing, and then turned and proceeded out to sea. Several boats started in pursuit of him one of which took a gun—they came very near him with their boat, they say as near as ten feet, when he sunk and went directly under their boat; at one time they were so near his tail that a man in the boat struck him with his boat hook.

The men in the boat describe him, as having a flat or snake head, his back appeared straight while under water, nothing of the bunches or row of kegs before described could be discovered; the color of his back was dark brown, and his belly white, and not the least kind of a fin could be discovered—his length, as near as they could judge, and to speak within bounds, was 60 or 70 feet, and as big round as a barrel.—The person in the boat with a gun fired at him seven times, and he declared that in one instance the animal was lying entirely still, and being not more than 20 yards from him, he fired, and plainly saw the ball strike him and glance as though it struck a rock. He was seen afterwards, and remained about the bay for more than two hours, and those persons who saw him, being most of them old experienced fishermen, declared unhesitatingly, that they have never seen any fish before, that in any respect resembles this strange animal."

Description of a white earth of which bread is made. From the German Ephemerides.

In the lordship of Mocsaw, in Upper Lusatia, a sort of white earth is found, of which the poor, urged thereto, no doubt, by the calamities of the wars which used to rage in those parts, made bread. It is taken out of a hill where they formerly worked at saltpetre; when the sun has somewhat warmed this earth, it cracks, and small white globules proceed from it as meal; it does not ferment alone, but only when mixed with meal. M. Sarlitz, a Saxon gentleman, informed us, that he has seen persons who, in a great measure, lived upon it for some time; he assures us, that he procured bread to be made of this earth alone, and of different mixtures of earth and meal, and that he even kept some of this bread by him upwards of six years: he further says, a Spaniard told him, that this earth is also found near Gironne, in Catalonia.

Singular Phenomenon.—The following has been sent to us with a real signature:—"In eating an egg on Sunday morning, 30th ult. to my great surprise I found a small silver coin, which I believe to be a Dutch piece, value two stivers, adhering to the white of the egg. It was evidently interposed between the yolk and the albumen. The shell was discolored in that part where the coin was situated. The egg was laid that morning, and the servant says there was no difference in the appearance of that and the others previous to their being boiled. I had eaten the greater part of it before I discovered the piece; it had not affected the flavour."—British Literary Gaz.

BY ALLAN CUNNINGHAM

Here's to the lake, and the hill, and the heather,
The kit, and the plaid, and the bonnet and feather;
The dirk, the claymore, and the martial pipe charming
The clans to the dance, and the charge, and the storming;
Lads who cry onward!—but never cry parley!
Bold Scottish lads, wi' their bannocks o' barley.
In Brussels of late, when the wine cup was glowing,
The trump sung at midnight while music was flowing;
The Frenchman's plumes waved o'er his war-horses foaming;
Aud "Britain,"—he shouted,—"thy day's at the gloaming!"
Who was't cried "Scotland!" and rushed on them rarely?
Who but the lads wi' the bannocks o' barley!
And France, when thy best blood was flowing like water,
Amid the fierce onset, the chase and the slaughter;
When matrons were wailing, and maidens were weeping,
And death the rich harvest of heroes was reaping,
Who spared thee at Laon, and saved thee at Marli?
Who but the lads wi' the bannocks o' barley?
Merry are they as the bird of the forest,
Steadfast are they when the trial is sorest;
Their pipes playing proudly, their flags flying gaily,
Success, like the sun, comes and shines on them daily:
On all who gainsay them the raven feeds rarely.—
Here's to the lads wi' the bannocks o' barley!
Dream ye I dare not sing proudly and prouder?
Wake a martial strain more, and sing louder and louder
Of Cluny, Clanranald, Glengary, and Airly,
Lochiel, and the lads who drew claymore for Charley!
They fought as none fought—they rued it as sairly!
So here's to the lads wi' the bannocks o' barley!—

An Ordination was held yesterday in the Cathedral Church of this city, when the Rev. Mr. Alexander Neil Bethune was ordained Deacon by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese. We understand this gentleman is appointed to Grimsby in Upper Canada.

Singular Accident in New-Brunswick.

A few days since, a young man of the name of Smith, was going from the South Branch of the Oromocto towards Shin Creek, carrying a pack with provisions to a camp where a party which he belonged to were lumbering; in following a spotted line through the woods, in a very thick alder swamp about noon discovered, at a distance of four rods before him, an animal of a dark colour, coming directly towards him. Not being armed, and taking it for a bear, he instantly made for a tree, and had got up about 12 feet when the creature approached it. Having a jack knife, he immediately cut loose the provision in hopes that its attention would be attracted therewith; but not appearing to notice it, it sprang from the ground, and at once gained the feet of its victim, tearing off both shoes with part of the right heel. Several times it ascended a tree about six feet from that in which Smith was, and from thence leaped on its object, tearing the flesh from his legs and right arm in a shocking manner, endeavouring each time to pull him down to the ground. The last attempt it made, Smith gave it two wounds with his knife in its neck, and which is probably the means that prevented the animal attempting further violence, as it then disappeared. The cries of the suffrer were heard by the party in the camp, (which was distant only half a mile from the spot where he was attacked) who instantly followed the sound, and carried their lacerated comrade there. He has since been removed to Town for Medical attendance, with but faints hopes of recovery.—Royal Gazette.

We republish the following for the sake of inquiring into the truth of the statement; and we shall feel ourselves greatly indebted to any one who can give respectable confirmation of the particulars Ed.

✓ REMARKABLE CIRCUMSTANCE.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman of respectability to the Editor of the Upper Canada Herald, dated York, August 18, 1823.

"John Hawe, lived near the Humber, had a favourite dog, which for some days was observed to grow sickly, and his body swelled by degrees, and at last he refused all kinds of food. The swelling encreased, and something appeared to be continually moving in his inside. In a few days after this the dog died, and was opened in the presence of several persons, whose veracity I have no reason to doubt. When the body were found six large snakes alive, from 4 to 6 feet in length, and part of an old one, which had grown to an uncommon size—about one half of the latter was in a state of putrefaction. I am also assured that they collected from the dog's entrails as many eggs in a mass as would have filled the crown of a hat. The live snakes, which resembled long pieces of flesh, did not attempt to escape, but twisted themselves together, and so were killed. I much regret that I was not on the spot—for I might have given you a more accurate statement; so much however for the manner of fact, which I hope may attract the attention of the curious, and be the means of calling forth some observations of naturalists on this most subtile of reptiles—the snake. How the old one enlarged the dog I leave for elucidation, as I must confess that a circumstance so peculiar baffles all conjecture on my own part.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereon to do as may seem necessary, and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty-third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

J. E. ROBINSON, Att'y. Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been with held from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of the date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within the Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

THE PORT HOPE HOTEL

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of PORT HOPE, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick. Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village near the bridge.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed-rooms.—The Kitchen is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 40 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to John Brown, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 t-t.

ENGLISHMAN'S.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN A BARRISTER AT LAW AND A JURYMAN.

SETTING FORTH THE ANTIQUITY, EXCELLENT DESIGN, USE, OFFICE, AND JUST PRIVILEGES OF

JURIES,

By the Law of England.

FIRST WRITTEN

BY SIR JOHN HAWLES, KNIGHT,

SOLICITOR GENERAL TO WILLIAM III.

AS the security of our persons, our reputations, our properties, and our liberties, depends upon Jurors, it can never be unseasonable to inform, or to remind them of their Duties. While they remain ignorant of the nature of their station, they cannot determine with propriety; while they feel not its importance, they will not conduct themselves with spirit. When questions, however, which relate to the welfare of the People, are agitated in a Court of Justice, instructions of this kind become of more than ordinary importance. Errors upon these occasions may be attended with fatal consequences, since powers will be introduced, which may in the end, overturn the constitution.

But it is not upon the good intentions of Jurymen only that we must depend. If they should be prevented, either by fraud or force, from discharging the trust reposed in them, their endeavours will avail little to the protection of the subject. Their rights ought, therefore, to be guarded against all attacks, especially as men of great eminence in the law have publickly declared that they have lately been invaded:—and to be defended, they must be understood.

A knowledge, then, of whatever relates to the office of Juries, seems at this time essentially necessary; since from hence alone can arise the proper Execution of its Duties, and the Preservation of its Rights.—To promote this end, the following Pamphlet is now republished. Its character for perspicuity and strength of reasoning, is so well established, that it is needless to enlarge on it here. If it meets with the success which its merit deserves, it will, perhaps, be a principal means of preserving the Trial by Jury, in its full force, to posterity.

Editorial Commentary.

Referring to our Collections of ancient Literature for the story alluded to in our Commentary of last week, we find it rather too lengthy for a full insertion in this place; yet, being unwilling wholly to disappoint those of our readers who are looking for it, we shall here quote that part only which is most interesting (as accounting for the first introduction of Christianity into Britain through the slavery of her children) and refer the more inquisitive to honest old RALPH HOLINSHED for the rest.

"It is recorded by divers writers, that the first occasion whereby GREGORY was moved thus to send AUGUSTINE (the Saint) into this land rose by this meanes. It chanced whilest the same GREGORY was as yet but Arch deacon of the See of Rome, certaine young boyes were brought thither to be solde out of Northumberlande, according to the customable use of that country, insomuche that as we have in our time seene, (saith Will: of Malmesbury.) the people of that province have not yet doubted to sell away their neere kinsfolke for a small price When those children whiche at that time were brought from thence to Rome, had by reason of their excellente beauties and comely shape of limmes and body, turned the eyes in manner of all the Citizens to the behold ing of them, it fortuned that GREGORY also came amongst others to beholde them, and when hee considered and well viewed their fayre skinnes, their sweete visages, and beautiful bushes of their bright and yellow heares, he demanded out of what region or land they came, unto whome answere was made, that they were brought out of Britayne, the inhabitants of whiche country were of the like beautifull aspect:—then he asked whether the men of that country were Christians, or as yet entangled with blind heathenish errors, whereunto it was answered, that they were not christened, but followed the Religion of the Gentiles, whereat GREGORY fetchyng a deepe sigh, sayd: oh, alas, that the author of darknesse doth as yet possesse men of so bright some countenances, and that with the grace of suche faire shining visages, they beare about minds voyde of inward grace.—He demanded againe by what name the people were called, and answere was made, that they war called Angli, that is to say Englishmen —and worthily (saith he) for they have angels faces, and such as ought to be made fellow heires with angels in heaven.—Then asked he the name of the province from whence they were brought, and it was tolde him they were of Deira It is well, sayd hee, they are to be delivered de ira Dei, that is to say, from the ire and wrath of GOD, and called to the mercy of CHRIST our LORD —What name (sayde he) hath the King of that province, whereunto answere was made that he was called Alla*, whereupon alluding to the name, he said, that Alleluia ought to be sung in those partes to the praise and honor of GOD the creator, and hereupon comming to BENEDICT the first of that name as their Bishop of Rome, hee required him that some learned men might be sent into England to preach the Gospel unto the Englishmen, offering himself to be one of the number: &c. &c."†

* Most probably the Saxon Ella.—ED.

† This account, which is not doubted, would seem utterly to destroy the credit of JOSEPH of Arimathea's having been in England, preaching the Gospel—which is much insisted on by the Monkish writers, some of whom even pretend that ST. PAUL was once in Britain.—Ed.

Our readers will find a highly interesting document in our columns for this Week, in the shape of a Proclamation from the Prince Regent of England—"and we are happy and excellent fruits of having given an English education, at Oxford, to the Princes of Persia, one of whom is now represented by MAHOMED SAUUL at the British Court. The French used every art to prevail on the Persian Monarch to send the Princes, his sons, to France; but, the preference was given to England, and we now begin to see the happy consequences.—If any language bids fair to be universal it is that of England. It is rapidly spreading in every quarter of the globe, and a monument, as lasting as the world itself, will be thereby erected to the immortal glory of our beloved country.—

"The Queen of the Isles—the Gem of the Ocean"!

We have inserted, at some length, an account of the present state of the settlement in Van Diemen's Land, in order that a comparison, so greatly in favor of CANADA as it must be, may be drawn.

We have received the communication from MR. WARD, Clerk of the Peace for the Newcastle District, and are sorry that his feelings should have been hurt by our remarks on the general neglect of other Clerks of the Peace, being well aware that he is usually exceedingly attentive to the duties of his office; and, that he is, in other respects, a worthy and highly respectable character. But, we can again assure him that his return of the Population of Newcastle for 1823 has not come to hand.

Supposing that electioneering addresses and squibs could not be very interesting to persons at a distance, or far from the immediate scene of action, we forbore publishing those in behalf of MR. FOTHERGILL, as a candidate for the honor of representing the county of Durham in the next Provincial Parliament, in the columns either of the Gazette or Register. But we are obliged to take this method, (as the most ready and effectual means of conveying the intelligence to the flying little lawyer of Port-Hope) of assuring George STRANGE BOULTON, that if he can halt in his rapid flight, and await MR. F's arrival, he will be speedily convinced how far his postscript to the miserable effusion of meanness, folly, and falsehood, he has left behind him for publication (during his absence!!) is taken as personal—As to the wretched performance itself a proper answer will be immediately sent to those whom it is intended to abuse.—

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Botany Bay.—A petition from a body of convicts in New South Shetland, has been presented to the House of Commons. The petition was signed by 7556 individuals, and stated that they were the persons through whose labour and industry the colony had been chiefly cleared and brought to its present state of prosperity; that they had in their possession 29,000 acres of cultivated land, and 212,000 acres of pasture; that they were possessed of 42,926 head of cattle, 174,000 sheep, 2415 houses in towns, 215 colonial vessels, and a capital amounting in the whole to one million. The petitioners had been manumitted in consequence of a power expressly sent to the Governor for that purpose; they had imagined themselves restored to all their rights by the commission, until, in consequence of a determination of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, it had been held that in consequence of a laches not their own, of a negligence which belonged to the public departments of the States, in not issuing a general pardon, one of the conditions of the Act of Parliament had not been complied with, and they had been declared to be attainted felons although they had been for many years in the full enjoyment of the rights of freemen.—Since that time they had no right to sue or to be sued, or enjoy any of the advantages belonging to members of society. The petitioners prayed that the House would take into consideration the condition in which they were placed in consequence of this state of the law, and afford them such relief as their situation and circumstances deserved.

Important Case.—A case of considerable interest was decided at Philadelphia on the 21st of August. One Short, an Irishman, who was said to have committed murder on the person of James Trimble, in the county of Tyrone, in Ireland, was detained to stand his trial by virtue of a warrant of a justice of the peace for the state. Before the hearing the prisoner was rescued by the crowd, but it appeared in evidence that it was against his will, and that he subsequently surrendered himself voluntarily. Chief Justice Tilghman delivered an elaborate opinion on the subject, and decided that no warrant of a justice of the peace, even on sufficient evidence that the crime has been committed, was good in such a case without authority from the state, and ordered the prisoner to be discharged.

Ireland.—The affairs of Ireland are said to be in a more favourable condition at present than for some time past; and to promise future tranquility. Many of the accounts of disturbances have been exaggerated.—The notorious CAPTAIN ROCK had been apprehended by the country people in the county of Carlow. His real name is MAGLE.

The Greek news is favourable. The Greeks still hold the advantages they have obtained. The Turks seem inclined to negociate.

The Portuguese Government has applied for a copy of the Dutch Constitution.

The inhabitants of Thessaly have revolted against the Turks.

LONDON, July 11.

Vice Admiral Sir L. W. Halstead, K. C. B. has been appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Jamaica station, in the place of Com. Owen. The Isis, of 50 guns, is fitting in the River for his reception.

The Aboukir, of 74 guns, lying at Sheerness, and the Vengeur, at Chatham, are ordered to be immediately fitted as receiving ships.

CHATHAM, July 22.—The order for fitting out the ships in the Medway, upon the war establishment, was received here on Saturday. They consist of four flag ships, and some smaller vessels. Such is the hurry for the equipment of the Revenge, of 74 guns, Admiral Sir B. H. Neale, fitting for the Mediterranean, that the men of the preventive service are to be immediately drafted into her to complete her compliment.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

The following fact is given in the London Courier, under the Naples head of 1st of July.

On the appearance of the English vessels of war Roachefort and the tender schooner, off Palermo, the populace, who had not seen their old friends for a long time, began to run about the Marina, the Starda Casaia, &c. crying out "long live our master, the British!" These exclamations flew from mouth to mouth—a numerous crowd assembled, and when a boat from the English ship touched shore, they rushed on it, seized the sailors, and after embracing them as tenderly endeavoured to carry them through the city in triumph. The Authorities dreading a tumult, the Austrian garrison was drawn out; the people were seen marching in large troops with tattered remnants of British flags. Admiral Moore very prudently did not go on shore, and by the next day, though not without difficulty, and a considerable number of Arrests, tranquility was restored.

Felo de Se.—The Act relating to the interment of persons found felo de se has received the Royal Assent. No more persons committing suicide are to be buried in a cross road.

An old travelling trunk, which had for more than twenty years been used in the tool house of a gentleman's garden, some few miles from Lewes, as the depository of seeds for the use of the gardener, was a few weeks ago accidentally discovered, containing 368 guineas which by the secret contrivance of two drawers, must have been long concealed, as the guineas, we understand, were principally coined in the reign of Charles and James.

Live Frog in a Stone.—On the 17 June, as some workmen were employed at the new Quay, Watestreet, Manchester, hewing the rock in the river, for the purpose of rendering it of a sufficient depth to admit Mess. Brettargh and Co's flats up the quay, they found a frog alive in the solid stone, 4 feet from the surface of the rock, which was two feet under water, and about 4 feet from the Bank. It did not, as is usual with reptiles found in such situations, die on being exposed to the air, but is still living.

Return of Lord Hastings.—The Marquess and Marchioness of Hastings have arrived in England. It is stated that the meeting between his Majesty and the noble Marquess was most affecting, and exhibited all the warmth of a sincere and long tired friendship.

Yesterday was landed at the London Docks from on board the ship St. Lawrence from Quebec, a man charged with the murder of Major Goring. The prisoner, it appears, had taken his passage in a vessel bound for North America a few days after the perpetration of the horrid deed; and notwithstanding she had a very quick passage out, information had previously been received, together with a description of the parties suspected, upon which the prisoner was lodged in jail until the arrival of witnesses from Ireland to identify his person.

Powerful Organs.—The Organ in York Minster is now completed. It is the largest and most complete in Great Britain. The total number of stops is 52.—Pipes 3254.—There are three sets of keys, viz.—one for the great nave organs, one the choir organ, and one for the swell, exclusive of pedals. There are movements for enabling the performer to play two or three sets of keys at once; or to detach the great nave organ; also to play the keys of the great choir organs, with the pedals in addition to the pedal pipes. The Harrlem organ, which is the largest in Europe, contains sixty stops, being eight more than that of York Minster.

Marshal Soult.—The celebrated Marshal Soult and his Son are on a tour through England.

It has been decided that Lord Douglas has failed to make good his claim to the right of bearing the Scottish Crown when the King is in Scotland. The Duke of Hamilton retains the honour.

Death of Beauharnais.—The death of Prince Eugene de Leuchtemberg. (Eugene Beauharnais,) by apoplexy, after a long and painful illness, is mentioned under the Turin head of the 1st May. It is the daughter of Eugene that has been recently espoused by the Crown Prince of Sweden, son of Bernadotte.

Architecture.—A fine collection of architectural casts from Rome, have been purchased by Sir Thomas Lawrence for the Royal Academy.

Remarkable.—A complete carcase of a horse, in a standing position, was lately found in England, in Enclesfield peat moss, where it must have been some centuries. The animal was unshod, and by the teeth about four years old.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

Spanish Affairs appear to be brightening.—Accounts received at Lloyd's from Corunna, dated the 18th July state, that "up to that period, the attempts of the French upon Corunna had been repulsed, with considerable loss, and their advanced troops were retreating."

The English papers hail the bold and successful resistance of Sir Robert Wilson at Corunna, as an auspicious omen of Spain, to use the words of Mr. Canning, "coming triumphant out of the contest."

From the Philadelphia National Gazette.

We have a file of the 'Spanish Gazette,' the government paper, published at Cadiz, as late as the 20th July, inclusive; more recent, we believe, than has been elsewhere received. Down to this period, the Cortes appear to have been engaged in determining questions of public economy, passing resolutions of thanks to meritorious officers, and framing a vigorous plan of administration, without any symton of alarm or discord in reference to the designs of their enemy. The Gazette of the 20th, contains the Constitutional account of the loss of the fortress of Tortosa. Its commander furnishes the details of the intestine treason by which he was supplanted, and the manner in which he escaped with about 500 men. The information given from Barcelona, dated towards the end of June, testifies the prevalence of the liveliest enthusiasm for the cause of the Cortes throughout Catalonia and asserts that great havock was made of the French in the two principal actions between the troops of Mina and those Donnadieu. In Barcelona, a large subscription had been made for the clothing of the soldiery, and the ladies were unremittingly employed in sewing shirts and other vestments for the defender of the country. The despatch of Marshal Moncey, dated Saria, July 11th, acknowledged that a sally was made from Barcelona, the day before, with about 2000 men, who had an engagement at Sarin, for about two hours, with the French sharp-shooters, and who then marched towards Garcia, and encountered another portion of the French force. Very few, according to his statement, were killed on either side; but the movements of the constitutionalists indicated confidence and spirit

On the 17th of July, an extra Gazette was issued at Cadiz, with the official account of a reconnoissance made on the morning of the 16th, by the army of the Island of Cadiz, called the army of Reserve, on all the points of the enemy's line.

"The entrenchments and parapets of the first line of the besiegers," say the Spanish General, "were occupied by main force by our soldiers, and the resistance of the enemy, which was fruitless, cost him dear. Our troops drove the French before them and continued to advance, trampling on the French dead, until the object of our sally being accomplished, I caused the return to be sounded. It was not expedient to give the enemy time to bring up his cavalry, a kind of force which we want.—Our gun boats rendered the most important assistance by the continued and skilful fire, which they kept up. All the troops maintained the best order and discipline, and displayed the greatest bravery. Col. Cassino, who was severely wounded, and taken by the enemy, was treated with a ferocious barbarity that gives the lie to the pretensions to generosity and nobleness of conduct, which the French advance in their unendacious bulletins."

At the sitting of the Cortes on the 17th July, the Secretary of War stated that though he had not received all the communications necessary to enable him to inform the Cortes with sufficient clearness and precision, of the series of operations on the day before, on the enemy's line, he could nevertheless mention the result of them, and say positively that the number of wounded in the army of reserve was 110, and of the killed from 15 to 20. He then read the report of the general, which we have quoted, and concluded by announcing that the government had ordered a list to be prepared of the individuals who had distinguished themselves in the action, and merited special rewards from the king. There is a postscript to the Extra Gazette of this tenor.

"The government has just learnt that the French acknowledge their losses in this engagement to be five hundred men, while, however they represent materially less, in every point of view, by a more extended and familiar intercourse with Europeans, and especially with those whom he has ever felt pleasure in designating his 'English friends.'

"The undersigned, in thus promulgating the views and wishes of his Prince, in obedience to the positive commands with which he has been honoured, scarcely conceives it necessary to offer any observations upon the assurances given in this paper, as the character of his Royal Highness is well understood, and has been so duly appreciated by the subjects of Great Britain who have for years been domiciled in Persia, and to which many authors both of that and other countries have added their testimony; but for the satisfaction of such individuals as may not have the facility of obtaining information upon this point, the Prince's devoted servant the representative begs leave to state, that his Royal Master has ever been characterized as amiable, just, benevolent, and honourable in the highest degree; though dignified in his deportment, extremely affable; proverbially of liberal, enlightened and magnanimous mind; possessing great intellectual powers, which are nobly applied; a strenuous advocate for pure morality, and religion without bigotry; the friend of the oppressed and needy; unitormly administering strict and impartial justice, but at the same time exercising his high prerogative with the most merciful consideration; ardent in his endeavours to cultivate the mind, and improve the condition of all classes of his subjects, as far as the circumstances in which he is placed will admit; in the word he may be said in truth, that he is pre eminently distinguished for every virtue that is estimable in civilized society, or that can adorn and dignify the Monarch or the man

"MAHOMED SAUHL

"No. 25 Great Coram Street, London, July 8."

[On the above singular paper, a London paper remarks —"For the general interests of this country, we need not say how desirable it might be to encourage the migration of some of her most enterprising citizens to a state at present so liable to an influence not the most friendly to the British nation. With regard, however, to the individuals themselves who may feel disposed to act upon these offers, we shall not risk any judgement at all. To plunge at once into the heart of Asia—to exist under a despotism, of the unlimited nature of which there is no model to be found at this moment throughout Christendom, and of which there can be no likeness until the Holy Alliance shall have achieved the consummation of its benevolent schemes—to be placed by the fierce and unchengeable Mahometan next in the order of degradation to the Guebre, the most vile of created beings—these perhaps may be tests of constance too severe for an English spirit. The Prince, to be sure, is much lauded by his Ambassador; but who and what will be the successor of Abbas Mirza?]

BATTLE OF BORODINO.

[From the London Literary Gazette.]

MEMOIRS OF GENERAL RAPP.

"General Compans had just been wounded; I was to take the command of his division. It made a part of the corps d'armee of Marshal Davoust. It had already taken one of the intrenched positions of the enemy; it had also suffered much. I consulted, on my arrival, with Marshal Ney, whose right I supported. Our troops were in confusion, we rallied them, I supported. Our troops were in confusion, we rallied them, we rushed headlong on the Russians, we made them retire their success. Neither discharges of cannon nor musketry could stop us. The infantry, the cavalry, charged with fury from one extremity of the line to the other. I had never before seen such carnage. We had inclined too much towards the right; the king of Naples remained alone, exposed to the havoc of the batteries of Semiankow. He had nothing but cavalry; a deep ravine separated him from the village; it was not easy to take it, but it was necessary to do so under pain of being swept away by the grape shot. General Belliard, who only perceives a screen of light cavalry, conceives the design of driving it off and moving by the left on the redoubt. 'Run to Latour Maubourg,' Murat said to him; 'tell him to take a brigade of French and Saxon cuirassiers, to pass the ravine, to put all to the sword, to arrive at full gallop, at the back of the redoubt, and to spike all the cannon.' He should fall, let him return to me and do his work well. You shall place a battery of forty pieces of cannon and a part of the reserve to protect the retreat.' Latour Maubourg put himself in movement, routed, dispersed the Russians, and made himself master of the works. Friant came up to occupy them. All the reserve passed, and established itself on the left of the village. There remained a last retrenchment, which took us in flank and commanded our position. The reserve had taken one, it thought that it could take another. Caulincourt advanced, and spread far and wide confusion and death.—He falls suddenly on the redoubt, and gets possession of it. A soldier hidden in an embrasure stretched him dead. He slept the sleep of the brave; he was not witness of our disasters.

"Every thing was in flight; the fire had ceased, the carnage had paused. General Belliard went to reconnoitre a wood situated at some distance. He perceived the road covered with troops and convoys. If they had been intercepted, all the right of the enemy's army had been taken in the segment in which it was placed. He came and informed Murat of it. Ren and give an account of it to the Emperor,' said the Prince. He went, but Napoleon did not think the moment come. 'I do not see sufficiently clear on my chess board; I expect news from Poniatowski. Return, examine, come back. The General returned, indeed, but it was too late—the Russian Guard was advancing; Infantry, cavalry, all the artillery remained. Friant was ordered to attack. The general had only time to collect a few pieces of cannon. 'Grape-shot, grape shot, and nothing but grape shot,' said he to the artillerymen. The fire began; its effect was terrible; in one instant the ground was covered with dead. The shattered columns was dissipated like a shadow. It did not fire one shot. Its artillery arrived a few moments after; we got possession of it. The battle was gained, but the firing was still terrible. The balls and shots were pouring down by all sides. In the space of one hour, I was struck four times, first with two shot rather slightly, then with a bullet on the left arm, which carried away the sleeve of my coat and shirt close to the skin. I was then at the head of the 61st regiment, which I had learned to know in Upper Egypt. There were a few officers present who were there; it was rather singular to meet here. I soon received a fourth wound; a ball struck me on my left hip and threw me headlong from my horse—it was the twenty second. I was obliged to quit the field of battle; I informed Marshal Ney of it, his troops were mixed with mine.

"General Dessaix, the only general of that division who was not wounded, succeeded me a moment after he had his arm broken: Friant was not wounded till afterwards.

"I was dressed by the surgeon of Napoleon, who also came himself to visit me—I left them, always your turn.'—How are things going on?—Sire, I believe that you will be obliged to make your guard charge.—I shall take good care not to do so. I do not wish to see it destroyed. I am sure to gain the battle without taking a part.' It did not charge in effect, with the exception of thirty pieces of cannon, which did wonders.

"The day ended; 50,000 men lay on the field of battle. A multitude of generals were killed and wounded; we had forty disabled. We made some prisoners, took some pieces of cannon; this result did not compensate for the losses which it had cost us."

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

The liberty of the Press being of such vast importance to the moral and political concerns of a free people, it naturally opens an unbounded field for the exercise of those mental powers with which the great Architect of all things has endowed his rational beings. The art of printing comenced a mighty revolution in human affairs, the full extent of which could never be complete while the hand of arbitrary power rested on the head of this darling child of genius. In the classic land of liberty" our forefathers gave to the Press that rank to which their wisdom found her intitled, conscious that she would be what she is, the Palladium of Libery—the Ark of safety for the rights of posterity;—and the rallying point for public and private virtue, the establishment of political freedom elsewhere, and the extension of the greatest of human blessings—the knowledge of the gospel of the merciful Saviour of the World.

Commensurate in importance with the liberty of the Press, are the duties of the conductor of a public paper, as respects their faithful and judicious exercise both to the community, the laws which protect him, and the recognition of those eternal principles that are the only basis on which human po lity can find firmness and stability.

But let us for a moment consider the qualifications and conduct necessary to the Editor of a public Journal. As a good share of general information is essentially requisite in any profession, so it is eminently in this; not only because of its general importance, but also for the diversified subjects to which his attention must constantly be turned He should possess a large share of that goood sense and elasticity of mind that would enable him to glean the golden earings of passing circumstances; and, as curiosity is finding its gratifications, mingle the lessions of virtue and religion in the mental repast; so that while the mind is digesting the food thus offered, it may extract the nourishing chyle of sound principles, and rational incitements to praiseworthy pursuits. That discriminating quality should also be assisted with a competent stock of useful knowledge gained by actual observation; and the experience of ripened manhood should be ready to systematize the loose variety, out of which the weekly emission is compounded. He should be the tool of no party, nor surrender the faculty of judging dispassionately, as far as the nature of things will permit, for no consideration whatever. The spirit of angry disputation should find no place in his bosom; and a consciousness of human frailty should mark his inauguration with the shining virtues of meekness, gentleness and humility, joined to prudence, discretion and firmness. The dignity of his station imposes upon him an awful responsibility, well calculated to make him pause at the threshold of office, and to proceed with cautious circumspection in every step it may be his duty to tread. Entered thereon, he should regard himself as one of the organs of political, moral, and religious truth—as one of the pillars that support the fabric of human society, and look to the dictates of the one, and the interests of the other, as the leading stars of all his actions.

As prescience belongs not to man, in commenting upon passing events, he cannot be expected to unfold the mysteries of futority; so he should be modest in conjecture; and where extensive knowledge and correct information afford not the means of judging with more than plausibility, leave his readers to make their own comment. If it should fall within the sphere of his duty to point out political or moral delinquency, he should use that candour and moderation which at once speak the Gentleman, the Christian, and the man of sense and feeling. In the one he should preserve that respect for the dignity of Office so strongly recommended in the New Testament; and in reviewing public measures, his object should be rather to correct error, and bestow praise where desarving, than to raise unnecessary alarm, or to deal in the malicious wiles of flattery; keeping in view the fact that no man is infallible, and that consequently imperfection is mingled with every thing human. He never should pounce upon an unfortunate public man with the savage ferocity of merciless vengeance;—and even the guilty he might prefer to pass unmolested, only as it became an official duty to hold him up to the public eye, with the intent of deterring others from the like offences. Private animosity should have no influence over him—and though where self is concerned, it is too apt to claim a hearing, he should turn a deaf ear to the calls of prejudice, and hold the scales of justice with an unwavering hand. If it fell to his lot to lash the votaries of vice and folly, he should treat them as a judicious physician does his patients—and strike deep where more gentle treatment would be ineffectual. He should never drag them into notoriety but for a salutary chastisement to themselves, and a necessary warning to others — not that their writhing, instead of being a feast for a depraved heart, would excite in him that pain a virtuous mind feels on reflecting that this object of disgust and pity is also a human being. Thus he would turn even the ways of wickedness into a solemn lesson of humility, and warn his readers to beware of the dangers that await a life of impiety.

In making Selections for his paper, he would aim to cultivate the public mind, and induce a relish for the refinements of civilized life. But taste alone would not be his object:—he would endeavour to combine usefulness with pleasure, and, as in some of the orders of architecture, exhibit the harmonious union of strength and beauty. He would also never seek to gratify a corrupt taste at the expense of sound principle; nor turn the demagogue of the day in order to raise himself to momentary consequence upon any public commotion. Rather than fan the coals of popular phrenzy to make a readier market for his paper, he would scatter his types to the winds, and dig in the bowels of his mother Earth for a far more honorable subsistence. He might well regard himself, under such a line of conduct, as the deserving candidate for a good share of public patronage;—and he would be content with his reasonable proportion, and scorn the arts of chicanery to enhance his fame or fortune. He would consider popularity as all sensible men do—the changeable breath of the giddy multitude, who too often applaud where there is no merit, and condemn those whose worth and integrity they should venerate, and whose virtues they should be proud to copy after. But he would regard the approbation of the wise and good, and find his best rewards in the calm serenity of an approving conscience. The public, on their part, should consider him their benefactor, and themselves his debtors, and cheerfully contribute to the terms of his mental exertions on their behalf; paying that due respect to sound principle and integrity of conduct, that had ever distinguished his Editorial Labors.

I would attempt, Sir, a sketch of the opposite character; but I cannot turn so soon from the picture which I have been amusing myself, to the contemplation of odious deformity.—I have already trespassed long on your patience.—Besides, if you wish to view the opposite, you need not listen to me—you have a deep drawn original too near home.

