GEORGII IV. REGIS.

CAP. CXIX.

An Act to regulate the Trade of the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, and for other Purposes relating to the said Provinces.

[5th August, 1822.]

WHEREAS it is expedient to make further Regulation respecting the Trade of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, in North America: Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same

Goods of the Produce of the United States enumerated in Schedule (A.) may be imported into either of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada:

That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful to import by Land or Inland Navigation in any British or American Vessel or Vessels, Boat or Boats, Carriage or Carriages, the Goods, Wares, and Commodities the Growth Produce, or Manufacture of the United States of America, enumerated in the Schedule or Table annexed to this Act marked (A.), from any Port or Place in the United States of America, into any Port or Place of Entry at which a Custom House now is or hereafter may be lawfully established, in either of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada:

Power to the Governor to diminish or increase the Ports of Entry.

Provided always nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of either of the said Provinces respectively, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council thereof for the Time being, from Time to Time to diminish or increase by Proclamation, the Number of Ports or Places which are or hereafter may be appointed in such Province for the Entry of Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported from the United States of America.

Duties to be paid on the Goods enumerated in Schedule (B.)

II. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon such of the Goods, Wares, and Commodities which shall be so imported, as are enumerated in the Schedule or Table annexed to this Act marked (B.), the several Duties of Customs as the same are respectively inserted or described and set forth in Figures in the said Schedule.

Where any Article is liable to a Colonial Duty equal to the one imposed, such Article shall not be charged Law, equal to or exceeding in amount with the Duty charged by this Act, then and in such Case the Duty charged upon such Article by this Act shall not be demanded or paid upon

III. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if upon the Importation of any Article charged with Duty by this Act, the said Article shall also be liable to the Payment of Duty under the Authority of any Colonial the Importation of such Article; Provided also, that if the Duty payable under such Colonial Law shall be less in Amount than the Duty payable by this Act, then and in such case the Difference only between the Amount of the Duty payable by this Act, and the Duty payable under Authority of such Colonial Laws, shall be deemed to be the Duty payable by this Act; and the same shall be collected and paid in such and the like Manner, and appropriated and applied to such and the like Uses, as the Duties specified in the said Schedule annexed to this Act marked (B.) are directed to be collected, paid, appropriated, and applied.

Tonnage Duties for American Vessels, to be the same as United States impose on British Vessels.

IV. And be it further enacted, That the same Tonnage Duties shall be paid upon all American Vessels or Boats, importing any Goods into either of the said Provinces, as are or may be for the time being payable in the United States of America, on British Vessels or Boats entering the Harbours of the State from whence such Goods shall have been imported.

Value of Goods to be ascertained in the Mode prescribed by 3 G. 4. c. 44.

V. And be it further enacted, That in all Cases in which the Duties imposed by this Act upon the Importation of Articles into the said Provinces, or either of them, are charged, not according to the Weight, Gauge or Measure, but according to the Value thereof, such Value shall be ascertained in the Mode prescribed by an Act passed in this present Session of Parliament, intituled An Act to regulate the Trade between His Majesty's Possessions in America and the West Indies, and other Places in America and the West Indies.

If Payment of Duties be refused, Collector may secure the Goods and sell the same within 20 Days.

VI. And be it further enacted, That if the Importer or Proprietor of such Articles shall refuse to pay the Duties hereby imposed thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the Collector or other Chief Officer of the Customs where such Articles shall be imported, and he is hereby respectively required, to take and secure the same, with the Casks or other Package thereof and to cause the same to be publicly sold, within the Space of Twenty Days at the most after such refusal made, and at such

Time and place as such Officer shall, by Four or more Days public Notice, appoint for that Purpose which Articles shall be sold to the highest Bidder; and the Money arising from the Sale thereof shall be applied to the Payment of the said Duties, together with the Charges which shall have been occasioned by the said Sale, and the Overplus (if any) shall be paid to such Importer, Proprietor, or any other Person authorized to receive the same.

After Payment of Duty, Overplus to be paid to the Importer.

VII. And whereas certain Act made and passed in the Twenty-eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from His Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies into the Province of Quebec, without Payment of Duty, under certain Conditions and Restrictions, has been repealed during the present Session of Parliament: And whereas Doubts may be entertained whether a certain other Act, passed in the Forty-ninth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from the Island of Bermuda into the Province of Lower Canada, without payment of Duty, on the same Terms and Conditions as such Importation may be made directly from His Majesty's Sugar Colonies in the West Indies, might not still remain in force, notwithstanding the Repeal of the said first mentioned Act; be it therefore enacted and declared, That the last mentioned Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

28 G. 3. c. 39.

49 G. 3. c. 16 allowing the Importation of Rum, repealed.

VIII. And whereas it is expedient to afford Protection to the Trade between the said Colonies and Plantations and the Province of Lower Canada, by imposing the same Duty upon Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of the said Colonies, imported from Great Britain, into the said Province, as is now payable upon the same Articles when imported from His Majesty's said Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon every Gallon of Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Islands, Colonies, or Plantations in the West Indies, which shall be imported or brought into any Part of the said Province of Lower Canada from Great Britain or Ireland, or any of the British Dominions in Europe, the Sum of Six Pence, over and above all other Duties now or hereafter to be made payable thereon in the said Province.

Additional Duty of 6d. per Gallon on West India Rum imported into Lower Canada from the West India Islands, &c.

IX. And be it further enacted, That the Rates and Duties chargeable by this Act shall be deemed and are hereby declared to be Sterling Money of Great Britain, and shall be applicable to so collected, recovered, and paid to the Money of the Amount of the Value which such rising thereby. nominal Sums bear in Great Britain; and that such Sums may be received and taken according to the Proportion and Value of Five Shillings and Sixpence to the Ounce in Silver; and that the said Duties herein-before granted shall be received, levied, collected paid, and recovered in the same Manner and Form, and by such Rules, Ways, and Means, and under such Penalties and Forfeitures as any other Duties payable to His Majesty upon Goods imported into the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, or into either of them respectively, are or shall be raised, levied, collected, paid, and recovered by any Act or Acts of Parliament, as fully and effectually to all Intents and Purposes, as if the several Clauses, Powers, Directions, Penalties, and Forfeitures relating thereto were particularly repeated and again enacted in the Body of this Act; and that all the Monies which shall arise by the said Duties, (except the necessary Charges of raising, collecting, levying, recovering, answering, paying, and accounting for the same) shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs, into the Hands of His Majesty's Receiver General in the said Provinces respectively, for the Time being, and shall be applied to and for the Use of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, in such Manner only as shall be made directly by any Law or Laws which may be made by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of each of the said Provinces respectively.

Value of Dollars, and Sterling Value of the Money.

Application of Monies.

X. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to export in any British or American Vessel or Vessels, Boat or Boats, Carriage or Carriages, from any Ports or Places of Entry now or hereafter to be established in the said Provinces, to any Port or Place in the United States of America, any Article of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Dominions, or any other Article legally imported into the said Provinces: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit or allow the Exportation of any Arms or Naval Stores, unless a Licence shall have been obtained for that Purpose from his Majesty's Secretary of State; and in case any such Articles shall be shipped or waterborne for the Purpose of being exported contrary to this Act, the same shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized and prosecuted as hereinafter directed.

Goods the Produce of His Majesty's Dominions may be exported to any Port in the United States; but no Arms or Naval Stores to be exported without a Licence.

XI. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to interfere with or repeal, as respects the Inland Navigation of the said Provinces, any of the Provisions contained in a certain Act passed in the Seventh and Eighth Years of the Reign of King William, intituled An Act for preventing Frauds, and regulating Abuses in the Plantation Trade; except in so far as the same are altered or repealed by this Act.

Not to affect Inland Navigations of the Provinces.

7 & 8 W. 3. c. 22.

XII. And be it further enacted, That all Penalties and Forfeitures incurred in either of the said Provinces under this Act (except where it is otherwise provided,) shall and may be sued for and prosecuted in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within such Province respectively; and the same shall and may be recovered, divided, and accounted for in the same Manner and Form, and by the same Rules and Regulations in all respects, as other Penalties and Forfeitures for Offences against the Laws relating to the Customs and Trade of the said Provinces respectively, shall or may by any Act or Acts of the Legislatures of such Provinces be directed to be sued for, prosecuted, recovered, divided, and accounted for within the same respectively.

Recovery and Application of Penalties

XIII. And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits a Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be paid and allowed, upon the Exportation from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, of Rum or other Spirits, being the produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, a Drawback of the full Duties of Customs which may have been paid upon the Importation thereof from any of the Places last aforesaid, into any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, upon a Certificate being produced, under the Hands and Seals of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at Quebec, certifying that the said Rum or other Spirits have been duly landed in Canada.

Drawback on the Exportation of Rum and other Spirits, from Newfoundland, &c. to Canada.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawbacks between the Provinces, by Arbitrators.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That no Entry shall pass, nor any Drawback be paid or allowed, upon the Exportation of Rum or other Spirits from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, unless such Entry be made in the Name of the real Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors of the said Goods, and that before such Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors, shall receive the said Drawback so allowed as aforesaid, One or more of them shall verify upon Oath, upon the Debenture to be made out for the Payment of such Drawback, that he or they is or are the real Owner or Owners of the said Goods; nor unless Proof on Oath shall be made to the Satisfaction of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, that the full Duties due upon the Importation of the said Goods at the said Port had been paid and discharged: Provided always, that in Cases where the Owners of the said Goods are resident in any other Part of the British Dominions, it shall be lawful for their known and established Agents in the Colonies from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, to take the necessary Oaths on behalf of the said Owners.

Conditions on which the Drawback shall be paid.

XV. And be it further enacted, That the said Drawback shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, with the Consent of the Comptroller there, out of any Monies in his Hands arising from Duties of Customs.

Drawback how payable.

XVI. And be it further enacted That no Drawback shall be paid and allowed as aforesaid, unless the said Rum or other Spirits shall be duly entered for Exportation with the proper Officers of the Customs, and actually shipped on board the Ship or Vessel in which the said Goods are intended to be exported, within the Space of one Year from the Time such Rum or other Spirits were originally imported into the Colony from whence it is intended to export them to Canada, nor unless such Drawback shall be claimed within one Year after the Goods are so shipped for Exportation.

Rum to be exported free Newfoundland within One Year after First Importation

XVII. And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, divers Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed therein; the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Report of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claims are not admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, that they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks: For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator, who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied in Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which Duties shall not have been embraced within the Terms of any provisional Agreement, and to report the particulars of any such claim, with the Evidence thereupon, to the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being; and if it shall appear to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury that any Sum is justly due from the Province of Lower Canada to the Province of Upper Canada on account of such last mentioned claim, they shall signify the same, together with the Amount, to the Governor or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada for the Time being, who shall thereupon issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, to pay such Amount to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, in full Discharge of any such Claims.

Power of Arbitrators to send for Persons and Records.

XVIII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators shall have Power to send for and examine such Persons, Papers, and Records as they shall judge necessary for such Information in the Matters referred to them and that if any Person or Persons shall refuse or neglect to attend the said Arbitrators, or to produce before them any Papers or Documents, having been duly served in either Province with reasonable Notice in writing for that Purpose, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the Sum of Fifty Pounds, to be recovered by Bill, Plaint, or Information, in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within the Province in which such Person usually resides, to be applied towards the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province, and to be accounted for to His Majesty, through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasurer for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as it shall please His Majesty to direct.

Witnesses to be sworn

XIX. And be it further enacted, That the Witnesses to be produced before the said Arbitrators, if it is desired by either of the said Arbitrators, shall and may be sworn before any of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace within either of the said Provinces, or before any one of the said Arbitrators, who are hereby empowered jointly or severally to administer such Oath; and that if any Person shall, in any such Oath so taken as aforesaid, wilfully forswear himself, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Penalty for false swearing.

Appointing Arbitrators on Vacancies

XX. And be it further enacted, That in case of the Death, Removal, or Incapacity of either of the said Arbitrators before making an Award, or in case the Third Arbitrator chosen or appointed as aforesaid shall refuse to act, another shall be appointed in his Stead, in the same Manner as such Arbitrator so dead, removed, or become incapable or refusing to act as aforesaid, was originally appointed; and that in case a Third Arbitrator shall be appointed by His Majesty as herein-before mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-in-Chief in and over the said Provinces, to determine the Amount of Remuneration to be paid to such Arbitrator, which Amount shall be defrayed in equal Proportions by each Province, and shall be paid by Warrants, to be issued for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each Province upon the Receiver General thereof respectively.

Award of Arbitrators to be final.

XXI. And be it further enacted, That the Award of the Majority of the said Arbitrators, so far as the same shall be authorized by this Act, shall be final.

Award to be certified to the Governor, &c of the Provinces

XXII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators, or a Majority of them as herein before mentioned, shall certify the Award to be made by them in the Premises, under their Hands and Seals, to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces; and that if any Sum be directed by the said Award to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada by the Province of Lower Canada, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada, and he is hereby required to issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of the Province of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Sum so awarded; which Sum shall be accordingly paid by the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in discharge of such Warrant, and shall be accounted for by him to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the Time being in such Manner and Form as His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, shall be graciously pleased to direct.

Payment of Sum awarded

Power to Arbitrators to determine Claims and pay Lower Canada on Upper Canada

XXIII. And be it further enacted, That the Arbitrators to be appointed under this Act shall have Power to hear and determine any claim which may be advanced on the Part of the Province of Lower Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada, being of the same Description as those which by this Act may be preferred to the same Arbitrators on the Part of Upper Canada; and that their Award thereupon shall be final and conclusive, and shall be carried into Effect if the same be made in Favour of the Province of Lower Canada in the same Manner as is herein directed with respect to any Award which may be made in favour of the Province of Upper Canada.

Proportion of Duties arising in Lower Canada shall be paid to Upper Canada

XXIV. And be it further enacted, That of all Duties which have been levied in the Province of Lower Canada since the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and nineteen, under the Authority of any Act passed in the said Provinces, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the Province of Lower Canada, and also of all Duties which after the passing of this Act, and before the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four, shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to have and receive One-fifth Part as the proportion of Duties arising and due to the said Province of Upper Canada upon such Importations; and that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, shall and may issue his Warrant forthwith upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for such proportion of the Duties as shall have been received in the Province of Lower Canada before the passing of this Act, and shall and may on the First Day of January and the First Day of July, in each and every Year thereafter, issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada in like Manner for the payment to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, of such Sum as may be then ascertained to be due on account of the said proportion, according to the Provisions of this Act.

After July 1, 1824, Division of Duties shall be awarded by Arbitrators on Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported by Sea, &c.

XXV. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the said First Day of July One Thousand Eight Hundred and Twenty-Four, the Proportion to be paid to Upper Canada for the Four Years next succeeding, of Duties levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under the Authority of any Act or Acts passed or to be passed therein, upon Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported thereinto by Sea, shall and may be ascertained by the Award of Arbitrators, to be appointed in the same Manner and with the same Powers as herein-before provided with respect to the Arbitrators to whom the Question of Arrears is to be referred, and that Arbitrators shall in like Manner be appointed, and an Award made Once after every Four Years thereafter, for the Purpose of establishing such Proportion from Time to Time; and all and every the Provisions contained in this Act, respecting the appointment, Powers, and Remuneration of the Arbitrators to be first appointed after the passing hereof, and regarding the Execution of the Duty, shall apply and extend to the Arbitrators to be appointed for the Purposes last herein mentioned.

Award to be Four Years.

Proportion hereby established to be paid until a new one is made.

XXVI. And be it further Enacted, That after the said First Day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty four, until a new Proportion of Duties, to be paid to Upper Canada, shall be established, as hereinbefore provided, and also at all Times hereafter, in default of any such Proportion being appointed, the Proportion of Duties last assigned to be paid to Upper Canada under the Authority of this Act, shall continue to be paid by the Province of Lower Canada, and Warrants shall issue for the Payment of the same, in the same Manner as for the Period before the same First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty-four: Provided always that it shall be in the Power of the Arbitrators nevertheless, by their subsequent Award, to alter such Proportion from the Period for which it was last established, if it shall appear to them just so to do.

Proportion of Duties how to be allotted between the Two Provinces.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His late Majesty's Reign, Intituled An Act to establish a Fund towards further defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provsion towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been contended, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the estimated Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed, by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last Provincial Agreement heretofore ratified between the said two Provinces, or which may hereafter be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Order respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respects either of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, extending to the Period for which no such Order had before been made.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to remain in force till repealed or altered by a Legislative Act of that Province.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Exercise of an exclusive Controul, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the Thirty-first Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province', and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

31 G 3 c. 31.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, whereby the Province of Upper Canada may be affected, to be valid until laid before Parliament.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other Duties shall or may be imposed on Articles imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, and whereby the Province of Upper Canada shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law untill the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty-first Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrense in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

Boats and other Craft belonging to His Majesty's Subjects may go from Upper Canada into Lower Canada, not laden with Foreign Productions, without being subject to any Duty.

XXX. And whereas it is expedient that the Productions of the Province of Upper Canada should be permitted to be exported without being made subject to any Act of the Province of Lower Canada, either directly or indirectly, to Duties or Impositions on their Arrival in that Province, or in passing through the waters thereof: Be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, all and every the Boats, Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may now be established for Toll at any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary not withstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River Saint Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

How Expences of improving the Navigation shall be paid

Lands held in Fief and Seignory, Lands within the said Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seignory can legally be changed: And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seignory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Soccage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province as aforesaid in pursuance of His Majesty's Instructions, transmitted through his Principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Soccage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Soccage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as and for a Commutation for the Fines and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no allottment or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

His Majesty may commute with Persons holding Lands at Cens et Rentes.

XXXII. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to commute with any Person holding Lands at Cens et Rentes in any Censive or Fief of His Majesty within either of the said Provinces, and such Person may obtain a Release from His Majesty of all feudal Rights arising by reason of such Tenure, and receive a Grant from His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in free and common Soccage, upon Payment to His Majesty of such Sum of Money as His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may deem to be just and reasonable, by reason of the Release and Grant aforesaid; and all such Sums of Money as shall be paid upon any Commutations made by virtue of this Act shall be applied towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province.

General Issue

XXXIII. And be it further enacted, That if any Person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any thing done or to be done in pursuance of this Act, such Person or Persons may plead the General Issue, and give this Act and the special Matter in Evidence; and if the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, Prosecutor or Prosecutors, shall become non-suit, or forbear the Prosecution, or discontinue his, her, or their Action, or if a Verdict

MILITARY RECORDS.

RECORDS OF THE SERVICES OF REGIMENTS.

Directed by order of the Commander in Chief.

His Majesty has been pleased to command, that with a view of preserving a remembrance of the particular services and achievements of the British Army, a National Military Record of all the Battles and actions in which Regiments have been, or may be engaged, shall be prepared by the Inspector of Regimental Colours, and deposited in the office of the Adjutant General; and that this Record shall contain the following particulars, viz.

1st. An account of all the Battles or Actions in which the Troops have been, or may be engaged as aforesaid.

2d. Paintings of the Colours and Trophies captured in the several engagements.

3d. The names of the Officers killed, or wounded in each action.

4th. The names of those Officers, who, in consideration of their gallant services, and meritorious conduct in the said engagements, either have been, or may be distinguished and rewarded with titles, medals, or other marks of his Majesty's gracious favor; together with the Names of all such Non-commissioned Officers and Privates as may have especially signalized themselves

5th A List of the Corps engaged in each action, together with Paintings of such Badges and Distinctions as his Majesty may have been graciously pleased to authorise to be borne on their standards, colours, and appointments, in commemoration of their distinguished conduct and signal intrepidity.

PRECEDENCE (Directed by Order) OF REGIMENTS.

His MAJESTY'S Regiments of Life Guards, and the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, have the Precedence over all other Corps whatever.

On parades, the Horse Artillery, whether mounted or dismounted, take the Right of all other Cavalry.

The Cavalry, whether mounted or dismounted, take the Right of Infantry of every description.

The Royal Artillery have the Precedence of other Infantry.

The Royal Engineers, and the Royal Sappers and Miners, take post on the Left of the Royal Artillery.

The Foot Guards take the Right of all Regiments of Infantry of the Line.

The Royal Veteran Battalions are the next in Rank.

Then the Regiments of Infantry of the Line, according to their Number and Order of Precedence.

The Royal Marines, when acting with the Troops of the Line, are to take Rank next to the 40th Regiment.

The Militia Regiments take Rank after those of the Line, according to their respective Numbers, as fixed by lot.

When Regiments of British and Irish Militia are serving together, the priority of Rank is to be considered to belong to the Militia of that part of the United Kingdom in which the Quarter may be situated.

It is, however to be understood, that this regulation refers merely to circumstances of Parade. On all other occasions Corps are to be distributed and drawn up in the mode which the General, or other Officers commanding may judge most convenient, and best adapted to the purposes of the Service.

It appears doubtful whether Lord HILL, or Sir GEORGE MURRAY will succeed the late Sir HILDEBRAND OAKES, as Lieutenant General of the Ordnance.

Steam Land Carriages.—The Monthly Magazine, September 1, contains the Engraving and Description of Griffith's Patent Land Carriage, for conveying Goods and Passengers on public roads without the aid of horses. The Carriage here represented and described will be worked by an engine of a Seven Horse Power, and will transport a load of six tons at an average rate of five miles an hour, which may be varied and increased indefinitely for other Carriages. The general introduction of these Carriages for all kinds of purposes, will constitute a triumph of mechanics never anticipated by our ancestors.

UNITED STATES.

The right of suffrage has been lately given to soldiers by the State of Florida; this has produced some discussion and the following remarks appeared in the National Advocate of New York.

It is very evident that a soldier, enlisting for a term of years, and receiving pay and rations, relinquishes a certain portion of his civil rights. The subordination and discipline of an army are incompatible with those extensive privileges which constitutionally are the property of every citizen. A soldier dare not leave his quarters to vote, without permission of his commanding officer; his power of locomotion is therefore lost. You cannot arrest a soldier for debt; the arm of the civil power falls harmless upon him, unless it is for some criminal act. He cannot, therefore, claim a civil right, when he himself is beyond the power of civil authority.—Besides, the qualifications of an elector are, residence, taxation, sometimes freehold, working on the public road, serving in the militia, &c. These a soldier, who is almost constantly on the march, cannot possess. The principle would be a very dangerous one, if it could be recognized. The habit of implicit obedience, to a superior officer, would place the votes of soldiers at his disposal; and a powerful army, if constantly on the march, and possessing the right of voting, would regulate the elections throughout the union, without the intervention of the people."

Bank.—The United States Bank, by an exposé of its affairs, it appears has lost 5,743,000 dollars, chiefly by misplaced confidence in unworthy agents, and proposes to petition Congress for the enactment of severe laws to prevent such frauds. The affairs of the Bank are however in a prosperous state.

Plague.—On the 13th ultimo there were 32 deaths at New Orleans, 19 of which were by yellow fever, this disease is causing great mortality, and was on the increase at the last advices.

Death and desertion have nearly depopulated Pensacola, upwards of 700 persons had died by yellow fever in the space of a few days.

Extraordinary Fish.—A fish of the Ray kind sixteen feet in width, nine feet long, thirty inches thick, and weighing one ton, was taken near Cape May, a few days since. It took fifty men to draw it up on the beach, after it had been harpooned.—Boat pap.

Gold and Silver.—Gold and Silver have been found in North Carolina, near Lincoln; they occur in a rock resembling gneiss.

ON AUTUMN.

However much the necessities and duties of life call upon us for activity, there are other principals of our being which lead us to meditation. The same divine inspiration which hath given to us understanding, hath provided also the scenes in which it ought to be employed; and the perfection of our nature consists, not in the separation, but in the union of contemplation and of action. To "every thing," says the wise man, "there "is a season;" and, if there are times when the Day spring summons us to activity,—there are times also, when, like the patriarch in the text, we are invited to "meditate in the field, and at even tide."

In the generality of men, however, there is some secret unwillingness to be employed in the labor of meditation, there is a kind of gloom that is very early associated within the minds of the young; and when manhood arrives, the prosperous are too gay, and the active too busy, to listen to the voice that suggested it. It is thus, that, even in good minds, some of the most beneficial propensities of their nature are insensibly obliterated;—that all the inviting and propitious seasons of thought and of solitude are neglected;—and that their attention turns unconsciously from the very scenes where the benevolence of nature has provided for them the amplest source of tranquility and repose.

I wish, at present, to present views in opposition to this prevailing weakness; to show you, that if there are seasons when the inspiration of the Almighty calls us to meditation, it is to lead us to wisdom and to happiness;—that there is an established train of thought which such seasons necessarily awaken;—and that in the even tide, as well as in the sunshine of life, the same great ends are pursued, by which he that made us wisheth that we should not only be wise here, but become wise unto salvation.

There is an even-tide in the day,—an hour when the sun retires, and the shadows fall, and when nature assumes the appearances of soberness and silence. It is an hour from which every where the thoughtless fly, as peopled only in their imagination with images of gloom;—it is the hour, on the other hand, which, in every age, the wise have loved, as bringing with it sentiments and affections more valuable than all the splendors of the day.

Its first impression is to still all the turbulence of thought or passion which the day may have brought forth. We follow, with our eye, the descending sun,—we listen to the decaying sounds of labor and of toil,—and, when all the fields are silent around us, we feel a kindred stillness to breathe upon our souls, and to calm them from the agitations of society. From this first impression, there is a second which naturally follows it;—in the day we are with living men,—in the even tide we begin to live with nature,—we see the world withdrawn from us,—the shades of night darken over the habitations of men, and we feel ourselves alone. It is an hour, then, as it would seem, by him who made us, to still, with gentle hand, the throb of every unruly passion, and the ardor of every impure desire; and, while it veils for a time the world that misleads us, to awaken in our hearts those legitimate affections which the heat of the day may have dissolved. Where is yet a farther scene it presents to us?—While the world withdraws from us, and while the shades of the evening darken upon our dwellings, the splendors of the firmament come forward to our view. In the moments when earth is overshadowed, Heaven opens to our eyes the radiance of a sublimer being; our hearts follow the successive splendors of the scene; and while we forget, for a time, the obscurity of earthly concerns, we feel that there are "yet greater things than these," and that we "have a Father who dwelleth in the heavens, and who yet deigneth to consider the things that are upon earth."

Such is the train of thought which the even tide of the day is fitted to excite;—thoughts serious, doubtless, but inviting;—which lead us daily, as it were, to the noblest conceptions of our being;—and which seem destined to return us to the world with understandings elevated, and with hearts made better.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

Many years ago when I lived at Yeoville, in Somersetshire, my advice was desired for a poor man's child, a boy about 9 years old, one of whose legs was contracted more than when a person is sitting in a chair. He could not stretch it nor move it; neither could it be extended by any person without injury to the part affected

I prescribed a relaxing lineament, of which currier's oil was the chief ingredient, and ordered the parts affected to be gently rubbed with it; but it was of little service.

The probable consequence of this boy's living without the use of that limb, very much moved my pity; and while I was considering what farther might be done for his relief, it came into my mind that the glovers of the town brought lamb and kid skins which they dry, stiff and hard, to be soft and supple as gloves, by rubbing them with a liquor made of the yolk of eggs and water.

Hereupon I reasoned thus with myself, viz.—Since this egg liquor is so efficacious in removing contractions from the parts of dead animal fibres, vessels and membranes, by art made dry, stiff, and hard, why may it not be as effectual when sufficiently applied to living animal fibres and membranes in a state of contraction?

I ordered the contracted part of his leg to be gently rubbed two or three times a day with the egg liquor, and by this means he easily recovered the perfect use of his leg.

The egg liquor I advised to be made in the following manner:

Take the yolk of a new laid egg, let it be beaten with a fork to the greatest thinness, then, by a spoonful at a time, add three ounces of pure water, agitating the mixture continually, that the egg and water may be well incorporated.

The liquor may be applied to the parts contracted, cold, or only milk warm, by a gentle friction for a few minutes, three or four times a day.

This remedy I have since advised in like cases, and with the like happy success; and others to whom I have communicated it, have found the same advantage from it in like cases.

Divining Rods.—It is stated in an extract published in the Palladium, that a piece of gold, silver, or any other metal, suspended to the end of a very slender switch, when carried over a mine of the same metal, will be so attracted as to bend the end of the stick. The writer tried an experiment with a pair of curious scales. He put a shilling piece of silver into one scale and made the beam perfectly level by weights in the other; a block of silver, six inches square and two inches thick, was then introduced under the scale that had the shilling; that end of the beam dropped a quarter of an inch, and stood there until the block was removed and then immediately returned to a level; this was repeated several times with the same effect.

Oyster Dredging.—A merchant of Perth has invented a new machine for fishing Oysters, the power of which is so great, that one man can do as much with it, as ten in the ordinary way.

AGRICULTURE.

A useful hint to Farmers.—It has been found by experience that, in hot dry seasons, salt and ashes are an excellent manure for grass after it has been cut, particularly on thin or sandy soils, which, after they are mown, are often so much parched by the sun that not only the eddish is destroyed, but also the crop of the ensuing year is very materially injured; but by sowing with about 3lbs. of salt and ashes per acre, moisture would be attracted and retained, sufficient to assist vegetation so powerfully, as in a short time to cover the face of the ground with grass, and by that means, effectually to screen the roots, which would otherwise be exposed to the direct rays of the sun. It may be observed that dung will answer all the same purpose; to which it may be replied, that cattle will not eat the eddish of the dung, consequently, one valuable crop is lost, which if salt and ashes were used, would be productive and wholesome.

Thomas Hunt, Esq. at Messinet, in the parish of Stoke Gabriel, Devon, has this season cut and housed several acres Egyptian Barley, the produce of a small sample which Mr. Hunt procured from France three years ago. It is said that it was first brought to France from Egypt by some of Bonaparte's army. The grain has very much the appearance of wheat, the husk is very thin, it yields more and much finer flour than the common barley, and is extremely productive.

Extraordinary Produce.—A correspondent states the following as the produce of a single corn, taken out of a field near Sutton, in Ashfield, viz:—176 ears, containing on an average 30 corns in each ear, and amounting in the whole to 5,250 corns.—Nottingham Journal.

POETRY.

The species of stanza in the subjoined verses was first used by Sappho, in his beautiful and affecting Poem on Life, written in 1612.

WHAT IS LOVE?

Love as the virgin blush of morn
Or as the dew drop on the thorn,
Or as the primrose on the plain,
Or as the thought of former pleasure,
Ev'n such is Love's uncertain treasure.
The virgin blush of morn is o'er,
The dew consumes the thorn no more,
The music's ceased; the primrose dies,
The pleasure's past—and so Love flies

Like as the gaudy painted dream,
Or as the sunshine's golden beam,
Or as the tolling of a bell,
Or as the pansy's fragrant smell,
Or as the torch's glaring blaze,
Ev'n such is Love, whose charm decays.
The dream is past, the sunshine's fled,
The bell is stopp'd, the pansy's dead,
The smell is lost, the torch's blaze
Is out—and so Love's flame decays.

[4 August, 1822.]

WHEREAS it is expedient to make further Regulation respecting the Trade of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, in North America: Be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same

Power to the Governor to diminish or increase the Ports of Entry.

Provided always nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of either of the said Provinces respectively, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council thereof for the Time being, from Time to Time to diminish or increase by Proclamation, the Number of Ports or Places which are or hereafter may be appointed in such Province for the Entry of Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported from the United States of America.

Duties to be paid on the Goods enumerated in Schedule (B.)

II And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon such of the Goods, Wares, and Commodities which shall be so imported, as are enumerated in the Schedule (B.) annexed to this Act marked (B.), the several Duties of Customs as the same are respectively inserted or described and set forth in Figures in the said Schedule.

Where any Article is liable to a Colonial Duty equal to the one imposed, such Article shall be charged with the Duty

If Duty be less the Difference only shall be paid.

III. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if upon the Importation of any Article charged with Duty by this Act, the said Article shall also be liable to the Payment of Duty under the Authority of any Colonial Law, equal to or exceeding in amount the Duty charged by this Act, then and in such Case the Duty charged upon such Article by this Act shall not be demanded or paid upon the Importation of such Article: Provided also, that if the Duty payable under such Colonial Law shall be less in Amount than the Duty payable by this Act, then and in such case the Difference only between the Amount of the Duty payable by this Act, and the Duty payable under the Authority of such Colonial Laws, shall be deemed to be the Duty payable by this Act; and the same shall be collected and paid in such and the like Manner, and appropriated and applied to such and the like Uses, as the Duties specified in the said Schedule annexed to this Act marked (B.) are directed to be collected, paid, appropriated, and applied.

Tonnage Duties same Tonnage Duties shall be paid upon all American Vessels or Boats, from Vessels, to be the same as United States imposed on British Vessels.

V. And be it further enacted, That in all Cases in which the Duties ascertained or imposed by this Act upon the Importation of Articles into the said Provinces, described by the Value thereof, or either of them, are charged, not according to the Weight, Gauge or Measure, but according to the Value thereof, such Value shall be ascertained in the Mode prescribed by an Act passed in this present Session of Parliament, intituled An Act to regulate the Trade between His Majesty's Possessions in America and the West Indies, and other Places in America and the West Indies.

If Payment of Duties be refused, Collector may seize Goods and sell the same within 20 Days.

28 G. 3 c. 39

49 G. 3 c. 16 allowing the Importation of Rum, repealed.

VIII. And whereas it is expedient to afford Protection to the Trade between the said Colonies and Plantations and the Province of Lower Canada, by imposing the same Duty of 6d. per Gallon on Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of the said Colonies, imported from Great Britain, into Lower Canada from to the said Province, as is now payable in this Kingdom, upon the same Articles when imported from His Majesty's said Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon every Gallon of Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Islands, Colonies, or Plantations in the West Indies, which shall be imported or brought into any Part of the said Province of Lower Canada from Great Britain or Ireland, or any of the British Dominions in Europe, the Sum of Six Pence, over and above all other Duties now or hereafter to be made payable thereon in the said Province.

Additional Duty of 6d. per Gallon on West India-produce or Manufacture imported into Lower Canada, &c.

IX. And be it further enacted, That the Rates and Duties chargeable by this Act shall be deemed and are hereby declared to be Sterling Money of Great Britain, and shall be paid, and Application of the Money arising thereby.

Value of Duties, and Application of the Money arising thereby.

so collected, recovered, and paid to the Amount of the Value which such nominal Sums bear in Great Britain; and that such Sums may be received and taken according to the Proportion and Value of Five Shillings and Sixpence to the Ounce in Silver; and that the said Duties herein-before granted shall be received, levied, collected, paid, and recovered in the same Manner and Form, and by such Rules, Ways, and Means, and under such Penalties and Forfeitures as any other Duties payable to His Majesty upon Goods imported into the said Province of Upper and Lower Canada, or into either of them respectively, are or shall be raised, levied, collected, paid, and recovered by any Act or Acts of Parliament, as fully and effectually to all Intents and Purposes, as if the several Clauses, Powers, Directions, Penalties, and Forfeitures relating thereto were particularly repeated and again enacted in the Body of this Act; and that all the Monies which shall arise by the said Duties, (except the necessary Charges of raising, collecting, levying, recovering, answering, paying, and accounting for the same) shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs, into the Hands of His Majesty's Receiver General in the said Provinces respectively, for the Time being, and shall be applied to and for the Use of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, in such Manner only as shall be directed by any Law or Laws which may be made by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of each of the said Provinces respectively.

Goods the Produce of His Majesty's Dominions may be exported to any Port in the United States; but no Arms or Naval Stores, unless a Licence shall have been obtained without a Licence

X. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to export in any British or American Vessel or Vessels, Boat or Boats, Carriage or Carriages, from any Ports or Places of Entry now or hereafter to be established in the said Provinces, to any Port or Place in the United States of America, any Article of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Dominions, or any other Article legally imported into the said Provinces: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit or allow the Exportation of any Arms or Naval Stores, unless a Licence shall have been obtained for that Purpose from his Majesty's Secretary of State; and in case any such Articles shall be shipped or waterborne for the Purpose of being exported contrary to this Act, the same shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized and prosecuted as hereinafter directed.

Not to affect Inland Navigations of the Provinces.

XI. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to interfere with or repeal, as respects the Inland Navigation of the said Provinces, any of the Provisions contained in a certain Act passed in the Seventh and Eighth Years of the Reign of King William, intituled An Act for preventing Frauds, and regulating Abuses in the Plantation Trade; except in so far as the same are altered or repealed by this Act.

7 & 8 W. 3. c. 22.

Recovery and Application of Penalties.

XII. And be it further enacted, That all Penalties and Forfeitures incurred in either of the said Provinces under this Act (except where it is otherwise provided,) shall and may be sued for and prosecuted in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within such Province respectively; and the same shall and may be recovered, divided, and accounted for in the same Manner and Form, and by the same Rules and Regulations in all respects, as other Penalties and Forfeitures for Offences against the Laws relating to the Customs and Trade of the said Provinces respectively, shall or may any Act or Acts of the Legislatures of such Provinces be directed to be sued for, prosecuted, recovered, divided, and accounted for within the same respectively.

Drawback on the Exportation of Rum and other Spirits, from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, to Canada.

XIII. And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from thence into Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed therein; the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Reports of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claims are not admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, that they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks: For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator, who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied in Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which Duties shall not have been embraced within the Term of any provisional Agreement, and to report the particulars of any such claim, with the Grounds thereupon, to the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being; and if it shall appear to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury that any Sum is justly due from the Province of Lower Canada to the Province of Upper Canada on account of such last mentioned claim, they shall signify the same, together with the Amount, to the Governor or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada for the Time being, who shall thereupon issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, to pay such Amount to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, in full Discharge of any such Claims.

Conditions on which the Drawback shall be paid.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That no Entry shall pass, nor any Drawback be paid or allowed, upon the Exportation of Rum or other Spirits from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, unless such Entry be made in the Name of the real Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors of the said Goods, and that before such Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors, shall receive the said Drawback so allowed as aforesaid, One or more of them shall verify upon Oath, upon the Debenture to be made out for the Payment of such Drawback, that he or they is or are the real Owner or Owners of the said Goods; nor unless Proof on Oath shall be made to the Satisfaction of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, that the full Duties due upon the Importation of the said Goods at the said Port had been paid and discharged: Provided always, that in Cases where the Owners of the said Goods are resident in any other Part of the British Dominions, it shall be lawful for their known and established Agents in the Colonies from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, to take the necessary Oaths on behalf of the said Owners.

Drawback how payable.

XV. And be it further enacted, That the said Drawback shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, with the Consent of the Comptroller there, out of any Monies in his Hands arising from Duties of Customs.

Rum to be exported from Newfoundland within One Year after Importation

XVI. And be it further enacted That no Drawback shall be paid and allowed as aforesaid, unless the said Rum or other Spirits shall be duly entered for Exportation with the proper Officers of the Customs, and actually shipped on board the Ship or Vessel in which the said Goods are intended to be exported, within the Space of one Year from the Time such Rum or other Spirits were originally imported into the Colony from whence it is intended to export them to Canada, nor unless such Drawback shall be claimed within one Year after the Goods are so shipped for Exportation.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawbacks between the Provinces, by Arbitrators.

XVII. And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, divers Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles

Penalty on Persons refusing, &c.

Don in the Matters referred to them: and that if any Person or Persons shall refuse or neglect to attend the said Arbitrators, or to produce before them any Papers or Documents, having been duly served in either Province with reasonable Notice in Writing for that Purpose, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the Sum of Fifty Pounds, to be recovered by Bill, Plaint, or Information, in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within the Province in which such Person usually resides, to be applied towards the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province, and to be accounted for to His Majesty, through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasurer for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as it shall please His Majesty to direct.

Witnesses to be sworn

XIX. And be it further enacted, That the Witnesses to be produced before the said Arbitrators, if it is desired by either of the said Arbitrators, shall and may be sworn before any of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace within either of the said Provinces, or before any one of the said Arbitrators, who are hereby empowered jointly or severally to administer such Oath; and that if any Person shall, in any such Oath so taken as aforesaid, wilfully forswear himself, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Penalty for false swearing.

Appointing Arbitrators on Vacancies

XX. And be it further enacted, That in case of the Death, Removal, or Incapacity of either of the said Arbitrators before making an Award, or in case the Third Arbitrator chosen or appointed as aforesaid shall refuse to act, another shall be appointed in his Stead, in the same Manner as such Arbitrator so dead, removed, or become incapable or refusing to act as aforesaid, was originally appointed; and that in case a Third Arbitrator shall be appointed by His Majesty as herein-before mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-in-Chief in and over the said Provinces, to determine the Amount of Remuneration to be paid to such Arbitrator, which Amount shall be defrayed in equal Proportions by each Province, and shall be paid by Warrants, to be issued for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each Province, upon the Receiver General thereof respectively.

Award of Arbitrators to be final.

XXI. And be it further enacted, That the Award of the Majority of the said Arbitrators, so far as the same shall be authorized by this Act, shall be final.

Award to be certified to the Governor, &c. of the Provinces

XXII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators, or a Majority of them as herein-before mentioned, shall certify the Award to be made by them in the Premises, under their Hands and Seals, to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces; and that if any Sum be directed by the said Award to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada by the Province of Lower Canada, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada, and he is hereby required to issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of the Province of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Sum so awarded; which Sum shall be accordingly paid by the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in discharge of such Warrant, and shall be accounted for by him to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, shall be graciously pleased to direct.

XXIII. And be it further enacted, That the Arbitrators to be appointed under this Act shall have Power to hear and determine any claim which may be advanced on the Part of the Province of Lower Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada, being of the same Description as those which by this Act may be preferred to the same Arbitrators on the Part of Upper Canada; and that their Award thereupon shall be final and conclusive, and shall be carried into Effect if the same be made in Favour of the Province of Lower Canada in the same Manner as is herein directed with respect to any Award which may be made in favour of the Province of Upper Canada.

Proportion of Duties levied in Upper Canada

XXIV. And be it further enacted, That of all Duties which have been or shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada in Lower Canada shall be since the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and nineteen, under One Fifth to sand eight hundred and nineteen, under Upper Canada any Act passed in the said Province, &c. upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the Province of Lower Canada, and also of all Duties which after the passing of this Act, and before the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four, shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to have and receive One-fifth Part as the proportion of Duties arising and due to the said Province of Upper Canada upon such Importations; and that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, shall and may issue his Warrant forthwith upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for such proportion of the Duties as shall have been received in the Province of Lower Canada before the passing of this Act, and shall and may on the First Day of January and the First Day of July, in each and every Year thereafter, issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada in like Manner for the payment to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, of such Sum as may be then ascertained to be due on account of the said proportion, according to the Provisions of this Act.

After July 1, 1824, Division of Duties to be made as herein-before mentioned.

XXV. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the said First Day of July One Thousand Eight Hundred and Twenty-Four, the Proportion to be paid to Upper Canada by Arbitrators therein-before for the Four Years next succeeding, of Duties levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under the Authority of any Act or Acts passed or to be passed therein, on Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported thereinto by Sea, shall and may be ascertained by the Award of Arbitrators, to be appointed in the same Manner and with the same Powers as herein-before provided with respect to the Arbitrators to whom the Question of Arrears is to be referred, and that Arbitrators shall in like Manner be appointed and an Award made Once after every Four Years thereafter, for the Purpose of establishing such Proportion from Time to Time; and all and every the Provisions contained in this Act, respecting the Appointment, Powers, and Remuneration of the Arbitrators to be first appointed after the passing thereof, and regarding the Execution of the Duty, shall apply and extend to the Arbitrators to be appointed for the Purposes last herein mentioned.

Award to be made every Four Years.

INDEX AT END

Proportion hereby established to be paid until a new one is made.

XXVI. And be it further Enacted, That after the said First Day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty four, until a new Proportion of Duties, to be paid to Upper Canada, shall be established, as hereinbefore provided, and also at all Times hereafter, in default of any such Proportion being appointed, the Proportion of Duties last assigned to be paid to Upper Canada under the Authority of this Act, shall continue to be paid by the Province of Lower Canada, and Warrants shall issue for the Payment of the same, in the same Manner as for the Period before the same First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty-four: Provided always, that it shall be in the Power of the Arbitrators nevertheless, by their subsequent Award, to alter such Proportion from the Period for which it was last established, if it shall appear to them just so to do.

14 G. 3. c. 88.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to establish a Fund towards further defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been contended, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the estimated Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed, by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last Provincial Agreement heretofore ratified between the said two Provinces, or which may hereafter be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Order respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless as to be increased or diminished, as respects either of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, extending to the Period for which no such Order had before been made.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to remain in force [illegible] unless altered by a Legislative Act of that Province.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Exercise of an exclusive Controul, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the Thirty-first Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province,' and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

31 G. 3. c. 31.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, whereby the Province of Upper Canada may be affected, to be valid before Parliament.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other Duties shall or may be imposed on Articles imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, and whereby the Produce of Upper Canada shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law until the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty first Year of the said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrence in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

Boats and other Craft belonging to His Majesty's Subjects may go from Upper Canada into Lower Canada, not laden with Foreign Productions, without being subject to any Duty.

XXX. And whereas it is expedient that the Productions of the Province of Upper Canada should be permitted to be exported without being made subject to any Act of the Province of Lower Canada, either directly or indirectly, to Duties or Impositions on their Arrival in that Province, or in passing through the waters thereof: Be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, all and every the Boats, Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may now be established for Toll at any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River St. Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

Lands held in Fief and Seigniory.

XXXI. And whereas Doubts have been entertained whether Tenures of Lands within the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigniory can legally be changed: And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned; Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigniory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Soccage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province as aforesaid in pursuance of His Majesty's Instructions, transmitted through his Principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Soccage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Soccage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as and for a Commutation for the Fines and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no allotment or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

Treble Costs.

XXXII. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to commute with any Person holding Lands at Cens et Rentes in any Censive or Fief of His Majesty within either of the said Provinces, and such Person may obtain a Release from His Majesty of all feudal Rights arising by reason of such Tenure, and receive a Grant from His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in free and common Soccage, upon Payment to His Majesty of such Sum of Money as His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may deem to be just and reasonable, by reason of the Release and Grant aforesaid; and all such Sums of Money as shall be paid upon any Commutations made by virtue of this Act shall be applied towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province.

General Issue.

XXXIII. And be it further enacted, That if any Person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any thing done or to be done in pursuance of this Act, such Person or Persons may plead the General Issue, and give this Act and the special Matter in Evidence; and if the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, Prosecutor or Prosecutors, shall become nonsuit, or forbear the Prosecution, or discontinue his, her, or their Action, or if a Verdict shall pass against him, her, or them, the Defendants shall have Treble Costs, and shall give the like Remedy for the same as in Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants.

NOTICE.

THE Editor is extremely sorry to have occasion, a second time, to apologize to the pub ic for the carelessness of his pressmen; who, not having been accustomed to working off a Paper in 4to, in our last number reversed the sheet in working off the second form, and occasioned a very unsightly and disagreeable confusion in the succession of the pages. The Editor trusts this is the last time he can find it necessary to apologize for a blunder which, in this instance, it was impossible for him to notice in time for correction.

Editorial Commentary.

A Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of the District of Gore, was held at Ancaster, on the 26th of Oct. for the purpose of petitioning the Legislature for funds to open a communication between Burlington Bay, and Lake Ontario, when it was unanimously resolved to petition the two Houses of Parliament on the subject and an able, and perspicuous Memorial was drawn up—a copy of which has been sent to us;—but our limits will not allow us to publish it this week; we shall, however, have great pleasure in giving it in our next number, for we heartily coincide in the necessity and importance of the measure,—and the public spirited individuals who have brought it forward have our best wishes for its success.

We have received several communications of interest to the country; the publication of which, we are, for the present, compelled to forego.—But, all those of real importance will find a place in this paper.

Success of an Impostor.—Some time ago, the foreign journals mentioned a woman of the name of Milford, who pretended to performe miracles. A singular accident happened at her trial, as a rogue and cheat, at Charleville, on the 17th ult. Her advocate, in making the best defence he could for her, quoted the Evangelists in a way which so greatly incensed the Judge that he dropped dead in a fit while ordering him to quit the Court. The crowd immediately shouted "A miracle!" and it is justly apprehended that this untoward circumstance will produce very bad effects on the minds of the ignorant.

Leader of the House of Commons.

The qualities requisite to a Leader of the House of Commons are multifarious, and very rarely united in the same person. With eloquence and knowledge of business alone, even of the first order, he could not manage an assembly, in which his firmness, temper, and even courage, would be frequently put to the test; and if he was once found deficient in any of the last attributes, all the magic of his words, and all the weight of his knowledge would avail him but little—he would be harassed, brow beaten, and at last, reduced to silence, when the exercise of all his powers ought to be called into action. The most inflammatory speeches would go out to the world, unanswered; or only feebly replied to. The most insulting Petitions would be forced upon the House, from want of nerve and tact on the part of the Minister. Questions, respecting our relations with Foreign Courts, or affecting the privacy of the Royal Family, which it would be improper to answer, and imprudent to pass over without notice, would be, night after night, put from the Opposition Benches; and if the Ministerial Leader had not consummate address, he might involve the Government in situations from which it would be extremely difficult to extricate it afterwards. The Minister who will lead the House of Commons in our time, must not only possess skill in debate, and a perfect knowledge of the multiplied interests of the country, but he must have imperturbable firmness, and moreover a suavity of manner, which should enable him, at pleasure, to check those surging passions which the ardour of discussion might call forth. He should never lose his own temper, nor suffer an adversary to transgress in this way with impunity. If he failed in either, he would forfeit the confidence of his party, and the respect which he always ought to command from the House. The least deficiency in any of these points would redound to the advantage of the popular interests within and without doors; and we must here expose the growing error, that the mere material influence of the Crown is always sufficient to secure a majority of the House of Commons.

That influence must be upheld by moral causes, by such as we have just described, or it would soon be found unequal to the task of managing the business of the Nation. Every Session, by the call of new reduction will lessen the gross influence of the Crown, and render a moral ascendancy the more imperatively necessary.

Anecdotes of the late Marquis of Londonderry.

The following anecdotes are taken from a pamphlet recently published.

When his Lordship left Mount Stewart for the capital, he embarked in a small schooner at the pier of Portaferry; he was much affected, and departed amidst the benedictions of the poor, who prayed fervently for his safe passage, and speedy return. When the schooner his lordship had hired to had accomplished about half her voyage, a storm came on which drove her out to sea, one of the masts was carried away by the force of the sea and a man swept overboard; he sunk to rise no more. Another would have shared the same fate but his lordship, who had been animating the crew, by his words & personal example, fearlessly sprang into the chains (that is, a projecting timber outside the vessel, to which the shrouds are fastened) and seized him by the collar of his jacket, and dragging him on board at the risk of his own life. This inspired the crew with confidence, and they exerted themselves so strenuously, that in a few hours they rigged a jury mast, and at day break made shift to get safe into the harbor of Castletown, in the Isle of Man. Here his lordship landed and took up his residence with Lord Henry Murray (since dead.) A fever was the consequence of the exertions he had used in the dangers he had so very happily escaped, and he was confined to bed for three weeks. The schooner was repaired and prepared for his reception. The first inquiry his lordship made was about the family of the man who perished; he had left a widow and one son. To the widow he sent £10 and promised the same annually as long as she lived. The son he provided for in the revenue, and he is now a port surveyor, highly respected. In the course of his rambles over the Isle of Man, he fell in with a person named Matthew Wilson, well known to all who from choice or necessity have visited that famous little island. He kept a school near Peel, in a small cottage, embosomed by woods by the side of a murmuring spring. His scholars were few, and his remuneration but small; he was expert at cutting sticks and carving figures on their handles; fished for cod and hake; shot curlews, made wicker baskets, and a sort of jugs, from clay that he discovered near his abode. He was a jack of all trades.—made up accounts, wrote letters, made wills, cut corns, dug potatoes, mended hedges and played on the fiddle. Multifarious were the employments of Matthew Wilson, when his lordship recognized him as an old schoolfellow and youthful friend. Mathew's tale was short; he left the neighbourhood of Mount Stewart because he had fallen in love with a farmer's daughter; but as he had only learning and poverty to boast of, her parents refused their consent, and he retired to the Isle of Man, where he set up a school and had been four years "laboring at his vocation." The generous heart of his lordship was moved at his tale, and he formed a plan to make him more comfortable. After administering relief to his immediate necessities, he sent him over to Mount Stewart, with letters to his noble father. There Mr. Matt. Wilson was regularly inducted schoolmaster to all the parish, and placed in a neat house, with half a dozen acres of land. From the parents of the children he received pay according to agreement, and the Stewart family allowed him £40 a year. These affluent circumstances softened the flinty hearts of his "first love's" parents, and he finally married. He now has a large family, has extended his farm, and also his school, and is independent. He evinced his gratitude to his benefactor, during the different elections for representatives for the county of Down, by writing addresses in his favor and songs innumerable.

THE CONGRESS.

The German Papers are filled with notices of the movements of the sundry sovereigns towards the scene of the next Congressional proceedings. It is generally believed on the continent of Europe that some very extraordinary suggestions will be offered to the considerating of Congress for repressing the freedom of the press throughout Europe, comprehending of course, the island of Great Britain; but Great Britain is not in fact a party to the Holy Alliance; and if it were, such a project would never go down. The following is given in the London Sun of the 12th Sept., as an authentic statement of the project with which M. de Montmorency is charged by the government of France, to propose to Congress.

1. A uniform measure of compression to be adopted against the present popular feeling so alarmingly prevalent in Europe; for which purpose the contracting parties, are to provide a military contingent, to be employed at the request of any one of the parties, the internal tranquility of whose State may be menaced; and the employment of this contingent not to be considered as any way interfering with the general relation of amity existing between the countries.

2. A general law for the regulations of the Press, which is to suspend all local laws now authorising a greater latitude of publication than may be thought consistent with the new European arrangements.

3 The erection of a Tribunal upon the principle of the Mayence Tribunal established at Troppau for the punishment of offences against the German Confederacy, for the trial and punishment of offenders against the order of things now existing in Europe. The authority of this Tribunal is to extend over all Representative Governments, to the extent of bringing under its action individuals who may, from the Tribune of their National Assemblies, hold language and inculcate doctrines deemed subversive of the present system of legitimacy.

4. A measure which may induce or compel Spain to enter into the views of the Holy Alliance, by the establishment of a Chamber of Peers.

An article in the Brussels papers of the 9th Sept. contains a report from Frankfort, that the Austrian troops in Italy had commenced their march through the south of France, to reinforce the Sanitary Cordon. Although this news caused a fall in the funds, it was not believed.

The American editors who are so exceedingly fond of animadversion on what they are pleased to term the slavery and superstition of the old Monarchies of Europe, hath abundant matter matter for notice nearer home,—if they could but discover the beam that is in their own eye.—The following instances are but two out of many hundreds that might be selected from recent American papers.—ED.

Slavery.—On Friday last a drove of human beings passed through this place towards Wheeling, in chains. No extraordinary sensation was publicly manifested on the occasion, perhaps because their skins were black.—Washington paper.

From the Commercial Advertiser, Sept. 18.

Superstition, Witchcraft, and Murder.—A man named Joseph Lewis, was tried and convicted at Norfolk, on the 11th inst. of murdering a free man of colour of the name of Bass, under the following extraordinary circumstances.—Lewis believing himself and wife to be bewitched, had recourse to an old hag who pretended to have the gift of second sight, and was a great teller of fortunes. This modern Sybil gave him to understand, that Bass was the one who had tricked them, and under that impression he went deliberately home; from thence to Bass's house, and there sans ceremonia shot him down like a bullock. It came out on trial, that after the deed was done, so far from Lewis repenting of it, he, on all occasions, publicly acknowledged it, and said he would do the like again. He was convicted of murder in the 2d degree and sentenced to 18 years confinement in the penitentiary. The "witch" has been committed to prison on a bench warrant, and the grand jury has presented her as a common nuisance.

If Duty be less the Difference only shall be paid.

IV. And be it further enacted, That the same Tonnage Duties shall be paid upon all American Vessels or Boats, importing any Goods into either of the said Provinces, as are or may be for the time being payable in the United States of America, on British Vessels or Boats entering the Harbours of the State from whence such Goods shall have been imported.

Drawback on Rum or Spirits, from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and &c. to

And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and Rum and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from thence into Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits as Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be paid and allowed, upon the Exportation from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, of Rum or other Spirits, being the produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, a Drawback of the full Duties of Customs which may have been paid upon the Importation thereof from any of the Places last aforesaid, into any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, upon a Certificate being produced, under the Hands and Seals of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at Quebec, certifying that the said Rum or other Spirits have been duly landed in Canada.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That no Entry shall pass, nor any Drawback be paid or allowed, upon the Exportation of Rum or other Spirits from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island into Canada, unless such Entry be made in the Name of the real Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors of the said Goods, and that before such Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors, shall receive the said Drawback so allowed as aforesaid, One or more of them shall verify upon Oath, upon the Debenture to be made out for the Payment of such Drawback, that he or they is or are the real Owner or Owners of the said Goods; nor unless Proof on Oath shall be made to the Satisfaction of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, that the full Duties due upon the Importation of the said Goods at the said Port had been paid and discharged; Provided always, that in Cases where the Owners of the said Goods are resident in any other Part of the British Dominions, it shall be lawful for their known and established Agents in the Colonies from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, to take the necessary Oaths on behalf of the said Owners.

Drawback how payable.

XV. And be it further enacted, That the said Drawback shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, with the Consent of the Comptroller there, out of any Monies in his Hands arising from Duties of Customs.

Rum to be exported from Newfoundland within One Year after First Importation

XVI. And be it further enacted, That no Drawback shall be paid and allowed as aforesaid, unless the said Rum or other Spirits shall be duly entered for Exportation with the proper Officers of the Customs, and actually shipped on board the Ship or Vessel in which the said Goods are intended to be exported, within the Space of one Year from the Time such Rum or other Spirits were originally imported into the Colony from whence it is intended to export them to Canada, nor unless such Drawback shall be claimed within one Year after the Goods are so shipped for Exportation.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawbacks between the Provinces, by Arbitrators.

XVII. And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, divers Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed therein; the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Report of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claims are not admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, That they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks: For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator, who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied in Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which Duties shall not have been embraced within the Terms of any provisional Agreement, and to report the particulars of any such claim, with the Evidence thereupon, to the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being; and if it shall appear to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury that any Sum is justly due from the Province of Lower Canada to the Province of Upper Canada on account of such last-mentioned claim, they shall signify the same, together with the Amount, to the Governor or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada for the Time being, who shall thereupon issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, to pay such Amount to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, in full Discharge of any such Claims.

Power of Arbitrators to send for Persons and Records.

XVIII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators shall have Power to send for and examine such Persons, Papers, and Records as they shall judge necessary for their Information in the Matters referred to them; and that if any Person or Persons shall refuse or neglect to attend the said Arbitrators, or to produce before them any Papers or Documents, having been duly served in either Province with reasonable Notice in Writing for that Purpose, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the Sum of Fifty Pounds, to be recovered by Bill, Plaint, or Information, in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within the Province in which such Person usually resides, to be applied towards the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province, and to be accounted for to His Majesty, through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasurer for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as it shall please His Majesty to direct.

Penalty on Persons refusing, &c.

Witnesses to be sworn

XIX. And be it further enacted, That the Witnesses to be produced before the said Arbitrators, if it is desired by either of the said Arbitrators, shall and may be sworn before any of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace within either of the said Provinces, or before any one of the said Arbitrators, who are hereby empowered jointly or severally to administer such Oath;

Penalty for false swearing.

and that if any Person shall, in any such Oath so taken as aforesaid, wilfully forswear himself, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Appointing Arbitrators on Vacancies

XX. And be it further enacted, That in case of the Death, Removal, or Incapacity of either of the said Arbitrators before making an Award, or in case the Third Arbitrator chosen or appointed as aforesaid shall refuse to act, another shall be appointed in his Stead, in the same Manner as such Arbitrator so dead, removed, or become incapable or refusing to act as aforesaid, was originally appointed; and that in case a Third Arbitrator shall be appointed by His Majesty as herein-before mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-in-Chief in and over the said Provinces, to determine the Amount of Remuneration to be paid to such Arbitrator, which Amount shall be defrayed in equal Proportions by each Province, and shall be paid by Warrants, to be issued for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each Province, upon the Receiver General thereof respectively.

Award of Arbitrators to be final.