LITERATURE.

From the Commercial Advertiser.

We have rarely met with a more singular historical document than that recently published by Count Rostopschin, which has been inserted in our papers. This officer, who acted as governor of the city of Moscow at the time of its capture by Bonaparte in 1812, has been supposed to have ordered the burning of that ancient capital, and by this bold and decisive measure to have given rise to the disastrous and terrible retreat of the French army, which terminated in the destruction of a large portion of the troops of which it was composed, and paved the way for the eventual downfall of that celebrated chieftain. Distressing and destructive as the conflagration of Moscow was, and important as were the consequences which followed it, this officer gained great credit in the world for his energy and decision on the occasion, which was so interesting and so advantageous to his country. But now, after the lapse of ten years, and when the event, with its supposed origin, had become in public estimation materials for history, with a degree of frankness not often to be met with, and a strong appearance of sincerity and candour, he comes voluntarily before the world, and renounces all claim to whatever merit he [illegible] otherwise be entitled.

In a historical point of view this is a very important publication. Having been declared by Bonaparte, in his official letters written on the spot, to be the author of the destruction of Moscow, Count Rostop-chin would have gone down to future generations with all the credit which the world seemed disposed to bestow upon such a distinguished event. But he has, with a degree of disinterestedness not very common, relinquished all claim to credit, and shewn, by a variety of particulars, that it probably proceeded from the voluntary conduct of the few inhabitants who remained in the city after the French had possession of it.

The Popular Superstitions and Festive Amusements of the Highlanders of Scotland—By W. G. Stewart.

We have no opportunity of perusing the new work from which the subjoined extract is taken; but as its appearance may be presumed to excite some degree of local interest, the writer being a young gentleman of this place, we feel pleasure in publishing, though at second hand, the following testimony to the merits of his production.

From the Edinburgh Literary Gazette.

This Book was written by a Highlander of the name of W Grant Stewart, and is really far from being an inferior production. The preface, which is very sensible, and composed with spirit, informs us of the reason and object of the publication. The author mentions the opportunities he had of acquiring information on the subject he writes upon, and though he speaks modestly of his book, it certainly shews that he has availed himself of these opportunities—and ably too. The superstitions and festivals common in the Highlands are well explained and illustrated by amusing stories, which the preface says, have been "almost entirely borrowed from the mouth of the Highland narrator"—The "almost entirely" must admit of considerable latitude of definition, since the Tales are evidently in the words of the author, and partaking of his humour and mode of expression. Part I consists of Ghosts in general—co existent ghosts—intermediate ghosts—and so on. Part II. handles the Fairies, whose "political principles" passions and propensities, &c. are dwelt upon at considerable length. Then we have Brownies—Water Kelpies—Spunkies, and Witchcraft—of whose origin, history, practices, and peculiarities, there is an accurate and humourous description. Then come the Festivals, which are much the same all over Scotland, but of which nevertheless, it was very proper to give an account. We wonder that there is no mention of the best known of all their superstitions, "Second Sight" It is one which is certainly less absurd than any of them; and though exagerated, might, we think, be accounted for on some phenomena of mind, which however minute, have frequently been recorded. There is a curious note to this effect in Southey's Life of Wesley.

Many of the Tales are well known, but are not, on that account, the less proper illustrations. The few stories we will extract, we do not recognize as having seen or heard; and as they have amused us, we trust they will please our readers.

The following illustrates a "General Fairy:"

"Not long since, as a pious clergyman was returning home, after administering spiritual consolation to a dying member of his flock; it was late of the night, and he had to pass through a good deal of uncanny ground. He was however a good and conscientious minister of the Gospel, and feared not all the spirits in the country. On his reaching the end of a Lake, which stretched along the road side for some distance, he was a good deal surprised to have his attention arrested by the most melodious strains of music. Overcome by pleasure and curiosity, the minister coolly sat down to listen to the harmonious sounds, and try what new discoveries he could make, with regard to their nature, and source. He had not sitten many minutes, when he could distinguish the approach of the music, and also observe a light in the direction from whence it proceeded, gliding across the lake towards him. Instead of taking to his heels as a faithless wight would have done, the pastor fearlessly determined to await the issue of the phenomenon. As the light and music drew near, the clergyman could at length distinguish an object, resembling a human being, walking on the surface of the water, attended by a group of diminutive musicians, some of them bearing lights and others of them instruments of music; on which they continued to perform those melodious strains which first attracted his attention. The leader of the banddismissed his attendants, landed on the beach, and afforded the minister the completest opportunity of examining his appearance. He was a little pint-size looking, grey headed man, dressed in the most grotesque habit he had witnessed, and such as led the venerable minister all at once to suspect his real character. He walked up to the minister, whom he saluted with great grace, offering an apology for his intrusion. The pastor returned his compliments, and without further explanation invited the mysterious stranger to sit down by his side. The invitation was complied with, upon which the minister proposed the following questions:—Who art thou, stranger, and from whence? To this question the fairy, with down cast eye, replied, that he was one of those sometimes called "Doune Shee", or men of peace, or good men; though the reverse of this title was a more fit appellation for them;—originally angelic in his nature and attributes, and once a sharer of the indescribable joys of the region of light, he was seduced by Satan to join in his mad conspiracies; and as a punishment for his transgression, he was cast down from those regions of bliss, and was now doomed, along with millions of fellow sufferers, to wander through seas and mountains, until the coming of the Great Day; what their fate would be then, they could not divine, but they apprehend the worst. 'And,' continued he, turning to the minister with great anxiety, 'the object of my present intrusion on you, is to learn your opinion, as an eminent divine, as to your final condition on that dreadful day' Here the venerable pastor entered upon a long conversation with the fairy (the particulars of which we shall be excused for omitting), touching the principles of Faith and Repentance. Receiving rather unsatisfactory answers to his questions, the minister directed the 'Sheech' to repeat after him the Paternoster, in attempting to do which, it was not a little remarkable, that he could not repeat the word 'art,' but 'wert' in Heaven. Inferring from every circumstance, that their fate was extremely precarious, the minister resolved not to puff the fairie up with presumptuous and perhaps groundless expectations. Accordingly addressing himself to the unhappy fairy, who who was all anxiety as to the nature of his sentiments, the reverend gentleman told him that he would not take it upon him to give them any hopes of pardon, as their crimes were of so deep a hue, as scarcely to admit of it. On this the unhappy fairy uttered a shriek of despair, plunged headlong into the loch, and the minister resumed his course to his home.—P. 86—82.

THREE-RIVERS, 2d Sept. 1823.

Singular Phenomenon—On the 28th of last month, about three o'clock in the afternoon, the inhabitants of the village Hayotte, in the parish of Champlain, were alarmed by the following extraordinary occurrence: A tract of land, containing a superficies of 207 arpents, was suddenly moved from a distance of 5 or 6 arpents (about 360 yards) from the water's edge, and precipitated into the river Champlain, overwhelming in its progress barns, houses, trees, and whatever else lay in its course. The earth thus removed dammed up the river for a distance of 26 arpents. The effect was instantaneous, and accompanied by an appalling sound, a dense vapour, as of pitch and sulphor, filled the atmosphere, oppressing those who witnessed this awful convulsion almost to suffocation. A man named Dube, who was on the ground at the time, was removed with it to a considerable distance, and hurried up to the neck; he was extricated from his perilous situation without surviving any serious injury. The course of the river being thus obstructed, the waters swelled to a great height, but must rise 7 or 8 feet more before they can find a passage.

The above named Dube has lost an island of 5 arpents, which he had on the river. Another inhabitant, named Hamelin, has also suffered a loss of land, wheat and hay; and a third, named Francis Cossett, has had his hay and grain destroyed.

The investigation of this singular phenomenon may well engage the attention of the philosophic inquirer. Various causes are at present assigned for it, such as the effect of a volcanic eruption, or an earthquake; and by others it is supposed to have been produced by the water having insinuated itself between the strata of clay and the subjacent bed of sand.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the first day of September next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—Greeting:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the eighteenth day of July last We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the first day of September next, at which time at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you and each of you, that on Thursday the ninth day of October, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament at our town of York, then to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary, and therein fail not.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major-General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this twenty third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Sec'y.

J. B. Robinson, Att'y. Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of resuming any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE OR HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of PORT HOPE, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick, Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the Bridge.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed-rooms.—The Kitchin is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 48 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to JOHN BROWN, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 t—f.

Civil & Commentary.

By some accident the abridged account of the settlement in Van Diemen's Land, noticed in our Commentary of last week, was omitted:—it will now be found in this Sheet.

The Belligerents of the London District will find, by this Register, that our laws are not quite so irrevocable as were those of the Medes and Persians, alluded to by CAPTAIN MATTHEWS: but, notwithstanding our willingness to permit another exchange of shots, it would afford us much greater satisfaction to hear of the parties shaking hands.—What has principally operated in subduing the resolution we had come to, in regard to this dispute, is the conviction that a question of so public a nature, and of so much importance, as the division of a District, and on which information may be required at a distance, should be fairly met. We have understood that COL. BURWELL, the Member, received some censure from his constituents for not bringing the measure forward during the last Session of Parliament; which shews that a deep interest is felt on the subject in that part of the country.—If the effect of TARN's letter is injured by its being published in parts, he must not blame us—but consider the impracticability of publishing so lengthy a communication, at once, in a work of such narrow limits as our own.

The interesting inclosure from MR. WILLSON has been received, and is under consideration.

There is a very amusing account of the hunting of a Whale, in the immediate vicinity of Montreal, giving the rounds of the Newspapers in the Lower Province, for which we have no room (except a short notice) in this sheet, but we shall deem it worthy of preservation in a future number.

HIS EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, has had another opportunity of evincing the goodness of his heart by the exercise of the most enviable, we were very nearly saying the only enviable, prerogative of power, by the reprieve of two criminals under sentence of death at Vittoria.—Many eminent persons have considered the penal code of England, like the laws of Draco, to have been written in blood, and as being impolitely severe.—The right of cutting off but life which we cannot give, in a religious point of view, is highly questionable; and, sure we are, that many punishments, infinitely more severe than that of death may be inflicted.—We yet hope to see the good work commenced by the excellent Sir SAM. ROMILLY, (the general revision and amendment of the penal code) finished according to the desire and hope of all good and enlightened men.

As an answer to the disgraceful address signed G. S. BOUTON, which was published in the last OBSERVER, has been printed on a separate sheet, to be sent with this paper, it may be unnecessary to notice it here, further than by requesting Mr B's opponents, to bear in mind the well known story of MICHAEL SCOTT, the Sorcerer, on his famous mission to Fez. Our counsel like his, has pawed twice. Let them, in the name of common prudence, beware the third Paw!!!—The little man having retired from the field—we have no objection for a while to repose on our arms, having no occasion to go far in search, either of reinforcement or, of ammunition; we have plenty of both at hand, together with some new-invented gas, of a nature most powerful, terrible, and sweeping.

We expected news of great importance from Spain by the last mail, but we have nothing very material, that is new, to offer, GENERAL QUIROGA, with his Staff, had arrived in England, on his way to Cadiz!—It is supposed Coruna has fallen long before this period.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

GEORGE THE FOURTH.

On Saturday week, as his Majesty was passing through Egham in his low phaeton, dressed in a light drab great coat, in company with Lord Francis Conyngham, not one person in 20 recognized him. In going up the middle hill which leads to the cottage, at a walking pace, a remarkable stout man, named Benjamin Hoades, a farmer, who had just come out of a hay field, was standing against his gate, without his coat and waistcoat, and who attracted his Majesty's attention, and caused him to smile. The farmer seeing his Majesty smile at him, good naturedly said, not knowing it was the King, "How do you do, old chap?" The King immediately increased his laugh, when the old farmer replied, "You seem, old chap, to make yourself merry at my expence!" Honest Ben, on inquiring of a neighbour "who that ere gentleman was?" felt much suprised on being told it was the King! "Be that as it may," said Ben, "he seems to be a jolly good natured fellow for all that!"—London Paper.

The Emews of Australasia.—His Majesty has, we understand, in his possession, at Windsor, two very fine Emews, or Southern Ostriches, from Van Diemen's Land. The female has brought forth seven eggs, six of which are hatched, and the birds are fine and strong upon their legs. We understand that such is the attention of the male to the young brood, that he boldly presents himself to prevent any one approaching them.—Liverpool Paper.

Elopement.—An officer in the British army lately eloped from Cheltenham with a young lady who, it is said, will be entitled to 45,000 pounds on her coming of age. The parties had proceeded as far as Aylesbury, on their way to Gretna Green, when they were overtaken by a friend of the family, who immediately collared the son of Mars, and knocked him down without ceremony. Shortly after, the young lady's mother and uncle arrived and took her under their protection, leaving her distracted lover to make his way home in such a manner as best suited him. On arriving in London the next morning, the disappointed officer advertised for the gentleman who had made an attack upon him in a manner so unusual among gentlemen, and which the delicacy of circumstances and his situation precluded him from defending. He calls upon the unknown to meet him as a gentleman, which simply means, to give him a chance of putting a bullet through his body as some compensation for the loss of forty five thousand pounds.

Double Tongued Lady.—The Brighton paper mentions, that there is at present residing in Brighton, a lady of great beauty and accomplishments, possessed of a quality which puts out of all distance the fame of the celebrated Mr. Doubleday. This extraordinary and singular faculty arises from a peculiar formation of the tongue, which is separated to the root, in a longitudinal direction, and actually forms a double tongue. Not the slightest inconvenience is felt from this exuberant gift of nature. With this desirable and admirable addition to the usual organ of speech, this lady is enabled to afford entertainment to her friends beyond the power of any ventriloquist, or indeed, conception. From the personal charms she possesses, as well as a highly endowed mind, she has had many suitors, some of which have retired from paying homage, owing to the effects of the extra clapper hung in this enchanted bells. She possesses two voices; one exceedingly clear, sweet and harmonious, allowing her to sing with great effect; the other so exquisitely thrilling, that it must have been bestowed on her for no other purpose than to lisp the still small voice of love.—With this voice she imitates exactly the notes of many birds, piping as a bullfinch, singing as a canary: what is remarkable, her mother was deaf and dumb.

Celebrated Preacher.—A Mr. Irving, who has been an assistant to Dr. Chalmers, is appointed minister to the Caledonian Kirk in Hatton Garden. His powerful rhetoric and splendid eloquence in the sacred cause is so astonishingly great, that crowds of persons of the first rank and talent in the metropolis constantly attend his discourses. The Courier mentions Mr. Irving in the most exalted terms, and states, that on Tuesday the 6th July, there were present at his church, the Duke of Sussex, part of the Duke of Somerset's family, Lord Stowell, Mr. and Mrs. Canning, Lord W. Bentick, Sir J. McIntosh, and many distinguished ornaments of the Senate, the Church and the Bar.

Useful Invention.—An apparatus has lately been invented, by a Mr. T. George, clock maker, London, which by the sole agency of a clock, wakes the workmen and lights a candle, at any desired time of the morning.

The city of Cadiz is older than Rome, London, Paris or Vienna, older than Madrid and Naples, Stockholm and St. Petersburgh, and Constantinople; she is as old as Jerusalem. She is after Tyre and Sidon, the oldest mercantile city in the world. When the Pyramids in Egypt were built, Cadiz too was built. When Troy was destroyed, this Neptune city was raised out of the ocean.—Gades, the now Cadiz, was an old colony of the Phoenicians, who used this favorable situation to build the town, on account of the trade of the west of Europe and Africa, which was done about 709 years before Christ.

The Dog of Pera.—The house of a Greek interpreter at Pera, in the suburbs of Constantinople, being on fire, he had saved nearly all his property by the assistance of a few Janissaries, but more anxious, without doubt, for his money than for his family, he had forgotten an infant in its cradle.—No one could enter the house, for every thing was on fire. The father, reduced to despair, believed that his child had perished; when on a sudden, a large dog, which he kept to guard his dwelling, emerged from the flames bearing the innocent little creature suspended by its linen from its mouth.—They reached towards the dog to take the child, but he would not abandon it, and eluding their efforts, he ran through a thousand streets until he reached the house of an intimate friend of his master, where he deposited the precious burden, and remained till the door was opened to receive it.

Can you imagine what was the reward of this faithful and generous servant? The owner strove to recompense him—but the mode that he devised was equally absurd, afflicting and incredible.—With a barbarous gratitude, he killed the dog, and had him served up at his table at a splendid feast, which he gave on the occasion.

"My dog," said the Turk, "has behaved too well to be the food of worms. Men only deserve to eat him. "And as for you," looking at his friends and relations, "you cannot gain by it—it will render you more benevolent."

CAPTAIN PARRY.—We give (says the Courier) the following extract of a letter just as we have received it, and can only hope, as we do most fervently, that the statement it contains may prove correct:—

"WALMER, July 29.—Of course you have heard that a South Sea whaler passed through on Monday evening from Valparaiso, with the news that Captain Parry has succeeded in finding a passage to the Pacific, and was then all well."

DREADFUL SICKNESS AT NATCHEZ.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman of this city, to his Correspondent, dated

NATCHEZ, August 21.

"All is bustle and confusion here; the Yellow Fever is raging with unexampled violence.—Some, who were well at breakfast, are in their coffins before nine o'clock at night.—There were about seventy-five cases reported yesterday. The inhabitants are removing, and are expected to go out en masse to day."

SUDDEN DEATH.

Died on the 8th July, at Preston (England,) aged 84, the Rev. John Harrison, minister of Grimsargh. His death was awfully sudden. He had just seated himself at his table, and taken up his pen to write, when he fell from his chair and instantly expired. He was preparing for the press an Explanatory Dictionary, and the LAST words he wrote were "SUPERA—A BURNING."

From Capt. Scoresby's Journal.

THE SAILOR AND THE BEAR.

A Hull whaler was anchored to a field of ice, on which, at a considerable distance a large bear was observed prowling about for prey. One of the ship's company, emboldened by an artificial courage, derived from the free use of his rum, which in his economy he had stored for special occasions, undertook to pursue and attack the bear that was in view. Armed only with a whale lance, he resolutely, and against all persuasion, set out on his adventurous exploit. A fatiguing journey of about half a league, over a surface of yielding snow and rugged hammocks, brought him within a few yards of the enemy, which to his surprise, undauntedly faced him and seemed to invite him to the combat. His courage being by this time greatly subdued, partly by the evaporation of the stimulus he had employed, and partly by the undismayed and even threatening aspect of the bear, he levelled his lance in an attitude suited either for offensive or defensive action, and stopped.—The bear also stood still. In vain the adventurer tried to rally courage to make the attack; his enemy was too formidable, and his appearance too imposing. In vain also he shouted, advanced his lance, and made feints of attack; the enemy, either not understanding them, or despising such unmanliness, obstinately stood his ground. —Already the limbs of the sailor began to shake, the lance trembled in the rest, and his gaze, which had been stedfast, began to quiver; but the fear of ridicule from his messmates still had its influence, and he yet scarcely dared to retreat. Bruin, however, possessing less reflection, or being more regardless of consequences, began with most audacious boldness to advance. His nigh approach and unshaken step subdued the spark of bravery, and that dread of ridicule that had upheld our adventurer; he turned and fled. But now was the time of danger. The sailor's flight encouraged the bear in his turn to pursue, and being better practised in snow travelling, and better provided for it, he readily gained upon the fugitive.

The whale lance, his only defence, encumbered him in his retreat, he threw it down and kept on. —This fortunately excited the bear's attention; he stopped, pawed it, bit it, and then resumed the chase.—Again he was at the heels of the panting seaman, who conscious of the favourable effect of the lance, dropped a mitten; the stratagem succeeded, and while Bruin again stopped to examine it, the fugitive improving the interval, made considerable progress ahead. Still the bear resumed the pursuit with the most provoking perseverance, except when it stopped to [illegible] and [illegible] upon that, which he tore to shreds between his teeth and his paws, and would no doubt, have soon made the incautious adventurer his victim, w[illegible] was rapidly losing strength and heart, but for the prompt and well timed assistance of his shipmates, who observing that the affair had assumed a dangerous aspect, sallied out to his rescue. The little phalanx opened him a passage, and then closed to receive the assailant. Though now beyond the reach of his adversary, the dismayed fugitive continued onward impelled by his fears, and never relaxed his exertions, until he fairly reached the shelter of the ship! Bruin once more prudently came to a stand, and for a moment seemed to survey his enemies with all the consideration of an experienced general; when finding them too numerous for a reasonable hope of success, he very wisely wheeled about, and succeeded in making a safe and honourable retreat.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

THE SIEGE OF CORUNNA RAISED.

By this arrival we have a report from Corunna of the most cheering nature. The Morning Chronicle of the 30th announces the arrival of a cutter at Falmouth which left Corunna on the 22d, bringing the agreeable and important information, that "the French had desisted from their enterprise, and withdrawn from the heights round the town; although the direction they had taken was not ascertained. Since the 19th the firing had totally ceased, and when the cutter came away, a disposable force of 1200 men was preparing to follow the rear of the French, under an expectation that a plan of operations would be formed with the 6000 regulars concentrating on the side of Vigo and Orense, with a view to harrass the enemy in a long and difficult retreat, which after the Corunna affair, it was supposed the invaders would be compelled to undertake.

Sir Robert Wilson had sailed for Vigo, for the purpose of preparing and hastening this movement; but owing to adverse winds, it was apprehended he would have a very long passage. The brave defenders of Corunna were, however, so much elated at their success, and so confident of the favourable impression it would make on the whole province, that they had determined to follow up their victory by the most active measures, and in their turn become the assailants, by hanging on the rear of the enemy, till the main army came up to act in concert."

The Morning Chronicle has a long and exhilirating article on the late transactions at Corunna. The news of this feat, (it says) will now act as an electric shock, and if the French, separated as they are from their centre, and unprovided with any point d'appui, are obliged to retreat, the only alternative that appears left to them, they will have a most harassing time of it. They are nearly 100 leagues from Madrid, and will have to return through Galicia, Leon, and Asturias. There is an army of regulars hanging on their flank, equal to their own, and, elated with success, the inhabitants will join their countrymen along the whole of this extended line of march. How, therefore, General de Bourck will get back to Madrid, remains to be seen. It is even a question whether the Corunna business, coupled with other circumstances which begin to develope themselves, will not materially effect the position of the Duke d'Angoulems and the new Regency in the Spanish capital. The situation of the Duke is very precarious. It has been discovered that, under the smiling countenance which welcomed his entry into Madrid, many lurking enemies were concealed; and the murder of a few French stragglers in the town and neighbourhood has tended to confirm this fact.

The Courier announces the receipt of Bayonne papers to the 23d of July, and adds—"It is somewhat remarkable that they do not contain a syllable respecting the attacks upon Corunna, especially as the entrance of the French into that city was communicated to one of our contemporaries from Bourdeaux, so early as the 17th. We find, however, in these papers a piece of intelligence of another description, and quite as authentic as that referred to. 'A private letter from Seville,' says the Bayonne Journalist, 'mentions that the Duke of Wellington had arrived at Cadiz, for the purpose of making proposals, which, if they were accepted, would lead to a speedy restoration of peace!"

The following are extracts. It will be seen that the departure of the Duke d'Angoulems, from Madrid, is mentioned with great confidence:

"Bayonne, July 22.—The siege of Pampeluna seems to be irretrievably determined upon, and will certainly be shortly commenced in form. A great number of waggons with bombs, shells, &c are sent for our arsenal The town, which will be first attacked, cannot hold out long, but the citadel, which is supposed to be amply provided with every thing necessary, may make an obstinate resistance. Guerilla bands [illegible] the [illegible] they are [illegible] inconsiderable. One of them, though consisting of only 14 men, has had the boldness to shew itself at Urdache; its appearance at this place caused great sensation, but it was soon driven away by superior force. A report has been circulated in Navarre, that Mina may shortly be expected there; such a report is calculated to encourage the formation of bands, though it seems improbable that Mina should leave Catalonia at this moment.

"It is mentioned as certain that the Duke of Angoulems will leave Madrid in a few days. General St. Priest passed through here yesterday, on his way to the Duke's Head Quarters; there must be some very important communication to make, to require such a messenger."

Female Warriors—Among the forces which protect Barcelona, there is a battalion of Ladies wearing a blabred and a kind of cloak; that they take care of the sick and wounded, would transport them on their own shoulders to the hospitals; and that these heroines perform most heroic and important services.

SOUTH AMERICA.

IMPORTANT NEWS—SURRENDER OF MORALES.

The brig Gleaner, which arrived last evening from Rio de la Hache, confirms the late intelligence of the defeat and total destruction of the Spanish squadron on the lake of Maracaybo and brings the additional news of the capitulation to the patriot forces of Colombia, of the able and artful representative of tyranny, General Morales.

On the 12th July, an engagement took place between Morale's fleet, commanded by commodore Laborde, and that of Colombia, under the command of General Padilla. The action lasted from 11 A. M. till 5 P. M. when victory was decided in favor of the Colombians, who took or destroyed the whole of the Spanish squadron, except two vessels which escaped. The loss of the Spaniards was 500 slain or drowned, 400 prisoners, of which were 23 officers; 1 brig, 1 hermaphrodite do. 1 do. blown up, 11 gallies and a number of flecheras. The Colombians lost in killed, 40, and in wounded 119. General Morales capitulated on the 4th of August, giving up Maracaybo, Fort St. Charles, all the vessels in port, and every thing else belonging to the Spanish fleet. He was to proceed to Cadiz with 2 hundred of his troops, being all that remained of his army, who were natives of old Spain. He had engaged never again to take up arms against Colombia. Great rejoicings and illuminations had taken place at Rio Hache, and all the places where the news was received. General Burmudez, who was to assume the command at Rio Hache, had just arrived there in the sloop of war Bolivar, from Laguira.

The surrender of Morales is due to the noble exertions and abilities of general Manrique, who commanded the land forces, and to General Padilla, commander in chief of the Colombian sea forces.

A letter from Captain Chrystie, of the Colombian ship Bolivar, says, that on the part of the patriots, during the naval engagement, the only serious misfortune that befel them was the blowing up of the schr. Spartan, Captain Block, with a crew of 150 men.

Thus has terminated the long and arduous struggle of the Colombians for independence. The new government, which has given the world decided evidence of its stability and wisdom, is now free from external danger, and the suspension of hostilities, (says the Daily Advertiser) which must now necessarily ensue, will give them a very desirable opportunity to prepare their strong places for defence, and to increase and organize their armies at leisure. A state of repose, even though it be but temporary, must have a powerful effect in composing the minds of the people, so long exposed to the distresses of war; so that if the Spaniards should hereafter renew their attempts to subjugate the country, they will find the moral and physical force of their enemies wonderfully increased.

Extract of a letter from Gibraltar, to a gentleman in this city, dated August 9th, 1823.—Since you left us, the blockade of Cadiz has been as close as the small skill of the French has been able to make it—which I am happy to say has not been very close, for the small craft from this bay and other places, have gone in and come out freely in spite of their fleet. With very few trifling exceptions, the place has abundance of supplies of every kind, though provisions are much inhanced in price, in consequence of the high freights the boats receive for the risk.

Soon after you left us, the Spaniards made a sortie from the Isla, in which they acquitted themselves most nobly.—They took a battery at the point of the bayonet near Chiclana, killed upwards of 500 French, and returned in good order, with about 140 killed, and perhaps 200 wounded

Ballasteros, after retreating before the French to Valencia, was obliged to leave that city, and trailed his pursuers thro' Alicant and Carthagena, which places he garrisoned all the way to Granada and Jaen. Near the last place, there has been a terrible battle, the particulars of which I regret much not being able to give you, as the event is very interesting. ——— writes me the 6th instant, that the fight had taken place, but that he could give no particulars beyond that—some said in favor of the one party, and some in that of the other. To this we can [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that both parties kept their ground—that the French would ultimately be destroyed in this country—and that now, things look much better than at any period since the invasion.

I must close my letter, for this good opportunity, with the official accounts of Ballastero's victory.—I hope I may call it a victory to him: if it proves such, it will do much for the good cause. Mina, the gallant the indefatigable Mina, keeps the enemy in full employment in Catalonia; but we get no news from that quarter. In Galicia, I fear things are not so well; yet I do not think them desperate."

GIBRALTAR, August 9th, 1823.

"SIR,—I have already written you by this opportunity—since my last, things wear a better appearance in Spain.—The assertion that Ballasteros had been corrupted, has been thrown back in the teeth of his accusers, and there does not appear to have been any foundation for it; but as usual, there are so many stories we know not what to believe; but on this you may rely, that generally things look better for the constitutionalists. We had rumours for several days that the Spaniards under Ballasteros, and the French under Molitor, have at length come in contact, and measured swords at Jaen, and that the battle has been most sanguinary; both parties claim the victory; but that Ballasteros had taken the French artillery. I have to-day a letter from ———, at Malaga, in which he says—"the French and Ballasteros have had a dreadful battle, and we believe that both parties have suffered in a shocking manner; as the French have acknowledged a vast number killed and wounded—but the able and artful representative of tyranny, General Morales.

AFRICA.

Belzoni, the Traveller.—Our readers may recollect, that in the description we gave some three months ago, of the lid of the granite Sarcophagus, presented to the Fitzwilliam Museum by Mr. Belzoni, we alluded to the perilous journey which that enterprising traveller was about to undertake. We have lately been favoured with an extract from a letter of his, dated, the 5th of May, at Fez, the capital of Morocco, to a gentleman in this University. We are happy to find, that Mr Belzoni has commenced his undertaking with favourable auspices and we most sincerely hope that he may be enabled to accomplish his plan of traversing the great breadth of Africa. If he should succeed in this Herculean task

"Nec vero Alcides tantum te Punis obivit."

he will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] an immeasurable distance. We understand that his design is first to reach Timbuctoo, and from thence to continue his route through the heart of Africa to Sennaar. He will then pass through Nubia, and survey once more in the land of Egypt, the scene of his memorable discoveries. The following is the extract which we have been permitted to copy:—

"In the short letter I wrote to you from Tangier, dated the 10th of April, I informed you that I had gained permission from his Majesty the Emperor of Morocco, to enter his country as far as Fez, and that I had great hopes of obtaining his permission to penetrate farther south. I stated also, notwithstanding the great charges upon my purse, unsupported as I am, and relying entirely on my own resources, that nothing should be left undone before I quit it, if [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in acquainting you, my dear friend, of my safe arrival at Fez, after having been detained at Tangier till a letter had been forwarded from Mr. Douglas, his Britannic majesty's Consul at Tangier, to the minister at Fez, to obtain permission from the Emperor for me to approach his capital. As soon as a favourable answer was received, we started for this place, and in ten days arrived here in safety with my better half, who, having succeeded in persuading me to take her to Tangier, has also enforced her influence to proceed to Fez; but this, though much against her will, must be her "Non plus ultra." Yesterday I had the honour to be presented to his Majesty the Emperor, and was highly gratified with his reception of me. He was acquainted that I had letters of introduction from Mr Wilmot, to the Consul in Tangier, from whom I received indeed the greatest hospitality, and who did all in his power to promote my wishes. The circumstance of my having known the Prime Minister of his Majesty, whilst in Cairo, on his return from Mecca to this country, is also much in my favour; and though a great deal has been said against my project by the commercial party, particularly from the Jews of this country, who monopolize all the traffic of the interior, I have obtained his Majesty's permission to join the caravan, which will set out for Timbuctoo, within one month. If nothing should happen, and if promises are kept, I shall from this place cross the mountains of Atlas to Tafilet, where we shall join other parties from various quarters, and from thence, with the help of God, we shall enter the Great Sahara to Timbuctoo. Should I succeed in my attempt I shall add another 'notice tablet' to the Temple of Fortune, and if, on the contrary, my project should fail, one more name will be added to the many others which have fallen into the river of oblivion.—Mrs. Belzoni, will remain at Fez till she hears of my departure from Tafilet, which place is 18 or 20 day's journey from hence,* and as soon as that fact is ascertained, she will return to England."

We shall look forward with much anxiety to the future accounts which may arrive from this indefatigable traveller, and if success can be expected in so difficult and dangerous a project, we may fairly say that it will attend upon one who is in every respect most qualified for the attempt.—Cambridge Chronicle.

* Tafilet is 240 miles south of Fez.

HOBART TOWN, VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

[Extract of a Private Letter.]

I have recovered from the disappointment of my first impressions, and have now the pleasure to inform you that I am getting on much better than it appeared possible. If the information I obtained on leaving England had been good, I should have done much better. I ought to have brought neither goods for sale, nor agricultural implements. When I arrived here the prices were high; but in consequence of many vessels coming in soon after, the value of the articles was so much reduced that I sold almost on every one. Sales are here obliged to be effected by auction, which renders them worse. I advise, therefore, persons who intend to come here as farmers to bring the whole of their property in specie. The scenes a man gets on his farm the better, and farmers have no means of selling their goods but by auction, brokers themselves being unknown here.—Those who intend to be shop-keepers, of course should bring goods with them, the town being their constant place of abode; but the farmer, to do any good, must reside on his farm.

I certainly think this country superior to any part of America that I have read of. The climate is very fine—not too warm in summer, nor too cold in winter; there is snow to be seen on the tops of the mountains, but it never lies in the vallies. The climate of Sidney is very hot, and many do not have it from that cause. I advise no one to emigrate hither unless he can command a capital of 500*l.* in money. Two persons coming together, and going into partnership for three years, may do with 500*l.* each, but no one can stand alone with such a capital. Servants are bad in general, and labour very dear. Many of the settlers who came out lately have brought servants with them; but they should be bound in England under an indenture to serve for a given time, and under a penalty if they should quit their masters in this country before the period agreed for expires. It is a most expensive country, and perhaps from that circumstance, a good one. The prices of stock are nearly as follows:—

Good working bullocks for the cart or plough, 50*l.* to 55*l.* per pair; very ordinary at 40*l.*; and it requires three pairs for new lands. Horses, none under 50 guineas; and there are few cart-horses in this country. Cows from 12*l.* to 15*l.* a head; steers, not broken in, 15*l.*; heifers, 2 years old, 9*l.* to 12*l.* according to size; ewes 25*s.* ewes and lambs 30*s.* to 34*s.* Wheat, 3*s.* to 18*s.* per bushel; barley 8*s.*; oats, 10*s.* to 12*s.*; potatoes 8*l.* to 10*l.* per ton; beef 9*d.* per lb; mutton 9*d.*; pork 9*d.*; butter 2*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 6*d.*; the first is the summer price, and the last winter price.—Cheese 2*s.* 6*d.* per lb.