XXI. And be it further enacted, That the Award of the Majority of the said Arbitrators, so far as the same shall be authorized by this Act, shall be final

Award to be certified to the Treasury and by the Governor, &c of the Provinces

XXII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators, or a Majority of them as herein before mentioned, shall certify the Award to be made by them in the Premises, under their Hands and Seals, to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces; and that it any Sum be directed by the said Award to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada by the Province of Lower Canada, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada, and he is hereby required to issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of the Province of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Sum so awarded; which Sum shall be accounted for by him to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, shall be graciously pleased to direct.

Payment of Sum awarded

Power to Arbitrators to determine Claims advanced on the part of Canada on Upper Canada

XXIII. And be it further enacted, That the Arbitrators to be appointed under this Act shall have Power to hear and determine any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Lower Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada, being of the same Description as those which by this Act may be preferred to the same Arbitrators on the Part of Upper Canada; and that their Award thereupon shall be final and conclusive, and shall be carried into Effect if the same be made in Favour of the Province of Lower Canada in the same Manner as is herein directed with respect to any Award which may be made in favour of the Province of Upper Canada.

Proportion of Duties arising in Lower Canada out of Duties levied in Upper Canada

XXIV. And be it further enacted, That of all Duties which have been levied in the Province of Lower Canada and shall be since the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and nineteen, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the Province of Lower Canada, and also of all Duties which after the passing of this Act, and before the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four, shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to have and receive One-fifth Part as the proportion of Duties arising and due to the said Province of Upper Canada upon such Importations; and that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, shall and may issue his Warrant forthwith upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for such proportion of the Duties as shall have been received in the Province of Lower Canada before the passing of this Act, and shall and may on the First Day of January and the First Day of July, in each and every Year thereafter, issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada in like Manner for the payment to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, of such Sum as may be then ascertained to be due on account of the said proportion, according to the Provisions of this Act.

After July 1, 1824, Divisions of Duties to be made every Four Years.

XXV. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the said First Day of July One Thousand Eight Hundred and Twenty-four, the Proceeds by Arbitration to be paid to Upper Canada for the Four Years next succeeding, of the Duties levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under the Authority of any Act or Acts passed or to be passed therein, upon Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported therein by Sea, shall and may be ascertained by the Award of Arbitrators, to be appointed in the same Manner and with the same Powers as herein before provided with respect to the Arbitrators to whom the Question of Arrears is to be referred, and that Arbitrators shall in like Manner appointed and an Award made Once after every Four Years thereafter, for the Purpose of establishing such Proportion from Time to Time; and all and every the Provisions contained in this Act, respecting the Appointment, Powers, and Remuneration of the Arbitrators to be first appointed after the passing thereof, and regarding the Execution of the Duty, shall apply and extend to the Arbitrators to be appointed for the Purposes last herein mentioned.

Award to be Void unless made every Four Years.

INDEX AT END

Proportion hereby established to be paid until a new one is made.

XXVI. And be it further Enacted, That after the said First Day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty four, until a new Proportion of Duties, to be paid to Upper Canada, shall be established, as hereinbefore provided, and also at all Times hereafter, in default of any such Proportion being appointed, the Proportion of Duties last assigned to be paid to Upper Canada under the Authority of this Act, shall continue to be paid by the Province of Lower Canada, and Warrants shall issue for the Payment of the same, in the same Manner as for the Period before the same First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty-four: Provided always that it shall be in the Power of the Arbitrators nevertheless, by their subsequent Award, to alter such Proportion from the Period for which it was last established, if it shall appear to them just so to do.

Proportion of Duties how to be allotted between the Two Provinces.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to establish a Fund towards further defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been contended, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the estimated Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed, by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last ~~Provincial Agreement~~ hereinbefore ratified between the said two Provinces, or which may hereafter be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Order respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respects either of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, extending to the Period for which no such Order had before been made.

14 G. 3. c. 88.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to remain in force till repealed or altered by a Legislative Act of that Province.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Exercise of an exclusive Control, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Control as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the Thirty-first Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province', and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

31 G. 3. c. 31.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, whereby the Province of Upper Canada may be affected, to be valid until laid before Parliament.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other Duties shall or may be imposed on Articles imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, and whereby the Province of Upper Canada shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law until the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty-first Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrence in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

Boats and other Craft belonging to His Majesty's Subjects from Upper Canada into Lower Canada, not laden with Foreign Productions, not subject to any Duty.

XXX. And whereas it is expedient that the Productions of the Province of Upper Canada should be permitted to be exported without being made subject to any Act of the Province of Lower Canada, either directly or indirectly, to Duties or Impositions on their Arrival in that Province, or in passing through the waters thereof: Be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, all and every the Boats, Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may now be established for Toll at any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River Saint Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

How Expences of improving the Navigation shall be defrayed and paid

Lands held in Fief and Seigneurage.

XXXI. And whereas Doubts have been entertained whether Tenures of Lands within the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigniory can legally be changed: And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigniory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Soccage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province as aforesaid in pursuance of His Majesty's Instructions, transmitted through his Principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Soccage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Soccage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as and for a Commutation for the Rents and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no allotment or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

His Majesty may commute with Persons holding Lands at Cens et Rentes.

XXXII. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to commute with any Person holding Lands at Cens et Rentes in any Censive or Fief of His Majesty within either of the said Provinces, and such Person may obtain a Release from His Majesty of all feudal Rights arising by reason of such Tenure, and receive a Grant from His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in free and common Soccage, upon Payment to His Majesty of such Sum of Money as His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may deem to be just and reasonable, by reason of the Release and Grant aforesaid; and all such Sums of Money as shall be paid upon any Commutations made by virtue of this Act shall be applied toward the Administration of Justice and the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province.

General Issue

XXXIII. And be it further enacted, That if any Person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any thing done or to be done in pursuance of this Act, such Person or Persons may plead the General Issue, and give this Act and the special Matter in Evidence; and if the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, Prosecutor or Prosecutors, shall become nonsuit, or forbear the Prosecution, or discontinue his, her, or their Action, or if a Verdict

Editorial Commentary.

If the British Ministry see as many Canadian Newspapers as we do; and have no other means of ascertaining what is the sense of the people of this country, as to the policy or impolicy of uniting these provinces under one Legislature, we think they must be a good deal puzzled how to form any clear opinion on the subject; for no people, apparently, were ever at greater variance; no, not even the honest mail and his wife in the juvenile story of Primrose Prettyface whilst pulling against each other at opposite ends of a rope, drawn through a hedge!

The theme is so fruitful we have a dread of even touching upon it, beyond the fulfilment of our promise to sum up the evidence, as it were, on this great question as it was agitated in the British Parliament in 1791; which we shall endeavour to do as soon as possible. Nevertheless, we cannot help expressing a little surprise on finding so many men of reputed sense, in both Provinces, capable of harbouring an opinion that it is the desire of the British government, in any degree, to injure or abridge the Constitution granted to this Country, when the grand cause of its taking up the matter at all is so manifest, and has been so openly declared; which is, the prevention, if it be possible, of all future differences and disputes amongst the people. If the Lower Canadians had not thought proper to withhold from the Upper Province what was justly due to it, and if they did not, upon all occasions, so determinedly attempt to thwart the fair operation, and just and liberal designs of their own Executive, it is our opinion they would have heard nothing, at least for the present, of the proposed Union. It was to extend the unanimity and happiness enjoyed in the Upper Province, and to consolidate, not to scatter and destroy, the liberties, energies, and power, of a FREE PEOPLE into one efficient whole, with a view of enlarging and reapplying the full benefit of every source of domestic wealth and improvement, whilst it became a less anxious and weighty charge to the parent state, and more formidable to its enemies, that, in our mind, the measure was proposed, and where the evil is in the design at least, we own our incapacity to perceive, although we are amongst those who consider that the time has not arrived in which it is either desirable, or politic, to urge the measure into a full enactment.

We have every respect which is due to the French character, whether at home or abroad;—but, to allow that the knowledge, even of old France, in great and broad questions of agriculture, manufactures and commerce, and the principles of legal and political, is commensurate with the knowledge of England, would be preposterous in the highest degree in the face of the whole world.—Look at the history of the Colonies of France, and at the history of those of England! whilst ruin, bankruptcy, and foreign conquest have made notorious the annals of the one, a prosperity which is almost miraculous has distinguished every page of the history of the other. The French standard of impolicy and imbecility by their own best writers on colonial affairs, RAYNAL and du PRADT! We have a great respect for the good qualities of the ancient Seigneurs of Lower Canada, but we really do think they would not be the worse, nor would the affairs of the country be the worse, for their being a little more jostled, and rubbed up, by the presence of a few more of John Bull's kidney amongst them; particularly since M. VIGER has told the people at the Champ de Mars that the proposed bill will render "a million of faithful subjects strangers to the soil of their native country"—(by the bye the population of L. C must have increased wonderfully, since the last census was taken). This phraseology may be very fine and pompous; but, with all due deference to Mons. VIGER, it is, together with the greater part of his speech) downright nonsense—intended only to inflame a set of ignorant people; and, if he talks such stuff in all the public assemblies, in which he may have a place, it is time some valve was closed upon the deluding gas.—But we cannot now stay to comment upon any such matter—take the liberty, only, to observe that from the passion and temper which is displayed in the Lower Province, it must be difficult for a cool and impartial bye-stander to augur much in favour of these loquacious gentry of the ancient regime—for why should they fear an accession of British talent and influence in their councils if there was "no rottenness" to be concealed, and no feudal excrescences to be cut off?—they cannot be so ignorant as not to know that it is at least, the interest, if it were not, as it is, the distinguished honor of the British Name and Nation to act with liberation, wisdom, and uprightness, in a matter that so nearly concerns one of the great members of her widely extended, and magnificent, Empire.

Poor Mr. GOURLAY, who so carefully shook off the dust of Canada from his shoes on the banks of the Niagara River, at the period of his banishment, seems strongly desirous of polluting his sole leather once more with our unhallowed soil.—He is the most indefatigable political mountebank, and screw-augur, with whom we ever came in contact—Not once, nor twice, nor thrice shall any be said to him.—Whatever might be the blessing attendant on his new system of Government we really wish he would carry his experiment to some other country, and leave us in the peaceable possession of our own "mis-government," and we sincerely hope that His Majesty will, for once at least, scruple how far "confidence" may be "misplaced in a Scotsman"*

Before we close this, our weekly Commentary, we have a word or two to write on a professional subject.—We hope we are as free from the vain pretension of saying "goodlier things" than our neighbours, as any other honest caterer for the public, yet we are great lovers of justice; and we love to see the "saddle placed on the right horse," just as much as we dislike to see a bird "bedecked with borrowed plumes," be they foul or fair.—Literature is a complete republic wherein all are at liberty to scramble for the good things it possesses; but, some how or another, amongst newspaper-writers, and editors, a custom has crept in (from what original cause, whether of vanity or for the sake of superior authority, we know not,) to acknowledge from whence any original composition, the work of a contemporary, is taken, according to Newspaper etiquette, thus, when we quote editorial matter from another paper, we say from the Courier, the Morning Chronicle or the Albion, &c. &c.

* The concluding words of his Address to the King.

but, what has been before in print, and in various periodical publications, is deemed lawful game; and as compilers, or poachers, we are at liberty to pounce upon it, and appropriate it to ourselves, being, as a sportsman would say, "feræ naturæ." To take the one without a proper acknowledgement is called Piracy or Plagiarism, whilst to make use of the other is legitimate compilation. In some publications of this kind it may be difficult to ascertain what is put forth as original, and what is not, but there can be no mistake in our paper; for, being equally averse to deception, by assuming what does not belong to us, and the rendering any one else responsible for our opinions, or blunders, we have been careful to separate our editorial remarks from the rest of the matter; and, where it may be necessary to make any comment in the body of the work, those comments are marked Ed.

We have taken the liberty of making these remarks in consequence of having observed nearly a whole column of our editorial commentary of Oct. 17, published in the Montreal Gazette, and also in the Quebec Gazette, without any sort of acknowledgment from whence it was taken, leaving their readers to imagine and make what references they please. We are certainly obliged to the respectable editors of those papers for making more public what is really of public interest, but we are of opinion that justice, and a well ordering of the republic of letters, require the good old rules to be maintained.—Besides, as we mean to be very luminous by and bye, when we have fairly got our hands in, our vanity will be a little troubled to see all our most brilliant coruscations caught away, and appropriated by others, instead of being reflected back to the fountain from whence they proceeded. We hope that none of our Brother-Editors will compel us to scold where we now only expostulate, as we are very willing to reciprocate in all the courtesies of our profession; we will, therefore, for the present, take our leave in the language of a well known ancient,

Vive, vale: si quid novisti rectius istis,
Candidus imperti; si non, his uteris mecum.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

It is, perhaps, not generally known that by the Act authorizing Jury trials in Scotland, it is provided, if the Jury cannot agree in the verdict in twelve hours after they are enclosed, they must separate, and a new Jury be chosen to try the case.

A line of packets is to be established between Liverpool and Jamaica, to leave each place every six weeks.

We congratulate the public on the prospect there is now of the long projected scheme of forming a communication between the British and Bristol Channels by means of a canal from Beer Harbour to Bridgewater being at length carried into effect. An actual survey is now in progress, with a view to an application to Parliament the ensuing Session. This important communication will be effected at a very moderate expense, compared with all former calculations.—West of England Paper.

Frontiers of Poland, Aug. 25.—The Grand Duke of Constantine has prohibited the Nobility of Podolia and Ukraine, to travel into foreign countries. The passports which had been granted at the time of the arrival of this order are taken back, and the prohibition even extended to persons who had obtained passports last July. The order sent to the Governor of Zytomir was written in the Duke's own hand, and directs even that those who received passports in July shall be sent back to the frontiers.—Permission to travel must be requested of the Grand Duke himself.

Dogs.—Dogs have a sense of time so as to count the days of the week. My Grandfather had one, who trudged two miles every Saturday to market, to cater for himself in the shambles. I know another more extraordinary and well authenticated other more extraordinary and well authenticated example:—A dog which had belonged to an Irishman, and was sold by him in England, would never touch a morsel of food upon a Friday; the Irishman had made him as good a Catholic as he was himself. This dog never forsook the sick bed of his last master, and, when he was dead, refused to eat, and died also.

The Hertford Property.—We hear that the Marquis succeeded to property, in land, producing upwards of 120,000*l.* during the last three years. The Irish property produced last year 25,000*l.* The Irish property produced last year 25,000*l.* There was a mistake in the account of the Dowager Marchioness's property. Her ladyship, by the will of her husband, became possessor of 200,000*l.* in money, every shilling of which sum she made over to her son. We are assured that her ladyship has but little ready money; but in land she has a clear income of 30,000*l.* per annum from the Yorkshire estate. We are told that the Marchioness had settled 3,000*l.* a year upon Lady W. Gordon, her sister; we since learn that it is half that sum. The Yorkshire estates, after the death of her ladyship, will be divided between the sisters —namely the above and lady Ramsden.

Breaking Stones by Steam.—On a new line of road now cutting between Bury and Bolton, (about half a mile distant from the former town,) one of Messrs. Kay and Routledge's patent rotatory engines is attached to a machine something similar to a bone mill, but considerably stronger, and breaks the stones to cover the road at the astonishing rate of 70 or 80 tons in 10 hours.—This novel application of the power of steam originated with the spirited and ingenious inventor of the rotatory engine. By it the commissioners of the road are enabled to prepare materials on a scale of economy not before contemplated.

We have examined several specimens of Jenning's Patent Guns, and do not hesitate to pronuce them far superior to any invention of the kind we have ever seen. By this improvement, five charges can be put into the same barrel. The invention consists in five separate vents and a sliding lock, which applies the priming to each in succession. The process of changing requires an intermission of about two seconds. We witnessed the discharge of a pistol upon this plan, which delivered its balls with great exactitude, and with no sensible diminution of the effect; and we are persuaded that for ball charges at least, the invention promises to be of great utility, nor do we see any formidable objections to its use in shot guns.—Mr. R. Ellis, the purchaser of the patent right, is now in town, and has a number of highly finished rifles, pistols, and fowling pieces, constructed upon this principle, for sale at the store of Messrs. J. & H. Meacham, in State street.—Albany Argus.

Mites.—An ingenious gentleman has communicated an important discovery in the Encyclopædia, viz. that ninety millions of mites' eggs amount exactly to the size of one pigeon's egg.

Dr. Franklin.—It is a curious incident, that when the Americans sent Dr. Franklin, a printer, as minister to France, the court of Versailles sent M. Girard, a bookbinder, as minister to the congress. When Dr. Franklin was told of it, "Well," said he, "I'll print the independence of America and M. Girard will bind it."

Hindoo Paper.—A new weekly paper, edited by a learned Hindoo, has been recently published in India, in the Bengalee language. It is the first attempt of the kind; but the first and second numbers were purchased with so much avidity that both were out of print. The subjects on which they treated were, the liberty of the native press, and the right of trial by jury. The title of the paper is as singular as its publication is novel. It is entitled "Sungbaad Cowmuddy, or the "Moon of Intelligence." The Sun and the Star are by no means uncommon titles; but this is the first instance we have known in which an editor has ever triumphedly admitted the existence of lunar influence as applied to himself, although the fraternity are often very willing to acknowledge the great extent to which it prevails over others.

The Tides.—A new theory upon this interesting subject has been lately published in England, by Captain Forcart, of the Royal Navy. He does not deny the attraction of the moon, but represents it as a more remote cause, than it is considered by the Newtonian School. His theory is, that the lunar influence does not, of itself, produce tides or high water at any given time or place; but that it neutralizes the gravity of the superincumbent water, where the depth is great, and thus allows the lower strata of water to expand by their natural elasticity, which expansion, he thinks, produces tides.

Fine Arts.—The celebrated Chapeau de Paille, the chief d'œuvre of Peter Paul Rubens, was purchased yesterday at auction, at the sale of the late J. Stiers D'Averschare's collection of pictures, at Antwerp, by Mr. Smith, of Great Marlborough-st. in conjunction with Mr. Nieuwenhuis, of Brussels, for 176,600*fr.*, or £3,191 13*s.* 4*d.* sterling. This piece has been so long the admiration of connoisseurs, and such large sums offered for it during the life of the late proprietor, that it was expected to bring a much higher price.

Cat and Leeches.—A few days ago, a cat, which had probably strayed from her kittens, in search of mice or other prey, was discovered in a barn at Farthingwell, Parish of Dunscore, in rather a curious predicament: that is, she had seven ugly leeches of the rat species greedily tugging at her udder, in place of her own sightless progeny—an operation to which she appeared to submit with the greatest patience. The persons who made this discovery destroyed six of these vermin: Bawdrins, however, did not choose to stir, and in the course of a few minutes the assailants had the pleasure of dispatching the seventh rat, also, which, undeterred by the fate of its companions, had again renewed its acquaintance with the indiscriminating cat.—Dumfries Courier

New Dictionary.—Mr. Henry Mathews of London has issued a plan for a dictionary to enable persons to translate languages without study or any previous acquaintance with them.

This Dictionary by which, says the proprietor, it will be only pastime for children to trans ate English works, into the language of India and China, and their works into English, he proposes to complete in English in three volumes.

THE GREEKS.

From the London Morning Chronicle of August 30.

We hasten to lay before our readers a few extracts from the eloquent Letter which Lord Erskine has just addressed to the Earl of Liverpool on the subject of the Greeks. We hail the appearance of this production as the harbinger of better fortune to the cause of that unfortunate people. Religion and humanity have here guided the pen of this amiable and venerable Nobleman, whose voice has so often & so successfully been already heard in behalf of the oppressed; and the heart that can read his powerful appeal unmoved must be torpid indeed. On the religious part of the community we are warranted in believing that it will produce a strong and durable impression.

His Lordship commences with informing Lord Liverpool that "he is solemnly and indispensably forced, by a duty paramount to that of a Statesman, to make an instant effort to engage the nation in alliance with this country to overthrow the crue ldispensation of unprincipled, incorrigible barbarians over a Christian people struggling for freedom and independence.

The following extract will serve to give some idea of the manner in which this question is treated by his Lordship:—

"I shall assume, without argument, from respect to your Lordship's understanding and knowledge, that the Greeks can by no possibility (even if it were a desirable event) be brought to the condition of conquered subjects, nor indeed drawn into any connections whatever with their tyrannous oppressors. They have a ready begun to organize themselves as a nation; they are advancing among unexampled difficulties to maintain their independence; their success is owing to the perseverance, and with the fortitude and patience of Christians they invoke the God of Battles, in their public Proclamations, to support their cause. Such a resistance can surely no longer be considered as a mere sedition, which, if left to itself, might terminate in submission and conciliation, and I have therefore assumed as a self-evident proposition, that the Greeks can never more be subjects of the Ottoman Porte. They may, without the aid of other Powers, be exterminated or scattered, but cannot again return to a state of subjection and peace.

"The question, therefore, of action or inaction comes directly home to us; it rushes loudly and imperiously upon your Lordship as the first political member of the Cabinet, for immediate decision.—Are you prepared to countenance the continuance of such a frightful state of things, with means in your hands to avert it?

"But before I advance to the manifest advantages which would follow from the independence of the Greeks, if established by our assistance, and the ease with which it might be accomplished, there is one branch of their sufferings that cannot but very deeply affect us; sufferings inseparable from their present condition, and from which we cannot but feel the most anxious wishes for their deliverance—I allude to the peculiar enormities which attend the system of slavery amidst the exasperations of this cruel warfare, and as, in the religious view of the subject, I maintained that all our national exertions for the progress of the Gospel were only as a drop in the ocean, when compared with the light of it extinguished by the delusive dominion of the Turks, so I assert that the Negro Slave Trade was nothing in the scale of misery and debasement against the horrors which, during this sanguinary contest must continue for ever.

"What, my Lord, are the sufferings, dreadful and detestable as they were, of almost a savage in the state of nature, like the unhappy African, when made the victim of this mercenary traffic—what were his sufferings when compared with those which are notoriously passing every day throughout the east? The simple abduction of women, and the separation of parents from their children, by carrying them into captivity of any description, are inhuman outrages in the lowest conditions of existence, but how much more dreadful do they act upon families in cultivated life? How inexpressible must be their pangs, when with all the more refined feeling inspired by civilization, brutal revilement is the least certain consequence of abduction; the blood of unhappy infants often pouring on before their mothers, who suckled them at their breasts, too soon, perhaps, to be forcibly exposed to the assassin of her husband and her children.

"Such abominations seldom or never occurred in the African Slave Trade, detestable as it was. The plea of necessity was for some time also so plausibly on its side, from the existence of British property in equatorial latitudes, where no other labor could be so readily obtained, that even a British Parliament for a long time continued to sanction it, until the glorious spring-tide of humanity broke in, at last, like a torrent, sweeping away before it whatever interrupted its course. But the slavery of the east, my Lord, never had any thought to cover the ink-dross of its iniquity. The bulk of her slaves were not for labor under suns which Europeans could not endure, but principally for the odious purposes of voluptuousness and lust, and aggravated as they now are, amidst the rage and bitterness of war, are attended with such brutal and unutterable crimes, as, putting aside all Christian [illegible] nor indeed drawn [illegible] relations which details the population of each of the fifty-one provinces, into which Spain was divided by the Cortes in 1821, gives the total amount at eleven millions two hundred forty-eight thousand and twenty six. When the nature of the country is considered, this population, if united, is sufficient to defeat any force, which any force, or combination of powers, can bring against Spain.

FRENCH, AUSTRIAN AND RUSSIAN SOLDIERS.

The French.—French soldiers are quick, and attack with incredible alacrity; return to the charge with unabated impatuosity, and again as quickly retire. During their retreat, they retain the greatest composure, and when they lose ground are not disheartened.

Austrians.—German troops are slow in their attack, indifferent in battle, and slow in their retreat. They leave behind them the most prisoners, because the French make their escape, and the Austrians will suffer themselves to be cut to pieces rather than run from their post.

Russians.—When Russians attack they must either conquer or die. With skilful manœuvres, or able retreats, they are unacquainted They know only to go forward, but never backward. A Russian soldier in his flight is the most helpless animal in the world.

GREECE AND TURKEY.

We have conversed, says the Morning Chronicle, with an intelligent Greek gentleman, now in Edinburgh, who left the Morea in March last. The information we have received from him confirms generally the views we have taken of the condition and prospects of his countrymen. He thinks our estimate of their numbers in European Turkey (two millions and a half,) rather low. But though their numerical force is inconsiderable, compared with that of their enemies, he is sanguine in his hopes of their ultimate success. He builds his confidence chiefly on their enthusiasm, their nautical skill, their superiority to the enemy in activity and intelligence, and the disorganized state of the Turkish Empire. He describes them as pretty well supplied with small arms, but deficient in field artillery—as tolerably disciplined, considering their circumstances, and capable of being rendered excellent regular soldiers. Their great difficulty is the want of money, supplies of which would serve them much more than supplies of men. The Christians of Albania, he affirms, have generally made a common cause with the Greeks, and if the insurrection is maintained some time longer, the Servians will rise in arms. He agrees with us, that the Greeks have little prospect at present of driving the Turks into Asia—but they may dispossess them of Greece Proper; and within ten or fifteen years, when their Government is consolidated, they may have the glory of delivering Europe from these barbarians, who have so long defied the power of Austria and Russia.

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM GREECE.

"Clania in the Peloponnesus, July 26.

"Char Hadje Ali Pashaw, formerly Grand Vizier, after having joined his forces to those of Mahomet Pashaw at Xyla and assumed the command in chief. Penetrated into Argolis, at the head of between 14,000 and 15,000 men. Colocotrone who had arrived at Argos, a day before him, attacked him on the 23d of July, before that city The first ardour of the Turks presented great obstacles, but our soldiers, animated by an invincible courage, repulsed the enemy, who retreated upon Couzopodi (near Argos.)—The retreat produced great disorder, and cost many lives.

"On the following day the enemy continued their retreat with greater order. Our sharp shooters closely pursued them during the whole day. In traversing part of the mountains we stopped only upon dead bodies. The Turks encamped at Carvithi. On the 25th they resumed their retreat at day break Our sharp shooters continued to harass them on the passage of Cami. A corps of Manioles advanced with impetuosity, penetrated the rear guard of the Turks, and committed great carnage. The van guard, instead of supporting the rear, only hastened forward on its march. On their arrival at Trestre (half way between Argos and Corinth) the enemy was forced to flight before the passing the defile. An obstinate battle ensued. More than 150 Turks perished in it; a great many more were killed in the pass; 250 horses and a part of the baggage which fell into our hands were sent to Tripolizza.

"Cortezes, (near Corinth.) Aug. 8.

"The Turks had received, within these few days, a detachment of between five and six thousand men from Patras and Lepanto. Depending upon this reinforcement, they made a show of resuming the offensive, in order to penetrate into Argolis. This was a stratagem easily seen through. In consequence we allowed them a free passage on that side, and our army proceeded to the side of Corinth, which is entirely cut off. The enemy, deceived in his calculations, found it necessary to dispute with us this last pass The battle lasted about two hours. The Turks were repulsed on all sides with great loss.—They regained their position in disorder. On the following day (Aug. 7,) the enemy, who had no other alternative, resolved to force the passage, cost what it might. Char Hadje Ali Pashaw excited his troops to the performance of their duty, and placed himself at the head of his cavalry; but this intrepid Pashaw perished in the first ranks. His troops fought with the courage of despair. At the hottest period of the battle, a confused noise proceeded from the enemy's ranks 'Aman aman!' (Quarter, quarter!) exclaimed they,—allow us to depart—We only wish to leave the Morea. Three thousand Turks remained dead on the spot. The number of the wounded and prisoners is not precisely known.—About two thousand of their horses, and all their baggage and munitions, together with their military chest, was the result of this day. The enemy were pursued to the neighborhood of Corinth.

"P. S. Capt. Vidala, by whose means these two bulletins have been received, says that up to the 10th of August, the day of his departure from Spezzia, more circumstantial details were continually arriving of the successes of the Greeks. Every arrival announced that the Turkish army was in the most desperate position, and news was every moment expected of its complete destruction. He assures us, that on the 12th August, having gone to Argos on business, he had an interview with the Vice President Camara At the moment of their meeting, a Maniote arrived, and laid at their feet the head of Char Hadje Ali Pashaw. It was easily recognized by the two wounds which he had on each side of his face, and his long beard."

Greek National Colors.—The following decree of the Greek Government, established at Corinth, regulates the national colors:—

According to the 97th article of the Constitution which appoints white and blue for the national colors, and according to the 98th article, which relates to the arrangement of these colors in the formation of ensigns and standards, the Executive Council decrees—

1. That the standards of the army shall be square; field blue, divided into four equal quarters by a white cross passing from one end to the other, through the whole length of the flag.

2. There shall be two ensigns, one for ships of war, and one for merchant vessels. The former shall consist of nine horizontal parallelograms, or bands of blue and white alternately. In the upper part towards the shaft, there shall be a blue quarter traversed by a white cross. The latter shall be blue, and in the same upper part there shall be a white quarter traversed by a blue cross.

3. The national cockade shall be round, composed of three parallel circles, of which the inner and outer shall be white, and the middle one blue. Cockades of every other form and color are forbidden.

4. All the officers and servants of the State, civil and military, shall wear the national cockade at their hats.

5. Whoever disobeys any one of these regulations shall be considered as guilty of disobedience to the supreme authority

VOICE FROM ST. HELENA.

"When you arrive in Europe," said Napoleon to Dr. O'Meara, "you will either go yourself, or send to my brother Joseph. You will inform him that I desire he shall give to you the parcel containing the private and confidential letters of the Emperors Alexander and Francis, and the King of Prussia, and the other sovereigns of Europe to me which I delivered to his care at Rochefort. You will publish them to convrir de honte those sovereigns, and manifest to the world the abject homage which those vassals paid to me, when asking favors or supplicating for their thrones. When I was strong and in power, they licked dust from under my feet; now, in my old age, they basely oppress and take my wife and child from me. I recommend you to do this, and if you see any calumnies published of me during the time that you have been with me, and you can say, that I have seen with my own eyes that this is not true, contradict them."

NOTE BY O'MEARA.

On my return to Europe, I used every exertion to obtain the important letters in question. Unfortunately, however, for posterity, my efforts have not been attended with success. Before the Count de Survvillers had left Rochefort for America, apprehensive that he might be seized by the allied powers, he judged it prudent to deposit his precious charge in the hands of a person upon whose integrity he thought he could rely, but who, it has appeared since basely betrayed the Count, as some months ago a person brought the original letters to London for sale, for which he demanded £3,000. This was communicated to some of his Majesty's ministers, and to the foreign ambassadors; and I have been credibly informed that the Russian ambassador paid £10 000 to redeem those belonging to his master.

Bonaparte's opinion respecting the conquest of Turkey.—In the course of a few years Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey, and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flattering which Alexander practised towards me was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, foreseeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population is Greeks, who you may say are Russians The powers it would injure, and who could oppose it, are England, France, Prussia and Austria. Now, as to Austria, it will be very easy for Russia to engage her assistance by giving her Servia, and other Provinces bordering upon the Austrian dominions, reaching near to Constantinople. The only hypothesis that France and England may be allied with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But even this alliance would not avail. France, England and Prussia united cannot prevent it. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it.

LITERATURE.

"THE DESERTED VILLAGE."—The following account of the origin of Goldsmith's beautiful poem is from the London Magazine for February, 1822.

"The Poem of the deserted Village took its origin from the circumstance of General Robert Napper having purchased an extensive tract of the country surrounding Lissoy, or Auburn, in consequence of which many families, here called cottiers, were removed to make room for the intended improvements of what was now become the wide domain, warm with the idea of changing the face of his new acquisition; and were forced "with fainting steps, to go in search of "torrid tracts," and "distant climes"

The fact alone might be sufficient to establish the seat of the poem; but there cannot remain a doubt in any unprejudiced mind, when the following are added; viz. That the character of the village preacher, the above named Henry, (the brother of the poet), is copied from nature. He is described exactly as he lived; and his "modest mansion" as it existed. Burns, or the name of the village master, and the site of his schoolhouse, and Catharine Girachty,, a lonely widow;

The wretched matron, forced, in age, for bread
To strip the brook, with mantling cresses spread;

(and to this day the brook and ditches, near the spot where her cabin stood, abound with cresses) still remain in the memory of the inhabitants. and Catherine's children still remain in the neighborhood. The pool, the busy mill, the house where "nut brown draughts inspir'd, are still visited as the poetic scene, and the "hawthorn bush" growing in an open space in front of the house, which I knew to have three trunks, is now reduced to one; the other two having been cut from time to time, by persons carrying it away to be made into toys, &c. in honour of the bard, and of the celebrity of his poem. All these contribute to the same proof, and the "decent church," which I attended for upwards of eighteen years, and which "tops the neighboring hill, is exactly described as seen from Lissoy, the residence of the preacher.

I should have observed that Elizabeth Delap, who was a parishioner of mine, and died at the age of about ninety, often told me she was the first who put a book into Goldsmith's hand; by which she meant that she taught him his letters; she was allied to him, and taught a little school."

ON AUTUMN.

There is, in the second place, an "even-tide" in the year,—a season, as we now witness, when the sun withdraws his propitious light,—when the winds arise, and the leaves fall, and nature around us seems to sink into decay. It is said, in general, to be the season of melancholy; and if, by this word, be meant that it is the time of solemn and of serious thought, it is undoubtedly the season of melancholy,—yet, it is a melancholy so soothing, so gentle in its approach, and so prophetic in its influence, that they who have known it feel, as instinctively, that it is the doing of God, and that the heart of man is not thus finely touched, but to fine issues.

It is a season, in the first place, which tends to wean us from the passions of the world. Every passion, however base and unworthy, is yet eloquent. It speaks to us of the present enjoyment;—it tells us of what men have done and what men may do, and it supports us every where by the example of many around us. When we go out into the fields in the evening of the year, a different voice approaches us. We regard, even in spite of ourselves, the still but steady advance of time. A few days ago, and the summer of the year was grateful, and every element was filled with life, and the sun of Heaven seemed to glory in his ascendant. He is now enfeebled in his power; the desert no more "blossoms like the rose;" the song of joy is no more heard among the harvesters. This season is strewed with that foliage which once bespoke the magnificence of summer. Whatever may be the passions which society has awakened, we pause amid this apparent desolation of nature. We sit down in the lodge "of the way-faring man in the wilderness," and we feel that all are witness to the emblem of our own fate. Such also, in a few years will be our own condition. The blossoms of our spring—the pride of our summer will also fade into decay;—and the pulse that beats high with virtuous or with vicious desires, will gradually sink, and then must stop for ever. We are from our meditations with hearts softened and subdued, and we return into life as into a shadowy scene, where we have disquieted ourselves in vain." Such is the first impression which the present scene is fitted to make upon us. It is this first impression which illuminates the thoughtless and the gay; and indeed, if there were no other reflections that followed, I know not that it would be the business of wisdom to recommend such meditations. It is the consequences, however, of such previous thoughts, which are chiefly valuable; and among these there are two which may well deserve our consideration.

It is the peculiar character of the melancholy which such seasons excite, that it is general. It is not an individual remonstrance;—it is not the harsh language of human wisdom, which too often insults while it instructs us. When the winds of autumn sigh around us, their voice speaks not to us only, but to our kind; and the lesson they teach is not that we alone decay, but that such also is the fate of all the generations of man. "They are the green leaves of the tree of the desert, which perish, and are renewed." In such a sentiment there is a kind of sublimity mingled with its melancholy;—our tears fall, but they fall not for ourselves;—and, although the train of our thoughts may have begun with the selfishness of our own concerns, we feel that, by the ministry of some mysterious power, they end in awakening our concern for every being that lives. Yet a few years, we think, and all that now bless, or all that now convulse humanity will also have perished. The mightiest pageantry of life,—the loudest notes of triumph or of conquest, will be silent in the grave;—the wicked, wherever active, "will cease from troubling," and the weary, wherever suffering, "will be at rest." Under an impression so profound, we feel our own hearts better. The cares, the animosities, the hatred which society may have engendered, sink unperceived from our bosoms. In the general desolation of nature, we feel the littleness of our own passions;—we look forward to that kindred evening which time must bring to all;—we anticipate the graves of those we hate, as of those we love. Every unkind passion falls, with the leaves around us; and we return slowly to our homes, and to the society which surrounds us, with the wish only to enlighten or to bless them.

If there were no other effects, my brethren, of such appearances of nature upon our minds, they would still be valuable,—they would teach us humility,—and with it they would teach us charity. In the same hour in which they taught us our own frailty, they would teach us commiseration for the whose family of man. But there is a farther sentiment which such scenes inspire, more valuable than all; and we know little of the designs of Providence, when we do not yield ourselves in such hours to the beneficent instincts of our imagination.

It is the unvarying character of nature, amid all its scenes, to lead us at last to its author; and it is for this final end that all its varieties have such dominion upon our minds. We are led by the appearances of spring to see his bounty;—we are led by the splendors of summer to see his greatness. In the present hours, we are led to a higher sentiment; and, what is most remarkable, the very circumstance of a scientific view shows that it is the one most securely to put our trust in him. We are witnessing the decay of the year,—we go back in imagination, and find that such in every generation has been the fate of man;—we look forward, and we see that to such ends all must come at last;—we lift our desponding eyes in search of comfort, and see above us, One, "who is ever the same, and to whose years there is no end." Amid the vicissitudes of nature, we discover that central majesty, "in whom there is no variableness nor "shadow of turning." We feel that there is a God, and, from the tempestuous sea of life, we hail that polar star of nature, to which a sacred instinct had directed our eyes, and which burns with undecaying ray to lighten us among all the darkness of the deep

From this great conviction, there is another sentiment which succeeds. Nature, indeed, yearly perishes; but it is yearly renewed. Amid all its changes, the immortal spirit of him that made it, remains; and the same sun which now marks with his receding ray the autumn of the year, will again arise in his brightness, and bring along with him the promise of the spring and all the magnificence of summer. Under such convictions, hope dawns upon the sadness of the heart. The melancholy of decay becomes the very herald of renewal;—the magnificent circle of nature opens upon our view;—we anticipate the analogous resurrection of our being;—we see beyond the grave a greater spring, and we people it with those who have given joy to that which is passed. With such final impressions, we submit ourselves gladly to the destiny of our being While the sun of mortality sinks, we hail the rising of the Sun of Righteousness, and, in the hours when all the honors of nature are perishing around us, we propitiate ourselves in deeper adoration before him who "sitteth upon its throne."

ANECDOTES.

BUR DODDINGTON was very lethargic.—Falling asleep one day after dinner with Sir Richard Temple and Lord Cobham, the General, the latter reproached Doddington with his drowsiness. Doddington denied having been asleep; and to prove he had not, offered to repeat all Lord Cobham had been saying. Cobham challenged him to do so. Doddington repeated a story; and Lord Cobham owned he had been telling it. "Well," said Doddington, "and yet I did not hear a word of it; but I went to sleep, because I knew that about this time of day you would tell that story."—Lord Orford's Memoirs

A citizen invited some of his neighbors to a feast, his son, handing a glass of wine to a gentleman, accidentally spilt it on his hand, and for it, his father gave him a box on the ear. The son having recovered himself, gave the next man a good box. Being asked the reason he said, "Come, come, let it go round, it will come to my father by and by, for I dare not strike him myself.

Leaping.—"A man after leaping over an enormous elephant, and five camels, placed abreast, thought it necessary to make this excuse. 'There was a time,' said he, in the presence of NADIR SHAH, 'that I could boast of being a great leaper; but now, alas! age has deprived me of my agility.' The classic reader will not fail to call to mind old ENTELLUS in the Æneid, who, after vanquishing DARES, and cleaving with a blow of his fist the scull of the bullock which was the prize of his victory, exclaims, 'Judge, ye Trojans, what was the force of this arm before age had robbed me of my vigor.'"

POETRY.

Our Beltville correspondent assures us of the originality of the very pretty lines inserted at p. 206 of the Register. We have therefore to apologize to him for using the word "if"—It was the line,

"For the trans[illegible] may be,"

that caused us to doubt the originality of the verses alluded to—supposing that we had seen the same Line in a poem of Anacreon Moore's, though we confess our inability to point out the particular work from which it was taken—it is, therefore, very probable we are mistaken, as we cannot doubt either the talent, or the word, of our respectable correspondent.—Ed.

Invit'st repose;

We meet no oft.
And well—or the imperious will,

Beam not with one indulgent ray:
Those lovely dyes,

Why wilt thou cast their sweets away?

Yet who may blame

Hambro Pickle—The following ingredients constitute the famed and excellent pickle; 6 lbs. Salt, 8 oz. brown sugar, and 8 oz. salt petre. Dissolve these by boiling them in 4 gallons of water.

Cure for the Dysentery—As the disorder is now prevailing in many parts of the country, we would direct the attention of our readers to the following simple remedy.

A correspondent states that the medical qualities of pulverized charcoal, are easily developing themselves. In addition to its virtue in bilious disorders, two ounces of the charcoal, boiled in a pint of fresh milk, may be taken in doses of a wine glass full, by adults, every two hours in the most obstinate dysentery, until relief is imparted, which has not failed to be the effect in almost every instance. It is harmless and the experiment may be safely tried. Charcoal made from maple wood is the purest that can be readily obtained.—Baltimore Chronicle.

Fearseed Tea—taken plentifully, is also said to be an excellent palliative, if not an absolute remedy, for the above complaint.

An effectual cure for a Felon—Bathe the part affected in ashes and water; to the yolk of an egg, add 6 drops of spirits of turpentine, a few beet leaves cut fine, a small quantity of hard soap, one tea spoonful of sand or fine tobacco, then add one spoonful of burnt salt, and one of Indian meal, and it never fails to effect a cure if applied in season.

Rural Economy.—An experienced farmer of the Netherlands states, that an ounce of saltpetre dissolved in a pint of water with an ounce of flour of sulphur, and scattered upon grain in a granary, is an infallible means of preventing it from spoiling.

DOMESTIC.

TO the Honorable the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled.

The Memorial of the undersigned Inhabitants of the District of Gore and others—

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

That your Memorialists view with great satisfaction the measures adopted by your Honorable Bodies, with a view to ascertain the practicability of opening a Canal navigation between Lakes Ontario and Erie; making Burlington Bay and Grand River the points of ingress and egress: Your Memorialists being deeply interested in this undertaking, more particularly in opening a passage for vessels from Lake Ontario into Burlington Bay, beg leave to call your attention to the latter object; and respectfully to recommend its immediate execution,—the advantage to the Province to be expected from the undertaking, both in a commercial and in a political point of view, being great; and the money requisite for its completion within the reach of the means possessed by the Province.

The importance of Burlington Heights as a military position is well known; and Burlington Bay affords the safest and most capacious harbour on Lake Ontario—In the present state of the navigation, a vessel bound for the harbours of York or Niagara, if overtaken by a gale, must await the destruction that threatens her, with no other dependance than her cables and anchors: but were the proposed canal effected, she might take shelter in the bay and lie in safety till the tempest had subsided; and in time of war what a security would not the country possess in having a harbour sufficiently capacious to contain all the shipping on the Lake, safe from every gale that could blow, and protected by the impregnable fortress of Burlington Heights.

In a commercial point of view, the advantages are so obvious as to render comment unnecessary. To a country depending upon a distant market for the disposal of its surplus productions, the importance of affording every possible facility to transportation is evident; for whatever is saved in the expence of transport is added to the value of the article transported: and by cheapening the rate of carriage many articles are rendered valuable which otherwise would have remained worthless. Your Memorialists feel most sensibly the frequent complaints made in Lower Canada, regarding the damaged state in which their produce, especially flour, comes to that market. This they find themselves wholly unable to remedy so long as the article is obliged to be unloaded at the beach; then carted across it to the lake shore, where it has to be again put into boats to be taken to the roadstead and shipped on board of the vessels lying there. In these numerous boatings, carings, loadings and unloadings, the cargoes are frequently injured, as well by the waves of the lake, as by rain, and the effects of the sun, to which they thus become unavoidably exposed.

The expence of making a canal through the beach, connecting Lake Ontario and Burlington Bay, on a scale calculated to attain the above important advantages, your Memorialists are informed from good authority, will not exceed ten thousand pounds, and they are told that perhaps it may be effected for a considerably less sum.

Your Memorialists beg leave to observe that even if it were necessary to raise the above sum by way of loan, for want of funds in any other shape, a toll or dues might be levied on the goods passing through the canal, sufficient, even at the present early period, to pay the interest of the sum; whilst a great augmentation may with certainty be looked for in the improvement of the country advances. For the last three years, on an average, 10,000 barrels of flour alone, have been shipped annually from the Outlet of Burlington Bay, besides a very considerable quantity of pork, potash, staves, whiskey, and other articles of produce. The present expence on each barrel of flour from the township of Dundas, to the Outlet aforesaid, is one shilling and three pence, of which, one shilling would be saved if vessels could enter the bay. Although it must remain for the wisdom of your Honorable Bodies to fix what proportion of this it would be proper to levy as a rate, yet your Memorialists do not he itate to say that even if the whole shilling per barrel were levied, much would be gained by the canal navigation, both to the owners of the vessels, and to the shippers of the goods, inasmuch as they would be enabled to load and unload at all times, and in all weathers; and thus there would be not only a great deal of delay and detention avoided, but the vessels and cargoes would be freed from the danger of damage, and indeed of total loss, to which they are now exposed on a lee shore and roadstead without protection.

There are other advantages which must attend the completion of the proposed undertaking your memorialists humbly conceive render it unnecessary for them to enlarge further upon the subject.—The sum required to effect the undertaking is not very great—the toll might nearly, if not wholly, pay the interest at the very first; and, from the advancing state of the country, and the benefits that would accrue to its commerce and agriculture from the undertaking itself, it might with certainty be relied on for the liquidation of the principal at no very distant period. With these advantages on its side, and no disadvantages to detract from them, your memorialists feel persuaded that they shall not have made the appeal to your Honorable Houses in vain.

Your Memorialists are every way disposed to contribute their share, either as members of the District or individually towards the prosecution of the objects proposed; but in a measure in which the general interests of the Province are so intimately blended with theirs, they deem it their duty to make this application, soliciting your Honorable Bodies to make such an appropriation to effect the proposed undertaking, as you in your wisdom may think reasonable and just. And your memorialists as in duty bound,

Will ever pray, &c.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if upon the Importation of any Article charged with Duty by this Act, the said Article shall appear to the Satisfaction of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Customs, or any Officer authorized by them to inspect the same, to be liable to the Payment of Duty under the Authority of any Colonial Law, equal to or exceeding in amount the Duty charged by this Act, then and in such Case the Duty charged upon such Article by this Act shall not be demanded or paid upon the Importation of such Article: Provided also, that if the Duty payable under such Colonial Law shall be less in Amount than the Duty payable by this Act, then and in such case the Difference only between the Amount of the Duty payable by this Act, and the Duty payable under the Authority of such Colonial Laws, shall be deemed to be the Duty payable by this Act; and the same shall be collected and paid in such and the like Manner, and appropriated and applied to such and the like Uses, as the Duties specified in the said Schedule annexed to this Act marked (B) are directed to be collected, paid, appropriated, and applied.

If Duty be less than the Duty payable by this Act, &c.

Tonnage Duties for American Vessels, to be the same as United States impose on British Vessels.

IV. And be it further enacted, That the same Tonnage Duties shall be paid upon all American Vessels or Boats, importing any Goods into either of the said Provinces, as are or may be for the time being payable in the United States of America, on British Vessels or Boats entering the Harbours of the State from whence such Goods shall have been imported.

Value of Goods to be in all Cases in which the Duties imposed by this Act upon the Importation of Articles into the said Provinces, or either of them, are charged, not according to the Weight, Gauge or Measure, but according to the Value thereof, such Value shall be ascertained in the Mode prescribed by an Act passed in this present Session of Parliament, intituled An Act to regulate the Trade between His Majesty's Possessions in America and the West Indies, and other Places in America and the West Indies.

ascertained in the Mode prescribed by 3 G. 4 c. 41.

If Payment of Duties be refused, Collector may seize the Goods and sell the same within 20 Days.

VI. And be it further enacted, That if the Importer or Proprietor of such Articles shall refuse to pay the Duties hereby imposed thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the Collector or other Chief Officer of the Customs where such Articles shall be imported and he is hereby respectively required to take and secure the same, with the Casks or other Package thereof and to cause the same to be publicly sold, within the Space of Twenty Days at the most after such refusal made, and at such Time and place as such Officer shall, by Four or more Days public Notice, appoint for that Purpose which Articles shall be sold to the highest Bidder; and the Money arising from the Sale thereof shall be applied to the Payment of the said Duties, together with the Charges which shall have been occasioned by the said Sale, and the Overplus (if any) shall be paid to such Importer, Proprietor, or any other Person authorized to receive the same.

After Payment of Duty, Overplus to be paid to the Importer.

VII And whereas a certain Act made and passed in the Twenty-eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from His Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies into the Province of Quebec, without Payment of Duty, under certain Conditions and Restrictions, has been repealed during the present Session of Parliament: And whereas Doubts may be entertained whether a certain other Act, passed in the Forty ninth Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from the Island of Bermuda into the Province of Lower Canada, without payment of Duty, on the same Terms and Conditions as such Importation may be made directly from His Majesty's Sugar Colonies in the West Indies, might not still remain in force, notwithstanding the Repeal of the said first mentioned Act; be it therefore enacted and declared, That the last mentioned Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

28 G. 3 c. 39.

49 G. 3 c. 16 allowing the Importation of Rum, repealed.

VIII. And whereas it is expedient to afford Protection to the Trade between the said Colonies and Plantations and the Province of Lower Canada, by imposing the same Duty of 6d. per Gallon on Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of the said Colonies, imported from Great Britain, into Lower Canada from the said Province, as is now payable upon the same Articles when imported from His Majesty's said Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon every Gallon of Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Islands, Colonies, or Plantations in the West Indies, which shall be imported or brought into any Part of the said Province of Lower Canada from Great Britain or Ireland, or any of the British Dominions in Europe, the Sum of Six Pence, over and above all other Duties now or hereafter to be made payable thereon in the said Province.

Additional Duty of 6d. per Gallon on West India Rum imported into Lower Canada from the United Kingdom.

IX. And be it further enacted, That the Rates and Duties chargeable by this Act shall be deemed and are hereby declared to be Sterling Money of Great Britain, and shall be collected, recovered, and paid to the Amount of the Value which such rising thereby nominal Sums bear in Great Britain; and that such Sums may be received and taken according to the Proportion and Value of Five Shillings and Sixpence to the Ounce in Silver; and that the said Duties herein before granted shall be received, levied, collected, paid, and recovered in the same Manner and Form, and by such Rules, Ways, and Means, and under such Penalties and Forfeitures as any other Duties payable to His Majesty upon Goods imported into the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, or into either of them respectively, are or shall be raised, levied, collected, paid, and recovered by any Act or Acts of Parliament, as fully and effectually to all Intents and Purposes, as if the several Clauses, Powers, Directions, Penalties, and Forfeitures relating thereto were particularly repeated and again enacted in the Body of this Act; and that all the Monies which shall arise by the said Duties, (except the necessary Charges of raising, collecting, levying, recovering, answering, paying, and accounting for the same) shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs, into the Hands of His Majesty's Receiver General in the said Provinces respectively, for the Time being, and shall be applied to and for the Use of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, in such Manner only as shall be directed by any Law or Laws which may be made by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and with the Advice and Consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of each of the said Provinces respectively.

Duties to be applied as directed by Acts of the Legislatures of the said Provinces respectively.

Goods the Produce of His Majesty's Dominions may be exported to any Port in the United States; but no Arms or Naval Stores to be exported without a Licence

X. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to export in any British or American Vessel or Vessels, Boat or Boats, Carriage or Carriages, from any Ports or Places of Entry now or hereafter to be established in the said Provinces, to any Port or Place in the United States of America, any Article of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Dominions, or any other Article legally imported into the said Provinces: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit or allow the Exportation of any Arms or Naval Stores, unless a Licence shall have been obtained for that Purpose from His Majesty's Secretary of State; and in case any such Articles shall be shipped or warehoused for the Purpose of being exported contrary to this Act, the same shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized and prosecuted as hereinafter directed.

Not to affect Inland Navigations of the Provinces.

XI. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to interfere with or repeal, as respects the Inland Navigation of the said Provinces, any of the Provisions contained in a certain Act passed in the seventh and Eighth Years of the Reign of King William, intituled An Act for preventing Frauds, and regulating Abuses in the Plantation Trade; except in so far as the same are altered or repealed by this Act.

7 & 8 W 3 c 22.

Recovery and Application of Penalties

XII And be it further enacted, That all Penalties and Forfeitures incurred in either of the said Provinces under this Act (except where it is otherwise provided,) shall and may be sued for and prosecuted in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within such Province respectively; and the same shall and may be recovered, divided, and accounted for in the same Manner and Form, and by the same Rules and Regulations in all respects, as other Penalties and Forfeitures for Offences against the Laws relating to the Customs and Trade of the said Provinces respectively, shall or may by any Acts or Acts of the Legislatures of such Provinces be directed to be sued for, prosecuted, recovered, divided, and accounted for within the same respectively.

Drawback on the Exportation of Rum and Molasses from Newfoundland, to Canada.

XIII. And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from thence into Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits a Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be paid and allowed, upon the Exportation from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, of Rum or other Spirits, being the produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, a Drawback of the full Duties of Customs which may have been paid upon the Importation thereof from any of the Places last aforesaid, into any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, upon a Certificate being produced, under the Hands and Seals of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at Quebec, certifying that the said Rum or other Spirits have been duly landed in Canada.

Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof;

Rum or other Spirits imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed there in the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Report of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claim has not been admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, that they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks. For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator, who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied in Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which Duties shall not have been embraced within the Terms of any provisional Agreement, and to report the particulars of any such claim, with the Evidence thereupon, to the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being; and if it shall appear to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury that any Sum is justly due from the Province of Lower Canada to the Province of Upper Canada on account of such last mentioned claim, they shall signify the same, together with the Amount, to the Governor or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada for the Time being, who shall thereupon issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, to pay such Amount to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, in full Discharge of any such Claims.

Drawback how payable.

Rum to be exported from Newfoundland within One Year after First Importation.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawback between the Provinces, by Arbitrators

XV. And be it further enacted, That the said Drawback shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, with the Consent of the Comptroller there, out of any Monies in his Hands arising from Duties of Customs.

XVI. And be it further enacted That no Drawback shall be paid and allowed as aforesaid, unless the said Rum or other Spirits shall be duly entered for Exportation with the proper Officers of the Customs, and actually shipped on board the Ship or Vessel in which the said Goods are intended to be exported, within the Space of one Year from the Time such Rum or other Spirits were originally imported into the Colony from whence it is intended to export them to Canada, nor unless such Drawback shall be claimed within one Year after the Goods are so shipped for Exportation.

XVII. And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, diverse Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and Power of Arbitrators to send for Persons, Papers, and Records.

XVIII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators shall have Power to send for and examine such Persons, Papers, and Records as they shall judge necessary for their information in the Matters referred to them; and that if any Person or Persons shall refuse or neglect to attend the said Arbitrators, or to produce before them any Papers or Documents, having been duly served in either Province with reasonable Notice in Writing for that Purpose, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the Sum of Fifty Pounds, to be recovered by Bill, Plaint, or Information, in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within the Province in which such Person usually resides, to be applied towards the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province, and to be accounted for to His Majesty, through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the time being, in such Manner and Form as it shall please His Majesty to direct.

Penalty on Persons refusing, &c.

Witnesses to be sworn

XIX. And be it further enacted, That the Witnesses to be produced before the said Arbitrators, if it is desired by either of the said Arbitrators, shall and may be sworn before any of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace within either of the said Provinces, or before any one of the said Arbitrators, who are hereby empowered jointly or severally to administer such Oath;

Penalty for forswearing

and that if any Person shall, in any such Oath so taken as aforesaid, wilfully forswear himself, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Appointing Arbitrators on Vacancies.

XX. And be it further enacted, That in case of the Death, Removal, or Incapacity of either of the said Arbitrators before making an Award, or in case the Third Arbitrator chosen or appointed as aforesaid shall refuse to act, another shall be appointed in his Stead, in the same Manner as such Arbitrator so dead, removed, or become incapable or refusing to act as aforesaid, was originally appointed; and that in case a Third Arbitrator shall be appointed by His Majesty as herein-before mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor-in-Chief in and over the said Provinces, to determine the Amount of Remuneration to be paid to such Arbitrator, which Amount shall be defrayed in equal Proportions by each Province, and shall be paid by Warrants, to be issued for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each Province, upon the Receiver General thereof respectively.

Award of Arbitrators to be final.

XXI. And be it further enacted, That the Award of the Majority of the said Arbitrators, so far as the same shall be authorized by this Act, shall be final;

Award to be certified to the Governor, &c of the Provinces

XXII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators, or a Majority of them as herein-before mentioned, shall certify the Award to be made by them in the Premises, under their Hands and Seals, to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces;

Payment of Sums awarded and that if any Sum be directed by the said Award to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada by the Province or Lower Canada, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada, and he is hereby required to issue His Warrant upon the Receiver General of the Province of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Sum so awarded; which Sum shall be accordingly paid by the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in discharge of such Warrant, and shall be accounted for by him to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, shall be graciously pleased to direct.

Power to Arbitrators to determine Claims advanced by Lower Canada on Upper Canada

XXIII. And be it further enacted, That the Arbitrators to be appointed under this Act shall have Power to hear and determine any claim which may be advanced on the Part of the Province of Lower Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada, being of the same Description as those which by this Act may be preferred to the same Arbitrators on the Part of Upper Canada; and that their Award thereupon shall be final and conclusive, and shall be carried into Effect if the same be made in Favour of the Province of Lower Canada in the same Manner as is herein directed with respect to any Award which may be made in favour of the Province of Upper Canada.

Proportion of Duties arising in Lower Canada shall be since the First Day of July One Thousand eight hundred and nineteen, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the Province of Lower Canada, and also of all Duties which after the passing of this Act, and before the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four, shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to have and receive One-fifth Part as the proportion of Duties arising and due to the said Province of Upper Canada upon such Importations; and that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, shall and may issue his Warrant forthwith upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for such proportion of the Duties as shall have been received in the Province of Lower Canada before the passing of this Act, and shall and may on the First Day of January and the First Day of July, in each and every Year thereafter, issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada in like Manner for the payment to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, of such Sum as may be then ascertained to be due on account of the said proportion, according to the Provisions of this Act.

XXIV. And be it further enacted, That of all Duties which have been levied in the Province of Lower Canada

After July 1. 1824, Division of Duties shall be awarded by Arbitrators hereinbefore mentioned

XXV. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the said First Day of July One Thousand Eight Hundred and Twenty-Four, the Proportion to be paid to Upper Canada for the Four Years next succeeding, of Duties levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under the Authority of any Act or Acts passed or to be passed therein, upon Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported there in by Sea, shall and may be ascertained by the Award of Arbitrators, to be appointed in the same Manner and with the same Powers as hereinbefore provided with respect to the Arbitrators to whom the Question of Arrears is to be referred, and that Arbitrators shall in like Manner be appointed, and an Award made Once after every Four Years, establishing such Proportion from Time to Time; and all and every the Provisions contained in this Act, respecting the Appointment, Powers, and Remuneration of the Arbitrators to be first appointed after the passing thereof, and regarding the Execution of the Duty, shall apply and extend to the Arbitrators to be appointed for the Purposes last herein mentioned.

Award to be made every Four Years.

Proportion hereby established to be paid until a new one is made.

XXVI. And be it further enacted, That after the said First Day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty four, until a new Proportion of Duties, to be paid to Upper Canada, shall be established, as hereinbefore provided, and also at all Times hereafter, in default of any such Proportion being appointed, the Proportion of Duties last assigned to be paid to Upper Canada under the Authority of this Act, shall continue to be paid by the Province of Lower Canada, and Warrants shall issue for the Payment of the same, in the same Manner as for the Period before the same First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four: Provided always that it shall be in the Power of the Arbitrators nevertheless, by their subsequent Award, to alter such Proportion from the Period for which it was last established, if it shall appear to them just so to do.

Proportion of Duties how to be allotted between the Two Provinces.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to establish a Fund towards further defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been contended, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the estimated Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last Provincial Agreement heretofore ratified between the said two Provinces, or which may hereafter be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Order respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respects either of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, extending to the Period for which no such Order had before been made.

14 G. 3. c. 88.

Duties Imposed by Lower Canada to remain in force till repealed or altered by a Legislative Act of that Province.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of every Part of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not levy any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Exercise of an exclusive Controul, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the Thirty first Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America,' and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province, and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, whereby the Province of Upper Canada may be affected, to be valid until laid before Parliament.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other Duties shall or may be imposed on Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada, and whereby the Province of Upper Canada shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law until the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty-first Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrence in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

Seigniory, on Petition of the Owners to His Majesty, may be exchanged for freehold and common Socage.

Lands within the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigniory, and Seigniory can legally be changed: And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigniory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Socage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province as aforesaid in pursuance of His Majesty's Instructions, transmitted through his Principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Socage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Socage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as and for a Commutation for the Fines and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no allotment or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

Boats and other Craft belonging to His Majesty's Subjects may go from Upper Canada into Lower Canada, not laden with Foreign Produce, without being subject to any Duty.

XXX. And whereas it is expedient that the Productions of the Province of Upper Canada should be permitted to be exported without being made subject to Duties or Impositions on their Arrival in that Province, or in passing through the waters thereof: Be it enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, all and every the Boats, Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may now be established for Toll at any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River Saint Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

How Expences of improving the Navigation shall be paid.

Lands held in Fief and XXXI. And whereas Doubts have been entertained whether Tenures of

His Majesty may commute with Persons holding Lands at Cens et Rentes.

XXXII. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to commute with any Person holding Lands at Cens et Rentes in any Censive or Fief of His Majesty within either of the said Provinces, and such Person may obtain a Release from His Majesty of all feudal Rights arising by reason of such Tenure, and receive a Grant from His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in free and common Socage, upon Payment to His Majesty of such Sum of Money as His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may deem to be just and reasonable, by reason of the Release and Grant aforesaid; and all such Sums of Money as shall be paid upon any Commutations made by virtue of this Act shall be applied towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province.

General Issue

XXXIII. And be it further enacted, That if any Person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any thing done or to be done in pursuance of this Act, such Person or Persons may plead the General Issue, and give this Act and the special Matter in Evidence; and if the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, Prosecutor or Prosecutors, shall become nonsuit, or forbear the Prosecution, or discontinue his, her, or their Action, or if a Verdict shall pass against him, her, or them, the Defendants shall have Treble Costs, and shall give the like Remedy for the same as in Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants.

Editorial Commentary.

WE have received the particulars of a Public Meeting, called by the Sheriff of the Newcastle District, held at the Court House in the village of Amherst, in the Township of Hamilton in that District, and which was most respectably attended.—The object of this Meeting was to petition the Imperial Parliament against the proposed union of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. A copy of the resolutions which were moved by Henry Ruttan, Esq. M. P. and seconded by Robert Henry, Esq. together with Mr. Ruttan's speech, and a draft of the Petition, will be published by us, next week—our limits being too much circumscribed in this number to admit them.

As the agricultural interests of this country must be necessarily affected, in some degree, by the state of those in England, we have inserted an important extract from Bell's Messenger of September 15th, on the subject of the late abundant harvest, and its consequences on the general corn market.

Some time ago we took a little pains in drawing up an account of the best mode of cultivating Hemp in Canada, for the benefit of our agricultural friends, and which our readers must have noticed in the 20th No. of our Register We find by a late arrival that the Quebec Mercury has given the merit of that performance, such as it was, to a New York editor. Had we been aware there was a weekly Newspaper with the same title in New York, (which we greatly doubt,) we should, most assuredly, have chosen some other for our work—At all events we can assure Mr THOMAS CAREY that the essay included to, originated here.

All the Royal yachts which composed the Royal Squadron in his voyage to Scotland, are placed in ordinary. His Majesty was delighted with the steam boats which accompanied the Squadron. While one of them was towing the Royal George at the rate of ten knots an hour, the King in his usual familiar manner, said to Commodore Paget — "Charles, never let me go to sea without one of these smokers." All the Lieutenants and Midshipmen of the royal yacht had been promoted a grade.

Editorial Commentary.

WE have received the particulars of a Public Meeting, called by the Sheriff of the Newcastle District, held at the Court House in the village of Amherst, in the Township of Hamilton in that District, and which was most respectably attended.—The object of this Meeting was to petition the Imperial Parliament against the proposed union of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. A copy of the resolutions which were moved by Henry Ruttan, Esq. M. P. and seconded by Robert Henry, Esq. together with Mr. Ruttan's speech, and a draft of the Petition, will be published by us, next week—our limits being too much circumscribed in this number to admit them.

As the agricultural interests of this country must be necessarily affected, in some degree, by the state of those in England, we have inserted an important extract from Bell's Messenger of September 15th, on the subject of the late abundant harvest, and its consequences on the general corn market.

Some time ago we took a little pains in drawing up an account of the best mode of cultivating Hemp in Canada, for the benefit of our agricultural friends, and which our readers must have noticed in the 20th No. of our Register We find by a late arrival that the Quebec Mercury has given the merit of that performance, such as it was, to a New York editor. Had we been aware there was a weekly Newspaper with the same title in New York, (which we greatly doubt,) we should, most assuredly, have chosen some other for our work—At all events we can assure Mr THOMAS CAREY that the essay included to, originated here.

All the Royal yachts which composed the Royal Squadron in his voyage to Scotland, are placed in ordinary. His Majesty was delighted with the steam boats which accompanied the Squadron. While one of them was towing the Royal George at the rate of ten knots an hour, the King in his usual familiar manner, said to Commodore Paget — "Charles, never let me go to sea without one of these smokers." All the Lieutenants and Midshipmen of the royal yacht had been promoted a grade.

A new Velocipede.—A man upon a new sort of velocipede attracted a number of people together at the Elephant and Castle, London, on Thursday, to witness the activity and swiftness with which he travels. He is a shoemaker by trade, and finding the trade bad at Newark-on-Trent, in Nottinghamshire, of which he it a native, he built this Mechanical horse, as he terms it. It is on a different plan from the others, it is worked by two handles, which set two wheels in motion, and causes two levers in front to be put in motion, which set the machine going at the rate of at least 6 miles an hour. It is the compietest machine of the kind that has as yet been invented. He has travelled in fine weather sixty miles a day. He has two iron stirrups in which he places his feet—they keep him steady on the saddle.

The London Morning Post of the 23d September, contains information from Zante & Semlin, of the decided success of the Greeks over the Turks in the Morea, and repeats the statement which has already been given in our columns, that Chourschid Pacha, and Omer Briene had both been defeated, and that the former had retreated to Larissa.

We understand that Mr. Alexander Hume, surgeon, R. N. has lately presented to the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of this city, a fine specimen of the head of a young New Zealand Chief, beautifully tatooed, and embalmed in a manner unknown to the civilized nations of modern times, but which commands the admiration of all adequate judges Mr. Hume has promised to communicate to the College an account of the mode in which the process is conducted.—*Edin. THE LATE HARVEST.

From Bell's Weekly Messenger, Sept. 16.

We have very sedulously applied ourselves to the labor of collecting and comparing the accounts of the harvests through the principal counties in England, in order that we may thence understand the probable condition of the farmers and landlords, and the actual difficulties to be encouraged by Ministers at the next Session of Parliament. To return, however, to our more immediate subjects:—Upon the best enquiries we have been enabled to make, it appears to us that the harvest has been exceedingly productive, both as respects quantity and quality. It is a known maxim amongst farmers, that an early harvest is always a good harvest; and that scarcely twice in a century does our wheat suffer from a dry season. We understand from the most competent judges, that the produce of the present harvest, added to the stock on hand from the last, is so abundant, as to excite a general alarm amongst the farmers, lest the price of wheat should fall to four shillings, generally, by Christmas. Perhaps it is not too much to say, that we have now on hand a stock sufficient for two years at least, and that the supplies must, in consequence, be stored against the possible sickness of a future year, now remote.

In the four corn counties, Essex, Kent, Suffolk and Norfolk, the harvest is concluded, and the farmers are already bringing the new crop partially to market. During the gathering, the weather in general has been extremely favorable, and every kind of grain has been secured in the best possible condition It is impossible to describe in too favorable terms the new wheat crop. In quantity it is most abundant, and in quality it is equal to any, and superior to many of the antecedent seven years' productions. The average weight will not be under 60 lbs.; indeed it will be more generally 61 lbs. a bushel; and in this respect alone, it will be superior to the growth of last year, by at least 15 per cent. The season has not made one bad field of wheat where a good one ought to have been produced, and it will be difficult to find a quantity of interior quality. The first sales in the Norwich market have 34s. to 40s. a quarter, but as yet the farmers have not had time to make extensive deliveries. So soon as the samples are brought freely forward for sale, a decline must inevitably take place; for until its value finds a proper level with the other European corn states no vent for the super-production can be opened. The letters from Leghorn (28th August) quote the Italian prices at from 20s. to 30s. per quarter. As the winter approaches, however, the prices in the south of Europe may be expected to advance, and a farther moderate decline in England will, in that case, encourage exportation. the proceeds of which will be real wealth procured for the agriculturalists.

SPAIN.

The accounts from Spain are favorable to the constitutional cause, and the ministers had proved their firmness by the execution of Gen. Elio, who, the Spanish papers say, was a doubly convicted traitor, one of the principal instigators of all the insurrections that have disturbed that country.

Gen Elio was executed on the morning of the 4th ult. by the garotte (strangled). He was tried by a court martial, the 2d of June, and condemned to the most ignominious death. He was strangled on a scaffold at Valencia, erected close to a delightful garden he owned when all powerful in that town, that his tragical end might be marked by a circumstance calculated to make him regret life.

The Journal des Debats remarks, that when his sentence was notified to him, he received it on his knees embraced the reporter, and several other persons, and begged that they would pardon him if he had offended them during his life. Never did a man appear more humble and resigned. The pride of his character had entirely disappeared.—During the night it was necessary, repeatedly, to remove the national guards who stood sentinels at the door of the chapel. He drew tears from all, and those who were most violent against him, could not refrain from showing sympathy. No complaint against his judges was heard from him. His separation from his numerous family was what afflicted him most—most of his children are very young. The death of Elio has been celebrated by some violent persons; but had the people of Valencia been consulted, he would have been still alive.

ANECDOTES.

One of the sharpest things said about the colossal statue in the Park, of which we have heard, was said the other day by that witty rogue Sam Rogers, to Wilberforce. The latter was exclaiming against the indecency of the figure, and said that it was not borne out by history. "There was no necessity for his being naked, Sir," said the Saint to the Poet; "and it is very hard he should stand thus uncovered." "And very improbable too Sir," replied Rogers, "that a man who was so famous for making breaches in Troy, should not have kept a pair for himself." Wilberforce could not stand this irresistible burst of humor, aided by the vivacity of Rogers's manner and countenance, and actually burst into a fit of laughter.—Glasgow Courier, Sept. 5.

An exquisite of the first water, at Brighton, was last week applied to, by an urchin on the Steyne, to read for him the inscription on the collar of a stray dog which he had found, in order that he might get something by restoring it to its owner. More good natured than many of his class, he complied, and read (tolerably well considering) the following lines,—

Steal me not! myself and collar
Both are barely worth a dollar;
Puppies should be friends with each other:
See me home, then, dearest brother!

He put down the dog, and departed in high dudgeon.

POETRY.

VERSES, BY BURNS,

NOT INCLUDED IN ANY EDITION OF HIS WORKS.

Written at the time when about to leave Scotland.

O'er the mist shrouded cliffs of the lone mountain straying,
Where the wild winds of winter incessantly rave,
What woes wring my heart while intently surveying,
The storm's gloomy path on the breast of the wave.

Ye foam crested billows allow me to wail,
Ere ye toss me afar from my lov'd native shore;
Where the flower that bloom'd sweetest in Colla's green vale,
The pride of my bosom, my MARY's no more.

No more by the banks of the streamlet we'll wander,
And smile at the moon's rimpled face in the wave;
No more shall my arms cling with fondness around her,
For the dew drops of morning fall cold on her grave.

No more shall the soft thrill of love warm my breast,
I haste with the storm to a far distant shore;
Where unknown, unlamented, my ashes shall rest,
And joy shall revisit my bosom no more.

Death.

At Hamilton in the District of Newcastle, on Saturday morning the 16th inst. Mr. JOHN SOWDEN, late of Leeds, in England, aged 58 years —He was interred in the Church yard of Port Hope, on the following Monday,—and his funeral was attended by all the respectable inhabitants of the neighborhood.

Mr. SOWDEN was an honest Englishman. To say more of him would be superfluous—since that title comprehends nearly all that is excellent in man!

On this occasion the Rev. W. MACAULAY, of Cobourg, preached the first sermon that has been delivered in the unfinished Church of that interesting village.—His text was taken from St John, c. 5. v. 28 & 29—and our correspondent assures us, it is impossible to do justice to the extraordinary merit of the discourse:—it was finished, powerful, and impressive!

Upper-Canada Almanac,

AS it is the intention of the Editors of the "Weekly Register," to publish an Almanac for the year 1823 on an improved plan, with many additions; and, to compleat it as soon as possible, they are anxious to ascertain the number of copies it may be necessary to print, as it would be attended with loss to strike off many more than were actually wanted.—They take this opportunity, therefore, of requesting that all those who may wish to patronize the undertaking, will take the trouble of sending their names and address, either to the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or to some of the undermentioned Gentlemen, as may be most convenient

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country;—and, also, much information that may be useful to strangers.—The work will be neatly stitched in a cover, of a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar.

Any hints or communications for this Work will be thankfully received by the Agents for this Newspaper

Editorial Commentary.

How long—for we have numerous and lengthy would be the discussions, and how frequently the same arguments would be repeated, on the Union of the Provinces, when it came to be generally canvassed; and, knowing that we could not pretend to insert one half of the communications we should receive, from all quarters, without a manifest injustice to our country subscribers, who look for general information, and have a dislike to be so long confined to the consideration of one subject; we determined at an early period to admit no other notices of public meetings, in agitation of this question, than such as were very particularly requested by our friends to have a place in the Register. It has been in the fear of excluding other matter, and more interesting to general readers, that we have omitted the insertion of several able speeches, and the accounts of many well conducted public meetings in various parts of the Province. Amongst the Resolutions which have more particularly excited our approbation we must, however, name those that were adopted in a Meeting held at Brockville, whereat L. P. Sherwood, Esq. Speaker of the House of Assembly, presided. We cannot help expressing our unequivocal approbation of those resolutions, and our neighbors of the Lower Province can scarcely fail to produce a powerful effect in the British Parliament, for they are plain, sound, manly, constitutional and patriotic! We are sorry we cannot give them a place in this week's paper. As some exceptions are made to the justly objectionable clauses of the printed Bill (as amended by a Committee of the Commons) by those Gentlemen who attended the Meeting at Brockville, and as some hints are also thrown out by them as to what should be adopted in a renewal of the measure, we are rather surprised at their overlooking the necessity of two Executives, which are absolutely necessary in a country of such extent, and so circumstanced, as Canada now is. Grant us two Executives, one for each Province, and be strictly observant of these Brockville Resolutions, and we will subscribe heart and hand to an immediate Union of the Provinces: more we cannot now stay to write on this head.

In the midst of those party contentions which at present agitate both Provinces, we must take the liberty of calling the attention of the inhabitants generally, to a matter of the very highest importance, and in which all are greatly concerned. Let them take care that they are not, even now, in the situation of the two dogs, who, whilst contending for a choice morsel, suffered a strange dog to run away with the prize. To propound, as the clown would say, we will observe, that it is but a short time since some great and extraordinary commercial privileges, such as were never before granted to us; and, many restrictive measures adopted in our favour, by the Mother Country, and where do we behold any activity on our side, to take advantage of these uncommon privileges?

The TRADE ACT, which exacts a duty on American produce, holds out great, nay every encouragement to this Province; but, unless our merchants and farmers take care to keep the markets of Montreal and Quebec well supplied, in order that they in their turn, may supply their own lower Ports Newfoundland, Halifax, and the West Indies; it is most probable we shall lose all these advantages, so long desired, and which are now possessed:—for those markets must be supplied from some quarter or other; and, those Petitions which have gone home for the admission of our Wheat into British ports will appear perfectly farcical, and very justly so, when it is found that we are unable to supply our own natural markets, so much nearer home. There are many who doubt our capacity in this respect; and we are really afraid that the test to which we are now put, and which we have so long and so ardently desired, will find us wanting!

The British Government have shewn great wisdom in pointing out to us what are our natural markets, and great liberality in the provisions made to enable us to derive all the advantages they offer; but, if we cannot supply them, what will be the consequence? even this, the flood gates of American competition will be opened, and our interests borne down in the overwhelming flood, and it will be in vain for us to renew our Petitions and our Prayers, for Ministers would be justified in saying "trouble us no more; have we not tried you? have we not given you every chance? granted you every privilege, that could be desired? & what have we discovered? why, even this, a total incapacity to achieve the thing you desire!"

It has been the fashion to lay all the blame on the farmers and millers—We know something of the manner in which business is carried on in the country, and we are of opinion the censure lies more strongly on the Merchants; for, it is from them the farmer receives his stimulus.—From the present mode of transacting business, indeed, the farmers are under the control of the merchants to a wonderful degree.—How can it be expected the farmer will raise any particular kind of crop at a loss, or to be a drag on his hands, and to receive a shake of the head, instead of a smile, and friendly shake of the hand, when he goes to his merchant, to whom as is indebted for all his supplies? Let the merchants be liberal to the farmers, and we doubt not they will be glad to exert themselves, they only want a stimulus, and that stimulus must come from the merchants, who must look for their reward in the advantages now held out to them in distant markets. But we are sorry to observe a sort of horrible, universal, death like, apathy amongst the people, generally, of this country.—To us this epidemical complaint has long been a subject of painful contemplation. We can say so without the aid of glittering degree of affectation, for we have a strong feeling of patriotism, we trust of true patriotism, towards our adopted country, and we desire upon all occasions, where an opportunity seems to offer, to call the attention of our fellow subjects to such things as concern their welfare and prosperity.—When a ship is in a storm, or likely to become becalmed, it is equally incumbent on all hands board, to turn to, and do what they can to secure the safety of the vessel, and help her on the voyage:—it is hard for a few, only, to work, whilst the rest are looking on in stupid amazement, or criminal despondency.

It will be seen by an article in our Selections that the Autocrat of Russia sticks to the same system he adopted at a former Congress in Vienna, when his brother CONSTANTINE was posted off with an army to seize the object in discussion (Poland:) what he intends to seize now, and appropriate to himself, we know not; but he takes care to have so army in readiness, as near as possible to the seat of Congress. This conduct appears to us a good deal like that of the profligate youth who carried a brace of loaded pistols with him, when he went to demand a loan from his father, with a view of terrifying into a compliance that might have been otherwise refused. The DUKE OF WELLINGTON, however, has faced too many armies to change countenance at this! He, we doubt not, will know how to do his duty; and it is fortunate for England, that, like MARLBOROUGH, he is equally eminent in the Cabinet, as in the Field.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

The King.—A Correspondent informs us that during the last week his Majesty has been visited by a series of nervous affection, attended by an unusual depression of spirits. The conflicting discussions which have recently been agitated, and the concessions, consequent on these discussions, may in part account for this indisposition. Now that these state affairs are for the present arranged, his Majesty will probably adjourn either to his cottage at Windsor, or to the Pavillion at Brighton, in order to renovate his health, and withdraw himself for a time from those toilsome and agitating state matters, and enjoy the society of his chosen friends.

The Hampshire Telegraph says—"The Duke of Manchester is expected to sail on the 25th inst. in the Active frigate, for Jamaica. We understand his Excellency is anxious to reach the seat of his Government previous to the meeting of the House of Assembly, as he has to propose (on the suggestion of Government) that the troops employed for the defence and preservation of the Island shall be in future paid out of its revenues, and not by the Government. If this reasonable proposition could be carried into effect in all our colonies, the country would be relieved from a heavy burden at the present moment. Mr. Hume (we recollect) has promised to submit it to Parliament early in the next session."

The corps of the Russian army commanded by Count Woronzow, remained close to the Austrian frontiers, to await the result of the Congress of the Great Pacificators.

The Dublin Evening Post states, on authority to which it attaches the fullest credit, that several noblemen and gentlemen of high rank and property in Ireland, had come forward with an offer to government to fill gratuitously certain public offices to which large salaries were attached. The Duke of Leinster, Marquis of Downshire, Earls of Charlemont, Meath, Lifford, Mount Cashel, Carrick, Belmore, Lords Clonearry and Lismore, Mr. Gratton, and others, had, it is said, already joined in patriot offer.

A Danish paper, remarking on the depreciation of landed property, mentions the sale of a fine estate for 29,000 rix dollars, on which there was a mortgage of 100,000 dollars.

Capt Wassiclaw had returned to St. Petersburgh from a voyage of discovery. He had reached a higher latitude than Cook, and discovered a groupe of inhabited islands.

A private gambling house was lately broken up in London and all present captured by surprize and marched off for Bridewell and the Tread Mill. Several fashionably dressed were in the room at the time the police officers made their entry, and a most splendid supper was prepared: all the rouge et noir tables were seized and forfeited to the Crown. If there be any such gambling houses in this city, we hope they may speedily meet with similar treatment.

The will of one of Lord Cochrane's officers, it is said in bottle had been proved. He carried it in his bosom, and had been pierced in two places by the sword which slew him, and was marked with his blood.

An Irish Journey up the Country.—What a blessed possession is that high mettled spirit, which, even of spirit which enables a man to ride above the billows of this "sea of troubles," and turn their enmity aside with an easy good humored joke. An Irish soldier, who had seen long service in the East Indies without touching terra firma, was unluckily snapped up in the "Chops of the Channel," on his return home and sailed for another long cruise off Ferrol. During a gale of wind the vessel was run ashore "high and dry," and Pat, being an active fellow, was sent forward on the bowsprit to clear away. As soon as he had reached the end of it, he called out to a fellow countryman—"Arrah, Bonny, come here and smell the primroses: by Jasus, I haven't been so far up the country this seven years."

Sad News for the Poor.—By the late returns it appears that in England there are 294,068 females more than males—in Wales, 16,464—in Scotland, 125,352—making a total in Great Britain of 434,934—almost half a million ladies sair, doomed by the unlucky course of nature to single blessedness—which is rendered worse by the waste occasioned by at least 150,000 inflexible bachelors. How it is in Ireland, we have no means of ascertaining; but we hope affairs are more prosperous.

At a "fancy ball" at Liverpool, the Earl of Wilton wore the splendid dress of a Greek Prince, worth seven thousand pounds sterling.

The White Fast.—The London papers give some interesting particulars of this event. The congregation assembled at the grand synagogue consisted of about 3000, who conducted themselves with great devotion towards their Creator, and with due respect to the High priest. Dr. Herschell, who, at several periods, was absorbed in tears with his eyes towards heaven, imploring mercy. On this occasion a collection was made for the needy, and it is added, that charity never shone in a more brilliant light. Among the great donors, Rothchild the Goldsmids, D. Ellison, A. Joseph, and S. M. Samuel are mentioned.

Literary Novelty.—There has just been issued from the Glasgow press a Prospectus and Specimen of a History of Hannibal the Great, the enemy of Rome, with some particulars of the Phœnician and Carthagenian History—in which there appear some links of connection of Ancient and Modern History by analogy. We understand a Parisian printer has been calling on the author, Mr. Molleson of Glasgow, to urge him forward with the work, leaving an order for it, for the purpose of translating it into the French language.—Glasgow Courier, Sept 10

An article from Ancona states, that the Greek fleet of 90 sail, and the Ottoman fleet, were near each other; and that the Greeks were to have the aid of some American fireships. [The French editor remarks that it was probable an American officer attached to the cause of the Greeks, having charge of their naval affairs, had merely constructed the fire-ships.]

The Courier remarks on the new Secretary, that he is "one of the most honorable men that ever devoted the energies of a great genius to the ill rewarded toils of British Statesmanship."

LORD ERSKINE'S LETTER ON THE GREEKS.

"I now return, my Lord, to the main subject of my address—the liberation of the Greeks—I have already assumed, as matter of fact unquestionable, that they cannot be brought back to the condition of subjects, nor to any pacific relations whatsoever with the Porte, under any possible arrangements which force or convention could introduce; and therein arises the only peculiarity of the case—this at utmost I will not call it.

"Assistance and protection cannot be given to the Greeks in the same manner as if they were distant provinces contending for independency, which might be even beneficially successful in and to the parent state (if Turkey ought to be so described), and without affecting her main possessions: but the contention here is for the soil which both of them inhabit, and therefore one of them must be dispossessed of territory to some extent or other, because they cannot remain together, except in a state of such murderous, interminable hostility as ought to be considered a public nuisance to mankind.—On which side then, my Lord, does justice lie, when, after the possession of ancient Greece by such means, it has been so shockingly abused as not to be protected by any principles or precedents which public law has ever adopted or can righteously adopt?

"The freehold of the Greeks, if I may so describe the possessions of that ancient nation, comprehended Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, Epirus, Achaia, Peloponesus, and Negropont, &c. &c. with some of the islands in the archipelago, the Ionian Islands amongst the number, they being sometimes called Ionians on that account. They were masters of the celebrated cities, with their districts, of Athens, Sparta, Thebes, Corinth, and Mycenæ, &c. and were a most refined and celebrated people. Classical learning, so justly encouraged in all countries as indispensable, derives its principal sources from their sublime superiority in poetry and eloquence, which, in the lapse of so many ages, have found no competition; and even at this hour to inspire those who are to live after us, with the most exalted sentiments, with contempt of danger, and the sacred love of their country, we make them stoop at their desks, in their earliest years, over the histories of their illustrious forefathers, in periods when the nobles of our own were in the woods. The claim, therefore, of the Greeks, with the aid of all Christendom, to a free and undisturbed territory, commensurate at least with their present population, is the clearest in human annals, whilst the dominion of the Turks, who overpower and oppress them, is the most audacious usurpation—they began, extended, and completed their ravages under the mask of imposture, impiously pretending a commission from heaven for the desolation of the earth.

"All that I ask of the British Government, through your Lordship, is an instant, faithful and strenuous exertion, to engage our allies in this great cause of humanity and justice, without giving rise (as I assert it could not) to any probable or rather positive contest which could deserve the name of war.

"It cannot be questioned, that by thus taking the lead for the deliverance of the Greeks, we should lay the foundation of an endless gratitude, be advantaged by their returning power and commerce, while we were snatching from the desert the most fertile provinces, and redeeming from abject slavery, and contagious pestilence, the noblest people of the ancient world.

"But it is objected that the Greeks are not less savagely cruel than the Turks. I WILL NOT HEAR SUCH A CHARGE.—The gentlest animals which Providence has subjected to us, patient of labor, and licking the benevolent hand that feeds them, when maddened with terror and goaded by barbarous oppression, will change on a sudden all the characteristics of their original nature, and overthrow every thing in their course. To judge of what the Greeks, under good government, are capable of being, we have only to look back to what they have been. Their pedigrees, in which we can trace so many great men, who never should have died, ought to protect them from the Saracens, who cannot show in all their escutcheons, a single man who should have lived.

"Well, then, may we exclaim to such miscreants, in the language of Milton—

> "'Lift not thy spear against the Muses bower,—
> The great Œmathian conqueror bid spare
> The house of Pæonius, when temple and tower
> Went to the ground.'

LORD ERSKINE AND THE GREEKS.

To the Editor of the Courier.

SEPT. 4, 1822.

Sir—Having perused with much attention, the letter addressed by Lord Erskine to the earl of Liverpool, I find it difficult to suppress my sentiments upon it, and if you see nothing obnoxious in my observations, I shall feel obliged by your honouring this with a place in your paper.

Admitting, as I do, the humane principles which actuate Lord Erskine, I believe in common with every other British subject, the only question is, whether the interference which his Lordship recommends to the Prime Minister of this country may not be attended with consequences yet more repugnant to the feelings of humanity, and also to the mild principles of the Christian Religion. It is, I believe, not here recommended by the reverend Author of the Christian faith to enforce His creed by the force of arms; and I think it must be evident to every person at all conversant with the actual political state of the world, that remonstrances will have little avail with the Turks, whose system of religion not only sanctions, but demands, the assistance of arms to propagate and maintain it. And the steady, unrelenting, and energetic manner in which they have, do, and will, endeavor to suppress the rebellion (as they call it) of the Greeks, will never be palliated, or given up, by any remonstrance of a foreign power.—This fact, I believe, cannot be denied. What then must follow a remonstrance from our's, or any other Government? The remonstrance must be such as might be expected to make some impression, or it would be absurd to present one; and if manifested to, it would be ridiculous not to follow up the alternative which, to give any importance to such remonstrance must have at least been imputed. If it be true that our country requires a little longer peace, to recover its due state of prosperity, would it be prudent in Lord Liverpool to depart from his cautious system and risk a general war throughout the world—for such would inevitably be the result—and what would then become of the humane feelings which seem to Lord Erskine's mind to require our immediate interference to suppress the cruelties practised by the Turks upon the insurgent Greeks? How many millions of lives would be sacrificed ere a general peace could again be restored? I mean neither to justify, nor palliate, cruelties of any kind, or used in any manner, and I trust I have as much of the milk of human kindness as the author of the letter, whose principles I respect, and whose luminous exposition of the unhappy state of the Greeks I admire. But how to effect the object, however desirable it may be in a moral point of view, is the question; and whether an interference on our part, such as it must be, if intended to be effective, would not produce consequences of more general and extensive evil, than leaving them to settle the matter between themselves.

I will, with your permission, in another letter endeavor to develope some of the immediate results. In the mean time, I am, &c.

Anecdotes of the late Marquis of Londonderry.

A ship from Sierra Leone, on the coast of Guinea, bound to Liverpool, was driven on shore near Guns Isle Bay, and wrecked.—Amongst four men saved, was a poor negro. His three companions proceeded home, having taken all the money that had been subscribed for the relief of the four with them, leaving the unhappy negro pennyless in a strange land, with the language and people of which he was unacquainted. His Lordship had him taken care of and lodged in the village, and placed under the instruction of Matthew Wilson, the Manx schoolmaster before mentioned, who then conducted a flourishing school. In a few weeks Matthew reported so favorably of his sable pupil, that he was sent for to Mount Stewart, where his Lordship was highly delighted with his progress in speaking and reading —Sambo was about eighteen years old, & uncommonly acute; his memory was astonishing; but he never could be reconciled to remain in Ireland. He said, and no doubt spoke the truth, that he embarked in the ship with an express engagement to return with her to his native land; that the captain knew him to be a great person in his own country. The captain was dead, and contradictory knowledge could not be obtained from the grave Suffice it, that every attention was paid to his moral and religious instruction, and at the end of two years, his Lordship fitted him out liberally with every thing likely to be serviceable to him in Africa, and the different societies furnished him with an assortment of books of various kinds. Strange as it may read, it is strictly true, Sambo had captivated the heart of a female about his own age, a very good looking and industrious girl, who in early life had lost her parents, and lived under the protection of the Mount Stewart family. She declared her determination to go to Africa with him; he returned her affection with ardor; and his Lordship saw them married. As the woman was of a serious turn of mind, and an excellent mind at country work, his Lordship was not sorry that she accompanied him; she might prevent him from relapsing into the idolatries of his own people; and by her abilities, instruct the natives not only in religious and moral principles, but also the useful arts as far as she knew them. His Lordship gave her every thing for her use on the voyage, and after they had landed; recommended them both to the agents of the African company, on every part of the coast, and procured them a passage in a King's ship. Our readers will not be displeased, if we pursue the history of this interesting couple beyond the precincts of Europe, and see how far the benevolent hopes of his Lordship's liberal mind have been realized. They arrived in safety at the settlement of Goree, and proceeded up the river in a sailing boat, presented to Sambo by the council, which conveniently held all his goods, besides much more which the gentlemen of the factory presented him with. The tribe to which he belonged, were settled about two hundred miles upon the banks of the river, and whether Sambo had, or had not been a prince, he was elected chief of his tribe immediately, and commenced a trade in furs, ivory and gold dust, with the company's agents. Sambo, now called Daniel by the English, visits the coast annually to receive exchanges for his subjects of European wares; he then dresses in a scarlet uniform, gold epaulettes, cocked hat, and a huge gold-headed cane. He has been very serviceable to the British interests, and his son is as well inclined to be so as his father. The mother has never visited any of the settlements since her first arrival but busies herself in rearing a numerous family. Captain Carr, of the Trader John, visited Daniel in the year 1817; of whom he says—"I found the tribe to consist of six or seven hundred families, settled in a charming country; several of the huts were thatched, and had window holes and chimneys.—Daniel had a house, with six rooms on the ground floor, two of which had glass windows, and looked like a decent English kitchen. Both he and his wife were naked, except a piece of cloth round the middle; but they dressed very handsomely in the European clothes. Daniel's children and several others could read and write; but as to religion, I have every reason to believe that not only Daniel, but his wife, follow that of the natives. As I am not compiling the history of Prince Daniel, I shall content myself with this extract. I have several sheets of an interesting account of this man, delivered to me by Captain Carr. His Lordship's hopes have not entirely failed, and where a taste for industry and the comforts of social life once begin, religion will soon follow."

FRANCE.

PARIS, Sept. 22.

At 5 o'clock yesterday morning, Bories, Pomier, Goubin, and Raoulx were removed from Bicetre, and conveyed to the Conciergerie. The Abbe Montes hastened to communicate to them the consolations of religion. About 9 o'clock they asked to make some declarations. M. Montmorque, president of the court of assize, proceeded and visited them, attended by a clerk, during two suspended sessions, which took place in the Audience of the Court. The execution took place at a quarter past five. Each of the prisoners was assisted by a minister of religion, whose counsels they appeared to listen to with piety. At the foot of the scaffold all the four kissed the crucifix.

Numerous troops were stationed on the bridges and on the quays, from the palace of Justice to the Place de Greve. At a few minutes past five the four condemned prisoners left the Conciergerie — They were placed on two carriages. Each had a Clergyman with him —The courage and firmness which they had shown during the trial did not abandon them for a moment. With countenances calm and resigned, they traversed the silent multitude ranged along the way through which they passed — They saluted the persons who recognized, and who made farewell signals to them. On arriving at the place of execution, they displayed the same coolness; and to each of them may be applied the expression of M. de Chateaubriand—"He died with the firmness of a soldier and the gentleness of a youth." At half past five they had ceased to live.

Moreau.—The family of General Moreau are about to raise in the cemetery of Bordeaux a vault, where are to be deposited the mortal remains of his lady, who died in that town, and the heart of the General, which had been brought into France — This monument, covered with garlands of ivy and cypress, will be one of the finest ornaments of that town.

Freedom of the Press.

The Court of Assize at Bordeaux has sentenced a Bookseller of that town, to one year's imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs, for selling a Life of Buonaparte, in one part of which was an extract from a journal called the Independent, which was published during the hundred days

Rouen Cathedral recently destroyed by Fire.

The following historical particulars respecting Rouen Cathedral, cannot prove unacceptable to our readers:—It was founded in 1060 by Robert, Archbishop of Rouen, brother of Richard Second, Duke of Normandy, but was not finished till the year 1052. It was 410 feet in length, 83 in breadth, the length of the cross aisles was 164 feet, and the height of the spire 395 feet. There were seven entrances to it, and 130 windows. It was one of the most costly and magnificent Gothic structures ever seen; it was literally frosted with ornaments; there was not the smallest piece of stone, not the back of a niche, nor the base of a figure, but was covered with the finest Gothic work. In it were interred the bodies of John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; Henry, brother of Richard I; and the heart of Richard Cœur de Lion, together with many other illustrious men.

United States,

Horrible Blasphemy and Cursing!

It is now a great many months, we forget how many, since we read in some American paper, as how one Wm. Hogan, Pastor of St. Mary's Church, in Philadelphia, was guilty of a heinous offence; what it was we have forgotten. But it will be long before we forget the shocking, soul revolting, blasphemous, demoniacal production, in the shape of an Excommunication, to which it gave rise, and which we this day present to our readers, (though with a reluctance our sense of duty has had some difficulty in overcoming) from a paper entitled the Philadelphia Independent Balance.

Oh, may we and our friends be interdicted, now and forever, from all communion and fellowship with such a belief as could authorize, even the imagination of so infernal an anathema! Is this a fruit of the religion of Him who said to the unhappy creature that was taken in adultery, "Woman where are those thine accusers?" Is this a specimen of the kind of forgiveness we are to show towards a fallen brother? Alas, what then is to be measured out to us by the Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, in that great and terrible day when the shout of the archangel, and the last trumpet shall call the assembled millions of ages to their final reckoning. But thanks be to Him that "sitteth upon the Throne," this is the language of Anti Christ; we cannot hesitate in saying, the spirit that is here breathed forth, and made manifest—is a spirit in opposition to the merciful power of Him who tempers the wind to the shorn Lamb of the Mountains.—Editor.

"EXCOMMUNICATION."

From the Philadelphia Independent Balance.

"We have at length, obtained a correct copy of the excommunication of William Hogan, Pastor of St. Mary's Church, of this city. It is as follows:—

"By the authority of God Almighty, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and the undefiled Virgin Mary, mother and patroness of our Saviour, and of all celestial virtues, Angels, Archangels, Thrones, Dominions, Powers, Cherubims, and Seraphims; and all the Holy Patriarchs, Prophets, and of all the Apostles and Evangelists of the Holy Innocents, who in the sight of the Holy Lamb, are found worthy to sing the new song of the Holy Martyrs and Holy Confessors, and of all the Holy Virgins and of all Saints together, with the Holy Elect of God—may he, Wm. Hogan, be damned.

"We excommunicate and anathematize him, and from the thresholds of the Holy Church of God Almighty we sequester him, that he may be tormented, disposed and delivered over with Dathan and Abiram, and with those who say unto the Lord, 'depart from us for we desire none of thy ways;' as a fire is quenched with water, so let the light of him be put out forevermore, unless it shall repent him, and make satisfaction. Amen!!

"May the Father, who created man, curse him! May the Son, who suffered for us, curse him! may the Holy Ghost, who suffered for us in baptism, curse him! May the Holy Cross which Christ for our salvation, triumphing over his enemies, ascended, curse him!

"May the Holy and Eternal Virgin Mary, mother of God, curse him! May St. Michael, the advocate of the Holy Souls, curse him! May all the Angels, principalities and powers, and all Heavenly armies, curse him!

"May the praiseworthy multitude of Patriarchs and Prophets curse him!

"May St. John the Precursor, and St. John the Baptist, and St. Peter, and St. Paul, and St. Andrew* and all other of Christ's Apostles together, curse him! and may the rest of our Disciples, and our Evangelists, who by their preaching, converted the universe, and the holy and wonderful company of Martyrs and Confessors, who by their holy works are found pleasing to God Almighty. May the holy choir of the Holy Virgins, who for the honor of Christ, have despised things of the world, damn him! May all the saints from the beginning of the world to everlasting ages, who are found to be beloved of God, damn him!

"May he be damned wherever he be, whether in the house or in the stable, the garden or the field, or the highway, or in the woods, or in the water, or in the Church; may he be cursed in living and in dying!

"May he be cursed in eating and drinking, in being hungry, in being thirsty, in fasting, in sleeping, in slumbering, and in sitting, in lying, in working, in resting, and in blood-letting!

"May he be cursed in all the faculties of his body!

"May he be cursed inwardly and outwardly; may he be cursed in his brains, and in his virtex, in his temples, in his eye brows, in his cheeks, in his jaw bones, in his nostrils, in his teeth and grinders, in his lips, in his throat, in his shoulders, in his arms, in his fingers!

"May he be damned in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart and purtenance, down to the very stomach!

"May he be cursed in his reins, and in his groins; in his thighs, in his genitals, and in his nips, and in his knees, his legs and feet, and toe nails!

"May he be cursed in all his joints, and articulation of the members; from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, may there be no soundness.

"May the Son of the living God, with all the glory of his majesty, curse him! And may Heaven, with all the powers that move therein, rise up against him, and curse and damn him; unless he repent and make satisfaction!

"Amen. So be it. Be it So. Amen"

Cholera Morbus.—A cork burnt thoroughly in the fire, then mixed upon a plate with a little milk and water, and taken two or three times, is said to be a cure for the Cholera Morbus, by immediately correcting the acidity of the stomach.

Directions to preserve Cherries, Plums, &c. without Sugar.—Fill large necked bottles with the fruit, put the corks in so as; let them be put in a kettle of water, increase the heat to scalding for about three quarters of an hour; when of proper degree, keep it at the same half an hour longer, fill up with boiling water, cork down tight, lay them on the side till want d for use.

Cure for the fever and ague.—Take 60 grs. of salt of wormwood, 20 grs. of Virgina snake root, half an oz. of red bark, mix them together in a gill of molasses—take one third when the fit is coming on, one third 4 hours after, and one third 4 hours after still.

Cure for corns.—Roast a clove of garlick in hot ashes; apply it to the corn, and fasten it on with a piece of cloth when going to bed; renew the application two or three times in 24 hours, and in three days time the corn will disappear.

Easy method of breaking Glass in any required direction.—Dip a piece of worsted thread in spirits of turpentine, wrap it round the glass in the direction that you require it to be broken, and then set fire to the thread, or apply a red hot wire round the glass, and if it does not immediately crack, throw cold water on it while the wire remains hot. By this means glass that is broken may often be fashioned, and rendered useful for a variety of purposes.

Most Important Discovery.—Six weeks since, application was made to a person for the loan of one hundred pounds to a young chemist, who had made a discovery he was too poor to substantiate by experiment The money was obtained, and in a few days repaid by the borrower, already raised to sudden affluence by the private disposal of his invention:—It is a new mode of tanning skins, combining such rapidity and economy, as promise to the public an immediate and immense advantage. Raw hides, hitherto lying twelve months in the tan pit, and subjected to a process otherwise defective and precarious, are now perfect leather within six weeks, and at less than half the expense. The gentleman who bought the invention, is a noted opposition member and contractor; and from the terms of his stipulation, we may form some judgment of the probable magnitude of the results. He has paid ten thousand pounds down, he has given obligatory deeds, securing him £5,000 on the first of January, £5,000 per annum for the four years of January, £5,000 per annum for the four years next succeeding, and afterwards eleven thousand a year for life! It is expected that the price of a pair of boots will not exceed eight shillings, and a corresponding fall will be produced in all articles of leather manufacture.—London Globe.

Laudanum swallowed by Mr. Edward Sukes, Surgeon, Westminster.—The public are greatly indebted to this ingenious and enterprising gentleman, for the invention and application of an apparatus, by the means of which the stomach can be emptied of poisons that might be taken by accident or design; and in instances where this organ has become insusceptible to the action of emetic substances (as in the case of the late Archbishop of Armagh) immediate recourse to this instrument in the hands of a dexterous surgeon, will not fail of rescuing the unfortunate sufferer from certain destruction. The results of Mr Juke's experiments on himself (assisted by Mr James Scott, an eminent surgeon in Westminster) are truly satisfactory The largest quantity of laudanum swallowed by Mr. Jukes is ten drachms.

Steam Vessels.—Mr. John Barton, has suggested that his patent paddle drum wheel for steam vessels possesses also the advantage of saving the lives of the passengers, in the event of the vessel being stranded, taking fire or springing a leak. One of his paddle wheels, of 15 feet in diameter and eight in width, will, if perfectly air tight, sustain above water upwards of 300 men, or 60 lbs. to every cubic foot; consequently the three wheels would keep above water all the passengers crew, &c. till some assistance could be rendered them.

Fish Oil.—A discovery has recently been made in Denmark for purifying common fish oil, and rendering it equal to the best sperm, by means of animal charcoal, which is made in a peculiar manner from bee bones which have been boiled.

Latest from the Brazils.—To the politeness of Mr Barnes, a passenger in the schr Blucher, and to our attentive correspondents at Rio, we are indebted for files of Buenos Ayrean papers to the 7th, and Rio papers to the 25th September inclusive. Mr. Barnes will please accept our acknowledgments for the following information:—

The Prince Regent is to be crowned Emperor of the Brazils on the 12th Oct

Preparations were making for that, even as well as for defence against Portugal, in case of any resistance offered by her to the new order of things.

For the first purpose subscriptions were to be raised to erect triumphal arches, &c. &c.; and for the second, government had already borrowed 400,000 ours. from the merchants. About four hundred European Portuguese had taken passage for Europe, and were expected to sail in a few days —many more it was supposed would follow in a short time.

Eight thousand troops had already been raised in and about the city of Rio, and government was impressing constantly to increase the number.

Two vessels of war were fitting out, and all the exposed points on the coast were about to be fortified.

All persons, whether Europeans or natives, in opposition to the new government, had received orders to depart. Those from the sea ports were allowed thirty days—those from the interior sixty.

DOMESTIC.

A meeting of the Inhabitants of the District of Newcastle was held at the Court House in Hamilton on Saturday the 16th inst pursuant to a notice given by the Sheriff, for the purpose of taking into consideration the Contemplated Union of the Legislatures of the two Provinces, when Zaccheus Burnham, Esq. Chairman of the Quarter Sessions, was unanimously called to the Chair, and addressed the meeting as follows:—

Gentlemen,—It appears by reports, through the medium of the Public Prints, that a Bill was introduced into the Imperial Parliament at its last Session, for Uniting the Legislatures of the two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. It underwent considerable discussion, but was postponed with a declared intention of bringing it forward again at the next Session of that Parliament. It also appears by the Public Prints that there is a difference of opinion upon the subject, some being in favor of, and others against the Union.—Gentlemen, the object of this Meeting is to collect the Opinions of the Inhabitants of this District. As you have been pleased to do me the honour of calling me to the Chair, I shall not attempt to argue the subject, nor persuade any one to adopt my opinion. I shall merely give a silent vote, if necessary, but I shall endeavor to obtain for every Gentleman, in his turn, an opportunity of addressing the Meeting, and of moving any resolution, or petition, whether it be for or against the Union, he may think proper.

Mr. Rutan then rose, and after going at some length into the History of the Canadas, concluded in substance in the following manner:—

"Now, Mr. Chairman, since I have to the best of my abilities, performed what I conceive to have been my duty in giving a sketch of the History of the Country, I feel it also my duty, placed in the situation I am (and I fear unworthily so,) to state my grounds of objection to the Bill before the House of Commons. In the first place, I hesitate not to say, that the project of uniting the Legislatures of the two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, has been founded upon misrepresentations of the state of the country. But being ignorant of the nature of those misrepresentations, and whence they originated, I can only state facts, and draw the natural conclusions. We cannot but observe that the geographical situation of Lower Canada, with its dense population, encircling its sea-ports, render it naturally a Commercial Country, while the geographical situation of Upper Canada, with its relative position with the Lower Province, together with its narrow settlements extending along the north side of the River St Lawrence and that chain of waters which fall into it, a distance of about 800 miles, the most Eastern part of which lies upwards of two hundred miles above Quebec, will ever render it incapable of enjoying the advantages of commerce, add to this the tide of emigration which has been, and is now, directing its course to the Province of Upper Canada, (mostly to the upper part) in consequence of the advantages which it possesses over Lower Canada for the agriculturist, not only in the quality of the soil, but also in the tenure under which lands are held, all of which, would it not be damped by the removal of our Legislature and its Government, will in a few years render its agricultural interests much more powerful; and Lower Canada, by these very means, be rendered much more so in its commerce. Were Upper Canada not prohibited in a free trade with the United States, or were it a manufacturing country, the case would be very different as it regards the opposition of interests between the two. But so long as Montreal and Quebec remain the grand emporium of part of the State of Vermont, the western part of New York State, together with the whole of the Upper Province, and our joint interests so intimately connected with the Mother Country, in consequence of our consumption of European manufactures almost altogether, so long will the people of Upper, in their habits, manners and customs, and soon will their opposition of interests, as far as it regards their own municipal regulations, increase; consequently separate Legislatures are absolutely necessary for the protection of their peculiar interests.

"Although I am aware that the commerce of Lower Canada produces advantages to Upper Canada, inasmuch as our supplies must altogether be drawn thence, yet the two Provinces stand not, by any means on terms of reciprocity as it regards the trade with each other; for the trade carried on between Lower Canada and the States of New-York, and Vermont, is, I think, equal to that between the two Provinces; consequently the Lower Province is, in some measure independent of the trade of Upper Canada; and experience has fully shewn, that so long as Lower Canada possessed the power of regulating her intercourse with the United States, Upper Canada legislated in vain for the protection of her staple articles, those of the United States constantly met us in our only Market. This evil, however with many others, by the wisdom and justice of the Imperial Parliament, stand at present obviated; but should the contemplated union be effected, Upper Canada would not only be again sacrificed to Lower Canada in this particular, but in many others of vital importance to the country, taking it for granted, which of course we must, that Lower Canada would ever possess a majority, in the joint Legislature, against Upper Canada, whenever their interests should come in collision with ours; and even admitting that Upper Canada should have that majority, or that it should be possessed by them alternately, still the consequences would not be the less fatal to the prosperity of the country. Jealousies, discord and confusion could only be the result of a joint body representing totally distinct and opposite interests. Moreover I can discover no solid general advantages to be derived from an union of the two Legislatures. Individuals, it is true, might be benefitted, even to the total subversion of the Government; but as to the principal ostensible reason given by those who advocate the measure, viz. that of an amalgamation of feeling among the Canadians of French, with those of English origin, is an evil that must of necessity, under present circumstances cure itself; but should those national prejudices, which exist in Lower Canada, be thought so inimical to the general welfare of the Province, as to warrant the interference of his Majesty's Government, yet since it is not at all pretended that Upper Canada entertains those prejudices (nor am I aware that we have by any other means forfeited the distinction which was so graciously given to our forefathers,) how great the injustice of making us participators in an event so humiliating, and I might add, degrading to our native and adopted country!

"Thus far, Sir, I have just glanced at a few of the evils that would follow a Legislature Union of these two Provinces, abstractedly considered. But when I reflect that in the Bill before the Imperial Parliament there are clauses, which take from us the most valuable part of our constitution, a boon vouchsafed by his late most gracious Majesty, to all those who from various circumstances claimed the protection of the British nation, but particularly to those, who from the circumstance of their adherence to the British government and Constitution were obliged to fly from the revolted American colonies, and seek an asylum in this quarter of the world—when we see this pledge of the paternal regard and beneficence of the British Government, rendered still more dear from a 30 years experience of its beneficial effects, taken from us, we ought to feel it an imperative duty which we owe ourselves and off pring, respectfully, yet freely, to remonstrate against it.

"But just recovering from the effects of a desolating national war, we are with pleasing expectations, under our present mild and happy government and constitution, looking forward to the period, when all our hopes will be realized in the general prosperity of our native and adopted country.

Stimulated by these considerations and the Justice of our cause, let us then with one accord, unhesitatingly appeal to the Imperial Parliament for the preservation of our constution, a constitution under which we have so happily, not only enjoyed the name, but also the reality, of being British subjects, and I am sure we shall be heard, for while we must all feel a secret pride in acknowledging the Power of the most free and enlightened legislature in the world, in its Wisdom we have the surest foundation for its just dispensation."

He then moved, (Seconded by Robert Henry, Esq.) the following Resolutions and Petition, which were adopted.

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Meeting that the proposed Legislative Union of the Provinces would not be beneficial to either, and would be particularly prejudicial to the interests of this Province.

2nd. Resolved, That the mediation of the Parliament of the Mother Country on any subject of difference between the two Provinces; the enjoyment of a separate Government and Legislature; and the exclusive control of our own Revenue, are circumstances which guarantee the improvement of the Upper Province; and which we would not willingly relinquish as the price of an Union by which we cannot gain, but may lose much.

3rd. Resolved, That an humble Petition be presented to the Honorable the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, praying that if the measure of the Union of the two Provinces should be again presented to that Honorable House, it may not pass.

4th. Resolved, That the Petition now read be adopted.

5th. Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to further the views of this meeting, and that Zacheus Burnham, S. S. Wilmot, Robert Henry, D M C. Rogers, Jas. Richardson, T. Ward, Henry Ruttan, Jno Farley, Esqrs. and the Rev. Joseph Thomson, be that Committee.

(Signed) ZACCHEUS BURNHAM, Chr.

6th. Resolved, That the thanks of the meeting be given to the Chairman, for his able and impartial conduct in the Chair, and also to the Sheriff, for calling the meeting, and to the Secretary for his active conduct in the business of the day.

ERASMUS FOWEL, Sec.

To the Honorable the House of Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The Petition of the undersigned, inhabitants of the District of Newcastle in the Province of Upper-Canada,

SHEWETH,

That your Petitioners have been informed that a Bill was introduced to your Honorable House during the last Session of the Imperial Parliament which had for its object the Union of the Legislatures of the two Provinces of Canada, and that it is again to be brought before your Honorable House.

That your Petitioners cannot contemplate this measure without the most serious alarm and apprehension.

That your Hon. House require not to be informed that the language, the habits, the prejudices, of the Natives of Lower Canada are all widely different, and most of them essentially so, from those of the Upper Province.

That the views and policy of the Lower Province are in many respects at variance with the best interests of the Upper, and your Petitioners cannot indulge the expectation that in an United Parliament, the Members of that Province would be induced to abandon a policy which they had so long pursued in their separate Legislation.

That your Petitioners boldly affirm, that by an Union, they have nothing to gain.—With a separate Government and Legislature, and the exclusive management of its own revenue, the improvement of the Upper Province, however gradual, will be certain.—But, if your Petitioners were to be deprived of these advantages, and the Revenue of the Province placed at the controul of a Body, the majority of whom had other interests to prefer, that improvement would be retarded, if it did not entirely cease.

That your Petitioners are deeply sensible of the kind and anxious feeling of your Honorable House, in regard to every thing connected with the prosperity of this country; a feeling strongly manifested in the highly beneficial measures of the last Session of the Imperial Parliament.

That your Petitioners being in the enjoyment of a beautiful, fertile, and improving country; of the blessings of the British Constitution; of the Powerful protection and mediation of the Parliament of the Mother Country; are abundantly satisfied—They ask for nothing more,—They desire no change.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray your Honorable House, that if the measure of an Union of the two Provinces should be again presented to your Honorable House, it may not pass,

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

No. 85. Our endeavour will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. Vol. I.

ERRATA.

For A. D. 1060, in the Account of the Destruction of Rome, Conflagration, &c. p. 310 of our last, read A. D. 960.

Editorial Commentary.

The number of Settlers arrived at Quebec, during the season which has just terminated, is 10,471; being 1,312 more than arrived last year.

The Tonnage employed in 1821 was 102,766. This year it has been 145,842, being an excess of 43,156. All this looks well enough!

Our readers will perceive by a Proclamation in this day's Gazette that our Parliament is to assemble, for he ACTUAL DESPATCH of PUBLIC BUSINESS, on the 15th of January next. Never were its Members called together at a more critical period. To us it appears so pregnant with matter, worthy of their most serious attention, that we could write volumes on the subject, if we were not afraid of appearing obtrusive, and infringing somewhat on that which is termed privilege. So let it pass. Let every man see to his own duty, and be found at his post, and we have no doubt of the result. The true patriotism and lofty character without the slightest breath of disloyalty, or even of suspicion, towards the really impartial and upright views of the Imperial Government at home, which have been displayed in the Brockville Resolutions, give us the highest confidence, the most perfect hope, that the PARLIAMENT of UPPER CANADA will act as becomes so distinguished a BODY, in a matter that concerns the welfare and prosperity of our descendants for ages to come. If good sense, sound policy, and warm patriotism (loyalty is out of the question, for the representatives of the People of Upper Canada may defy the whole world to impugn it with any hope of success of credence, notwithstanding the base insinuations thrown out by some writers employed by a faction in the Lower Province;) if, we say, such qualities are found in the resolutions to which our representatives may come, there is no doubt, but they will have all the effect that may be desired in the Councils at home; and, may God prosper them in their deliberations!

Besides the hints thrown out in the letter of U. C. which our correspondent will find published in this day's REGISTER, it had occurred to ourselves, that a plan might be adopted, by the laying out of new Counties and Districts from the new Townships and Crown Lands in the Lower Province, so as to increase the representation of British Interests, and bring it more upon an equality with that which would seem to be of an opposite nature in the Common's House of that Province, in any desirable ratio. But our brethren of French origin are so choleric, to say no more, that it would be better perhaps to let this ticklish subject alone, least they may say you have enough to do to mind your own busines.—Well; so be it!

We have great pleasure in admitting Mr. Osgoon's communication into our columns, and we beg to assure him as well as all other benevolent men, (no matter of what denomination among Christians,) that it will at all times, whilst holding the situation we now do, give us the highest satisfaction to assist in promoting the intellectual, moral, and religious improvement of the lower classes of the people; and, of all the means ever adopted to promote this great object, the establishment of Sunday Schools stands confessedly the chief. Far be it from us to put on the invulnerable armour of hopeless bigotry, or draw a circle round our habitations and say that these precincts alone are [illegible] whilst all without is darkness; impiety; and perdition! God forbid! It is with pharisaical pride, and hypocritical cant, and empty professions, and the works of darkness, wherever these sad proofs of evil are to be found, that we are, and we hope ever shall be, at war; but, not with humble, patient merit; charity; benevolence; and, obedience to the Divine Precepts; these we wish for ever to acknowledge as our kindred, no matter under what name, or complexion they may dwell; and the high reward we would, in all humility, aspire after, is, for ourselves to be accounted worthy of such fellowship, by the GREAT and EVERLASTING SEARCHER of HEARTS!

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

Lord Mandeville, eldest son of the Duke of Manchester, will this day be united, at St. James's Church, to Miss Sparrow, the rich heiress, whose fortune it is said is nearly twenty thousand a year. After the ceremony the happy pair will set out on a tour. A splendid new chariot, made by Houlditch, of a very superior description will be launched on the occasion.

Capt. John Jebb, of the Royal Horse Guards, (formerly stationed in Canada) has been tried by a Court Martial, and sentenced to be discharged from the service. In consequence, however, of his long service, and good character, the King directed that he should receive the value of his commission.

Sir Francis Burdett paid a visit to Ilchester gaol to congratulate Hunt upon his approaching liberation, which was to take place on the 30th October.

A Rich Widow.—The Marchioness Dowager of Hertford is supposed to be the richest widow in the Kingdom. Her Ladyship has four hundred thousand pounds in money, and one hundred thousand in land.

Ingenious Smuggling.—The smugglers have adopted an ingenious method of landing contraband spirits. It consists in their having small casks or tubs, entirely covered over with plaster of Paris, in which, at indiscriminate intervals, pieces of seaweed are fastened. These are filled and placed along the chalky cliffs about Dover, and from their close resemblance to the places that fall, are not easily discovered. Many persons are permitted to send carts for the conveyance of chalk to lay on the land, and from the frequent visits of these vehicles, suspicion was excited of their having some other object in view. This led to a vigilant examination of the carts, when the deception was discovered, and some seizures took place. Some of the tubs thus ornamented, have been sent for the inspection of Government, and so exact are their appearance to irregular masses of chalk, as not easily to be discovered.

By the late population report in Great Britain, it appeared that there were 57 men and 111 women in England, and in Scotland 40 men and 62 women, all upwards of one hundred years old.

A countryman about to alter his condition, appeared last week before a magistrate to swear the affidavit required by the new Marriage Act, when, on its being read to him, he complained that he did not understand it. "Not understand it," said his worship, who was a new made knight not overburdened with sense—"Not understand it: why you must be quite a fool." "No, I be not, quite," said honest Clod, dryly, "but I be very near one."

The following astonishing proof of the facility and dispatch of commercial intercourse between Sheffield and Manchester was recently communicated by a very respectable tradesman of this town. He sent off an order for goods one day, in the afternoon, and received them on the following morning as early as 8 o'clock.—Sheffield Iris.

The Congress at Vienna only awaited the arrival of the Duke of Wellington to commence the conference.

Mr. Canning has had one of the rooms in the foreign office, fitted up as a bed-room; so that when the house sits late the Right Hon. Gentleman will be able to retire earlier to rest, and with less fatigue, than in going so far as Gloucester Lodge.

Meetings to effect a commutation of tithes, continue to be held in Ireland.

The Liverpool Mercury regrets that the unfortunate emigrants to the Cape of Good Hope, did not proceed to the United States in preference to going to that unpromising Colony.

Lord Strangford had reached the Austrian capital from Constantinople on the morning of the 27th ult. and had brought strong assurances that the affairs of the east (Turkey and Greece) were on the eve of being settled.

Dreadful Earthquake at Aleppo.—Aleppo, one of the most beautiful cities of the Ottoman Empire, has been visited by an earthquake resembling those which laid waste Lisbon and Calabria in the last century. The first and most severe shock occurred on the 13th of August, about ten in the evening, and instantly buried thousands of the inhabitants under the ruins of their elegant mansions of stone, some of which deserve the name of palaces. Several other shocks succeeded, and even on the 16th shocks were still experienced, some of which were very severe. Two-thirds of this populous city are in ruins.