The best lands are taken first, and there is very little to be had near the town. The country is filling very fast. English ploughs are too weak for this country; there is a great difference between the well ploughed fields in England, and unbroken lands here, which require a very strong plough. Those made of wrought iron are worse for the purpose than the wooden ones. Ploughs are made here for 7*l.* which is cheaper than they can be brought from England.

Wool is becoming an article of very great value; but the owners of sheep have paid little attention to it until lately. There is now every prospect that our wool will equal that of Sidney in a few years. Some wools have been sold in Hobart town for 1*s.* 6*d.* per lb., which may be expected to realize 3*s.* in the London market. It will be a staple article of exportation from this colony.

There are many difficulties in a new country, and though it is a good one, it is not that paradise some authors would wish to make it; however improving fast.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Lobo, 20th September, 1823.

SIR,

As it is possible that your determinations may not be quite so unalterable as the Laws of the Medes and Persians, so I rely on your Justice, to give insertion to these Remarks in reply to Major Schoolfield's letter of the 11th Inst.—Messrs Trim and Senex were pleased to make a venomous attack on me, mere y for making a disinterested attempt to expose Roguery, and to serve my country and the honest part of the community; you gave publicity to their attacks, and at the same time very honourably and justly permitted to me the same means of defence; but in this case, you publish to the world a new attack, from a new opponent, and close the door against me. I do not wish, Sir, to prolong this discussion, but Major Schoffield must be answered, as far as he is comprehensible; because as far as he is so, his doctrines are absurd, and his assertions are not true.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

In the first place, He, Major Schoffield, calls my first communication, dictating to the Government — The fact, however, is not so; I merely offered a few Suggestions, hoping thereby to correct some very ill-be-set proceedings; and they were addressed to you, Sir, and not at all to the government, unless by government, Major Schoffield means 3 or 4 Commissioners and a Secretary. He next states that it is a business, with which the people have nothing to do —Yes Major, they have to do; they, the people, have to pay the Piper; they, the people, will have to pay taxes, them and their children, and their childrens' children for ever, for every penny out of which the government is defrauded: but, Major, the people have to do also with every act of the government; and if properly represented, are themselves a very important branch of the government Of the Major's education I know nothing, or of the country that had the honor to give him birth, I only know, that whether as a soldier, or a magistrate, his sentiments are totally unfit for a British Subject, or for a laud of liberty and freedom; but are rather suited to the meridian of Algiers, where all are Slaves, but one. I shall notice but one point more; Major Schoffield has in fact, asserted, that I have announced to my friends an intention of being a candidate at the ensuing election. Nothing was ever more false. When the idea has been suggested to me, I have invariably acknowledged my want of ability, as well as inclination; and have uniformly requested my friends to look elsewhere for an abler and a better man. I feel also, Sir, that to be sent to the House of Assembly would be doing me a great injury, unless I betrayed the confidence of my Constituents, and made it the means of my own advancement, for I have no ambition or vanity to gratify; my board, Sir, is getting grey, my blood no longer gallops, and all I now desire is to be permitted to mind my own business, and to give all my cares to my family; and I now again this publicly invite my friends to look out in time for some abler and better man to represent them. If, however, they do not choose to take that trouble, but are pleased to send me; all I can say is, that I consider myself their servant, and shall obey them; doing my duty to them, as well as I know how. The remainder of the Major's letter is mere rubbish, and I regret that a man of his abilities should travel such roads, and in such company, as he has chosen; and he may yet discover, that he has mistaken the side on which his bread is buttered.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obliged and humble servant
J. MATTHEWS.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

On observing by your paper of the 4th instant, that you evinced a disposition not to insert further communications on the subject of a Bulletin which issued from "Lake near Delaware," on the 4th of July last, signed "J. Matthews," it struck me that you, as Editor of a public journal, had decided correctly; but upon reading another communication with the same signature, following your editorial remarks, and full of new matter of a public nature, upon which the Legislature is about to be petitioned at its approaching session, shewing a disposition to bias the public mind to the prejudice of the whole people of the county of Middlesex, I do acknowledge encouragement in your having come to such a decision; and am satisfied, that when you take a review of the subject, you can have no objection to insert in your paper an answer to that communication.

When I consider, too, that my first letter appeared in the same Register with the second letter signed "J. Matthews," and that in that paper you made the following editorial remark; "we apprehend that he will prove what is termed a rum customer, and likely to come well up to the scratch." I deem it but fair to expect, that after inserting three of his letters, the last of which is directed principally against poor Trim, and upon a subject of great importance to the public, which Trim did not intend to introduce into the Newspapers, but which he is ready to argue: I feel, that as you anticipated, he would "come well up to the scratch," and being convinced as you must be, that in doing so he has "scratch"-ed in a great deal of irrelevant and extraneous matter, you will permit R to be "scratch"-ed out again through the same medium.

It would not be unpleasant to me, as an individual, now to enter more fully into the subject of Captain Matthews' several communications than I at first intended, and, en passant, to give him to his full satisfaction, the retort courteous, for the [illegible] and unfounded insinuations he has been pleased to throw out against me: Yet as I am aware that, although he has been suffered to make those insinuations, the public can have no interest in the discussion of them; in administering to him a little of the argumentum ad hominum. I shall therefore endeavour to confine myself principally to the discussion of the question he has introduced respecting the division of this District, in which, as the matter now stands, the public feel great interest, and to which they have a strong claim.

The Captain states, that "an underhand attempt is now making to obtain signatures to a petition to divide this District, and to have the new establishment at Kettle Creek, newly named St Thomas." A petition of that nature is in general circulation throughout this county, and its object has long since been announced in the Gazette. It is done at the instance of the great majority of the inhabitants They are its warm supporters—It has been circulated in the immediate neighbourhood where the Captain resides, in which it has received the signatures and support of several gentlemen of at least equal integrity—equal intelligence—equally respectable, and every way equally entitled to credence, as the Captain, in whatever they may write or speak,—any thing in his said Bulletin of the 4th of July last to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding. I would therefore be much obliged to the Captain, if, in his wisdom, he will be pleased to inform me by what mode of reasoning he makes the circulation of the said petition an "underhand attempt."

He states, "there are certain gentlemen possessing property in the neighbourhood. (meaning St. Thomas,) and Trim, I guess, is one, who are very dishonestly anxious thereby to increase its value." Pray, good and patriotic Captain, who can gravely, and in the face of the public say, "I am clothed in the armour of truth, I have God and my conscience for my witnesses," presume to tell us, by way of your great condescension in affording moral and religious instruction to your neighbourhood (which from your account before alluded to, seems benighted and sinful in the extreme,) if you recollect any thing about a letter of which was written from Lobo, or Delaware, during the session of the Provincial Parliament for the year 1822, addressed to a member of the House of Assembly on the subject of the division of this District;—And if you know Sir, that during the discussion of that question, the Honorable member to whom it was addressed, being a little pressed for argument in support of his opposition to the division of the District, read the said letter (excepting the signature) in his place? He read it as a part of his speech, and it would seem by way of instructing the House in powerful and disinterested reasoning. Do you recollect that in that letter it was suggested, that if an act authorising the division should pass, as St. Thomas was not a suitable place for the new establishment, it should be fixed on Lot AO or AE in the Gore of Delaware, upon which it was remarked to the hon. member who was reading, and who scorned to make a garbled statement from his document, that his valuable communication must have come from Captain Matthews?—And, upon which you know, Sir, that the Honor able member returned the said communication to his pocket folio, and has never since offered it in argument as a precedent for self disinterestedness?

MONTREAL. September 17.

A thing "very like a whale," was observed on Friday last by the passengers of the Steam Boat Lady Sherbrooke, when coming up the river. This strange visitor created much curiosity, and induced many persons to go down the river, in order to have a full view of it at the foot of the current St Mary. Mr. A Young. J. E Campbell, Esq. Captains Seymour and Brush, accompanied by some others, procured a boat and harpoons, and went in pursuit of the monster.—They succeeded in piercing him between the middle and fore fins; but owing to some mismanagement on the part of the boatmen, the instrument (which is supposed to have entered the left side upwards of 18 inches) was drawn out, and the whale escaped.

We have since learned that he has been found by the shore between Varennes and Verchere, where it is conjectured he was thrown up, after having been exhausted by the loss of blood which flowed from the wound inflicted by the harpoon as above mentioned.—It is said it measures about 45 feet in length.

ASSIZES—Niagara District.

Lieutenant Colonel Norton was arraigned before the hon. Justice Campbell, for the murder of an Indian in a duel.

The first witness called was William Wier, who deposed, that as he was proceeding to the Colonel's house on the day the duel had taken place, he met a young man who told him to make haste, as he feared something serious would occur before witness's arrival. Upon witness's arriving at the prisoner's residence, he saw him with a pistol in his hand, and the deceased taking one from off a stump; both spoke, but witness did not understand their conversation. The deceased advanced towards the Prisoner in a sideling manner, till he came within six or eight feet of him, when he fired and made a rush at the prisoner, who did not move from his position. The mouth of the prisoner's pistol was downwards—both pistols were fired about the same time, so that witness did not know which of them went off first. The deceased fell close to the prisoner in the scuffle, and the prisoner cried out, "Oh, my poor Joseph!"

Second witness—Samuel Chew Hill (a Delaware Indian) deposed, that he was present at the dispute that had taken place between the prisoner and the deceased, but did not understand them, as they spoke in Onondagua; they ran into the house for pistols—Prisoner brought them out, laid one of them on the stump of a Tree, and walked off with the other, and stood 7 paces from the deceased. The deceased took up his pistol and examined it—he then advanced in a sideling manner towards the prisoner, and when close to him, pointed his pistol at the prisoner, sprung forward and seized the prisoner's pistol by the muzzle—both pistols went off. The deceased fell wounded, and the prisoner's head was streaming with blood from the ball of the Indian's pistol—prisoner fell upon the deceased, and cried out, "Oh, my poor Joseph!"

John Charles Wolatea (an Indian) corroborated the foregoing evidence, and stated, that the Prisoner told the deceased to stop as he was advancing, but instead of attending to the prisoner, he rushed upon him. Witness could not, from his position, see the deceased seize prisoner's pistol.

Peter Young deposed, that the deceased said, upon being advised not to go to the House of the prisoner, whom he had offended, for fear of quarrelling with him, "I am as good a soldier as Norton, by and by I will kill him."

The Judge summed up the evidence, and the Jury returned a verdict of manslaughter!!

J. B. ROBINSON, Att'y. Gen'l.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been with held from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of the late, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1821.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain parts of the Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of Settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819; viz:

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of PORT HOPE, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick, Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the Lake.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed rooms.—The Kitchin is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 48 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to JOHN BROWN, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 t-f.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

THE Board for the General Superintendance of Education, in this Province, give notice that the undermentioned Lands, reserved for the purposes of the Institution, are about to be disposed of on terms advantageous to purchasers; and that, after the sixteenth day of September next, applications may be addressed to Colonel Talbot, residing in the District of London, with respect to any Lands situate in that District, who is fully authorised to enter into any contracts for their sale, and to the Secretary of the Board, at York, with respect to any of the Lands situate in the other Districts.

As very important intelligence, of a decisive character, from Spain is hourly expected—we shall reserve space for a Posteript, in which the latest news from Europe will be inserted.

The letter from a Freeholder of Otonibee has been received, but is not inserted, because it is conceived the writer is uninformed of some facts it may be necessary for him to know, before his Communication on that subject is made public. He is right in his conjecture as to the person who sent the notice now printed in the Gazette, on a late occasion; but, wrong as to the general ignorance of the settlers in the new Townships, north of Rice Lake, respecting the intention of petitioning for a new County, which is an affair that has been in agitation for the last three years, and which has been not only before Parliament, but very near a successful accomplishment, during the last Session. Two Petitions were drawn up more than two years ago, to our own knowledge, for that object; one of these, confined to the Western Banks of the Otonibee River,—filled with signatures, is at the present moment in our possession. The other was submitted to the care of some Gentleman towards the east of Otonibee, and has not lately been seen.—As to the Representation of the proposed New County, it is not very probable, although it might be erected, that the existing law, respecting this right, would be altered in its favour; or, that it could have a Representative in the House of Assembly before it was legally entitled to send one there by reason of the number of its souls.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody good," is a saying no less trite than true. A vast column of innocious vapour has issued from the "COMPACT" through the Observer of last week; and, as the fume is of a nature perfectly harmless to the party it was intended to affect, we hope our neighbour Editor, at least, got some good from it, and that he charges his four pence per line for the five columns of legal wit he has given us. The wit, indeed, is sufficiently small and evanescent, considering the learned quarter from whence it issues; but, in so far as it causes Mr C—'s pot to boil, besides providing something to put into the pot, it must be acknowledged good; and we have no sort of objection to his inserting at least Five Columns of such wit, weekly, until the day of Election, and for a year and a day afterwards, provided he gets well paid for it.

We are happy to announce the publication of the "CANADIAN'S RIGHT" lately advertised in the Gazette, and which is now ready for delivery.—We can recommend it, in the strongest manner, to the perusal, nay, we must add to the study, of all ranks of persons, (for it has lately been as scarce as it is valuable, and cannot have been known to many persons, not excepting the learned profession.) It is impossible to commend it too highly, and the good it may do, in this country especially, is incalculable. The price has been fixed very low, in order that it may be within the reach of the poorest person.

☞ The Canadian's Right is the same as the Englishman's, can be had from any agent of the U. C. Gazette and Weekly Register throughout the Country, or from Mr. P. McPhail, Book binder, York,—Price 1s. 6d.

Interesting Anecdote—Of Sarkies Joannes, of Calcutta, an American merchant.—When this great American merchant heard of the recovery of George the Third, in 1789, an event which occasioned the great demonstrations of joy in India, he paid the debts of all the prisoners at that time in gaol, which so much pleased his Majesty, that he sent him his picture in miniature, through Lord Cornwallis, who questioned the American respecting the great affection evinced by him for the King of England, and whom he had never seen. "I have, my Lord," replied he, "lived under his government for near thirty years; it has never injured me; but on the contrary, always afforded me its protection; and this, with industry on my part, has enabled me to accumulate a very plentiful fortune."

Marriage Brokers.—One of the London papers states, that in Paris there is a regular bureau for negociating marriages; and, such is the variety of female candidates, that the most captious taste may be suited. The following advertisement appears in the Journal d' Affiches, a Paris paper of July 17:—

"Marriages.—1st. Fifty widows, with from 2 to 20,000 francs of income.

"2d. One and fifty damsels, with from 10,000 to 600,000 francs of dowery.

"3d. Four hundred young ladies and widows, with a small fortune.—Apply to M. Porre, &c."

Another marriage broker advertises at his disposal.

"1. Two young ladies, of between 15 and 18 years of age, with between 30 and 60,000 francs of portion.

"2. Two others, between 30 and 36 years with 35,000 francs; and several damsels of all ages, with between 4,000 and 6,000 francs of income; with lots of widows, of incomes from 1,000 to 60,000 francs."

If money be not the object, M. Porre says that he has at his disposal, several young ladies of ancient families, with little fortune, but with all the qualities which should accompany fortune.

At a late festival of Juggernaut, so few pilgrims were present, that they were unable to draw the car. The Brahmins called in other aid, but no devotee could be persuaded to sacrifice himself to the idol. They now talk of removing the Rath to a more central situation.

FROM THE WASHINGTON COUNTY POST

Anecdote of a Young Indian.—An English gentleman and his friend, travelling through a piece of woods, in one of the western states, took with him an Indian lad as a guide. In the course of the day they separated; and one of them finding some curious berries, sent them to his companion by the lad, with a note specifying their number. The one who received the present found some of the berries missing, and having reprimanded the boy for eating or losing them, sent him back for more. The gentleman forwarded a second parcel, with the number again marked on the note. The boy played the same trick with these, delivering only part of what he received. This procured him a second scolding. Whereupon the Indian fell down upon his knees, and kissed the paper, saying, "I found out, the first time, that this paper was a witch or conjuror; but now he has proved his power to be supernatural, indeed; because he tells that which he did not see; for when I flung away these last berries, for the sake of experiment, I took care to slip the note under a stone, that it might not know what was passing.

Miraculous Preservation.—A few days ago as a Mandingo man was washing himself by the side of his canoe in a small creek in the Bullom shore, a large alligator seized him by the head, the upper jaw embracing the front and crown of the head, and extending to the lower part of the neck, while the under jaw covered the whole of the face and neck, tearing and burying the teeth in the fleshy parts. The poor fellow had sufficient presence of mind to dart his fingers to the eyes of the animal, which he thrust into with as much force as he could; the animal then letting go his dreadful bite, thus happily released the poor man from as horrid a death as can be supposed; he afterwards came to the Colony to procure dressings for the wounds; he was dressed in the Colonial Pharmacy, and is doing well.—Sierra Leon Gazette, Sept. 14.

A patent has been obtained by Mr. Robson, printer and stationer in London, for a new method of securing commercial correspondence against fraudulent practices on bankers' checks, bills of exchange, &c. by introducing lines or other devices, drawn or printed by vegetable colours, upon one or both sides of the paper. It is well known that vegetable colours are easily changed by various chemical agents, and it is scarcely possible that the ink could be fraudulently removed by any means whatever, without the intended deception being prevented by this ingenious expedient.

The live rattlesnake in the Boston museum is now shedding his skin. He clears 3 inches a day; the new skin is much more clear and brilliant.

The King.—We regret to state that His Majesty is again suffering under a slight attack of the gout; which, combined with the unsettled state of the weather, has occasioned His Majesty's marine excursion to be postponed.

Scotch Peers.—The rebellion of 1715 and 45, caused many of the most honorable families in Scotland to lose their titles and estates. The estates in many cases have been restored, and the remainder will no doubt now be given up.—After the King's late visit to Scotland, it was represented to him that there was no act he could do would give such general satisfaction as his restoring to the ancient families their titles, forfeited in the rebellion. —A representation was made on this subject, and a few months since these titles were ordered to be restored to the rightful heirs on proving their claims. Many families, during, or immediately after the Revolution fled to this country, and it is believed that several of these titles will devolve on persons now residing in the United States.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

The following is a list of the forfeited Scotch titles, restored by a late order of George the Fourth.

Forfeited in 1715—Restored in 1823.

Sutherland—Lord Duffeis.
Keith—Lord Keith, Earl Marischal.
Erskine—Lord Erskine, Earl of Mar.
Drummond—Lord Drummond.
Maxwell—Lord Herries.
Maxwell—Lord Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale.
Seaton—Lord Seaton, Earl of Winton.
[illegible]
Balfour—Lord Kilwinning.
Livingstone—Lord Livingstone, Earl of Linlithgow.
Dalzell—Lord Dalzell.
Ogilvie—Lord Ogilvie, Earl of Airly.
Maule—Lord Maule, Earl of Panmure.
Livingstone—Earl of Calender.
Livingstone—Lord Campsie, Viscount Kilsyth.
Kieth Falconer—Earl of Kintyre.
Livington—Lord Livington.
Nairne—Lord Nairne.

Forfeited in 1745—Restored in 1823.

McDonell—Earl of Ross.
Fraser—Lord Loval.
Elphinstone—Lord Balmerino.
Forbes—Lord Feligo
Mackenzie—Lord Macleod, Viscount Tarbot:
Drummond—Viscount Strathallaer, Lord of Drummond and Cromlix.
Mackenzie—Earl of Cromartie.

Rochefoucault's Maxims.—The Duke of Rochefoucault was so accurate in the composition of his little Book of Maxims, that he used to send each maxim, as he finished it, to his friends, for their opinion upon it. Segrais asserts that some of his maxims were altered thirty times.

Romantic Lover.—A romantic story is related of an Englishman, who sought the hand of a very charming lady, with whom he was passionately in love, but who constantly refused him. As he had reason to believe she loved him, he entreated to know the reason why she refused her consent to their union. The lady, subdued by his constancy, told him that her only motive for refusing him was, that having by an accident lost a leg, it had been replaced by a wooden one; and she feared that sooner or later this circumstance would chill his affection for her. This she declared to be her only motive.—The lover protested that this would never make him change his love; but she persisted in refusing to marry him. Fired with love, and determined that nothing should obstruct his design, he, under the pretext of going a distant voyage, left the lady and hastened to Paris, where he had one of his own legs amputated. When he had recovered, he returned to London, went to the lady and told her that there was now no obstacle to their union, for that he was equally mutilated with herself. The lady, conquered by such a proof of affection, at last consented to marry him.—Athenæum.

Convicts sent to Bermuda.—The Antelope troop ship, at Chatham, is ordered to be fitted for the reception of three hundred convicts, who are to proceed to Bermuda, to be employed in that settlement. It is supposed in future a number of the convicts will be sent annually to that place.

Awkward Mistake.—An accident, which was nigh leading to a fatal result, occurred at a respectable hotel in Belfast. Three Scottish gentlemen having arrived in the Eclipse steam packet, put up at the above hotel. They had, it appears a considerable sum of money in their possession: and for their better security, they proposed to sleep together in one room, and were accordingly accommodated with a three bedded one. Some time after they had retired to their separate couches, while imagination was, perhaps, conjuring up direful tales of blood thirsty robbers and midnight assassinations (such as, unfortunately, are not unusual in one part of this wretched country) one of the watchful trio suddenly exclaimed, "I see a man!" This alarming annunciation was instantly followed by the gentleman starting up, and gliding towards the foot of the bed, in order to secure the door, and prevent the escape of the robber; while, cautiously slipping out from the curtains, he was espied by one of his terror stricken companions, who trembling at the [illegible] seizing up a candlestick by the bed, quickly sprang forward, seized a chair (as the readiest weapon,) and attacked him with desperate fury. The third individual also joined in the attack, and the consequence was likely to be dreadful. At this moment, the noise having aroused the landlord and some of his servants, they flew towards the bed room and forced the door open. A light being introduced, the reader may judge the astonishment of the parties, when it was discovered by the two gentlemen, that the supposed robber was no other than their own companion who lay speechless, covered with wounds, and weltering in his blood! Surgical aid was immediately procured, and the unfortunate Caledonian, who had been dreadfully wounded, is now in a fair way of recovery. Some idea may be formed of the violence inflicted on him, when we mention that the chair (a strong mahogany one) was literally dashed to pieces in the scuffle. We have only to add, that the foregoing facts are from the best authority.—Newry Telegraph.

Ireland, we rejoice to say, begins to show symptoms of returning tranquility. The outrages have been for some weeks perceptibly subsiding. On the other hand, a new and improved practice has, with the avowed sanction of the Lord Lieutenant, and under the strong and repeated recommendations of the judges going Circuit, been adopted by the county Magistrates, for the adjustment of minor differences, and the cognizance of trifling offences. The measure we speak of is the holding of "Petty Sessions," where four or five justices of a particular district assemble and hear those complaints which had been formerly brought before a single magistrate. The benefit of such a tribunal is two-fold: for not only are the partialities of an individual over-ruled by the presence of other magistrates, but, what is a point of very great importance in Ireland, the people are more satisfied of the upright administration of justice.

The Greeks.—Great interest appears to have been excited in Europe as to the Greeks. Accounts have been received from Mytelene of the 21st June, and from Corfu, of the 9th July, which state that the troops landed by the Captain Pacha at Caristo and Patras, had been completely routed by the Greeks. Odyessus, on hearing of the landing of the Turks, at the latter place, descended the pass of Thermopylæ with unconquerable resolution, although he had only 2,000 men at the commencement of the conflict, whilst Mahmet attacked him with 8000 Europeans, and 7000 Asiatic infantry, besides 3000 cavalry.—The Greeks lost upward of 700 men; but after four hours constant fighting, numerous reinforcements arrived, and the Turks experienced a total defeat. Part of them threw themselves into the Castle of Zeitoudi, which was taken by storm; and another capitulated in the town of Demazo! Mean while the corps which had advanced from Carystos was also repulsed. There remained, therefore, only the corps of the Pacha of Scutari to combat, and it was considered highly probable that this campaign would terminate ignominiously for the Turks.

Natural History.

Jonathan's Sea-Serpent a mere muck-worm to the following.

Kraken, or Sea Worm, alias Sea-Serpent.

London, Aug. 22, 1786.—A young gentleman of the Customs in Edinburgh has favored us with the following extract of a letter sent him from Dundee, dated Aug. 17, 1786:

Very little credit has been given to what Pontoppidan, bishop of Bergen, in his natural history of Norway, says of a certain animal called Kraken; but if the declaration made by the master and mate of a Norway ship now here, whereof the inclosed is a copy, may be depended on, it will afford some reason to believe that there is in nature, such a creature as he describes.

It is proposed farther to examine them, and the whole crew upon oath, and if any thing material occurs, I shall acquaint you.

"At Dundee, the 16th of Aug. before J. R. Lama, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the county of Forfar, and Mr. John Guild one of present magistrates of Dundee, appeared Jenson Anderson and Mads Jenson, master and mate of the Margaretta, of Easteresor, of Norway, who declare, and it is further confirmed by their journals produced: That on Saturday, the 5th day of this present month of August, between the hours of nine and ten in the forenoon of that day, being on their voyage to Dundee, and in latitude 56, 16 N. about fifteen or sixteen leagues to the eastward of the island of May, they, as well as the crew of the said ship, perceived, within less than a mile's distance to the southward of them, what they conceived to be an animal called in Norway a sea worm, a creature of a huge size, emerging from the sea—that from its appearance, it seemed to form three low islands, or sand banks, of a greyish colour. That they conceive the length of it to have been at least three English miles; that it lay stretched from S. W. to N. E. That its breadth appeared to be about twenty or thirty fathoms; that it was in sight fifty minutes, and went down gradually, without any remarkable agitation of the water. From the time of its ascending, and during its appearance on the water, the weather was perfectly calm, and it went down again as soon as a breeze came on. The waves broke on those parts of it which were above water, as on a bank. The greatest apparent height it bore above water seemed to be from two to three fathoms.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Concluded from our last.

"Dishonestly anxious thereby to increase its value."—Honest Captain, be pleased to make us acquainted with the difference of honesty; and on which side it may happen to be, should one apply by letter for the new establishment to be at Lot AO or AE aforesaid, (the property of one Captain Matthews) which was at that time nearly the North Western extremity of the settlement, or for the people to apply by regular petition to both Houses of Parliament for it to be at [illegible] which of such two legal and from the nature of things must continue to be, the most eligible point for the purpose in the contemplated District;—or which method may be most an "underhand attempt?"

The Captain proceeds:—But, Sir, St. Thomas happens to be "quite on one side of the proposed new District, and therefore I oppose it, and so I would if my property lay at St. Thomas'"—Now I have proved myself dull at wit in my former Communication, as it would appear by the entire satisfaction of the Captain;—I may also be dull at comprehension, and therefore, to be serious, without presuming to be witty, but with a view to obtain real instruction at his hands, I would beg leave most humbly to ask him why the same parity of reasoning will not apply to the situate of Lot AQ, or AE, in the Gore of Delaware, nearly in view of his real dence in Lobo?—

In alluding to his said Bulletin of the 4th of July last, the Captain is pleased to state: "Instead of being in a state of mental derangement, as Mr. Trim suggests, my Communication, if it proves any thing on that point, it is, that I value justice to my country more than I do my own private interests, an idea it seems which never found its way into the selfish breast of Mr. Trim."—Gentle, and disinterested Captain; compare the subject of the letter to the M. P. with the "underhand attempt" Petition now in circulation, and "your very excellent Comments" upon it, and see if it is not possible that ideas a little more expressive of a love of "justice to my country" may [illegible] by chance have found their way even into the dusty head of Mr. Trim?"

The Captain, in his beautiful analysis of my former Communication respecting his said Bulletin, has deduced from the premises, by the most profound metaphysical reasoning, that "Disinterested duty to one's country is, in Mr. Trim's estimation, proof sufficient of madness," with two outbursts of admiration by way of astonishment; and then exclaims most triumphantly:—"Well done Trim!—you have at any rate, with all your cleverness and caution, let the cat out of the bag for once."—I will not attempt to make a triumphant reply to him, but must be permitted to say, I am led to fear that, in his various correspondence since his residence at "Lobo near Delaware" as has let the "cat out of the bag" several times.

The following is an extract from the Petition at which the Captain seems to be so grievously afflicted—It prays, "that your Honourable House will be pleased to fix upon the village of St. Thomas, on Talbot road, as the seite for His Majesty's Courts of Justice in the contemplated District, [illegible] be the most eligible point for that purpose, which is situate near the centre of Population; being, as nearly as may be, equi-distant from the South West Angle of Aldborough, the South East Angle of Bayham, and the rear of the Townships of London, Lobo, Carradoc, Ekfrid and Mosa; and possessing great advantages by being at the point where the junction of the great and populous roads through the said county takes place; the North Branch of Talbot road communicating from this place with the front line through the populous Township of London; and intersecting the great road which passes down the River Thames, through the well settled Township of Westminster, thereby affording comfortable and easy access to all the settled parts of the county."

The Petition, of which the above is an extract, will be presented at the next Session of Parliament, with the signatures of at least nine-tenths of the Freeholders of the county appending it, when it is probable "that an honest and independent House of Assembly" will be nearly as much inclined to attend to its request as to any future application on rejecting the said Lot AO or AE.

TRIM.

London District 16th Sept. 1823.

LITERATURE.

From the Commercial Advertiser.

The following is a most ingenious account of the original formation of the Point of Fortrose, and it would be for the interests of science, if other geographical enigmas could be as satisfactorily solved:—

"On one occasion, work was getting rather scarce, as [illegible] extremely heedless executed, and the workmen, as they were wont, flocked to his doors (i. e. to the doors of the celebrated Michael Scott), perpetually exclaiming, 'Work, Work! Work!' Continually annoyed by their incessant clamours, he calls out to them to desist from, to go and make a dry road from Fortrose to Ardersier, over the Moray Firth immediately their cry ceased, and Mr. Scott supposing it wholly impracticable for them to execute his order, returned to rest, laughing most heartily at the chimerical sort of employment he had given to his industrious workmen. Early in the morning, however, he got up and took a walk down at the break of day to the shore, to divert himself at the fruitless labours of his zealous workmen.—But on reaching the spot, what was his astonishment to find the formidable piece of work allotted to them only a few hours before, almost quite finished. Seeing the great damage the commercial class of the community would sustain from the operation, he ordered them to demolish the most part of their work, leaving however the point of Fortrose, to shew the traveller to this day, the wonderful exploit of Michael Scott's fairies."

The account the author gives us of the Festivals, appeared to us more interesting than the other parts of the book.

THE MUFFLED DRUM.

BY JOHN MAYNE.

Ah me! how sorrowful and slow,
With arms revers'd, the Soldiers come,—
Dirge-sounding trumpets, full of woe,
And, sad to hear, the MUFFLED DRUM!

Advancing to the House of Pray'r,
Still sadder flows the dolesome strain;
E'en industry forgets her care,
And joins the melancholy train!

O! after all the toils of war,
How blest the brave man lays him down!
His bier is a triumphal car—
His grave is glory and renown!

What though no friends nor kindred dear,
To grace his obsequies attend?
His comrades are his brothers here,
And ev'ry hero is his friend!

See love and truth, all woe begone,
And beauty drooping in the crowd—
Their thoughts intent on him alone
Who sleeps for ever in his shroud!

Again, the trumpet slowly sounds
The Soldier's last funereal hymn—
Again the MUFFLED DRUM rebounds,
And ev'ry eye with grief is dim!

The generous steed, which late he rode,
Seems, too, its master to deplore;
And follows to his last abode
The warrior—who returns no more!

For him, far hence, a mother sighs,
And fancies comforts yet to come!
He'll never bless her longing eyes—
She'll only hear the MUFFLED DRUM.

Horse racing in Canada.—Horse racing was introduced at Quebec by Sir James Craig, July, 1807, on the memorable Plains of Abraham. Several gentlemen entered for the purse, and rode their own horses. The races lasted for a week, and the purses were made up by subscription. Governor Craig gave a purse of ten guineas, with saddle and bridle, to be run for on the last day by Canadian horses only.

This was the greatest scrub ever run in any country, and the Sporting Calendar of Canada will never record such another day as this. A crowd of peasants were assembled with red caps, crowd of peasants were assembled with red caps, ponies of the country—some had saddles and some had none—some had bridles and others had none. Such flogging, kicking, yelling, and swearing, were never before heard.

At the word "go" they started, helter skelter, for the purse. Most of the horses bolted—many were foundered on the occasion, and a majority of them threw their riders at the first jump.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Not half a dozen horses survived, if we may believe reports, and the spectators, particularly the English officers, were convulsed with laughter at so mad a spectacle.

The Whale caught.—On Sunday last a great number of boats were very early on the alert below Grant's Island, watching the motions of the Whale. He was repeatedly seen very near the boats, but not sufficiently so to allow them an opportunity of striking him. At about nine or ten o'clock the Steam Boat La Prairie, with several persons on board, came down the current, and it is thought by those who were present, frightened him, and occasioned his running up the river, passing several boats; until from some cause he was induced to slacken his progress, and to drop backwards down the river, until he struck the boat navigated by Capt. Brush, Mr. Young, and some other persons.—Mr Young then thrust a harpoon into his body, directly behind the first fin. Mr. Y. stood over him when the wound was made. He immediately veered a boat, and went down the stream with great rapidity Shortly after he turned, and proceeded up the current, and taking the South channel, through which the La Prairie Steam Boats are navigated, he dashed about in the breakers opposite the Town for nearly two hours. The movements of the boat could be plainly seen from the harbour; and we have seldom beheld a concourse of people equal to that which crowded the banks. The Whale then proceeded further up the river, and would in all probability have visited La Prairie had not the shallowness of the water prevented. During all this time the persons in the boat were enabled to wound him with lances. At last exhausted, and unable to resist the stream, he again took the direction towards the foot of the current, and continued his course to Boucherville Island, where he was killed and sunk in three fathoms water. Monday morning the New Swiftsure towed the carcase to this place; and he is now exhibiting in a building constructed for the purpose. The dimensions of this creature are 42 feet 8 inches in length, 6 feet across the back, and 7 feet through from the back to the belly. He is of that species called by Whalers Finners.—Times.

From the Niagara Gleaner.

Steam Mill.—We have had the pleasure of viewing a Steam Mill, (erected in the village of Chippawa by James Maclean, Esq.) in full operation. It is the first one that has been erected in the Province we believe. Mr. M. very politely gave us the following information: "The engine is six horse power; it drives one run of stones, with all the machinery necessary to fit the flour for the barrel; it consumes two cords of wood in twenty-four hours, and in that period will grind enough of wheat to produce twenty-five barrels of fine flour. At present, two men only are employed—viz: a Miller and a Fireman—Those two men attend sixteen hours out of the twenty-four—and grind and pack seventeen barrels of flour every day. Mr. M. was not positive how much the whole cost, but judges it was about 1000*l.*"

"Thus has a spirited individual set an example, which if followed up, will render us independent of water falls the best of which in this district has been monopolized.

Mr. Martindale has a Wind-mill (upon the most modern improved plan) in great forwardness in this Town. It will soon be ascertained whether wind or steam will answer the best.

EXTRAORDINARY NARRATIVE.

THE MASK.

A TRUE STORY.

Count T——, chamberlain of the Duke of B——g, lost, by a sudden and violent fever, his young, beautiful, and amiable consort, with whom he had lived scarcely a year in uninterrupted conjugal felicity. This heavy affliction reduced him to the brink of despair. He himself was still young, rich, respected by many, envied by more, distinguished by his rank, and in a still higher degree by the favour of his sovereign; had he but signified his pleasure, all the young females about the court would have been ready to offer him their hands. This, however, afforded him no consolation. Notwithstanding his illustrious descent, he was so unfortunate as to possess a sensible heart, and was almost unable to support the Duke and many others engaged in conversation with him, strove to appear, at least, somewhat more cheerful than usual. Rather more than two hours had elapsed when, still near the person of the prince, and fatigued with continually walking about, and perhaps also from secret disgust, he reclined a few moments against the cornice of a stove that was in the centre of the hall, and which afforded the most advantageous view of the whole gay and motly throng.

He had not been there long before a female mask, that passed twice or thrice close to him, drew his attention; it was a black domino, with a white mask, which completely covered the whole face. She walked quite alone; she had nothing particularly remarkable in her dress, though it was perfectly neat and new, nor any thing glaring or splendid about her person; but in her tall, elegant figure, in her step, air, and movements, the Count imagined that he discovered a great resemblance to his deceased wife. At length she reclined against a pillar exactly opposite to him, and equally unconcerned about the crowd and the bustle around her, seemed to fix her eyes upon him alone. An unaccountable anxiety took possession of his soul, and overpowered by involuntary curiosity, he looked steddastly at the figure. The Prince observing him change countenance, at length inquired what was the matter.

POSTSCRIPT.

Having waited the arrival of the last mail—we find the rumour of Ferdinand of Spain being in possession of the French, and of the destruction of the constitutional cause, which has obtained within the last few days—still to want sufficient confirmation. But it is true; that Ballasteros has gone over to the French, and it is very probable that Corunna has fallen—as it was suffering a tremendous cannonade, and was on fire in three places, at the time the latest despatch was written.—Notwithstanding this intelligence—Mina continues to perform wonders—and the fortresses near the Pyrennees are still bravely defended.—It is confidently asserted, in the London Papers, that an arrangement will speedily take place between the Cortes and the Duke of Angoulême—by which the troubles of the Peninsula will terminate for the present.

DEATH OF THE POPE.

Pope Pius the 7th, after having received the sacrament of Extreme Unction, from the hands of Cardinal Bertozzoli, lost the power of speech, and expired at half past 5 o'clock, on the morning of the 19th of August; his last words, in refusing to take a refreshing beverage offered to him, were:—"I have now no other care on this earth but that of my soul, and to render unto God, an account of my long life."

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on Monday the seventeenth day of November next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the second day of October instant, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the seventeenth day of November next, at which time, at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye, that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on Tuesday, the Eleventh day of November, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, FOR THE ACTUAL DESPATCH OF PUBLIC BUSINESS; there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereto do as may seem necessary.—and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed.—WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, the ninth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred, and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

P. M.

By His Excellency's Command,
D. CAMERON.
Secy.

J. B. Robinson, Att'y. Gen'l.

Government House,
Oct. 14th, 1823.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has been pleased to make the following appointment.—

JOHN BUNT, Gent. to be a Deputy Land Surveyor in this Province.

TO MILITIA PENSIONERS.

THE Agent for Paying Militia Pensions, hereby gives notice, that he will commence the payment of Pensions from this date, for the year ending the 31st of December, 1823.

Militia Pension Office,
York, 4th October, 1823. } 14w—42.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been with held from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of the date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations on Land, hereto from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

— INDEX AT FRONT.

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of Port Hope, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick, Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the bridge.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed-rooms.—The Kitchin is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 48 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to John Brown, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 1—f.

WINDSOR, July 25.

Royal Banquet.—Yesterday afternoon, his Majesty, with his usual attendants rode out on horse-back for a considerable time, in the Great Park. In the evening his Majesty gave a splendid banquet to a numerous party of distinction, amongst whom were his Royal Highness the Duke of York, the Duke of Devonshire, Dorset and Wellington, Prince Esterhazy, Marquises Conyngham and Exeter, the Marchioness, Lady Elizabeth, and Lord Francis Conyngham, Earl and Countess Cowper, Earl of Fife, Lord and Lady Granville, Lord and Lady Morpeth, and Miss Howard, Lord and Lady Graves, and Miss Graves, Lord and Lady Gwydyr, Lord St Helens, Colonel Thornton, Mr. Luscelles, &c. &c. &c. The band of the Oxford Blues attended in the Conservatory, which was beautifully lighted up on the outside. After the banquet, which was of the most rare and costly description, the whole suite of rooms were thrown open and music and dancing formed the principal features of the evening's entertainment. At a late hour the Duke of York returned to town. The other guests all remained; those who could not be accommodated in the Royal Cottage being conveyed in his Majesty's carriage to Cumberland Lodge, where apartments had been provided for them. It is said that a similar entertainment will take place this evening, and to morrow.

The idea of giving a fete champetre, which was entertained for some time, has been relinquished in consequence of the excessive rains having rendered the beautiful lawn and pleasure grounds of the Royal Lodge too damp for an entertainment of that description this season. It as been reported that the Majesty was giving a public breakfast yesterday; consequently the passing of so many Noble Personages and splendid equipages through Staines and Egham, though it occasioned considerable bustle, created no surprise, the country folks only wondered that the King should breakfast so late.

Mr. Huskisson has been presented with the Freedom of Liverpool.

Mr. Rothschild gave lately a grand dinner to upwards of 300 of the Nobility and Gentry, at his seat Stamford-hill; among the numerous party invited, the following were present:—His Highness Prince Esterhazy, Prince Polignac, Count Lieven, Baron de Werther, Count de Front, Baron Just, Earl of Liverpool, &c. A new and superb ball room was opened upon the occasion. The supper was elegant, and the fruits and wines were of the choicest kind. After supper, dancing was resumed, nor did the company quit the festive scene till an early hour yesterday morning, highly delighted with the kind attentions of the worthy host and a suitable hostess.

It is in contemplation to add to the extensive improvements at the West end of the town, by throwing open the Green Park to terminate the view from Pall Mall, by a removal of the buildings at the bottom of Cleveland-row,

Pacific Intentions.—In London Times, of the 15th of August, contains a decree of the King of Prussia, dated June 5th, which states that his Majesty has "resolved to introduce representative assemblies into the monarchy, and to that end to establish Provincial Assemblies in the spirit of the ancient German Constitution, such as the peculiar situation of the country, and the spirit of the times require." As this proceeds from the sovereign, we presume it will meet with the sanction of the "Holy Alliance."

Minute Cotton Spinners!—A Gentleman at Kirkcaldy, (Scotland) has two mice which can earn 5d per diem, by spinning cotton; and he is training others to the same service. If the mouse who is a complete cotton spinner could be brought to communicate the art to the unskilled mouse, a community of these creatures would, perhaps, in time, be considered as valuable as a hive of bees.

Lessons of Murder Death and Destruction!—A regular frequenter of the Theatres of the Boulevards at Paris, has, for his amusement, made a calculation of the Mock dramatic crimes and misfortunes of the principal performers of those Theatres. According to his calculation, Pantin has been stabbed 16,302 times; Marty has undergone 11,000 poisonings with variation s; Fresnoy has suffered death 27,000 times, in various ways; Mademoiselle Adelo Dupuis has been fourteenly a duced, carried off, drowned, or otherwise destroyed 75,000 times; Madame Leveque has been tried for her life no less than 64,000 times; and Mademoiselle Olivier, who has been but a very short time on the stage, has already emptied the chalice of guilt and vengeance 1600 times. Here then are 769,902 crimes and punishments to be divided among five persons, who nevertheless enjoy universal respect and excellent health. Such a calculation applied to a Siddons, a Kemble, or Garrick, &c. &c. would be enormous.

Fatal Duel in France.—Some little time since an English Baronet, who is well known in the sporting circles, had words one evening with a French officer in Paris. The parties met the next morning, Colonel L. being second to the Baronet. The Frenchman fired first, and his ball passed through his antagonist's hat. The Baronet then shot him through the pistol-arm, and observing that he was wounded, desired that they should proceed no further. The officer, however, insisted that he was still able to pull a trigger, and that if one bar ret left the ground while that was the case, he would post him throughout Paris as a coward.—" he baronet, whose courage has always stood pre-eminent, observed, that he trusted that both their reputations were unassailable on that head, and persisted in urging the termination of the affair as it stood, which only made his opponent the more violent. Being again under the necessity of recoming his station, he said to Colonel L. " I must shoot against my de'ence," to which the Colonel answered, "You have no alternative." The baronet accordingly made his distress and the ball passing through his adversary's head, he convulsively leapt a considerable height, and turning over, fell dead. On this unhappy event, the baronet and his second prudentially retired to Montpelier till the affair had blown over, when it being generally understood that the officer was the aggressor, and no proceedings being instituted, they again fixed their residence in Paris.

DRESDEN, July 25.

An important investigation is carrying on in the University of Leipsig; a kind of pilgrimage made there by some students from Halle, excited suspicions of secret associations, and led to energetic measures. Since that, an Inn-keeper at Stetwitz struck a Polish gentleman who was a student at Leipsig. A hundred students (only a small part of those who are at Leipsig) then went to Stetwitz, forced their way into the inn, which was barricaded, tore the billiard table, broke the looking glasses; and in short, destroyed all the furniture, so that the damage is estimated at 500 crowns.

Merchant Ships of England.—The number of English merchantmen is computed at near 23,000 manned by near 160,000 sailors.

The Young Duke of Brunswick.—The guardianship of his Britannic Majesty over the person and dominions of the young Duke of Brunswick will terminate on the 30th October next, when the Duke will assume the reigns of government.

Awful.—A circumstance occurred at Hereford, on Thursday se'nnight which excited a very great sensation throughout the place, and shows upon what a frail tenure we hold our mortal existence. The Rev. Mr. Hopkins, late curate of Bylord, in this country, was to have married a Mrs.——, a widow, at the cathedral church of this city. The parties attended at the customary hour, and proceeded to the alter.—The solemn service commenced, and was proceeded in, till the bridegroom took the ring out of his pocket, to place it on the finger of his bride, but just at the moment when she extended her hand to receive the token of their union, he suddenly fell back, and after a fit of convulsions, which lasted but a moment, he lay on the ground a cold corpse! The attempt to describe the alarm which prevailed would be only to fail. The half wedded bride was conveyed home in a state of grief that is not to be expressed, and the body of the bridegroom was carried on a bier to a neighbouring tavern (the Red Lion) where an inquest was held the same night, by the coroner; and the jury returned a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God." It is an extraordinary fact that the late husband of the intended bride dropped down dead.—Liverpool Mercury.

Return of Mr Rask from Asia.—Professor Rask, of the University of Copenhagen, set out on a journey to Asia six years ago, chiefly with an intention of investigating the relations which exist, or which have existed, between the languages of India and Persia on the one hand, and those of the Gothic and Germanic nations on the other. Mr. Rask has brought with him a great many manuscripts in Sanscrit, Zend, Bengal, and Persian, among which are four copies of the Zendavesta, very different from that which M. Anquetil translated. He has made researches in Pali writings as well as into the Cuneiform writing of Babylon and Persepolis.—Lit. Gazette.

INDEX AT FRONT.

SPANISH AFFAIRS.

By the Marmion which left Havre on the 1st of Sept.

A French telegraphic communication announced the capitulation of Corunna, which event is stated to have taken place on the 14th of August; and it is added in a Paris article that Morillo has sent an aid with the articles of capitulation to the Regency. The terms, especially as to the rank of those granted to Morillo. Gen. Bourck was to enter Corunna on the 17th, where he would leave four battalions, and the marine forces on the station would thereupon proceed to Cadiz.

From the narrative of events given in the papers, as they occurred at Corunna from the 2d to the 11th of August, it appears that the besieged had a severe time of it. On the 3d a captain of artillery was killed in the street by a musket ball,—an officer of engineers was also killed, and several inhabitants wounded, including some children.

The aqueducts were destroyed, and the supply of water for the city cut off by the French—bread became dear, and vegetables were not to be had; —the finest part of the city inhabited by the merchants were greatly injured by the batteries opened upon the town from the neighbouring hills; and the cries of the women and children during the night were dreadful. On the 9th the French frigates arrived in the bay;—on the 8th and 9th the firing ceased;—and on the 11th, intelligence was received in Corunna that Vigo had been abandoned. In an official despatch dated the 13th, Gen. Bourck observes with respect to a flag sent by the Constitutionalists of Corunna, soliciting an armistice—"they have high pretensions; and require that I shall declare that they have done their duty, and obeyed Ferdinand VII. They are desirous of putting themselves under the protection of the Duke d'Angouleme, but did not want to hear a sylable about the Regency."

On the 14th of Aug. and attack was made by the land and Naval forces of the French, upon Algesiras, which capitulated the same day. The attack by land, was conducted by a son of Marshal Lauriston. In the official account of one of the French captains, he states that their loss was very inconsiderable, and that not a single officer was wounded. They were preparing to make an attact on Tariffa. [Algesiras is a strong town in Andalusia, on the straights of Gibraltar, 10 miles N. W. of that fortress.]

The Duke d'Angouleme arrived at Seville on the 14th of August, where it is said, he was received with every demonstration of public rejoicing. He left the same evening for Port Santa Maria, where he arrived on the 16th, and established his head quarters. On the 18th he inspected all the lines of circumvallation before Cadiz and the island, accompanied by his staff, and was well satisfied with the dispositions. The reinforcements brought by the Duke, it was supposed would impart fresh activity to the operations against Cadiz. On the same day M. de la Hitte, an Aid of the Duke's, was despatched to Cadiz with a flag, and a letter to the King. He had a long interview with Admiral Valdes, and the letter of which he was the bearer, (and which he did not choose to confide to the Ministers of the King of Spain, but selected a general to convey it to him,) was delivered, and the message returned. Preparations for the bombardment of Cadiz were going on rapidly. Fifteen gun boats, bomb vessels, &c. had descended the Guadalquiver, and others were to follow. In the mean time there are so many reports of attempts at negociation, that we cannot disbelieve the whole. One account says that immediately on the removal of the Duke, he sent a flag with propositions that might lead to an arrangement between the belligerent parties. An answer was required in twenty hours. A reply was immediately returned to the Prince that this term was too limited, and it is said his Royal Highness granted them five days. Three days having elapsed since the departure of the flag of truce without his returning, a favourable result was anticipated from this delay. Another account says the government refused to receive any propositions, unless they came through the British government. Several Portuguese vessels had arrived at Port St. Mary with provisions. The Court of Lisbon gives all the assistance in its power to the French.

The session of the Cortes was closed at Cadiz on the 5th of August, by the President. Accounts from Cadiz by way of Havana, informs us that on this occasion the king made a speech from the throne, in which he spoke with great confidence of the final triumph of the Constitution, and animadverted severely on the conduct of the French government. The treason of Abisbal was alluded to in strong terms. The Cortes replied to the King, responding his sentiments, and then adjourned; both parties apparently reposing confidence in each other. A permanent commission is named, at the head of which is General Calava. It is inferred that from the adjournment of the Cortes, no immediate dangers are apprehended by them—if such were their impressions, the sittings would have been permanent. Letters from London, received by one of the first banking houses in Paris, announce that before the close of the Cortes, there was a majority of 86 to 16, in favour of the hearing and discussing of the propositions made on the part of France by the Prince Generalissimo.

On the 3d of August, Riego left Cadiz with 2000 men, with the design of gaining Malaga; but the fire of the French batteries, and soon after the musketry from the French and Allied army, promptly made him retreat. Riego had attempted a sortie by sea a day two previous, but failed, and the French fleet captured several boats

Mina yet carries a high head, and an undaunted crest in Catalonia—and declares that he would set fire to every town in Spain rather than surrender to the French.

A PANTHER.

On Sunday the 6th ult. Mr. Benjamin Wilson, passing along the road near Georges Creek and Saluda river in this district, saw a Panther, and stopt to view him. He was crouched down, watching some hogs near him, and he saw him jump upon one of them, which he instantly killed. Mr. Wilson immediately gave notice to some of his neighbors, and they went in pursuit. When they arrived at the place, they measured the distance, which was forty feet, from the spot on which the Panther stood, to the place he alighted on the hog, which he carried above two hundred yards to a place of deposit, where they found parts of four or five more. The dogs ran him near a mile before he ran up a tree, when Mr. Wilson shot him in the breast, and he died instantly. He measured right feet from the top of the nose to the tip of the tail. It is supposed that the firing of the cannon on the Table Rock had driven him from his usual haunt, down into the settlement, where perhaps such an animal had never before been seen at that season of the year.

From the President of the New York Lyceum of Natural History, to the Members, dated New-York, September 11, 1825.

THE VAMPIRE OF THE OCEAN.

On the 8th day of September, 1825, returned from a cruise of Delaware Bay, the fishing smack Una. She had sailed about three weeks before from New York, for the express purpose of catching an enormous fish, which had been reported to frequent the ocean a few leagues beyond Cape May and Cape Henlopen.—The adventurers in this bold enterprize have been successful, they have brought for the enlargement of science and the gratification of curiosity, an uncommon inhabitant of the deep, which has never been seen on the land before.

The creature is one of the huge individuals of the race, or legion, as having a story to itself, from its novelty and peculiarity, into a new genus, between that, the Squalus, and the Acipenser. Its strength was such that after the body had been penetrated by two strong and well formed gigs of the best tempered iron, the shank of one of them was broken off, and the other singularly bent. The boat, containing the three intrepid men, John Patchen, Theophilus Beebe, and William Potter, was connected, after the deadly instrument had taken hold, with the wounded inhabitant of the deep, by a strong warp or line. The celerity with which the fish smam, could only be compared to that of the harpooned whale, dragging the boat after it with such speed as to cause a wave to rise on each side of the furrow in which he moved, several feet higher than the boat itself.

The weight of the fish after death was such, that three pair of oxen, one horse, and twenty-two men, all pulling together, with the surge of the Atlantic wave to help, could not convey it far to the dry beach. It was estimated from this, and a probable estimate, to equal four tons and a half, or perhaps five tons.

The size was enormous; for the distance from the extremity of one wing, or pectoral fin to the other, expanded like the wing of an eagle, measures. 18 feet.

Over the convexity of the back, and on the right line of the belly, 16 feet.

The distance from the snout to the end of the tail, 14 feet.

Length of the tail, 4 feet.

Width of the mouth, 2 ft. 9 in.

The operation of combat and killing lasted nine hours. It was a heroic achievement, and was witnessed by crowds of citizens, on the shores of New Jersey and Delaware, and by the persons on board the flotilla of vessels in the bay and offing.

During the scuffle, the wings, side flaps, or vast slated fin of the monster, lashed the sea with such vehemence that the spray rose to the neight of thirty feet, and rained round to the distance of fifty feet. It was a tremendous encounter. On shore all was awe and expectation.

Mr. Patchen, whose taste and zeal in zoology are well known, has attended very much to the manners of the Vampire of the Ocean, to the preservation of the skin and external parts, to the osteology and skeleton, the internal organizations and in short, to every circumstance that was practicable during such a hazardous business and the tempestuous weather which distressed them almost from the beginning to the end of their voyage.

I merely mention before I lay down my pen, that this animal is viviparous, and of course connects fishes with mammiferous animals; and that the reseperatory, motory, generative and sensitive organs, present an extraordinary amount of rare and interesting particulars. Incomprehensible as well as wonderful are thy works, O Creator! in consummate sagacity thou hast exented them all!

This is but an outline; I intend to finish this sketch; and prepare it as well as I can for the Society's formal notice.

While I express full approbation of our friends, whom neither difficulty nor danger could discourage, I utter a further sentiment, that they may be well repaid by their intended exhibition.

SAMUEL L. MITCHELL.

It is a singular circumstance, and worthy the attention of the naturalist, that in the early period when there was no hot houses, and when the climate is generally supposed to have been much colder than it is now, England contained a number of vineyards within its boundaries, and produced grape wine apparently of as good a quality as that which is concocted by the genial suns of a more southern sky. Nothing remains of these vineyards but the places named from them; one near Tewkesbury, at present called the Vineyard, and another on a rising hill near Gloucester.

Rattle Snakes—A few days since, Mr. Ralph Morgan, of Granby, and Mr. J. W. Perse, of Belchertown, killed 13 of these venomous reptiles, the largest of which was 4 ft. 8 in. long and had 10 rattles.

The Lycoming Gazette states, that 150 of these Snakes were killed in a den on the 4th ult. on the Driftwood branch of the Sinnamahoning creek by Messrs. John and Michael Spangler whilst out gathering whortleberries. This family consisted of 2 males, 14 females, and 134 young ones all in one den. The length of the largest was about 4 feet, and that of the smallest from 8 to 10 inches.

HANNAH MORE.

We arrived at Barley Wood about noon, and were kindly and politely received by Martha More, the only sister, and domestic companion of the author. Their situation is delightful. The cottage, as it is called, though covered with thatch, is extremely neat and tasteful; and both within and without, wears all the appearance of simple elegance. It occupies a situation, on the gentle declivity of an eminence, and commands a view of the village of Wrington, a short distance below, and a richly variegated country, within an extensive horison.—The selection of this spot, the plan of the cottage, and the arrangement of the grounds, are due to the ingenuity and talent of the two sisters, and reflect the highest credit upon their taste and judgment. In the short conversation we had with Martha More, before her sister joined us, the former spoke much of the latter, and appeared as much interested in the reputation of her works, and as highly to enjoy their celebrity, as the author herself could do. The latter soon came in and took us by the hand, with great ease and urbanity. She congratulated my friend W. as an old friend, whom she had not seen for a considerable time. A table was placed in the middle of the room, around which we all seated ourselves, and, as I was introduced to them as an American, the conversation turned upon that quarter of the globe. The charitable and religious institutions of our country were inquired after by Hannah, with the zeal of one who feels a lively concern for the good of mankind, in every part of the world.—She showed us a letter she received from a deaf and dumb child of Dr. C. of Hartford, Connecticut, accompanied by an explanatory letter from the worthy principal of the institution in that town, for the instruction of the deaf and dumb. The letters had given her much pleasure. The cause of Bible Societies she has much at heart, and is decidedly opposed, though a firm Church woman, to the restrictive principles advocated by some of the mitred heads of the establishment.—She had just given a notable demonstration of her zeal in this cause. The anniversarly of the Auxiliary Society of the neighbourhood, was held last week, and she and her sister gave a dinner and a tea entertainment to the whole community. There were no less than 103 persons partook of the dinner, and 388 sat down to tea. As many as the cottage would hold were accommodated in it; and the rest were served upon the lawn, around it. Among them were thirty-seven clergymen, and the Bishop of Glouster. Notwithstanding she is at the age of 75, and has endured many attacks of disease, she went yesterday twenty-two miles to attend a Sunday School. Her constitution, (or, as she termed it, her muscular power,) she said, was very strong, for it had carried her, with the blessing of Providence through the assaults of twenty mortal diseases. She acknowledged, that she had been much opposed to America, during the revolutionary struggle, but admitted that we had many worthy characters among us.

The native strength of her mind has enabled her to surmount most of the prejudices arising from political opposition; but it was SURPRISING, from the conversation of these worthy ladies, that the want of that more exact information, which can only be obtained by proximity and intimacy, tends to keep alive the prejudices, which sprang from the contest of independence, and which, not only the true interests of both nations, but every principle of virtue should induce us to suppress. These two ladies are the survivors of a family of five sisters, who formerly lived in Bristol, and subsequently at Bath. Some of them were the managers of a distinguished female school, by which they increased the means of their support. They all possessed talents above mediocrity; but Hannah is alone celebrated for her literary productions. She was warmly beloved by them all; proving, that her talents have ever been associated with amiable qualities, and with true goodness of heart. Her search after Happiness, and Sacred Dramas, she told me were the juvenile productions of seventeen; and written with the intention to contract the growing custom of introducing into female boarding schools, plays of an improper tendency, and allowing them to be acted by the pupils. Her views, she thought, had been successful. She and her surviving sister retired some years ago to this spot, which they found in a state wild and uncultivated. They selected it, for the beauty and healthiness of its situation; and had they surveyed all the south of England, it is questionable whether they could have found a situation more truly delightful. The village at the foot of the hill, contains an old Gothic church, and provides them with all the facilities of mere neighbourhood, at a convenient distance. The house is large enough for all the purposes of domestic comfort and hospitality. The walls of the sitting room, below, are ornamented with the portraits of their most distinguished friends. On our attention being turned to them, the characters of the individuals, and particularly their most valuable qualities, were adverted to by Hannah More, with a warmth and energy, which proved that age had not diminished the force of her early recollections, nor the ardour of her friendship. Among these favourites I noticed, particularly, the likenesses of Wm. Wilberforce, Elizabeth Carter, Richard Reynolds, and ——Henderson, the celebrated youthful genius of Bristol. In one corner of the room, was a picture, which had been sent her from Geneva. It was a descriptive scene from one of the most interesting passages of Corleba.—Lucilla in the attitude of prayer at the bed side of her poor sick neighbour. Herbed-chamber, into which we were introduced for the sake of a more complete prospect of the country, contained her library, which I should estimate at least at a thousand vols. It consists of the most select and valuable works upon theology and general literature. She showed us a letter, from a Russian princess written with her own hand, in broken English, solely to acknowledge the satisfaction and benefit which the works of Hannah More had afforded her. We were gratified too, with seeing a translation of Corleba in the German language, and splendidly bound copy of it in French, sent to her as a present from the continent. Industry is doubtless one of the habitual virtues of these worthy sisters. Besides the numerous literary productions of the elder, and the extensive charitable offices in which they are engaged, every thing within and about the cottage,—the furniture, the needle-work, the flowers, bear the impression of taste and activity.

We pursued the winding of a gravelled walk among the shrubbery, and reposed ourselves on seats in rustic arbours, from which glimpses are obtained of the expanded valley below. In an open spot, at one of the turns of the walk, was a neat but plain monument, to the memory of Bishop Portaus, who had been their particular friend; and in another, a more costly stone was erected to the memory of John Locke. This was a present to these sisters from Lady Montague; and a very appropriate place it is for its erection; for, in an old thatched house adjoining the church yard in the village of Wrington, at the foot of the hill, did that great man draw his first breath. His mother, while travelling, was constrained to take up her residence in this house, until her new born child was old enough for her to pursue the journey.

We all left Barley Wood, with feelings of much satisfaction from the visit. Mine was not diminished, by carrying with me a present of a copy of "Christian Morals," from the hands of the author, given as a memorandum of the visit, and in which she wrote my name in an excellent hand, without spectacles. It is rare, indeed, to find so much vivacity of manners, at so advanced a period of life, as these ladies possess. They are fond of a country life. Hannah remarked to us, that the only natural pleasures which remained to her in their full force, were the love of the country, and of flowers.

EXTRAORDINARY NARRATIVE.

THE MASK.

A TRUE STORY.

Concluded from our last.

"Of nothing, your serene highness, nothing at all; I only saw yonder a mask that interests me. I should like to know who it is"

"Why not address her then, you are at liberty, Count, to go and come back as often as you please; it gives me satisfaction to see you take an earnest in something"

The chamberlain followed his advice. But the mask, though it was impossible she could have heard what had passed in a whisper between them, seemed to anticipate the intention of the Count, and purposely to avoid him. Scarcely did he advance towards her, before she quitted her station, and took refuge in the thickest of the crowd; the farther she removed, the more eager was Count T— in the pursuit; every one instantly made way, as may easily be conceived, for the favourite of the Prince. At last she could no longer avoid him without evidently giving offence. He addressed her with one of the usual masquerade questions, which, perfectly unmeaning in themselves, signify nothing more than,—"Mask, I do not know you, but should like to hear you speak." Her reply was as short and indifferent as his question. These few words, however, startled him; he fancied that the voice exactly resembled that of her whose image was still ever present to his mind. He suppressed his astonishment, and again addressed her. She answered all his questions with the utmost politeness, but always in a certain melancholy tone, which corresponded but too well with that of his own mind. At length he offered her his arm to walk about the hall; she accepted it; but when she took hold of him, though very gently, an involuntary shudder thrilled his frame. In despite of this sensation, he proceeded. "Why, beauteous mask," said he, "do you touch me with so timid a hand? perhaps my proposal to conduct you may not be agreeable?"

"On the contrary, it is most agreeable; you, Count, are the only person in the hall to whom I could say so."

"Your politeness puts me to the blush.—Have we ever been in each other's company before?"

"Yes, often; both here and in other places; masked and unmasked."

"You must know me, then?"

"Intimately?"

"I once flattered myself that I did; now I hope so still more than before."

"And do I know you?"

"Most certainly you do?"

"Extraordinary!—And your name; might I not be permitted to know that?"

"You might; but the knowledge of it cannot now be attended with any advantage, but would rather prove injurious to you."

"Injurious!—your name injurious!—Can any name prove injurious to me?—Incomprehensible! impossible!"

"But yet too true!—You are here for the purpose of diverting yourself; a single word from me might awaken the most painful sensations."

Such was the commencement of a conversation which every moment grew more interesting and more obscure for the unhappy Count, which filled his heart with inexpressible anxiety, and which, nevertheless, he could not prevail upon himself to break off. He returned the conversation to various long past occurrences of his life; the mask knew them all with a precision and accuracy that nothing could surpass; nay, she even recalled to his memory many a little trait that he himself had forgotten. At length he began to speak, with an inward tremor, of the felicity he enjoyed in the conjugal state. The mask was silent, or replied only in monosyllables. Her voice seemed to become fainter. When the Count urged her to tell him, whether she knew any thing relative to this subject, she exclaimed, "Why should I tear open wounds which still bleed in my own bosom? You are insensible Count, deeply sensible of what you have lost. But as you have again made your appearance here, you seem already to be looking round you for consolation and oblivion." He thought that, on these words, she would have disengaged herself from him, but he held her too firmly.

"By all that is sacred!" cried the Count, and in a louder tone than was suited to such a place, "I will not let you go incomprehensible woman, who are you? and whence come you?"

A motion with her right hand towards heaven served instead of an answer, and seemed to say "From above."

The Count could scarcely restrain the tumult of his feelings. Seating himself with her in a corner of the hall, lest they should excite the notice, and become the butt of the company, he employed all the powers of his eloquence, and summoned to his aid all the promises he could think of, to prevail on her either to tell him her name, or what would be still more agreeable, to unmask. She long refused, or rather kept silence. At last, when he conjured her by all that is sacred on earth or in heaven, and if she had ever loved, by the object of her affection, she answered, but still not without apparent reluctance; "Well, your request shall be granted. I will unmask, but not here. If you know of any safe and retired apartment in the palace, and still persist in your curiosity, conduct me to it."—He instantly rose. "But, I fear, Count," continued she, "or rather, I am certain, that you will repent your obstinacy." Instead of replying, he offered her his arm.

They departed.—One out of the suite of apartments that ran the length of the hall, was opened without hesitation, for the favourite of the Prince. They entered; the mask first looked round to see whether they were alone. Having satisfied herself on this point, she once more asked her conductor, if he wished to see her real countenance.—"Yes, yes; I implore it as the greatest of favours."—"Be it so!" She removed the mask, and Count T—— sunk, as if thunderstruck, upon the floor,—for he beheld—a death's head.

"You can judge for yourself," my fair Oracle said,
But by ev'ry kind pow'r that's above me,
An answer less apt, could be rarely convey'd,

The PARLIAMENT of LOWER CANADA meets for the DESPATCH OF BUSINESS on the 25th of NOVEMBER next.

At the NEW CASTLE ASSIZES, which commenced on the 29th ult and terminated on the 1st inst. Nathanial M'Leau was convicted of horse stealing, and sentenced to be hanged on the 14th of November. At the same Court, a person named Hoffman was sentenced to be whipped and banished for 7 years for passing counterfeit bills of the Bank of Canada. He had in his possession about 4000 dollars.

On Friday during the last assizes in Quebec, the trial of William Pounden, for the murder of AGNES MORRISON, the wife of Donald M'Kay, Shoe-maker, of this city, commenced at 9 in the morning, and continued till six in the afternoon, when the Court adjourned till the following morning, and the Jurors were accommodated at the New Inn, kept by Mr. Haydon, where they remained that night under charge of Constables sworn for that purpose; the Court met according to adjournment on Saturday morning and continued sitting till 6 o'clock of the same evening, when it was again adjourned till Monday morning, the Jury being sent under the same charge as the preceding evening to Mr. Haydon's, where they remained till 9 o'clock yesterday morning, when the trial proceeded. Two confessions of the Prisoner taken officially before the Coroner on the 5th and 6th of June last, were read to the Jury, the Court having over-ruled an opposition to their being produced, taken by the Hon. Mr. Primrose, Counsel for the Prisoner, on Saturday evening, at which time the arguments of the Attorney General and himself respectively had been heard.