According to the first accounts of this event, which through alarm may have been exaggerated, the number of the sufferers amounts to from 25 to 30,000. Among them is one of the best men in the city, the Imperial Consul General, the Chevalier Esdras Von Picotto. Having escaped the danger of being buried under the ruins of his own house, he hastened with some of his family towards the gate of the city; but as he was passing a khan, a new shock occurred, and a wall fell down, which buried him and those with him.

"The great number of unburied bodies in this extremely hot period of the year, has produced pestilential effluvia, and obliged the unfortunate inhabitants to seek for refuge in some remote district."

From a London paper.

The executor of the Rev. Peter Beauvoir, late of Downham hall, in the county of Essex, paid last week the sum of 38,000*l.* to the stamp office, being the duty on 720,000*l.* payable to the residuary legatee, Richard Benyon, (now Richard Benyon de Beauvoir)—This fortunate legatee was no relation to the testator. Above 50,000*l.* were otherwise left in legacies. The immense property was bequeathed by the testator independent of his freehold estates, which are of considerable value. In addition to this prodigious wealth, the testator possessed and retained till the day of his death a living of 300*l.* a year.

John M'Lachlan, Esq. formerly teacher of mathematics, Glasgow, died last spring at Calcutta, and bequeathed 20,000*l.* of his fortune to the free schools of Glasgow.

The Englishman of Sept. 29, states, that serious difficulties had been started by the Directors of the [illegible] as to the appointment of Lord William Bentinck, to be Governor-General of India, and that Lord Melville, was the nobleman, who, it was thought, would receive the nomination. Some doubts, however, were entertained of his acceptance, owing to the precarious state of Lady Melville's health, and should that difficulty not be removed, the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, was likely to be the successor of the Marquis of Hastings.

Mr. Alderman Heygate had been chosen Lord Mayor of the city of London for the ensuing year.

The Courier in giving a list of the Foreign Ministers assembled at Vienna says—"At present Russia is the most formidable as far as relates to the number of her diplomatic agents

Is this display or numerical superiority intended to mark any assumption of political preeminence on the part of this power. The Emperor Alexander might, indeed be pardoned such a bust of vanity, when it is considered how his Allies, by moving at his nod, permit him to be the Autocrat of Europe, as well as of Russia."

At a late execution in Wales, no Welchman could be found to render the smallest assistance, by making the gallows, loaning a cart, &c. &c.

Scotch Bulls.—While the King was at Edinburgh, the magistrates were compelled to issue various ordinances, to have the streets kept clean. Among other enactments we find the following:

"All buckets or other vessels, whether empty or containing filth, ashes, or other refuse, found upon the streets or pavements, shall be seized and forfeited and the owners shall be liable to the like penalty."

The proprietors of Steam Engines, in England, are compelled to have their fire places and chimnies so contrived as to consume the smoke

The building of the new Law Courts at London, is rapidly proceeding. The expences are estimated at 100,000*l.* and its completion will take three years.

East Indies.—On the 2d of April a fire broke out in one of the suburbs of Surat, which consumed upwards of 1500 houses, with all their contents, the property of about 7000 of that class of the native community employed in weaving.

Lady Anson will, it is said, be shortly led to the Hymeneal Altar, by the Baron de Rutzen.

To such a pitch of perfection has almost every article of machinery obtained, that those only can believe who witness its wonderful effects. A machine for the dressing of cloth has recently been erected at Leeds, which does as much work in 45 minutes as two men could do in two days.

Laborers and Soldiers in England.—It is stated in a letter appearing in the London Statesman, signed William Cobbett, and addressed to the honorable Mr. Canning, that the wages of a laborer in England amount to three shillings and sixpence a week, while a private foot soldier receives seven shillings and seven pence a week, besides clothing, lodging, fire and candle.

Statistics.—In Great Britain, the number of men capable of rising in arms, en masse, from 15 to 60 years of age, is 2,744,847, or about 4 in every 17 males. There are in Great Britain 6 millions of males, and in Ireland 3 millions; of whom, in the year 1812, 807,000 were in arms, that is in the proportion of 1 to 11 The Clergy of the Church of England including their families, form about one-eighteth part of the population in England.

Pauperism in Europe.—Of the 178,000,000 of individuals who inhabit Europe, there are said to be 17,900,000 beggars, or persons who subsist at the expence of the community, without contributing to its resources.

IRELAND,

In this unhappy country, according to late accounts, burning, burglaries, and murders have, in the southern districts, again appeared. At Abyfeale, the troops have thus early in the season been employed to scour the country for offenders, and have captured two of the Kerrys incendiaries of Oct. 1820. The legal expedient of levying distress for rent has been undetermined, rather than openly resisted, in the county of Limerick, by the practice of carrying off, or destroying at night, the cattle seized on behalf of the landlord during the day time. In the very suburbs of Cork, a Clergyman's house was attacked on Sunday morning, the 29th ult. at one o'clock, and a faithful servant barbarously murdered. The assassins escaped. Thus it seems that neither the gibbet nor the bayonet, nor famine, nor pestilence, are efficient preventatives of crime in this devoted country.

The Noblemen and Gentlemen of Ireland, who have signed Resolutions in favour of the Commutation of Tithes consist of sixty eight Peers possessing property in Ireland, and about as many Commoners. The Resolutions to which these names are subscribed are as follows.

"Resolved, That for the tranquility and happiness of Ireland, it is expedient to substitute for the present precarious and vexatious mode of supporting the Clergy of the Established Church, a full and liberal equivalent, fairly asserted and levied.

"That we are the more inclined to express this our opinion, because we are satisfied that a fair Commutation of Tithes is not only practicable, but that it is essential to the stability, independence, and dignity of the Established Church, and to the general interests of the Country."

LORD ERSKINE'S LETTER ON THE GREEKS.

"But although I have thus endeavored, against my most predominant feelings, to expel from my indignant view cruelties by whomsoever committed, and, in protection of the unfortunate Greeks, have covered them with the veil which our imperfect natures entitled me to throw over them; yet let it be remembered, that what I have written concerning them, applies only to unpremeditated inhumanity, such as, when hunted like wild beasts, they have turned upon their pursuers, but that barbarous retaliations can receive no pardon if continued when they are contending as a nation for their religion and freedom. I rejoice that they are advanced to that condition, that they are marshalling armies, that they are laying the foundations of a Civil Government, and I feel confident they will henceforth remember, that they are soldiers and Christians.

"That our influence could fail, if faithfully exerted, I cannot bring my mind to believe. I might ask those who were the warmest advocates for the war, and who hold the highest its happy termination, and the eminence on which it has placed us, what they would think if it could be doubted, that what they would think if it could be conveyed? THE BRAZILS.

Letter of the King of Portugal to the Prince Regent of Brazil.

My Son,—I have not answered thy letters, because the orders of the Cortes have been delayed; now you will receive their Decrees, and I recommend to you the observance and obedience to the orders which you may receive; for thereby, you will gain the esteem of the Portuguese, whom you are one day to govern, and it is necessary that you should give them decided proofs of love to the Nation.

Recollect when you write that you are a Prince, and that what you write is seen by all the world—and you ought to take heed not only what you say, but likewise as to the manner of expressing yourself. All the Royal Family are well, and as a Father who loves you, I give you my benediction.—

Palace of Queluz, Aug. 3, 1822. JOHN.

Answer of the Prince Royal.

Rio, Sept. 22, 1822.

I had the honor to receive your Majesty's letter, dated the 3d of August, in which your Majesty rebukes my manner of writing and speaking of the faction Luso-Spaniard. If your Majesty will allow me, I shall say, that both I and my Brazilian brethren, lament much the state of coercion in which your Majesty lies buried. I cannot write otherwise, and as the verse was to be scanned by those infamous Deputies, European and Brazilian, of the party of those Despotic, Executive, Legislative and Judicial Cortes, it was necessary that it should be so. And as I, better informed, know that your Majesty, is positively made a prisoner, I write this last letter in the same strain, respecting the points already decided by the Brazilians. Fully aware of the facts, I am perfectly convinced, that the state of duress to which your Majesty is reduced, is the only cause for your acting contrary to your liberal disposition. God forbid that we should think otherwise!

Disinherison may be decreed against me; the greatest crimes predetermined in the Carbonarian Clubs, may be committed, but the holy cause shall not retrograde, and I shall say to my beloved Brazilians before I die—" See the end of him, who exposed himself for his Country,—follow my example."

Your Majesty ordains, but what do I say! The Cortes have ordained through your Majesty, that I should execute their decrees, and see them enforced; to do this it was necessary that we free Brazilians should obey the Faction: We answer in three words—" We will not."

If the people of Portugal had a right to adopt a Constitution by means of a resolution, it is clear that the people of Brazil have a double: for, they proceed with due regard to me and the established authorities.

Adhering to these irrefragable principles, I say, (taking God and the whole world to witness,) to that sanguinary gang that I, as Prince Regent of the Kingdom of Brazil and its Perpetual Defender, am pleased to declare, that all past decrees of those factions, horrid, disorganizing, machiavelian, hideous, and pestilent Cortes, and all others promulgated for Brazil, are null, void and inadmissible. In this absolute veto I am supported by all the Brazilians, who unite with me, and second me in saying, "Nothing from Portugal—nothing—we want nothing"

If so frank a declaration shall irritate the minds of those Luso-Spaniards, they may send troops trained in civil wars, and we will shew them what Brazilian valor is. If they should foolishly dare to assail or oppose our holy cause, they shall soon see the ocean swarming with privateers; misery, famine, and whatever we can give in exchange for their benefits, shall be visited upon the Chieftains. But so much is not necessary. When the unfortunate Portuguese shall know them better, they will give them their just reward.—We lived in darkness not a long time—light now shines upon us, If your Majesty were here, your Majesty should be respected, and would see then that the Brazilian people, knowing how to appreciate their Liberty and Independence, endeavor to respect the Royal authority—for they are not a band of vile Carbonari and assassins, like those that keep your Majesty in ignominious captivity. The Independence of Brazil triumphs—it shall triumph, or we will lose our lives in the effort.

Brazil may be enslaved; but the Brazilians not—for as long as the blood circulates in our veins, we will fight; and first, they will know better who the "Young Boy" is, and how far his capacity goes, although he has not travelled in foreign countries.

I beg your Majesty, to order this letter to be presented to the Cortes—to those Cortes who never were "general," and are now only at Lisbon—that they may have something to entertain themselves with, and spend a few moidores of the consumptive Treasury. May God preserve the precious life, and health of your Majesty, as all of us Brazilians desire.

I am, with all respect, your Majesty's son that loves you much, and your subject that reveres you much.

The Dog Billy.—Not long since, the Cockpit, in Tufton-street, Westminster, exhibited an almost unparalleled scene, when the celebrated Dog Billy, whose wonder has been repeatedly recorded in the Sporting Magazine, for a bet of twenty sovereigns, exhibited to a multitude, at least two thousand, the chief part of whom were Amateurs well known in the sporting circles. There were no less than 20 carriages in Tufton street, a sight, perhaps never before witnessed there. The match was, that this extraordinary dog would kill one hundred rats in twelve minutes; and the bet was made by Dew, the proprietor, but bets to the amount of several hundreds were pending. The floor of the Pit was whatened, and the whole of the rats at once let loose. Dew and Chetham, the rat killers, were the only persons admitted into the Pit. The company were arranged in the gallery, and had a perfect view of the whole. The space which the dog had to exhibit in was two yards square. When let loose, he viewed them with an eager eye, but on time being announced, and signal being given, he went to work. The slaughter was dreadful; and in seven minutes & a half they were all slaughtered in heaps, amid loud cheers; and in nine minutes his mouth was washed with brandy, and the slaughtered taken away. The dog was decorated with fancy ribands, and £50 was offered for him upon the spot. His master declined the offer, but offered to back him £50 against any dog in England.—London Courier.

A Tiger.—"In 1812, a party of the British Naval Military Officers were dining in a jungle at some distance from Madras. When a ferocious tiger rushed in among them, seized a young midshipman, and flung him across his back. In the first emotions of terror the other officers had all snatched up their arms, and retired some spaces from their assailant, who stood lashing his sides with his tail, as if doubtful whether he should seize more prey, or retire with that which he had already secured. They knew that it was usual with the tiger, before he seizes his prey to deprive it of life by a pat on the head, which generally breaks the skull; but this is not his invariable practice. The little Midshipman lay motionless on the back of his enemy; but yet the officers, who were uncertain whether he had received the mortal blow or not, were afraid lest they should kill him together with the tiger. While in this state of suspense they perceived the hand of the youth gently move over the side of the [illegible] and during the convulsive throbs of death, they were about to fire, when, to their utter astonishment, the tiger suddenly dropped stone dead, and their friend sprung from the carcass, waving his hat in triumph.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY OF UPPER CANADA

GENTLEMEN,

The Union of the Legislature of Lower and Upper Canada having been for some time the subject of speculation and debate; I have ventured to make known my humble thoughts upon that interesting subject—remarks which I have only been deterred from advancing long before, by a consciousness of that inability which, I fear will be but too visibly displayed in the proposals I now offer. But, amid the many arguments which I have observed for and against this measure, I have, as yet, met with nothing which seems to me to have a sufficient tendency to prevent the evil consequence that must result from this Union, as contemplated by the Bill brought before the Imperial Parliament last Session.—It is not my intention at present to offer any new motives for opposing this measure, but merely to propose that, which if it be practicable, may obviate the only serious evils which must follow its adoption.

You are all aware of this grand and principal objection to the proposed Union—the fear, nay, the certainty, of a majority of Lower Canadian Members; which all must allow to be a powerful and paramount inducement for us to oppose the junction of our interest with theirs'.—For, can it be supposed for a moment, that we, who are already [illegible] are making proper use of it, under the paternal guidance of a much respected Governor, can be so blind to our own prosperity, as to rush headlong into a measure of which experience alone can teach the expediency or inexpediency, and of which, if once adopted, we must, without the hope of escape, bear with every evil.—You have every reason to fear that such an Union, as was contemplated, will take place, unless seriously and firmly opposed, by a perspicuous and impressive representation to the Imperial Parliament, not only of our present prosperity and happiness, but of our future miserable dependence, in case we are united with Lower Canada on the principle proposed.

Assume, Gentlemen, I beseech you, a proper spirit of opposition, and if you cannot wholly obviate the impending evil, endeavor at least, to palliate its baneful effects.—In order to effect the latter, if I may be allowed, I will presume to offer the following proposition for your consideration. At the ensuing Session of our Parliament pass an act, increasing the representation of this Province, so that the number of our Members may be equal to those of Lower Canada: then humbly petition the Legislature of Great Britain, praying that they may sanction a proceeding dictated only by a natural regard for the welfare of the Province—They may speak of injustice to Lower Canada; but what then! will it not be equally unjust to unite us with a people who seem incapable of appreciating or enjoying the blessing of an English constitution? a people ready, both from natural inclination, and what they term their interest, to oppose every measure that may be introduced by an Upper Canadian, and, particularly, if it has the least favorable tendency towards us. I do not speak problematically, but from experience.—Remember the conduct of the Commissioners on the part of Lower Canada; and remember too, that their Commissioners were not all French Canadians!

What pledge have you of the interest of the English Members of Lower Canada—none. You have every thing to lose—little to gain.

Hoping that what I have endeavored to impress upon your minds, for the prevention of evil, and the good of your country, may have the desired effect. I beg leave to subscribe myself,

Gentlemen,

A most devoted servant to,

MR. OSGOOD'S LETTER.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

MR. EDITOR,

Will you permit the subscriber to state through the medium of your paper, an object that demands the serious consideration of every Christian and Patriot.

It is no new subject, on which he would address the public, but it is one which has for many years occupied the attention of British Christians, and has recently become more generally known and supported throughout the Christian world. It is the all important subject of Sunday School instruction, which he would wish to bring before his fellow Christians.

From the statement made by the celebrated Dr. CHALMERS, and according to the excellent plan laid down by him, and others, who have written on the subject of Sunday School instruction, it appears, that more good might be done by laymen on the Sabbath, than all the clergymen and ministers of the gospel could possibly do. And it is thought, that in Great Britain and Ireland, more is now done every Sabbath, through the instrumentality of the Sunday School Teachers, than is done by all the Ministers of the Gospel of every denomination; and was the system as well arranged, the same beneficial effects might be enjoyed in this, and in every other Christian country.

But in order to enjoy similar advantages in this country, in relation to this excellent system of instruction, with what are enjoyed in the mother country, a similar plan must be adopted. As in the British and Foreign Bible Society, so in the plan of the Sunday School Union Society, the Dogmas of the different sects are laid aside, for the sake of extending to all the destitute the Bread and Water of Life. It is most ardently desired, by all the liberal and pious protestants of Canada, that branches of the same institutions may be more generally patronized, and supported in this country.

And we humbly trust, that steps are taking in this interesting country for the accomplishment of these laudable designs. His Excellency, EARL DALHOUSIE has kindly lent his name, as Patron, and contributed liberally towards supporting the Bible Society, the Sunday School Union, and a Society lately formed in Montreal, for extending education to all classes of the labouring part of the community; and it is pleasing to learn, that respectable characters of all denominations are supporting these valuable institutions in the Lower Province.

The subscriber was enabled through the aid of those kind friends, on whom he called upon his last journey to Quebec, to put into the hands of the Treasurer of the Sunday School Union Society, at Montreal, about fifty pounds for the purchase of books and useful publications; and, from the liberality manifested by individuals in Brockville, Kingston, and in several other places, we have reason to hope that the Province will exceed the other in promoting this interesting establishment. The Rev. Archdeacon STUART has accepted the office of President of the Sunday School Union Society of this Province; and a number of the Episcopal Clergymen of both Provinces have generally contributed, both in money and in useful books, towards furnishing a depository of the most interesting books, with a view of supplying all Sunday Schools, that stand in need of such assistance. Though the Sunday Schools in cities and populous towns might be supplied without the aid of an Union, yet, in newly settled places, where these advantages are most needed, it would be very difficult, and indeed impossible, for the inhabitants to purchase for themselves a supply of books; for, unless there can be a small library of useful books connected with every Sunday School, it will not be possible to keep up the attention of the pupils; for any considerable length of time; and it is for the want of sufficient encouragement of this kind, that so many attempts to establish and continue Sunday Schools have proved unsuccessful in this country. But, should all the youth, who might attend punctually, at their respective Sunday Schools and strive to store their minds with the great doctrines of our holy religion as they are contained in the bible, be permitted, as a reward for their exertion, to have occasional access to a well chosen library, what a wonderful effect would be produced! Instead of witnessing Sabbath-breaking, and every species of immorality, as we now do, we should behold the moral world clothed with beauty and newly animated with divine life. It is, therefore, expected, that all our Rulers and Ministers of Religion, of every denomination, will lend their influence towards establishing Sunday Schools and well-chosen libraries in this country and throughout the world.

Last December a small branch of the Sunday School Union Society was established in this town. Mr. Jesse Ketchum was appointed the treasurer into whose hands between nine and ten pounds were deposited, and considerable more subscribed which has not yet been paid. As the time of the annual meeting is approaching it is very important, that such donations and subscriptions may be paid to the Treasurer, as soon as possible. And those kind friends who put their names into the column of annual subscribers, it is expected will remember to attend and pay on the day of the annual meeting which will be duly notified by the public paper.

The books amounting to the sum paid last year have arrived, and are in the care of Mr Jesse Ketchum. Subscribers may have their share by applying; otherwise they will be given to the poor.

The Public's obedient servant,
T. OSGOOD.

STRANGER'S FRIEND SOCIETY.

At the Annual Meeting of the Society of Friends to the Stranger in Distress, held at Forest's Hotel on Saturday the 30th ult.

The Honorable the Chief Justice in the Chair:—

It appeared by the Report of the Executive that Subscriptions to the amount of £115 6s. 8d. had been received; and £110 10s. 8½d expended in various modes of relief to the objects of this institution; amongst others, in the distribution of Seven thousand eight hundred and ninety eight Rations.

Although the migration into this part of the Colony, from the Mother Country, on account of the establishment of District Land Boards, has not been so great this season as during the two preceding years, nor of persons of the description on the whole so destitute, yet the benevolence of this Society has been largely exercised.

The great expense attending the passage of Emigrants and their Families from Quebec, up the St. Lawrence, and especially up that part of it between Montreal and Kingston, frequently exhausts the means of the Emigrants, depresses their spirits, and added to the great fatigue of the journey, and their exposure to the weather, produces sickness among them ere they reach York, encreases the number of applications for relief.

Many who had gone out and settled on their land, found themselves compelled to solicit occasional donations of provisions from the Society, to enable them to continue their labours, till their crops became ripe. In this way much good has been done, and many have been able to attain independence, who, but for this seasonable assistance must have sunk into helpless despair.

A very considerable expense, as may be seen from the Treasurer's account, has been incurred in maintaining sick Emigrants in the Military Hospital where they were kindly received, and treated so successfully, by Doctor Duncanson, that they have been almost all restored to health and the protection of their families.

Several persons desirous of proceeding to Niagara, the head of the Lake, or back to Kingston, were accommodated with passages by the Steam Boat, or by Schooner, the amount of which, as the Tickets given them have not been returned for payment, has not yet been ascertained.

The Society has strictly adhered to the giving of assistance in provisions only, because donations in money are liable to be misspent, even though not expended viciously, yet for the most part improvidently; but more especially because His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor has been graciously pleased to continue his authority to the Commissariat Officer at this Port to issue Rations to the destitute Emigrants under the direction of the Society, which has been during this, as well as the last two years, attended with the most beneficial effects; both as to economy and arrangement.

The warm interest which His Excellency The Lieutenant Governor, has always taken in promoting the objects of this Society, has induced him graciously to continue his permission to the Barrack Master to admit the poorer Emigrants into the barrack Rooms, by which a great charge, which would have otherwise arisen from rent, has been saved and the Charity greatly extended. Indeed without possessing an asylum for the destitute Emigrants the labours of the association would have been greatly circumscribed, or perhaps rendered inefficient. An appropriation has likewise been made by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor of a very considerable quantity of condemned bedding for the use of the poor strangers, which has been found most seasonable, not merely to those who have not yet gone upon their Land, but to many who have been settled for some time, the supplies of those articles which they brought from home having, in many instances, been worn out, and in others sold to bear their expenses, before they arrived at the Seat of Government.

The Society has much pleasure in seeing, since its establishment, several Institutions of a similar kind growing up in different parts of the Province, by which the stranger finds in all places persons eager to instruct, comfort and relieve him.

In various ways may valuable assistance be given to Emigrants. Procuring work for such as are able to labour. Affording medical attendance to the sick, and supplies of Provisions to the destitute; either while unable to labor or till labor can be procured. And to all much good advice and information respecting the country, their arrangements and objects.

It is pleasing to remark that many have gratefully acknowledged the active benevolence of this association, by which their distresses have been so much diminished, and the disappointments and privations of a voluntary exile, deeply felt on their first arrival, so greatly softened.

Indeed many benefits may be conferred on the stranger, at little or no sacrifice on the part of the old inhabitants, and the performance of such acts of kindness, will be a lasting source of inward gratification.

Many severe cases of distress, which have been relieved, might have been noticed, were incitements necessary to induce the Members of this association to continue their support; but it is presumed that a simple review of the extent of their labours contained in the annexed abstracts from the Tables furnished by the Commissary and Barrack Master will be amply sufficient.

It was then resolved that the thanks of this Society be given to Mr. Billings for his kind and unremitting attention to the objects of the Society.

Also to Doctor Duncanson, who has paid the same kind and unremitting attention to the sick strangers, and received many of them into his Hospital at the request of the Society.

Also to Mr. Hartney, Barrack master, for his ready attention at all hours to the newly arrived Emigrants, and for his exertions in preparing the accommodation for those committed to his care by the Society.

Also to Wm. Allan, Esquire, Treasurer, and to the Secretary.

Resolved, That the annual dinner and meeting of the Society shall in future be on the second Tuesday in January of each year.

Secretary.

THE YORK ALMANAC

And Royal Calendar of Upper Canada for 1823.

IS in regular progress for publication, 72 pages being already printed; but, from the voluminous nature of this undertaking, (which is on a much more extensive scale than what is usual in works of the kind,) and a press of other business in the Office, it is feared the volume will not be completed before the end of the present year.

It has been thought right to give this public notice in order to prevent disappointment to those numerous friends of the undertaking who are waiting for it. The work will form a volume in Cr. 8vo. of about 200 pages, and the Editor hopes it will be found useful to all classes of persons in the Country.

No. 36. Vol. I.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1822.

Editorial Commentary.

Anxious to bring forward every subject connected with the welfare and prosperity of the country we applied some time ago to Mr. Mearr, of St. Catherine's, for a detailed account of his Salt works, with a view of publishing it for the benefit of those who may have thoughts of embarking in a similar undertaking, being exceedingly desirous of stimulating some capitalist to embark in an enterprize that must prove so beneficial to the country, and advantageous to himself. The account will be found in this day's publication under the head of Domestic Manufactures. We concur with Mr. M. in his suggestion that Three Establishments, (if on an extensive scale) at the several points which he has named, would be fully adequate to an ample supply of the whole Province: but, if those establishments were the joint property of a company, might there not be danger of a monopoly prejudicial to the public interests? Competition is more desirable; for, the article is essential in every family, whether poor or rich. In the Township of Pery, not far from the head of the Bay of Quinte, there are springs very strongly impregnated with Saline matter; indeed, many bushels of salt were actually manufactured there during the last war; and there is good water carriage from the mouth of the River Trent to the Eastern parts of the Province.

It seems by an English Paper, quoted in the Albion, that poor Mr. Gourlay, of Conventional Notoriety, has at length begun in earnest to amend, not only his own ways, but those of the public in England; for he is said to be actually breaking stones on the highway, and to be receiving parochial relief! This comes of beginning to write political pamphlets at the early age of Fifteen; and of suffering the mind to wander beyond that sphere of action which the Dispensation of Providence may have assigned to it, in a particular condition of society. We mention the circumstance by no means in the way of triumph over a vanquished opponent, for whom we have always felt a sentiment of pity rather than of anger;—but, as a very useful lesson to all political quacks; mountebanks; and, upstart Reformers; who are for ever attempting to purify the public temples, whilst their own mansions are filled with the stench of corruption so as to become a general nuisance.

The news of a naval victory gained by the Greeks, is fully confirmed to day. The encounter took place in the Straits of Boca Silota, between Negropont and Andros. The Turkish fleet, entangled in a narrow channel, full of rocks and shoals, and attacked unawares, fought with disadvantage.

Lord Liverpool and the chancellor of the Exchequer have determined to submit to Parliament, as one of their first measures of Finance, a plan for converting the old Four per cent Annuities into Stock at a half per cent. The result of a similar operation with respect to the Fives last year, occasions this experiment.

Extract from Prince Leopold's Speech at the establishment of a school at Oxshot, Surry, England.

The present establishment, in the central situation in which it stands, will doubtless prove highly beneficial, as the children have shown great anxiety to profit by the means of information which a Sunday school had before offered them. I therefore beg leave to recommend most earnestly, this new institution to the warm support of this meeting.—The greatest benefit of the British system of education is, in my humble opinion, the opportunity it gives the teachers of early instilling in the minds of the children the truths of our holy religion. If they succeed in this, the children will become good and virtuous as they advance in knowledge. And, surely, that country will be the most powerful and happy, whose people are the most virtuous. Besides, real piety is the only support in adversity, which never fails, when no other consideration can avail. I speak from sad experience, and may say, that without the support of religion, I could never have borne the unexampled calamities with which it has pleased Providence to visit me.

Death of the Duke D'Escars.—Two days before the death of the Duke D'Escars, he was received by the French King in the morning. His Majesty, who was in a very good humor, said, "Well, M. le Duc it is a long time since I ate any nouilles." (a sort of German dish prepared of pastry, butter, &c.) The Duke bowed and replied—"Enough; your Majesty's wishes shall be gratified."—"Eh bien," said the King, "give me one to-morrow morning and come to breakfast, we shall be alone." The breakfast, actually took place, and lasted much longer than that meal ordinarily does. The consequences were fatal. Both the King and the Duke were taken with a surfeit, and the Duke died soon afterwards. The King was in the greatest danger, when the death of his first Maitre d' Hotel was communicated to him without any previous preparation. The fright produced by the news, was, however, the cause of his recovery. It produced on the nerves of the Monarch a commotion which at the moment increased his physical powers—a sudden sickness in the stomach dislodged the enemy, and preserved Louis for the country and its cooks.

The only privilege they wish—the only right they require—is to be allowed to march in that situation which has always been assigned to them from the creation of the world to the present time (the last Guild excepted)—and they are resolved never to be disgraced by tamely accepting of any other."

It must gratify every friend to the progress of human reason to learn, that notwithstanding the difficulties so long considered insuperable, a glorious change is effected in British India. The free press of Calcutta has operated most powerfully in reforming the most inveterate and revolting abuses. The effect of seven native presses at work in that great city has been to triumph over Hindoo superstition in its strong hold. During the last festival of jugarnaut, so few pilgrims were present that they were unable to drag the car. The Brahmins called in other aid, but no devotee could be persuaded to sacrifice himself to the idol.

The Germans have set a fine example to the rest of Europe, by their enthusiastic exertions in support of the Greeks. In the constitutional states of Germany, Bavaria, and Wirtemburg, the Governments do not oppose the individual efforts of the subjects: Professors, students, and distinguished men of all classes, have associated for this noble purpose. At a general assembly of deputies from the various associations, held at Stuttgard on the 19th instant, it was determined to form a corps of 600 men, under the orders of M. Hephales, a Greek by birth. The corps is to be completely equipped in the European fashion, and will be exclusively composed of disciplined soldiers, who can produce certificates of good conduct.

TRADE WITH CHINA.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Canton, to his friend in Philadelphia, dated 10th May.

"The emperor of this country having by some means discovered the disgraceful conduct of the Mandarins, at and about Canton, has issued an imperial decree, (which, like that of the Medes and Persian, is irrevocable) to the high officers about the court, to inquire into the conduct of these people, and to report correctly the nature of the transaction with the English at Liutin, as well as our own affair at Whampoa, and the measures which have been pursued with regard to the introduction of opium. Thirty Mandarins are already imprisoned, and how many more will be, it is impossible to foresee.

"This examination, it is expected by every one here, will produce important results and finally place the intercourse of foreigners upon a different footing from heretofore—perhaps their expulsion and interdiction.

"It must be evident to the government of this country, that since luxury, vice, immorality, and in general, poverty, have followed in their train the most mistaken idea in the world is generally entertained of commerce to this country, as greatly enriching this people, and impoverishing others.

"The balance of trade is but little in their favor in amount, and the importation of manufactured goods, raw cotton and opium to the value of 12 or 15 millions annually, and daily increasing, strikes a blow at the very existence of their government. This state of things is learned by the Mandarins, and what measures they may adopt to avoid it, is yet in the womb of futurity—but when I think of this, I may venture to assure you, that our troubles in China have but commenced, and you may hear of important matters before long."

INDIAN MANNERS.

Detroit, August 30

The Murderer of Moncacuming.—We have been permitted to extract the following from the journal of a gentleman who has been a large portion of the country to the north and west of this place, and to whose industry our readers have been often indebted for information relating to the portion of country over which he has passed, and to transactions among the numerous tribes within the limits of this territory which tend to elucidate their characteristics, and lay open the workings of their untaught minds.—Gaz.

"Moncacuming, (ab, for Mon-gomiac-caming, the Woodpecker-Island—Chippewa language.)—This is sometimes called Montreal Island, Cabbit's Island, Middle Island, and is one of the Apostles," mentioned by Charlevoix. It is situated in Lake Superior, about 90 miles from Fond du Lac, at the the extremity of Le Pointe, or Point Chegoimegon.

"On this Island the French government had a fort long previous to its surrender to the English in 1763. It was garrisoned by regular soldiers, and was the most no thern point at which the French king had troops stationed. It was never occupied by the English, who removed every thing valuable to the Sault de St Marie, and demolished the works.

It is said to have been strongly fortified, and the remains of the works may yet be seen.

"In the autumn of 1660, all of the traders, except one, who traded from this post, left it for their wintering grounds. He who remained had with him his wife, (who was a lady from Montreal,) his child, (a small boy,) and one servant. During the winter, the servant, probably for the purpose of plunder, killed the trader and his wife; and a few days after their death, murdered the child. He continued at the fort until the Spring.—When the traders came, they enquired for the gentleman and his family; and were told by the servant, that in the month of March they left him to go to their Sugar camp, beyond the Bay, since which time he had neither seen or heard from them. The Indians who were somewhat implicated by this statement, were not well satisfied with it, and determined to examine into its truth. They went out and searched for the family's tracks but found none, and their suspicions of the murderer increased. They remained perfectly silent on the subject; and when the snow had melted away, and the frost left the ground, they took sharp stakes and examined around the fort by striking them into the ground, until they found three soft spots a short distance from each other, and digging down, they discovered the bodies.

"The servant was immediately seized and sent off in an Indian canoe, for Montreal, for trial. When the Indians who had him in charge, were told of the advances of the English upon Montreal, and that they could not in safety proceed to that place. They at once became a war party—their prisoner was released, and he joined and fought with them. Having no success and becoming tired of the war, they sought their own land—taking the murderer with them as one of their war party.

"They had nearly reached the Sault de St. Marie, when they held a dance. During the dance, as is usual, each one "struck the post," and told, in his manner, of his exploits. The murderer, in his turn, danced up to the post, and boasted that he had killed the trader and his family—relating all the circumstances attending the murder. The chief heard him in silence, saving the usual grunt, responsive to the speaker. The evening passed away, and nothing further occurred.

"The next day the chief called his young men aside, and said to them: "Did you not hear this man's speech last night? He now says he did the murders with which we charged him. He ought not to have boasted of it. We boast of having killed our enemies—never our friends. Now he is going back to the place where he committed the act, and where we live—perhaps he will again murder. He is a bad man—neither we nor our friends are safe.—If you are of my mind we will strike this murderer on the head." They all declared themselves of his opinion, and determined that justice should be rendered him speedily and effectually.

"They continued encamped, and made a feast to which the murderer was invited to partake. They filled his dish an extravagant quantity, and when he commenced his meal, the chief informed him, in a few words, of the decree in council, and that as soon as he had finished his meal, either by eating the whole that his dish contained, or as much as he could, the execution was to take place. The murderer now becoming sensible of his perilous situation from the appearance of things around him, availed himself of the terms of the sentence he had just heard pronounced, and did ample justice to the viands. He continued much to the discomposure of the phiz of justice, (personified by the chief, who all the while sat smoaking through his nose,) eating and drinking until he had sat as long as a modern alderman at a corporation dinner. But, it was of no avail—when he ceased eating, he ceased breathing.

"The chief cut up the body of the murderer, and boiled it for another feast—but his young men would touch none of it—they said "he was not worthy to be eaten—he was worse than a bad dog. We will not taste him, for if we do, we shall be worse than dogs ourselves."

"Mr. Morrison, who gave me the above relation, told me he had it from a very old Indian who was present at the death of the murderer."

ANECDOTES.

Prince de Conde.—It is told of Charles IX. King of France, that he sent a message to the Prince of Conde, a zealous protestant, in which he gave him the liberty to choose, either to go to mass, to be put to death, or to suffer banishment during life;—saith he, Primum, Deo juvante, nunquam eligo—

"The first, (God helping) I will never choose;—I abhor the idolatry of the mass; but, for the two others, I leave it to the choice of the king to do as he pleases; there is more evil in the least sin, than in the greatest misery."

Extravagant Compliment.—The newspapers state that during the late concerts at Sheffield, while Madame Catalini was singing 'Angels ever bright and fair,' a blind musician in the gallery, when she uttered the words, 'Take, oh, take me to your care,' kindly exclaimed, 'To be sure they will, for they never will let such a voice go to the d——.' A more elegant compliment was paid to our native syren, Mrs. Billington, by the celebrated composer, Haydn, who, when in England, was frequently in her society. He met her one day at Sir Joshua Reynolds', who had painted her as St. Cecilia, listening to the angels, according to the common idea. Mrs. Billington showed him the picture. 'It is like,' said Haydn, 'but I see a strange mistake.' Where?' said Reynolds, alive to the merits of his performance. 'You have,' replied Haydn, with graceful compliment, 'painted her listening to the angels, you ought to have painted the angels listening to her.' Mrs. Billington was too much a foreigner not to receive this incense with rapture, and she accordingly threw herself upon his neck a la Francaise.

Quin.—A poet young fellow heard Quin lamenting that he was grown old. "What would you give," said he, to be as young as I am?'—"I would even submit, said Quin, "to be almost as foolish."

A celebrated wit used to say of a very good natured dull fellow, "'Tis a thousand pities the fellow is not ill-natured! that one might kick him out of company."

The Charitable Highwayman.—It was said of Boulter (a better sort of Highwayman) that one day riding on horseback on the high road, he met a young woman who was weeping, and who appeared to be in great distress. Touched with compassion, he asked her what was the cause of her affliction; when she told him, without knowing who he was, that a creditor, attended by a bailiff, had gone to a house which she pointed out, and threatened to take her husband to prison for a debt of 30 guineas. Boulter gave her the 30 guineas, telling her to pay the debt, and set her husband at liberty; and she ran off leading the honest gentleman with benedictions.—Boulter, in the mean time, waited on the road till he saw the creditor come out; he then attacked him, and took back the 30 guineas, besides every thing else he had about him.—Memoirs of a traveller in retirement.

POETRY.

For the Weekly Register.

Mr. Editor,

The following lines were written some months since, soon after the melancholy catastrophe which gave rise to them: but some circumstances, not among others the author's absence, prevented their being sent at the time. Should they be deemed worthy of a corner in your esteemed journal, the author will be gratified by their insertion.—Those who are acquainted with the particular circumstances of the wreck of the Albion need scarcely be reminded that the present effusion refers to that sad event.

SKETCH OF A SCENE AT SEA.

"Hush thy cries, my sweet babe, O cease thy repining
Though the storm madly howl and the billows heave round,
O fear not, my child, on this bosom reclining,
The war of the deep, or the wild tempest's sound.

"O see, 'tis the arm of affection infolds thee,
'Tis thy mother that clasps thee so close to her breast,
And still there's a kind Power above that upholds thee—
The Lord of the waters shall waft us to rest.

"To our sea boat happy above O how swift we are flying,
And soon, dearest child, shall our weary'd eyes be o'er—
O weep not O weep not, some eye is deserving
The land that we love—we'll abandon no more!"

Those tender soulds the winds have wafted far,
Sighing amid the elemental war
The blast howl'd on and still the wild waves roar'd,
And the fell gloom of murky midnight lower'd.
Nearer did night's queen upon her empire stay
Shed o'er the deep one transient, straggling ray—
And not a star whose beams unceasing glow,
Far, far above each warring storm below,
Reflects its kindly radiance to cheer
Hope's penless eye amid these wand'rings drear.

But say, what voice was that whose thrilling sound
Burst through the rage that madly murmured round?
Was it a hollow echo that bore
The friendly greeting of some welcome shore—
Was it the demon of the howling blast
Whose savage screams assail us as he past?—
Or the rude cormorant's unwelcome cry,
Relentless harbinger of nite nigh?—
No; 'twas a human voice—"a light! a light!"
A ray from far had met the eager sight—
"A light, a light," was echoed through the bark,
And each glad eye was stretch'd that gleam to mark.
Ten thousand fancies crowd into the soul
And Hope redoubles wakes her wild control;
Home's darling joys already thrill'd each breast—
Already to his bosom each had press'd
Some one below'd—affections better part,
Whose image lingered in his beating heart—
Not half so sweet some hospitable ray
Greets the lone wanderer on his midnight way
When clouds terrific the dark skies deform
And nature maddens in majesty on se,
As shot across the wave that tremulous ray
Hope's welcome beacon to illume the way.

But why that pause—why sinks the voice of joy—
What sullen silence doth each mind employ
Despair sits da-kling on each haggard brow,
Now fear breaks forth in piteous strikes of woe.
As when a pitchy gloom invests the sky,
And direful rain menaces from high,
We shrink dismay'd or o'er the blacken'd heaven
Is by the rapid bolt of lightning riven,
And madly gazing at each angry flash
Wait for tremendous nature's crash.—
And that light—ay into a pyre's beam,
Affrights each eye, a dread, terrific gleam;—
Vain alarmer to the unseen rock
Which wait the impetuous, heedless vessel's shock.

That light is quench'd—but where are they?
On ask of this the wildly murmuring sea—
Ask of the reckless gale that hurries on,
The least relentless of the dool that's done—
Yes, ocean's purple waters welter o'er
The friends we parted from, we now—no more
To mark that form and to imbibe that voice;
So great that smile' and with that smile rejoice.

SALT.

For the Weekly Register.

MR. EDITOR,

In compliance with your request in the first number of the Weekly Register, I enclose a statement of the progress made at this place in the manufacturing of SALT. In the year 1816 Salt water was observed oozing from the bank of the 12 Mile Creek, on my premises, so strongly impregnated with Saline matter as to induce me to to open a Spring and make an experiment. After excavating the Earth to the depth of 13 feet, we came to a red Rock, the Salt water continuing to force its way up through the cavities, but not in sufficient quantity to make it a valuable object.

I afterwards visited different Salt Springs in the United States, where the rock had been penetrated to a great depth, by drilling or boring. After obtaining the necessary information, I recommenced my operations by boring 30 feet, when I met with a more copious spring of water. I then purchased a few potash kettles, and commenced making salt, producing from 8 to 10 Bushels per day. At that time I was fully satisfied any quantity of water could be obtained, but not having sufficient Capital to prosecute the business to such advantage as to enable me to come in competition with the Americans, I applied to the Legislature for aid, begging them to give a small bounty to the Manufacturers of Salt in this Province, stating the reasons hereafter mentioned, besides the inducement it would be to individuals to embark in the undertaking; the duty at that time was 5s N.Y.C. per barrel on American Salt, which for my encouragement was lowered to 3s 9d. per Barrel.

The following year I bored to the depth of 176 feet, and met with a plentiful supply of Salt water, when I again petitioned the Legislature, stating the progress I had made, and the certainty that the works could be extended to make any quantity of Salt that might be wanted, if encouragement was afforded; but as the Americans were pouring in their Salt at 3s 9d. per Barrel, it was impossible for a private individual, without Capital to cope with them; the duty was then, (1819) again lowered to 3s. 6d. per Barrel. I continued making a few Bushels per day, until the following Summer, when I opened a new Spring at the depth of 200 feet, and obtained a greater quantity of water, and so plentifully saturated with Saline matter, as to enable me to make 50 Bushels of Salt per day. I then abandoned the other spring altogether.

I was induced by the reasoning of some of my friends, to apply once more to the Legislature, praying them to lay a duty of 1s. 3d. per barrel on American Salt, and give it as a bounty to the Manufacturers in this Province, provided they sold the article at 3s. 9d per bushel, and I wrote circular letters having this object in view, to all the members; but, contrary to my most sanguine expectations, my petition was not noticed; however I have extended my works so far as to be able to meet the Americans in the markets of my own District; but my Salt will not bear the expence of transportation so as to meet them in other parts of the Province.

I will give you a short description of the machinery made use of in opening the last spring:—An horizontal wheel was erected, 18 feet in diameter, with cramps 3 feet long and 2 in height to raise a lever, to which was attached the Augur shaft, made of wood, 20 feet in length, with a screw and socket, which was put on, or taken off, in raising or lowering the poles; a tin tube, with a valve, served as a pump to draw up the sediment. The only labour required by this plan is that of one man and horse. It would be useless to enter in a detail of every minutiæ requisite in boring, those wishing to embark in an enterprize of a similar nature shall have every information I can give, by making a personal application.

From the Genesee River, in the State of New York, to the Niagara River, several saline springs have been opened, and are now in operation, some of the adventurers have penetrated from 100 to 150 feet, and in no instance, that has come to my knowledge, where the attempt has been made, have they failed in obtaining salt water; there appears to be a stratum of red rock from 10 to 40 feet below the surface, from the former place to the head of Lake Ontario; and I am likewise informed that, in the Bay of Quinte, at a distance of a few miles from the Lake, up the different Creeks which discharge their waters into it, the Salt water is continually oozing up, and in many places crystallizing into Salt. Springs have already been worked at the 15 and 30 Mile Creeks, Clinton, Mr. McDougall's, Dr. Gordier & Kent, Salt fleet, and Barton, Head of the Lake, and in the Bay of Quinte.

The vicinity of Lake Ontario is rich in this valuable commodity, and it is only necessary to make use of the proper means to be well provided with the manufactured article. It is well known that it is only a few years since the whole Western and Southern Country, from Lake Erie to the Mississippi, was supplied with Salt from Onondaga, whereas now there is scarcely a Barrel that ascends the Allegany river.

Individuals commenced boring at Canaway, Kentucky, Virginia, different parts of Ohio, the Western part of Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Illinois; they were soon followed by Associations, and Incorporated Companies, with Capital, and have in a few years supplied that vast extent of Country.—Why should we always be so far behind them in every useful improvement?

Having sold thus much of my own operations, and of the facility of opening these springs, and having made a few observations on the different sections of the country, I will state the advantages that would arise to capitalists by embarking in the Manufacture of Salt in this country, and the immense benefit that would necessarily be derived from it. Many persons may suppose that if the advantages I state were real, I should be induced from private and interested motives, to keep them to myself, in order to prevent competition; but, experience has proved this mode of reasoning to be incorrect. It would be more to my advantage to meet competition from private individuals, than as heretofore, from the Onondaga Saltworks, as those works have the advantage of a large capital employed, and have been a long time in operation.

The advantages of manufacturing salt by evaporation have been experienced for ages in solution Climates, where it is made in large quantities from Sea-water, by the heat of the sun; and the Frost has been found to answer the same purpose in Northern Climates, which separates the fresher particles of water, as it congeals into ice, and is thrown off, leaving the liquid brine so strong that it soon crystallizes into Salt, on being drawn off into the Kettles. Near Cape Cod, Massachussets, (which is much farther to the North than we are,) Salt is made from sea-water, and sold at 10 or 12 Cents per bushel, where it requires 35 gallons of water to make as much salt as 25 gallons of water from my springs would yield; this fact is sufficient to insure its success by following the same means.

The plan recommended is to construct reservoirs (of any length) 12 feet wide and only 8 inches deep; these reservoirs should be thus narrow in proportion to their length in order to facilitate the rolling over their roofs in rainy weather. Our heaviest tax is the price of labour, which is from 10 to 12 dollars per month, being the price of wages for each man at the present time. I employ 18 men to make 50 bushels of Salt per day, when only 2 men would be required to attend the above mentioned rate, which would produce a greater quantity. The Proprietors of the Works at Salina, Massachusets, will commence next year on the evaporating system, and there can be no reasonable doubt of their success.

I should be pleased to become instrumental in drawing the attention of my countrymen to this subject; and to induce them to engage in so important a concern, which cannot be thought or called a speculation. Could a Company be formed with a Capital of £10,000, composed of $100 Shares, and instalments paid similar to the Banking Institutions, say 25 per Cent. advance, and if necessary 12 per cent. per annum more, until a sufficient sum was obtained to complete 3 Establishments, one on Lake Ontario, another at the Grand River, and a third in the Bay of Quinte; those, when in full operation would be sufficient to supply the whole Province with Salt; and this could be effected without Legislative aid. If there is not sufficient enterprize amongst us, to form a company of this kind, I trust the Legislature will afford some encouragement in their next Session of Parliament to single individuals; but I am almost afraid to throw out a hint on the subject lest they take the duty off entirely from American Salt.

In stating the advantages that must arise to the country, by producing within its own limits salt sufficient for its inhabitants, their attention should be called to the situation they were in, in 1813 and 14, when, in some instances, $50 per barrel were paid for salt. We have been always dependent on the Americans for this article, and had to smuggle it during their embargo; and are still subject to the policy of their government, who can at their pleasure lay on another, and place us under heavy contribution.—People but too generally look only at the present moment, and have inculcated an idea that, by laying a duty of 1s 3d. per barrel on American Salt, the consumers, (one barrel for each family is a fair average,) will pay no much more per year; now, would it not be wiser to do so for 50 years to come, than to pay $20 for a single barrel, which will certainly be the case, in the event of another war. I am aware that public opinion is against an encrease of duty; but, as it has been before observed, if 1s. 3d. per barrel was laid on the American Salt, and given as a bounty to the Manufacturer, it would not have a tendency to raise the price of salt for more than one season at farthest; the advance in price being of itself a sufficient inducement for the Legislature to approve the measure.

The object, in a pecuniary point of view, would in reality be a saving of $40,000 per annum to this country, in specie, as the Americans will take no article we can raise, in the way of barter; and as matters now stand we are paying 5s. N.Y.C. for the internal improvement of the State of New York for every barrel we consume, besides giving employment to their workmen, &c. &c.

Editorial Commentary.

It is now so much the fashion for Editors of Newspapers to present their readers with occasional extracts from rare or interesting works of fancy, as well as of history, that he who would serve up a literary repast according to the relish of the times, must in some degree, fall in with it.—In our columns of this week an amusing specimen of early literature, (being written soon after the revival of learning and the arts in Europe) will be found.

The rage for novel reading, and novel writing, which is now so widely extended, is, comparatively, of modern date in England. Little more than a century has elapsed since RICHARDSON produced the first specimen of novel writing in that country FIELDING and SMOLLETT followed, and gave a permanent eclat to this mode of conveying instruction and delight. It is true that our countrymen were acquainted with romance long before the period of Queen ANNE and GEORGE I.—since the beautiful Arcadia of Sir PHILIP SYDNEY; and many translations from the old French Romances, had found a place, as a sort of necessary appendage, in the halls and libraries of our great men, and country squires. But English novels are literally nouvelles.

They are, however, of a much older date in France, from whence the term has been derived: though, from the period when the beautiful and unfortunate HELOISE astonished the whole learned world by the brilliancy of her genius and the variety of her acquirements, in the 12th century, to the reign of FRANCIS I. we know of no writer in this seductive part of literature. But, in the time of FRANCIS, who was contemporary with our eighth HARRY, and with Charles the fifth of Spain—an age remarkable for genius and learning, considering the general darkness which had before reigned in Europe—there appeared a lady of France who quickly became as eminent for literary talents as the works of fancy, as she was for beauty and gallantry. This was Marguerite de Valois, sister of the King, and, afterwards Queen of Navarre. This famous lady wrote no fewer than one hundred Novelles; though they were all comprized in one Book, like the Decameron of BOCCACIO; she is said to have been very beautiful; very learned; and ——— very licentious: The latter trait we can well believe; for, being desirous of giving our readers a specimen of novel writing 300 years old, we have had some difficulty in selecting a production of hers, sufficiently free from pruriency, in this respect, for our pages; however, we have selected one for this week which is a fair specimen of her playful style; in our next, we propose to give one of her wild, romantic, and more interesting stories.

It remains only for us to state that this lady was born in the year 1492; educated in the Court of LOUIS the 12th; first married to the Duke d' Alençon, who died in 1525 and afterwards to Henry d' Albert, King of Navarre, in 1527. Her writings, even in that day of general coarseness, were considered as bordering on the licentious. Her work entitled "Le Miroir de l'ame Pecheresse" brought her under the censure of the Sorbonne; nay, she was even caricatured and ridiculed on the stage (which was then chiefly devoted to religious purposes) and that so frequently as to oblige her to complain to the King, and have a stop put to it.—The tale of the "Two Cordeliers," which we now publish, brought all the ecclesiastics upon her; though we really cannot discover any extraordinary degree of satirical point in the allusions it contains; it appears to us nothing more than a playful sally of harmless wit. But there is often the most sensibility where there is the greatest frailty: at all events, the talents, learning, various accomplishments, and beauty of this lady, made her famous among the greatest names of her time.

Our readers will find an account of some interesting experiments in the use of Congreve's Rockets, in the whale fishery—What triumphs may not the mind of man anticipate by the aid of science? nothing more powerfully indicates the vast superiority of mind over matter! what an immense difference, in the scale of mere physical power, does there not exist between the bodily powers of a man and of a whale? yet, by a simple application of scientific principles; man is able to subdue in a single moment, and as if the lightnings of heaven were in his hand; the stupendous leviathan of the great deep, and lay him motionless on the surface of the waters. How many, and how deeply interesting are the reflections to which the contemplation of such a subject gives rise! But we have introduced it here for the sake of throwing out a hint to our neighbors of the United States, upon whose coast it seems now beyond a doubt that the great Sea serpent actually makes an annual appearance. It is not probable that even such a monster could resist the deadly rocket, when thrown with precision from a reasonable distance, and nothing could be more gratifying to Naturalists, than the capture of an animal which has been so long, and by so many, considered fabulous. For our own parts we have no doubt of its existence—the voyager amongst the nothern Isles of Great Britain, and along the coast of Norway, who should doubt on the subject, would be universally ridiculed by the natives. The animal may not however be so large as to swallow a ship, or well as a man, which, in the old engraving in OLAUS MAGNUS, and in one lately in our possession, it appears to be doing. But enough of this.

Under the head of United States our readers will find a communication dated New York, Dec. 3d, which affords matter for general congratulation. We wish there was such an understanding between all civilized States, as well as a police so well organized, as to render it next to impossible for fugitive rascals to escape the ends of justice. It would be a powerful means of checking the perpetration, if not the growth, of crime. We never could very well comprehend why any distinction should be made between an absconding debtor, and one guilty of what is deemed a more capital offence, as to the degree of protection that should be afforded, being much of the same opinion (though we should not express it exactly in the same way) with an honest jack-tar who, on being threatened with loss of brains by a highwayman that held a pistol to his head, unless he delivered his money—cried out, "as he squirted some tobacco juice from the corners of his mouth—"Blow away and be ———, a man may as well be without brains as money."

"Having noticed an interesting account, of the rapid progress in improvement which is making at the Marmora Iron-works, in the Kingston Chronicle of the 6th inst. and being well aware of the respectable character of that publication, and of the ability, candour, and exemplary propriety with which it is conducted, and therefore of the consequent impression any statement found in its columns is likely to make on the public, we beg leave to correct an inadvertence in the account alluded to, which may lead to erroneous calculations and vain prospects. It is stated in this account that "On the S. East corner of the CROWE LAKE stands an inmmense rock of the most delicate white marble, enough to supply the whole country for ages."!

Now, if this were really so, we should have good reason to congratulate our Canadian brethren on such a discovery; for, when we were last in England, white statuary-marble was worth Three Guineas per cubic foot, in the block. We have, however, explored every part of the shores of the Crowe Lake, and the greater part of the adjacent country for many miles, and we believe we were the first, excepting the native Indians, who found the rock alluded to, which is nothing more than Feld-spar and Quartz, of a white colour resembling marble. There are many strong indications of Copper at this spot, and we have no doubt that this mineral will be found at no great distance from it. In short the whole of that part of the country is rich in mineral productions, but certainly not in white marble!

We are sorry to observe, by the last Chronicle, that a Gentleman of Col. NICHOL's standing in this country, and one to whom the public is in debted on so many occasions, wherein all comment would be superfluous, should think it necessary, to notice the assertions of such a writer as the Ob server; of whom, as a journalist, we believe there is now but one opinion throughout the Canadas; and should the respectable Member for Norfolk think it worth while to contradict the false statements and literary forgeries of that scurrilous, and illiterate candidate for popularity amongst the dregs of society, (for surely none but the dregs of society can take pleasure in reading the heterogeneous mass of crude malignity and folly which dribbles weekly from his pen,) we can assure him of abundant employment. This same Observer often reminds us of a certain little insect, a Beetle, described by Naturalists, as spending the short term of its existence in rolling up little balls of excrement; and, at last, burying itself in the magazine of filth it has taken so much pains to hoard up, it sleeps until again called forth, by its apparently evil destiny, to resume the filthy labour.

The great moralist of the last century observed that where there was shame, in time there might be virtue:—but: alas! this case is hopeless, for in it there appears no shame; but, on the contrary, a boasting in that which most men consider infamous.

Late Calcutta Papers.

By the Clarion, from Calcutta, papers to the 18th July have been received.

They contain additional details of the destruction of life and property occasioned by the tremendous hurricane and deluge, experienced in India, in June last; but melancholy as the truth is, it shows that the accounts which augmented the deaths to 100,000 were greatly exaggerated. The violence of the hurricane continued two days: and in four days the rain guaged twelve inches! In Burrisaul the greatest destruction took place. The following account of the losses in the Thannan division of Gurmudoile, northward of Burrisaul, will serve to show the extent of the calamity:—

Persons drowned,	547
Houses destroyed,	16,894
Bullocks and goats destroyed,	16,904
Maunds of rice destroyed,	6,787

Major STUART, who had been sent from Calcutta with supplies for the desolated districts, writes from Burrisaul, that in six Thannas 3,884 persons were missing, and that 500 dead bodies had floated ashore. Other accounts augment the deaths to 12,000; that in one district, containing a population of 5096, three thousand perished in the Bazar. Accounts of such disasters are frequently exaggerated.

It appears by a Calcutta paper of 18th July, that it rained violently from sunset on the Sunday preceding until 8 o'clock on Monday morning; and fears were entertained of additional injury therefrom to the Indigo plants.

The ships Ganges and Topaz, arrived at Portsmouth on the 7th of Oct. from the East Indies. The former was built at Bombay, and brought home the frame work of two other ships, and between her and the Topaz 450,000 dollars.

Indian Army.—The army in the service of the East India Company consists of, in all 100,000 regular native troops, officered by about 4000 Europeans; militia and irregulars about 30,000; and European forces, 20,000; forming an army of 230,000.

Extraordinary Pecuniity.—A sow in the possession of Mr. Burtonshaw, of Webber row, Blackfriars road, Surrey, littered twenty-eight pigs; and what adds to the singularity of the circumstance, she destroyed fourteen of them, as it continues that nature had been more prolific than could constitutionally be sustained. The remaining fourteen are at this time alive, and in a thriving state.

The Utica Sentinel says, the Directors of the Company owning the passage boats which ply on the Canal, between Utica and Montezuma, have recently declared and paid to the Stockholders a dividend of $86 per share, which is equivalent to 156 per cent for the last six months on the capital employed. A more productive investment has probably never before been made in this or any other country.

A writer in the Southern Patriot says, "It is believed that the number of slaves in the United States amounts to about one million five hundred thousand. The late census shows it to be greater. These, estimated at $300 per head, would amount to four hundred and fifty millions of dollars."

Origin of the term "Spinster."—Amongst our industrious and frugal forefathers, it was a maxim that a young woman should never be married until she had spun herself a set of body, bed, and table linen. From this custom all unmarried women were termed Spinsters, an appellation they still retain in all law proceedings.

Some time since a young Englishman, sojourning in the South of France, felt a desire to attend a place of worship; he accordingly proceeded on the sabbath to a chapel, wherein the English service was performed: after being refused admittance into several seats on account of their having been previously engaged by persons of distinction, he at last seated himself on one belonging to a French Count, refusing to stir until the Count arrived. He had not, however, been long seated, before it was intimated that the clergyman was gone to a bear hunt, and the congregation were obliged to depart without the service being performed.

British Navy.—By the quarterly official returns of the Admiralty, made up to the 25th ultimo, the total number of ships is 600, including 84 ships, &c. now building in different dock-yards. Amongst the latter are four 120 gun ships; two of 110 guns; one of 86; four of 84; six of 80; one 74—the remainder from 50 down to 10 guns.

Lieut. Robert Hood of the British Navy, while on the Arctic Land Expedition, and after great sufferings in the prosecution of his arduous duties, was assassinated by a Canadian, on the 24th of October, in the 24th year of his age.

A well merited Compliment.—The friends of civil and religious freedom in Glasgow, have presented two beautiful silver goblets, to Mr. Lawless, Editor of the Belfast Irishman, in token of their approbation of his public conduct. The following is a copy of the Inscription:

"Presented to John Lawless Esq. of Belfast, by the friends of civil and religious freedom, in Glasgow, as a testimony of their high admiration of the talents and independence he has manifested in his able and eloquent advocacy of that principle."

Mr. Lawless, in the course of his reply to the address of his friends, very well observes of political time-servers, that "they rise in their political atmosphere by throwing out the ballast of their integrity, and are exalted in proportion to the degrees of their servility."—Liverpool Mercury

The amount of tolls on the great Canal at Utica is estimated at $60,000 for the present year.