The defence took up the rest of the day till about half past three o'clock, when the Chief Justice delivered a most clear and impartial charge to the Jury who retired at a quarter past 5 in the afternoon, and at 6 o'clock returned a verdict of GUILTY.

A motion in arrest of judgment, was made by the prisoner's Counsel, and over-ruled by the Court. His Honor the Chief Justice then proceeded in the most impressive manner, to pass sentence of DEATH upon the prisoner, to be carried into execution on Wednesday, next. We however, understand that it was intimated by the Court to the Attorney-General and the Prisoner's Counsel, that, under the provisions of the Provincial Act, they would grant a respite for a short period.

Kingston, October 5th, 1823.

MELANCHOLY WRECK of the brig Monarch, of Aberdeen, Alexander Martin, Master, on St. Paul's Island, in the Gulph of St. Lawrence.

On Sunday morning, the 14th Sept. at A. M. the Monarch, bound from Newry to Quebec, in a thick fog and wind southerly, struck on a sunken rock, on the south east side of the Island of St Paul; but fortunately for the crew and passengers she beat over it and came in contact with the cliffs of the Island. There were thirty persons on board when the vessel struck, twelve of them seamen, the others passengers; five of whom were drowned, and many of the remainder dreadfully wounded by the rocks. The Captain and crew, who were particularly active in their endeavours to save the lives of the passengers, fortunately sustained but trifling injury. The method they adopted to get on shore, was by cutting away the masts which fell on the rocks and by the greatest exertions twenty-five of their number succeeded in getting to land. The vessel held together but ten minutes after they were landed, and the whole of the passengers and part of the crew being at rest, when she struck, they were consequently cast naked on shore. In this deplorable state they remained three days on the Island without and thing to subsist on but a few pieces of pork which fortunately floated on shore from the wreck, and which they were obliged to eat raw: some clothing which also came on shore assisted, in part to cover their nakedness. Luckily, on the morning of the 17th the ship Generous Planter, of London, from this port, hove in sight off the Island, and perceiving their signals, succeeded in bringing them all on board, and rescuing them from their perilous situation. The Captain (Woodford) afforded them every assistance which their distresses required, and is deserving of the greatest praise for his humane and gentlemanly conduct towards them. The Captain, Mate and one passenger, went home in the Generous Planter; the remainder have arrived here in the Sir James Kempt, to which vessel they were transferred by Capt. Woodford. Capt. Stewart, of the Sir J Kempt, rendered them every assistance which his means would allow, and is equally entitled to their gratitude.

Two of these passengers, were preachers one of them Presbyterian, and the other of the Methodist persuasion.

A subscription List is open at the Exchange for the relief of the surviving sufferers by the above wreck, who from the loss of their all, may justly be considered fit objects for public commiseration and beneficence.—Communicated.

Our King and the Emperor Alexander.—The Emperor Alexander has presented four beautiful horses to his Majesty. We should think this a proof of a friendly understanding existing between the two countries.

We are happy to learn by the last arrivals that his Majesty now enjoys excellent health.

Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington sailed from Dover on the 21st for the Netherlands, to perform his annual inspection of the fortifications. This of course gives a veto to the report of his intended journey to Cadiz.

How to Pickle Flour!—A barrel of flour, which evidently had been in the ocean several years, as it was completely covered with barnacles and grass, was picked up, in the South Pacific Ocean, by a whaling ship—On opening it, it was found to be in a state of preservation, and not more than an inch of it injured by the water. It came to hand timely, as the ship's company was in great distress for want of bread.—Boston Paper.

SLAVE TRADE—STARVATION OF NEGROES.

Extracts from the last reports respecting the progress of efforts to suppress the Slave Trade, on the coast of Africa, forwarded to the Admiralty and to Earl Bathurst, by Sir W. Mends.

Spanish schr. Yeanew, }
River Benny, April 16. }

"I have the honor to forward an account of my proceedings up this river. Having crossed the bar soon after day light yesterday, about 7 o'clock, I observed seven sail, (two schooners, four brigs, and one brigantine) lying at anchor off the town. When about four miles from them I hoisted the colours, and when I had advanced within long range, the two schooners, their broadsides having been previously brought to bear on us by springs on their cables, commenced firing without shewing any colours. They were immediately afterwards joined by two brigs and the brigantine under French colours. When I was near enough for the shot to take good effect, I returned the fire from the boats having guns, at the same time advancing under a heavy fire of round grape and musketry from these vessels, and in about 20 minutes from the commencement, succeeded in boarding and taking possession of the whole of them, as follows viz Spanish schr. Yeanan, 306 tons, eight long 18 pounders, two long nines, 55 men, and 380 slaves; Spanish schr. Becua, 180 tons, eight long 18 pounders, and one long nine, 45 men, and 300 slaves. French brig Vigilant, 240 tons, four 12 pounder carronades, (all of which were brought over on our side of the fence) 30 men, and 340 slaves. French brig Petite Betzoy, 184 tons, four 9 pound carronades, 25 men, and 218 slaves. French brigantine L'Ursule, 109 tons, four 9 pound carronades, 27 men and 247 slaves.

I have not been able to learn accurately the loss on their part, but from what I can understand, there were 16 killed, besides several badly wounded, on board this schooner. The slaves, I am sorry to say, suffered also from these dastardly Spaniards, when they themselves were afraid to stand, having put muskets into their hands, with which they fired up the hatchway, and were killed by our people in returning it.

The small schooner, when I took possession of her, had a lighted match hanging over the magazine hatch, left by the crew when they deserted her; and who, when no hope remained of their preventing her falling into our hands, merely to gratify a diabolical feeling of revenge for their defeat, would have blown up 300 poor fellows ironed in the hold. This fact will shew you of what these villains are capable; and makes me to credit the brag of some of them that had they got the better of us, it was their determination, if possible, to put us all to death

Memorandum.—The enclosed list proves most incontestibly the existance of the Slave Trade to an enormous extent on this coast; and the particular circumstances of atrocity which have come to light respecting the "San Jose Hallaza," also prove that its attendant horrors are not diminished. This vessel affords a striking display of the cold blooded villany of those who are engaged in the slave trade, and of the wretchedness and misery which their unfortunate victims are doomed to suffer.

The "San Jose Hallaza," under seven tons burthen, was captured by his majesty's brig "Thistle," in the river Calabar, and it appears by the acknowledgement of the master, that he shipped at Duke Ephraim's Town on that river thirty slaves; that he had gone to sea with that number on board, intending to proceed to Prince's Island, but not having been able to make that port, he had returned to Calabar, having his provisions and water nearly expended, after having been at sea five or six weeks.

During this voyage ten unfortunate objects of his avarice, not being able to procure sufficient nourishment to satisfy the cravings of nature, had been released from further sufferings by starvation. One poor female in the absence of food, had existed on salt water until her faculties were destroyed; and she became raving mad; but even the deplorable and affecting state of insanity did not shield her from the brutal outrage of her oppressors, who with the view of stifling her cries, by frequent repetition of the lash, literally flogged her to death. The owner of this vessel, and the purchaser of these human beings is A WOMAN! Donna Maria de Cruz daughter of the notorious Gomez, former Governor in the name of his Most Faithful Majesty of Prince's Island, and now holding the appointment of Fiscal and Member of Council.—This woman is known to the Mixed Commission Court, having been un-

Lieut. Hogan, with the greatest humanity, removed the surviving slaves on board his majesty's brig; and having found the San Jose not sea-worthy, ordered her to be destroyed."

The following is an original expedient of preserving unmolested the quietude of the grave.

"Curiosity drew together a crowd of people on Monday, at Dundee, to witness the funeral of a child, which was consigned to the grave in a novel manner. The father, in terror of the resurrection men, had caused a small box, enclosing some deathful apparatus, communicating, by means of wires, to the four corners, to be fastened on the top of the coffin. Immediately after it was lowered into the earth, a large quantity of gunpowder was put into the box, and the hidden machinery put into a state of readiness for execution. The common opinion was, that if any one attempted to raise the body, he would be blown up. The sexton seemed in dread of an immediate explosion, for he started back in alarm, after throwing in the first shovelful of earth."—Eng. Paper.

A good Lession for Duellists.—Two friends happening to quarrel at a tavern, one of them, a man of very hasty dispositions, insisted on the other's fighting him the next morning. The challenge was accepted, on condition that they should breakfast together previous to their going to the field, at the house of the challenged. When the challenger arrived the next morning, according to appointment he found every preparation for breakfast, and his friend, his wife, and children, all ready to receive him. Their repast being over, and the family withdrawn without any hint of the fatal purpose having transpired, the challenger asked the other if he was ready to attend. "No sir," replied he, "not till we are more upon a par; that amiable woman, and those six innocent children, who just now breakfasted with us, depend solely upon my life for assistance—and till you can stake something equal in my estimation to the welfare of seven persons, dearer to me than the apple of my eye, I cannot think we are equally matched."—"We are not indeed!" replied the other, giving him his hand, and they became firmer friends than ever.

DREADFUL VOLCANIC ERUPT[illegible]

The Government of Batavia has received a detailed account of the volcano Galoengoeng, October last. In this terrible visitation 4011 persons perished, and 114 campongs were destroyed and 5361 injured; the number of coffee-trees destroyed amount to 772,795, those injured to 3,871,742; 2,983 rice plantations were totally destroyed, and 5,361 injured.

MONEY.—The London Morning Chronicle of a late date, says:—" At present money is so abundant in the city, that applications are in vain made for mercantile acceptances, to be discounted at three per cent, and yet the capitalist finds even this low interest much better income than he could obtain by the employment of his property either in agriculture or manufactures "

It is calculated that the sum of 200 millions of reals in Spanish money, has been sent from France since the month of January, and that the sum of 100 millions of francs French money, is actually in circulation in the peninsula.

HANGING—an easy death.—" An animal, when first suspended, is observed to make repeated but ineffectual attempts to inspire; violent convulsions of the whole body then ensue, but which are not to be considered as the indications of suffering, for they arise in consequence of the dark coloured blood having reached the brain and spinal marrow; and the animal at this period is necessarily insensible: hanging does not occasion a painful death.

It would appear that it has been a very common thing in France, for criminals to recover after being hanged; and M. Modore has been enabled, from their reports, to prove distinctly, that of all deaths there cannot be a more easy one than that of the gibbet.

New Method of Making Jelly.—Press the juice from the fruit; add the proper proportion of sugar, and stir the juice and sugar until the sugar is completely melted; put it into jars, and in twenty-four hours, it will become of a proper consistence. By this means, the trouble of boiling is avoided, and the jelly retains more completely the flavor of the fruit. Care should be taken to stir the mixture until the sugar is completely melted, and fine sugar should be used.

New Species of Gas.—A London paper states, that a gentleman is about to take out a patent for making gas from ingredients not hitherto used, which will be cheaper and better than oil gas, without producing any noxious or dangerous effects It is said it will be well calculated for dwellings and stores, it being in no respect injurious to goods or furniture.

Pauperism in Europe.—Among the 178.000.000 individuals who inhabit Europe, there are said to be 17 000,000 beggars or persons who subsist at the expense of the community, without contributing to its resources. In Denmark, the proportion is five per cent. In England, 10 per cent. In Holland, 14 per cent In Paris, in 1813, 102.859 paupers out of 530,000. In Liverpool, 17,000 in the population of 80.000. In Amsterdam, 108,000 out of 217,000. The number of indigent persons has since rather increased than decreased.

The Admiralty have directed that no Purser of the Navy is to be entitled to half-pay until he has passed his accounts and is clear of debt; and that he shall not claim for half pay during the period which he might be in debt Pursers must also, by letters to the Navy Board, request to be placed upon the half pay list, when they are paid off.

A bill has been introduced into Parliament, and read a second time, entitled 'An Act for allowing persons charged with capital crimes to make their defence by Counsel" This is an important privilege, and was called for, we think as much on the score of humanity as of fairness.

DREADFUL OUTRAGE.—TWO PERSONS KILLED.

On Wednesday morning, (2d inst.) at a very early hour, one of those daring violations of the law so peculiar to the lower orders of this distracted country, attended with the loss of several lives, occurred in the parish of Castlehaven, within three miles of Skibbereen, in the west of this County. The facts, which we have from very competent authority, are as follow:—The Rector of the Parish, the Rev. R. Morrit, finding it impossible to obtain his tithes, there being three years due, and in the last year having experienced much opposition in obtaining them, he was determined to submit his case to the Bench of Magistrates assembled in Petty Session, from whom he received a warrant of distress, which was entrusted to his Proctor, who, with five other men, were appointed Special Constables, to execute it on the parties; and for the more effectual preservation of the peace, a party of the Police, consisting of Lieut Hawkshaw, four mounted and seven dismounted, stationed at Skibbereen were ordered to assist. Accordingly they proceeded to the ground, where they seized some cattle, which the country people, who assembled in great numbers, resisted, with showers of stones, when a dreadful scene ensued. The Police and Constables were obliged, in their own defence, having given up the idea of the cattle, to keep up a constant fire, which was as determinedly resisted by the country people with vollies of stones, which were kept up with such determination on their part, that the Police and Constables were obliged to retreat, leaving one of the Police named Bowen, and the proctor, named Driscoll, killed, and several of the party were wounded. The country people had two shot dead, and ten or twelve wounded; five are reported to be dangerously so. Such was the rapidity of the retreat, that Lieut. Hawkshaw lost his cap, which was knocked off by a stone. On the account reaching Skibbereen Captain Baldwin a Magistrate, with a party of the Rifle Brigade, and such of the Police as were able, hastened to the place, but we have not heard of any persons being taken. The ferocity of the country people was exhibited in a most disgraceful manner, having wedged a stone into the dead Policeman's mouth, which they forced in with another!! Letters were received in town from the Magistrates, requiring the attendance of a Coroner, to hold an inquest, which is appointed for this day, when we have no doubt from the spirit and intelligence of the Magistrates of that part of the County, that a strict investigation of this distressing affair will take place. On the intelligence of the affray having reached the City, Mr. Morrit, who had arrived only a day or two before, returned with all possible speed. We cannot close this article without adverting to the system pursued towards the Clergymen of the Established Church, in the collection of their tithes In some places the disinclination to pay them is such, that the lower orders have bound themselves by oath to resist; and we have been informed, that the parish of Castlehaven forms a striking, and we are sorry to say, a lamentable example of the truth of our remarks.

GREECE.

The Greeks.—The last accounts from Greece are of the most discouraging nature—The Turks were pouring into the Morea, the chief seat of Grecian power, and laying waste whole districts of country with fire and sword. Many villages were seen blazing at once—women and children carried into slavery. Bordered on one side by Russia, and on the other by Germany, two of those nations which constitute the "Holy Alliance," yet they stand by and see a feebie people, descended from noble ancesters, wasted and destroyed—a people fighting, too, more for religious than civil liberty—yes, that very religion which Turkey, by wise policy, oppresses, and from which they impiously take their name. While they witness the destruction of Greece on one side, on the other another of those holy allies are in open hostility to the free constitution of Spain, which abolished the inquisition of her priesthood, and secured civil liberty to the people. The world has never been made acquainted with the articles of this holy compact; they are to be learnt only from the actions of those nations who have entered into it; and it with nations as with individuals, actions speak louder than words, what are we to conclude are the principles which hold this compact together? It must be an article of their creed that the Mahometan is the true faith, and the Christain religion an imposition It must be another article with them that Moranchy is the only legitimate government, and even in its worst form, even that of a Turkish Sultan with his Janizaries; or the unrestrained tyranny of the stupid Ferdinand is more eligible than an elective government, whether 'tis the liberal one of the U States, or the more limited one of England. At any rate this alliance has betrayed enough of its views to put all other nations on their guard—and we should not be surprised if at some not very distant day, a contervailing union among free governments, should be found expedient to put down the arrogant pretensions of this impious alliance, which places the Mahometan above the Christian, and is endeavouring to trample under feet the civil rights of man.

THURSDAY, 9th October, 1823.

By the arrival of the Danube at Boston on the 26th ultimo, in 22 days from Gibraltar, we are enabled to publish the following extract from a letter, dated at that place on the third ult. This vessel brought no papers. As, however, this letter speaks particularly of the political affairs in Spain, it is probable that no negotiations had been entered into between the French and the Cortes before the last days in August, otherwise they would certainly have been know at Gibraltar.* The Duke d'Angouleme sent a flag of truce into Cadiz on the 16 August. The struggle in that country, although fast coming to a close, may yet be productive of serious consequences to the peace of Europe. It is impossible to foresee what rash and hard conditions the French and the Regency may impose on the Cortes, and to what they may determine them or other powers to proceed.

Trieste, Aug. 4.—Several vessels from the Archipelago, bring news that the Greek Admiralty is at present engaged in preparing for the execution of a very bold project, which may be productive of the greatest advantage to their cause if it succeeds, but may also be very fatal to the Greeks. It is nothing less than to transfer the theatre of war to Asia Minor, and to make themselves masters of Smyrna. It is affirmed that for the execution of this project, the Greeks have assembled a flotilla with a body of 12,000 troops, collected from the several islands of the Archipelago which have shown the greatest eagerness in the cause of independence. We expect with great impatience the farther details of this plan, the execution of which must now have commenced.

TURKISH SPLENDOR.

A late letter from Constantinople says:—I have returned from seeing the Grand Sultan go to mosque, of which ceremony, I have had an excellent view. Clark's description appears a pretty correct one, though it is rather difficult to know all the officers of state as they pass. The sight was truly magnificent; the horses and trappings quit Sultanic—that is, splendid. Ibraham Pacha has several hundred of his troops completely armed, and they looked remarkably well. The sultan, who is a good looking man, was very richly dressed. He wore in his turband a splendid plume, set at the bottom in a large cluster of diamonds. I noticed the Janissary Aga, the Reis Effendi (secretary), the carriage (he is the head of the Faith;) the Kislar Aga, the solicitor, or sword bearer, which was very rich."—Com. Ad.

TURKISH CRUELTY.

It is computed that about 15,000 Greeks have returned to Scio, and it has been before stated in this paper, that further excesses have been committed on some of the Greeks who have thus returned. A letter from that island, among other instances of cruelty almost unparalleled, states the following:—"A person informed me a few days since, that he saw the head of a Greek severed from his body with no other instrument than a blunt knife, whilst the poor wretch was struggling in agony, undergoing such unheard of barbarity, this poor man was not secured in any way, the executioner merely standing over him, holding him with his hands and knees" How long will Christian Europe consent that their fellow Christians shall be treated thus, and the government which permits the horrible barbarities of these monsters be acknowledged, because it is "legitimate?"

SPAIN.

Very late from Spain.—Gibraltar Sept. 3d.—You will naturally look at this quarter for news, but you at a distance are apparently more interested than we are so near the seat of action. Reports of such contradictory complexion are daily going the rounds with us, that we must detail what we hear with caution. The Duke d'Angouleme has his head quarters at Port St. Marys, on Cadiz bay. The blockade is kept up by sea and land, but the city is well supplied with provisions for the next five months. Gen. Ballasteros, who commanded the constitutional army in Grenada, has turned traitor to the cause, and made a capitulation, to which his army refused their concurrence. Gen. Riego is at Malaga, having quickly raised 8000 troops It is impossible to foresee the result. The French are certainly disappointed, but there is no spirit in Spain. The country is distracted by civil contention. It is said that England has again renewed an offer to become the mediator. My own opinion is, that peace will soon follow.

The Cortes adjourned on the 5th August. The king made a speech from the throne, in which he spoke with great confidence of the final triumph of the Constitution, and animadverted severely on the conduct of the French government.

The Cortes replied to the king, echoing his sentiments, and then adjourned; both parties apparently reposing confidence in each other.

From the adjournment of the Cortes, we may conclude that no immediate dangers are apprehended by them—if such were their impressions, the sittings would have been permanent.

On the 23d of July the Cortes passed a decree for equipping four ships of the line, five frigates, and several other vessels of war.

The Duke of Regrio to the Minister of War.

Madrid, Aug. 21.—" Gen. Bourke informs me, under date of the 17th inst. that the Count of Carthagena sends one of his officers to the Regency to announce to them that the garrison of Coruna has replaced itself under his command, and entrusts to him the arrangement of the terms and conditions on which this place is to open its gates to us. I have received the same advice from General Morillo, who adds, the dissentions shall soon be ended.

" It is probable that at the moment I am writing to your Excellency, our troops occupy Corunna.—I shall hasten to communicate the termination of this affair to your Excellency as soon as General Bourk shall have given me an account of the conditions of the surrender of that important place.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The Moniteur to-day gives the following article in its official columbn.

Riego at Seville from the Gazette de France.

" Gen. Bourke signed a treaty on the 14th, by which Corunna, will be given up on the same conditions as those granted to Gen. Morrillo.

Marshal Coneghiano to the Minister of War.

VILLAFRANCA, Aug 22.—The enemy continues to retreat; he was at Torrego on the 19th.

" The brigade Tromelin, and troops under Baron d'Eroles arrived here on the 20th. The constitutional troops reached Montblanck the same day.

GIBRALTAR, Aug. 14.

Yesterday afternoon, an attack was made upon the Green Island, by two French frigates, the Guerriere and Galatea; but, after a heavy cannonade on both sides, for about two hours, they sheered off, without having attained their end.

August 15.—The Green Island was summoned yesterday, and has surrendered by capitulation, the principal terms of which, we understand to be that the troops in it, will be set at liberty on their word not to fight again for the Constitution. A battery was about to be erected on the commanding ground opposite, and the French naval force had been increased to three frigates and one brig of war. It is said, that general Lauriston's Division is to march to morrow to attack Tariffa.

There was a serious tumult at Madrid on the 10th. The royalists went to the houses of the liberals, whom they wanted to massacre, saying they had circulated with a bad intention, the news of the king's deliverance. The garrison, with difficulty restored order.

From the New-York Daily Advertiser.

Latest from Spain.—By the Brig Catherine Rogers, Capt. Andros, in 30 days from Gibraltar, the editors of the New-York Daily advertiser have received a file of the Gibraltar Chronicle to the 2nd of September inclusive, from which we have selected the following articles.

We learn verbally, that the French continued before Cadiz, but that no general battle had been fought.

Sir Robert Wilson left Gibraltar on the night of the 2d of September, for Malaga.

The Gibraltar Chronicle of Sep. 1st. says, we understand that Lieut. General Zayas and several other Spanish officers, have arrived here from Malaga, by sea.

A person arrived from the neighbourhood of Cadiz, states that there was to be a meeting of general officers and other persons of rank, at the head quarters of the French army, where several had already arrived from distant places, among others, the Duke del Infantado was expected hourly from Madrid.

The Chronicle of August 20th. says.—People arrived this morning from Algesiras, state, that Gen. Lauriston's division has returned from the neighbourhood of Tariffa, with a trifling loss.

The French experienced some loss in their attacks on Irocadero (Cadiz), the 25th of Aug.

A letter from Gibraltar to the editor of the N. Y. Mercantile Advertiser, dated Sept. 3d, states "that they had been repulsed at TARIFFA, with the loss, it was reported, of 800 men. The writer adds, "Malaga is in a dreadful state at present; the commander has made a requisition of 100,000 dollars of the merchants—several who refused to pay, have been sent to prison, among them the American Consul, and several have been shot. The English Frigate Tribune is to proceed from here to bring the English Merchants from that place "

The French squadron off Cadiz, have detained the British ship Spanish Patriot, which is a regular trader between London and Cadiz. She was endeavouring to force the blockade. The crew were sent to France, and the vessel to St. Lucar. Her cargo was valued at £20,000.

Sir John Downie and his nephew, who are confined at Cadiz, on a charge of attempting to rescue the king and royal family, while on their way from Seville to Cadiz, have prayed to the king to be brought to trial: they assert their innocence, and complain of the cruelty of their treatment. The petition was dated on the 28th of June, but so late as the 8th July, no notice had been taken of it.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The King of the Sandwich Islands has made a law establishing the Christain Sabbath, which imposes a fine of one dollar on every person who violates it. Some of the chiefs afterwards applied to him for leave to go on a hunting and fishing party on the Sabbath, but he refused permission. On the death of Mr. Bingham's infant son, the royal family called to sympathize with the parents; and the king gave a piece of ground near the chapel, for a Burial ground. At the funeral the King Queen, principal chief, and many Europeans, walked in the procession, with badges of mourning, and Mr. Thurston preached an appropriate sermon to the audience. A few days after, a young person belonging to the royal family died; when at the king's request, the missionaries attended the funeral, and Mr. Bingham preached a sermon to a numerous audience. These facts are given from memory; the documents will probably appear in the Herald for next month.—Boston Paper.

INSURRECTION IN DEMARARA.

There has been an insurrection of the Blacks in the Island of Demerara. The ALBIAN contains a letter from that place, dated September 4, which says—

"The Negroes rose to the amount of 3000, and gave regular battle to the King's troops; they made a desperate attempt to cut off a detachment of the 21st Regiment as it was coming up, but they were defeated by the very gallant conduct of a Lieutenant who commanded the division. The 21st West India Regiment and Georgetown Militia of Cavalry were still engaged in the affray, and behaved uncommonly well. The tumult was not quelled when the express left Demarara, but there is every reason to hope that it is so by this time, as strong reinforcements were immediately embarked at Barbadoes for the scene of action."

Natural History.

Curious Phenomenon.—The Bermuda papers of the 30th August state, that an immense number of that species of fish called blue fish, and by some, green headed thumps, weighing from 2 to 3*lbs*. had floated ashore dead, and so offensive had been the stench from their putrid carcases, that the inhabitants had been obliged to dig holes and bury them in the sand.—It was not uncommon after heavy calms, or violent thunder squalls, to see a few dead fish of different kinds about or drifted among the rocks along shore; but a phenomenon of this very extraordinary kind had ever been witnessed nor heard of among the oldest inhabitants living. Many of the fish had been opened and carefully examined, when it was found almost invariably that the liver, and in most cases, the maw, and whole intestines were in a state of putrescence, and that even before life had been entirely extinct in the fish. Many conjectures and suppositions had been advanced as to the cause of this remarkable malady among this species of the finny tribe, but it it still involved in obscurity. That fishes are subject to diseases, there can be no doubt, but the peculiar nature of the element which they inhabit renders it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain any thing like correct information respecting their habits and maladies.

From the National Gazette.

We do not recollect to have read of any Water Spout, so destructive as the one described in the following article, which we have translated from Paris, Journal des Debats, of the 30th August.

"To the Editor of the Journal des Debats.

"Sir,—A meteor, extraordinary for its violence, rapid movement and injurious effect, has just spread alarm and desolation in several parts of the district of Dreux et Mantes.—On the 26th Aug. about 3 o'clock P. M. the great heat of the atmosphere produced a storm, which took the direction from the south west, towards the village of Boncourt; not far from this place, there appeared, suddenly, a water spout of extraordinary dimensions, whose broad base rested upon the ground, while its top was lost in the clouds; it appeared to consist of a thick and black vapour, in the centre of which flames were frequently perceived in several directions. Moving impetuously with the storm, through the upper vallies and over the mountains, it uprooted, or dashed down, in the compass of a league, seven or eight hundred trees of different sizes; and, in reaching the village of Marchefray, demolished in an instant one half of its houses. The walls, shaken to their foundations, fell in on every side, and the ruins we scattered to the distance of half a league, before the aerial torrent. Some of the inhabitants who remained in the villages were crushed or wounded by the fall of the houses; those who were working in the fields (luckily the greater number) were thrown down or borne along by the whirlpool, that destroyed at the same time the harvest and the cattle. It discharged hail as large as the fist, stones and other foreign bodies, which struck some persons and caused severe contusions. Waggons heavy laiden were dashed to pieces; wheels, of the largest size, torn off, were found at the distance of three or four hundred feet, from the places in which they were struck. One heavy vehicle was carried upon a tilekiln, which was razed. A steeple, several hamlets, a number of detached houses, some new walls, were tumbled down, and other villages than those mentioned, suffered considerably. To judge from the devastation which it spread, this water spout must have been about six hundred feet diameter at the base. It has deprived a multitude of individuals of their means of subsistance.

HORTICULTURE.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir, Seeing in the Moutreal Herald of the 6th inst. an account of the Horticultural society of that place having had their annual show of Melons, and observing that their finest Water Melon weighed 27lbs. 12oz. I was induced this day to weigh a very large one of the same kind which grew in the Garden of the Hon. C.W. Panet, the weight of which was 37lbs. 2oz.

I am &c.
M. BURWELL,

Port Talbot, 29th September, 1823.

Horticulture.—The society held their annual Show of Grapes, on Tuesday last, when the best cluster, competing for the premium, was produced by Mr. John P. Hogg, Gardener, weight 38½ ounces.—The second finest by Mr. Patrick O'Conner, Gardener, weight 20½ oz. M. O'C, also produced the third best weighing 18 oz.

A cluster of Grapes of a new variety, named the Wellington Grape, weighing 55½ oz. was produced at the meeting, from the garden of Wm. McGillivray, Esq.—R. C.

Mr. John Bely, a neighbor in our village has this season raised a Bull calf, which at five months (the 9th inst.) weighed 613 lbs. and girted 4ft. and 10 inc. and was begotten by a bull raised by Mr. James Harvey of Dunham, and now owned by Mr. Orin T. Kemp of this village.—Communicated—

Montreal Races—Commenced on Wednesday—one of the best contested, and handsom-at races ever witnessed on this course was run between Mr. Bender's Horse Lismahago, and Mr Kauntz's Horse Sir Walter—two mile heats, the first won by Lismahago, and the two latter supposed by Sir Walter.—Under decision of the Stewards.

Second day.—Bad sport, until about six o'clock in the evening, when a general engagement took place amongst some characters who had freely indulged in the poduce of our West Indian Islands—broken heads, and sore bones were, as is usual in such cases, the consequence.—

We have not heard what arrangements are made for this day's diversion.

The Laprairie Races.

There was much good sport on the Laprairie Course, on Wednesday, the first day of the Races—notwithstanding some difficulty, a large concourse of people was collected:

About 3 o'clock, the contest for the Maiden Plate took place between Mr. Baker's Black Horse, Mr. Nathaniel Jones's Bay Mare, and a bay horse belonging to Joseph Odell, Esq. During the first heat, the Black led the way, the bay horse followed next, and although not a match for him, run a very respectable race. In the second heat the Black still kept his superiority, the bay horse kept next until nearly two thirds of the course had been passed, when Mr. Jones' mare shot by him, and, followed the black very closely to the winning post.—The black won the plate.

The second race was for the Steam-Boat Purse, and was contested by Mr. Kauntz's horse Sir Walter and Lismahago, both very fine horses,—and the Bedford. The race being declared a dead heat between Sir Walter and Lismahago, it was decided that they should repeat the race. This last was a great display of power, which seldom has been observed so equal between two animals. Sir Walter came out best, although the race was finely contested by Lismahago.—Times.

QUEBEC, Oct. 7th.

We are sorry to announce the loss of two vessels bound to this port, near Cape Ray. The brig Emma, Captain Cockin, owned by Mr. Finch, of this city; from Liverpool, in ballast, and the Schr. Penryn Castle, from Halifax, with military clothing. The clothing and the crew of the latter vessel, with the exception of one man who was unfortunately lost, have been brought up by the Bark Duck, from Newfoundland.

The Spaniards Appeal.

God of our fathers! in whose name,
Resistless as the wild Simoon
We rush'd through clouds of smoke and flame,
And swept away to death and doom,
The legions of the Iron Crown,
And hurl'd the Imperial Despot down.

Inflamed by whose life giving word,
We pour'd our unrequited blood
More freely than the desert bird,
Whose heart drops feed her infant brood,
To fix that monarch on the throne
We hoped to make our weal his own.

Who see that monarchs foully rend
The sacred rights our hands retriev'd,
And strive to bind us with a chain
More dread than that we broke in vain.

Though kings [illegible] yet will not we,
The rights of all that think or breathe;
And if when struggling to be free,
We sound the notes of war and death,
In Thy name shall the banners wave
That lead to freedom or the grave.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the seventeenth day of November next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the second day of October instant, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the seventeenth day of November next, at which time, at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye, that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on Tuesday, the Eleventh day of November, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, FOR THE ACTUAL DESPATCH OF PUBLIC BUSINESS; there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereon to do as may seem necessary:—and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed.—WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this ninth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred, and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of PORT HOPE, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the bridge.

The Main of front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed rooms.—The Kitchin is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 48 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive S ements in the Province, with every convenie Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to JOHN BROWN, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 t.-f.

SLAVE TRADE—STARVATION OF NEGROES.

Extracts from the last reports respecting the progress of efforts to suppress the Slave Trade, on the coast of Africa, forwarded to the Admiralty and to Earl Bathurst, by Sir W. Mends.

Spanish schr. Yeanaw, River Benny, April 16.

"I have the honor to forward an account of my proceedings up this river. Having crossed the bar soon after day light yesterday, about 7 o'clock, I observed seven sail, (two schooners, four brigs, and one brigantine) lying at anchor off the town. When about four miles from them I hoisted the colours, and when I had advanced within long range, the two schooners, their broadsides having been previously brought to bear on us by springs on their cables, commenced firing, without shewing any colours. They were immediately afterwards joined by two brigs and the brigantine under French colours. When I was near enough for the shot to take good effect, I returned the fire from the boats having guns, at the same time advancing under a heavy fire of round grape and musketry from these vessels, and in about 20 minutes from the commencement, succeeded in boarding and taking possession of the whole of them, as follows viz Spanish schr. Yeanaw, 3 guns, eight long 12 pounders, two four mines, 55 men, and 380 slaves; Spanish schr. Becua, 180 tons, eight long 18 pounders, and one long nine, 45 men, and 300 slaves. French brig Vigilant, 240 tons, four 12 pounder carronades, (all of which were thrown overboard) one long 18 pounder, two 6 pounders, 30 men, and 340 slaves. French brig Petite Betzsy, 184 tons, four 9 pound carronades, 25 men, and 218 slaves. French brigantine L'Ursule, 109 tons, four 9 pound carronades, 27 men and 247 slaves.

I have not been able to learn accurately the loss on their part, but from what I can understand, there were 16 killed, besides several badly wounded, on board this schooner. The slaves, I am sorry to say, suffered also from these dastardly Spaniards, when they themselves were afraid to stand, having put muskets into their hands, with which they fired up the hatchway, and were killed by our people in returning it.

The small schooner, when I took possession of her, had a lighted match hanging over the magazine hatch, left by the crew when they deserted her; and who, when no hope remained of their preventing her falling into our hands, merely to gratify a diabolical feeling of revenge for their defeat, would have blown up 300 poor fellows ironed in the hold. This fact will shew you of what these villains are capable; and makes me to credit the brag of some of them that had they got the better of us, it was their determination, if possible, to put us all to death

(Signed) Geo. W. ST. JOHN MILDMAY.
Lieut. of H. M S. Iphigenia.

Memorandum.—The enclosed list proves most incontestibly the existance of the Slave Trade to an enormous extent on this coast; and the particular circumstances of atrocity which have come to light respecting the "San Josa Hallaxa," also prove that its attendant horrors are not diminished. This vessel affords a striking display of the cold blooded villany of those who are engaged in the slave trade, and of the wretchedness and misery which their unfortunate victims are doomed to suffer.

The "San Jose Hallaxa," under seven tons burthen, was captured by his majesty's brig "Thistle," in the river Calabar, and it appears by the acknowledgement of the master, that he shipped at Duke Ephraim's, Town on that river thirty slaves; that he had gone to sea with that number on board, intending to proceed to Prince's Island, but not having been able to make that port, he had returned to Calabar, having his provisions and water nearly expended, after having been at sea five or six weeks.

During this voyage ten unfortunate objects of his avarice, not being able to procure sufficient nourishment to satisfy the cravings of nature, had been released from further sufferings by starvation. One poor female in the absence of food, had existed on salt water until her faculties were destroyed, and she became raving mad; but even the deplorable and affecting state of insanity did not shield her from the brutal outrage of her oppressors, who with the view of stifling her cries, by frequent repetition of the lash, literally flogged her to death. The owner of this vessel, and the purchaser of these human beings is A WOMAN! Donna Maria de Cruz daughter of the notorious Gomez, former Governor in the name of his Most Faithful Majesty of Ajuda Island, and now holding the appointment of Fiscal and Member of Council.—This woman is known to the Mixed Commission Court, having been unsuccessful in [illegible] of the Conceigao, condemned by the British and Portuguese judges.

Lieut. Hogan, with the greatest humanity, removed the surviving slaves on board his majesty's brig; and having found the San Jose not sea-worthy, ordered her to be destroyed."

The following is an original expedient of preserving unmolested the quietude of the grave.

"Curiosity drew together a crowd of people on Monday, at Dundee, to witness the funeral of a child, which was consigned to the grave in a novel manner. The father, in terror of the resurrection men, had caused a small box, enclosing some deathful apparatus, communicating, by means of wires, to the four corners, to be fastened on the top of the coffin. Immediately after it was lowered into the earth, a large quantity of gunpowder was put into the box, and the hidden machinery put into a state of readiness for execution. The common opinion was, that if any one attempted to raise the body, he would be blown up. The sexton seemed in dread of an immediate explosion, for he started back in alarm, after throwing in the first shovelful of earth."—Eng. Paper.

A good Lession for Duellists—Two friends happening to quarrel at a tavern, one of them, a man of very hasty dispositions, insisted on the other's fighting him the next morning. The challenge was accepted, on condition that they should breakfast together previous to their going to the field, at the house of the challenged. When the challenger arrived the next morning, according to appointment he found every preparation for breakfast, and his friend, his wife, and children, all ready to receive him. Their repast being over, and the family withdrawn without any hint of the fatal purpose having transpired, the challenger asked the other if he was ready to attend. "No sir," replied he, "not till we are more upon a par; that amiable woman, and those six innocent children, who just now breakfasted with us, depend solely upon my life for assistance—and till you can stake something equal in my estimation to the welfare of seven persons, dearer to me than the apple of my eye, I cannot think we are equally matched"—"We are not indeed!" replied the other, giving him his hand, and they became firmer friends than ever.

DREADFUL VOLCANIC ERUPTION.

The Government of Batavia has received a detailed account of the volcano Galoengueng, October last. In this terrible visitation 4011 persons perished, and 114 campongs were destroyed and 5361 injured; the number of coffee-trees destroyed amount to 775,795, those injured to 3,871,742; 2,983 rice plantations were totally destroyed, and 5,361 injured.

Intelligence from St. Petersburgh to the 18th of May states the affairs between the Porte and Russia were in an amicable train. The Porte had given orders for the entire evacuation of Wallachia and Moldavia.

The London Gazette contains a caution to artificers and manufacturers against quitting G. Britain, if subjects of the realm, to exercise their calling in foreign parts, and the penalties under the several statutes upon the subject are enumerated.

It has been decided in England that the person of an individual cannot be searched by a custom house officer, without a warrant first obtained on oath.

Money.—The London Morning Chronicle of a late date, says:—"At present money is so abundant in the city, that applications are in vain made for mercantile acceptances, to be discounted at three per cent, and yet the capitalist finds even this low interest a much better income than he could obtain by the employment of his property either in agriculture or manufactures."

It is calculated that the sum of 200 millions of reals in Spanish money, has been sent from France since the month of January, and that the sum of 100 millions of francs French money, is actually in circulation in the peninsula.

Hanging—an easy death.—"An animal, when first suspended, is observed to make repeated but ineffectual attempts to inspire; violent convulsions of the whole body then ensue, but which are not to be considered as the indications of suffering, for they arise in consequence of the dark coloured blood having reached the brain and spinal marrow; and the animal at this period is necessarily insensible: hanging does not occasion a painful death.

It would appear that it has been a very common thing in France, for criminals to recover after being hanged; and M. Modore has been enabled, from their reports, to prove distinctly, that of all deaths there cannot be a more easy one than that of the gibbet.

New Method of Making Jelly.—Press the juice from the fruit; add the proper proportion of sugar, and stir the juice and sugar until the sugar is completely melted; put it into jars, and in twenty-four hours, it will become of a proper consistence. By this means, the trouble of boiling is avoided, and the jelly retains more completely the flavor of the fruit. Care should be taken to stir the mixture until the sugar is completely melted, and fine sugar should be used.

New Species of Gas.—A London paper states, that a gentleman is about to take out a patent for making gas from ingredients not hitherto used, which will be cheaper and better than oil gas, without producing any noxious or dangerous effects. It is said it will be well calculated for dwellings and stores, it being in no respect injurious to goods or furniture.

Pauperism in Europe.—Among the 178,000,000 individuals who inhabit Europe, there are said to be 17,000,000 beggars or persons who subsist at the expense of the community, without contributing to its resources. In Denmark, the proportion is five per cent. In England, 10 per cent. In Holland, 14 per cent. In Paris, in 1813, 102,859 paupers out of 530,000. In Liverpool, 17,000 is the population of 80,000. In Amsterdam, 108,000 out of 217,000. The number of indigent persons has since rather increased than decreased.

The Admiralty have directed that no Purser of the Navy is to be entitled to half-pay until he has passed his accounts and is clear of debt; and that he shall not claim for half pay during the period which he might be in debt. Pursers must also, by letters to the Navy Board, request to be placed upon the half pay list, when they are paid off.

A bill has been introduced into Parliament, and read a second time, entitled 'An Act for allowing persons charged with capital crimes to make their defence by Counsel." This is an important privilege, and was called for, we think as much on the score of humanity as of fairness.

For the honour and triumph of British art, Sir Joshua Reynold's portrait of Mrs. Siddons, as the tragic muse, sold on Saturday, in Watson Taylor's collection, for 1750 guineas. Earl Grosvenor was the purchaser.

London Drinking.—It is calculated that not less than 60,000 pipes of Wine, 10,000,000 gallons of Spirits, and 2,000,000 barrels of ale and porter, are annually drank in the metropolis.

DESPERATE ATTACK ON THE POLICE, AND SEVERAL [illegible]

On Wednesday morning, (2d inst.) at a very early hour, one of those daring violations of the law so peculiar to the lower orders of this distracted country, attended with the loss of several lives, occurred in the parish of Castlehaven, within three miles of Skibbereen, in the west of this County. The facts, which we have from very competent authority, are as follow:—The Rector of the Parish, the Rev. R. Morritt, finding it impossible to obtain his tithes, there being three years due, and in the last year having experienced much opposition in obtaining them, he was determined to submit his case to the Bench of Magistrates assembled in Petty Session, from whom he received a warrant of distress, which was entrusted to his Proctor, who, with five other men, were appointed Special Constables, to execute it on the parties; and for the more effectual preservation of the peace, a party of the Police, consisting of Lieut Hawkshaw, four mounted and seven dismounted, stationed at Skibbereen, were ordered to assist. Accordingly they proceeded to the ground, where they seized some cattle, which the country people, who assembled in great numbers, resisted, with showers of stones, when a dreadful scene ensued. The Police and Constables were obliged, in their own defence, having given up the idea of the cattle, to keep up a constant fire, which was as determinedly resisted by the country people with vollies of stones, which were kept up with such determination on their part, that the Police and Constables were obliged to retreat, leaving one of the Police named Bowen, and the proctor, named Driscoll, killed, and several of the party were wounded. The country people had two shot dead, and ten or twelve wounded; five are reported to be dangerously so. Such was the rapidity of the retreat, that Lieut. Hawkshaw lost his cap, which was knocked off by a stone. On the account reaching Skibbereen Captain Baldwin a Magistrate, with a party of the Rifle Brigade, and such of the Police as were able, hastened to the place, but we have not heard of any persons being taken. The ferocity of the country people was exhibited in a most disgraceful manner, having wedged a stone into the dead Policeman's mouth, which they forced in with another!! Letters were received in town from the Magistrates, requiring the attendance of a Coroner, to hold an inquest, which is appointed for this day, when we have no doubt from the spirit and intelligence of the Magistrates of that part of the County, that a strict investigation of this distressing affair will take place. On the intelligence of the affray having reached the City, Mr. Morritt, who had arrived only a day or two before, returned with all possible speed. We cannot close this article without adverting to the system pursued towards the Clergymen of the Established Church, in the collection of their tithes. In some places the disinclination to pay them is such, that the lower orders have bound themselves by oath to resist; and we have been informed, that the parish of Castlehaven forms a striking, and we are sorry to say, a too palpable example of the truth of our remarks.

GREECE.

The Greeks.—The last accounts from Greece are of the most discouraging nature—The Turks were pouring into the Morea, the chief seat of Grecian power, and laying waste whole districts of country with fire and sword. Many villages were seen blazing at once—women and children carried into slavery. Bordered on one side by Russia, and on the other by Germany, two of those nations which constitute the "Holy Alliance," yet they stand by and see a feeble people, descended from noble ancestors, wasted and destroyed—a people fighting, too, more for religious than civil liberty—yes, that very religion which those holy allies profess to revere, and from which they impiously take their name. While they witness the destruction of Greece on one side, on the other another of those holy allies are in open hostility to the free constitution of Spain, which abolished the inquisition of her priesthood, and secured civil liberty to the people. The world has never been made acquainted with the articles of this holy compact; they are to be learnt only from the actions of those nations who have entered into it; and if with nations as with individuals, actions speak louder than words, what are we to conclude are the principles which hold this compact together? It must be an article of their creed that the Mahometan is the true faith, and the Christain religion an imposition. It must be another article with them that Monarchy is the only legitimate government, and even in its worst form, even that of a Turkish Sultan with his Janizaries; or the unrestrained tyranny of the stupid Ferdinand is more eligible than an elective government, whether 'tis the liberal one of the U States, or the more limited one of England. At any rate this alliance has betrayed enough of its views to put all other nations on their guard—and we should not be surprised if at some not very distant day, a counteravailing union among free governments, should be found expedient to put down the arrogant pretensions of this impious alliance, which places the Mahometan above the Christian, and is endeavouring to trample under feet the civil rights of man.

By the arrival of the Danube at Soston on the 28th ultimo, in 22 days from Gibraltar, we are enabled to publish the following extract from a letter, dated at that place on the third ult. This vessel brought no papers. As, however, this letter speaks particularly of the political affairs in Spain, it is probable that no negotiations had been entered into between the French and the Cortes before the last days in August, otherwise they would certainly have been know at Gibraltar.—The Duke d'Angouleme sent a flag of truce into Cadiz on the 16 August. The struggle in that country, although fast coming to a close, may yet be productive of serious consequences to the peace of Europe. It is impossible to foresee what rash and hard conditions the French and the Regency may impose on the Cortes, and to what they may determine them or other powers to proceed.

Trieste, Aug. 4.—Several vessels from the Archipelago, bring news that the Greek Admiralty is at present engaged in preparing for the execution of a very bold project, which may be productive of the greatest advantage to their cause if it succeeds, but may also be very fatal to the Greeks. It is nothing less than to transfer the theatre of war to Asia Minor, and to make themselves masters of Smyrna. It is affirmed that for the execution of this project, the Greeks have assembled a flotilla with a body of 12,000 troops, collected from the several Islands of the Archipelago which have shown the greatest eagerness in the cause of independence. We expect with great impatience the further details of this plan, the execution of which must now have commenced.

TURKISH SPLENDOR.

A late letter from Constantinople says:—I have returned from seeing the Grand Sultan go to mosque, of which ceremony, I have had an excellent view. Clark's description appears a pretty correct one, though it is rather difficult to know all the officers of state as they pass. The sight was truly magnificent; the horses and trappings quit Sultanic—that is, splendid. Ibraham Pacha had several hundred of his troops completely armed, and they looked remarkably well. The sultan, who is a good looking man, was very richly dressed. He wore in his turband a splendid plume, set at the bottom in a large cluster of diamonds. I noticed the Janissary Aga; Vizier, Sherk Islaman, in a carriage (he is the head of the Faith;) the Kislar Aga, the solicitor, or sword bearer, which was very rich."—Com. Ad.

TURKISH CRUELTY.

It is computed that about 15,000 Greeks have returned to Scio, and it has been before stated in this paper, that further excesses have been committed on some of the Greeks who have thus returned. A letter from that island, among other instances of cruelty almost unparalleled, states the following:—"A person informed me a few days since, that he saw the head of a Greek severed from his body with no other instrument than a blunt knife, whilst the poor wretch was struggling in agony, undergoing such unheard of barbarity, this poor man was not secured in any way, the executioner merely standing over him, holding him with his hands and knees." How long will Christian Europe consent that their fellow Christians shall be treated thus, and the government which permits the horrible barbarities of these monsters be acknowledged, because it is "legitimate?"

SPAIN.

Very late from Spain.—Gibraltar Sept. 3d.—You will naturally look at this quarter for news, but you at a distance are apparently more interested than we are so near the seat of action. Reports of such contradictory complexion are daily going the rounds with us, that we must detail what we hear with caution. The Duke d'Angouleme has his head quarters at Port St. Marys, on Cadiz bay. The blockade is kept up by sea and land, but the city is well supplied with provisions for the next five months. Gen. Ballasteros, who commanded the constitutional army in Grenada, has turned traitor to the cause, and made a capitulation, to which his army refused their concurrence. Gen. Riego is at Malaga, having quickly raised 8000 troops. It is impossible to foresee the result. The French are certainly disappointed, but there is no spirit in Spain. The country is distracted by civil contention. It is said that England has again renewed an offer to become the mediator. My own opinion is, that peace will soon follow.

The Cortes adjourned on the 5th August. The king made a speech from the throne, in which he spoke with great confidence of the final triumph of the Constitution, and animadverted severely on the conduct of the French government.

The Cortes replied to the king, echoing his sentiments, and then adjourned; both parties apparently reposing confidence in each other.

From the adjournment of the Cortes, we may conclude that no immediate dangers are apprehended by them—if such were their impressions, the sittings would have been permanent.

On the 23d of July the Cortes passed a decree for equipping four ships of the line, five frigates, and several other vessels of war.

The Duke of Reggio to the Minister of War.

Madrid, Aug. 2.—"Gen. Bourke informs me, under date of the 17th inst. that the Count of Carthagena sends one of his officers to the Regency to announce to them that the garrison of Corunna has replaced itself under his command, and entrusts to him the arrangement of the terms and conditions on which this place is to open its gates to us. I have received the same advice from General Morillo, who adds, the dissentions shall soon be ended.

"It is probable that at the moment I am writing to your Excellency, our troops occupy Corunna.—I shall hasten to communicate the termination of this affair to your Excellency as soon as General Bourk shall have given me an account of the conditions of the surrender of that important place.

PARIS, Aug. 29.—The Moniteur to-day gives the following article in its official column.

Telegraphic Despatch from Bayonne.—The commanding General at Bayonne, to his excellency the Minister of War.

"Gen. Bourk signed a treaty on the 14th, by which Corunna, will be given up on the same conditions as those granted to Gen. Morrillo.

Marshal Conyghans to the Minister of War.

VILLAFRANCA, Aug 22.—The enemy continues to retreat; he was at Torrego on the 19th.

"The brigade Tromelin, and troops under Baron d'Eroles arrived here on the 20th. The constitutional troops reached Montblanck the same day.

GIBRALTAR, Aug. 14.

Yesterday afternoon, an attack was made upon the Green Island, by two French frigates, the Guerriere and Galatea; but, after a heavy cannonade on both sides, for about two hours, they sheered off, without having attained their end.

August 15.—The Green Island was summoned yesterday, and has surrendered by capitulation, the principal terms of which, we understand to be that the troops in it, will be set at liberty on their word not to fight again for the Constitution. A battery was about to be erected on the commanding ground opposite, and the French naval force had been increased to three frigates and one brig of war. It is said, that general Lauriston's Division is to march to morrow to attack Tariffa.

There was a serious tumult at Madrid on the 10th. The royalists went to the houses of the liberals, whom they wanted to massacre, saying they had circulated with a bad intention, the news of the king's deliverance. The garrison, with difficulty restored order.

From the New-York Daily Advertiser.

Latest from Spain.—By the Brig Catherine Rogers, Capt. Andros, in 36 days from Gibraltar, the editors of the New-York Daily advertiser have received a file of the Gibraltar Chronicle to the 2nd of September inclusive, from which we have selected the following articles.

We learn verbally, that the French continued before Cadiz, but that no general battle had been fought.

Sir Robert Wilson left Gibraltar on the night of the 2d of September, for Malaga.

The Gibraltar Chronicle of Sep. 1st. says, we understand that Lieut. General Zayas and several other Spanish officers, have arrived here from Malaga, by sea.

A person arrived from the neighbourhood of Cadiz, states that there was to be a meeting of general officers and other persons of rank, at the head quarters of the French army, where several had already arrived from distant places, among others, the Duke del Infantado was expected hourly from Madrid.

The Chronicle of August 20th. says.—People arrived this morning from Algesiras, state, that Gen. Lauriston's division has returned from the neighbourhood of Tariffa, with a trifling loss.

The French experienced some loss in their attacks on Irocadero (Cadiz), the 25th of Aug.

A letter from Gibraltar to the editor of the N. Y. Mercantile Advertiser, dated Sept. 3d, states "that they had been repulsed at TARIFFA, with the loss, it was reported, of 800 men. The writer adds, "Malaga is in a dreadful state at present; the commander has made a requisition of 100,000 dollars of the merchants—several who refused to pay, have been sent to prison, among them the American Consul, and several have been shot. The English Frigate Tribune is to proceed from here to bring the English Merchants from that place."

The French squadron off Cadiz, have detained the British ship Spanish Patriot, which is a regular trader between London and Cadiz. She was endeavouring to force the blockade. The crew were sent to France, and the vessel to St. Lucar. Her cargo was valued at £20,000.

Sir John Downie and his nephew, who are confined at Cadiz, on charges of attempting to assassinate the king and royal family, while on their way from Seville to Cadiz, have prayed to the king to be brought to trial: they assert their innocence, and complain of the cruelty of their treatment. The petition was dated on the 28th of June, but so late as the 8th July, no notice had been taken of it.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The King of the Sandwich Islands has made a law establishing the Christain Sabbath, which imposes a fine of one dollar on every person who violates it. Some of the chiefs afterwards applied to him for leave to go on a hunting and fishing party on the Sabbath, but he refused permission. On the death of Mr. Bingham's infant son, the royal family called to sympathize with the parents; and the king gave a piece of ground near the chapel, for a burial ground. At the funeral the King Queen, principal chief, and many Europeans, walked in the procession, with badges of mourning, and Mr. Thurston preached an appropriate sermon to the audience. A few days after, a young person belonging to the royal family died; when at the king's request, the missionaries attended the funeral, and Mr. Bingham preached a sermon to a numerous audience. These facts are given from memory; the documents will probably appear in the Herald for next month.—Boston Paper.

INSURRECTION IN DEMARARA.

There has been an insurrection of the Blacks in the Island of Demerara. The ALBIAN contains a letter from that place, dated September 4, which says—

"The Negroes rose to the amount of 3000, and gave regular battle to the King's troops; they made a desperate attempt to cut off a detachment of the 21st Regiment as it was coming up, but they were defeated by the very gallant conduct of a Lieutenant who commanded the division. The 21st West India Regiment and Georgetown Militia of Cavalry were all engaged in the affray, and behaved uncommonly well. The tumult was not quelled when the express left Demarara, but there is every reason to hope that it is so by this time, as strong reinforcements were immediately embarked at Barbadoes for the scene of action."

Natural History.

Curious Phenomenon.—The Bermuda papers of the 30th August state, that an immense number of that species of fish called blue fish, and by some, green headed thumps, weighing from 2 to 3lbs. had flouted ashore dead, and so offensive had been the stench from their putrid carcases, that the inhabitants had been obliged to dig holes and bury them in the sand.—It was not uncommon after heavy gales, or violent thunder squalls, to see a few dead fish of a Parrot kinds afloat or drifted among the rocks along shore; but a phenomenon of this very extraordinary kind had ever been witnessed nor heard of among the oldest inhabitants living. Many of the fish had been opened and carefully examined, when it was found almost invariably that the liver, and in most cases, the maw, and whole intestines were in a state of putrescence, and that even before life had been entirely extinct in the fish. Many conjectures and suppositions had been advanced as to the cause of this remarkable malady among this species of the finny tribe, but it it still involved in obscurity. That fishes are subject to diseases, there can be no doubt, but the peculiar nature of the element which they inhabit renders it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain any thing like correct information respecting their habits and maladies.

From the National Gazette.

We do not recollect to have read of any Water Spout, so destructive as the one described in the following article, which we have translated from Paris, Journal des Debats, of the 30th August.

"To the Editor of the Journal des Debats.

"Sir,—A meteor, extraordinary for its violence, rapid movement and injurious effect, has just spread alarm and desolation in several parts of the district of Dreux et Mantes.—On the 26th Aug. about 3 o'clock P. M. the great heat of the atmosphere produced a storm, which took the direction, from the south west, towards the village of Boncourt; not far from this place, there appeared, suddenly, a water spout of extraordinary dimensions, whose broad base rested upon the ground, while its top was lost in the clouds; it appeared to consist of a thick and black vapour, in the centre of which flames were frequently perceived in several directions. Moving impetuously with the storm, through the upper vallies and over the mountains, it uprooted, or dashed down, in the compass of a league, seven or eight hundred trees of different sizes; and, in reaching the village of Marchefray, demolished in an instant one half of its houses. The walls, shaken to their foundations, fell in on every side, and the ruins we scattered to the distance of half a league, before the acrial torrent. Some of the inhabitants who remained in the villages were crushed or wounded by the fall of the houses; those who were working in the fields (luckily the greater number) were thrown down or borne along by the whirlpool, that destroyed at the same time the harvest and the cattle. It discharged hail as large as the fist, stones and other foreign bodies, which struck some persons and caused severe contusions. Waggons heavy laiden were dashed to pieces; wheels, of the largest size, torn off, were found at the distance of three or four hundred feet, from the places in which they were struck. One heavy vehicle was carried upon a tilekiln, which was razed. A steeple, several hamlets, a number of detached houses, some new walls, were tumbled down, and other villages than those mentioned, suffered considerably. To judge from the devastation which it spread, this water spout must have been about six hundred feet diameter at the base. It has deprived a multitude of individuals of their means of subsistance.

HORTICULTURE.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir, Seeing in the Moutreal Herald of the 6th inst. an account of the Horticulural society of that place having had their annual show of Melons, and observing that their finest Water Melon weighed 27lbs. 12oz I was induced this day to weigh a very large one of the same kind which grew in the Garden of the Hon. Col. Talbot, the weight of which was 37 lbs. 2oz.

I am &c.

Port Talbot, 29th September, 1823.

Horticulture.—The society held their annual Show of Grapes, on Tuesday last, when the best cluster, competing for the premium, was produced by Mr. John P. Hogg, Gardener, weight 38¼ ounces.—The second finest by Mr. Patrick O'Connor, Gardener, weight 20½ oz. M. O'C, also produced the third best weighing 18 oz.

A cluster of Grapes of a new variety, named the Wellington Grape, weighing 55½ oz. was produced at the meeting, from the garden of Wm. McGillivray, Esq.—R. C.

Mr. John Baker, residing in our village has this season raised a Bull calf, which at seven months old (the 9th inst) weighed 613 lbs. and girted 4ft. and 10 inc. and was begotten by a bull raised by Mr James Harvey of Dunham, and now owned by Mr. Orin T. Kemp of this village.—Communicated—

Montreal Races—Commenced on Wednesday—one of the best contested, and handsomest races ever witnessed on this course was run between Mr. Bender's Horse Lismahago, and Mr Kauntz's Horse Sir Walter—two mile heats, the first won by Lismahago, and the two latter supposed by Sir Walter.—Under decision of the Stewards.

Second day.—Bad sport, until about six o'clock in the evening, when a general engagement took place amongst some characters who had freely indulged in the poduce of our West Indian Islands—broken heads, and sore bones were, as is usual in such cases, the consequence.—

We have not heard what arrangements are made for this day's diversion.

The Laprairie Races.

There was much good sport on the Laprairie Course, on Wednesday, the first day of the Races—notwithstanding some difficulty, a large concourse of people was collected:

About 3 o'clock, the contest for the Maiden Plate took place between Mr. Baker's Black Horse, Mr. Nathaniel Jones's Bay Mare, and a bay horse belonging to Joseph Odell, Esq. During the first heat, the Black led the way, the bay horse followed next, and although not a match for him, run a very respectable race. In the second heat the Black still kept his superiority, the bay horse kept next until nearly two thirds of the course had been passed, when Mr. Jones' mare shot by him, and, followed the black very closely to the winning post.—The black won the plate.

The second race was for the Steam-Boat Purse, and was contested by Mr. Kauntz's horse Sir Walter and Lismahago, both very fine horses,—and the Bedford. The race being declared a dead heat between Sir Walter and Lismahago, it was decided that they should repeat the race. This last was a great display of power, which seldom has been observed so equal between two animals. Sir Walter came out best, although the race was finely contested by Lismahago.—Times.

QUEBEC, Oct. 7th.

We are sorry to announce the loss of two vessels bound to this port, near Cape Ray. The brig Emma, Captain Cockin, owned by Mr. Finch, of this city; from Liverpool, in ballast, and the Schr. Penryn Castle, from Halifax, with military clothing. The clothing and the crew of the latter vessel, with the exception of one man who was unfortunately lost, have been brought up by the Bark Duck, from Newfoundland.

The Spaniards Appeal.

God of our fathers! in whose name,
Resistless as the wild Simoon,
We rush'd through clouds of smoke and flame,
And swept away to death and doom,
The legions of the Iron Crown,
And hurl'd the Imperial Despot down.

Inflamed by whose life giving word,
We pour'd our unrequited blood
More freely than the desert bird,
Whose heart drops feed her infant brood,
To fix that monarch on the throne
We hoped to make our weal his own.

Who sees that monarchs foully rend
The sacred rights our hands retriev'd,
And strive to bind us with a chain
More dread than that we broke in vain.

Though kings forget, yet will not we,
The vigor of the soul that now we are,
And if when struggling to be free,
We sound the notes of war and death,
In Thy name shall the banners wave
That lead to freedom or the grave.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,
Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Counsellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the seventeenth day of November next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the second day of October instant, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the seventeenth day of November next, at which time, at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye, that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on Tuesday, the Eleventh day of November, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, FOR THE ACTUAL DESPATCH OF PUBLIC BUSINESS; there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary:—and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed.—WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this ninth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred, and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of PORT HOPE, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick. Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the bridge.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed-rooms.—The Kitchin is 18 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabbling for 48 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other comparable to it.

For Terms, and other particulars, apply to JOHN BROWN, Esq. at Port Hope. 39 t.f.

UNION.

On the interesting subject of the proposed Bill for uniting the Legislatures of Upper and Lower Canada, the following article, which bears a character of authenticity, appeared in the Montreal Gazette of the 14th instant.

"The consideration of the proposed Union has been delayed by various circumstances.—The representations from the Legislatures of Upper Canada did not arrive in England till late in April. The statement of the objections to the measure required by Ministers from the Anti-Union agents was not delivered before the middle of May. Mr. Stuart lost no time afterwards in submitting to His Majesty's Government a detailed statement of the grounds on which the Petitioners of the Union have prayed for that measure, and also an answer to the objections which have been made to it. Mr. Stuart, in the mean time, having had different interviews with Mr. Wilmot Horton, and Lord Bathurst, was fully impressed with the belief that no change has taken place in the opinion of His Majesty's Government respecting the expediency of the proposed measure. The Union is considered of the greatest importance to the interests of the Colonies, and to those of the mother country; but it would seem to be the disposition of the Government to withhold a formal expression of its determination at this moment, in order that the most matured deliberation may take place upon the measure in all its bearings; notwithstanding the manifold motives of despatch, it was not thought prudent or proper to press the subject upon the consideration of Parliament till it should be convenient for the Government to entertain it, and it was finally agreed, that the late Session should be allowed to pass over without agitating the question."

We have been credibly informed, that letters dated in August, have also been received at Montreal, from London, which state that the Hon. Mr. Papineau, the remaining agent of the Petitioners against the Bill, had recently had an interview with Lord Bathurst, Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, the result of which was such as fully to justify the confidence which the Inhabitants of this Province have always reposed in the justice and liberality of the British Government, of which they have had so many and valuable proofs.

There can be no doubt that His Majesty's Ministers, incessantly engaged in promoting the welfare of British subjects at home, whenever they are able to bestow their attention on the Colonies, are actuated by similar views, and that they are too much versed in the practice of the free Government, the administration of which is entrusted to them by His Majesty, not to give due weight to the opinions of the Colonists, as expressed in the representations of their constitutional authorities.

The report of an approaching Congress, to be held either at Vienna, or some place more centrical, continues to be talked of in the Ministerial circles. It is said, however, that it will not be attended with all that diplomatic formality which characterized the proceedings at Verona, while at the same time it will be more general in its details. Besides the affairs of Spain, which are to form the [illegible] of deliberation, those of the smaller States of Germany are likewise to be discussed. The policy which for some years past has been pursued by the Courts of Bavaria and Wirtemburg is said to have given the highest offence to the Holy Alliance; that of the latter power in particular.—One great object of the ensuing Congress will be, to set forth to Europe, in a clear and convincing light, the principles on which the Holy Alliance profess to act, and the compact by which they are held together.

It is confidently reported (says a late London Morning Chronicle) that Mr. Canning openly condemned the conduct of Sir William A'Court, in not following the King of Spain to Cadiz, as it was his duty to be at his post and not sit in judgement on the Cortes.

Botany Bay.—A petition from the body of convicts in New South Shetland, has been presented to the English House of Commons. The petition was signed by 7556 individuals, and stated that they were the persons through whose labour and industry the colony had been chiefly clear'd and brought to its present state of prosperity; that they had in their possession 29,000 acres of cultivated land; and 212,000 acres of pasture, that they were possessed of 42,398 head of cattle, 174,000 sheep, 2413 houses in towns, 215 colonial vessels, and a capital amounting in the whole to one million. The petitioners had been manumitted in consequence of a power expressly sent to the Governor for that purpose; they had imagined themselves restored to all their rights by that manumission, until, in consequence of a determination of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, it had been held that in consequence of a fault not their own, of a negligence which belonged to the public departments of the State, in not issuing a general pardon, one of the conditions of the Act of Parliament had not been complied with, and they had been declared to be attainted felons, although they had been for many years in the full enjoyment of the rights of freemen.—Since that time they had no right to sue or to be sued, or enjoy any of the advantages belonging to the House would take into consideration the condition in which they were placed in consequence of this state of the law, and afford them such relief as their situation and circumstances deserved.

A society of English Patriots are translating into Spanish the "Abridged History of the Inquisition, by M. Leonard Gallois," to be printed at London: the edition to amount to 3000 copies. This work is to be circulated at all points of the peninsula, as the best means of undeceiving the Spanish people with respect to the utility of re-establishing the holy office. In France the tenth edition of this little volume is already quite exhausted.

Robert Bloomfield, the author of the Farmer's Boy, &c. died at Shefford on the 19th of August, in the 57th year of his age.

The number of inhabitants in Ireland is estimated at 6,846,949; and the number of Irish acres at 6,809,709; so that there is more than one individual to an acre. In England the number of English acres is 32,342,400, and the inhabitants 11,486,700, or nearly three English acres (about 2½ Irish) to an individual. But the difference between the [illegible] of land one has to support, in a barony of about 30 square miles in Ireland, nearly one half of the farms are less than five acres, and only one in thirty is above 50 acres.

EXPORTATION OF LADIES.—A letter from a gentleman in Van Dieman's Land, to his friend in Edinburgh, may furnish a useful hint to the deciples of Mr. Malthus, as to the practicability of preventing any improper increase of population in this country. It appears that the best article of traffic in that country would be respectable females. One speculator proposes to take from 100 to 200, as a first rate order; and so certain is he of disposing of them to advantage, that he only stipulates that they shall be under 50. He offers to retain the cash advanced as freightage with the least possible delay. Besides, the governor offers a bounty on the importation, of from 50 to 100 acres of land. We hope that some of our merchants will attend to this hint.—Bristol Mercury.

Orthographical Curiosity.—The following singular inscription is said to be literally copied from a sign board in Liverpool:—

"Shews Maid and Men dead Hear."

The Captain of the American brig Criterion, at Portsmouth from St. Ubes, reports that he was boarded July 29th, by a French man of war brig, and robbed of all his fresh provisions, sails, clothing, and other articles.

Intelligence from Natchez says, that of about 100 persons remaining in the city, eight died daily.