The tenants of the houses which were deserted owing to the late yellow fever have met, to learn if the landlords would remit the rents in part if not in whole, and if they do not, to provide for the poor families who are unable to pay, by subscriptions.—N. Y. pap.

Crying.—At a late assize in Somersetshire, the court was exceedingly crowded with persons anxious to hear a cause of great interest, which stood first on the list. The Judge entered, and taking his seat, waited till the crier should open the court. No voice, however, was heard; all was silent suspense. At length the Judge rose up—"where is the Crier? what is he about that he doesn't open the Court?"—when a countryman, pressing forward among the crowd, exclaimed—"He's not here; his wife's dead, my Lord; he can't cry to day."

most promising appearance for the approaching vintage, such, in fact, as was observed in the year 1811, the famous comet year. The accounts from Russia, too, speak in wonderful terms of the fertility of the soil this year. Every where the field fruits have ripened much earlier than usual. Rye was harvested in some places as early as the beginning of July, a circumstance hitherto unknown.

Six or eight months ago, Colbert told the farmers, by way of comfort, that wheat would soon be at four shillings a bushel. By a piece of good luck rather rare with that writer, his predictions has been actually fulfilled in this quarter; for on Wednesday last new wheat of good quality was selling in Edinburgh market at 4s. and 4s. 3d. a bushel.—Scotsman.

The Colombian Republic have provided for a general and widely extended system of National Education—church property to a large amount has been appropriated to this noble purpose.—Wherever there was a convent or a monastary there is to be now a School, besides a number of Colleges, for the promotion of learning and the arts and sciences.

Love.—A gentleman in England was lately smitten with the charms of a young lady who was deaf and dumb, and who was an instructress in an institution for the relief of that unfortunate class. Not being able to communicate his wishes to the fair one in any other way, he entered the institution as one deaf and dumb, learned their manner of expressing themselves, gained the heart of his fair instructress, and in six months led her to the altar. Here the priest handed him a paper to sign on which was written, "Do you promise to take this woman to be your true and lawful wife," &c. when, to the astonishment of the company, he distinctly answered, "I do." An explanation took place and the ceremony went on.

The Longitude.—A very ingenious instrument has been invented by Mr. Harley, of the chain pier, at Trinity, for ascertaining the longitude. It has been submitted, we understand, to six naval officers, who concur in opinion that it will completely answer its intended purpose on land, or at sea in calm weather, but they are decided an opinion of the impracticability of using it at sea in stormy weather, owing to the violent motion to which it will be subjected; this objection, however, if it cannot be obviated, must apply to all other instruments of a similar description. Mr. Harley has taken his instrument to London, to be there inspected. The reward offered for the discovery of a complete instrument for ascertaining the longitude is, we believe, £20,000.—Edinburgh Advertiser.

The story lately re-published from the London Globe respecting a great secret discovered in the art of tanning, for which the inventor had received a large sum of money turned out to be fabulous.

Spontaneous Combustion.—A large mass of Virginia coal in the United States Navy yard at Brooklyn, for the use of the blacksmiths shops, took fire on Saturday afternoon, and excited much alarm for the safety of the timber sheds near it. and the new frigate on the stocks. It became necessary to cut away some of the scaffolds, and with the aid of the engine companies of Brooklyn, the fire was soon extinguished, and the coal removed to another place. The coal was small and remarkably sulphurous.

CONGREVE'S ROCKETS USED IN THE WHALE FISHERY.

A letter from Capt. Kay, of the ship Margaret London, dated Sept. 7, addressed to Lieut. Colquhoun, R. A. says—

"I have taken the liberty of inclosing you an account of a few trials I have made of Congreve's Rockets. Fearing the harpooners would not fire it correctly, I had determined to try its effect myself and it was not until 8th June that an opportunity presented. Early on that morning a whale, of the largest size, was discovered near the ship, I immediately pursued it, and when sufficiently near fired a rocket into its side; the effect it had on the fish was tremendous, every joint in its body shook, and, after lying for a few seconds in this agitated way, it turned on its back and died. It appeared on flinching, that the rocket had penetrated thro' the blubber and exploded in the cran near the ribs; the stick and lower part of the rocket was taken out entire, the upper part was blown to pieces. My next attempt was on the 9th July, on a whale of the same size as the former, but owing to the rapid motion of the fish, and a heavy swell of the sea, which rendered the boat unsteady, the rocket entered below the middle part of the body, in consequence of which its effect was considerably lessened, its frame, however, was much shook by the explosion, and it immediately sunk, but rose again, blowing an immense quantity of blood: it was then struck with a harpoon and killed with lances. On flinching, part of the stick of the rocket could only be found, it therefore appears probable that the rocket burst in the inside of the fish.

"I much regret the want of an opportunity of trying them on the sun fish which, although frequently pursued, could never approach sufficiently near for a rocket to have the slightest effect. The unusual scarcity of whales also precluded a more extensive trial of them.

P. S. We have killed 9 fish this season, and have about 130 tons of oil."

SCOTLAND.

Extract of a letter from Dunkeld—"We had a fine sight here on Wednesday last, the 25th Sept. It will be recollected that his Grace the Duke of Athol had equipped, with a handsome uniform, one hundred highlanders of his tenantry, uncommonly fine looking men, to attend his Majesty in Edinburgh, though it was afterwards thought proper to countermand their march southwards. This body of men, having arrived from the upper part of the country on Tuesday evening, were next day inspected by his Grace, accompanied by Lord Glenlyon, Marshal Beresford, Sir David Baird, Sir Alex. M'Kenzie, &c. After going through several military movements, much to the satisfaction of the distinguished personages present, they were regaled with a very substantial dinner in the avenue in front of Dunkeld House. Many suitable toasts were given, accompanies by loud cheering, and the forty gallon china punch bowl had to be replenished once and again ere they parted. Nor was the festive dance wanting, in which the Highlanders acquit themselves with so much agility; good order and decorum, however, marked the whole business of the day. Lord Glenlyon's eldest son, grandson to the Duke, appeared at their head in the full Highland dress, this youthful chief conducting himself with the greatest propriety.

GREENOCK, Oct. 4.

The Duke and Duchess of Athol and suite, the Hon. A. Murray and Miss Knight, Col. R Steward & Lady, Mrs. and Miss Smith, and Mr. Burnet, arrived at the Tontine yesterday, and this afternoon, sailed in the Majestic steam packet, Capt. Oman, for the Isle of Man. A salute was fired from the premises of Messrs. John Scott & Sons, on their departure. The stay of his Grace, on the Island, we understand, will be limited to a few weeks, during which, however, various important regulations, intimately connected with the prosperity of the island, will be carried into effect. The disposition of the Duke of Athol to promote its welfare has already been abundantly manifested, and we wish we could add that it has been met with the respect and gratitude it merits; but we hope that the result of the present visit of his Grace will be the harmonising of all differences and the entire extinction of those party animosities which have, of late, proved so disagreeable to the parties themselves, and so injurious to the best interests of the island.

IRELAND.

Very distressing accounts have been received of the state of affairs in this unhappy country, which we have not room to publish in this week's Register—but will give in our next.

United States,

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.

Foreign fugitive from justice.—Thursday last, Raymond, the Police Marshall, returned from an excursion to the Western Country, whither he had been in pursuit of a certain desperate swindler, an Englishman, who had last Spring defrauded the American Consul and other gentlemen at Plymouth, in England, of 30,000 dollars, and fled to this country. After several days and nights of excessive fatigue and vigilance, he had succeeded in his purpose, and left the rogue safe in jail at Whitesborough. This man, whom certain considerations require should not now be named, committed the act in question, on or about the 20th of May last, and immediately, in a clandestine way, took passage to New York. No trace of him could be discovered at any port; and despatches and emissaries were sent to France and different parts in England, where it was thought he might land or embark, to secure his apprehension. It was of no avail—the bird had already flown. The last resort was to watch the villain's family, and whenever they moved to follow them. The eagle must find his prey, though scared for the moment away. In about two weeks it was discovered that they had suddenly and secretly taken passage from Bristol for New York. The principal of the concern instantly took passage for New York also, and arriving in 26 days anticipated them by about a week. Then commenced a system of scheming and watching, and dodging, and intriguing on the part of the family, in order to get to the husband without betraying his residence, and of keen espionage, on the part of the New York Police, which would not rest with interest in all its minutest details. Hays, Raymond and Shaw were employed to watch the vessel and family night and day. Six days the family remained on board; and then giving out that they were going to Philadelphia, took a passage by day break the next morning in a sloop for Albany. The trick was detected; and Raymond, by a quick and conveyance, was ahead of them there. Remaining there concealed a week, they took another break of day to start toward the west, but with all their seeming hurry got forward but twenty miles—four miles beyond Schenectady; next morning, with another early start, they got twenty miles further. But here a council must be called, and some extraordinary demonstrations, as the military people term it, made. The family consisted of the wife, a clerk, and seven children. A suspicion was entertained that they were pursued and watched;—They could no way reconcile themselves to the appearance of that gentleman, (Raymond) who was travelling so leisurely, at about their pace, in the sulky; and they sent messengers forward, and they sent messengers back, to find out who he was, but to no purpose. Sometimes he was in the best apparel of the fashion, and some times in a rough round about and fur cap—but at any rate, he was ever near them, as their evil genius. From this second stage, part of the family, it was finally concluded, should move ahead a day's travel, and the other part remain a day or more behind. Letters, too, were deposited in different post-offices, directed to the husband in different towns and counties; the calculations, no doubt, being that if an officer were in pursuit of them, the offices would be referred to. All was to no purpose to delude the vigilance of the officer. After three days and nights of tireless watching, he had the whole of his convoy once more together, snug in Utica; and some good grounds of suspicion that the man himself was with or near them. Patience was the only virtue; and happily during the night afterwards, he traced the whole family, with all their baggage, which they had brought up the Mohawk, going aboard a canal boat, for the westward; and the husband among them. The High Sheriff of the county, with whom all the necessary preparation had been made, was spoken to immediately, and arrived on the spot with the writs which had been furnished him just in time to seize the delinquent, as every thing was in order, and the horses harnessed and hitched to the boat for departure, he was immediately lodged in the jail of Oneida County, where he now remains.

It was once much the fashion for foreign rogues to flee to this country for refuge; and too much their good fortune to find it. The late experience of some wholesale villains, who have tried the same resource, will very probably afford them a caution to look elsewhere for escape, and at any rate avoid New York.

ANECDOTES.

Anecdote of the late Dr. Barrett.—Vice Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, who had left the bulk of his property amounting to between 80 and 100,000*l* as he expresses it in his Will, "to feed the hungry and to clothe the naked.—A jib (or new comer in College) unacquainted with the person of the Vice Provost, dazzled his eyes one day with a looking glass; upon which the Doctor having detected the delinquent, fined him and his brother ten shillings each, "for casting reflections on the Heads of the College.—(London Mag.)

White Devil.—The caravan halted near the village (Om Daoud) and I walked up to the huts to look about me. My appearance on this occasion, as on many others, excited an universal shriek of surprize and horror, especially among the women, who were not a little terrified at seeing such an out cast of Nature as they consider a white man to be, peeping into their huts and asking for a little water or milk. The chief feeling which my appearance inspired I could easily perceive to be disgust, for the Negroes are all firmly persuaded that the whiteness of the skin is the effect of disease and a sign of weakness; and there is not the least doubt that a white man is looked upon by them as being greatly inferior to themselves. At Shendy, on the market days, I often terrified people by turning short ducting them, when the exclamation generally was—"Owez q ilshi min as sheyttan erradjim"—(God preserve us from the Devil!) One day, after bargaining for some onions with a country girl in the market, she told me that if I would take off my turband and show her my head, she would give me five more onions. I insisted upon having eight, which she gave me. When I removed my turband, she started back at the sight of my white closely shaved crown; and when I jocularly asked her whether she would like to have a husband with such a head, she expressed the greatest surprize and disgust, and swore that she would rather live with the ugliest Darfour Slave.—Burckhardt's Travels in Nubia.

Lotteries.—In the early part of the reign of Geo. II. the footman of a lady of quality, under the absurd infatuation of a dream, disposed of the savings of the last 20 years of his life in two lottery tickets, which proving blanks, after a few days he put an end to his life. In his box was found the following plan of the manner in which he would spend the £5000 prize, which his mistress preserved as a curiosity:—"As soon as I have received the money, I will marry Grace Towers, but as she has been cross and coy, I will use her as a servant.—Every morning she shall get me a mug of strong beer, with a toast, nutmeg, and sugar in it, then I will sleep till ten, after which I will have a large sack posset. My dinner shall be on the table by one, and never without a good pudding. I will have a stock of wine and brandy laid in about five in the afternoon, I will have tarts and jellies, and a gallon bowl of punch; at ten a neat supper of two dishes. If I am in good humor, and Grace behave herself, she shall sit down with me. To bed about twelve."

Permission to wear Rouge.—A Bishop of Amiens, a pious and yet a facetious man, was requested by a lady for permission to wear rouge. The lady's character was half coquettish and half devotee. I can give you permission, Madam, replied the Bishop, for one cheek only.—Com. Adv.

Budget of Valuable Receipts.

No. 7.

Another mode of applying Cork for the Cure of Cholera Morbus.—Take a common cork, lay it upon a clean hearth, so near a hot fire that it will burn to a coal; put the coal into a tea-cup, add a teaspoon full of the best cognac brandy, and then reduce the cork to powder, add two thirds of a teacup full of peppermint tea, make the whole quite sweet with loaf sugar, add a little nutmeg and give to the patient (a child of two years old) from three to four tea-spoon fulls at a time, which you may repeat once in every two hours, if necessary, and it will afford a perfect cure.

Whitlow—how to treat it.—This disease is often a severe affliction to hard working men, such as farmers. It originates from bruises or punctures that inflame the muscles, tendons or membrane beneath the skin—these swellings whilst the hard tough skin of the fingers remain unyielding, cause the great pain, and extension of it up the arm:—the thick skin of the fingers also prevents any exudation or escape of purulent matter, and thus the bone becomes diseased, and a joint is lost. Persons with soft fingers are seldom attacked. An artificial and similar disease may be formed at any time by winding a string round an inflamed finger, or by sowing it up in a piece of unyielding leather. In this case the most stupid person would think only of cutting the string or ripping the leather, and yet is it rarely that you see a physician go to work in this rational manner. He must salve it and plaister it with some ointment, which is just as likely to cure as the treading on it, that is practised by ignorant people before it becomes intolerable—by such practices and such neglect, the disease often runs on till nature makes a gap, and the physician mostly charges for what another has done. The proper remedy is simple and easy: lay open this thick skin, the whole length of the swelling, and dress the finger for two or three days with a soft poultice of bread & milk, and then lay lint on the wound—a little red precipitate ointment may be necessary where the proud flesh does not separate freely. The writer of this has relieved many persons without the loss of a joint, and has followed no other plan for 20 years.

For a delicious Perfume.—Take the petal of such flowers as you wish to preserve the scent of; cardium layers of cotton, and dip them into the finest Florence or Lucca oil—sprinkle a little salt on the flowers, and put a layer of them, and a layer of cotton, alternately, till you have filled an earthen jar, or bladder—lay it in a south aspect exposed to the full rays of the sun, and when uncovered at the end of a fortnight, a fragrant oil may be squeezed from the mass little inferior (if that flower be used) to the otto of roses.

To whiten a sun burnt complexion.—Take an equal quantity of lemon juice and the white of eggs (albumen). Beat them in a foam, set it some time before the fire, still occasionally beating it. Mix with bean flower water, and wash as usual.

Fumigation.—In all houses, whether sickly or not where foul air may have been created, take Salt Petre pounded, spread it on an earthen dish, and pour oil of vitriol over.

Infallible cure for the dysentery.—Simmer together one quart of strong vinegar, and one and a half pounds best quality loaf sugar, for twenty minutes, in a pewter dish, with a pewter cover, as no other will answer. If the patient be an adult, it will be necessary first to cleanse out the bowels with one ounce of glauber salts, united with two grains of tartaria antimony; and a less quantity for a child. One table spoonful of the syrup is then to be given every hour, night and day, for 24, 36 or 48 hours, till a cure is effected. The writer never knew it to fail in effecting a cure of this fatal disease within the limits of 48 hours, even in the worst cases of camp dysentery, during the late war.

Natural History.

From the London News Times.

The Spikenard of the Ancients.—Much difference in opinion has arisen among the curious and the learned as to what this precious ointment was composed of.—The late Sir William Jones was of opinion that this celebrated ointment was procured from the root of the Valeriana Jatamansi, which is found growing only in India. Mr. Lambert tells us also in his illustration of the genus Cinchona, that the Valeriana Jatamansi is identical with the spikenard of the ancients, while Mr. Phillips, in his late work on vegetables, positively asserts that it was made from lavender, and which he says was called Nardus in Greek, from Naara, a city of Syria near the Euphrates, and that it was also called spica, spike; because, among all the vegetable plants, this alone bears a spike.

Mr. Phillips in his history of lavender, says, "it is native of Languedoc, some parts of Spain, Hungary, and Austria; but the most odoriferous plant grew anciently about the city Eperrhedia, and was so much esteemed at the time when our Saviour was on earth that it was sought after with the greatest avidity, and brought a revenue to that city equal to a mine of the most precious metal.—Mr. P. adds, that "Pliny, who flourished a little after this period, has described the lavender plant under the name of Nardus; and that "he notices the blossoms forming a spike, and mentions that the most costly and precious ointment was made from the aromatic leaves of of the Nardus, and that the spikes (blossoms) sold for 100 denari (£3. 2s. 6d.) per pound." The Romans, says this naturalist, esteem the leaves of the Nardus that are brought from Syria as the best, next to that, the Gallic lavender, or Nardus, is in high estimation. What especially confirms the opinion that lavender was the Nardus of the ancients, says Mr. Phillips, is, that Pliny, after having described the same ointment mentioned by the evangelists, which he directs to be kept in vessels of alabaster, observes, that the flowers or spikes of the plant being laid in wardrobes gives a most agreeable scent to the garments. In speaking of the Valerian of Nepaul, Mr. P. says, it seems highly improbable that this should be the spikenard of the ancients, as the scent of this root differs very widely from our ideas of agreeable perfumes: and we may presume, that the opinions of the Romans at the commencement of the christian era, with respect to odours, were similar to our own; as we find, besides the spikenard, they extracted their favorite odours from roses, myrtle, violets, marjorams, lilies, orisroot, and jonquils, &c. to which they often added sweet spices and aromatic gums.

Vegetables.—When we consider that the many thousand tribes of vegetables are not only all formed from a few simple substances, but that all enjoy the same sun, vegetate in the same medium, and are supplied with the same nutriment, we cannot but be struck with the rich economy of nature, and are almost induced to doubt the evidences of those senses with which the God of nature has furnished us. That it should be possible so to modify and intermingle a few simple substances, and thereby produce all the variety of form, colour, odour, &c. which is observable in the different families of Vegetables, is a phenomenon too astonishing for our comprehension. Nothing short of omnipotence could have provided such a paradise for man.

Soft roll your incense herbs, and fruits and flowers
In mingled clouds to him, whose sun exalts,
Whose breath perfumes you, and whose pencil paints.

The squid-hound.—The sea snake has been found and confirmed the credit of Egede, (whose word I never doubted) and of Pontoppidan. We shall have the kraken next. A writer in the Naval Chronicle, who creates for the old bishop the new diocese of Pont-oppidum, advertises for one. "I have heard," he says, "such accounts of the squid hound from people who have been on the southern whale fishery, and at Newfoundland, as certainly reduces all the bishop's crimes to a charge of exaggeration." Some parts of one, he had been told, were at Dartmouth, and he believed that naturalists were afraid to mention this great fish, lest they should be laughed at for their credulity. He, however, signing himself Fides, requests any of his readers to send him some well authenticated particulars of this monstrous animal. I have seen no answer to his request, and wish therefore, by thus repeating it, to increase the chance of obtaining one.

AGRICULTURE.

A good Farmers' method of raising Potatoes is—He opens a furrow 2 feet 9 inches apart, plants 10 inches apart; hoes or hills them one way only; plants them shallow, namely, about 2 inches, as soon as they show themselves about 3 inches above the ground, he covers about 2 inches of them, in 8 or 10 days, or when the tops are about 6 inches high, he spreads the tops open, and hoes and covers them again to about 2 inches, and when grown up again to about 6 inches, he hoes and covers them as before. By this process, he thinks it possible one thousand bushels may be raised from one acre of ground.

Insects which destroy Sheep.—There is a genus of insects called by naturalists œstrus or gad fly.—Under this class is the œstrus ovis, which annoys sheep, deposits its eggs in the nostrils of that animal, produces disease there, and frequently destroys them. The blind staggers in sheep is occasioned by this insect. The eggs are hatched into larva (grubs, or worms, or maggots) which by their irritation excite inflamation and a running from the nose. When they are numerous, the inflamation extends up the membrances of the nose into the fontal sinus of the brain, producing that vertigo or giddiness which causes the staggers, and occasions the death of the animal. The worms, when hatched from the eggs of the fly, crawl up the nose; and in those sheep which have horns, there is a natural communication from the nostrils of the sheep into the cavity of the horns, and hence the grubs or maggots are found there, as the writer hereof has demonstrated by dissection.

In the season of the year when the sheep are attacked by this species of gad fly, their instinct naturally leads them to avoid their enemies. Accordingly when these insects are heard buzzing about them sheep frequently start and run, from no apparent cause, but actually to shun them. At such times a fly of this kind will drive them from one place to another, and they are observed to hold their noses to the ground to shut up the avenues of approach to their enemy.

With these facts before us, we have only to watch the enemy, and at the season of his arrival give him no entrance, but keep him at bay for a few weeks, till his short race is run. We know of no better remedy than that of covering the nostrils of the sheep with a list of gauzy substance, through which the animal can be able to breathe, and keeping it in its place by some adhesive substance.

THE PEACH TREE.

MESSRS. FRICK, & Co.

In the Agricultural Almanac of the present year, mention is made, that I have used ashes with success in preserving peach trees by strewing the same on the leaves—I thought proper to give the following direction, for public information and benefit, should you be willing to give it a place in your useful paper.

First—At this season (April) after the frost is out of the earth, take the earth from the stem and down to the main roots; examine for the worms, and with a slip of whalebone probe and destroy the worm; have then mixed up, loom, fresh cow manure and leached ashes, an equal portion of earth; otherwise take about a fourth part of good dry ashes, to be mixed instead of the leached; make the same into the consistency of mortar and with a wooden trowel cover the wounds of the trees at least half an inch thick, and then place the earth around the tree

Secondly—As soon as your trees begin to blossom, and while in the dew, either with a small spade (or a Shurley sifter to a pole) scatter the ashes on the trees; and that done about three or four times in the spring, will preserve the fruit and the tree from losing any gum, and if by mischance the ashes have not altogether prevented some branches having gums on their ends, cut them off; if you do not, they will decay, and cause the tree to become unhealthy, as well as the fruit.

Thirdly—At any time in the month of September, commence by small portions to take the leaves and earth from around the stem; and by the last of November, have all the earth, as far as the main roots, bare. It may happen, that for one or two years you may find occationally one or more worms, which being early destroyed, your tree will heal soon with the mortar mentioned.

Fourthly and lastly—Whenever you find any tree shewing signs of the leaves getting yellow, throw or sift ashes on the tree while the leaves are wet, and in less than one week the leaves of your tree will become green and flourish.

Foxes.—We understand that if a little tar be rubbed on the necks of young lambs, no fox will ever touch them. It will have the same effect if applied to geese, &c. the fox having a natural dread of the smell of tar.

THE BUTCHER AND TWO CORDELIERS

One of the Cent Nouvelles Nouvelles,
Written in the 16th Century by the
QUEEN OF NAVARRE,

For which she incurred the displeasure of the Sorbonne, and the hatred of the Ecclesiastics, though the tale appears to us nothing more than an innocent and playful sally that could neither break any bones, nor alarm any conscience, however tender.—Ed.

Two Cordeliers,* arriving late one evening at a little village, were obliged to lodge at a Butcher's and the chamber were they lay was only separated by a few boards from that where the Butcher and his wife slept. Curiosity led the Cordeliers to hearken what the man and woman were conversing about. The husband began talking of his domestic concerns, and said,—"I must get up, my dear, to-morrow, betimes, and give a look at our two Cordeliers; one of them is, I think, in pretty good order, but we will kill both, and salt them down, which will turn well to our account."—Although the Butcher spoke only of his pigs, which he jocosely called his Cordeliers, the poor friars were so frightened, that they were ready to expire with fear, and resolved to save themselves by jumping out of the window.

The thinnest of the two fell lightly on the ground and ran as far as the town without waiting for his companion; the other followed his example but being very fat, fell so heavily, that he broke his leg, and with much difficulty crawled to a little shed which he found not far off, and which proved to be precisely the place where the pigs (his brother Cordeliers) usually lay.

Early the next morning the Butcher got ready his knife, and went straight to the stye.—"Come, come, my Cordeliers," said he, "come out, come out, for to-day I am resolved to eat some of your puddings." The Cordelier cried out for mercy; and the Butcher, who concluded that St. Francis had metamorphosed one of his pigs into a Friar, on purpose to punish him for having sported with the name of a religious order of men, was overcome with fear; but the matter being soon explained, the good fathers, in gratitude for their honorable reception, and fortunate release from their fears, very peacably parted with their host, and very kindly comforted them with their benediction.

* A religious order of men so called.

DOMESTIC.

A Post Office has been established at the Iron Works in the township of Marmora, when of Charles Hayes, Esq. has been appointed to take charge.—Chronicle.

A Salt Spring, likely to afford a considerable supply of this indispensible article, has just been discovered, and is now in operation, on the estate of Mr. Francis Ireland, one of the English settlers on the Canal Reserve in Murray.—U. C. Herald.

Editorial Commentary.

Our winter's supply of paper being driven into the port of Oswego by stress of weather, and loaded there, and having but a very small quantity on hand, we are obliged to adopt an economising system, in the use of that article, until we can obtain a supply by land carriage, by the way of Kingston, or round the head of the Lake. But, in order that our friends may suffer as little as possible by this unfortunate circumstance, we shall use the smallest types, (Brevier,) so as to compress much information in a small compass, pledging ourselves, at the same time, to make up for all deficiencies when our stock of paper arrives, which we may now every day anticipate.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

Such large quantities of wheat arrived early in November from France, England and Holland, at Rio Janeiro that the Markets were completely overstocked. An English ship loaded with flour had arrived from Bordeaux.

English wheat was exported to New-York during last year and the trade in agricultural produce on the atlantic, it seems is changing its direction, now moving from East to West.

It is said a method of cultivating grapes has been discovered, by which they may be grown in England abundantly and used for making wines, which it is pretended will be made as cheap as in France.

The celebrated Englishman, Capt. Cochrane, who is famous both in and out of Europe, for his long excursions on foot, and has been for two years engaged in such a tour in Siberia, to discover whether in the Northern Latitudes there is any connection between the continents of Asia and America, had married in Kamtschatka, a native of that country, and is now on his return. He has not found any junction of the two Continents.—Hamburg paper.

The amount of notes of the Bank of England in circulation during the quarter ending 10th Oct. was £18,251,690.

INDEX AT FRONT.

Horse Shoes in two parts, fastened together with pins, are now made in England by a patentee.

The first Theatre Francais is threatened with a great loss in Talma. Its principal support, is likely to quit it on the 1st of October. He has requested of Government a pension for life of 15,000 francs (about £650) from the date of his retirement. The government will not enter into this engagement; and Talma, who notwithstanding his talents, is not rich, finds himself obliged to visit the provinces, and form some resources for his old age.

A new system of boring for wells, which is performed in the simplest manner, by the mere use of iron rods, forced into the earth by a windlass. The workmen (only three) in a few days get to a genuine spring of pure water. It for every purpose of life; after the water is found, they merely put in pipes down the aperture, and it throws up a fine stream from four to five feet high.

The Post Rates in England are undergoing a very suspicious diminution, as appears from official documents just published, viz:—

In 1817-18 they were	£7,890,148
1818-19	7,531,650
1820-21	6,958,445

Carving the Turkey.—It is said to have been a question in the political conversazione at Paris, what slices of the Turkey were to be handed to the gentlemen of the Holy Alliance?—It was supposed that the legs and thighs (some parts in the Archbishop) would be given to England; wings and breast (Modena and Wellington) to Russia; the back bone (Servia) to Austria; and the merry thought (no matter where) to be reserved as a fit morsel for the erection of a new Grecian State. But as the wild Turkey is somewhat a shy bird, they will take a little time to bring her down; when with careful cooking and a proper sauce, they may (as is generally done on these occasions) fall to without saying grace. It is to be hoped there will be no quarrelling about the rich, juicy, savory, and well-roasted liver—that is, Constantinople.

IRELAND.

The still increasing atrocities of the Cork peasantry disclose the rapid organization of that conspiracy against the rights of property, which is more especially operating against the interests of the Ecclesiastical order. The revenues of the Church, wherever the working of this fraudulent and unequal system has been uncontrolled, are considerably deteriorated, as regarding the several classes of beneficed Clergy; and it is quite plain, that nothing but a strong and immediate interposition can defeat these well-contrived plans of speculation, or unity of arrangement, unequivocally demonstrative of a general co-operation amongst the peasantry, is evident in the proceedings of these infatuated miscreants, whose present policy, extending far beyond a fair and reasonable reduction in the rate of Tithes, embraces a total and unqualified scheme of depravation, which withholds all supports whatever from the harrassed and defrauded Clergyman. Nothing short of actual spoliation no moderate abatements justly proportioned to the exigency which may call forth such remission—will satisfy these contederate plunderers who wage a warfare of perverted law, and systematic outrage against the Protestant Clergy.—Kilkenny Moderator.

The County of Cork is almost in as desperate a state as it was at any time during the last winter and spring. It is against this corn the present insurrection is directed.

We fear we must prepare our readers for the approach of scenes of the most dreadful character. In the southern parts of the country the work of murder, plunder, and devastation, has again commenced, and, as maybe collected from the subjoined accounts, seems to have its origin in a regular and deeply organized system. one of the objects of which, as these accounts make conclusively manifest, is the destruction of the Church Establishment.—Dublin Patriot.

We regret to state, that the system of nocturnal outrage is extending into other districts in this country, hitherto remarkable for quietness.—Cork Constitution.

SPAIN & PORTUGAL.

Lated from Spain.—The Editor of the National Advocate has received a file of Madrid Gazettes to the 25th Oct. inclusive, containing an account of a meeting of the extraordinary Cortes of Spain, which took place on the 7th Oct. The King opened the Session by a speech from the the throne, replete with patriotic declarations, and assurances of fidelity to the constitution. His Majesty was replied to, by the president, Gen. Salvato, in terms truly energetic and patriotic.—The Cortes have been closely occupied in measures for ensuring the total annihilation of the enemies of the Constitutional System. The Army of the Faith, in Catalonia, Arragon, and other Frontier Provinces, still continue to disturb the peace and quiet of the country, but it is evident that these traitorous parties are receiving in almost every rencounter with the Constitutionalists, their merited chastisement.

Madrid, Oct 20.—By the late extraordinary mail which left Paris on the 14th, and reached this capital on the 18th, we have received a letter dated London, October 4, the contents of which cannot fail to be highly interesting at this juncture:—"I can assure you positively that the Charge des Affaires of Portugal, by order of his government has required from Mr Canning a declaration, frank, categorical and decisive, with regard to the conduct of the British Government in case the Holy Alliance, in their congress at Verona, should resolve to threaten the independence of Portugal, and to interpose in the interior concerns of that kingdom. The Portuguese Minister has observed, that hitherto, all the Potentates of Europe, the Emperor of Austria, and all the Potentates of Europe, the Emperor of Austria, and the Kings of Naples and Sardinia excepted, were upon the most friendly relations with his Government, and finally added, that no doubt ought to be entertained as to the sincerity of the wishes of King Don Juan VI. who, of his own will as well as from pure conviction, and without any sort of violence, direct or indirect, had accepted the new social compact, and that the principles, moral, political and religious, of that august Monarch, idolized by the Portuguese nation, were a sure pledge that he will observe with loyalty and good faith his royal word, and respect the sanctity of his oath." Mr Canning has answered to this note that he did not hesitate to declare publicly and solemnly, agreeably to the desire of the Portuguese Minister, that the British Cabinet will never consent that Portugal should be attacked on account of its political opinions; and that his readiness in dissipating the anxiety expressed by the Portuguese Minister ought to be taken as a proof that they were without foundation."

IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE.

Peace with Turkey and Greece.—By the arrival here this forenoon of the Brig Ann, Capt. Ashford, in 45 days from Leghorn, we have received the important intelligence by the Captain, that peace had been concluded between the Turks and Greeks, through the mediation of the Emperor of Russia. The news was brought to Leghorn on the 23d October, by a vessel from Constantinople, and Captain Ashford states that the act was generally believed at Leghorn, whence he sailed on the 25th. He also says, that the treaty leaves the Greeks in the same state of slavery they were in before the war.

NEWS FROM SMYRNA

We were yesterday favored with the following extract of a letter from Smyrna, of a late date, and the "Oriental Spectator," a French paper, printed in that city, 27th Sept.

Extract of a letter from Smyrna, Sept. 30, 1822.

"There is a report current here, that the Capt. Pacha of the Turkish fleet (then in the Gulph of Patra) had seized an Ionian vessel which, after taking provisions to the Greeks in facilitating their flight—and hung the Captain. This circumstance being made known to Capt. Hope, of the Rhine Frigate, his first Lieut. was sent on board the Pacha's ship, to demand restitution of the vessel taken, and punishment of the murderers in the case of the Captain, who received for answer—That he would do well to go about his business, or he would run the risk of being hung also." On this being reported to Captain Hope, he went on board the Pacha's ship personally, and was answered in full, not in the same words, in something to the same purpose. He in consequence called to his assistance five other men of war then cruising in the Archipelago, and anchored opposite the Turkish fleet. The positive result of the manner is not known—though some pretend to say an engagement took place and some Turkish ships sunk; this appears rather exaggerated but that some dispute exists is positive.

UNITED STATES.

A minister plenipotentiary from the empire of Mexico lately arrived in the United states.

The West.—The St. Louis Enquirer informs us, that Col. Cooper has returned from his expedition to Santa Fe. They drove three loaded waggons from Boon's Lick into the town of Santa Fe, if not in the same words, in something to the same purpose. He in consequence called to his assistance five other men of war then cruising in the Archipelago, and anchored opposite the Turkish fleet. The positive result of the manner is not known—though some pretend to say an engagement took place and some Turkish ships sunk; this appears rather exaggerated but that some dispute exists is positive.

NORTHERN CANAL.

On the 26th ult the last stone of the Canal, from Lake Champlain to the River Hudson, was laid by Governor Clinton.—On this route there are 66 miles of artificial navigation, and 15 1-2 of improved natural navigation.—There are 21 locks. The work was commenced on the 10th of June, 1818.—and it is said no Canal of the same dimension was ever so soon completed.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

From the Poughkeepsie Journal,

Sawing Cast Iron with a Carpenter's Saw.

From the Analectic Magazine, vol. 1st. page 369, published at Philadelphia, 1813

"Mess Dufaud, in a letter to Mss. De Arcet, director of the iron works at Montalaire in France, announces that he has succeeded in sawing cast iron with a carpenter's saw, and that all that is necessary to insure its being sawed as easily and in the same space of time as dry wood, is, that the iron be heated to a cherry red. The iron should be so placed as to have a free bearing every where except where the saw is to pass, to prevent any part from being torn off by the saw; and the iron should be cut briskly, using the whole length of the saw, the teeth of which should be set fine. By this simple method not only plates, but mill gudgeons, and even augers, have been cut with great facility. When the piece to be cut is large, two saws should be employed, for the convenience of using and cooling them alternately. The saws receive little or no injury. This useful process, though not generally known, is not new; several years ago, M Pictet observed a workman saw a hot cast iron pipe in a work shop at Geneva.

"On the 26th of February this useful process was tried in the presence of several gentlemen at the round foundry of Mr. Williams, in Waterford, and the success of the experiment was complete. The operation was repeated several times, and always with facility. The iron, as stated above, should be heated to a cherry red and the saw need only be selected according to the fineness of the pieces into which the metal is to be cut. The operation is perfectly easy, and the saw remains uninjured."

In the above account only cast iron is mentioned, and yet the sawing of steel is spoken of.—It would be well to try the saw on heated wrought iron.

ANECDOTES.

A few days ago a complaint was made to an old gentleman in Ireland, in the 98th year of his age, that his youngest son, who is scarcely, had taken improper liberties with a young woman in the neighborhood, on which the father observed that "his son was a giddy youth, and if he did not leave off his boyish pranks, he would cut him off with a shilling."

EPISCOPAL ANECDOTE—Thomas Ragg, Bishop of Ferns, in Ireland, rebuilt the palace of that place, and finding, ere it was finished, that he should not long enjoy it, had placed over the entrance door as follows:—

This house RAN built for his succeeding brothers,
So sharp they are wood, not for themselves but others

It is singular that Napoleon Buonaparte, the Duke of Wellington, and the Marquis of Londonderry, should all have been born in the same year, namely, the year 1769.

DOMESTIC.

THE Annual Meeting of the York Branch of the Sunday School Union Society, was held last week. The officers were chosen for the year ensuing.—Books from the Sunday School Union Society in England have been received to the amount of the last year's subscription, and may be seen by applying to Mr. JESSE KETCHUM, the Treasurer.

The Society returns thanks to those kind friends who have contributed towards increasing their funds; and, finding it necessary to send to England for more books, it is hoped that, all friendly to the Sunday Schools will give, according to their ability, and according to the importance of the object.

Editorial Commentary.

Whilst the Americans are talking about the necessary measures for exterminating Piracy in the West Indian Seas our brave Jack Tars are accomplishing the business, and evincing to the world that their ancient characteristics for bravery and daring enterprize are as proudly pre-eminent as ever.—Cussing the lawless desperadoes of the sea and hunting them into their fastnesses on shore, is high fun for our Tars—something like what vermin hunting is to a parcel of eager lads of select in their boyish days. Our readers will find the details of several brilliant exploits on the coast of Cuba, in this day's paper.

A report is in circulation, apparently from respectable authority, that the Russian Autocrat has determined to compel Turkey to make those concessions which she has so long refused. It is also stated that 15,000 Turks have deserted to the Persians, who are represented as every where victorious.—Constantinople is said to be in a state of utter consternation; and to complete the horror of the Ottomans, the Greeks are stated to be renewing their contest with every prospect of speedy success. We are waiting with much anxiety for a confirmation of these interesting rumours.

We have mentioned in this day's publication the capture of a Sun Fish (which was taken to the north ward of the Shetland Isles). This animal is very rarely met with—and it must have been lately noticed in the public papers, that the Captain of one of our whalers vainly endeavored to strike one of them with a Congreve's rocket.—It happened when we were in the Orkney and Shetland Isles, in the year 1809, examining into the state of the British Fisheries in that quarter, that a Fish of this species was taken, and we took an exact drawing of it, which we shall have pleasure in shewing to the curious in Natural History who may have a desire to see it. The species is so rarely caught that we know but of one work in Ichthyology that attempts to give a representation of it, and even that is incorrect—we allude to the splendid work of Bloch, the Prussian Naturalist. There is a small mistake in the present description as given in the London paper; there, so far from having the countenance of an old man in a frightful contortion of feature, our specimen rather gave the phiz of a good humoured fish wife shewing her teeth as if in a smirking mood.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

Union of Ireland and Great Britain—Mr. Concannon, representative in the British Parliament, is to make a motion at the next session of that body, for the repeal of the act uniting Great Britain and Ireland under one Parliament. A meeting in Dublin has presented an address to him to encourage his efforts on the subject, and instructed Messrs Shaw and Ellis, representatives of Dublin, to support the motion.

THE DISCOVERY SHIPS.—Every day there are articles appearing in the Provincial papers, copied again into the London journals, calculated to create alarm about Captain Parry's Expedition. We venture to affirm, on the contrary, that nothing has occurred since the expedition sailed, to cause fear for its safety, or to make us conclude it has been unsuccessful. The Discovery ships are not at all in the track of the Whalers. They were seen in July last year, at the entrance of Hudson's Bay, which is far to the southward of the fishing ground; and it is probable, that Captain Parry has chosen that route to get to Cumberland Strait, or to some other lead to the westward. He was not to go north to the Lancaster Strait again. The fishery at Davis's Straits has failed so completely this year, because for the two years preceding, the vessels having penetrated to the inlets on the west of Baffin's Bay, and having met great success there, abandoned the old fishing ground this year, and lost their time in attempting again to get to the west, but a barrier of ice, compact and unbroken, extended from one end of the bay to the other, and not a ship was able to proceed more than 20 or 30 miles from land on the east side. Knowing this, it is impossible to keep our gravity, when we read of a gentleman having made anxious but unsuccessful enquiries about Capt Parry. There is no one more sanguine of its success, but no one need be alarmed for his safety. This barrier was not owing to an unusually frosty season, but to winds prevailing from the S. W. that is, right into the Straits, thus preventing the ice from passing into the main ocean; but these winds would serve to break up the ice in the inlets on the American side, and drive it into Baffin's Bay—the very thing to encourage the Expedition to proceed. The west side of the bay, there is every reason to suppose, would be a clear sea. The ships are provisioned for three years, with every attention to comfort, which the experience gained by the former expedition pointed out as proper; and supposing them to have made some progress last year, and some this, if there is any chance of getting farther they will winter there again; and even if the attempt has been abandoned, we may conclude from what happened on the former occasion, that the ice inland would not break up till August, and after this, there is a tedious navigation before they reach the sea. It was the month of November when the Hecla passed Aberdeen, from the last expedition. If they remain there this winter, our first accounts of them will probably be from some of the Hudson's Bay or North West Company's Establishments in the interior.—Aberdeen Chronicle.

We have great pleasure in laying before our readers extracts from the Sierra Leone Gazettes, which present most satisfactory views of that Colony. The indefatigable Sir Charles M'Carty had returned from his tour to the Isles de Los, where he had previously distributed coffee plants among the settlers. One large hill had been entirely cleared and planted with that valuable production, and the plantations in general were in a thriving condition

An incalculable benefit has been conferred on this part of Africa by the introduction of vaccination, which after several failures, has at length been completely effected by Dr Barry, Surgeon to the Forces at the Colony.—Courier.

PHENOMENON.—A large quantity of iron filings and shavings were a few weeks since deposited in a store near Taunton, and a few quarts of linseed oil acid-ically spilt upon it. Three weeks afterwards the heap was opened, and the iron found heated to redness. The iron was free from sulphur, which with iron produces spontaneous combustion

Havana was taken by the British in 1765, when they employed against it 19 sail of the line, 19 frigates and smaller vessels, and more than 11,000 troops. The British were 9 weeks engaged in the siege.

Mr. Griffith of Burlington states that the practising members of the bar in the United States amount to more than six thousand.

The judicial officers in the several states and territories, cannot be less than twenty thousand!

If we are not in a state of prosperity, it is not for want of a multitude of rulers.

Sun Fish.—A fish of this uncommon species was caught, about a month ago, on the north of Shetland, and has been brought home by Captain Wilkinson, of the Greenland ship Mary Frances, of Hull. This fish, according to Dr. Shaw, is a native of the European seas, and from the singularity of its aspect, has long since attracted the observation of naturalists. Its general appearance rather represents the head of some large fish, than a complete animal, the body being short, and terminating abruptly on the hind part. Its skin is rough, and it is supposed to feed principally on shell fish. During the night it exhibits a high degree of phosphoric splendor, from which, and its almost circular form, it has probably derived its name. The present specimen is about three feet four inches in length, and about two feet broad—and its head bears no very distant resemblance to the countenance of an old man in a state of frightful distortion. The fish is sometimes observed to lie on its side, upon the surface of the water, and when taken it was in this situation in the northern seas it is said to arrive at a vast size, and to have been found 80 or 90 feet in length, and of the weight of 800 lbs.—London paper.

UNITED STATES.

Pirates destroyed.—Nassau (New Providence) papers to the 1st instant have been received at Charleston. They give the particulars of the successful attack lately made by the British sloop of war Tyne and her boats, upon a squadron of piratical vessels, on the coast of Cuba.—About 40 of the pirates are supposed to have been killed in the engagement; 17 were taken prisoners by the British, and 28 (who fled to the shore) by the Spanish authorities. These latter are reported to have been immediately executed; and the 17 taken to Nassau, will no doubt meet with their deserts in a like summary manner.

NASSAU, (N P.) Nov 27.

"Expulsi Piratis Restituta Commercia."

On the 24th ult. Capt Godfrey, of H. M ship Tyne, with the Speedwell sch'r, an armed felucca, and two of the Tyne's largest boats sailed for the coast of Cuba, in quest of the pirates which have lately infested that Island, and we have much pleasure in being able to give an account of the success that has attended this very meritorious service. On the afternoon of the 5th inst two piratical schrs with two prizes were observed lying near to Key Frances, which immediately got under way, and were chased towards St Juan de los Remedios during the night—in the morning they were all seen lying at anchor at the Embarcadero of St Juan de los Remedios. It not being practicable for the Speedwell to get near enough, the felucca and the boats were immediately pulled in and attacked them. The pirates commenced a heavy fire, and as the felucca and boats approached kept up discharges of grape and canister. Capt. Godfrey received his firing until within musket range, when the little squadron opened upon them, and the boats giving a volley of musketry, with 3 cheers, boarded, the pirates jumping into the water and their boats. Several of them in the boats were killed in their escape to the shore; and in ten minutes after opening the fire on the pirates, the 4 vessels were taken possession of, with 17 prisoners.

It was not possible to ascertain the number of the pirates who were killed and wounded, but there is every reason to estimate it at about forty.

Soon after the firing had ceased, the Governor of St. Juan, with the public authorities of the place, came on board to congratulate on the event, and stated that the troops on shore had arrested 22 of the pirates, 13 of whom were wounded. The expedition then proceeded in pursuit to leeward, and on the 11th fell in, near Sagua Grande, with two piratical schrs and succeeded in capturing both of them; but being very near to Key Atkenas, the crews escaped to the shore, and it being a complete Mangrove swamp, it was impossible to secure any of them, but several of them were killed by the musketry from the boats of the squadron that attacked them. After this they proceeded to scour the coast as far down as Matanzas, and on the way burned the two last piratical vessels. Off Key Mono boarded two Spanish schrs from Matanzas bound to Principe, who gave information that a few days previous, a Spanish brig of war, in company with an U. S. schr which had been the consort of the felucca formerly captured by the Tyne's tender, and the only one remaining on the coast—therefore, concluding that the coast was entirely cleared of piratical vessels, the expedition returned, and arrived here on Sunday last, with two prizes. All these vessels were well fitted, and completely armed for any purpose.

We are happy to state that during the whole of this service, none of our brave seamen have been killed, and only 8 men wounded.

A WELL-AUTHENTICATED GHOST STORY.

An old woman had for many of the latter years of her life indulged herself in sitting up in bed in such a position that her knees and her chin were constantly next door neighbors. From this attitude she never departed; so for a long time previous to her decease, the tendons and muscles which are used in extending the lower limbs of the body were contracted, and refused their offices. In this situation she was in the habit of taking exercise by gently ac-mpanying, or rocking herself backwards and forwards. She died at last, a fate to which all persons eminent or not, must submit. Her corpse was watched by some of her female acquaintances and relations, "who, towards the witching time of night," the whole party indued out of the room without politeness enough to wish the old body joy on returning to its stationary occupation. On the circumstance being bruited abroad, the undertaker, a man of considerable resolution, ventured into the haunted apartment, and their found the fact as stated by the terrified feminines. But he presently solved the mystery by observing, that the large weights which he had placed on the corpse to straighten it for burial, had rolled off and fallen on the floor, which was the cause of the noise, and the body, being released from its unwonted confinement, had relapsed into the contracted state to which it had so long been habituated. Some oscillations naturally followed the unexpected recovery of liberty, which made the attendants imagine that they beheld the workings of supernatural powers.—Edinburgh Obs.

Vol. II. YORK U. C. THURSDAY, JANUARY 16, 1823. No. III.

By Authority.

YORK, U. C. Jan. 15, 1823.

This day His EXCELLENCY, the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, proceeded from the Government House to the Chamber of the Honorable the Legislative Council, where he arrived about two o'clock, and, being seated upon the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent with a message from his Excellency to the House of Assembly, commanding their attendance.—The Members being come thither accordingly,—His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following

SPEECH:

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL AND GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

In determining to assemble you at the latest period admitted of by the Constitution, I was influenced by the consideration of what seemed expedient for the Public business; and I hoped by this arrangement to be enabled to lay before you the decision of the Arbitrators on the respective claims of the two Provinces in the course of the Session.

Your Address to your Sovereign, in consequence of the interruption which the Public revenue had suffered, and which in an early part of the recess I transmitted to His Majesty's Government by the Commissioner appointed for that purpose, has been received with that attention which His Majesty always bestows on the reasonable and temperate language of his people.

Impressed with the extent of the evils which you represented, His Majesty not only sought the means of remedying them but felt the necessity of preventing their return.—With this view such comprehensive measures were suggested to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, as were considered best calculated to remove all ground for future jealousy and misunderstanding between the sister colonies, and most conducive to their good government and prosperity in their present circumstances and situation.—For this purpose, a Bill was under discussion, in which it was thought proper to impart to you, by means of an Union of the two Legislatures, a just share in all Colonial deliberations, on matters affecting the interests of both Countries.—This important part of the projected Bill, it has been judged expedient to reserve for reconsideration in a future Session.—But that we might not remain without the benefit of a speedy remedy for embarrassments which were pressing and increasing, the express objects of your address were considerately extricated from this delay, to be made the subject of a special enactment; in which you will find satisfactory provision for assuring to you that protection and security which you solicited.

The Commissioner appointed by me on this occasion, in compliance with your joint recommendation, has acquitted himself entirely to my satisfaction.

A favourable reply to your address in behalf of the sufferers by the late War will be submitted to you; and the gracious scheme which has been proposed for your co-operation will doubtless engage your early attention.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

I have directed the proper Officer to lay the usual Accounts before you, and I trust you will make the necessary provision in aid of the Revenue collected under British Statutes, to enable me to meet the exigencies of the Public Service, and for the honorable support of His Majesty's Government.

In obedience to the recent enactments of the Imperial Parliament, one fifth of the Collection at the Port of Quebec, since the expiration of the last Provisional agreement has been received. Warrants have been issued for repayment of the advances which I had procured in order to carry on the Public Service, and the remaining sum has been carried to the proper Accounts, to be applied to the different objects of expenditure authorised by Law.

By the Accounts of the last three years which have been transmitted from Quebec, there appears to have been a material defalcation in the amount of the Collection at that Port.—Our means, however, have been more than adequate to the different appropriations, but not for the redemption of our Debentures.

By the transfer to the Provincial Bank of that proportion of the Debt which became payable in the course of the last year a saving of one half of the Interest will be effected; and I am happy to notice the benefit which the country has thus derived from that Institution.

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN, AND GENTLEMEN,

The Laws which will expire at the conclusion of this Session of the Legislature, will not fail to engage your attention.

In considering the expediency of renewing the legal provisions affecting Distilleries, you will, I hope, regard the occasion as favorable for endeavouring to check the immoderate and pernicious use of Spirituous Liquors; for which purpose, perhaps, some advantage might be derived from an increase on the existing Duties.—In a Country where temptations against the habit of sobriety are comparatively great, it will not appear invidious that I should have thought proper to recommend to your attention, an object which has frequently occupied the Legislature of the Parent Country, and the Councils of other long established and venerable States, and employed their interference; and I am sure you will not be disposed to forget, that you then give the strongest proof of your regard for the public welfare, when you solicit the sanction of your Sovereign, to LAWS judiciously calculated to preserve the health and amend the morals of the People.

Editorial Commentary.

We cannot help congratulating the intelligent, sober-minded, and thinking part of the community, on the hints thrown out by his Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor, in his Speech at the assembling of Parliament, published in this day's Gazette, respecting Distilleries, and the immoderate use of spirituous liquors, from which so many evils proceed. Most ardently do we hope the subject will be taken up in such a manner as to lead to satisfactory results.—There are few measures to be taken that would entail a more immediate and general amelioration in the condition of ordinary society than a heavy tax on Distilleries.—Whilst the morals of the lower orders were less endangered, the fortunes of the agricultural classes would be improved by the increased price of grain that would necessarily follow; and, even the Distillers themselves should have no cause to complain, when they consider the fact, which is sufficiently notorious, that no large fortunes were made by British Distillers until a very heavy tax was laid upon their establishments, by which they became fewer, but much more profitable.—We trust that the duty in this country will be increased to One Dollar, at least on the Gal on, and then our farmers may look with confidence to better times, even at home

Our readers will find an extract from an English paper, a merged our assertion for this week of a very extraordinary nature; alluding to the importation at Hull, of human bones from the Continent and affording matter for deep and serious reflection. The remark of our ingenious friend "SHAKSPEARE that the noble dust of an Alexander, or a Cæsar might, perhaps, be covered to the stopping of a bung hole of a beer barrel" is it at least as much often more sound philosophy that is daily verified, as of fancy.—The learned and ingenious Sir THOMAS BROWN, goes still further—he says "these walls of flesh, wherein the Soul doth seem to be immured before the Resurrection, are nothing but an elemental composition, and a fabrick that must fall to ashes;" all Flesh is Grass, is not only metaphorically, but literally true; for all those creatures we behold are but the herbs of the field, digested into flesh in them, or remotely enriched in ourselves.—Nay, further, we are what we all abhor, Anthropophagi and cannibals, devourers not only of men, but of ourselves; and that not in an allegory but a positive truth;—for all this mass of flesh which we beheld, came in at our mouths; this frame we look upon hath been upon our trenchers; in brief, we have devoured our selves."

All that tends to humble the pride of man brings him nearer the state in which he ought to be found; and, pace relaglos is exalted, rather than debased by reflecting how wonderful must be that power which could so compound more elementary materials as to produce that living miracle the frame of man, as a temporary mansion for a spirit that is to live for ever. The simplicity and meanness of the materials exalts the character of the workmen; and nothing can more strongly evince the glorious origin and divine nature of the spirit of man, than the wreck of that frame which it has early broken up, without any thing of consequence being done.—We think it very probable, either that the Asteroid is headstrong—and that our former conjectures are about to be verified; or, that all the most material business was settled beforehand. The Crescent begins to look pale:—The recent successes of the Greeks, and of the Persians, are fully confirmed;—and, it is a fearful sign for the Ottomans when cash becomes scarce, which is said now to be so much the case that the plate belonging to private individuals in Constantinople is ordered into the public Treasury for the purpose of being melted down and coined for the payment of the army.

The superb Church of St. Peter, at Venice, has been struck by lightning and reduced to a heap of ruins. Next to the celebrated one of St. Mark, it was the finest in that famed city.

Having had news of our supply of paper being on the way, we hope this will be the last publication on half a sheet.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

The following account of George IV. is given in the London Morning Chronicle, of 24th October.

The King.—"His Majesty, since his retirement to his cottage, at Windsor, has spent his time in unusual privacy, admitting scarcely any one to break in upon him, except occasional State Messengers from the different Departments. He rises very early, and retires early to bed; his associates are the dear and intimate friends to whom it is his Majesty's pleasure to devote himself, while estranged from the busy scene of political cabal. His Majesty now and then drives his little low chaise and two ponies through the private rides in Windsor Great Park, with one companion and a solitary groom. The cottage and greenhouse, and all the new apartments are complete, and occupy in their arrangements much of his Majesty's leisure. There are within the park, many large preserves for game, and pheasants in abundance. The King has a few times indulged himself with his pussy and his gun, and has on these occasions proved himself an admirable shot."

The King and a Museum of Art.—It is well known that England, with all its wealth in almost every Art, and its love for it, is the only state in Europe which does not possess a national Collection of pictures. His Majesty, with a view to remove this national disgrace, is said to have expressed a wish that a Museum should be erected to contain works of Art, and to which the public should have free and reasonable access. The Sovereign has been an ardent collector of pictures for many years, and the chambers of Carlton Palace exhibit some splendid specimens of all the Flemish and Dutch masters, and the most choice and admirable pictures painted during the bright era of the Italian school. These, numerous as they are, the King will freely contribute, together with the matchless Cartoons, by Raphael, now at Hampton Court, the Two Misers, in Windsor Castle, and a good selection from the palaces at Kensington, Hampton Court, and Windsor, in addition to his own. The plan is to be carried into effect under the direction of a Committee of Taste, and a power given to that Committee by Parliament, with a grant of certain funds, in order that no opportunity of enriching the Collection by purchases (either abroad or at home) may be lost — Chambers are to be erected to contain the Elgin and Phygalian Marbles, and all the rare Works of Art now in the British Museum, so that the whole of our national treasures may be seen at once.

The Marquis Canova, the greatest artist of modern times, died at Venice on the 13th of Oct. at the age of 65. after a short illness.—He arrived from Rome on the 4th, and soon after was seized with vomiting, and then with a convulsion hiccough, which prevented him from keeping any food upon his stomach. This produced an extreme degree of debility, and finally his death. He was buried in the patriarchal church of St. Mark, at Venice.

The late Mrs. Garrick.—Mrs Garrick was in the habit of making a pilgrimage every year to her husband's tomb in Westminster Abbey, on the anniversary of his death. The manner in which she lingered about the stone under which the ashes of her husband rest, attracted upon one occasion the notice of the individuals to whose care the interior of the Abbey is entrusted. They asked her if she would like to be accommodated with a chair? She replied in the negative; adding, that her chief desire was to be left alone for a few minutes. The vergers accordingly retired. On rejoining them, she asked them whether the seventh volume of some edition of Shakespeare (probably Johnson's) had been placed upon her husband's coffin at the time of his funeral? They answered that they did not know, or that they had not heard of such a circumstance.—On opening the vault, for the purpose of consigning Mrs. Garrick herself to it, the volume of Shakespeare in question was found upon Garrick's coffin; the binding was quite perfect, but the paper was much decayed, and the letter press entirely defaced, in consequence of the damp.

So brisk has the tartan trade been for the last 12 months, that several new manufactories have been erected in the neighborhood of Stirling, in order to supply the increased demand. Almost all the persons formerly engaged in the weaving of muslin, in this quarter, have commenced the weaving of tartan, in consequence of its affording a better return for their labor.—Stirling Journal.

The Memoirs of Napoleon, dictated by himself, at St Helena, may be expected to appear in a few weeks. We have, however, to announce another work of high interest in regard to the elucidation of the private character, thoughts and feelings of this extraordinary man; we allude to the Journal of the Conversations of Napoleon with Count Las Cases, which was regularly kept by the Count during the whole time he was at St. Helena. This Journal has lately been restored by the British Government, and is now in the hands of Mr. Colburn, for publication in London.

Rough Tapping.—We copy the following article from the last Alabama Republican. If true, Doctor Blanchard deserves a patent for his new mode of curing the Dropsy.

A matrimonial Adventure, an affair of Honor, a Sovereign Cure for the Dropsy.

"An intelligent traveller informs us, that some time since, a Dr. Blanchard of Alexandria, on Red River, challenged a Mr Murray, an attorney, on some trivial account, who at the time was labouring under an abdominal dropsy. They met in the Province of Texas, and Murray was shot through the belly. The Dropsical matter was discharged, and the bowels, from the inflammation excited by the wound, being adhered to the peritoneum, a permanent cure was accomplished. The parties became friends; and the Attorney remains grateful to the Doctor for this gratuitous and extraordinary surgical operation. We know of no law against shedding water, though there is one against shedding blood. If our medical colleges approve of this mode it is to be hoped the candidates for M. D. will be carefully examined as to their skill in this novel mode of operation. We believe it is a fact generally known to medical men, that the intentional excitement of such a degree of inflammation upon the peritoneum as should be sufficient to produce adhesion between its surface, has in one or two instances succeeded in curing abdominal dropsy.

The London Morning Chronicle of the same date has the following paragraph respecting the affairs of Greece, in addition to what we extracted from it on Saturday.

"City, Tuesday evening.—Mails arrived this morning at the Post Office, from France, and Holland. By the former letters have been received from Vienna, dated on the ninth current, which communicate the pleasing intelligence of an express having arrived there, which had left Constantinople on the 15th ult. bringing a full confirmation of the defeat of the Turkish fleet by the Greeks, in which the Barbarians lost six ships, and the remainder of their naval force had been completely dispersed.