FANCY.—Dr. Darwin relates the following instance of the power of fancy, which two centuries ago, would have been accounted witchery:—A young Warwickshire farmer, finding his hedge broken and robbed during several winter, determined to watch for the thief. He chose a moonlight night, and lay many hours beneath the shade and shelter of a hay stack. He suffered much from cold, and at midnight was about to retire; but, at that moment, appeared a decrepit old woman, of appearance much corresponding with the popular notion of a witch; she hastily collected a bundle of [illegible] from the hedge, and was about to carry them off; the farmer sprang from his concealment, and seized the old woman as the nightly thief of his property. After some struggling, the old woman, who displayed great personal strength and determination, suddenly knelt down upon her bundle of sticks, and after silently raising her withered arms to the moon, then at full, she thus addressed the already half frozen farmer:—"Heavengrant thou mayest never again enjoy the blessing of warmth." The terrified farmer left her, and made his way home, under the full effect of the cold spell. He complained of extreme cold the following day, he complained of extreme cold the following day, wore an extra upper coat, then another, and at length, in despair, took to his bed, which was covered continually heaped with blankets, which covered his face, and in which he actually lay to his death, which did not happen until twenty years afterwards.

An extraordinary case of hydrocephalus, or water of the brain, is just now exciting the interest of the medical gentlemen of Salisbury. The head of an infant, before any operation was performed, at the age of six (now only seven) months, was of the following extraordinary dimensions:—Round the forehead and back part of the head, 30 inches, and from ear to ear across the vertex 21 inches; which measurements will be better understood by stating, that the larger circumference of the adult head averages but 22 inches, and from ear to ear but 12; and of a healthy child of 6 months old, the largest circumference averages 16, and from ear to ear 9 inches. The infant belonging to respectable parents, is under the immediate treatment of one of our surgeons, and is submitted to a novel practice, viz.—the removal of the water by degrees through the means of operation, and at the same time the employment of pressure. The infant has undergone the operation five times, and 110 ounces (nearly seven pints) of water have been removed. The present state of the infant and the effects of the operations and treatment are such as afford well grounded hopes that for this disease, considered hitherto hopeless, a remedy has at length been found.—Salisbury Journal.

A GOOD APOLOGY.—In the court of sessions in Scotland, the judges who do not attend, or give a proper excuse for their absence, are by law liable to a fine. This law, however, is never enforced; but it is common on the first day of the session, for the absentee to send an excuse to the Lord President.—Lord Stonefield having sent such an excuse, on the president mentioning it, the Lord Justice Clerk, Braxfield, said in his broard dialect, "What excuse can a stout fallow like him hae?" "My lord," said the President, "he has lost his wife." The Justice, who was fitted with a Xantippe, replied, "Has he? that is a good excuse indeed, I wish we had a' the same."

GINGER BEER.—This, when well made, is one of the most agreeable, as well as one of the most wholesome beverages that can be imagined. The subjoined recipe for producing it in high perfection may be found useful during the summer months:—"Take 1½ oz. of ginger, well bruised, 1 oz of cream of tartar, and 1 lb. of white sugar; put these ingredients into an earthen vessel, and pour upon them a gallon of boiling water; when cold, add a table spoonful of yeast, and let the whole stand till the next morning. Then skim it, bottle it, and keep it three days in a cool place before you drink. Be sure to use good sound corks, and secure them with twine or wire."

ANECDOTE OF MORILLO.

Morillo and Morales, though able generals, are two of the most ferocious savages in all that relates to the infliction of misery upon their opposers. The following anecdote is characteristic, and unlikely to be literally true.

During the campaign in Caraccas, a boy appeared in the tent of Morillo, drowned in tears. The Chief desired to be informed for what purpose he was there. The child said he came to beg the life of his father, then a prisoner in Morillo's camp. "What can you do to save your father?" asked the General. "I can do but little," said the boy, "but what I can shall be done." Morillo seized the little fellow's ear:—"Would you suffer your ear to be taken off to obtain your father's liberty?" demanded he. "I certainly would," was the answer. A soldier was accordingly ordered to cut off the ear by pieces. The boy wept, but resisted not. "Would you lose your other ear for the accomplishment of your purpose?" was the next question. "I have suffered much, but I can still suffer," replied the boy. The other ear was taken off by one stroke of the knife. "And now," said Morillo, "depart! the father of such a son is dangerous to Spain; he must pay the forfeit of his life." The maimed child passed from the quarters of the General, but to witness the execution of his father.

MORLAND THE ARTIST.—A work lately published gives the following picture of this eccentric person: "He was found at one time in a lodging, at Somertown, in the following most extraordinary circumstances.—His infant child, that had been dead nearly three weeks, lay in a coffin, in one corner of the room; an ass and foal stood munching barley straw out of the cradle; a sow and pigs were solacing themselves in an old cupboard; and himself whistling over a beautiful picture that he was finishing at his ease; with a bottle of gin hung upon one side, and a live mouse sitting, or trying pieces, kicking its own shadow in a looking glass.

SPAIN.

LONDON, Sept. 2.

Important Intelligence from Spain.—An extraordinary courier has arrived from Madrid, bringing intelligence to the 23d ult. Nothing important had occurred in that capital, but the news received through it from Cadiz is of great consequence. His Royal Highness the Duke of Angoulême, it will be remembered, arrived at Port St Mary on the 16th. On the following day he proceeded with the business of his mission. He despatched Col. Lahitte, one of his aide-de-camps, with a flag of truce, and a despatch to Cadiz.—The despatch was addressed immediately to the King. The Colonel was told that he could not be admitted to see the King, to transact any business or carry on any communications with him, except through the usual medium of his responsible advisers. Colonel Lahitte being thus disappointed in his original purpose, and unable to execute his first instructions, requested to see the Governor of Cadiz. (The Governor is Valdez, who, besides having the command of Cadiz, is likewise chief of the permanent commission of the Cortes, appointed on the prorogation of that body.) It was, of course, in his former capacity that an interview was solicited with him by the agent of the Duke of Angoulême. Valdez received the Duke's aid-de-camp with much civility, and offered, if the letter of his Royal Highness was entrusted with him, to secure its delivery to His Majesty, or at any rate, to acquaint his Majesty with its contents. On this condition the Duke's aid-de-camp left the letter. Its contents are most important. It declares, that this was the last time that his Royal Highness would summon the persons who held his Majesty in captivity to deliver him up; but that, if this summons was complied with, his royal Highness promised, in the name of his Majesty the King of France, that his Majesty would, in the first place, engage Ferdinand VII upon his liberation, to declare a general amnesty, without limitation or exception, to all his subjects; and secondly, that his Majesty Louis XVIII. would engage Ferdinand VII to convoke the ancient Cortes of the Kingdom, in order to establish, in concurrence with them, such a scheme of government as the circumstances of his subjects, and the light of the age, demanded. That these offers might command confidence, his Royal Highness added, that he and the army would be a guarantee for their fulfilment.—The Prince left the King of Spain's Councillors five days to decide on their acceptance or rejection of these offers. If at the expiration of this time the King was not liberated, his Royal Highness declared, that he would no longer listen to any terms, but unconditional submission, and would immediately commence the attack on the city, in order to bring about a result by force which he could not accomplish by conciliatory overtures. No despatch had since been received from Port St. Mary, from which it was supposed that negociations had commenced. This is, however, only a conjecture.—Times.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

The following was given in a Second Edition of our paper of yesterday:—

Paris, Monday Evening.—The despatches which the Government received yesterday evening (and which have not been published to-day), announce that the French having attacked the Trocadero, were repulsed with great loss. It appears that the Constitutionalists of Cadiz would not accept the arrangements. The propositions made by the Duke d'Angoulême have not been accepted. It is said that the propositions were the same as the Journal de Paris and Constitutionel of to-day have announced.

Letters from Madrid, received yesterday announce that the approach towards that capital of more constitutional troops have kept the Regency in the greatest alarm. The French Rentes closed at 91f. 90c. Spanish 34¼.

The following, are extracts from FERDINAND'S speech at the closing of the session of the Cortes in August, 1823.

"Gentlemen Deputies—On this solemn day, in which the present Cortes are closed, my heart is necessarily affected by sensations of different kinds, though still they accord with the circumstances in which the nation is placed.

"Invaded, as our territory is, by the most unheard of treachery, on the part of a perfidious enemy, who owe their existence chiefly to this magnanimous nation, the world beholds violated in her the rights of all countries, and all the principles the most sacred among men. Pretended defects in our political institutions; supposed errors in our interior administration; a feigned wish to restore tranquillity, the disturbance of which is the work of those alone who exaggerated it, affected concern for the dignity of a Monarch who wishes not to be one but for the happiness of his subjects—such were the pretexts. Of an aggression which will be the scandal of posterity, and the blacket spot in the nineteenth century. But, hypocrisy, emboldened by her ephemeral progress, soon threw off the mask, and discovering all the horror of her views, no longer allows even the most duped to doubt, that he only reform that she aims at is, to deprive the Nation of all independence, of all liberty, and of all hope; and that the dignity which she pretends to restore to my crown consists only in dishonoring me. In exposing my Royal Person and Family, and in undermining the foundation of my throne, to raise herself on its ruins."

"But," he continues, "in the midst of these disasters, Spain preserves her magnanimous resolution, and the Cortes, in the closet union with my government, have ever maintained themselves such as they were in the memorable, days of the 9th and 11th of January last. The serenity and wisdom of their deliberations hitherto amidst such bitterness and danger, the confidence which their patriotism inspires, and the hatred itself with which they are honored by the enemies of the country, are so many proofs that they have deserved well of it. Indefatigable in promoting all the branches of public prosperity, they have issued various decrees that contribute to it, as far as circumstances permit."

'My government shall cease to exist before it takes any step contrary to the oath's by which it is connected with the country, or to what is required by the honour of my nation or the dignity of my crown; and if circumstances shall require it, it will seek, in the extraordinary Cortes, a safe harbour for the vessel of state.—In such case, I will assemble them, always depending upon their zeal and patriotism, and jointly we will travel the path of glory, until a peace be obtained as honorable and worthy of Spaniards and of myself."

There were 4000 troops in Corunna when that place surrendered.

It is the intention of the French fleet to destroy Cadiz by fire, if the city does not surrender.

The London Courier of September 4, says.

"We have received no positive confirmation this morning respecting the reply given to the propositions of the Duke d'Angoulême, by the Ministers of Ferdinand; but from one or two circumstances, we feel an increased confidence in its authenticity."

Lisbon, July 28.—His Majesty has been pleased to replace the Council of State on the footing in which it was before the law of 25th September.

Lord Cochrane and the Portuguese Squadron.

From Bahia or Pernambuco.—On the 1st and 2d of July, Gen. Madeira evacuated Bahia and embarked his troops on board the Portuguese men of war and merchantmen, then in the harbor, and immediately sailed. The Brazilian army then took possession of the city. Lord Cochrane, who was cruizing off the harbour, gave chase to the Portuguese, and before the 6th, succeeded in capturing thirteen of the merchantmen transports, which after disabling, either by starting their water, or cutting away their main-masts, or taking most of their sails from them, he ordered back to Bahia, or the nearest ports, and continued in close of the men of war. This account was brought to Pernambuco by the brig of war Bahia, with four large prizes in her charge. Pernambuco was illuminated three nights on receipt of the news. During the stay of the Bahia, she captured by her boats a ship and brig under the Portuguese colours, and sent them in. Before the brig of war arrived, the Portuguese flag was admitted at Pernambuco.

The Portuguese Squadron.—We have been visited within the last week with eighteen sail of this squadron and convoy that evacuated Bahia, consisting of one ship of the line, three frigates, one sloop of war, nine corvettes and four transports. They arrived here in a very destitute situation, having left Bahia with only 30 rations per man, and had 46 days passage, which was a favourable one. They were pursued by Lord Cochrane's single ship to the sixth degree of N. latitude. This ship, from her superiority of sailing and manœuvering, was enabled to harrass this squadron exceedingly, and but for the favourable state of the weather during 17 days, would have succeeded in cutting off some of the smaller ships. Several of the transports were boarded and their masts cut away; among those thus treated were two bearing the Russian flag. The convoy consisted originally of upwards of one hundred and fifty vessels, on board of which it was estimated were twelve thousand souls." Letter from Payal of Sept 1st.

PERU.—Since the unfortunate occurrence to the Republic at Mosquegua, (in the intermedios,) all the states are making uniform efforts to put an end to the war which has been continued so long by Spain, more from a motive of pride than from any hope of success. In a short time, 20,000 men will be ready to commence operations against the Spanish troops. On the 17th July, 6000 sailed from Africa, under General St. Cruz, to join 3000 more coming from Chili. 6000 Colombians have started from Guayaquil, and the campaign will be directed by the Liberator Boliver, under whose order it is expected a durable peace will be established."

GREECE.

The following is the latest intelligence from Greece; a country, which for long has been the theatre of a most desolating warfare, that is now apparently to be renewed with greater vigour:

GREECE.—Smyrna Papers to July 25th, are received at Boston. Smyrna, it will be recollected, is a Turkish province, and its papers would no doubt represent the state of the war with the Greeks in the most favourable light on their own side.

It appears that the Turks have commenced a campaign in the Morea with about 60,000 men; and the Smyrna Spectator says, "we are of opinion that the fatal hour of the Greeks is near at hand." The Greeks are greatly divided among themselves.

The Smyrna Editor commends, in the strongest terms, the new plan of operations of the Turks, which he considers to be to attack the source of the Greek Revolution in the Peninsula, considering the success to be followed by the subjugation of the islands.

A body of Greeks landed on a point of the coast near the Gulf of Echelles Neuve, and were defeated by the Turks, who sent 5 heads to Smyrna, which were placed on the batteries before the Pacha's palace.

Great alarm has been excited at Syra, by a threatened descent from "Pirates" under Fazzioli, but the place was saved by the arrival of the French frigate Medee, and Fazzioli was seized and put in irons, with some of his associates.

Seven Greeks have been taken from an Anglo-Ionian vessel, and beheaded.

The report of the great fire at Constantinople is confirmed. It was with great difficulty the Palace of the Captain Pacha and Capt Bey were preserved.

All attention is now turned to the Morea. The Captain Pacha has embarked at Prevesa 18,000 Albanese whom he has transported to Patras, and on another side Ibrahim Pacha, is provided with an army of 40,000 at the defiles of the Morea.

The fleet of the Vice Roy of Egypt, commanded by Gibalar, consisting of 43 sail, with troops, has been seen for 11 days near Rhodes. It is destined against Candia.

Arrived, at Smyrna, the Austrian brig Velocity, with two Grecian Prizes.

We have advices from Athens, from the 1st to the 4th of July. All was in a horrible confusion there at the moment it was announced that the Turks were advancing to the number of 40,000, and that they had arrived at Livadid, only 2 or 3 leagues distant.

We have advices from Patras, to July 12. The Captain Pacha was there, and occupied in transporting a great number of troops from Prevesa.—It appears, as we have already said, that the Turks will make a spirited attack, on that side upon the Peloponesians.

The Catholic Greeks, and some others, have returned to Scio, and had their property restored—No property has been confiscated.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

The Autocrat of all the Russias has addressed a very pacific despatch to his August brother, the Autocrat of all the Turks, signifying that the best arrangement will be re-established between the two Courts, as soon as the stipulations about evacuating Moldavia and Wallachia are completed. All the bowels of paternal solicitude about his suffering fellow members of the Greek church are happily quieted by a dose of that sovereign specific, "legitimacy." The pious Alexander has found it written,—"a who art thou who judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth,"—and seems resolved, "as much as lieth in him, to live peaceably with all men," except revolutionists.

Peace is like to be completed between Turkey and Persia.

SCOTLAND.

From the Dumfries Courier of Aug. 28.

Few people were prepared for the tremendous rain that fell on the night of Wednesday and morning of Thursday last. For nearly twelve hours the rain descended in torrents. In many places the wheat has been completely flattened—a circumstance that will accelerate rather than retard the rusting and rotting process. Every where the burns and rivers overflowed their banks, inundating whole fields of turnips and potatoes, and doing irreparable damage to the meadow hay. The Dryfe and Milk (tributaries of the Anan) have not been so high for 20 years; and, considering the season of the year, the same thing may be said of the Nith. The Lochart too, has been playing sad freaks with the poor people's peats. For more than 40 years this stream has not been so high. Even the peats in stacks have been greatly wet, in many places. We learnt that the floods were particularly alarming in all that district of country which borders on the Solway Firth. Every stream that falls into this estuary was swollen to a height never before known—every where the burns overflowed their banks, deluging and sanding up" numerous fields of grain, demolishing hay ricks, peats stacks, &c. and converting large tracts of meadow land into temporary lakes. House that were previously thought inaccessible to the rivers, were suddenly isolated and cheated full of water—while many of the terrified inmates were forced to adopt the most ludicrous expedients with a view of transporting themselves to a place of safety. Here you might have seen a clown up to the middle in water, with his wife on his back, and two children in his arms, a third clinging to the neck of its mother, and a fourth holding fast by the skirts of her petticoats; there an old and lonely woman struggling through the flood, with her plaid and other garments floating behind, and impeding rather than favouring her progress. In one instance, the children of a washer woman escaped by means of their mother's washing pails—while the mother herself was piloted to land by her husband, in a float formed of an inverted ironing table; and at Cockpool, a young man made use of an old salt-pan to ferry himself over a new formed pond with the view of ascertaining the fate of his pigs. At seven, A. M. on Saturday, a fresh deluge was experienced in this neighbourhood nearly in the form of a water spout, and which appears to have been chiefly felt in the parish of Carlaverock. A correspondent states, that at the farm of Sherrington, six acres of turnips and four of rape were completely swept away; that a great number of carts of lime, spread and to spread, were carried into the Lochar, together with a great part of the soil they were meant to pulverize: that the children were catching eels in scores and dozens, dying or dead.

The Peers of Scotland have been summoned to assemble in Holyrood house, Edinburgh on the 2d of October, to elect a representative Peer for the House of Lords, in the room of Francis Lord Napier, deceased.

ANTIQUITIES.

A few days ago, some splendid remains of antiquity were discovered in a field on the estate of William Greenwood, Esq. of Brockwood Park, in Hampshire, England. About two feet below the surface of the earth, tesselated pavements of the most beautiful Mosaic patterns, have been cleared, the colors still retaining all their original vividness. A tradition exists in the neighbourhood, that a palace of King Alfred had stood on the site of this field, which tradition has from time to time been confirmed by various ancient relics pick'd up near this spot. It was in consequence of this legend that some gentlemen of the family were induced to sink pits in different parts of the field, which have led to a result likely to prove so important and so interesting to all lovers of antiquity. The pavements and part of the walls of an apartment have been cleared; the workmen have already broken into more than one vault, and are continually making more extensive discoveres. A few coins, bones, &c. have been found in one of the vaults.

THE MUMMY.—We are now, for the first time, presented with an opportunity of viewing an entire Mummy, a species of curiosity of the most interesting kind, and very rare in this country. There has been a fragment, for many years, in the museum of the library at Philadelphia; but that now exhibiting is complete in all its parts, and contained in a double sarcophagus. When we reflect on the great antiquity of this venerable relic, that the object before us was once a living member of a race now for three thousand years in the oblivion of death, thoughts and feelings cannot but arise, such as the wise and the good love to cherish. The antiquarian, the naturalist, and the young of all descriptions, ought to examine a curiosity like this, which will not long be within their reach.

The following account has been transmitted to us by a correspondent.—"Tradition has handed down from father to son, a story of a man having hanged himself with a hay rope, over a hay rick, at Berrybush, in the county of Selkirk, 105 years ago.—Two men lately employed in casting peats, remembering the tale, curiosity prompted them to dig about the spot, and, to their astonishment, they discovered the body of a man, with a hay rope about his neck, by which they pulled him out of the moss; neither body nor the clothes were the least decayed."—Border Courier.

EXTRAORDINARY NARRATIVE.

THE MASK.

A TRUE STORY.

How long he remained in this condition cannot be stated with accuracy. To the care of the Prince he was, probably, indebted for his recovery, before it was too late. He had kept an attentive eye upon his favourite. His long tete-a tete with a mask that nobody knew; the warmth of their conversation, or rather the warmth with which the Count engrossed almost the whole of it to himself; the lively interest he took in this person, which caused him to forget all that was passing around him, excited no small degree of astonishment in the Duke. His surprise was increased to the highest pitch, when he, at length, saw them both walk straight away from the hall. Gladly would his serene highness have ascribed it to a cause which is said not unfrequently to occur at masquerades; for then he would have heartily rejoiced at the cure of grief so profound. Such a change he, however, thought too sudden; the air of the conversation appeared too grave, and so open a departure from the company too incautious. That the Count had retired for the night without paying his respects to the Prince, was not to be supposed.

As Count T—had now been absent for some time, and did not return, the Prince began to be seriously alarmed; he made more particular inquiries, and was informed that they had gone into a certain apartment and shut the door. He went thither; and after calling to no purpose, opened the door, and beheld the Count extended in the middle of the apartment, with all the appearances of death. Surgeons and attendants were instantly summoned to his aid. All their efforts to restore animation were long ineffectual. At length, when the Count came to himself, and seemed somewhat recovered, the Prince urgently intreated him to disclose the cause of the accident. The Count gave a faithful narrative of his sufferings. The Duke was in the utmost astonishment, and would have suspected that the Count was delirious, had not his pulse, and the testimony of the medical attendants, refuted such an idea. Nay, the Prince himself had, with his own eyes, beheld at least some part of this extraordinary occurrence. The strictest inquiry was now made for the mask. Nobody had seen her go away, or even come out of the room; and yet she was no where to be found. All the hackney coachmen that were drawn up before the palace, all the gentlemen's servants, were interrogated, none of them had driven or attended her. At last, when they were all tired of inquiring, two chairmen came forward. They had, they said, been called about an hour before to take up a female domino, who came out of the back door of the palace. Being asked where they had set her down, they at first remained silent; but, when the urgency of the question required it, they replied: "At the church-yard." They added, that the mask had directed them to stop there; that when she was set down, she put an old ducat, covered all over with mould, into one of their hands; that she then went to the church-yard gate, which she opened with a single touch, and quickly shut it again after her. What afterwards became of her, they knew not. As far as their terror and astonishment would permit them to observe, she had sunk into the tomb on the right hand, as she there vanished from their sight.

In the very spot, described by the chairmen was the family vault of the count. There his deceased consort was interred. The door of the vault was next morning found open. No farther traces could be discovered; and in spite of repeated inquiries, nothing more was ever heard or seen of this mask.

It is easy to conceive that this event, when it became known—and it could not but be known the next morning to every child in B——, produced an uncommon sensation; and it is in the nature of things, that very different opinions should be formed concerning it. The multitude took it for an actual apparition; another, and not an inconsiderable portion, assuming an air of profound wisdom, came to no decision at all; and a few imagined that something of human artifice must be at the bottom.

MONTREAL, Oct. 15.

On Saturday last, the Launch of the Steam Tow Boat HERCULES took place. It was witnessed by a large concourse of people, who testified that satisfaction which naturally is felt in seeing the more interesting labours of Men accomplished. The model of this Boat is very fine; she is one hundred and ten feet in length, and has probably the greatest power of any Steam Boat in America. The power of a Steam Engine upon the plan of Boulton and Watt's, is calculated by the size of its Cylinder, with Boilers sufficiently large to afford a constant supply of Steam.—The cylinder of the CHANCELLOR KENT of New York—calculated for 100 horse power, is only 48 inches in diameter, while that of the Tow Boat is 55.—We feel much pride in beholding another production of the awakened spirit and enterprize of our citizens; and more especially when the facility promised to trade by this Boat is so great, and interests so nearly the whole community.—Can. Times.

We have been told that his Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie has—in addition to his many other acts of munificence and generosity—given to the Borough of William Henry, a lot of ground of an acre and a half, for the site of a protestant church; and has given £200 towards its erection, with assurances of further assistance should it be necessary. Such acts as this, endear our excellent Governor-in-Chief to those who are governed by him, and shew that he has a real regard for their interests.—C. Times.

MONTREAL, Oct. 17.

On Wednesday last the Hon. Wm. McGillivray, was installed Grand Master for the District of Montreal, after which ceremony, a Masonic Sermon was preached in the Protestant Episcopal Church, by the Rev. B. B. Stephens, M. A. A collection was made, which amounted to £30 0 6, which was presented to the Treasurer of the Montreal General Hospital.

Casualty.—On Tuesday last, an Inquest was held on the bodies of Angus McDonald and Donald McDonald, brothers, aged 21 years, and 19 years, who met with their death under peculiarly affecting circumstances. They had with their father, [illegible] McDonald, a settler of Glengarry, in Upper Canada, brought down a raft of timber for sale, from which a squared oak stick got adrift, and was cast on the beach above the river Cap Rouge; on Monday morning the old man with his two sons, above mentioned, went to bring down the stick—having borrowed for this purpose a small crazy wooden canoe—as soon as the tide began to ebb they commenced their voyage, the stick being watersoaked, floated under water, and the wind blowing fresh with a heavy swell, caused the stern of the canoe to be greatly depressed, by which the water came in at several cracks in her sides; as the weight of water sunk her deeper, the waves presently came over her gunwales, the youngest of the sons called out to his father to put off his jacket, which were the last words the old man heard from either of them, the canoe sunk almost immediately at about 250 yards from the shore, towards which the unfortunate youths directed their course, the father finding they could not reach the land, and seeing the bow of the canoe above water turned towards it and succeeded in regaining and getting into it; it was still sufficiently buoyant to sustain his weight; he stood up anxiously watching his boys, but only to see them sink to a watery grave; they were unable to disencumber themselves of their jackets, and perhaps exerted themselves too much at first, or M'Donald is of opinion, that, being both good swimmers, they might have escaped; the bodies were found at low water and brought down to the Cul de Sac.

UPPER CANADA.

P. MAITLAND,

Lieut. Governor.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

TO our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, on Monday the seventeenth day of November next, to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you—GREETING:

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the second day of October instant, We thought fit to prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the seventeenth day of November next, at which time, at our town of York, you were held and constrained to appear. Now Know Ye, that We, taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these Presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on Tuesday, the Eleventh day of November, now next ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament in our Town of York, FOR THE ACTUAL DESPATCH OF PUBLIC BUSINESS; there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and thereon to do as may seem necessary:—and herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed.—WITNESS our trusty and well-beloved SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lieutenant-Governor of our said Province, and Major General commanding our Forces therein, at York, this ninth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred, and twenty-three, and in the fourth year of our Reign.

THE Agent for Paying Militia Pensions, hereby gives notice, that he will commence the payment of Pensions from this date, for the year ending the 31st of December, 1823.

Militia Pension Office, York, 4th October, 1823. } 14w—42.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, 7th Nov. 1823.

WHEREAS it has become expedient to establish a line of communication through certain remote Townships, for encouragement thereof, Grants will be made to actual Settlers in the Townships hereinafter named on the condition of settling within two years from the date of the Location, at the reduced Scale of 5th January, 1819, viz:

THE PORT HOPE MANSION-HOUSE HOTEL.

TO BE LET, AND POSSESSION GIVEN ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY NEXT.

ALL that Extensive BRICK MANSION and Premises now erecting in the delightful and flourishing village of Port Hope, in the District of Newcastle, U. C. to be called The Port Hope Hotel, consisting of a Double House, most substantially and elegantly built of Brick, Two Stories high, and advantageously situated in the centre of the village, near the bridge.

The Main or front building, is 50 feet by 36, and contains Eight Square Rooms. The wing behind is 50 feet by 18, and contains Ten Bed-rooms.—The Kitchen is 16 by 20 feet, with every requisite convenience. There is, besides, a Wash house, Laundry, &c. 32 feet by 18, and Stabling for 42 Pair of Horses.—As much Garden ground can be had as the occupier may wish for.

The proprietor is anxious rather to have a respectable, assiduous tenant, who is well acquainted with business, and who will keep such a house as may be a credit to himself, and acquire a good reputation for the Town, than to secure an unreasonable or exorbitant rent; the terms will, therefore, be made easy to one sufficiently well qualified, in all respects, to undertake the management of this promising concern.

It must be needless to say much respecting the situation. Being nearly in the centre of the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and at the outlet of one of the most flourishing and extensive Settlements in the Province, with every convenience of Market, and on the high road between York and Kingston, it will be difficult to find any other Tavern stand.

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN A BARRISTER AT LAW AND A JURYMAN.

SETTING FORTH THE ANTIQUITY, EXCELLENT DESIGN, USE, OFFICE, AND JUST PRIVILEGES OF

JURIES,

By the Law of England.

FIRST WRITTEN

BY SIR JOHN HAWLES, KNIGHT,

SOLICITOR GENERAL TO WILLIAM III.

AS the security of our persons, our reputations, our properties and our liberties, depends upon Jurors, it can never be unreasonable to inform, or to remind them of their Duties. While they remain ignorant of the nature of their station, they cannot determine with propriety; while they feel not its importance, they will not conduct themselves with spirit. When questions, however, which relate to the welfare of the People, are agitated in a Court of Justice, instructions of this kind become of more than ordinary importance. Errors upon these occasions may be attended with fatal consequences, since powers will be introduced, which may in the end, overturn the constitution.

But it is not upon the good intentions of Jurymen only that we must depend. If they should be prevented, either by fraud or force, from discharging the trust reposed in them, their endeavours will avail little to the protection of the subject. Their rights ought, therefore, to be guarded against all attacks, especially as men of great eminence in the law have publickly declared that they have lately been invaded:—and to be defended, they must be understood.

A knowledge, then, of whatever relates to the office of Juries, seems at this time essentially necessary; since from hence alone can arise the proper Execution of its Duties, and the Preservation of its Rights.—To promote this end, the following Pamphlet is now republished. Its character for perspicuity and strength of reasoning, is so well established, that it is needless to enlarge on it here. If it meets with the success which its merit deserves, it will, perhaps, be a principal means of preserving the Trial by Jury, in its full force, to posterity.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

A new Novel from the pen of Sir Walter Scott is in the Press, & will soon be announced for publication. The subject is said to be peculiarly interesting, abounding in incident, and quite of a dramatic character.

The statue of his late Majesty, George III, which, a short time ago, was taken down in the Royal Exchange, was found to be so much out of repair, that the Gresham Committee have given orders to an eminent statuary to complete a new one, which will then be put up in the same niche.

The sum subscribed for erecting an equestrian statue in honor of the Marquis of Hastings, amounted at Calcutta on the 11th of March to 13,450 rupees, above £1,300 sterling.

The Dublin papers announce, that the general state of Ireland, notwithstanding the occurrence of a few outrages, is considerably improved. No cases of atrocity have of late come before any of the assize courts; and at Cork, the judge was presented with a pair of white gloves by the sheriff, in consequence of the assizes having proved maiden.

Belfast has been lighted with Gas. A Dublin editor remarks, that the light headed Corporation of Dublin are disposed to let the people there continue to grope their way in "darkness visible."

An unusual occurrence has just taken place at Glasgow. A Gentleman, by birth a German, publicly renounced the errors of Judaism, in the Episcopal Church there, and was baptised into the Christian Faith, according to the rites of the English Church.

A meteor of uncommon dimensions appeared in our vicinity on Wednesday evening 17th inst. its course South, at about half past 8 o'clock. The light from the explosion of which was accompanied by a flash more vivid than that produced by the severest lightning we ever recollect to have experienced.—Charles Intelligencer.

Tobacco.—The frosts last week made sad havoc on the tobacco plants. A Georgetown paper says that 30,000 hogsheads have been destroyed. Some of the most opulent planters of Prince George's county have lost every plant! The Annapolis Republican says, that about one third of the crop of Anne Arundle, and the adjacent parts of Prince George's had been secured, the season for cutting having arrived, and that the produce was large; but the other two thirds was wholly destroyed by the frost on the night of the 29th ult. "The leaves were stiffened with the cold, the succeeding sun turned them black, withered and ruined them entirely." This great loss will bear very heavily on the tobacco growing counties of Maryland.

DISTRESSING SHIPWRECK.—From the American schr. Quincy, Harbour Mariners, we learn the following distressing fact.

On the 15th inst. in lat. about 40°, and long. 20° the brig George the Fourth, from Waterford, bound to Quebec, with 115 passengers, going to settle in Canada, and having a crew of 14 hands, including the master, was run down in a heavy gale by the bark Hannah, of S. Sheilds, from Miramichi, to London, and sunk immediately; and of the 129 souls on board, 123 sunk with her. The mate and five of the seamen got on board the Hannah, whose condition was almost as hopeless as that of the vessel they had escaped from. Providentially the brig Mary, bound to London, came to their rescue, and succeeded in saving these six, together with the whole of the Hannah's crew 15 in number, from a watery grave. The Mary being short of provision, the bark Henry, of Moscow Island to London, took from her five of the Hannah's crew on the 17th; and on the same day, captain Harding generously relieved the Mary, by taking out the six survivors of the George the Fourth, whom he has treated with the most humane attention, and from whom we received this affecting account.

From Bell's Weekly Messenger, Sept. 1.

Marlborough Street.—Mr. Walker, an army agent, was, for the third time, brought to this office to answer the complaint of Miss Hardy, a respectable French lady, residing at No 40, Albemarle street, and in whose house this Mr. Walker has for some months lodged, to her very great annoyance.

Miss Hardy, who was attended by a number of respectable foreign ladies and gentlemen, as well as several inhabitants of the street in which she resides, stated, that on the preceding Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights, Mr. Walker remained up in his apartments until four o'clock, making the most hideous noises with a violin, under the pretence of playing upon that instrument, which, however, from his manner of performance, she was well aware he knew nothing about, and that he only procured it lately for the sole purpose of annoying her and her family. He continues scraping on the instrument until that hour every morning, and boasts that he can do so without any inconvenience to himself, as he can sleep all day, whereas they must be up to work. The consequence has been, that for three nights not one in the house had an hour's rest. He generally changes his instrument of annoyance once a month. He had before tried a drum and a postman's bell; but the noise of his violin is so piercing in the still time of night, that it is impossible to get any rest; she has in vain entreated him to let them have a little sleep, and from the distressing situation of the young ladies in her house for want of rest, she determined for one night to put a stop to his proceedings, and at four o'clock in the morning she called the watchman and gave Mr. Walker in custody for the remaining part.

In answer to this charge of unmanly conduct, Mr Walker very coolly said, that he considered that he had a perfect right to play his violin as long as he pleased, in his own apartments, and he should continue to do so; but it was not, he said, without reason that he did all this. Miss Hardy and her servants annoyed him in every possible way. They refused all his letters and messages, and on Saturday, when he was about to dress on his boots, he found them full of water. Miss Hardy said, if such was the case, either he himself, or his servant must have done it, as there was no one in her establishment that was capable of so foul a trick.

Mr. Roe said, that he was really astonished, from the apparent respectability of Mr. Walker, how he could thus continue to torment and annoy this lady, or how it was, for his own comfort, he did not remove from a house where he said he was so ill treated. He then addressed Miss Hardy, and said that he had no power to afford her any relief, if he had, he would be most happy to do so.

Several respectable householders in Albemarle street stated, that there was not a more respectable lady than Miss Hardy. Her apartments have been occupied by some of the first gentlemen in the country. The whole neighbourhood, they said, was annoyed by Mr. Walker, as his noises were heard in all the houses around. Mr. Walker left the office, triumphing in what, no doubt, he considered very manly and gentlemanlike conduct.

Ben Jonson the Poet.—As the workmen were excavating a vault in the north aisle of Westminster Abbey, last week to receive the remains of the wife of Sir Robert Wilson, they discovered at the head of it, a leaden coffin in a perpendicular position, which they found upon examination, to contain the skeleton entire of Ben Jonson, the poet.—Tradition states, that Ben Jonson, while he was seriously misposed, was asked where he would be buried? He replied, "I will be interred in Westminster Abbey if I can get a foot of ground;" and that the Dean of Westminster gave sufficient ground (about two foot square) to admit the coffin in a perpendicular position, and a square hole was dug and the corpse admitted head downwards. At the top of the hole, a stone, about eighteen inches square, was found with the initials "B. J." upon it, in rather illigible characters.

FEMALE PEDESTRIANISM.

A young girl, only eight years of age, for a wager of a hundred sovereigns, was engaged to walk or run 30 miles in eight successive hours, in the Cricket ground, Chelsea, which she accomplished with perfect ease, eleven minutes within the time, doing the last mile in less time than any of the preceding. A ring was marked out on the ground, being the sixth of a mile. She occasionally took a little refreshment of wine and water, and appeared in excellent spirits to the last.

Learning for Ladies.—"I should be glad to know (said a learned Lady to a Gentleman) how knowledge is incompatible with a woman's situation in life.—I should like to be told why chemistry, geography, algebra, languages, and the whole circle of arts and sciences, are not as becoming in her as a man?" "I cannot say (replied the gentleman) that they are entirely unbecoming; but I think very little will answer the purpose. In my opinion, a woman's knowledge of chemistry should extend no farther than to the melting of butter; her geography should extend no farther than a thorough acquaintance with every hole and corner of her house; her algebra to keeping an exact account of the expenses of the family: and as for tongues, [illegible] and the less use she makes of it the better."

MOUSE THREAD MILL.

To the Editor of the Edinburgh Star.

Sir, having seen a paragraph in your paper some time ago, stating that a gentleman in Kirkaldy had trained two mice, and invented a machinery for enabling them to spin cotton yarn, making 6d. per day profit, I take the liberty of informing you that a Mr. Hatton, of this town, has had two mice constantly employed in the making of sewing thread for upwards of 12 months; and that the curious may be entertained with a fair statement of facts, I hope you will give a place to the following description, which is by no means exaggerated:—Sir, I have often seen his Mouse Thread Mills, I thoroughly understand the amusing peration. The Mouse thread Mill is so constructed, that the common house mouse is enabled to make atonement to society for past offences, by twisting, twisting and reeling from 100 to 120 threads per day, (Sunday not excepted,) of the same length and quality with the enclosed hank, which I send as a specimen of their work, for the inspection of the curious. To complete their task, the little pedestrian has to run ten miles and a half. This journey it performs with ease every day.

An ordinary mouse weighs only half an ounce: a half-penny worth of oatmeal, at 15d. per peck, serves one of these thread wheel culprits for the long period of five weeks. At that time it makes (110 threads per day, being the average) 3,850 threads of 25 inches, which is very nearly nine lengths of the standard reel. A penny is paid here to women for every cut made in the ordinary way. At this rate a mouse earns 9d. every five weeks, which is just one farthing per day, or 7s. 6d. per annum. Take 6d. off for board, and allow 1s. for machinery, there will arise 6s. of clear profit from every mouse year ly. The last time I was in company with the mouse employer, he told me that he was going to make application to the heritors for a lease of an old empty house here, the dimensions of which are 10 feet by 30, and 50 in height, which, at a moderate calculation, will hold ten thousand mouse mills, sufficient room being left for keepers and some hundreds of spectators.

Allowing £200 for rent and task-masters, and £600 for the interest of £10,000 to erect machinery, there will be a balance of £2,300 per annum This, Sir, you will say, is projecting with a vengeance, but it would surely be preferable to the old South Sea speculation.

I remain your obedient servant,

A CONSTANT READER.

Dunfermline, July 28, 1823.

The Highlands of Perthshire have lately been overrun by rats. The lowlands used to be the favourite residence of this enterprising species of vermin; but within the last two or three years they have pushed their settlements in the Districts of Strathspay, Appin of Duff Fortingall, and Breadalbane, most amazingly. During the present season they have been known to devour whole litters of pigs, and broods of poultry; and mothers begin to apprehend danger from them to their helpless infants.—Dundee Advertiser.

The competition among the steam boats on the Clyde is at present so great, that some of them carry passengers from Glasgow to Campbeltown, a distance of upwards of a hundred miles, for the charge of half a crown.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

GENERAL BALLASTEROS.—Francis Ballasteros was born at Soria, was in 1791. In 1793, being first lieutenant in the volunteers of Arragon, he so greatly distinguished himself, that he was raised to the rank of captain, during the campaign in Catalonia. He was accused, in 1804, of having fraudulently received 3000 rations, and was deprived of his command; but through the interest of the Prince of Peace, he obtained employ in the command of the custom house officers of Asturias. He filled the same situation in 1808, when the French invaded Spain. The Junta of Asturias confided to him the command of a regiment, and he became a brigadier, and afterwards marshal de camp. At that time the army of Castile was commanded by Blake and Castanos. Ballasteros gave repeated proofs of his bravery in diff rent battles, and eventually was one of the Spanish Generals, who when the Duke of Wellington appeared in the Peninsula, at the head of the Combined Armies, left him the command in Chief of the Spanish armies. On the cortes deciding in favour of the duke, Ballasteros retired from the service, and he published a memorial, to justify himself from the charge of having, through jealousy, caused the failure of several important military operations. When Ferdinand VII. returned to Spain, he conferred his protection on Ballasteros, and appointed him minister of war in 1815; but subsequently he was dismissed, and placed on half pay. On this he retired to Valladolid. In the present war, Ballasteros commanded an army of about 15,000 men, covering the province of Navarre.*

ABISBAL.

GENERAL O'DONNEL, COUNT ABISBAL, was born in Andalusia, about 1770, of Irish parents, entered into the royal guards at the age of fifteen, served against the French in the war from 1793 to 1795, and was remarked for his talents and bravery. When the French invaded Spain in 1808, O'Donnel was a major, and during the course of the war, he rose to be a marshal de camp. In the campaign of 1823, he displayed so much activity against the French, that he was recompensed with the title of count de Abisbal. In 1814, however, he was first imprisoned, and then banished, by the cortes, for a writing which he had published against them. But when Ferdinand overthrew the constitution, he particularly distinguished O'Donnel by his favour. The count was made captain general of the kingdom of Seville, and in 1815 was appointed commander of the Spanish army which was destined to act against Napoleon, after he returned from Elba. In 1819 he was placed at the head of the troops which were collected at Cadiz, for the purpose of subjugating the Americans; but in July, a conspiracy broke out in the camp, the object of which was, to compel the king to grant a constitution to his subjects. The expedition was thus rendered abortive, though the conspiracy was crushed for a time. After the revolution, which restored freedom to Spain, he was, on account of his equivocal conduct, for a long time in disgrace; but has since been restored to his rank, and now commands the Forces stationed in Madrid.*

MILANS.

This patriotic Spanish officer was, during several campaigns, the companion and friend of the brave and unfortunate Lacy. In the disastrous enterprise of that patriotic chief, he was one of his most active coadjutors. The attempt having failed, Milans, to avoid a similar fate, left his wife and daughter, and taking with him two infant sons, succeeded in reaching the small fishing town of Badalona, whence he embarked for Gibraltar. From that place he sailed to Buenos Ayres, and was extremely useful to the cause of freedom in the new world. As soon as he heard of the revolution in Spain, in 1820, he returned home, and on landing at Barcelona, where he found his wife and daughter waiting to meet him, he was received by the authorities with great rejoicings and congratulation. He was soon appointed to a command in Catalonia, where he distinguished himself against the army of the faith; and is, by the recent accounts, now contending with a corps of Mooney's division.

THE ci devant MISS O'NEIL.

It is known to every one who has any knowledge of the Drama during the last twelve years, that the present lady——formerly Miss O'Neil, had arrived to the summit of her profession as an actress; and her genius, to her everlasting praise, was kept alive by the attentions were paid to her by personages of the highest orders of Society—we perfectly recollect the first theatrical essay of this incomparable performer—it was in a Mait Kilo, at C. in the County of C. in Ireland; her father was then manager of a poor and miserable company of itinerants; and we know that an idea of her ever appearing on the London Boards at the time alluded to, did not enter the mind of her Father, or of herself.—The occasion of her first appearance was to speak a Masonic Address, written by a gentleman of the town, for the benefit of Mr. O'Neil, who was a Free Mason; she acquitted herself to the satisfaction of the audience; from that time she continued to act in the country, until the summer of 1811, when she was permitted to try her talents in the Royal Theatre in Dublin.—The reception which she met surpassed the most sanguine expectations of her friends. We know that a large party composed of the officers of the Garrison went to the Theatre that night, for the purpose of encouraging her by their plaudits. Although they evidently intended to approve, right or wrong, they had the gratification of bearing unequivocal testimony to the astonishing merits of their fair country woman. From this time her fame spread through the United Kingdom—she continued to charm the thousands who thronged to witness her exhibitions; the recent departure from the Stage of the powerful Siddons, tended greatly to operate in favour of Miss O'Neil, and she whose ambition, at one time, only aimed to please the unlettered audience of an Irish Barn, shone with unrivalled lustre in the brilliant atmosphere of the Royal Theatres, and pleased every description of persons from the peasant to the prince!

By this unexampled success, she was enabled to remove her father and family from obscurity, and to place them in a situation where want cannot reach their dwelling—she now graces the domestic circle in a manner as creditable to herself, as it is satisfactory to all those who have the honor of associating in the fashionable parties, of which Lady —, is the principle point of attraction.

MR. IRVING.

A new preacher has risen up in Great Britain, who has become nearly as famous as Dr. Chalmers, and has drawn after him crowds, even of the highest ranks in London. The last number of the New Monthly Magazine gives this description of him.

"Portrait of the Revd. Edward Irving.—Mr. Irving ascended the pulpit at 11 o'clock. The first of his appearance is extremely startling. He is considerably more than six feet high. He has a pallid face, the outline rather triangular than oval—the features regular and manly. The most striking circumstance about his head, is a profusion of coarse, jet black hair, which is carefully divided in the centre, and combed down on either side, after the Italian fashion in the middle ages. The eye brows and whiskers are unquestionably Hyperborean; the whole, we thought the countenance much more Italian than Scotch, and imagined that we could discover in the softness and regularity about the chin, some resemblance to the Bonaparte family. There is a strongly marked organical defect in the eyes: when upturned, they convey the idea of absolute blindness. The forehead is high and handsome, and far too anxiously displayed. We were sorry to see Mr. Irving's fingers so frequently at work in that quarter, to keep the hair in its upturned position. The petty care bestowed upon this point, and the toilet associations connected with bleached shirt wrists, starched collar, and cherished whiskers, greatly detracted from his dignity of aspect, and reduced what might have been really imposing, into an air of more terrific dandyism. His age, we understand, is about 40 years. If any one should ask us, who, him at in all, what he looked most like, we would say, that when he first made his appearance, his towering figure, sable habiliments, pallid visage, and the theatrical adjustment of his black and bushy hair, reminded us of the entry of a wonder-working magician upon the boards of a real theatre."

RUSSIA.

Petersburg, June 30.—A sad accident happened to our monarch, during his journey to Warsaw. His Majesty, it is well known, is accustomed to travel in a rapid manner. While passing a bridge near the city of Perchaws, the bridge broke through, and His Majesty's carriage fell into the river. The horses alarmed, in endeavouring to release themselves from the carriage, overturned it, and the Emperor seated in his open calache, received so severe a blow on the back of the head, that he lost much blood from the wound and fainted. Fortunately the city of Perchaws was not far off; the Emperor was carried there, and visited by the best surgeons of the city, who pronounced that the wound would not be followed by serious consequences. The Emperor ordered into his presence the two inspectors general of the roads, and having reproached them with their carelessness, banished them to Siberia.

The Emperor of Russia was to set off from St. Petersburg the 27th of August, on his grand tour through his vast states; he is to inspect the second grand army, and then to visit the port and city of Odessa on the Black Sea. Thence he will go to Bessarabia, and return to Brets Littursky, a town on the frontiers of Russia and Poland, where the United Polish army and the Russian troops cantoned in this kingdom are to manœuvre. The Emperor will be absent two months. The troops reviewed will amount to 80,000 men, under the orders of the Grand Duke Constantine.

During the present year, 39,043 males, and 36,483 female slaves, have been liberated from personal slavery in Russia. The Emperor has published a decree, permitting the monks in Russia to leave their convents, and releasing them from their vows. On this subject, the Courier François gives an able article, showing the predilection which Russia has for monks in Spain, while it is endeavouring to get rid of its own as fast as possible. "It would appear," says the Journaliste, "that clever Cabinets consider Monachism as a benefit which they ought to choose only for their neighbors."

Berlin, July 24.—The 19th of this month the Pastor Derege, celebrated at Potsdam, in the church of the court and garrison, the Divine service in commemoration of the mournful event of our Queen's death. The whole population, penetrated with grief and gratitude for the memory of this princess, the model of every virtue, was present at this ceremony, which was finished by the nuptial benediction being given by the priest to the five couples who are espoused to the five sub-officers of the 2d regiment of the fusiliers of the guard, and a young shoemaker.—Each of the brides received for a dowery an hundred crowns of the Empire, drawn from the perpetual foundation in memory of her Majesty the queen. These couples has merited, by their final obedience, their faithful services, the purity of their manners and irreproachable conduct, this distinction.

SPAIN.

The London Courier says, the situation of affairs at Cadiz is such as to cause considerable uneasiness to the French government.—Every attempt at negociation with the Cortes had failed, and there was no better ground for believing that better success will attend any future proposals. In the mean time the war lingers—the summer is rapidly on the close, there is every reason to expect that matters will remain thus undecided till the rains set in. The French ministers, as may be supposed, are fully sensible of the increasing difficulties of the contest, and anxious if possible to effect a speedy termination of the campaign.

It was generally reported that his Royal Highness the Duke d'Angoulême, had proposed the tremendous battering, which he intended to have given to the walls of Cadiz, on the night dedicated to the service of the God of St. Louis, and that a deputation of four of the members of the constitutional Cortes had waited on this great commander, and implored his merciful consideration.

The French ship Gustave, from St. Domingo for Havre, with a cargo valued at £20,000, has been captured by a Spanish privateer.

The Constitutionel says, the Emperor of Austria has granted permission to one of the archdukes to marry a young and accomplished woman taken from the lowest class of his subjects.

The Persians.—The Austrian Observer, of the 20th August, announces that the Turkish Kiaja of Daud Pacha at the head of 8000 men, has gained a decisive victory over the Persians at Mandeli, a town five leagues from Bagdad, which the latter had captured from the Turks. The garrison having made a sally, was repulsed with a loss of 1000 men, and the Persian commander was made prisoner. The Turks found a considerable booty in the fortress.

[TRANSLATED FOR THE BALT. AMERICAN]

COGNIA, (in the interior of La Notolie) July 14

"An extraordinary event has occurred which has been the subject of general conversation.

A Turk who was present at the sacking of Scio, brought away with him to this Isle a Greek female whom he had made a slave, and whom he since espoused, after having compelled her to embrace Mahometanism.

"One night, while the Musselman was enjoying the sweets of repose, she seized a cutlas, and in a moment of phrenzy, occasioned by the most horrible recollections, plunged it in the bosom of her ravisher, and then withdrew it in order to decapitate him. From that moment her revenge was satiated; and nature, re-assuming its empire over a heart she had formed for love and not for crime, the young Sciote fell and remained a long time in a state of insensibility. After having recovered her senses, the spectacle before her eyes chilled her heart and deprived her of the faculty of escaping; she swooned a second time, and remained in that state long after day break. At length some persons, being uneasy, resolved to force the door of the fatal chamber—on one side they perceived the dead body of the Turk; on the other, a female apparently waiting for some one to arrest her—"You can dispose of me," said she, "it was I who murdered him." They seized upon her and brought her before the Pacha. "Is it you have murdered your husband?"—"Yes," she replied, "it was I who killed the monster, who in my house, at Scio, had the barbarity to murder my father, mother, husband and infant—who then carried me off, brought me hither, and thought to make a Turk of me, while I am in fact, and I only wish to remain, a Greek." The populace had assembled in order to behold the punishment that awaited this Sciote; but the Pacha, after having listened to her attentively, granted her a pardon, and sent her back to her home, to the great astonishment of all the Musselmen, who nevertheless, on this, as on many other occasions, have submitted to the will of Providence.

"Respectable Turks, arrived from Cognia, have unanimously confirmed the contents of this statement."

Arts and Sciences.

Hall, Engineer-man to the Glasgow Water Company, having remarked the waste of fire, when a steam engine stops working, has, instead of letting in a constant supply of water into the boiler to compensate for the loss, recommended that at each time the engine is stopped, water to the depth of 16 inches above its usual level, be poured in, by which, when the work king is resumed, there is a sufficient supply of hot water, the Steam is ready the moment it is required, and no increase of fuel, to heat recently introduced fluid, is necessary. He has himself put this method into practice, and, however simple, it promises to be the means of a very great saving. In his trials the saving of fuel was about 2 per cent.

The Durham Chronicle states the complete success of an ingenious plan of constructing boilers for melting fat, kitchen stuff, &c. so as wholly to remove that offensive effluvia so much complained of by those in the neighbourhood of tallow chandlers and melting houses. The tub or chimney is constructed in such a way as to make the foul vapour from the boiler pass through the fire, which is equally applied to the boiler all round the exterior, is supplied with atmospheric air from above, the ash pit being completely closed. There is also a considerable saving of fuel and of time in the process.

A chemist of Glasgow has discovered an effectious method of rendering woolen, silk, or cotton cloth completely water-proof. The mode adopted is to dissolve caoutchouc in mineral oil, which is procured in abundance at the gas works, by a brush; to put five or six coatings of this mixture on one side of the cloth, or silk, on which another piece of cloth is laid, and the whole passed through between two rollers. The adhesion is most complete; so much so, that it is easier to tear the cloth than to separate either piece from the caoutchouc.

[The following discovery may prove of great utility in this country where we have had frequent occasions to regret the destruction of valuable property by lightning.]

Professor Leponotte, of Amiens, has discovered that straw possesses the quality of serving as a conductor to lightning. Repeated experiments have convinced him that straw united together, serves equally well as the iron rods now fixed upon buildings for the former purposes, at the same time that they are not attended with similar inconvenience. In consequence of this discovery, the common buildings may be secured from the effects of lightning in the most economical manner; and even crops on the land may be protected from the ravages which they sometimes suffer from hail.—London Paper.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

Discovery in Chemistry.—A Prussian chemist (a Mr. Saiverte,) in making experiments to improve printers' ink, has discovered a process of producing from hempseed oil a new species of black pigment, which for brilliancy and intensity of colour, far exceeds any black known heretofore, and promises to render Prussian black as distinguished a colour as Prussian blue is at present. The inventor has not only applied it to improve printers' ink, but also to other useful purposes, particularly as a superior blacking for tanned leather.

SALEM, Sept. 30.

Capt. John Gardener, Jun having recently brought from England the model of an ingenious invention for hauling up vessels on an inclined plane, several merchants of this town have made the machinery according to his plan, constructed in South Salem, and the first experiment was tried upon the brig Washington on Saturday afternoon. The vessel was placed in a cradle admirably constructed for her security during the operation, and she was moved upon the iron railways by means of machinery worked by a few men with a capstan at the head of the ways, which are 3 or 4 hundred feet in length. The vessel was drawn with great ease and facility to the distance of about 200 feet, and taken entirely from the water; but in consequence of the breaking of some defective work in one of the iron wheels, the operation was not entirely completed. The gentlemen interested, and the spectators generally, we learn, were fully convinced of the utility of the plan, and that it will prove advantageous to our merchants in facilitating the repairs of their vessels.

Professor Zimmerman, of Giessen, (Hesse Darmstadt,) has announced that he has ascertained that all atmospheric aqueous substances, as dew, snow, rain, and hail, contain meteoric iron, combined with nickel. Rain also usually contains salt, and a new organic substance composed of hydrogen, oxygen and carbon, to which he has given the name of pluvine.

It is stated in the French Annales de l'Industrie, that the Chemnit tree bark contains twice as much of the tanning principle as that of oak, and nearly twice as much colouring matter as logwood. With iron it forms an intensely black and durable ink. Its colouring matter has a stronger affinity than Sumach for wool, and is not affected by air or by light.

The London Morning Chronicle says.—"Amer can Stewart's portrait of Matthews, the comedian, taken whilst in America, is stated to be a chef d'œuvre in this branch of art. We remember an early portrait of Mr. John Kemble, by this venerable artist, which in its day was quite perfect as a likeness of that great actor."

Domestic.

Dreadful Incident.—Yesterday morning, a man named Thos. FEEHAN, who has kept a small provision store in the Quebec Suburb, for some months past, in a fit of delirium, caused it is said by Jealousy, attempted to destroy his wife by cutting her throat in three places. He afterwards made the same attempt on himself, in so shocking a manner, that he survived but a few minutes. Medical aid was called in, who on examination do not consider the wounds of the wife mortal. We are sory to be informed that from the ignorance of the people round this unfortunate woman, she was carried to the Hotel Dieu, the rules of which prevent admission in such cases, and she must have suffered much from this unnecessary circumstance.

A Coroner's Inquest was held on the body of FEEHAN in the afternoon, verdict—committed Suicide, in a state of insanity, by cutting his throat. He is a native of Clonmel, Ireland.

NIAGARA, Oct. 4.—The wheat crops were got in in good order, and would have been an excellent crop had it not been for the Hessian Fly, which greatly injured many fine fields; still, however, there is much good wheat in the country.

The two last months have been the most sickly in this town, and its vicinity, that we ever knew; although some valuable lives have been lost in this District, not many can be attributed to the fever that prevails alone; the deaths can generally be traced to some other latent cause.

KINGSTON, (U. C.) 10th October.

In a late number we noticed the prevalence of malignant fevers in this town and vicinity, and although it was hoped the cool weather which we had then to anticipate in a few days, would have checked the progress of the disease, yet we regret to say that much sickness still prevails, and that the fever seems to be much more malignant in its character than the ordinary intermittents and agues peculiar to this climate.

MONTREAL, Oct. 18.

A fair was lately held at William Henry on the Common adjoining his Excellency's, residence, and numerously attended, but few sales were effected. His Excellency, with several gentlemen procured a purse for the amusement of those assembled, which chiefly consisted in horse racing, &c.

Execution.—Yesterday morning at 20 minutes past ten o'clock, the awful sentence of the Law was executed on Abraham Paradis convicted of Horse Stealing, Jean Baptise Albert, and Warren Gleason, found guilty of Burglary.—The two former were first brought out to the fatal platform, to which they were attended by their spiritual director the Revd. Mr. Richards—they evinced every mark of contrition, and acknowledged the justice of their sentence.—It gives us pleasure to say that since the condemnation of these men, their penetance has been such, as to leave on the mind of their Clergyman, a hope that their repentance has obtained favour in the sight of the Judge of all human actions.—Gleasen was attended by the Revd. Mr. Bethune, he was supported by some friends, as his feelings were either so much affected, or his bodily infirmity rendered him incapable of sustaining the last efforts of expiring nature—his contrition was no less conspicuous than the other two, and his audible expressions of "The Lord have mercy on my soul," frequently repeated, were evidences of the sense which the dying man entertained of the dreadful precipice on which he stood; whence he was to take a step into that country. "From whose bourne no traveller returns, to tell what's doing on the other side."—Let the crimes of these men be what they may, they have paid the fine—justice is satisfied—and every person who has a regard for the doctrine of Christianity must rejoice that in their deaths they were penitent, and rested their hopes of salvation on the merits of their Redeemer. The fate of these culprits, will, we trust, prove a salutory lesson to those whom they have left behind, whose moral and religious conduct require a warning for the amendment of their lives.

LE BON VIVANI ATTRAPE PAR L'AMOUR,

Tune—When William at eve. &c

Ye gay jovial friends whom good fellowship warms,
No longer your pleasures can move;—
O leave me to sigh, and to muse on the charms
Of the sweet little girl that I love!

Though formed by the Graces all hearts to beguile,
Still her eyes our loud glances reprove;—
The raptures of fancy awake at the smile
Of the sweet little girl that I love!—

Ye Powers! what sweet hopes in my bosom expands,
When she smiles—and then bids me remove,
And my heart is at heart while I press the soft hand
Of the sweet little girl that I love!

More fragrant her breath than the soft summer gale
That plays through the flower-scented grove,
And her voice is the music that's heard in the dale
When Philomel warbles her love!

So artless her manners—so modest her air—
Such graces her charms all improve;—
To sum up her praises—she's good as she's fair,
The sweet little girl that I love!

Such a heart sure would yield, could I once let her know
How long with my passion I've strove;
For though she seems cold as the pure virgin snow,
Yet her eyes speak the language of love!

How blest were my fortune! no more I'd repine
Should she my soft wishes approve!
What King then could boast of such rapture as mine
When possessed of the girl that I love?—

CHRONOLOGICAL NARRATIVE.

They justly observed, that a spirit would not have wanted a couple of chairmen to carry it away. "If," said they further, "the spirits of the departed were actually permitted to appear to the living; if they could, on such occasions, assume the former body, with all its clothing and appurtenances, still this apparition was highly censurable. What was it intended for? A visit of punishment. How had the Count deserved it? Or, was it a friendly visit?—In this case, neither time, place, or manner, could have been worse chosen; and it would prove that, on the other side of the grave, people behave still more inconsistently than they, alas! so frequently act on this side of it."

The sentiments of this last class were certainly the most rational; but unfortunately the virtuous Count had too much warmth of feeling, and too little strength of mind, to adopt them. He was thoroughly convinced that his wife's spirit had actually appeared to him, for the purpose of admonishing him never to forget her.—He now withdrew, still more rigidly than before, from all diversions, and indulged still more freely in his sorrow and his love of solitude. No persuasions, no remonstrances had any effect. His health, already impaired, received a severe shock from the fright, and still greater injury from this mode of life. It continued on the decline. Before a year elapsed, symptoms of a confirmed consumption appeared; and towards the conclusion of the second he expired. On this event, the apparition was again, for a time, the subject of conversation; after which, it was again forgotten, at least for a considerable interval.

Provincial Parliament OF UPPER CANADA.

YORK, 11th Nov. 1823.

AT half past two o'clock this day, HIS EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, proceeded in the usual state to the Legislative Council Chamber, when being seated on the Throne, and the House of Assembly being present at the bar, was pleased to open the Session with the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have much satisfaction in meeting you at a period in which nothing in the situation of Foreign Affairs appears likely to disturb the peace of the United Empire;—when a spirit of contented industry and of adherence to the Laws prevails generally among the People of this Colony, and the depression of value in the chief productions of the Country, consequent upon the termination of the War, is gradually diminishing.

On the review of our internal condition, I am sensible that much benefit has attended the wise and temperate manner in which those powers and privileges have been exercised, which are vested by the Constitution in this great Council of the Province.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have ordered the proper Officer to lay before you the Public Accounts, and the Estimates for the ensuing year; and I rely on your wisdom and justice for the proper support of His Majesty's Government.

I am not at present enabled to inform you, in what manner the recent measures of the Imperial Parliament, for the General Regulation of the Colonial Trade, have affected that portion of our Revenue which is collected at this Port of Quebec; but a change, tending to remove restrictions upon Commerce, may be expected naturally to have produced a result beneficial to our finances. Notwithstanding the œconomy which you have practised, and to which I have always been desirous to give effect, I regret that the Provincial Treasury is not in a situation that will enable you to afford material aid to the variety of Public Objects which it is desirable to promote; but I trust that at no very distant period, the resources of this Colony will, without any severe additional burthens on the people, rise so far above the ordinary demands, that it will be in the power of the Legislature to give an effectual impulse to Public Improvement.

Honourable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

Since the close of the last Session, the Arbitrators appointed under the Canada Trade Act, have reported their decision on the Arrears of Revenue due to Upper Canada, from the Sister Colony. The amount awarded has not yet been paid into the Treasury of this Province, but I am assured that no material delay is to be apprehended.

You will doubtless direct your attention to such Provincial Laws as are about to expire; of these, the enactment for regulating our Commercial Intercourse with the United States of America, will appear of most immediate importance, and to require more than ordinary consideration, in order that its provisions may be rendered consistent with the spirit of the Acts which have been recently passed by the Imperial Parliament, to regulate the Trade of the British Colonies in general, and in particular, of His Majesty's North American Provinces.

The cordial intercourse so happily established between the two Houses of this Legislature, upon a practical discernment of their just and continued relations, and my past experience of your public spirit, afford me the best assurance, that whatever matters of general interest I shall find it expedient to bring before you, will be entertained with zeal and attention; and I rely upon the steady continuance of your exertions in pursuit of such objects as may tend, under the favor of Divine Providence, to improve the growing resources of the Country, and to increase and confirm the sound welfare of the People.

WHEREAS by the Tenor of the Location Tickets a Certificate is required to be lodged of the Settlement Duty being done within two Years, or that the said Location should be forfeited, and in case of Locations not gratuitous, that one third of the Patent Fee be lodged with such Certificate; AND WHEREAS it is represented, that in many instances, Certificates of performance of the Settlement Duty, have been withheld from the inability of the settler to deposit such proportion of the Patent Fee it is deemed expedient to relieve the settler from forfeiture of his location, when he may actually have performed his settlement duty—Notice is hereby given that in all cases where Settlement Duty has been performed within the limited period, the settler shall, on filing Certificate thereof within six Months of this date, be exempted from forfeiture notwithstanding the non-payment therewith of such portion of the Patent Fee, provided the Patent is sued out within One Year from the filing of such Certificate.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General, in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

JOHN SMALL, Clk Ex. Coun.

Executive Council Office,
York, February 7th 1821.

WHEREAS it has been represented, that many persons who have received Locations of Land, have, from Sickness, and other legitimate causes, been unable to fulfil the Settlement Duty, in the time required by the Location Ticket, and have neglected to apply to His Excellency in Council for an extension of the period, for performance of such duty.

BE it Known that the period for completing the Settlement Duty, is hereby extended to Two Years, from the date of Locations until further notice shall be given.

NOT OFFICIAL.

KNOW ALL MEN by these presents, that whereas, Thomas McCormick, Collector for the Port of Niagara, in the Province of Upper Canada, did heretofore, by writing, or letter of Attorney, bearing date the fourteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-one, nominate and appoint Edward Pilkington, of the Township of Grimsby, in the District of Niagara, Esquire, to be a Deputy Collector of the said Port, and for him, and in his name, to search for, seize, or detain, all such unCustom'd or Contraband Goods, as might or should come within his knowledge, and to do and perform all and every thing relating thereto, in as full and ample a manner as the said Thomas McCormick might or could do, were he personally present; thereby ratifying and confirming what ever the said Edward Pilkington should, or might lawfully do in his name, or as his Deputy, until notified by him the said Thomas McCormick, of the revocation of these said presents, as by reference thereto, may more fully at large appear.

Now Know Ye, that the said Thomas McCormick, for divers good causes and considerations him thereunto moving, hath revoked, recalled, and countermanded, and by these presents doth revoke, recal, and countermand, and to all intents and purposes (as far as in him lie) make null and void, and of non effect the said recited writing or Letter of Attorney, and all powers and authorities therein and thereby, or in and by any other deed or writing made, granted, or given, and all other things therein, or in any or either of them contained.—And doth hereby make void and disclaim all acts, matters and proceedings which shall or may be acted, done, or performed by virtue or means thereof, in any manner and wise.

In witness wereof, the said Thomas McCormick hath hereunto set his hand and Custom House Seal at Niagara, the thirtieth day of October, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three.

By Order of the Board,

JAMES GIVINS,
Secretary.

York, 26th July, 1823. tf—31.

N. B. It is requested that all communications respecting the above Lands be post paid.

NOTICE.

APPLICATION will be made to the Legislature of this Province, at its next meeting, to divide the County of Halton, in the District of Gore.

25th June, 1823.

INTERESTING NOTICE.

THE Surveyor General begs leave to inform the Public, that he has obtained the permission of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, to publish a of the Province, on a large Scale. It is to be engraved in London, in the best style, and will be ready for delivery in a few months.

This information, the Surveyor General thinks it necessary to make, in order to prevent those persons, who are desirous of having an authentic MAP of UPPER CANADA, from being imposed upon by a Surreptitious Copy, said to be on the Eve of Publication.

Surveyor General's Office, York, 2d April, 1823. 14—tf

PUBLIC NOTICE

IS hereby given, that an application will be made at the next Session of the PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT, for a change in the Police Law, of the Town of Kingston, by which the power of the Magistrates may be increased, and the limits of the Town defined.

Kingston, July 27th 1823. tf—31.

PUBLIC NOTICE

IS hereby given, That a Petition will be laid before the LEGISLATURE, at the next Session of the Provincial Parliament for the purpose of Dividing the District of BATHURST into Two Counties.