"The same advices also affirm that the total destruction of the Turkish army, which had invested the Morea, was generally known in the Turkish Capital. Greece is consequently enabled still to afford protection to her Christian population, during the ensuing winter, and the ultimate success of her mighty efforts to be free becomes daily more probable."

MR. ROBERT GOURLAY.—The following was received by Mr. Hume, M. P., from the editor of the Devizes Gazette, in answer to his inquiries respecting Mr Gourlay:—

TO JOSEPH HUME, ESQ. M. P. &c.

Gazette Office, Devizes, Oct. 24 1822.

Sir,—The paragraph quoted from my paper into The Times, relative to Mr. Gourlay, is too true. I received the information from a lady of the parish of Wily, who is on a visit to her friends in Devizes. The farmers of the parish who knew him in his prosperous days, disliking to see him on the highway breaking stones, have within these few weeks resolved to allow him the parish pay without work. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient humble servant,

GEORGE SIMPSON.

BISHOP OF CLOGHER.

Extract of a letter from Armagh, dated Oct. 21.

"I have just returned from the Metropolitan Court, where I heard the whole of the evidence read respecting the charge against the Bishop of Clogher; and the sentence of deprivation and degradation read by the Primate; so that the business is now at an end. A more disgusting detail of a disgraceful transaction cannot well be conceived; it was an open Court to day, but as little publicity was given of the Court, that very few auditors were present. The Primate was assisted in his Councils by four other Bishops, who were on the Bench, who, if one might judge by their countenances, all seemed deeply affected at the disgrace which had been brought upon their cloth. The Primate seemed to feel severely at the painful duty he had to perform and the whole proceedings were marked with the most painful attention. A few days ago there was some apprehension that the removal of the Bishop could not be effected; but, however all legal objections were obviated, and he is driven into that exile he so deservedly merits."—Dublin Evening Post.

REMARKABLE FACT.

It is estimated that more than a million of bushels of human and inhuman bones were imported last year from the continent of Europe into the port of Hull. The neighborhood of Leipsic, Austerlitz, and Waterloo, and of all the places where, during the late bloody war, the principal battles were fought, have been swept alike of the bones of the hero, and the horse which he rode. Thus collected from every quarter, they have been shipped to the port of Hull, and thence forwarded to the Yorkshire bone grinders who have erected steam engines and powerful machinery, for the purpose of reducing them to a granulary state. In this condition they are sent chiefly to Doncaster, one of the largest agricultural markets in that part of the country, and sold to the farmers to manure their lands. The oily substance of the bone gradually evolving as the bone calcines, makes a more permanent and substancial manure than almost any other substance—particularly human bones. It is now ascertained beyond a doubt, by actual experiment, upon an extensive scale, that a dead soldier is a most valuable article in commerce, and for aught we know to the contrary, the good farmers of Yorkshire are indebted to the bone of their children for their daily bread. It is certainly a singular fact, that Great Britain should have sent out such multitudes of soldiers to fight the battles of the country upon the continent of Europe, and should then import their bones as an article of commerce to fatten her soil.

SINGULAR DISCOVERY OF A MURDER.

Extract of a letter from Vanegard.—"What I am going to relate to you might almost pass rather for the fiction of some idle brain, than for a real event, and yet the truth of it is well known and attested by respectable authority. A nobleman in this province being out hunting with several other noblemen, perceived in a forest a bear, with a muzzle fastened to a tree; the animal appeared to be very tame, and by his wailings indicated that something particular was the matter with him. The nobleman gave orders to untie him from the tree, on which the bear fell by a countryman that was near, immediately from a neighboring spot, and began very eagerly to scratch up the earth; the creature only wanted language to show that something, which nearly concerned him, was here buried. The possibility of this was evident to the nobleman and he ordered his people to dig on the spot pointed out by the bear, which consisted of very loose earth. To the no little astonishment and horror of all present, they soon found two bodies covered with blood, which appeared to have been very recently interred, whose wounds the bear with a lamentable howling, began to lick. They made a bier of young trees on which they laid the bodies to convey them to the next village. The bear, still led by a peasant, goes first, and seems to follow, like a dog, a scent that he has of the murderers of his masters. He is allowed to take his own way; and he conducts to a village on the skirts of the forest, when he halts at the door of a cottage, and his former wailing is changed to a dreadful roaring. This induces the nobleman to call together the male inhabitants, & place them in a certain order, thinking, perhaps, by the help of the bear, to discover the murderers, as of course all deny any knowledge of the deed. The people belonging to the hut, before which the bear stopped, also came up from another side, and scarcely had they, according to the nobleman's desire, placed themselves with the others, when the bear, with a dreadful howl, rushed upon two tall fellows when only the animal's muzzle saved from his fury. He was removed from them by force, but the persons so singularly accused, were immediately subjected to a strict examination. They confessed all: the two bear leaders, who had money about them, had been murdered by them in the forest, and hastily buried; the hunting horn of the party having made them fly precipitately, leaving the bear tied to the tree, by which the discovery of the murder was effected in a manner almost incredible; and the criminals were delivered into the hands of justice, and will be brought to the punishment which they so justly deserve.

FINALE OF THE CONGRESS AT VERONA.

A rumour prevailed this morning that the Congress at Verona had suddenly broken up, and that the Duke of Wellington was on his way back to this country.—A letter from Dover, announcing this intelligence, has reached us, and also the Kentish Herald of to day, sent by a rapid conveyance, in which is the following statement,

"By a private letter received last night at this Office, we are informed, on authority on which we can rely, that the Congress at Verona has suddenly broken up, and that the illustrious Duke of Wellington is on his way to England."

Upon enquiry in the proper quarter, however, we learn that no such information has been officially received.

VOL. II. YORK U. C. THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1823. No. IV.

By Authority

YORK, U. C. January 20th, 1823.

This Day, at One o'clock, the Honorable the Legislative Council, and the House of Assembly, severally waited upon His Excellency, the LIEUT. GOVERNOR with the Addresses, of which the following are copies:—

To His EXCELLENCY SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General commanding His Majesty's Forces therein, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

We his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects the Legislative Council of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our most respectful acknowledgments for your Excellency's Speech from the Throne at the opening of the present Session.

Your Excellency's consideration in determining to call us together at the latest period permitted by the Constitution for the expedency of public business, and from a hope of being enabled by that arrangement to lay before us the decision of the Arbitrators on the respective claims of the two Provinces in the course of this Session, calls for our best thanks.

We are deeply sensible of the paternal care evinced by our most gracious Sovereign in seeking the means of removing the evils which we represented, and of a like nature in future, with which view such comprehensive measures were suggested to the Parliament of the United Kingdom as were considered best calculated to remove all ground for fear jealousy and misunderstanding between the Sister Colonies, and most conducive to their good government and prosperity under their present situation, and for which purpose a bill was under discussion in which it was thought proper to impart to us by means of an Union of the two Legislatures, a just share in all Colonial deliberations on matters affecting the interests of both Countries.

The satisfactory provision made by a special enactment for assuring us the protection and security we solicited, and which prevents us from remaining without the benefit of a speedy remedy from the embarrassments which were pressing and increasing, we humbly receive as a further proof of His Majesty's gracious attention to our welfare, and we sincerely hope that we shall never presume to approach the foot of the Throne, but when our prayer is founded in justice and clothed in language of such deference and respect as becomes subjects attached by principle as well as affection to the best of Sovereigns.

The approbation in which your Excellency is pleased to bestow on the Commissioner is most agreeable to us since it was from the conviction that he was in all respects best qualified to discharge so important a duty, that we ventured to recommend him to your Excellency's favorable consideration. We cannot therefore but rejoice that encouraged by your Excellency's wise direction and powerful influence, his services have surpassed our most sanguine expectations.

The favorable reply to our Address in behalf of the Sufferers by the late War, excites our warmest gratitude, and our earliest attention shall be given to the gracious scheme proposed for our co-operation, from which we sincerely anticipate a most happy result.

We shall not fail, in compliance with the recommendation of your Excellency to take into consideration the Laws which may expire at the conclusion of this Session of the Legislature.

We humbly thank your Excellency for having called our attention to the opportunity afforded us of endeavouring to check the immoderate and pernicious use of Spirituous Liquors, by increasing the existing duties on Distilleries feeling fully sensible that when we solicit the sanction of our Sovereign to Laws judiciously calculated to preserve the health and amend the morals of the people, we give the strongest proof of our regard for the public welfare.

To which his Excellency was pleased to give the following answer:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

This very kind and Loyal Address is most acceptable to my feelings—I am confident that your deliberations on the objects which I have recommended to your attention, will be conducted in a manner which shall be best calculated to advance the Honor of your Sovereign, and the true interests of this Province.

20th Jan'y. 1823.

To His EXCELLENCY SIR PEREGRINE MAITLAND, Knight Commander of the most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled, humbly beg leave to thank your Excellency for your gracious Speech from the Throne, at the opening of the present Session; and from a hope of being enabled by that arrangement to lay before us the decision of the Arbitrators on the respective claims of the two Provinces, in the course of this Session, calls for our best thanks.

We are deeply sensible of the paternal care evinced by our most gracious Sovereign in seeking the means of removing the evils which we represented, and of a like nature in future, with which view such comprehensive measures were suggested to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, as were considered best calculated to remove all ground for fear, jealousy and misunderstanding between the Sister Colonies, and most conducive to their good government and prosperity under their present situation, and for which purpose a bill was under discussion in which it was thought proper to impart to us by means of an Union of the two Legislatures, a just share in all Colonial deliberations on matters affecting the interests of both Countries.

The satisfactory provision made by a special enactment for assuring us the protection and security we solicited, and which prevents us from remaining without the benefit of a speedy remedy from the embarrassments which were pressing and increasing, we humbly receive as a further proof of His Majesty's gracious attention to our welfare, and we sincerely hope that we shall never presume to approach the foot of the Throne, but when our prayer is founded in justice and clothed in language of such deference and respect as becomes subjects attached by principle as well as affection to the best of Sovereigns.

We likewise assure your Excellency that we rejoice to hear that the Commissioner appointed in compliance with our joint recommendation, has acquitted himself entirely to your Excellency's satisfaction,—and that from this expression of your Excellency's approbation, we are precisely disposed to concur in your Excellency's opinion as to the able manner in which the Commissioner has conducted the important Negotiation with which he was entrusted.

We further assure your Excellency that we are highly gratified to hear that a favorable reply to our Address to His Majesty, in behalf of the Sufferers during the late war has been received, and that when it is submitted to us, it shall receive our early and serious attention.

We also assure your Excellency that when the usual Accounts are laid before us, they shall receive our attentive consideration, and that your Excellency may rely on our disposition to make a suitable Provision for any deficiency that may exist in the funds provided by the British Statutes that may remain in the hands of His Majesty's Government for the honorable support of His Majesty's Government.

We assure your Excellency of the satisfaction we feel at your Excellency's communication that, by the enactments of the Imperial Parliament, one fifth of the Collection at the Port of Quebec since the expiration of the last provisional agreement has been received—And at the same time to express our regret, that, by the accounts received from Quebec for the last three years, there appears to have been a material defalcation in the amount of the Collection at that Port, by which, though our means have been sufficient to meet the different appropriations, they have not sufficed for the redemption of our debentures.—The preservation of the Public Credit of the Province being of the highest importance it shall receive our early and most profound attention.

We assure your Excellency of our satisfaction at the transfer of the Public Debt to the Provincial Bank, by which so great a saving of Interest has been effected; and that with your Excellency we are happy to notice the benefit which the Country has thus derived from that Institution.

We assure your Excellency that the expiring Laws shall receive our attention, and that in reviewing the provisions respecting Distilleries we shall keep in view, as well the protection of the Revenue as the preservation of the Morals of the People.

(Signed) LEVIUS P. SHERWOOD,
SPEAKER.

Commons House of Assembly,
17th January, 1823.

To which his Excellency was pleased to reply—

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I return you my warmest thanks for this kind and Loyal Address; and I receive with peculiar satisfaction the assurances that you will make the matters I have recommended to you the objects of your early attention.

Those, by the confidence I have derived from my experience of your wisdom and conduct on former occasions, I am persuaded you will treat in such a manner as shall result in measures most condusive to the Honor of your Sovereign, and the true interests of the Country.

NOTICE.

THE Subscribers to the UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE & WEEKLY REGISTER are respectfully informed, that, as an inducement for greater punctuality in paying the subscriptions half yearly in advance, according to the original conditions of this Paper, (which have but in a few instances been attended to,) the Editor has resolved upon lowering the price from five dollars to four dollars per annum (postage included *) to those subscribers who are punctual in the said half yearly payments in advance, by which much trouble is saved in the collection of these small sums. But this allowance of one dollar on the yearly subscription can only be allowed to those gentlemen who pay half yearly in advance.

The Editor pledges himself that no defalcation as to the quantum of matter shall be experienced in consequence of this abatement in the Terms.—He takes this opportunity of stating that the York Almanac and Royal Calendar of Upper-Canada, is nearly completed.

Editorial Commentary.

THE Parliament of Lower Canada met on the 10th inst but it was not opened until the 11th, when His Excellency the GOVERNOR in CHIEF, delivered a Speech fraught with that manliness, candour, and good sense which so strongly mark his character. We are sorry that our narrow limits prevent its publication this week.

The disinterested and impartial manner in which His Excellency LORD DALHOUSIE, as well as our own exemplary Lieutenant Governor, alludes to the great question of the Union, will carry us one more work for a certain political Censor, who occasionally scribbles in the OBSERVER; and upon whose strange, an ambiguous, though truly absurd, critique upon the Speech from the Throne, (published last week,) we were about to comment, when we had the satisfaction to receive the little jeu d'esprit that will be found in this day's publication, from an old correspondent, which may be more acceptable to our readers than any grave comment of our own.

Amongst the subjects already brought before the consideration of our House of Assembly, is one in which it may be supposed we take a personal, and a deep, and lively, interest—and we may be excused for making a few remarks upon it. The FREEDOM of the PRESS, and every question connected with it, concerns every man, woman, and child of the British Empire. It is their only security against the abuse of power, and their only refuge in cases where all other means of attack or defence are found to be inadequate. It is confessedly the most powerful engine that a politician can use;—and, therefore, in all States, where the possession of Freedom is boasted, it ought to be unshackled, and even un-awed, so long as the just regard for our holy Religion are respected, and the rules of public decency regarded.

A Gentleman of unimpeachable character, amiable manners, strict propriety, and ardent attachment to his country has, it seems, (very unintentionally we are sure,) been guilty of some indiscretion, as an Editor of a respectable Newspaper by which he has incurred the displeasure of the House of Assembly, whose privileges are thereby infringed upon, and insulted.—Without daring to tread on the doubtful and dangerous confines of Privilege, we cannot help wishing, most ardently wishing, that those confines were more obviously defined, since so many of us are liable, by the nature of our profession, to offend through ignorance where they begin, and where they terminate. In this instance, however, it must be allowed, the censure of the House might have been anticipated;—because, it was in Committee, and sworn, as on a Grand Jury, to try a certain cause.

We are fully sensible of the veneration and respect which is due to that House, in which we recognize the embodied majesty of a Free People; and, wherein we behold the base of that mighty pyramid which in, we fondly hope, to stand the shock of counties ages yet to come, the wonder and the glory of admiring millions; and we cannot bring ourselves to believe that any individual of so illustrious a Body is willing to forget the grounds of its own greatness and strength, and by what means the broad and deep foundations of British Power have been laid. England owes all her fame; all her wealth; all her superior intelligence; and all the splendor of that high estate to which she has arrived; to the FREEDOM of the PRESS and the FREEDOM of DISCUSSION.

Let us pause to hear what one of the most eloquent writers of modern times has said on this subject —

"One asylum of free discussion is still inviolate. There is still one spot in Europe where men can fully exercise his reason on the most important concerns of society; where he can boldly publish his judgement on the acts of the ablest and most powerful tyrant. The Press of England is still free.—It is guarded by the free constitution of our forefathers. It is guarded by the hearts and arms of Englishmen; and I trust I may venture to say, that if it be to fall, it will fall only under the ruins of the British Empire.

"It is an awful consideration, gentlemen. Every other monument of European liberty has perished.—That ancient fabric, which has been gradually reared by the wisdom and virtue of our fathers, still stands.—It stands, thanks be to God! solid and entire—but it stands alone, and it stands guided reins."

No Country on the varied surface of this globe possesses so much of practical Freedom, at this moment as Upper Canada; and, we trust that the guardians of our rights and liberties will be the last to forget it by limiting, or restraining the FREEDOM of DISCUSSION, and the FREEDOM of REMARK on PUBLIC MEN and PUBLIC MEASURES.

VERONA.

The secrecy observed by the Congress prevents their deliberations becoming public. In the absence of more weighty intelligence, the following extracts from private letters may not be uninteresting to our readers:

VERONA, Nov. 4.

A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday last, at which some important business was transacted, and an active official correspondence was kept up during the day. The Duke of Wellington was out at an early hour in the morning, and walked through different parts of the town, apparently in excellent health and spirits. About one o'clock his Grace attended a Council of Ministers at the House of Prince Metternich, and it is supposed that the topics discussed had reference to the grand sitting which is to take place to-morrow, on the subject of the present political state of Italy.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM EUROPE.

If any dependance can be placed on the following information received at New York on the 11th inst (by the James Monroe) an immediate and a general War in Europe seems inevitable.

Viscount Montmorency returned to Paris on the 30th of November, and was then at day created a duke. An official article was also immediately published by Government in the Paris Moniteur, which contained the following passage —— "The Continental Powers leave to France the end and termination of the affairs of Spain, with the intention of concurring with all their force in such plans of execution as France shall be in a situation to adopt."

Positive intelligence had been received at Verona, that many foreign merchants had demanded letters of mart from the Spanish government, and that a great quantity of these had been transmitted to different Spanish Consuls, particularly those residing in the ports of England, in order to be delivered the moment the official intelligence of the declaration of war should be received. A great fall in the Spanish stocks has been experienced.

COMMUNICATION.

A late profound and ingenious critique on the Speech from the Throne at the opening of the present Session of the Upper Canadian Parliament, which appeared in a celebrated journal of this Province, has caused a facetious Correspondent to send us the following jeu d'esprit.

SCENE.

Not a hundred miles from the Metropolis.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

Mrs. SLIP-STOP—an old gossiping Politician.

Mr CANADA—A plain, sensible, well-informed man.

Mrs Slip-stop—Oh, dear Mr Canada, I'm so glad to see you!—I was just wishing for a friend to whom I could unbosom myself—now, I'm all of a-titter. (shaking hysterically.)

Mr. Canada—I see, Madam, that something has agitated you; but, on such occasions I think you have recourse to a little bottle which you keep in the closet—a salutary cordial I believe;—will you permit me—(offering to hand the cordial.)

Mrs. S—Oh, Sir—it's a sad affair—we must now bid farewell to our stomachs! The Speech from the Throne recommends a Tax on all such dear comforts—such bowel consoling comforts—but whom we have found an Exhortation for these pure waters—ah, Sir, but this the Governor, poor ig norant man, doesn't know.

Mr. C—Certainly, Madam, all the rest of the Province does not wage spirits manufactured here have produced a good price in England; but, those who sold them also know that the British Excise was graciously pleased to mulct its dyers. Possibly, Madam, there was some prudence, after all, in this silence which you attribute to ignorance.

Mrs S—But the Speech, Sir, the Speech, can you defend the ambiguity of the Speech. Sir, tell me that. (with much impatience.) If clearness and perspicuity of language be required in any one document more than another ——

Mr C (interrupting her.)—Still, Madam, as great a Politician as ever I—well, to the Speech then, which has caused all this agitation! but, really, Madam, I've not observed this same ambiguity of which you complain.

Mrs S—La, Sir, why the House even does'nt understand it.

Mr. C—Indeed, Madam! they've answered it, however, with less hesitation than is usual on such occasions. But pray, Mrs. S. be so good as to point out the ambiguity you speak of.

Mrs. S. the ambiguity? why, Sir, is it not averred that His Majesty recommended this vile union of the Legislatures to His Parliament and through whom could he recommend it but through his Ministers? Ah, Sir, what will this world, this wicked world come to!

Mr. C—Very true, Madam, but all this seems to me very plain, and by no means ambiguous.

Mrs S—Why, what would you have, Sir,—didn't His Majesty's Ministers declare they had no interest whatever in the question? How then could they bring it forward? Is there nothing in that, Sir?—Shall His Majesty's Ministers declare one thing, and His Majesty's Government another? —and you, Sir,—even you, Sir, shall persist in saying there is no ambiguity in the Body Politic?—(with vehemence.)

Mr. C—By no means, Madam;—I think I am at length so fortunate as to comprehend you.

Mrs. S—(triumphantly) Well, Sir, and what say you now to the ambiguity?—(puzzering up perpendicularly.)

Mr. C—Why truly, Madam, a person of your proficiency in the vernacular tongue might have used any word in the whole extent of its vocabulary for that which you mean to express with equal felicity. There certainly may be a contradiction in the assertion of two persons, but this is not precisely what Dr JOHNSON would express by the word ambiguity

Mrs. S—Well Sir, since you Sir, and the Gentleman you speak of, are so particular,—so very particular, let it be a contradiction; which all the world knows to be an unheard a thing as an ambiguity; you'll all allow that Sir, I hope, to me, who is laboring so hard, by night and by day, for your benefit; with a view to open your eyes to the enormities of folks in power; and that your dear, dear country may be the better for your services.

Mr. C—I cannot, my dear Madam, allow even this to your kind anxiety for myself, and my dear country—certainly you take a great interest in opening my eyes to the corruptions of our Government.

Mrs. S—(With much eagerness) undoubtedly.

Mr. C—And I hope, Madam, you have no interest in so doing.

Mrs S—(Impatiently) I, an interest, Sir?—I scorn the imputation.

Mr. C—Nay, Madam, I did not mean to offend you. It is one thing to take an interest in a question, and another to have one.

Mrs S—I understand.

Mr. C—Then you, Mrs. S. have no interest whatever in thus attempting to open my eyes——your labour results purely from your taking an interest in my welfare!

Mrs. S—(Smoothingly) Surely, my dear Mr C.

Mr. C.—Well then, Madam, this is precisely what his Majesty's Ministers declared of themselves respecting this question of the Vile Union, as you call it. It gives them no new strength; and new strength; in short, while they bring it forward for the interest of the Canadas, they, themselves, have no interest in it whatever: and now Mrs Slipslop, I hope you will learn, from hence, that criticism is a dangerous weapon in the hands of an ignorant, and an illiterate person.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

It having been intimated to the Undersigned, that in consequence of an advertisement which appeared some time since in the Kingston Chronicle, subscribed with his name, his connection with the late Banking establishment at Kingston has been misunderstood, he deems it necessary to state, that he is not, nor has he ever been, President of that institution. Since the affairs of the Bank were found to be embarrassed, he has been desired by the board of Directors to preside at their meetings, and as their solicitor to assist in bringing them to a close in a manner the most advantageous to the parties concerned; a duty which he has endeavoured to perform.

The advertisement alluded to, was withdrawn after one publication, by order of the gentlemen through whose inadvertency it was inserted.

Editorial Commentary.

Is laying claim to a superior degree of sanctity over many other Papers, both of this country and of the United States, the U. C. HERALD ought not to have forgotten that without Truth there can be no Holiness—all was not in the U. C. Gazette, but in the Weekly Register, that the pure Editor of the HERALD saw the Excommunication of Hogan.—We shelter not ourselves behind a quibble. It is necessary now and then to remind those who seem willing to forget them, of the marked division of our Publication—that in the Gazette there is a barrier between that which is Official, and that which is Non Official; and we should be justly censurable were we to allow any responsibility to attach to theirs, which belongs exclusively to ourselves.—For what appears in the Register we hold ourselves accountable, either as respects the original composition, or the compilation, or the admission from Correspondents; and, we are not ashamed of the part we took in the further exposition of what appeared to us so horrible.

Let us have no pretended sanctity on the part of the U. C. HERALD, that would not pollute its pages with a statement which so many contemporary Editors thought it right to expose; and there is no better way of curing an evil of this kind than by exposing its deformity. This is one of the grand uses of a Public Press. But, as for casting ridicule on the Roman Catholic Religion, or any other Religion, we wholly disclaim any such intention. Those who are best acquainted with us know that the writings of a Roman Catholic Archbishop, (FENELON) are never far from our reach, being among our most favorite books of a Religious nature. In our mind there is any thing rather than Religion in a production so infamous as the one alluded to.—As to the Catholics, we hope we are neither indiscriminate admirers nor unqualified censurers. We trust that we have learned how to distinguish between an absurd idolatry, and the worse worship "in spirit and in truth;" between the substance and the shadow; and, to reverse the commandments of GOD, more than the doctrines of men!

It is of very little consequence to us whether the Excommunication was faithfully reported or not, since the history of what are called Catholic Countries, and of the Inquisition, with their Auto da Fe's &c. &c. afford innumerable instances of sacrifices and anathemas, quite as horrible and disgusting as the one in question. Our surprise, on the occasion alluded to, arose in a great measure from the quarter in which it was said to have originated; and, with all due submission to those who seem inclined to vindicate, or extenuate the proceeding, it is rather singular that the account should have remained for so many months and in so many American papers of note, before it was thought proper to contradict it by substituting a milder form of denunciation.—We had with joy however, this appearance of sensibility, and of shame, and of just dominance to public opinion, as the harbinger of brighter days and of better principles; for it was not until a sentiment of universal horror had gone abroad from the Editors of "the Catholic Miscellany" thought proper to give us another form of Excommunication as the real one used in the case of HOGAN, which, however, is not still wearing a Divine Authority, and is therefore, no less blasphemous!

As the subject is before us we feel it right again to protest against any such doctrine as that which allows a wretched mortal, quite as fallible and quite as guilty, perhaps, in several sins at least, as the one to be condemned, to arrow an exclusive approach to the Divine Ear, and an exclusive right to denounce that vengeance which is above the awful prerogative of the Most High. Such a doctrine is horrible and blasphemous in all its forms, and is wholly adverse to that which inculcates "Peace on earth and good will towards men;"—and which tells us to "do justly, to love mercy, and walk humbly before God."—the most Christian, of whatever denomination he may be, must be quite certain that such a doctrine never sprang from the GREAT SHEPHERD. THATCHER has just,—

> "Most proud man,
> "Drest in a little brief authority;
> "Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
> "His glassy essence; like an angry ape,
> "Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n
> "As make the Angels weep."

Having a little more room this week, we begin to pay off our debts. In this number will be found the story promised in page 382 of our First Volume, written by the QUEEN OF NAVARRE, in the 16th Century.

Under the Domestic Head will be found two very interesting notices on subjects nearly connected with the growth and prosperity of this country, as staple articles for Exportation. Tobacco and Hemp. We rejoice to see so much spirit in the Western District, and trust the adventurers will meet with such a reward as to stimulate others to similar exertions, so praiseworthy and beneficial to the individuals and so advantageous to the country. As a good deal of conversation has passed on the subject, we have published under the same head, the identical letter which was received by Col. NICHOL, from Montreal, to which the Editor of the OBSERVER so very unjustly alluded, and so falsely asserted as coming from JOHN RICHARDSON, Esq. of from the House of EWART, RICHARDSON & Co.; although it really came from a Gentleman of as less eminent in the mercantile world and we are glad on the permission allowed us to publish it, because it is fraught with pertinent remark on the present state of the country and must be read with interest.

It will be observed by those of our readers who are fond of the pursuits of Natural History that we expressed some doubts in our 24th number (Vol. Ist) respecting the genuineness of the Mermaid said to have been caught in the Japanese Seas.—Our reasons for thus doubting originated from some experience in matters of this kind; having, more than once, detected impostures of a similar nature.—Being once requested to estimate the value of a very curious, beautiful, and non descript Bird, preserved in the famous Wycliffe Museum in the North of England, on which an extravagant price had been set by the fanciful, on a close investigation, that it had been formed with much ingenuity from various parts of other birds, both British and Foreign, so as to produce a very striking and beautiful whole, very difficult of detection to any other than an experienced Ornithologist. On another occasion we had the good fortune to prevent the truly worthy and liberal Mr BULLOCK, proprietor of the splendid collection in the Egyptian Museum in Piccadilly from paying no less a sum than 300 guineas for what was called a non-descript Mole, from China, but which, after long investigation, turned out to be nothing more than the scalp, and part of the nose of the neck, of the Great Northern Diver, Imber Glacialis, which is found on all the grand lakes of this country. These investigations, and some other of a like nature, lead us first to doubt the truth of what was stated respecting the Japanese Mermaid; and, by an interesting extract from a London paper, given in this number, it seems our doubts are confirmed.

Amongst the absurd reports which are afloat in Europe is one that the Crown of Greece is to be offered to the Duke of WELLINGTON on certain conditions, the principal of which is, that he shall forth with take the command of the Grecian Armies!!!

The last Mail has brought important news.—There is every appearance of an immediate War in Europe. We have endeavored to compress as much information on this subject, as we are possessed of, into a digest of European Politics.—As the Duke of WELLINGTON has so strongly recommended pacific measures in regard to the differences between Ferdinand and Spain, and those between Russia and Turkey, it must be presumed, for the present at least, that it is the intention of Great Britain to stand aloof, until her interference absolutely necessary for the protection of her own rights, or the advancement of her own interests. We regard the tenders sent down to Portsmouth for the immediate equipment of a formidable squadron of ships of war, merely as a precautionary measure, or, for some purpose of observation. France may think it politic to employ some of her turbulent spirits in a Foreign war, for the purpose of getting rid of them, or finding employment, for some dangerous characters that are perpetually sowing the seeds of civil discord at home. However this may be, their outward armaments will render France no effectual aid; and, from England, we can have no other expectation than that of inability, either having turned a deaf ear to the wishes displayed in the councils of that power. We shall be sorry to hear that Great Britain becomes involved in any Continental dispute, as it is likely to be unjust in war, until a few more years of peace have given her energies renewed strength, a strength and power which peace alone can impart. We are sensible, however that the present state of affairs on the continent of Europe is such as to render another general appeal to the sword almost inevitable.

Our friends in the Country will probably expect us to give the Debates of our Provincial Parliament in this paper—it was our intention to have set apart a certain space for a Parliamentary Register, to be regularly continued, but some unsperable obstacles have hitherto prevented us from making the attempt.—whether these obstacles can be removed, or not, a few days will probably determine.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

It is asserted that the old King of the Two Sicilies is about to resign his crown, and fix his residence in the Austrian States, a proof of good sense which perhaps it is hardly to be expected he will give.—It is stated that some changes are to be made in the constitution of the Kingdom of Hanover.

The famous Hunt made his formal entry into London, Nov 15th, with a cavalcade of 10,000 horsemen, chariots, banners, inscriptions, &c.

We learn from advices recently received in this city, that Lieut. Gen. Devereux of the Columbian service, whom we were led to expect to the United States in a ministerial capacity, has had his destination changed for one to England, to which country, and the States of Europe, he goes as a Commissioner from the Columbian Republic. It will be recollected that Gen. La Fayette bore a similar commission to France from the United States at the close of the American war. The determination of the Columbian Government to preserve the Irish Legion, which gained the decisive battle of Carabobo, and even to recruit it to a thousand men, shows that matters are not yet entirely safe and concluded in that country.

We also learn by the same accounts, that three agents were expected from England for the service of the Colombian republic.

Analysis of the Church.—There are about 13,000 Clergymen of the Established Church in England and Wales. They are evidently divided into two parties; the denominated—but why, I have yet to learn—Orthodox: the other generally, Evangelical, frequently, Methodistical, and sometimes, Pharisaical. The former, which is by far the more numerous, may comprise about 10,000; the latter, which appears to be annually increasing, and to be chiefly composed of pious, zealous Clergymen, and expectants thereof, exemplary in their conduct, very useful members of the community, and consequently unduly attached to the Established Church, but as ardently solicitous for its reformation, may comprise about 3,000. Of the Orthodox Clergy it has been fairly computed that at least three fourths are attached to the Established Church, merely under the influence of pecuniary considerations. These, together with their families, dependents, patrons, &c. may amount to about 40,000; and in each parish, one with another, there are probably about twenty individuals habitually, or irregularly but incontrovertably attached to the Established Church without any regard for its reformation; making altogether about 260,000.

Optical Trap.—To the curious it may not be uninteresting to be informed, that an ingenious sports man in this vicinity, (Newport, R. I.) has lately invented what appears to be an entirely novel mode of trapping birds, animals, &c. This seems to be founded on the principle of the fondness of many animals to associate with each other—and it is effected merely by placing a common mirror in a suitable trap, so situated that the animal, in passing to and from his usual haunt—may see itself reflected, and is some how or other curiously impelled to approach the glass, and consequently entrapped—for instance, in order to take minks, muskrats, &c. a common box trap is made use of, with a mirror at the extreme end, (opposite the mouth); this being placed on the margin of a river, or pond of water, frequented by them—they will necessarily see themselves in it, and like Narcissus, fall in love with their shadows, and are instantly taken.—The inventor has not only been successful in taking the above animals, but he assures me that he has recently caught rabbits and partridges, in one of this construction, and that no less than two dozen mice were taken in one night without any other bait.—American paper.

We understand that the Senate yesterday, by an unanimous vote, advised and consented to the ratification of the Convention concluded during the last year, between the United States and Great Britain, under the mediation of the Emperor of Russia, to prescribe the mode by which the first article of the Treaty of Ghent shall be carried into effect, in conformity with the decision of his Imperial Majesty.—Washington paper.

Paris, Nov. 19.—Extract of a Letter from Candia.—"The last entire prize of the Turks to this Island has totally failed; their army, of 21,000 strong, has been beaten in all points of attack. A corps of Albanians, in the service of the Pacha of Egypt, has been almost entirely destroyed. More than 8000 men have been lost during this campaign. The Greek army is scarcely 12,000 strong."

Articles from the Naples papers give many details of the recent eruptions of Mount Vesuvius. On the night of the 23d of October, the mountain offered one of the most splendid sights of nature. The wind having died away, the smoke, which had before been carried off in separate masses, now collected, and formed an immense column of more than a mile in height, resting on the summit of the mountain. This column, penetrated by the rays of the Sun, which were differently refracted by its masses of equal density, presented a most splendid and exhibited the sublime vision of a mountain of fire beneath a mountain of smoke. The concussions of the mountain followed in quick succession. A sound of low thunder continued without cessation. The shocks were felt even in the capital. Frequent gleams of electricity broke at intervals the double darkness of the night and the volcanic vapor, and the finishing to one of the most magnificent scenes ever witnessed by man.

Mr. Farquhar, the purchaser of Fonthill, is a man of extraordinary character and habits. Mr. F. is a native of Aberdeen, and went out early in life to India, where he was employed for some time in a subordinate situation in the medical department. From its practical application the foundation of his present immense fortune is laid. There was some defect in manufacturing gun-powder in the interior, and Mr. Farquhar was selected to give his assistance. By degrees he got the management of the concern, and finally became the sole contractor to the Government. In this way wealth and distinction rapidly poured in upon him, and he attained the particular favour and confidence of the late Mr Warren Hastings. After years of labour, he came home from India, with a fortune estimated at half a million of money, the principal part of which was invested through Mr. Hoare, in the Funds. On landing at Gravesend, Mr. Farquhar, to save coach or boat hire, walked to London, and on his first visit very naturally was to his banker. Full of dust and dirt, with clothes not worth a guinea, he presented himself to the counter, and asked to see Mr. Hoare. The clerks disregarded his application, and he was suffered to wait in the cash office as a poor petitioner, until Mr. Hoare passing through it, after some explanation, recognized his Indian customer—the man whom he expected to see with a Nabob's pomp. Mr. Farquhar requested £25, and took his leave. He then settled in the Upper Bank street, where his house was to be distinguished by its dingy appearance, uncleaned windows, and general neglect. An old woman was his sole attendant, and his apartment, to which a brush or broom was never applied, was kept secured from her care. Books and papers were strewed on the floor: the spot whe e the book was counted was a dirty one, and never removed. His neighbors were not at all acquainted with his character; and there have been instances of some of them offering him money as an object of charity, or as a reduced gentleman. He became a partner in the great agency house in the city, of Basset, Farquhar and Co. and also purchased the late Mr. Farquhar's share in the brewery. Part of his wealth was devoted to the purchase of estates, but the great bulk was invested in stock, and suffered to increase on the principle of compound interest. Every half year he regularly draws his dividends, his mercantile profits, and his rents, and purchases in the funds. In this manner his wealth has accumulated. Mr. Farquhar is deeply read in ancient and modern literature, has and is one of extraordinary vigor and originality—his conversation of a superior order, impressive and animated on every subject. His sentiments are liberal, and strangely contrasted with his habits. His avarice may be considered as a disease which he cannot control. His religious opinions are peculiar, and seem to be influenced by an admiration of the (supposed) purity of the lives and moral principles of the Brahmins. It is said that he offered to appropriate £100,000 to found a College in Aberdeen on the most enlarged plan of education, with a reservation on points of religion, to which, however, the sanction of the Legislature could not be procured, and the plan dropped.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

IMPORTANT.

From the London Courier, Dec. 4.

We have since our last, given the deepest attention to the mass of intelligence which we have received, both public and private, and we are irresistibly led to this conclusion, that war must take place between France and Spain, unless one of two things happen, which we have not at present the least right to expect—1st, that the Cortes will abandon their constitution, and consent to model one upon the views and principles of the Continental powers; or, 2dly, that France has persisted with such constancy, and determination in getting her claim of right to an armed intervention with the affairs of Spain acknowledged, without having the intention of exercising it. What a ridiculous figure would she cut in the eyes of European powers—particularly in those of Spain! Instead of discouraging the Revolutionists in that country or in any other, she would give them additional effrontery and spirit.—They would argue in this way—"The Holy Alliance think to intimidate us by threats, but dare not carry them into execution." Why, in that case, infinite more injury than benefit would be done to the cause of legitimacy, and it would have been better that the claim of right had never been enforced, but that Spain had been left untouched, to all the mischief and miseries of the revolutionary warfare.

Upon these grounds which appear to us perfectly plain and natural, we cannot but be of opinion, that war will take place.

The British Government were actively engaged in the preparation of a Squadron "for special service," to be placed under the command of Commodore Owen.

PORTSMOUTH, Dec. 3.

Active exertions are making to man the squadron under Com. Owen, for a special service—to include the Gloucester, 74, Tribune, 42, Plumet, 46, Forte, the Valorous, 26, the Beliette, 17, and the Heilon, 16

PLYMOUTH, Nov. 30.

Every port in the Channel is still crowded with outward bound vessels; and the shipping lists for the last week contain melancholy accounts of losses at sea, both of life and property.

LONDON, Dec. 5.

Intelligence from Madrid seems to shew that the Cortes anticipate the decision of the Congress—and it does not appear that they have any intention of changing their present Constitution. The success of the Constitutionists is confirmed; but this very circumstance may accelerate the execution of the plans of the French government, in furtherance of the discretionary powers conceded to them by the Congress.

It appears by intelligence from Warsaw, that the Emperor Alexander is raising a formidable body of Troops in the North of Russia; when these are united to his other numerous armies, it be feared disposed to carry into execution his long threatened vengeance against Turkey, he will have much difficulty in accomplishing his purpose.

—INDEX AT FRONT.

FRANCE.

Paris, Nov. 13.—They write from Bayonne, under date of the 12th inst, that several couriers had passed through that place for Spain, which gave rise to various conjectures. The reported intervention of the continental powers in the affairs of the Peninsula appears to be confirmed. It is even declared that England will occupy Portugal for 5 years, and we have just learnt that five regiments of Spanish infantry and cavalry are daily expected to arrive on the frontier of Spain, which is to induce a belief that our neighbours are about to take precautionary measures.

The elections in France had terminated by the choice of a large majority of Royalists. M. Hyde de Neuville was elected a deputy from Nievre, La Fayette was re-elected at Meaux, by a small majority. Mr B. Constant lost his election.

Mr. Benjamin Constant was tried on the 7th Nov. before the court of correctional police, for "a libel published by him against the Procureur General of the royal court of Poictiers, the Magistrate who presided at the assizes in the affair of the Berton conspiracy, and also against the whole court. He at first objected to being tried by them on the ground that they had no jurisdiction over a deputy; but the trial proceeded, and he was condemned to one year's imprisonment, and a fine of 5000 francs. A new trial however was demanded and allowed; and on the 11th he was again brought to the bar. The house was extremely crowded on account of a report that he was to make it is own defence; and after some time spent by the court in other business, he rose, and leaning on his chair made a speech about two hours long, which produced a great sensation among the audience. The final sentence was postponed, and a great crowd followed him to his carriage.

The attempt to restore "religion" in France by a revival of the mummeries of the dark ages, is very curiously edifying. The reader must have noticed the other day the very singular trial of a French Editor (M. Michelet) for having inserted in his journal, the Miroir, a letter from Rouen, describing the representation, by puppets, of a part of scriptural plays. The modern attempt, to promote piety by these puppet shows (which are blasphemous in the extreme, if any thing could be called blasphemous) has revived enquiry into the nature of these scandalizing stage representations, which were once common in England as well as other parts of Europe, and were indeed the precursors of the modern drama. We understand, that a gentleman, whom we know to be particularly qualified for the task; is about to publish a volume on these Ancient Mysteries and Religious, which will contain very curious matter, collected from those scarce books where alone it is to be found. It will also be illustrated with a few engravings of the greatest oddities, being exact copies from the emblematic devices of old authors.

Prince Esterhazy gave a great hunt in compliment to his friends, at which upwards of eight hundred peasants were employed for 15 days in enclosing and rousing the game.—In the Grand Duchy of Hesse, the peasants being called out on a like occasion, refused to serve as "chiens de chasse," or as beaters of game. The consequence was a law suit between them and the proprietor, to determine the capacity in which they were to perform service.

Disgraceful Bigotry of the Bourbons.—A grand religious ceremony was performed lately at the royal monastery of the Temple, of which her highness the Princess Louisa Adelaide de Bourbon Conde is the Prioress. The object of the ceremony was to baptise a great many bells, which are about to be placed in the belfry of the monastery. They were blessed in the choir of the Convent, by the Archbishop of Paris.—The god-sires and godmother, the King and Madame the Duchess of Angoulême, were represented by the Duke of Doras, first gentleman to the Majesty and the Duchess of Damas, lady in waiting to Madame. The first bell was called "Louise Marie Benoit"—the second, "Stanislas Therese"—the third, "Xavier Antoinette"—and the fourth, "Charles Elizabeth."—French paper.

This judge is what the Ultras of France will, no doubt call "the revival of Religion." Men of common sense can regard it only as an insult to the age, and a gross offence to the Deity. The legitimate Louis the 18th, "the father of his people," and the godfather to a ton of bell metal!—HUZZA!—Liverpool Mercury.

Saddleat—In a village near Paris, a professor lately gave his scholars, as a subject for composition, the description of a flower called heart-ease, or pensee. The description began with a line from the poem of Pere Rapin

"Pampat jucis carios folis tricolorat ge Ae"

The mayor of the village having seen the subject of composition judged, in his paternal wisdom, that the professor was guilty of the crime of provocation to sedition and revolt, and had him arrested. He expected to prove the criminality of the prisoner in the following manner:—"*Pampat*is the flower of Jupiter, can mean none other than Napoleon; folis tricolaris must sight by the tri coloured flag—this is perfectly clear." The professor soon exonerated himself from the charge, and was set at liberty; but the learned accuser is still Mayor, and might be easily named.—Museum.

THE ADULTRESS

More severely punished than with DEATH,

By Margaret de Valois,

QUEEN OF NAVARRE.

Written early in the 16th Century.

King Charles the Eighth having occasion to send into Germany about some affairs of the utmost consequence, fixed upon a nobleman named Bernage, in whom he reposed the highest trust and confidence, to execute a commission of importance.

As he travelled day and night for the sake of expedition he arrived late one evening at a certain Castle, where he begged to be admitted to repose and refresh himself; having urged his being a stranger, and not very well acquainted with the country, at length, with great difficulty, he obtained admission.

As soon as the owner of the Castle was acquainted with the quality of his guest, and to whom he belonged, he shewed him every mark of politeness in his power, at the same time apologized for his not being admitted sooner, owing to the gates being constantly barricadoed on account of some domestic troubles, and the apprehensions he was under of being surprized by some of his neighbours, who were maliciously disposed towards him. Bernage then told him the cause of his journey, and that it was to render some particular services to the King his master.—He was then shewn into a most splendid apartment, and, after some little conversation, conducted into a hall, hung with the richest tapestry, where they found the table spread for supper, which was served with great elegance; at which time there appeared from behind the tapestry a most beautiful woman, dressed in the deepest black, but her head without any hair, or external ornaments.

After the master of the house and Bernage had washed, they carried the water to the lady, who washed also, and then took her place at the end of the table, without speaking to any one.—Bernage could scarcely keep his eyes from her, as she appeared one of the most beautiful women he had ever seen, only that her face was rather pale, and her features tinted with a melancholy cast. After she had eat a little, she was served with wine and water, brought her by a servant, in a vessel of a most singular kind,—being a human skull, the hair of which were stopped with silver, from which she drank two or three times: and, after she had supped, and washed, she made a courtesy to the master of the house, and retired, without speaking a word.

Bernage was exceedingly surprized at what he had seen, and which appeared to him so very extraordinary and shocking, that he became dull and pensive.—This, his host perceiving, said to him,—

"I do not wonder, Sir, at your being astonished at what you have seen at my table; and I find something that appears to me so worthy and honest about you, that I cannot refrain from discovering to you a circumstance which has for a long time made me, from the happiest, the most miserable of men.—Stranger as you are to me, I wish to vindicate myself to you, that you may not think me capable of acting with so much cruelty, without having had the greatest provocation to justify it. The lady whom you have just seen is my wife, and I loved her with as much tenderness and affection as ever man did a woman.—I resigned every thing for the sake of marrying her, and I brought her here in spite of my relations.

She professed to have the same love for me; and I would have hazarded a thousand lives to protect hers. We have lived a long time together, with all the affection and harmony possible; and I was esteemed, by every body who knew me, to be one of the happiest men living. But being obliged to take a journey upon an affair of honour, she lost her's, and forgot the love and duty she owed to me, and became enamoured with a young gentleman whom I had brought up in my house.—This I a little suspected on my return, as I perceived some things which gave me no small uneasiness: but yet I loved her so ardently I could not condemn her until my eyes were at length fully opened, and I saw that which to me was worse than death.—My love was turned into fury and despair; and I determined to observe them with the closest attention. One day I feigned a necessity for my going into the country; instead of which, I concealed myself in the same chamber which she at present occupies. —Soon after my pretended departure she entered the apartment in company with the young gentleman I have mentioned, whom I saw take those liberties with her that she ought to have allowed only to myself:—but when I perceived he was leading her to the bed, I could no longer contain myself; and, darting from my concealment, killed him in her arms.—The crime of which my wife was guilty seemed to me of so heinous a nature, that, to dispatch her as I had done her gallant, was not, I thought, a sufficient punishment. I therefore contrived a new species of misery for her to endure which I believed to be more insupportable than death. This was to shut her up in that very apartment in which she had chosen to dishonor me; and, in a cabinet which it contains, I have hung up the skeleton of her gallant; that she may be kept in perpetual remembrance of her crime; whilst, instead of a cup, I have ordered her to be served at table with what she usually drinks out of the skull of the ungrateful wretch who seduced her, to the end, that she may see him living, whom by her fault she has made her affected enemy; and, the remains of him whose death she occasioned, by preferring his happiness to mine—by this means she constantly sees two objects at dinner and supper which afflicts her most, namely, a living enemy, and a deceitful friend, both produced by her own fault:—in all other respects she is treated with humanity, except that her head is constantly shaved, the hair being an ornament which becomes not an adultress, no more than a veil does a wanton, for it is a mark of having lost both honor and chastity. —Now, if you chuse to see and speak to her, I will conduct you to her apartment."

This offer Bernage gladly accepted, his curiosity being greatly excited. He found her sitting by a good fire, in a bed chamber very elegantly furnished; her husband drew back a curtain which hung before a large case in which were placed the bones of the man who had dishonored him. Notwithstanding the permission which had been given to Bernage, he was almost afraid to speak to her, lest he might either offend her husband, or increase her affliction.—This being perceived by the husband, he said, "If you have any thing to say to this unfortunate woman, speak, and you will now find to what manner she now regards her own sad conduct."—"If your patience, madam," said Bernage, "be equal to the torment you suffer, I look upon you as the most extraordinary woman in the world."—The lady, from whose eyes ran a fountain of tears, with a grace and humility not to be described, replied in the following terms:—"I confess, Sir, that my crime is at great, that all the punishment which the Lord here (whom I am not worthy to call husband) can inflict upon me, cannot be equal to the grief I feel for having injured him."—In saying which she wept most bitterly.—The gentleman then taking Bernage by the arm, conducted him to another chamber.

When Bernage took his leave, he thus addressed his host:—"The esteem I entertain for you, and the great civility you have shewn me, strongly urges me to interest myself in your welfare and felicity. It seems to me, that, after you have had sufficient proof of your poor wife's repentance, you should pity her sufferings and forgive her:—consider, Sir, you are still young, and have no children and what a pity it would be for such a fine house and estate as your's to be lost for want of an heir; and that those who should otherwise inherit your wealth have not, perhaps, the smallest regard for you."

The gentleman, who had resolved never to pardon his wife, thought seriously on what Bernage had said, being sensible of the justness of his remarks:—he therefore promised him, that if she continued to conduct herself with that humility and sorrow which she had hitherto shewn, he would, in a short time pardon her transgressions.

As soon as he returned to Court, Bernage informed the King, his master, of this extraordinary affair. Whereupon the King sent some of his officers into Germany to make further enquiry; and was so pleased with the description Bernage had given of the beauty of this unfortunate Lady, that he sent his painter also, Jean de Paris, to draw her portrait.

In the end, this afflicted lady was pardoned by her husband, who received her once more to his arms—and it is said they lived for many years together in uninterrupted happiness, and not without an heir to their large possessions.

THE MERMAID.

"We have again our carefully inspected this creature, as far as its glass casing permits. Our opinion is fixed that it is a composition; a most ingenious one, we grant, but still nothing beyond the admirably put together members of various animals. The extraordinary skill of the Chinese and Japanese in executing such deceptions is notorious, and we have no doubt but that the mermaid is a manufacture from the shore of the Indian Sea, where it has been pretended it was caught. We are not of those who because they happen not to have had direct proof of the existence of any extraordinary phenomenon, push scepticism to the extreme, and deny its possibility. The depths of the sea, in all probability, from various chemical and philosophical causes, contain animals unknown to its surface waters, or if ever, rarely seen by human eye. But when a creature is presented to us, having no other organization but that which is suitable to a medium always open to our observation, it in the first instance excites suspicion that only one individual of the species should be discovered and obtained. Whereknowledge was more limited, the stories of mermaids seen in distant quarters might be received by the many and not disbelieved by the few; but now, when European and especially British commerce files every corner of the earth with men of observation and science, the unique becomes the incredible, and we receive with far greater doubt the apparition of such anomalies as the present.—It is curious that though medical men seem in general to regard this creature as a possible production of nature, no naturalist of any ability credits it after five minutes observation! This may perhaps be accounted for by their acquaintance with the parts of distinct animals, of which, it appears, the mermaid is composed. The cheeks of the blue-faced ape, the canine teeth, the simia upper body, and the tail of the fish, are all familiar to them in less complex combinations, and they pronounce at once that the whole is an imposture. And such is our settled conviction. Let us, however, in justice to the owner of this 'sea monster,' repeat our opinion that he is by no means privy to the imposition. It is affirmed that almost all the eastern world, including Sir Thomas Raffles (a person of no mean judgment) hold the merm aid to be genuine; and that its purchaser allowed it to be so, is witnessed not only by the sum he gave for it, but by the fact of his having exhibited it originally in a way the most likely to court detection, if false, namely, by suspending it by a string fastened to the middle of the back.

"We lament, therefore, to be compelled, in justice to ourselves, to pronounce the judgment we have done;—but being thoroughly convinced that this lusus naturæ is not natural, we are bound to say so, and to tell our readers, that if they go to see it, (as it is well worth a visit) it must be to observe how admirably such a deception can be executed.

"It is a jest, and all things show it,
We thought so once, and now we know it."

AGRICULTURE.

Various articles for Fattening Swine.—Skimmed milk and pea, oat, or barley meal, rank first in point of excellence, with respect to the quality of the flesh, milk fed pork being superior to any other description, not only in delicacy of flavor, but in substance and weight, none weighing so heavy, in proportion, as the milk fed animal. Hence the bacon of the dairy counties is superior.—Milk will fatten pigs entirely, without the aid of any other food; a practice sometimes in the dairies.—Corn fed pork is next in value, peas, oats, and barley, being the best adapted grain. Bean fed pork is hard, ill flavored, and indigestible: potatoe fed, it is loose, insipid, weighs light and wastes much in cookery. Pumix potatoes in the food of fattening pigs, is deceptious; deteriorating the pork in exact proportion. Hence the Irish pork and bacon are generally inferior to the English, and the market price so in proportion. The inferiority was, some years since, stated at three oz per lb. upwards, by an eminent dealer in Irish provisions. Clover fed pork is well sweetmeated, and ill tasted; fattened on acorns, it is hard, light and unwholesome: on oil cake, seeds, or chandler's graves, it becomes loose, greasy, and little better than carrion: on butcher's offal, bullocks, rank, and full of gravy, but of a strong and disgusting scent. Compared with the general consumption of pork, the real dairy fed bears a very small proportion, and the sale of it in the metropolis, is in very few hands, always commanding a superior price. In some parts of France, they skin their pigs intended for fresh meat.

Sheep and Wool—In the report of the committee on sheep at the Worcester cattle show, it is stated that England and Wales produce 26 millions of sheep, the annual produce of whose wool is 27 millions of dollars. England imports from Spain about one fifteenth of the whole quantity of wool which she manufactures. Three fourths of the wool wrought by the woollen manufactories of the United States is the product of another sort.

DOMESTIC.

INTERESTING FROM QUEBEC.

Friday, 25th Jan. 1822.

Mr. Taschereau from the Special Committee, to whom we referred the petition of the Committee for the direction of the affairs of the Chambly Canal, and the plans and papers transmitted to this House by order of his Excellency the Governor in Chief, relating to the said Canal, reported that the Committee had examined the same, and had come to an opinion thereon, which he was directed to submit to the House when ever they shall be pleased to receive the same; and he read the report in his place; and afterwards delivered it in at the Clerk's table, where it was again read as follows:—

The Hon. Capt Byng, Royal Navy, appeared before your Committee, and declared, that the proposed Canal, ought, by all means, be constructed of the depth of five feet, so as to render it useful, not only for mercantile purposes but likewise for all military purposes. That a depth of water, five feet would be sufficient to allow vessels of sufficient size to act on Lake Champlain, in the event of war, to proceed from Quebec, which seeing the Naval means of Great Britain, would ensure her the command of the lakes whenever it shall be judged necessary, but that a lesser depth of water in his opinion would not be sufficient.

Captain Byng adds that the locks ought to be at least thirty feet clear.

The Hon. Colonel Ready then appeared before your Committee, and the information given by Capt. Byng having been read to him, he confirmed the same entirely. He added that with respect to the engagement taken by the Military Government to give ten thousand pounds towards the making the said Canal, he thinks that should the Canal Company go on making this Canal, this sum would be allowed, but should the Act be altered according to the petition referred, he thinks the Governor in Chief would deem it necessary to submit the matter to the Government at home, before he entered into any new arrangement.

Mr. John Goudie then appeared before your Committee, and confirmed Captain Byng's statement entirely, adding that in case of any urgent necessity, all the Steam Boats on the River St. Lawrence might be carried to lake Champlain, by this Canal, by taking off their wings to get thro'.

Your Committee having heard the evidence above recited, and having examined the papers, plans and estimates laid before this House, are of opinion that the Canal would be of general benefit to the whole Province, that it ought to be five feet in depth, and the locks ought not to be less than thirty feet wide. That the Civil and Military Government ought to be empowered to take all the shares or parts of shares in the said Canal, and that there ought to be provided a fund for that purpose for the shares which the Civil Government might take. —Mer.

We are informed that the number of Petitioners against the Union, in this Province, amounts to about sixty thousand of all classes of His Majesty's subjects. It appears that the same Agents are also charged with the Petitions of the Inhabitants of Upper Canada against the Bill.—Can.

We subjoin a report of experiments made at Kingston Dock Yard, with samples of Canadian Hemp, sent there and tried against yarns selected from good English Bolt Rope:—The Hemp-when received was cargely dressed and spun into common sized yarns, a bottom of each was weighed and then tried against English yarns, and the result was highly favorable to the Canadian Hemp. The first sample received, (which was of Upper Canada growth) was considered equal to Petersburgh Hemp;—and the next Hemp from this Province appeared to the officers of this Dock Yard, equal to the best sample sent up from England.

Extract of a letter dated Amherstburgh, U. C. Dec 1822.

"There has been some stir this winter in consequence of the Tobacco trade. Next Spring I think there will not be less than one hundred Hogsheads shipped from hence. The Lower Canada merchants will soon have to find us other Markets than Montreal and Quebec, for the quantity will increase at least ten fold the year after."

The information contained in the above Extract is very important, and comes from an authentic source. The Tobacco is said to be even of a better quality than Virginian, and will probably soon become another valuable Staple in the commerce of His Majesty's North American Colonies. To lessen the expense of bringing it to Market, a Canal communication between the Lake's Erie and Ontario is requisite. We are happy to observe that this subject begins now to excite the public attention, and we trust it will not be lost sight of until fully accomplished. A practicable water communication by way of the St. Lawrence from the Atlantic to the great Lakes, would speedily develope the vast commercial resources of Upper Canada, and augment the demand for British manufactures in remote parts of America, now rapidly increasing in population and wealth. Perhaps no country in the world is favored with such natural facilities for a great inland navigation as the Canadas; and certainly no country offers greater inducements for the investment of Stock to be applied to the removal of such obstructions as exist.

THE LETTER TO COL NICHOL.

SIR, MONTREAL, 15th March, 1822.

I have been honored with your letter of the 24th ult. requesting me to communicate to you my opinion respecting the state of the Trade of your Province, which in common with that of this and most other Countries, has within a few years undergone a lamentable reverse. As regards yourselves it cannot have escaped you that the cessation of War between Great Britain and her numerous enemies in Europe and America, has had a fatal influence over every kind of your Produce, and a great part of the trade you exclusively enjoyed during the war, is now divided between your elves and your active speculative neighbours. The latter, indeed, drain your Province of specie, and by the facility they possess of carrying on a contraband trade, injure your public revenue, and most materially affect the upright dealer. But the principal cause of the depression of your trade arises from the reduced demand, and consequently diminished value of your commodities, and as there is little prospect of its speedy removal, the attention of the Upper Canadians should be turned to the improvement of the quality of their produce, to the extension of their markets, and to its safe, speedy and economical conveyance to this Province.

I am sorry to remark that a great proportion of your Flour, owing to negligence in the transport and other causes that are well known to you, arrives in this market in very bad condition, by which a heavy and in most instances very unnecessary loss is entailed on the proprietor. I am convinced that during the two last years, many parcels have produced a dollar to a dollar and a half, per bbl. less than they would have brot, but for the damage sustained on the way from your Province. If you consider how great a sum this will amount to when (as your exports attained a great extent, you will be sensible of the necessity of remedying this evil by packing the Flour cool, dry, and in good barrels, and by adopting means of preventing it from being used to the vicissitudes of heat and moisture on its way to this place. You have excellent wheat, good mills, and yet one half of your flour is rejected on inspection.

That your trade admits of great extension, there can be no doubt, provided you will supply a merchantable article; and the present period is very favorable for it in consequence of the restrictions which the American Government has laid on the Trade between their Country and the British West India Islands. The produce of the Upper Province is admirably calculated for the latter Country, and moreover the Ports of the Islands are at all times open for its reception. Well assorted Cargoes of Flour Beef, Pork, Lard and Butter, if carefully packed, will always command a sale; and when the West India merchants know that an extensive supply can be furnished him, he will open a general trade with this country, very different from the limited intercourse now carried on by persons who have no employments for their ships.

A great deal of your produce could also be exported to Halifax and New Brunswick free of Duties on Rum, which would constitute their return Cargoes, were reduced to the same rate as on Imports from Bermuda and the West Indies.

I would by all means recommend to your Merchants to turn their attention to sending down wheat and other grain. I am aware that Flour can be forwarded with greater facility, that its bulk is comparatively small, and that your mills would lose a part of their employment. These are not the only considerations which should influence you; but your object must be to get the best price for your produce whether in a raw or manufactured state.

Your wheat will bring as much more in Great Britain than ours, as will pay at least half the expence of bringing it to this place.

As Great Britain is the only country capable of taking off any unlimited quantity of our produce, it is very important that no restraints should be laid on our mutual trade. Unfortunately the Corn Laws operate very much against us, as we cannot sell either wheat or flour on their arrival in England, provided the average price of wheat is under 67s. 8p. per quarter. None of the cargoes of those articles shipped from Quebec since the middle of last October, were admitted to entry for the home market on their arrival, which was a great loss to the Shipper. I think that on a spirited representation of this hardship by your Legislature, well seconded by your Agent in England, you might get the Law repealed as effects your produce; or if you could not obtain entire success, it might be so modified as to admit of the entrance of cargoes that sailed from Quebec previous to its being known there, that the Ports were shut.

It will occur to you that such a representation should originate here; but, one branch of our Legislature is rather anticommercial and is so fully occupied with other matters that commercial regulations are considered of minor importance.

The state of the Lumber Trade was to be brought before the Imperial Parliament as soon as possible after it assembled in January last; and there is no doubt but it has been decided ere now, whether the foreign duties should be reduced, or an additional duty laid on Timber, the produce of the British Colonies. When the question was agitated in Parliament last spring, an opinion prevailed that a reduction of 10s. 3d. per load of 50 cubic feet would be made on foreign timber, which from the superiority of its quality and the low rate of freights from the Baltic would exclude the Canadian Dealer from the trade.

Though I believe you are very well acquainted with the consequences of such an alteration, yet in case of the contrary I will take the liberty of exemplifying them to you

Timber shipped from the British Colonies for naval purposes, is admitted duty free.

The duty on other timber from the British Colonies is 2s 4d. 1-2 per load.

The duty on foreign timber is	£3	8	1 pr.load
freight of Timber from Quebec	2	10	0
ditto from Memmel,	0	18	0
freight in favor of foreign trade	1	12	0
The price of Memmel Pine,	6	6	0
ditto of Canada, &c.	4	5	0
in favor of Foreign Trade,	2	1	0
The Foreign Trade gains on sales	2	0	0
ditto on freigt,	1	12	0
	3	12	0
the foreign duty is	3	8	1
less the expected redution	0	10	3
	2	17	10
In favor of the fr'g. trade pr.load.	0	14	2

You will perceive by the above that if the small reduction of 10s 3d per load is made from the duties on Foreign Timber, or if a similar sum is added on our duties, the Baltic Merchants will be able to sell lower than ourselves, even if our Pine costs nothing on board. Fortunately we have most strenuous advocates in the shipping interest, for if the proposed alteration takes place, at least 800 sail will be obliged to find other employment.

In regard to the hardships sustained by your Province in consequence of the measures of our Legislature, I trust they will be partially removed when a conference takes place between the Commissioners of the two Provinces. Should you suffer grievances beyond their control you must have recourse to the Imperial Parliament for redress I think that all goods imported into Quebec, intended to go direct to your Province, should be suffered to proceed without security being required for any duties, for it is not right that our Legislature should tax your Province. It is much to be desired that the smuggling trade could be effectually checked, as it is now carried on to a great extent, particularly in the article of Tea, of which the consumption must have greatly increased, while the quantity imported from England has much diminished This and the interference of your neighbours in many other respects must be very prejudicial to your trade and requires to be remedied.

The few observations that in compliance with your request I have ventured to make, will, I am convinced, have been anticipated by the very respectable and intelligent Gentlemen who compose the Committee of which you are Chairman; but, should any thing that I have suggested, have the smallest tendency to promote the welfare of your Province, I shall feel highly gratified.

I have the Honor to remain with respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient Humble Servant,

NOTICE.

THE Subscribers to the UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE & WEEKLY REGISTER are respectfully informed, that, as an inducement for greater punctuality in paying the subscriptions half yearly in advance, according to the original conditions of this Paper, (which have but in a few instances been attended to,) the Editor has resolved upon lowering the price from five dollars to four dollars per annum (*postage included) to those subscribers who are punctual in the said half yearly payments in advance; by which much trouble is saved in the collection of these small sums. But this allowance of one dollar on the yearly subscription can only be allowed to those gentlemen who pay half yearly in advance.

The Editor pledges himself that no delafication as to the quantum of money shall be experienced in consequence of this assessment in the Press. He takes this opportunity of stating that the York Almanac and Royal Calendar of Upper-Canada is nearly completed.

Editorial Commentary.

Another week having passed away without any resolution being adopted by our House of Assembly, authorising the publication of their Journals, either in the whole or part, in the shape of a Parliamentary Register, we cannot yet gratify our country subscribers by any general view of the business now transacting in the House; since we would rather be silent than give any garbled or partial reports of the share which a few of the Members might take in any particular discussion.

Our extracts from Quebec papers will be read with interest. We were not prepared to find so much of the spirit of opposition to the Union in the Legislative Assembly of the Lower Province:—this fact determines that that spirit is nearly general throughout the Province; and, it is probable, that the Unionists are to be found chiefly, if not wholly amongst the mercantile classes of the community; which, however, it must be allowed, are not the least enlightened, though they may not be the most numerous, body in that portion of the British Dominions.

We have frequently had occasion to remark the abundant good sense, enlarged views, and sound argument displayed by the highest class of Merchants at Quebec on matters connected with the improvement and prosperity of these Provinces. Those qualities have been seldom more conspicuously displayed than in a Communication published in the last Gazette of that City, with the signature of Quintus, and of which we have published the first part in this Number, intending to continue it in our next Register, for it is a valuable document, worthy of a place in the sanctum of every man interested in the welfare of this great and promising country.

The rumour of an immediate war between France and Spain continues lively and imposing. Our own ideas on this subject correspond pretty much with those expressed in an extract, presented to our readers in this days publication, that is taken from an American paper of established character. A few more years of peace will restore to England that financial health and vigour which a struggle of unprecedented duration had seriously impaired, and then she may once again, if necessary, bid defiance to the whole world.

Our thanks are due to many correspondents for valuable communications, some of which are admitted this week; others will have place in due time, and some are rejected. Amongst the last is the grammatical dissertation, of Lemuel, which we view of the subject may be correct, but we beg leave to remind him that there is a fashion, to say nothing of improvement, in orthography, and the construction of language, as well as in many other matters; and, it has of late been agreed upon, by very high authorities, to omit the letter u in such words as honour, favour, &c. &c. as well as the k in many words formerly ending with ck, as in musick, frolick, &c. &c. as to potatoe, he will find that one SAMUEL Johnson who knew a little on this subject made use of the single, singular, but enough of this!

"A FRECHOLDER" has our best thanks, although the question has been disposed of to which his communication refers. This Freeholder is not even known to us, and we wish to encourage him to communicate more frequently. His manly and independent character, and inquiring mind, cannot fail to secure the respect which is justly due to him. The Bishop of Landaff, one of the most accomplished and learned men of his time, was considered a genuine Whig of the old school, a race of Politicians almost extinct in Great Britain; and his opinion ought to carry with it very considerable weight. Extensive and undefined as are the Privileges of Parliament, an honest English Constitutionalist will not very readily admit a principle of self election, or of self constituting power: in any department of the state, because such a principle is at variance with the whole spirit of a Government which has been, once at least, elective, and whose frame and constitution shews the power to be with the people, who surrender it conditionally, and subject to laws made by themselves. Parliament, on many occasions, becomes the Grand Inquest of the Country to try certain offences, as well as to legislate; but, according to the spirit of the Constitution with which we are bleded, it does appear outrageous and unjust that it should have power to condemn and punish by imaginary, and unwritten, and undefined, and undefinable law, without any other authority than what it assumes to itself, under the vague and hypothetical pretext of privilege — This subject is highly interesting, and worthy of a much more serious consideration than we can now stay to give it.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

Cobbet has attempted in the London Statesman, to shew that a French army of 20,000 men might march at once to Madrid, and that the Bourbons have no cause to fear a mutiny. He presents the following view of the latter question—

"But as to the other point; the danger of mutiny in the French army, we see the thing in a light wholly different from that in which it appears to be seen by the Chronicle. Why should the French army mutiny for such a cause? Does the Chronicle think that it is composed of philosophers? That "la gerale" fill its ranks? That its main affection is fixed on the freedom of nations? Oh, sadd lasting! It is a band of men, never so much as thinking about the cause of freedom, as ready to ruy their bayonets through the body of a "philosopher" as through that of a "priest," sighing for nothing but plunder and the other effects of success; having no aim whatever but to the General that leads them to victory with the highest hand, and no real affection for any of God's creatures. "The throne of King Lewis is tottering!" Just as much as they care any thing about the one! Their attachment to Napoleon was moulded on the plunder he constantly crammed them with. If Louis will give them plunder, they will be equally attached to him; and if they be not attached to him the want of plunder is the only cause.

Cranology.—We have the following anecdote from a source which may be relied upon, and therefore give it to our readers as a fact. In one of those social parties which sometimes take place where mirth and innocent amusement occupy the place of ceremony, a young lady who had been a pupil of Dr Spurzeim was instructing the company with her observations on their heads. At last it came to be the turn of the great captain of the age to have his head examined, which done, the lady's opinion was demanded. She hesitated, blushed, but said nothing. Come, said his Grace, don't be afraid, my young friend, to declare openly what you think. Why, then, said the lady, since I must speak, your Grace is most deficient in that organ, which is, in common with all the world, know you to possess in the greatest degree—Gall's doctrines must fall at once. Nay, madam, said the Duke, you mean courage, and I assure you, your doctrines receive confirmation not refutation from the head you have examined. I have no courage, and never had, in a physical sense, and that for which the world gives me credit, and which I trust I do possess, is altogether the effect of reason and reflection. This anecdote should find its way into some more durable page than the columns of a newspaper.

The Common Council of London, have brought themselves into a curious dilemma, and from which they do not know how to extricate themselves. Agreeably to the immemorial custom in the city of London, the Monarch has usually been invited to honor with his presence, the civic feast immediately succeeding the period of his coronation. The invitation last year was declined by the King; but it is expected that the magnanimity of Mr. Alderman Heygate, the new Lord Mayor, will be one of more than wonted hospitality and splendor; and it was all expected that the King would gratify the wishes of the good people of London, by attending the city festival to follow the induction of the new Lord Mayor into office. The difficulty is this. In the excess of loyalty to the late Queen, the Common Council, a majority of whom are of the radical order, during the highest ardor of their fever, had decorated the wall of the Civic Council Chamber with a full length portrait of her Majesty—who is represented by the artist, holding the memorable letter addressed by her to the King, her husband. Now it is not doubted that this conspicuous display will revive painful reminiscence in the Royal breast, and insurmountable have been the expedients suggested to obviate the difficulty. "The portrait being assigned to its present place, by a vote of the Common Council—to remove it were impossible, but by the sanction of the authority which placed it there. To convene a civic council for that purpose, were perhaps beyond all power of force. The luminous proposition of calling a Court being given up, the practicability of snugly brushing out the letter is said to have been hinted—for the letter, as it is, seem, is conceived to be the most objectionable part of the picture. The proposition failing, "might it not be covered with a veil or curtain?" But this was objected to, as of a too romantic cast; one gentleman having a confused recollection of something about a veiled picture in the "Mysteries of Udolpho." That without a vote of the Common Council, the picture cannot be removed, was unanimously admitted; and the ingenious evasion suggested, of "turning it with the face to the wall," at first received general approbation. But on cooler reflection, to that expedient there were found objections. In this delicate emergency what course can be taken? The Common Hall, it seems, is an apartment, without the use of which, the whole arrangement would be marred. For the erection of a temporary building, there is no space, and thus the Wise men of Gotham" are absolutely pozed. Really, this willing is unbecoming men of sense; and any thing but complimentary to the KING. The King must know that the picture is there, and if he consents to attend the festival, silence as to the picture would have been the proper course."

A most remarkable panic was produced on the Stock Exchange about the 9th of November, in consequence of an article which appeared in the Journal des debats, supposed to be official. This article alluded to the report of an intended trial of the two Princes Infantas of Spain, or at least the Infant Don CARLOS, in which case France would be impelled by honour to invade Spain with a view to their relief. "That Don CARLOS," says the Morning Chronicle, "is a sworn foe to the constitution, that his conduct has been criminal in the extreme, that he was deeply implicated in the murder of LANCARARU, is but too well known. Still we believe the Spanish Constitutionalists do not now wish to question the regular distinction claimed by the Legitimates of Europe. As DON CARLOS did not perpetrate the murder himself but merely gave the sign for it, and the last reproach that can be urged against the Spanish Constitutionalists is a thirst for blood, they may think that of the agency of the Infant sufficient for the purpose of example. At all events, we understand they mean to do nothing more than exhibit DON CARLOS to the world in his true Colours, by making him state what he knows respecting the foul transactions which preceded the 7th."

IRELAND

In accordance with the usual custom, the Royal Standard was, on Monday, the 4th of November, hoisted on Bedford Tower, Dublin Castle, and on the steeple of Werburgh's Church, in commemoration of the Birth of King William the Third.

(From the Dublin Evening Post of Saturday)

DECORATION OF KING WILLIAM'S STATUE IN DUBLIN

"The painting, which had nearly been completed has been stopped. Police men have been placed, night and day, near the statue, to prevent the operations of the party, if they should be so rash to attempt any.—This day an effort has been made to finish the painting, but the artist was promptly seized by the police, and brought to the Head Police Office. Yesterday, the Guild of Merchants returned thanks to Alderman Nugent and the Magistrates, who opposed the Proclamation of the Lord Mayor.—At two o'clock, another attempt was made to paint the statue. The painter attempted to lay his decorating brush on the pedestal; the way, however, prevented by the Police. A set of persons, not unlike Orangemen, were inspiring the most intrepid to join, but the Police are hitherto inflexible. We know the names of the parties, but we do not choose at present to make them more public.—The Lord Mayor has been sent for.—At half past three o'clock, Councillor Graves, one of the Police Magistrates, appeared on horseback at College Green. He announced to the Police about the statue, that he had just arrived from the head-office, where the Magistrates had come to a determination not to allow the painting to be continued.—He further directed the Police to prevent any person ascending the statue for the purpose of decorating it, or for any other purpose.

"Meeting of the Common Council.—In consequence of a notice issued for a meeting of the Common Council, 49 gentlemen of that Body met at the Assembly House. One gentleman, conceiving it to be an illegal meeting, quitted the room, when the remaining 43 proceeded to business. They commenced by deprecating the conduct of the Lord Mayor, in issuing what they were pleased to term an illegal proclamation: entered into resolutions that they would persevere in dressing the statue; called upon Mr. Allen, the Clerk of the Corporation, to draw them up as the proceedings of the "Common Council" of the City of Dublin. This Mr. Allen refused to do, saying they only composed a small part of the Council. Mr. Sutter and some other persons then volunteered to draw them up as the proceedings of the Council at large.

The Dublin Morning Post says;—At the hour of our going to press, a strong guard of Police, horse and foot, surrounded the statue in College Green; the horse "kept moving" about the statue. A group of spectators stood aloof, looking on. There were in all, about 60 men; with a reserve of about sixty more in readiness to act if necessary, and the military guards at the Castle were doubled. If the Lord Lieutenant and Mr. Goulburn believe these precautions to be necessary, what must they think of Orange Loyalty? All the lodges assembled on Saturday night. We are informed that, in the morning they will demand leave to dress the statue, on a show of force being used to prevent it, they will desist, and commence a law process to try the legality of the question, in all due form. It is said that they act thus under the advice of Mr. Saurin, who considers the conduct of the Lord Mayor, in preventing the dressing, illegal.

College Green was crowded to excess throughout the whole of yesterday. At half past ten in the morning, a stout ferocious looking fellow, decorated in Orange trappings, and attended by several of the party, came down Dame street, probably from the lodge in Werburgh-street, and paraded round the statue. Two Police Magistrates were present at the time. He was permitted to make his circuit without interruption; but when he had gone round the pedestal, one of the Horse Patrole compelled him to fly and pursued him. We did not learn that he was taken into custody. The lower order of the Orange men, who were collected in considerable numbers, were occasionally noisy and troublesome in the course of the day, and from the time night set in until half past 11, when the Police compelled the crowd to disperse, they used every exertion to create riot and disturbance, and actually succeeded in causing much alarm and inconvenience to passengers, and the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. It is now four o'clock, Tuesday morning. For the last two hours College Green has been perfectly quiet. Between 12 and two o'clock there were noises at intervals, but since two they have ceased altogether. The Horse and Foot Police still continue to patrole round the statue.—(Dublin Paper, Tuesday, 6 h Nov.)

Latest Foreign Intelligence.

From the last N. Y. Spectator.

We stop the press to announce the arrival, at this port, of the brig Ontario, Capt. Hanna, 42 days from the Lizard, and 74 from Antwerp. Capt. Hanna has politely furnished us with a London paper of Dec. 7th, two days later than before received, containing Paris dates to 4th Dec. Madrid to Nov. 25th, and Verona to the 20th. The following are extracts:

LONDON, Dec. 7.

On the accuracy of detail in the following letter, implicit reliance certainly cannot be placed; but that the facts may be mainly true, is by no means inconsistent with probability.

Verona, Nov. 26 & 27th. Congress is at length finally dissolved. The powers who are most impatient for war with Spain, have consented to try the effect of negociation before they commence their grand crusade. An official remonstrance either has been or will be immediately dispatched to the Cabinet of Madrid, demanding such an alteration in the Constitutional system, as will at least render it analogous to that of Portugal, and place the Crown beyond the reach of popular control. In case of refusal, Russia, Austria, and Prussia will give their fullest sanction to the hostilities which the Ultras of France are so anxious to commence—and there is no doubt that the Army of Observation will soon cross the frontier.

England will not under such circumstances, become a party to the measure, for she sanctions the principles of an armed intervention only in case of the Constitutionalists being determined to put the King to death, or invade other countries.

The Russian Minister has broken up and Count Pozzo di Borgo took his departure this morning on his return to Paris, where he is to resume his functions as Ambassador, and will no doubt urge on the zeal of the Ultras to the utmost degree of incitement. This appears to be a principal feature in the policy of the Russian Cabinet.

The Greeks are to be left to the good faith of Turkey, who has given to Lord Strangford, a conditional pledge of future moderation towards them. The London Editor remarks on this, "that this is the most farcical of all political farces, delivering the lambs to the tender protection of the wolf."

Perpignan, Dec. 4.—Immense quantities of warlike stores continue to arrive here daily. The building in which military offenders have hitherto been confined, is to be converted into a barrack.

LONDON, Dec. 7, half past 2 o'clock.

An express from Paris, announces the hourly expectation of the Duke of Wellington's arrival there. Rumor adds, that the French Government's determination, in regard to Spain, is suspended until the arrival of the Duke—a degree of hesitation in the Cabinet of France which we cannot but consider improbable.

We subjoin the following Remarks of the Editor of the New York National Advocate.

War between France and Spain.

The issue of this contest may easily be foreseen. France marches her army to Spain, and the war commences. The least reverse which the French army meets with will be the signal of revolt in France, the materials for which are sufficiently ripe. The Bourbons lose the throne and the young Napoleon, under the regency of his mother and backed by Austria and Russia, ascends the throne of France. Take the other side of the question, suppose France succeeds in coercing Spain into her views, the moment the French troops withdraw, the Spaniards revive the Constitution. Suppose it necessary to occupy Spain with troops, Great Britain then interferes. Who is to command the French armies? The old Marshals? They have had enough of Spain already. The Spanish people will not remain idle; they will at once acknowledge the Independence of South America, withdraw their troops, and form an alliance offensive and defensive with the new governments, call out the national Militia; take their stand in the mountains; arm the guerillas, enlist the support of the women; garrison the towns and fortresses; and France will have a difficult game to play. The whole seems to have been a trap, baited to catch the female government of France, which seems to be full of fight without a cause. The moment that war waxes hot, Russia takes up her march for the Danube, and Austria remains neutral. The Holy Alliance and the peace party, seem to have laid it out for a great explosion; and the British, together with the United States, have only to remain neutral, and make as much as they can by the unfortunate state of things in Europe.

SOUTH AMERICA.

From the Baltimore Morning Chronicle.

GENERAL SAN MARTIN.

A friend has just put into our hands Lima Gazettes, to Sept 22, from which the following proclamation is translated. Should they contain any further information it will be given hereafter.

I was present at the declaration of the independence of the state of Chili and Peru. I have in my possession the standard which Pizarro brought with him to enslave the empire of the Incas. I am no more a public man. This is a recompence with usury, for ten years revolution and war.

My promises with the people, with whom I have waged war, have been fulfilled; I have achieved their independence, and I leave to their will the election of their governors.

The presence of a successful warrior, however disinterested may be his intention, is an object of fear for states that establish new constitutions; on the other hand, I am already vexed to hear say, that I wish to make myself a sovereign.—However, I shall be always ready to make the last sacrifices for the liberty of the country, but as a private individual and nothing more.

As to my public conduct, the opinions of my countrymen, as it generally happens, will be divided; but their children will give the true criterion.

Peruvians! I leave with you the national representation already established, if you put in it an entire confidence, you will triumph; if not, you will become the victims of anarchy.

Let firmness preside over your destinies, and may you enjoy forever felicity and peace.

JOSE DE SAN MARTIN.

Magdalena, near Lima, Sept. 20.

"HAIL COLUMBIA, HAPPY LAND!"

LIBERTY.

Fifteen or twenty negroes, who were kidnapped in and near Philadelphia, were driven through Washington city in chains towards Georgia. One of the large negro men, from whom most resistance was expected, had large iron rings on his wrists, and a larger and heavier chain than is commonly used, going from one ring to the other. As the drove passed along before the driver, through the street, some gentlemen, members of Congress stood at the gate of the Capitol, looking at them. The large negro, whose chains were so heavy, walked out from amongst the others, towards the gentlemen, stopt a moment, raised his hands, shook his clanking chains in the air, then, after a momentary pause, while his hands were raised towards Heaven, he began the song of freemen,—"HAIL COLUMBIA, HAPPY LAND!"

LOWER CANADA.

Quebec, 23d January, 1823.

In consequence of the commands received by His Excellency the Governor in Chief to inform the Legislature that changes were contemplated by His Majesty's Ministers in 31 Geo. III. cap. 31. The Legislative Council proceeded in a committee of the whole council to deliberate on this subject on Tuesday last, a long and warm discussion took place; the doors having been thrown open to the public, a very great number of persons were in attendance.—The resolutions which may be seen under their proper head were then adopted, reported, and finally passed—they were known without surprize as the general opinion had been that the majority of that Honorable body would be favorable to the proposed changes.

The subject was also brought before the Assembly according to previous notice on Tuesday last, a call of the house had been appointed for that day and the members present amounted to the uncommon number of forty. No question ever occurred, to the decision of which the public feeling of this country was more closely directed, and the galleries were crowded to an excess—the merits of the question had been made a matter of discussion by every body, and each was either strongly attached or opposed to it, there was found to be no indifference. An interest for the first time had been shewn in public affairs of a very spirited nature.—Public meetings had been general, haranguing had been practised at them, resolutions passed petitions drawn up and signed, funds liberally and large subscribed and agents sent to the Imperial Parliament; and the first symptoms of that interest which appears among the people of England under the operation of their institutions manifested itself. The ultimate decision of the Assembly was long aforeseen, yet a very animated debate protracted it a late hour took place; the whole matter was well sifted and a review of the probable causes which led to the proposal of the measure and the advantages and disadvantages attending it received a long and able examination.

Provincial Parliament of Lower Canada.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Tuesday, 21st January, 1823.

The Council in a Committee of the whole, on that part of His Excellency's Speech, which related to the proposed changes in the Act of the Imperial Parliament, 31 Geo. III. chap. 31—came to the following resolutions.

Resolved, 1—That our Constitution as happily established by the 31 Geo. III chap 31, has eminently promoted the welfare and prosperity of the Province; has secured the peace and happiness of all classes of the Majesty's subjects, and has strengthened the bond of union with the Mother country.

Resolved, 2—That the Union of the Legislatures of Upper and Lower Canada will, in our opinion, be attended with inevitable evils; will be productive of fears and apprehensions, and excite jealousies and discontents in a people warmly attached to their present Constitution.

Resolved, 3—That as Councillors, chosen by His Majesty, in this Province, we feel that we should be guilty of a dereliction of our solemn duty, did we not declare, as our firm opinion, that the union of the two Legislatures will have a direct tendency to weaken and embarrass the administration of His Majesty's government, and ultimately create discontent in the minds of his Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

Resolved, 4—That an humble address be presented to His Majesty, expressive of the lively gratitude of this House for the opportunity His Majesty has been graciously pleased to give, of expressing their sentiments upon the contemplated changes in the act of 31st Geo. III. chap 31, and to convey to the foot of the Throne, the foregoing resolutions.

Content, 15—non contents, 5.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 21st January, 1823.

The following resolutions were moved in a Committee of the whole House of the Assembly, on that part of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor in Chief's Speech, which related to the exchange contemplated by the Imperial Parliament, in Act 31, Geo. III. chap. 31, by which the Constitution of this Province was granted, and the division of the Province of Quebec effected, agreed to, and afterwards reported and finally passed.

Resolved, that this House participates in the surprise and grief felt by a very large majority of His Majesty's subjects in this Province, on learning that his Majesty's Ministers have proposed to Parliament alterations in the Act 31 Geo. III. chap 31, chiefly with a view of uniting the two Legislatures of Upper and Lower Canada.

Resolved, That the Constitution conferred on this Province by the said Act, and the separation of this Province from Upper Canada were, on the part of the Imperial Parliament, an act of justice as well as of beneficence towards the inhabitants of both Provinces, by giving to each the means of preserving entire the rights and privileges which were guaranteed and secured to them by the laws of Government.

Resolved, That the passing of the said Act, hath been one of the most effectual methods of making known to the inhabitants of this Province the justice and magnanimity of the British character, and hath forever secured to his Majesty's Government the inviolable confidence, affection and fidelity of all classes of His Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

Resolved, That the said Act, modelled on the constitution of the Mother Country by some of its greatest and wisest statesmen, establishes powers sufficient to remedy abuses, redress injuries, allay dissentions, and provide for the general welfare of this Province.

Resolved, That not only do the reasons which occasioned the passing of the said Act still exist in full force, but they have even gained additional strength, from the happy experience therein acquired by the inhabitants of this Province, and from their regarding the same, with reason, as the unchangeable foundation of their Institutions, and most dearly cherished rights.

Resolved, That were the proposed alterations adopted by Parliament, the result would be that the two Provinces having Laws, civil and religious institutions and usages materially different, would be subjected to one and the same legislature, whose decisions would alternately endanger the laws and institutions of either Province.—That here would thence result well founded apprehensions respecting the stability of those laws and institutions, fatal doubts of the future lot of these Colonies, and a relaxation of the energy and confidence of the people, and of the bonds which so strongly attach them to the Mother Country.

Mr. Ogden moved an amendment to the first resolution, in the shape of an address to his Majesty, praying that the Union might take place.—Yeas 5, Nays 32.

The Resolutions were then severally passed.

List of Members of the Legislative Council who voted for the Petition against the Union of the Legislatures:

The Hon. the Chief Justice, the Catholic Bishop, Messrs. Ducheseny, Caldwell, Cuthbert, Delaistre, Perreault, L. De Salaberry, Taschereau, Ds Lery, Dunn, Gugy, C. De Salaberry, and Coffin.

By the following Protest it will be seen who the Gentlemen were that oppose the measure.

PROTEST entered in the Legislative Council, 23d January, 1823, on the vote for an Address to His Majesty, praying that the Union of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, under one Legislature, may not take place.

DISSENTIENT.

First.—Because the Union of Upper and Lower Canada under one Legislature would afford satisfactory, constitutional and effectual means of removing those fiscal difficulties which have hitherto existed, and which, under the present order of things, must continue to exist and excite jealousy and division between the two Provinces.

Secondly.—Because such Union would encourage the introduction of a new population from the Parent State, and give to the Province of Lower Canada a British character.

Thirdly.—Because such Union would greatly increase the physical strength of both Provinces, and facilitate, above all other measures, their power of resisting the attacks of a Common Enemy.

Fourthly.—Because such Union by encouraging the settlement of the Wade lands (as well seigniorial as others) would greatly augment our Commercial resources, increase the value of all Real Property, and give an impetus to the prosperity and improvement of both Provinces, which would render them one of the most valuable appendages of the British Empire.

QUEBEC, January 21.

THE SCRIBBLER.

The Grand Jury of the District of Quebec have made the following Presentment:—

District of Quebec: } GENERAL SESSION OF THE PEACE.
January 1823.

The Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their oath present—

That there is published in the District of Quebec, and throughout the Province, a Paper called "THE SCRIBBLER," in which many most respectable persons are portrayed in odious and unmerited characters, and malignant designs and evil actions, incompatible with the known tenor of their conduct, and having no other foundation than the fictions of calumny, are imputed to them.

That when it is considered that in that Paper there is no one contribution to useful knowledge—that it is confined altogether to personal invective—that its censures invariably transgress the bounds of legitimate satire,—no doubt remains that the aim of "THE SCRIBBLER" is, to disturb the tranquility of Families.

That the Grand Jury, in pursuance of that duty which requires the repression if every attempt to diminish the well being of society, do present the Paper called "THE SCRIBBLER," as containing a series of false and most malignant libels, wherein the good name and fame of many persons, who are well known to be among the most deserving characters in the community are aspersed, with an intent to render the individuals thus assailed, the subject of unmerited scorn and detestation—to the injury of that social happiness which it is the chief object of the Laws to preserve.

That although the person who first introduced "THE SCRIBBLER," and who is said to be Editor may, through fear of punishment for former misdeeds, have fled beyond the pursuit of justice in this Province, the Jurors feel that it ought to be made known to his accomplices here who supply him with materials for his fabrications, and to his accomplices who give them circulation and publicity, that they are themselves individually liable for their offence in so doing, to the infliction as of the law—and that no more is now waiting to bring these to bear with full weight upon them, than that their names should be exposed.—Quebec Mercury.

COMMUNICATION.

The stormy discussions that the project of the Re-Union of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada have produced begin now to subside, and we may look back to what has gone by with minds somewhat cooled by reason and reflection: The following observations notwithstanding all that has been done and said, may not be out of time nor place.

The Agricultural and Commercial capabilities of Lower Canada have not yet been explored, nor are they likely to make much progress while the bye-laws in the old French feudal laws flourish, the population of this country is not yet sufficiently enlightened to appreciate or avail themselves of the liberality of the many and great privileges they enjoy under a representative constitution; too ignorant and too easily misled for a judicious exercise of the suffrages of a free system of Laws, the benevolent intentions of the Act are defeated; prejudices must be eradicated, the fruits of education and intelligence be diffused to enable us to improve by the example of other countries, and to judge by comparism.

The commercial regulations and laws applicable to Lower Canada at present, require revision and deviation, as will soon be evident from their operation and effect. The West India Trade Bill is drawn up and finding retaliaments so necessary to their impoltunes, as strengthening our maritime arm; the duty now levied on lumber, whether viewed as when imported into Canada from the United States, or into Great Britain from the Port of Quebec, is altogether impolitic and operates as a bonus to the British merchants, to the prejudice of this country, and employs foreign shipping to the injury of the British ship owners; of this that clear sighted and influential body are perfectly aware. The duties levied on merchandize at the Port of Quebec are in the first instance paid by the British merchant and importer, and the goods often sold at a price that does not cover that advance; the Civil List as well as grants for internal and local improvements, may therefore be justly considered as defrayed from the resources of the Mother Country,* and the application of public money for the latter purpose is complained of.

Canada since it became an appendage of the British Crown, has been cherished by the Parent country; too much indulgence in publicities well as in private life, makes the thoughtless and ungrateful forgetful of duty and allegiance. We ought to know that by supporting the prerogative of Royalty, we uphold the rights of public and private property and of our own personal liberty.

In considering the subject of Re-Union, I go back to the notable festival held at Montreal in November last, where the first public impression of sentiment was formed into a kind of shape.—An honourable Speaker on that occasion said much about love of country, loyalty and devotion, which every good and faithful subject of His Majesty will duly appreciate; and proceeded by saying "It is certain that under the operation of the Act which they detest, (alluding to the Unionists and the Act which separated the Provinces) the native population of the country has tripled in thirty years, that in spite of their laws which have destroyed the fairest branch of our Commerce, that of grain, six hundred vessels yearly visit us, to bear away the produce of our country, which previous to the influence of this Act could not freight fifty."—I will admit the increase of population as stated by the honourable gentleman, who takes no notice of the stationary state of cultivation, and endeavours to make it appear that the surplus produce of Lower Canada does not now bear for years past freight much above the same number of vessels it did thirty years ago; with us the maxim, that population is wealth, seems reversed.

From the neglect of agricultural improvements and letting out in Lower Canada, and the many impediments that bar the way to successful enterprise, there has been very little increase of cultivation for many years, and Quebec which ought to be a great mart of trade, has continued rather in the character of a forwarding port, and without assistance from the United States and Upper Canada, Lower Canada as will appear from official statements and other data, produces little more of bread stuffs than supports her own population, and of other provisions not sufficient for the consumption of the inhabitants.

The increase of shipping to this port may be dated about fifteen years back, occasioned principally by the great demand for timber, and during this period those who are conversant with the business reckon four-tenths of the lumber to have been supplied from the United States, more than four-tenths from Upper Canada, and the trifling residue from Lower Canada. (To be continued.)

* This we consider an error; on the same principle the exporter of timber from this country would pay a part of the Civil list at England. The duties on the timber he exports certainly form a part of the revenue applied for that purpose; but if the duty were taken off, he would not sell his timber any higher than he did before (that is to say if there was no adventitious competition) while the English consumer would immediately obtain the timber cheaper by an amount equal to the duty previously levied in this country. The same reasoning applies to this country. If the Colonial duty of 2 1-2 per cent on merchandize were repealed, the English merchant would not obtain a higher price for his goods, but they would be sold 2 1-2 per cent. less to the Canadian consumer, who would reap the benefit, and who strictly and really pays the colonial duty. There is another distinction. The English merchant when he exports knows what duty he has to pay; he may, by not exporting, avoid it; its payment, or its act, in one sense, is optional, and he will never subject himself to the payment of it, except when he thinks that his goods, including it, will give a remunerating return.—The Canadian consumer on the other hand, under all circumstances must pay the duty, with him it is a matter not of choice but of necessity.—*Edit Q. INDIAN GRATITUDE.

For the Weekly Register.

MR. FOTHERGILL,

The following story was related to me some years ago, by a person who received it from the fortunate hero; I have sent it to you for publication, if you deem it worthy of a place in your Paper.—I believe it can be relied upon as a matter of fact.

I am, Your most obedient, &c. &c.

* * * * * *

At a Public meeting that was held in one of the towns of New England, a large concourse of people were huddled together round the fire of a barroom, in a certain tavern, the day being cold and rainy. A strange Indian from the Wilderness came in, shivering with cold and wet. It was in vain the poor fellow endeavoured to make his way to the fire which blazed with a warmth most tempting to his benumbed limbs, but an impenetrable crowd seemed to preclude all hope of his arriving within the range of any comfortable distance, and he was obliged to stand back in a shivering, comfortless condition.

This poor Indian was at length noticed by a compassionate person in the room, who had sufficient influence with the crowd of persons there assembled to prevail on them to open and admit the Indian to a situation near the fire, where he found warm and dry himself, in addition to this service, the same person treated him with a measure of rum. When the Indian had sufficiently warmed and dried himself, he sought for the gentleman who had so kindly befriended him, and, having discovered him, eyed his countenance for some time with a close and scrutinizing look, as if to impress the features strongly upon his mind, and then, giving his friend a silent nod of thankfullness, he struck into the woods and was no more seen.

Some time after this incident the same gentleman removed with his family into one of the then remote Townships in the State of Vermont, where he pursued the common occupations of a country life wholly undisturbed until after the commencement of the revolutionary War, when the whole country became liable to sudden incursions by the Indians; and, in one of these, the same gentleman had the misfortune to be taken prisoner. He was then led by the war party far into the wilderness, being employed for several days in the journey. The Indians at length halted, and held a long consultation, at the end of which it was resolved to put this gentleman to death according to their usual modes of torture, and the following morning was the time fixed upon for carrying the decision of the council into execution.

One Indian being appointed to guard the prisoner, the rest of the party laid down to sleep. In the dead of the night, when every thing was in profound stillness, the Indian sentinel was seen by his prisoner to draw forth a scalping knife, and make towards him, in a crouching posture, with all the caution of a cat ready to pounce upon its prey. The unfortunate gentleman shuddered with dismay and horror, expecting every moment to be his last;—instead of sheathing his knife in the bowels of his wretched victim, however, the Indian came to liberate him from his bonds. In a trice all the bandages were cut away, and the gentleman was raised upon his feet: the Indian then beckoned him to a distance of several hundred yards from the camp, where suddenly turning round, he thus accosted his prisoner in broken English,—"Do you know me?"

Prisoner—I do not.

Indian—Don't you remember when, a great many moons ago, near the great salt-water, there were many white men at a rum-house, and a strange Indian, all wet and cold, came in amongst them?

Prisoner—I do remember it—are you that Indian?

Indian—I am, and the Indians we have left in the camp are going to kill you to-morrow morning; but, as you were good to me when I was among your people, I will save your life, if it be possible.

The full moon shone with uncommon splendor through the interstices of the sequestered grove, and its beams rested on the countenance of the Indian;—the gentleman raised his eyes, and, instead of a savage, thought he beheld an angel of light.

"That is the way you must steer," said the Indian, pointing in a particular direction, "in order to find your home, and when you get there you will be with your wife, your children, and friends.—I hope you will find them well, and that you will live a long time to enjoy them; but as for me, I dare not return to the camp, if I do, the Indians will kill me for you. I must leave all my friends, and family, and country for your sake.—run, and save yourself, farewell." The Indian then struck into the depth of the forest and the gentleman, following the direction pointed out to him, arrived at his home in a few days.

Now, Sir, I cannot help asking, is not this story, which may be received as an undoubted fact, a fine lesson even to the enlightened Christian? Is there in all history a nobler instance of genuine and disinterested gratitude?—that a man should not only save the life of an enemy and give him his liberty; but that, by so doing he should forever quit his dearest connections, friends, and country, is an instance of self-devotion for the benefit of another, but seldom paralelled in the annals of what is called the refined world. What man, of either, shall presume to condemn even the savage that roams the wilderness to endless perdition? because he may not have received the light of the Gospel?—Forbid it Heaven!

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

The following paragraph which I have just read in the Memoirs of the Bishop of Landaff, written by himself, I beg of you to insert in your next Register, if you think it applicable to a question of Privilege now pending in our House of Assembly. A FREE HOLDER.

"The power of expelling a Member from the House of Commons is a privilege essential to the Constitution of it as a House; but the committing a Member, or not a Member, to prison, for a speech or writing which has not been found by a jury to be a Libel, is a privilege which I cannot prove to my own satisfaction to be either necessary to the constitution of the House of Commons or useful to the state. I think a Law should pass prohibiting such violence, and defining, as far as can be done, the extent of privilege."

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Having addressed a letter to the Editor of the Observer for the purpose of correcting an untruth; and, as he has not thought proper to admit that letter into the columns of his patriotic paper—I beg, Sir, that you will give the following statement of facts a place in the paper which the virtuous Observer has denounced as tending to destroy the moral character of this Province, in order that, for at least one instance more, Truth may be made to triumph over dark falsehood, and deliberate villainy.

I am, &c. &c. &c.

JOHN W. CLARK.

To the Editor of the Observer.

Sir,

In your paper of the 2d of December last, under the Editorial head, appeared the following article:—

"A fruitful season for Magistrates.—We have been credibly informed that 90 Executions were issued last month in the Township of Southwold, in the London District, for the non-payment of Taxes, and that a waggon and new saddle were actually sold under an execution amounting to seven shillings and sixpence!!!"

As you appear to have been a willing instrument for the promulgation of this invidious fabrication, and as I cannot allow such a slander upon the Freeholders of this Township to go forth uncontradicted—I thought I had the fairest possible claim upon you to become the instrument (willing or unwilling) of vindicating the traduced party from such a gross and barefaced calumny. I therefore addressed a letter to you, for the purpose of refuting that statement, avowing it to be wholly untrue, and requiring the name of your "credible" informant;—which letter I sent by mail, and paid the postage with a view of insuring it the earliest insertion in your paper.

One week passed in silence after the letter ought to have appeared.—In the week following, you acknowledged it, and gave me to understand that it would be published in the ensuing week.—Two weeks afterwards, out comes—not my letter, but the following—"Mr. J. W. Clark, Collector of Southwold, positively asserts that the statement given to us by Mr. S. Gardiner, and published in the Observer of the 21st inst. is not true, so far as relates to the 90 Executions issued for the non-payment of taxes in that Township."

Now, Sir, I wish to know why you withheld my letter? or why, in your shabby notice of its contents you perverted my plain words, by saying "so far as relates to the Executions," &c. I made no such distinction, but, unequivocally declared the whole article to be a downright falsehood, and demanded your author.—Your informant you have given, but I wish to know what fellow feeling, tenderness, or affection towards him induced you to suppress my letter, and make an exception which I did not authorize.

To conclude, you must now submit to the alternative of publishing my letter, as I wrote it, or tacitly acknowledge that you have withheld it from base, wicked, and nefarious motives.

I am, &c. &c.

JOHN W. CLARK.

Southwold, January 22d, 1823.

To the Editor of the U. C. Gazette.

Sir,

I have observed, that His Excellency, in his Speech at the opening of the present Session of Parliament, suggests the propriety of an increased duty on Licences granted to Distillers.

In reviving the Law on that subject, and making further provisions, it is much to be hoped that our Legislature will endeavor, by proper enactments, to provide in a more effectual manner for the due collection of the Revenue arising from that source.

By an Act passed in the 44th year of His late Majesty's Reign, distillers are allowed six hours notice previous to the Inspector entering a distillery, for the purpose, no doubt, of allowing time to prepare the Tubs (used in the improved process of distillation by steam) for examination. That provision of the Statute has, however, in many instances, I am induced to believe, been most shamefully abused, and perverted, and the six hours intended, has been employed in removing, and concealing, the Tub actually used in the process, and introducing one of smaller dimensions, to stand the scrutiny of the Inspector, or his agent.

The mode of distillation at present most common in the Province, being by steam, the process of which is very expeditious, but little time is necessary to place the Tubs in a fit state for examination; which precludes the necessity of the six hours allowance of time hereinbefore provided, and two frequently made use of in practising a fraud upon the Revenue.

It is also highly necessary in some Districts of the Province, perhaps in all, that the Inspectors should be required to have Deputies resident in each County, in order to the more certain detection of persons, who attempt to distill without Licence, of which, I am led to believe, there are many instances; but being remote from the Inspector, they avoid detection, or escape exposure.

I am, Sir,
Your very obedient Servant,
A Friend to the Revenue.

THE Subscribers to the UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE & WEEKLY REGISTER are respectfully informed, that, as an inducement for greater punctuality in paying the subscriptions half yearly in advance, according to the original conditions of this Paper, (which have but in a few instances been attended to,) the Editor has resolved upon lowering the price from five dollars to four dollars per annum (*postage included) to those subscribers who are punctual in the said half yearly payments in advance, by which much trouble is saved in the collection of these small sums. But this allowance of one dollar on the yearly subscription can only be allowed to those gentlemen who pay half yearly in advance

Editorial Commentary.

Of all crimes that of poisoning the fountains of Truth has been justly deemed one of the greatest. To tell a lie on trifling occasions, and in the most secret & covert manner, is ever attended with bad consequences; but, to lie publicly, on occasions of deep interest and importance, where the lives and properties, and well-being of numerous individuals are at stake,—and to do so wilfully, is a crime of such extraordinary turpitude as should subject the utterer to penalties of the severest nature.

We are led to these prefatory remarks in consequence of having learnt that an uncommon degree of painful excitement is felt amongst a large class of the People of this Province by reason of a misrepresentation which appeared in the Observer of Feb. 3d, which states, that the House of Assembly was "occupied for two days debating upon a string of resolutions proposed by Mr. Nichol, declaring foreign protestants who, through ignorance, have not conformed with the provisions of the laws incapable of holding lands as natural born subjects, &c. &c." It is no wonder that this partial and false view of the resolutions brought forward by the Hon. Member for Norfolk, (and for which in truth that Gentleman deserves the unanimous thanks of the whole country) should excite alarm, and that alarm is very widely extended. We have been waited upon by some, and written to by others, of our subscribers to know the truth of the matter; and we are therefore bound to notice the garbled statement and misrepresentation (which we doubt not to have been wilful) in this manner, in order to set so important a question (in a country situated as this is,) in a clearer point of view to those who have misapprehended it in consequence of the Observer's criminal obliquity. Had the Observer given the resolutions themselves in the same paper, as he has since in some degree found himself obliged to publish in a subsequent number, the erroneous impression might not have been made. To remove the anxiety complained of we cannot do better than here insert the resolutions themselves as they stand upon the Journals of the House,—by which it must be seen that so far from the Honorable mover having any intention of disquieting the minds of the people, or of jeopardizing any property whatever, his view is to make the public mind forever easy on this truly important subject, and to secure property as it now stands throughout the country, in cases where it might be insecure, if the titles were strictly inquired into, by the operation of existing Acts of the British Parliament. The measure is highly patriotic and laudable; and, as we have just said, in our opinion, the worthy mover is entitled to the thanks of the country for bringing it before the House, notwithstanding the subject may have been taken up by the Executive, since it must be desirable to bring the question in as serious and forcible a manner as possible before the consideration of the Imperial Parliament which alone has the power to pass a law of naturalization. The resolutions moved by Col. Talbot are these:—

Resolved—That it is the opinion of this Committee that the Chairman be directed to move that it be resolved,

1—That by the laws now in force in this Province, All Foreign Protestants are admissable to become settlers therein on conforming to the provisions contained in the said Laws, and that on having done so, may hold lands and enjoy all the privileges and immunities of natural born subjects within the Province.

2—That from ignorance of the Law, and unavoidable difficulties, many Inhabitants of the Province otherwise qualified, have neglected or been unable to qualify themselves according to Law, by which means they cannot legally exercise and enjoy the rights of subjects within the same.

3—That some Legislative provision is absolutely necessary for quieting the minds of all such persons, and securing to them the enjoyment of their rights and properties, as His Majesty's Subjects.

4—That this provision can only be made by the Imperial Parliament.—

5—And, That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying him to transmit the foregoing resolutions to His Majesty's Government, with our humble request that His Excellency will make such representation on the subject as may induce His Majesty's Ministers to submit the same to the early consideration of Parliament.

The object of the proceeding is obviously to secure persons who have been long resident in this country, but who may not have subscribed strictly to the laws of naturalization as they have hitherto stood, (or whose property may have been purchased from Aliens,) in all the rights, privileges and immunities of British Subjects; and it is really inconceivable how any body in that a stake in this Province could object to so great and important, and truly patriotic, a measure. For our own parts we have no doubt it will meet with the most cordial reception on the part of the British Government, who will rejoice in having another opportunity of evincing the warm interest that is always taken by the Parent State, in whatever concerns the welfare and prosperity of this Country.

We are happy to find the necessity of rendering this country independent of our rival neighbours in the article of Salt, so seriously taken up by the House. Having exerted ourselves a good deal in former numbers of our publication to point out the value of this article in agriculture, as well as for culinary purposes, and the curing of provisions, besides giving a history of the only regular establishment, for making Salt, that exists in the Province with a view of inducing others to embark in the speculation, it may be supposed we look with some anxiety to the measures that may be finally adopted by the House. Being ourselves averse to the system of Bounties, on the principles so luminously explained by the famous ADAM SMITH; we should prefer the granting of loans to a moderate extent for the purpose of making the necessary establishments. Capital alone is wanting. Any increase of duty on American Salt must act as an additional tax upon our own people. Bounties would have the same effect; because, where do you get the money to be given in Bounty? from the pockets of the people, so that you would by such a plan actually "rob Peter to pay Paul."

Mr. WILMOT, Member for the County of Durham, has brought in a Bill to prevent the sale of spiritous Liquors to the Indians within the limits of any organized County or District of this Province. The humane intentions of the worthy Member are obvious, and something ought to be done to protect that unfortunate and devoted race of human beings who deserve so well of all our care) from the rum-shops, and brutality, and infamous conduct pursued towards them by a set of lawless miscreants, with white visages but blacker hearts, yclept Indian Traders. The subject has occupied some of our attention, & we have thought of a plan by which the poor Indians may be rescued from that abominable, demoralizing usage to which they have been but too long subjected; and by which they may be at the same time rendered in some degree subservient to the public weal. Want of room alone prevents the statement of our plan this week; but, we promise to give an outline of it in our next. Although we are ready to give Mr. WILMOT full credit for the worthiness of his intentions, we do not think his Bill, in the shape in which it appeared, would be effective. But more of this hereafter.

We hope to be able to commence our Parliamentary Register for this Province, next week,—with illustrative notices, and occasional debates, where the subject is of importance to the country.

Two more of our Correspondents will find their Communications inserted this week.—At his convenience, and as an opportunity may occur, we should be glad if R——l would be kind enough to resolve a suspicion we cannot help entertaining that he is the same person with L——s, several of whose former communications, we found ourselves obliged to omit.

As the late arrivals have brought us no news of importance, relative to peace or war in Europe, we have been the more copious in our miscellaneous extracts from British and Foreign Journals.

The King held a Cabinet Council on the 15th of November, at which it was agreed to further prorogue Parliament which was to have met on the 20th of Nov. to the 2d of January, 1823.

London, Nov. 15.

The Ex Sheriff Parkins presided at the dinner given to Hunt yesterday at the Eagle Tavern. The conviviality of the company was of the most uproarious description. The crowd of Liberty Boys who could not afford their admission to the feast, remained for several hours around the house, vociferously demanding Hunt's appearance at one of the windows. The object of this clamor was discussed within doors; and it was fully decided that Mr. Hunt should not show himself to the rabble without, who being unable to contribute to the entertainment of the orator, had no manner of right to any share in his eloquence! The Hero of the day himself,—the "Man of the People,"—concurred in the conclusion! and, forgetting that in the morning he had assured his "fellow-countrymen and fellow-country women," who had assembled to greet him, that "they might do with him what they pleased," he now declared that he considered himself as the "guest," only of those who paid for the dinner, and that he was bound to act as they thought fit to direct! The cries of the populace without were accordingly as unanimously disregarded by the Great Men within; and it was not until the landlord intimated that the mob were about to pull down the house, that the bon vivants consented to thrust Hunt forward upon a balcony with a couple of candles, to allay the tempest that had been excited by their amphitrionic disregard of the will of the sovereign people!!

The new monument to the memory of the late Mr. Fox, erected on the north side of Westminster Abbey, has been within these few days opened to the public view, as have the old monuments of Queen Elizabeth, and Mary, Queen of Scots, which have lately undergone a thorough repair, and have been newly beautified.

His Majesty has been pleased to appoint Sir Walter Scott Bart. to be a Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Roxburgh.

The celebrated pedestrian, Russel, who some time since walked 102 miles in 24 successive hours, has been again backed for 100 guineas, to walk 98 miles in the same time.

Accounts from Ireland mention that frequent depredations take place in the neighborhood of Cork. Many houses were broken open by the peasantry, who demanded fire arms, and took off provisions and live stock.

A meeting of the city of London Auxiliary Bible Society took place in the Egyptian Hall, at the Mansion House. The hall was crowded in the extreme. The Rev. Dr. Dillon, one of the secretaries of the Bible Society, read the report, which was of a very favorable nature;—it stated that the parent institution had been strengthened by twelve auxiliary societies since the month of May last, and that since its first formation, it has received £2,339,526 in subscriptions, and distributed 3,563,964 copies of the Bible. The Rev. Mr. Cunningham, Dr. Steinkopf, and other clergymen, addressed the company, and the resolutions confirming the report, &c were carried unanimously.

George the Fourth—His Majesty George the Fourth, though happily blending the utmost urbanity, with a disposition at once social and festive, is said never to forget the dignity of his rank, or the respect that is due to it in the most convivial moments. Before His Majesty succeeded to the throne, among the persons admitted to his parties at Carlton house, was a gentleman, who, though not of great rank or fortune, had frequently partaken of the festivities of the palace, and had been honored with the distinguished attention of his prince. The gentleman, mistaking the politeness of the host, for the familiarity of a companion, had the impudence to make a bet with a nobleman, that he could use greater freedom with the Prince than any other person, and that he would even ask His Royal Highness to ring the bell the next time he visited Carlton house. It was not long before he had an invitation; and when the bottle had circulated pretty freely, he ventured to decide his wager, by saying familiarly, "Wales, ring the bell." His Royal Highness, without at all being disconcerted by a freedom which filled every one with astonishment, rang the bell, and when the servant appeared, coolly said, "Show Mr. —— to his carriage." The gentleman felt the keenness of the Royal retort—won his wager, but never entered Carlton House, or the presence of his Prince afterwards.

A dinner was given at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, to James Byrne, the victim to the Bishop of Cloghe. About 100 persons were present. The ex-Sheriff Parkins was in the chair, and Byrne sat on the left, and appears to be about 45 years of age. A subscription was commenced in the room for Byrne and his family, who were introduced to the assembly.

In the Court of King's Bench the other day, Mr. Scarlett mentioned the following judicial anecdote, in illustration of the strange anomalies which, in times when men's passions run high, have occasionally characterized the proceedings of courts of justice.—" A gentleman who had been requested by a friend to lend him 'Paine's Rights of Man,' and accordingly gave him permission to take it from his coat pocket; and for this he was convicted on the evidence of that friend, and transported, though the judge who tried him, had himself borrowed the same book from one of the council." This happened in Scotland in 1795.

The Ecclesiastical Authorities, after a long and patient investigation, being satisfied of the guilt of Lord John George De la Poer Beresford, Lord Bishop of Clogher, have pronounced his see to be vacant, and have ordered its name to be changed, to efface, if possible, the recollection of his infamy.

Two boys, who were making the priming for percussion guns, were killed in London, by the explosion of 6 or 7 ounces of it, which is supposed to have taken fire from a spark accidentally falling from a candle. They were found lying on the floor covered with blood; one dead, and the other injured so severely that he survived but a short time. The force of the explosion was so great that every pane of glass and the sashes were blown out, the fire place torn down, the door unhinged, and the whole ceiling underneath, fell down.

THE LORD MAYOR'S BILL OF FARE.

The following is the bill of fare of the feast given yesterday by the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs to the Citizens, as arranged and provided by Mr. Bleadon, of the London Tavern. From its contents strangers may form some distinct conceptions of what is meant by a City feast, and by City eating. The provision was provided on a scale of 1,300 guests, for that is the number who had signified their intention of dining with his Lordship on this occasion.

Imprimis—3,000 pounds of real turtle, which will fill upwards of 200 tureens—2000 dishes of game, hares, pheasants, partridges, &c. &c. and some of the finest and rarest species—61 fowls—30 peacocks—80 turkey——34 sirloins of beef—24 stewed rumps of beef—48 hams—60 to gues—48 large pigeon pies—26 large raised pies—48 fish of the finest species—26 ragouts—128 jellies, creams, &c. &c.—60 large fruit pies—34 large marrow puddings—50 salads—48 large dishes of curious cookery, each of which would take a chapter to describe—100 full grown pine apples—200 pounds of grapes of the finest description—250 ice creams, and pears, apples, olives, cakes, and dried fruit of the finest and rarest description.

The wines provided by Mr Bleadon, were of all kinds, from humble Port to imperial Tokay. Twelve thousand knives and forks, and six thousand plates were expected to be employed upon the occasion, which has occupied the whole of Mr Bleadon's establishment for the last fortnight.

Among the curiosities brought over to this country by the envoys from Peru, is the umbrella formerly held over the head of the Viceroy, when he ascended his carriage, and on other occasions when he went out on foot. It is three times the size of a common umbrella, almost flat when extended, and covered with fine damask velvet, surmounted with two rows of rich gold lace. The mountings are brass, and the pole gilt.

The Ex-Empress Maria Louisa is it seems, one of the visitors at Verona. A letter from that city gives the following description of her appearance at the theatre: "In one of the side boxes on the second tier, sat the Archduchess Maria Louisa attired in a simple, but interesting manner. On her head she wore a plain round cap of Brussels lace, tied under the chin with a pink ribbon; and her robe was of homely Scotch tartan, made in the fashion of the country. She displayed neither pearls nor diamonds, and there was no adventitious circumstance of dress to distinguish her from any female in a comparatively humble sphere of life. Her Imperial Highness was attended by two ladies of honor and two chamberlains, the latter standing the whole time. Her countenance very much resembles the portraits of her that are published in London, and to the ordinary observer, would appear both pleasing and intelligent."

Royal Bon Mot—A Right Hon. Gentleman, who has been recently appointed to one of the highest offices in the State, having been admitted to the Royal presence to receive the seals of office, was observed, on his retirement, to rub his chin in a very contemplative mood.—"I hope," said a friend "that you met with a gracious reception."—"I don't know what to think of it," replied the new Secretary; his Majesty, with apparently perfect sincerity, expressed a wish that I should follow the example of my late Noble predecessor—which I am afraid, means that nothing could give him so much pleasure as that I should cut my throat."

Steam Engine at the bottom of a Coal Pit.—The following very extraordinary application of the most wonderful of modern inventions, the steam engine, occurs in our immediate neighborhood, and is we believe, unparalleled in the United Kingdom. An engine pit of 147½ yards deep, has been sunk upon the Black Mine, in Newton, near Stockport, by Messrs. Bateman and Sherratt, upon the estate of F. D. Astley, Esq. and finding it practicable to win coal from below the deep level, little or no water interfering to prevent it, they have erected an engine, at the bottom of the pit of the following description;—Power, 28 horses—Length of stroke five feet—Length of beam 16 feet—Diameter of the fly wheel 16 feet—Boiler 25 feet long by 6½ feet wide—Boiler house 33 feet long, 15½ high, 17 feet 2 inches wide inside measure—Engine house, 18 feet wide, 30 feet long, and 30 feet high to the top of the arch—the brick work 3 feet thick—the quantity of bricks consumed upwards of 300,000. This engine winds the coal up an inclined plane of 238 yards, driven in the mine by an endless chain of about 5 tons in weight, the average angle of inclination is 37 degrees, equal to 76 yards at 100 yards. The engine was made by Messrs. J. and T. Sherratt, and set up under the inspection of Messrs. Bateman and Sherratt's agent, Mr. J. Wide, of Dunkinfield; and, from the success with which it works, and the difficulties connected with such an undertaking, reflects great credit on Mr. Wide.—Stockport Advertiser.

Ludicrous apprehension.—A gentleman travelling some time ago through some of the suffering counties of the South of Ireland was surprised to find in several destressed families the rice which had been distributed by the Irish Committee untouched. On inquiry into the cause, he found that they supposed that the rice was given them to prevent overpopulation.

A genal man passing through one of the public offices was affronted by some clerks, and was advised to complain to the principal, which he did thus:—"I have been abused here by some of the rascals in this place, and I come to acquaint you of it, as I understand you are the Principal!"

A steam vessel is about to be established, to ply regularly between Portsmouth, in England, and Bilboa, in Spain, by means of which, excepting the winter season, a regular weekly communication may be kept up between Madrid and London, and the traveller pass from one country to the other in the short space of four days. The distance by sea is stated to be no greater than between London and Edinburgh, and will very little deviate from the direct line, the packet may touch at Guernsey and Brest.

Rome, Italy, Oct. 12.

Who would have believed thirty years ago that a simple country woman of Ajaccio, afterwards rather unfortunate at Marseilles, would, in the year 1822, have made a solemn testament in Rome, by which, after having constituted her grandson—a pretended king—her heir, she should leave a legacy of 150,000 crowns to each of her children, Joseph, Lucien Louis, Jerome Elizabeth, Pauline, Caroline, and Hortense, besides 25,000 crowns as a supplementary dowry to each of the four children of Lucien: item, a palace and splendid furniture to a brother, now decorated with the purple and loaded with riches and honor?

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

Remarkable Escape.—On Tuesday night. Howard Trask, a prisoner in the county goal in this town, made his escape and has not yet been found. He is the person who was some time since tried in the Supreme Court for murder committed in the state prison, and acquitted on the plea of insanity, and who being committed for safe keeping to the goal in this town in September last, killed two of his fellow prisoners, who had been permitted to accompany him in his room, to assist him in reading the bible.—Since the commission of this last act, he has been kept in irons, and they were replaced by a new set much stronger. These were shackles upon his legs, by which he was chained to the floor, a double pair of handcuffs and an iron collar with a chain passing from it to the irons between his hands. These irons had been strictly examined on Monday, and were entirely sound, and they were apparently so on Tuesday. He However succeeded on Tuesday night in breaking both pair of handcuffs, the chain of his collar and the chain by which he was fastened to the floor.—He then removed two or three thick oak planks which formed a part of the ceiling, and were fastened by several bolts, broke two large bars of iron, removed a number of small stones in the wall, and forced out a large stone forming a part of the outer face of the wall which fell upon the plat form and left an opening large enough for him easily to escape By the assistance of a plank from his room, he made his way to the top of a shed, from which he escaped into the street, carrying with him probably his collar and handcuffs. It is supposed that he escaped between 11 and 12 o' clock. A person, supposed to be him, was soon afterwards spoken to by the watchmen, but was suffered to pass on.

Remarkable discovery in Gallicia.—A Mr John Chmielecki having read in Kirchner's Annals a conjecture that the subterraneous caves and passages in Podolia had a communication with those below Kiow, resolved to examine a site at Czortkow, to discover any traces of subterraneous caves in that direction. A cavity in the alabaster rocks, overgrown with grass and weeds, was found to be an opening made by art, which had however been choaked up with earth and rubbish When the workmen had cleared away the earth before the entrance, a mephitic vapor issued from the opening, which so affected them, that they fell senseless on the ground; but on being removed into a purer atmosphere, soon recovered. On the following day Mr Chmielecki returned with the town clerk and six resolute peasants, provided with swords, pistols, torches, candles, and axes ended himself into the cave, well armed, with a lighted torch and under box. Having hold of a rope of three hundred fathoms, he crept through the narrow entrance, which is about ten yards long, into a subterraneous excavation, which re-embled a spacious and lofty oval hall, hewn in alabaster, and had very pleasing effect. Here he rested for some time, and then called to his companions who were waiting at the entrance, and who after much persuasion followed him.—On further examining the cave, they discovered several passages of various sizes connected with each other, all curiously hewn out in alabaster and covering a large extent. But whether these passages extended to a great distance, whether they have an issue on the surface or not, were questions which they could not resolve as they hadgot to theend of their line, and would not venture to proceed without a clue. After remaining there four hours they were obliged to retreat by the pressure of the long confined air, which almost extinguished their torches and impeded their breath. The results of their examinations are as follows:—All the subterraneous vaults appeared to be formed partly by nature and partly by art; they contain several halls, or rather spacious vaults, the wall and roofs of which were of pure alabaster. They communicate by means of several passages running to different directions & of various breadths, some of them large enough for a coach and horses to turn in. One of these caves has a near resemblance to a kitchen, for they found upon the hearths, raised of several layers of alabaster, fragments of charcoal and remains of a kind of wood (frenia summer cherry) which is not a native of the country near the excavation. In some places they discovered human skulls, which crumbled into dust on being touched. They likewise found a silver coin of about the size of a sixpence, the name of "Hadrianus" is to be decipherred. They also saw several earthen vessels resembling modern dishes but did not touch them.

Beautiful Phenomena.—The Heavens, at Philadelphia, yesterday forenoon, presented a novel and beautiful appearance. It seemed as if there were four or more suns, in the radii of the sun's rays each emitting a mild transparent stream of light.—The phenomena were interesting for their beauti and singularity.

A newly invented printing press, called the British and Foreign Printing Machine, was exhibited a few days ago to a numerous body of printers and scientific men in London. Two men and three boys were enabled to print 25 sheets in one minute.

The Slave Trade.—By recent accounts, received at Boston from Sierra Leone, it appears that the British cruizers on the coast of Africa, continued very active in their endeavours to put down the abominable trade in human flesh. Off the river Bonny, they had captured a Spanish schooner of 90 tons with 250 slaves on board, and a Portuguese brig of 250 tons with 270 slaves. Besides the participation of these powers calling themselves "Christians," in this barbarous trade, it is stated that the French squadron, on the same station, are restricted by their instructions, from co-operating with the British in capturing slave vessels; thus giving a sanction, by appearing indifferent, to the continuance of the system.

Sierra Leone.—Through the same channel we learn that the Christian population of the colony on the African coast, amounts to 10,000, mostly blacks, who were principally engaged in agricultural pursuits. Commerce was thriving, and the xport of gold dust, elephant's teeth, beeswax, hides, and timber, were considerable. The British had been successful in introducing vaccination on the coast.

Mechanical Wonders!!—Machines have been constructed so as to utter articulate sounds, and even words; and in the last Kaleidascope, we inserted a minute account of Mr. Babbage's celebrated machine for calculation and composition. The following contrivance is more surprising; and we must confess staggers our faith. It reminds us of a prophesy about the perfection to which the cotton machinery will probably be brought at some future day, when a cotton bag, being applied to one end of the machine, shall come out a perfect coat, or suit of clothes at the other end! The mechanism we are about to introduce to our reader, if said to have been invented by Mr. Church, who has succeeded in the experiment at Oxford. It is said to perform the operation of weaving the types in a machine, which, though simple in its structure, performs a variety of motions, by which the types are founded, finished, and distributed into cases, ready for the compositor. The second part of the apparatus is a machine for composing, or collecting the individual types to frame into words, lines, and sentences, which is effected by jacks and keys, to be played upon in the manner of a harpsichord or piano-forte. The third part of the apparatus is that which is used in taking off the impressions from the types; the principles upon which this part of the machinery is constructed are very different from those of the founding and composing apparatus, but equally good and more expeditious.—After the types in the form have given the number of impressions desired, they are returned to the melting pot, re-cast, and distributed mechanically, which is more expeditiously performed than the old process of breaking up the type by hand; securing, also, the advantage of new type, and consequent uniformity throughout a long work, which by the old method, could not be easily accomplished.—If all this be true, we are of opinion that the repeated melting of the metal would in a short time, render it useless.—*Edits. The celebrated Majocchi (better known by the cognomen of Non mi ricordo), one of the principal witnesses against the unfortunate Queen Caroline, now living at Milan, and carries on the business of a marchand devoitures, or dealer in carriages. He is not in very high estimation amongst his countrymen, either in regard to character or circumstances; and it is remarkable, that the appellation of Non mi ricordo still continues attached to his name, even in Italy.

Among the importantacts of the government of Naples is an ordinance, prescribing the dress of the respective ministers of state, in which the colour of the clothes, the quantity of embroidery, and the exact shape, are all regulated with precision. The most minute articles afford subject for legislation to those Noma's of legitimacy—the shape of the hat, and of the buttons, the cut of the waistcoat and pantaloons are both defined with laudable & praiseworthy accuracy.

The Dey of Algiers has resorted to a singular mode of conquering the love of celibacy, by ordaining that every bachelor of more than 20 years of age shall resolve at least once a day in favor of a sound flogging.—The expedient is said to be highly effectual, but it is to be apprehended that it may not on the whole promote the harmony of matrimony, nor on the whole promote the happiness of the husbands may be inclined to deal out to their wives some of the suffering by which their common felicity was attained.

A journal states that at Weimar, in Switzerland, there exists a Chamber of Death, in which the bodies of the dead are deposited for a few days after their decease, with a bell-rope attached to one of their hands, with which they may give a signal of resuscitation.

A method of writing among the Turks.—The art of writing is not very general among the Turks. when they are in love with a person to whom they have easy access they have a mode of writing their sentiments without pen, ink, or paper, by means of flowers, fruits, wood, silks, stuffs, and colours, of which they make a packet, each article having an allegorical sense; this packet they call a selam. They have a dictionary which they know by heart, of the allusions they wish to give by their flowers, &c.—Thus,

An amber signifies, We are both of one mind.

A piece of a rose bush, I weep continually, but you deride my tears

A piece of cloth, I am tired with your importunities.

A piece of canvas or buckram, We shall be together to-morrow.

A piece of silk, You have gained my mind.

A piece of looking-glass, I am ready to sacrifice myself to you.

A pistol, I love you very much.

A grain of raisin, some blue silk, a pea, a morsel of sugar and a piece of wood of aloes, arranged in certain order, form a billet doux to this purpose.

"My heart, I am in love with you; the pain which my love occasions me has nearly deprived me of my senses, my heart passionately desires you. Give my disease the necessary remedy."

The Golden Whip.—Mr. Leclimere Charlton, of Ludford park, Shropshire, has challenged, according to the racing articles, all England, with his celebrated horse Master Henry, for the golden whip, which was given by George II to the Jockey Club, for the best horse in his dominions. Four Miles. Should Mr. Charlton be successful enough to win this splendid trophy, he will be a gainer of a very considerable sum of money, as the rule enacts that he must stake 2000 guineas on making the challenge The whip is at present, and has been for some years, in the possession of his Majesty.

THE LETTER OF "QUIETUS."

Ashes, form a valuable part of our exports, those extensively engaged in this trade, and best acquainted with the sources of supply, estimate the quantity made in Lower Canada to vary from 3000 to 5000 barrels annually.—Wheat, Flour, Pork and Provisions and other goods requiring little tonnage and mostly paying a duty in England nearly equivalent to an exemption, (Hoops and Apples excepted.) The 117 puncheons of Whisky shipped before England in 1821, reckoning the strength about 35 per cent. over by Syke's Hydrometer, would if consumed in England pay a greater amount of duty, than all the other produce of Lower Canada put together for that year.

In fact fully nine tenths of the trade of this port is a mere trade, witness the small stake of Venice while in her commercial prosperity combating the power and acquiring by force of arms Colonies from the great Ottoman Empire; and the Dutch when on the zenith of their commercial glory, disputing the sovereignty of the seas even with England,

As a specimen of the little attention given to the commercial concerns of this Colony by the House of Assembly, it is related by one who was required last session to attend and give information to a committee on the trade of the country, that on entering the committee room, the Chairman was there solus, and acted as Chairman, Committee and Clerk during the whole of his examination.

In order to judge of our favored situation, let it be contrasted with the West Indies—the net revenue paid into the Exchequer on the single article of sugar from these Colonies, exceeds three and a half millions of sterling money annually:—I have before me an official statement of the Island of Jamaica, in aid of supporting the army stationed there for one year, which is as follows:—

Subsistence to Troops and Hospital expenses,	£41,300
Engineers & Captains of different Forts,	1,000
Officers of the Troops for private Lodging,	1,430
Supplying Forts with water,	1,039
Commissioners of the Forts,	5.600
	£50,369

And when the number of Troops exceed three thousand, the whole expences of raising and maintaining such extra number is paid by the Island.—Same year, salaries to Officers of the Assembly, stationary and other contingents, £2,300.—Note, No Translators there.

It is observed that of late years public measures have been conducted by an "infirmity of purpose" but I think rather by a determination in purpose We know how we have been and still are, a change will be to better, the situation and circumstances of the two Provinces point to an Union upon a fair and liberal basis as the Anchor of Hope Barrels of Flour as the surplus quantity for seven years, being on the average for one year 8,660 Barrels. Here is a view of this our fairest branch of commerce, that of grain;—equal to freight about 1090 Register Tons of Shipping.

Flour from the United States unfortunately for the trade of this country is subject to a Canada duty, Indian Corn and Meal are not, Wheat is allowed to come in free. Yet, when application was lately made by the holders of the bonded wheat in England, for permission to send it to the Mills to be made into flour and then to be exported, it was refused. Restrictions proceeding from monopolists or private interest may in a few years leave us with little trade and few ships to visit us, followed by the depreciation of property, and depriving many of employment Provisions imported by sea, and at Montreal exceed out of all proportion our exportations; without these various supplies instead of aiding commerce, the country would be in a state of starvation.

As the observations I have made proceed from the best motives, they may induce others more capable than I am, to illustrate this subject most momentous to the Canadas. Let us cultivate the best understanding with our friends and fellow subjects, the natural and most effectual means of securing and perpetuating that, is by a Union of the Provinces, a Union of resources, strength and intelligence; sharing the same fortune and rising by mutual support,

QUIETUS.

Quebec, 25th January, 1823.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

To be a Patriot in name, and to be one in reality, are very different things. A man may have the reputation of being a Patriot, and call himself an "Observer" of what passes in the country in which he lives—professing himself an enemy to all corruption; and yet, in reality he may be wholly destitute of true patriotism.

This observation I have lived to see verified in that land which will be always dear to me. In that land, (the land in which you and I were born, Sir,) we have had radicals who were perpetually crying up reform and the maintenance of the rights and privileges of the People—"Magna Charta—Magna Charta" was their continual cry!—But what was the intention they had really at heart?—nothing less than the ruin of the country; the overturning of the best Constitution in the world; and the enrichment of themselves, from the plunder to be obtained in the general overthrow—It has been always the case that those who intend to subvert good order in society, begin by making extraordinary pretensions of public virtue, and crying up a necessity for reform!

In this country, Sir, it seems we have our patriotic "Observer," and our staunch contenders for the rights and privileges of the People—Alas! this political hypocrisy has made the formerly sacred name of Patriotism almost suspicious. I must say that when I hear persons trumpeting forth their own praise, and endeavoring to inflame the public mind, I am now compelled to doubt the sincerity of their professions.

The term Hireling is the common name which these sticklers for reform give to all those who are in any office under Government—but, Sir, as I am one without any employment under Government, and am consequently to the receipt of no pay, I take the liberty of informing such persons that, according to the true sense of the word, they are the Hirelings:—they do indeed serve for hire, and are venal and mercenary, doing all that they do for hire—for they receive payment from their followers and supporters, and are bound by their self interest to please their followers and supporters in every particular, and if they do not provide every man of gratification, no matter how base and dishonorable, which those supporters may require for the satisfy of their depraved appetites—the pay will be withdrawn, and the wretched instruments of their pleasures left to shift for themselves. Hence it is that public characters of this stamp so often change their ground—and we have lately had a very notable instance of the kind in this Province.

In my own certain knowledge no man could be a greater stickler for the Union between the Provinces of Canada than the "York Observer," but, behold with what expedition he has whirled round to the other side of the question!—What, Sir, do you imagine is the cause of this sudden change? I will tell you: his supporters, with a certain person at their head, would have withdrawn their subscriptions and allowance, if he had not so done.

Now, Sir, persons of this description are great, and mean object, slaves to the whims and caprice of their followers than any man in office under Government. Their business is to administer a kind of slow poison, and to inflame the public mind, and to bring the Government, and its officers, into contempt,—Is it possible for a race of more thoroughpaced, and undoubted Hirelings to exist? Such are the Cobbetts of England; and, such are the Observers of Canada.—Would to God this, then, and all such, could be brought to consider, and allow, that the LAW of the Most High is binding upon all without one exception;—and this Law should render them faithful to their KING;—faithful to their COUNTRY;—faithful to their FELLOW CREATURES;—and, faithful to the welfare of their own Souls!

The thoughts and intents of the heart, as well as the outward actions of man are to be subservient to the Laws of God;—and one who loves His fear will avoid any thing that tends to inflame and unsettle the minds of the people. The true Christian will be ready to say with SAMUEL, GOD forbid that I should sin against the LORD in ceasing to pray for this nation, &c.:—he would act upon all occasions as SAMUEL did, and would endeavor to promote the welfare of his country by being a good citizen:—he would contribute chearfully to support her necessary burthens:—he would live in all Godly quietness and honesty of intention, as well as action, amongst the people:—and, he would pray diligently, and sincerely, for the whole public weal. Such a man must be a true PATRIOT, and were the country filled with such subjects there would be but small reason to dread the mightiest and most numerous enemies; for what power would be able to penetrate that "wall of fire" with which the SUPREME BEING would surround it?

If, Sir, these few hints I have thus communicated are deemed worthy of a place in the Weekly Register, I beg you will insert them; and, in so doing, you will oblige,

Sir,
Your's, &c. &c.
R——l.

Newmarket, Feb. 10th, 1823.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WEEKLY REGISTER.

Sir,

"A neighbor of mine, a plain man like myself, having broken through his habitual reserve and aversion to appear in public, in order to address you upon the late conduct of a notorious scribbler, who professes to edite a paper called the "Observer," (but which in my humble opinion would be more aptly styled "The Political Weathercock and Slang Gazetteer,") I cannot help aiding his purpose by sending a few examples of the many gross and shameless inconsistencies, as well as glaring instances of effrontery and falsehood, with which his Newspaper abounds, with a view of preventing many honest farmers, up and down the country, (who have hitherto had no better means of information,) from pinning their faith on the sleeve of such an unprincipled political mountebank, as this at once Being seems to have a pride in manifesting himself to be.

I could have sent you many dozen instances of similar inconsistency and impudence, selected from the publication in question; but the following, on the important subject of the Union of the Legislatures of the two CANADAS may suffice:—

FOR THE UNION.

(From the Ob. July 1st 1823.)

"Without the consolidation of the Governments, this Province must remain a more enslaved portion of His Majesty's Dominions."

"It is impossible for us to have an energetic government whilst we are divided and wrangling amongst ourselves." &c. &c.

AGAINST THE UNION.

(From the Ob. Sep. 20 1822.)

"It must, we think, strike every unprejudiced man with astonishment, when he reflects upon the situation of these Provinces, the loyal character of the people who inhabit them, the sacrifices made by them, not only in the American Revolution, but during the late war with the United States, that they who risked their lives and fortunes in supporting the cause of Royalty and the British name, should have been looked upon as the only subjects of his Majesty, unworthy of those LIBERTIES which is bound them in the appalling hour of trial and of danger to the mother country; and which were secured to them and to their posterity by the most solemn compact, during the mild and benificent reign of his late Majesty.

We have given the proceeding all due consideration; and we do most solemnly protest, and we state it with regret, that, in our opinion, a more inhuman act was never set on foot to DRIVE the King's Ministers, IMPOSE upon the British Parliament and DEPRIVE a BRAVE and LOYAL people of their well earned liberties than the one before us—Ireland, unhappy Ireland! Rebelled. If she lost her Parliament, she lost it by the consent of her representatives; but she is not taxed without her consent—the duration of Parliament has not been extended—the qualification of her members has not been increased, nor are there persons appointed by the King to droll and overawe the gentlemen who represent her

If these Colonies had been on the verge of Rebellion, as they had been inviting a foreign power to take possession of their fortresses, and if they had intended the destruction of church and state, a greater abridgment of their liberties could not have been contemplated

The people must be satisfied that a party possessing despotic principles does exist in these Provinces, whose sole object is the enslavement of the inhabitants. This we presume, cannot be denied, from the INFAMOUS evidence given to Mr. Wilmot & Mr. Ellice, upon the subject of the Union, by some cool deliberate, and crafty agents who have taken care to hide them selves behind the curtain, to avoid the execration & contempt and as indignant public as it there be any persons, friends to the vile authors of our intended ruin and degradation, they may be easily discovered at the meetings that are about to take place in all parts of this Colony. There know that the undermining agents in order to enslave these Provinces, have deceived the King's Ministers and imposed upon the British Parliament; and that the exposure of their baseness, by the unanimous voice of the people must extinguish their sinful and abominable hopes for ever.

"It is believed that, in case the little chicken takes place, Gourlay's act, and the Civil list act, will die natural deaths; and there can be no doubt, from the TALENTS and spirit of the French Canadians, and the LIBERAL and ENLIGHTENED policy of Lord Dalhousie, of the Discontents of this Colony obtaining those privileges which have been so long and so unjustly withheld from them &c. &c."

Therefore, such object must be to divert the people from petitioning the House of Commons immediately.—They will bounce and bounce about the injustice of the Union; and perhaps go so far to call the authors of it Tyrants; but as their MAIN object is put forward, they will assert that the Petition should be home to our Parliament:—to the Governor, who will appoint an "Ambassador" to carry it to England!!"

(Observer Oct 14th 1822.)

It is impossible we think, that any man, who is when in possession the honour and dignity of the Country, can so be besotted in intellect as not to see the necessity of coming forward upon this momentous occasion, and endeavouring by all the Constitutional means in his power, to resist a measure which tends to his enslavement, and the disinheriting of that happy Constitution to which he owes his freedom and his happiness; and without which, this Colony would have been lost to the Mother Country. For it is not the title of King, which we revere nor the honour of being called British subjects, which we glory in, that hits our hearts and souls to Great Britain, but it is the freedom and security we enjoy under the protection—Let that freedom secured to us by our happy Constitution be once destroyed—let a new fangled Constitution be established, which annihilates in a disguised manner, the rights of the people and gives unnatural power to the Executive, and the consequences must be dreadful.

In another of this Observer's paper's (of June 10th) he infers that he has a friend at Court perfectly well acquainted with the secret intentions of His Majesty,; for he says "by a private letter we are informed, that our most gracious Sovereign intends leading to th hymenial (not hymeneal) altar the widow of the immortal Napoleon" !!!—Now, if any thing could equal this audacity, it is the very impudent manner in which he thought proper to reply to some remarks of yours, Sir, respecting the activity of the Attorney General for this Province, whilst in London, where he says in the Observer of June 17,—"With regard to the Attorney General's daily and long interviews with Ministers, it is all nonsense, stupid trash, unworthy of contradiction The business has been referred by Lord Bathurst to one of the understrappers at the Treasury, who we doubt not, will make a report favorable to this Colony, which would have been done without the presence of our Commissioner,"—It seems this shameless man intends to convict himself of effrontery and foolhood in this particular, also; since, in one of his recent papers, he has promised to publish the Attorney Generals Correspondence, whilst in London, which I am informed makes good your former statement in every particular.

After such an exhibition of virtue, talent, and principle, I know not in what class of society the whirling Demagogue expects to find supporters; at all events he shall no longer have amongst his subscribers

Your most obedient, &c.
A PLAIN FARMER.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 8

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

We have great pleasure in publishing the first number of a complete Parliamentary Register for Upper Canada in this Paper, to be regularly continued. It is an Official document published by order of the House of Assembly, and it must therefore be more satisfactory to the people at large than any garbled or partial statements of particular debates, as this work will contain an entire history of all the proceedings of the House, with the Yeas & Nays on every question that is put to the vote, by which means Constituents throughout the Province will see on which side their Representatives have voted. It is our intention to avoid getting into arrears; and, at the close of the Session to throw off a Supplement containing the proceedings of the House for the first few weeks of the Session, previous to the present order being made.

It is impossible for want of room this week to publish our plan for the preservation of the health and morals of the nomade Indians resident in the Province, and for rendering them indirectly subservient to an increase of the public revenue, according to an intention expressed in our last week's number. Being perfectly satisfied with the feasibility of our scheme, however, we shall not fail to make its outlines known before the close of the present Session, in the hope that it may be brought before the consideration of Parliament.

By the extracts from American papers it will be seen that our neighbours are fully determined on stretching their settlements quite across the continent. The opportunity of organizing a suitable check on the growth of that power will shortly be lost;—and, lost for ever, on the part of England;—our whole mind and heart is full of this tremendously important subject, and deeply do we regret that circumstances of an imperious nature have hitherto prevented the publication of a little work on which we are quite willing to rest the merits of our political character. A day will assuredly come when it will be seen and felt that CANADA might have been rendered, in truth, the "LAST HOPE OF ENGLAND." What it is to become, may not be so certain. But "a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house."

The foreign news are of little importance if we except that France seems to hesitate in availing herself of the permission granted her by the Holy Alliance to make war on Spain—England is no doubt the preventive check.

Having seen the Sword supposed to have belonged to the Young Pretender, about which there has been so much conversation, we have been induced to publish the account first given in the Kilgaton Chronicle, for the amusement of some of our readers. The description of this Sword is sufficiently accurate;—but, whether the description of LOGAN'S Tomahawk is equally correct may be justly doubted:—however, we give the writer of that article full credit for his ingenuity, and happy vein of humour.—There is certainly nothing about the Sword to identify it with the unfortunate CHARLES STUART—the words "Vive le Roy" upon the blade would, in our opinion, rather prove it to have belonged to a Chieftain in his service, as it is not usual for Kings, whether legitimate or otherwise, to display such mottos, or bear the arms of a foreign potentate in lieu of their own.—But let that pass.

We regret that want of room prevents our giving some proceedings of the Congress of the United States, highly interesting to this country, as affecting very materially our Trade with the States. We shall endeavour to give the resolutions next week: they are of very serious importance.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

The new Memoirs of Napoleon, by himself, are announced as nearly ready for publication. The advertisement states that they were commenced by Napoleon on his passage to St. Helena, and continued as his constant occupation during the six years of his captivity. He rarely wrote himself, as his pen could not keep pace with his ideas, but dictated to his Secretaries, who were obliged to write so rapidly, that it often happened that the night sufficed with difficulty to reduce to order what they had taken down during the day. The copies were carefully revised by the Emperor, and corrected with his own hand. The manuscript is preserved as a valuable relic of this great being, and a proof of the authenticity of the publication.

A great sensation has been excited at Constantinople, by a firman against articles of luxury, the particular objects of which are furs, cashmire shawls, silks, &c. whether of European or Indian manufacture. The English merchants were seriously affected by its operation.

It is rumoured in the political circles, at the west end of London, that Mr. Canning, fearing he may not possess that influence in the House of Commons which he considers essential, has represented to His Majesty the necessity of a dissolution of Parliament. His Majesty has not yet given his consent, but a dissolution is not considered as improbable.—Englishman.

Mr. Canning has appointed his nephew, Lord George Bentinck, the son of the Duke of Portland, to be his private Secretary.

The Order of the Garter, which became vacant by the death of the late Marquis of Londonderry, has been bestowed on the Marquis of Hertford.

Irish Wedding.—An affair of an extraordinary nature occured a few days back in the County of Wicklow, which is likely to furnish matter of discussion in the Irish Law Courts. The parties are exceedingly respectable, and the occurence has plunged two families in inexpressible affliction.—Two marriages took place—the two brides were escorted by their admiring grooms on the wedding day to a hotel, not far from Dublin; they dined, took tea, supped, and then the ladies retired. The gentlemen unfortunately sacrificed a little too freely to the Jolly God, and on retiring to bed, each entered the wrong apartment.—Freeman's Journal.—Qy. To what God had the ladies been sacrificing, that they did not perceive the mistake?

Singular meaning of ancient names.—It is curious to observe the literal meaning of the names which were bestowed upon mankind—omitting Cain and his wicked posterity:

Adam, man—Seth, placed—Enosh, miserable—Kenan, possession—Mahalaleel, the prized God—Jarrd, descending—Enoch, teaching—Methuselah, his death produces—Noah, rest. On connecting the words they teach this great truth.—Man, being placed in a miserable condition, the blessed God descending shall teach that his death produces to debased man rest.

It appears that there has been coined at the Mint of the United States the sum of 19,852,746 dollars in various pieces of money, from the year 1793 to 1822.

A magnanimous method of shewing the gratitude of a magnanimous Emperor.—By the new Russian Tariff the import trade with England is completely put an end to. All refined sugars, woollen goods, and printed goods are prohibited, excepting certain unimportant colors of cloth, which are still permitted at St. Petersburgh only. Nearly every kind of hardware manufactured is prohibited, and those that are allowed, are saddled with such enormous duties as amount to prohibition.

FRANCE.

Extract of a letter from Havre, Dec. 11.

"There are many factions at present in France, but only two parties; one inclined to war, and the other to peace. The king is for the pacific party. It is hoped he will have firmness enough, since he differs in so important a particular from the Ultras, not only to maintain his sovereign will, but to dismiss those rash Ministers who are ready to involve France in an unreasonable war, and one so contrary to the wishes of fifteen sixteenths of the nation. Indeed there is already rumour of some change in the Cabinet. As a proof how firmly the people believe in the continuance of peace, vessels are daily fitting out at Havre for Havana, the West Indies, Brazils, &c. &c.

"The preparations of the French Army of Observation, it is thought are intended to frighten the Spanish Cortes into a change of their Constitution, at least so far as regards the adoption of a Senate or Upper House, as a check on their representative body, and an additional aid to the crown.

Spain.—The Constitutionalists were still successful. Mina, in order to attach the French to his standard, was on the confines of Spain, organizing a regiment, or rather army of foreigners, who are wore the tri-colored cockade. Four hundred letters of marque had been forwarded to the Spanish Consul in London.

Three days later from France.—The ship Mary, Perrot, arrived at Savanah, brings Havre dates to the 15th December. The Editor of the Savanah Georgian, states he has received letters to the above dates which agree in stating, that the appearance of war between France and Spain, had in a great measure, subsided.

SPAIN.

The Clergy of Spain occupied the first attention of the Cortes. It was stated that twelve hundred prelates and clergy had joined the Royal Standards in various provinces on the frontier, and had been banished. The Cortes, in consequence, decreed, that the Prelates who have been banished, should be deprived of all their revenues; and those ecclesiatics who have been forbidden to exercise their functions, who remained in their diocess, should only receive a partial allowance. That all the vacant Bishopricks should be immediately filled: and that the government should be authorised to remove all Priests, who have separated themselves from their parishes, and all whose licenses to preach have been taken away.

All persons in the pay of Spain are to be deprived of two thirds of their salaries, if they do not appear in arms to resist any attacks on the places in which they reside.

Confiscation of Property.—It is decreed, that all conspiracy against the Constitution shall be liable to confiscation of property, for the benefit of the nation. Also, that all Civil and Military Officers, who refuse to occupy new situations, shall be immediately cashiered.

It is decreed, that the Civil Governors shall have power, in order to detect conspiracies to search all houses in Spain, those of Foreign Ministers, and the private apartments of the Royal Family only excepted. Every other part of the places may be visited.

London, Dec. 7.—An answer to the dispatches sent off to Spain on the 2d of December, was expected at Paris about the 13th to the 18th. The following are said to be the propositions of France, to the government of Spain.

"1. The restoration of the King to his personal freedom, without delay; for it is now distinctly understood, that he is in a state of confinement in his palace of the Retiro.

"2. The restoration of the King to his sovereign rights.

"3. Such a change in the Constitution of Spain as shall give to the nobles a great share of the power they possessed under the old regime.

"4. The exclusion of the present ministers from office, or, at least, most of the heads of the different departments.

"5. An amnesty for all persons of whatever rank engaged in the cause of the Regency.

"6. A more strict regulation of the laws relating to the Press.

"7. The possession of certain strong places on the frontiers of France, as a guarantee for the performance of any undertaking into which the Spanish Government may enter.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

From statements to the American Congress, it appears that the imports during the year ending on the 30th of Sept 1822 have amounted to $85,241,541, of which amount $76,984,331, were imported in American vessels, and $6,257,210 in foreign vessels; that the exports have, during the same period, amounted to $72,160,881, of which $49,874,079 were domestic, and $22,236 203 were foreign articles; that of the domestic articles, $30,831,818, were exported in American vessels, and $9,942,166 in foreign vessels; and, of the foreign articles exported, $20,783,658 were exported in American, and $1,502,547 in foreign vessels; that 787,961 tons of American shipping entered, and 81,748 cleared from the U. States; and that 100,541 tons of foreign shipping entered, and 87,430 cleared from the ports of the U. States during the same period.

The project of forming a settlement accompanied by military occupation, at the Mouth of the River Columbia, seems to have gradually obtained attention and favor at Washington.

Setting aside all considerations connected with trade and ordinary policy, the simple object of the distribution of the American race, with American principles and institutions, over the surface of this continent, is that upon which the philanthropist and philosophical STATESMAN will lay the utmost stress.

It is the duty of the Republic to exclude, if possible, from every part of the territory which she may rightfully claim, the establishment of any other political and social principles and arrangements than her own; and as she cannot justifiably maintain deserts, she has no other means to discharge the high obligation just mentioned, than American colonization. We speak however, with this reserve—that no negro slavery be permitted to be diffused with the dissemination to which we have adverted—it is an appendage which threatens ultimately to counteract every spring of excellence and defeat all noble and benevolent ends.—National Gaz.

The Kentucky papers say, that about two thousand dollars, in notes, of the mother Bank of the commonwealth, had been doomed to the flames in pursuance of an act passed at the late session of the General Assembly of that state; and that more paper of a similar description would shortly be committed to the fiery element.

From Mexico.—By the arrival of the President, Capt. Fanning, 5 days from Charleston, just as we were putting our paper to press, we learn that the clouds of faction and rebellion are arising on all sides, in Mexico, and threaten a total Eclipse of the Imperial Star which so suddenly rose in that country.

From the National Intelligencer.

By a letter received here from an Officer at Fort St. Anthony, Upper Mississipi, we learn that the Indians at the 'Upper St Petre,' are shewing great symptoms of a hostile disposition towards the Americans, that they intended to effect a Council with the officers, and then to rush upon and massacre them. An interpreter of Mr. Robinson, an Indian Trader, has been wounded. The letter says, "That an Indian first shot at an officer, and, upon being asked why he had done so, replied, because it was a good mark, he was told to shoot at something else, and he replied he would. He then took a position to get Robinson and his men in a range, and fired; the shot passed within an inch or two of Mr. Robinson's head, and through the interpreter's body."

A REMARKABLE SWORD AND, A STILL MORE REMARKABLE TOMAHAWK.

From the Kingston Chronicle.

Arrived at this place on Tuesday last, McNAB, of McNab. On reference to the Chronicle of the 20th ult. it will be seen that this respectable Scotch Chief has traced to the wilds of Canada, the long lost SWORD of the unfortunate PRINCE CHARLES EDWARD STEWART, and that he now carries with him this Royal relic. We were yesterday politely favored with a sight of this SWORD which independently of its history bears unequivocal marks, that it was originally designed for, and was once the property of this Royal personage. The Sword is about four feet in length, of German manufacture, the Hilt is surrounded with a chain of the purest gold, and on that part near the hilt is engraved on one side along the blade, the words "Vive le Roy" in large characters, on the other the Royal arms of France, three fleur de lis within a shield surmounted by a crown bearing also three fleur de lis. On both sides are engraved the word Cavaliers also in large characters immediately under the arms, below which a burning heart is placed, and nearest to the Hilt the word Sohlingen.

We think if we connect the description of this sword with its history, and enquire how such an article could possibly come into the possession of the family to whom it has been traced, we must be necessarily led to the conclusion that it is no other than the SWORD of PRINCE CHARLES EDWARD STEWART.

"—"From the Chronicle of Dec 20. 1822

The following interesting account of the discovery of the Sword belonging to the unfortunate PRINCE CHARLES EDWARD STEWART has been furnished us by a gentleman, on whose authority the most implicit confidence may be placed, for the correctness of the statement.—Whatever doubts may be entertained by some respecting the identity of the sword in question, it is certain that the family in whose possession the precious relic has been so long preserved, firmly believe that it really is the same which it is described to be, and there is not the least reason to doubt that the Chieftain into whose hands it has now fallen, is perfectly satisfied that no imposition has been practised on him.

Prince Charles Edward Stewart's Sword found.

This is the sword which was unsheathed when the Prince landed on the western coast of Scotland, to fight for the Kingdom of their ancestors, and this is the sword which was unsheathed on the fields of Culloden, where his fate and fortunes were for ever decided. On the Prince's retreat from Culloden, he took refuge in a peasant's house, and being hotly pursued by the Cavalry, made his escape out of a window, leaving his sword and shield behind him. The sword was carefully preserved as a sacred relic. It was traced by Mr. McNab of McNab to the township of Lochiel, Glengary, where it was found in the possession of a respectable settler, a Mr. McNaughton, who with his predecessors were tenants of the McNab family—McNab's ancestors were warm supporters of the Stewart family, and by their unfortunate attachment to Prince Charles in '45, lost their right to considerable estates. The sword is now in the possession of McNab of McNab, and it is understood that it is the intention of the Chief to present it to His Majesty George the Fourth.

From the Montreal Herald.

To the Editor of the Montreal Herald.

SIR,

You will oblige me by inserting in your next paper the narrative of the unexpected and very extraordinary discovery, of the Tomahawk of the notorious and very celebrated Mingo Chief Logan.

There appears Mr. Editor, such a remarkable coincidence in the discovery of the Tomahawk alluded to, and that of the sword of the unfortunate Prince Charles Edward Stewart, that none of your readers may be desirous of being made acquainted with the particulars.

I am, Sir, your very obedient serv't.

PETER MEANWELL.

The Tomahawk of the celebrated Orator and Mingo Chief Logan found.

This is the Tomahawk which was lifted when this great warrior appeared on the banks of the great Ramhaway, to rally the chiefs and their tribes, to fight for the lands of their forefathers; and this is the Tomahawk which was wielded at the mouth of that great river in the autumn of '74, when, notwithstanding the efforts of the combined forces of the Shawanes, Mingo, and Delawars tribes, he met with such an overthrow and reverse of fortune as forever to decide his fate! On Logan's retreat after this sanguinary conflict, he took shelter in a wigwam belonging to one of his tribe, and being hotly pursued by the Virginian militia, made his escape by an aperture in the wigwam, leaving his Tomahawk and the indispensible part of his dress behind him.

This Tomahawk was carefully preserved as a sacred relic. It was lately traced by one of the chiefs of the Delaware tribe, (whose predecessors had settled near Amherstburgh, in Upper Canada, and formed, what is this day called the Delaware Village) to the Michigan territory, when it was found in the possession of that family, with whom it is supposed to have been left. Indeed, although from its general appearance a person would naturally suppose it resembles more the Tomahawk of some petty leader than that of so distinguished a warrior, it is certain that the family, in whose possession this precious relic has been so long preserved, firmly believe that it is really the same which it is described to be; and there is not the least reason to doubt that the chief, into whose hands it has now fallen, is perfectly satisfied that no imposition has been practised upon him.

This Delawarian chief's ancestors were warm supporters of Logan, and in consequence of which lost their right to considerable territory. This Tomahawk is now in the possession of Sakianahawi, the chief alluded to, who, it is said, is in contemplation to cross the Atlantic, for the purpose of presenting it to His Majesty George the Fourth. His Majesty will, no doubt, present this valuable relic, together with the sword of Prince Charles Edward, which has been as lately and as miraculously discovered, to the Edinburgh Antiquarian Society.

Amherstburgh, Dec. 13th, 1822.

COMMUNICATION.

Niagara, 24th Jan. 1823.

Arrived at this place on Thursday last, Sakianahawie, the great war chief of Delaware village. On reference to the communication of Peter Meanwell, in the Montreal Herald of the 18th instant, it will be seen that this celebrated chief has traced to the Michigan territory the long lost Tomahawk of the unfortunate Logan, and that he now carries with him this precious relic. Several persons yesterday were very politely favored with a sight of this Tomahawk, which, independently of its history, bears the most unequivocal marks that it was originally designed for, and was once the property of this great great personage. The Tomahawk is near seven inches wide, from the part which admits the handle to the edge six inches; of English manufacture, and of the purest steel. On one side of the Tomahawk is indented, in large characters, "Birmingham," weighing, without the handle, 3 lbs. 14oz. The handle is of hickory, and is 3 feet 11 inches long, flat, and about 2 inches in breadth, beautifully polished. The strap, which is of elk leather, and by which it is suspended from the wrist in time of action, is tastefully garnished with porcupine quills, and to which are attached two scalps, and a quantity of horse hair, dyed with vermillion. On one side of the handle is carved the figures of two monstrous bears, one of them appearing mortally wounded by an arrow which an Indian has discharged from his bow; the savage is in the act of drawing his Tomahawk, and advancing for the purpose of despatching him. On the other side of the handle is designated, three Europeans laying on the ground, and three Indian warriors in the act of scalping them. The defeat of a body of the British Militia by the Indians, and a variety of wild beasts are also represented. Near that part of the handle which is admitted into the Tomahawk are thirty notches, expressive of the number of battles or scalps, or perhaps both, which the chief fought and took.

I think if we connect the description of the Tomahawk with its history, and enquire how such an article could possibly come into the possession of the chief by whom it has been traced and rescued from oblivion, notwithstanding that individuals, versed in Indian heraldry and customs, have declared the Tomahawk in question to be that of some petty chief, not connected with Logan or his family, by the non-appearance of the armorial bearings of Logan's family, our conclusion however must be that no imposition has been practised, particularly when it is considered that the sword of Prince Charles Edward Stuart, which has been lat ly discovered and narrowly examined, is found destitute of the arms of royalty, and that of the very king clan for the recovery of which it was drawn; and, likewise, the extraordinary circumstance of its bearing the arms of a foreign country.

Mr. Editor,

Having seen in your columns an account of the discovery of Logan's Tomahawk, I beg leave to transmit to you the foregoing description of it, which may be amusing to some of your readers.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A TRAVELLER.

A Sketch of the Speech delivered by the Honorable L. P. Sherwood, Esq.

On the Question of the Union

Tuesday, Feb. 18th 1823.

From the nature of his high Office as Speaker of the House of Assembly, it is only on particular occasions that the public can be gratified by any display of eloquence (from Mr. Sherwood); whose talents, as an orator, are of a superior order, rich, various, and commanding. The House being in Committee on Tuesday last, debating the great and important question of the proposed Union of the two Legislatures, this Gentleman spoke at considerable length, and with great effect, in favor of the measure. We are sorry that we cannot give a more accurate report of his speech, a part of which only we had the pleasure of hearing. He began by taking a broad and general view of the political history of the Canadas since the year 1760, and observed,

"The great ability, sound argument, superior eloquence, and logical arrangement already displayed by the Members of the Honorable Committee leave very little for me to remark upon, but, on a question of such great importance to both Provinces, every true lover of his country must consider it imperative upon him to express his opinion.

A historical account of the political state of both Provinces has been already given by an Honorable Gentleman, I will therefore briefly state that, after the British Flag had proudly triumphed over the fallen banners of France, and Gallic pride and ambition were prostrated before English valour and perseverance, in the Province of Quebec, the British Government designed a Constitution for the inhabitants of the conquered country founded on the principles of English liberty. Experience, however, soon made it manifest that these recent subjects of France had no rational idea of liberty—the glory of their great Monarch being the most prominent feature of their political creed.

In the year 1783 a new and important era was opened. The American Revolution, founded in rebellion, drove from those ancient British Colonies, now constituting the United States of America nearly 50,000 faithful subjects of the King, who took refuge in Canada rather than live under the new Republican Government.

The British Government always just, generous, and magnanimous, determined on giving those worthies a Free Constitution by which they had always considered as savoring too much of Tyrany. The 31st of The late King was then passed, and the two Provinces continued to prosper under it, until an increase of wealth and an extension of commercial and agricultural views gradually involved them in very serious disputes. To remedy the evils arising from these misunderstandings our Commissioner was sent to England, and, he has done as much for us as the relative political situation of the two Provinces and his own great abilities could possibly effect.—The opposers of the Union pretend that the Trade Bill, lately enacted in the Imperial Parliament is wholly satisfactory, and it places us at that point beyond which we should not desire to proceed;—I must, however, beg leave to dissent from this opinion and to state some of those objections to this Bill, and some of those advantages which we may reasonably expect from an Union, that occur to me.

The Trade Bill will not produce the beneficial effects contemplated by the anti Unionists.—It infringes on the Constitution of this Province, in as much as the Imperial Parliament has passed a Law which gives a third body of men a part of the power of the Legislature on a subject immediately affecting the revenue. It gives Upper Canada a negative on the proceedings of the Legislature of Lower Canada relative to the imposing of duties; and, finally, it takes away the right of determining the question from both Legislatures in case they disagree and transfers it, not to the final decision of the Imperial Parliament, but, to the separate judgment of either House of Parliament who have the power of repealing any such measure within thirty days after it is submitted to the Imperial Parliament.

It takes away the power of appropriating money for the improvement of the navigation of the St. Lawrence from the Legislature of both Provinces, and places it with Arbitrators, and then takes it again from the Arbitrators and returns it to the Legislatures of both Provinces—for no award is valid until it is sanctioned by a Law of each Province

It fixes unalterably the amount of our revenue from Lower Canada by award of Arbitrators for four years; although, from the extension of commerce it is probable we should be thereby considerable losers. It has a direct tendency to prejudice and irritate the Legislature of Lower Canada against us, by giving us a restrictive power on their proceedings in all financial measures.—Rendering to our Constitution by allowing Lower Canada to originate all measures affecting revenue levied at the Port of Quebec, when our right to do so, (as far as regards our share of the revenue) is as strong as theirs.

I shall now, Sir, take the liberty of stating some of the advantages that will arise from the Union.—It will enable the two Provinces in a free and unrestricted manner to unite their best endeavors for the extension and growth of commerce, and the general and uniform improvement of their agricultural interests.

The Trade Bill provides for the improvement of the navigation of the River St. Lawrence only, but an Union would enable us to improve the navigation of other rivers, the Ottawa, the Thames, the Grand River, the Rideau, the Mississippi, and the Petite Nation.

It would enable us to establish Colleges and other Seminaries of Learning; and the advantages of such institutions would be invaluable in this country by their effects in the support of Religion, morality, and loyalty. The Union would produce a stronger cast of English feeling among those of French origin and it would strengthen and support this feeling amongst all classes of people in Lower Canada.

The French Canadians have already acquired a taste for rational liberty from the administration of the Criminal Law of England, from the trial by Jury and from the commercial intercourse with England. This growing predilection would be matured, and become an habitual feeling, by a more intimate connexion with the people of Upper Canada who are all English. The Union will raise us in the estimation of the Parent State, by increasing our capacity for becoming more useful to her, both in peace and war. It will encrease our respectability with foreign nations, who will then behold a great and an extensive country possessing a Legislature whose energies and means are adequate to the sure and rapid advancement of her political strength, and consequent aggrandizement." The Honorable Member concluded by saying that unanimity and strength, riches and honor must follow the adoption of this important measure.

The preceeding Sketch merely gives the leading points of one of the best speeches ever heard in our House of Assembly; we cannot pretend to give the whole, or do justice to the spirit, and emphasis, with which it was delivered.

A light step in a giddy dance,
With now and then an Amoon glance,
A soft squeeze of the hand or two,
A sigh, (a mimic one will do,)
And "What a lovely girl thou art,"

Will force it in despite of fate
In three days to capitulate.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE the FOURTH, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith:

To all to whom these Presents shall come,

Greeting:—

Whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the thirty first year of the Reign of His late Majesty, King George the Third, of glorious memory, entitled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, An Act for making more effectual provisions for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," it is amongst other things enacted "That it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, to authorise the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of each of the said Provinces respectively, to present to every such Parsonage or Rectory, when any Incumbent or Minister of the Church of England, who shall have been duly ordained according to the rites of the said Church, and to supply from time to time such vacancies as may happen therein, and that every person so presented to any such Parsonage or Rectory, shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights, profits and emoluments, thereunto belonging or granted as fully and amply and in the same manner, and on the same terms and conditions, and liable to the performance of the same duties as the Incumbent of a Parsonage or Rectory in England." And Whereas, notwithstanding His Majesty has been graciously pleased under the provisions of the said Act to reserve for the support of a Protestant Clergy in this Province, one seventh of all lands granted therein, doubts have been suggested that the Tithe of the produce of Land might, under the thirty ninth section of the said in part recited Act, still be demanded by the Incumbent duly instituted or Rector of any Parish, to whose which a Bill entitled, "An Act relative to the right of Tithes within this Province," was passed by the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, during the first Session of the [illegible] Provincial Parliament, met at York, in the Province of Upper Canada, on the thirty-first day of January, and prorogued on the fourteenth day of April following in the second year of our reign, declaring that no Tythe shall be claimed, demanded or received by any Ecclesiastical person, Rector or Vicar of the Protestant Church within this Province, any Law, Custom or Usage to the contrary notwithstanding, which Bill was reserved for the signification of our pleasure thereon. And Whereas, it is provided by the said first in part recited Act, amongst other things, that the several provisions therein before contained respecting the constituting, erecting and endowing Parsonages or Rectories within the said Provinces, and also respecting the presentation of Incumbents or Ministers to the same, and also respecting the manner in which such Incumbent or Minister shall hold and enjoy the same, shall be subject to be varied or repealed by any express provision, for that purpose contained in any Act or Acts which may be passed by the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Provinces respectively, and assented to by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, under the restrictions therein after provided, and that whenever any Act or Acts shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of either of the said Provinces, containing any provisions which shall in any manner relate to or affect the payment, recovery or enjoyment of any of the accustomed dues or rights therein before mentioned, or shall in any manner relate to the granting, imposing or recovering any other dues, stipends or emoluments whatever, to be paid to or for the use of any Minister, Priest, Ecclesiastic or Teacher, according to any Religious form or mode of worship in respect of his said office or function, every such act or acts shall, previous to any declaration or signification of the King's Assent thereto, be laid before both Houses of Parliament in Great Britain, and that it shall not be lawful for His Majesty His Heirs and Successors, to signify his, or their assent to any such Act or Acts, until thirty-days after the same shall have been laid before the said Houses, and that no such Act shall be valid or effectual to any of the said purposes within either of the said Provinces, unless the Legislative Council and Assembly of such Provinces, shall in the Session in which the same shall have been passed by them, have presented to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of such Provinces, an Address or Addresses, specifying that such Act contains provisions for some of the purposes therein before specially described, and desiring that in order to give effect to the same such Act shall be transmitted to England then in, doubts have been suggested that the Tithe of the produce of Land might, under the thirty ninth section of the said in part recited Act, still be demanded by the Incumbent duly instituted or Rector of any Parish, to whose which a Bill entitled, "An Act relative to the right of Tithes within this Province," was passed by the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, during the first Session of the [illegible] Provincial Parliament, met at York, in the Province of Upper Canada, on the thirty-first day of January, and prorogued on the fourteenth day of April following in the second year of our reign, declaring that no Tythe shall be claimed, demanded or received by any Ecclesiastical person, Rector or Vicar of the Protestant Church within this Province, any Law, Custom or Usage to the contrary notwithstanding, which Bill was reserved for the signification of our pleasure thereon. And Whereas, it is provided by the said first in part recited Act, amongst other things, that the several provisions therein before contained respecting the constituting, erecting and endowing Parsonages or Rectories within the said Provinces, and also respecting the presentation of Incumbents or Ministers to the same, and also respecting the manner in which such Incumbent or Minister shall hold and enjoy the same, shall be subject to be varied or repealed by any express provision, for that purpose contained in any Act or Acts which may be passed by the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Provinces respectively, and assented to by His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, under the restrictions therein after provided, and that whenever any Act or Acts shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of either of the said Provinces, containing any provisions which shall in any manner relate to or affect the payment, recovery or enjoyment of any of the accustomed dues or rights therein before mentioned, or shall in any manner relate to the granting, imposing or recovering any other dues, stipends or emoluments whatever, to be paid to or for the use of any Minister, Priest, Ecclesiastic or Teacher, according to any Religious form or mode of worship in respect of his said office or function, every such act or acts shall, previous to any declaration or signification of the King's Assent thereto, be laid before both Houses of Parliament in Great Britain, and that it shall not be lawful for His Majesty His Heirs and Successors, to signify his, or their assent to any such Act or Acts, until thirty-days after the same shall have been laid before the said Houses, and that no such Act shall be valid or effectual to any of the said purposes within either of the said Provinces, unless the Legislative Council and Assembly of such Provinces, shall in the Session in which the same shall have been passed by them, have presented to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of such Provinces, an Address or Addresses, specifying that such Act contains provisions for some of the purposes therein before specially described, and desiring that in order to give effect to the same such Act shall be transmitted to England without delay for the purpose of being laid before Parliament previous to the signification of His Majesty's Assent thereto. And whereas, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, in addresses of the Provinces to the said in part recited Act, did on the tenth day of April in the second year aforesaid, and during the Session in which said Bill passed, present an Address to our Lieutenant Governor of our said Province of Upper Canada, requesting that His Excellency would be pleased to transmit the said Bill relative to the right of Tythes in this Province to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, in order that it might be laid before the Imperial Parliament, according to the said Act in that case made and provided; And Whereas, Our said Lieutenant Governor did thereupon transmit the said Bill to our principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, for the purpose of obtaining the signification of Our Pleasure thereon, and of being laid before both Houses of Our Imperial Parliament, according to the provisions above recited. NOW KNOW YE, that the said Bill, having been referred to us in our Privy Council appointed for the consideration of all matters relating to Trade and Foreign Plantations, and having previous thereto been laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament for thirty days, according to the provisions aforesaid. We have thought fit to approve of, and assent to the same, and do hereby declare our Royal Assent to the said Bill, and that the same is hereby confirmed, finally enacted, and ratified; of all which our Loving Subjects in Our said Province of Upper Canada, and all others whom it may concern, are hereby required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of Our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness Our trusty and well beloved Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of Our said Province, and Major General Commanding our Forces therein, at York, this Twentieth day of February, in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Twenty-Three, and in the fourth year of Our Reign.

PROPOSALS,

FOR

PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTION.

A succint Report of the Speeches made; the Resolutions entered into; and the Petitions signed, by the Inhabitants of Lower and Upper Canada who were favourable to the Union of the two Provinces;

TO WHICH WILL BE ADDED,

A SELECTION OF THE COMMUNICATIONS

WHICH APPEARED IN THE

PUBLIC PRINTS ADVOCATING THAT MEASURE,

Subjoined to the facts and opinions thus collected, a brief retrospect of the affairs of the Canadas will be presented; to which will be added, a brief review of the advantages likely to accrue to these Provinces from that consolidation of their strength and resources, which the proposed measure of Union evinces to be the object of the beneficient Policy of His Majesty's Government.

To preserve to the future Historian of the Canadas, valuable materials for his work; to the Merchant, the views which were taken of the probable effects of the Union on the developement of the Commercial Resources of these Provinces; and to the General Reader, a source of important and useful information, are among the advantages anticipated from the intended Publication.

When we reflect on the vital importance of the proposed Union, and on the deep interest which it has excited among all classes of the community in both Provinces, we cannot help thinking that the present attempt to present, in a less fugitive form than the Newspapers, a Record of those memorable Proceedings, will be generally approved and encouraged.

COMPILED AND ARRANGED

BY THE EDITOR OF THE MONTREAL HERALD,

Assisted by a Gentleman,

FRIENDLY TO THE MEASURE OF THE UNION.

EDITORIAL COMMENTARY.

THE attention of our readers will be deeply fixed on those proceedings of the American Congress which may affect the trade with this country, & the navigation of the St. Lawrence, the first part of which is published in this day's Register: the remainder, for want of room, is reserved untill next week. It may be thought by some, that we attach too much importance to these proceedings. God grant that we do!—We are quite willing to be thought too sensitive on this subject. Perhaps the whole of these proceedings, for the present, may amount to nothing more than waste paper to be thrown under the table; But, these things will not be forgotten; and it is to the future we look.

This week our commentary must be short, for our limits are greatly circumscribed.—We intended to have given all we had to say on the subject of Mr WILMOT'S Bill, and the Indians;—but that is impossible.—Many valuable communications that we have received are likewise postponed.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

A short Summary of News by the last English Mail.

An atrocious attack has been made upon the life of the LORD LIEUTENANT of Ireland, which has called forth a spontaneous and universal effusion of loyalty and attachment to his person and government from all classes of people, in that interesting portion of His Majesty's Dominions. The cause of this outrage appears to have originated in the Orange Faction—a glass bottle was thrown at His Excellency's box in the theatre on the 14th of December, preceded by loud cries of "No Po No Popish Governor!"—"a groan for the Marquess Wellesley"—"The Boyne Water," &c.—an immense wedge of wood was also thrown at His Excellency, which passed by the head of a lady in the next box, with whom His Excellency had just been conversing—It is said that the answer of His Excellency to the congratulatory address upon his narrow escape, which indeed is a master piece in its kind, produced the most extraordinary sensation on the auditors—one who was present thus expresses himself—"It has been our good fortune to have heard most of the celebrated speakers in both countries, not only in the upper and lower House, but also in the courts of law—yet we most solemly declare, that at no period of our lives did we hear an address that so much excited the atten-sition of the auditory. The effect may in some slight degree be conceived, when we state that the audience, forgetting time and place, and all the observations usual on such occasions, gave full expression to their feelings, and burst out in one overflow of enthusiasm."—We shall endeavor to give further detail of this extraordinary affair next week.

The Marquis of Drogheda is dead, aged 94—a is the Earl Tankerville—and General Wood, of the 7th Dragoon Guards; Hans Hamilton, Esquire, M. P.

The Duke of Wellington arrived in London, in tolerable health, on the 23d December.

Mr. Coke, of Norfolk, has been blessed with a son and heir. It will be recollected that his lady is 17, and he 74 years of age.

The Bonaparte Family.—A letter from a gentleman at Bologne, who occupies a palace lately belonging to Lucien Bonaparte, says the immense fortunes of the family astonish the beholders. Lucien has lately purchased the most magnificent palace that could be obtained. The family are suffered to enjoy peaceably an unmolested, the wealth they ransacked from France, and pillaged from invaded nations. Vicissitude of fortune, the writer says, "has effected no change in their pride; all the daughters of Lucien call themselves Princesses, and will answer to no other appellation; they are short clumsy girls, with no more appearance of personal elegance than of mental dignity; for what ever distinction they arrogate, they have no endowment to discriminate them from the lowest Bolognese females."

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

New York, February 10, 1823.

The last sailing packet ship James Cropper has arrived in 36 days from Liverpool, and furnishes us with papers to the 1st January inclusive. Our London Journals are to the evening of the 30th December.

The London Sun, a Ministerial paper, has the following conclusion to a paragraph respecting the success of the Greeks:—"There is reason to believe that the opinion which has for some time prevailed, respecting the new policy of England towards the cause of Greece, is well founded. It is the obvious policy of Great Britain to procure the erection of Greece into an independent State, if possible with the consent of Turkey, in which case an alliance might be formed between Great Britain, the Greeks, and Turkey to protect the remaining dominions of the Porte against the encroachments of Russia."

From the London Courier, Dec 26.

The following is copied from the Dub in Journal of Monday last, which reached us this morning. The Magistrates are still employed in collecting further information relatively to the recent outrage at the Theatre. Strictly as Sunday last, we understand, they received some important communications upon oath.

Conspiracy to assassinate the Lord Lieutenant.—This evening Henry Grattan, jr. and George Grattan were fully committed by Counsellor Gabbett, for having, with divers other persons, feloniously conspired, confederated and agreed to kill and murder, his Excellency Richard Marquis Wellesley, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

Mr. James Forbes was apprehended under a warrant from the Magistrates of the Head office this evening, and fully committed on the above capital committal.

Mathew Handbridge is committed for conspiring to cause a riot, and for actually, with others, having caused one, on the night in question.

The Peys of are making great exertions to reach the Black sea, and to secure some portion of the trade in their subsequent operations.

We have to announce an act of clemency on the part of government, that reflects honor upon the advisers of the measure. It will be recollected that at the adjourned Yorkshire Assizes, in Sept. 1820, a number of persons from the neighborhood of Barnsley and Huddersfield were induced, by an expectation of mercy, to plead guilty to the charge of high treason, and that some of them were subsequently sentenced to 14 years transportation, and others to transportation for life. During the last week, all the persons whose sentences were commuted to 14 years transportation, returned to their respective families and friends, to the inexpressible joy of the parties, and each man received £3 4s. towards his travelling expences from Woolwich, with a certificate of their having been pardoned on account of their uniform good conduct.—Liverpool paper.

Important Congressional Proceedings.

We publish the following very interesting proceedings in the Congress of the United States.

TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Sterling introduced the following resolution in the House of Representatives on the 23d ult.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire, whether the reciprocal and equal advantages of trade with the British Provinces of our Northern and Western frontier, secured to the United States by the third article of the treaty of the 19th of November, 1794, and the explanatory article of the 4th of May 1796, have been so far impaired by the act of the British Parliament of 1821, by which a discriminating duty is imposed upon lumber, the growth or produce of the United States imported into Great Britain from Canada, and by the acts of the 24th of June and 6th of August last, relating to the trade with, and fixing the rate of duties on goods imported in to those provinces from the United States, as to require countervailing regulations on the part of this government: That the said committee be also instructed to inquire into the expediency of imposing duties upon the property of British subjects transported through the territories of the United States, from one part of the said British provinces to another either by land or water: and that the said committee be likewise instructed to inquire what further provisions, by law, may be necessary to secure to the citizens of the United States their equal rights in our commercial intercourse with the said British possessions on this continent.

In introducing the Resolution, relative to the British restrictions on our trade with Canada, Mr. Sterling said, that, as the resolution relates to subjects deeply interesting, not only to his constituents, but to the nation at large, he trusted it found sufficient apology for his detaining the House a short time, by a few remarks explanatory of his object in introducing it.

A very advantageous and profitable trade had for a long time been prosecuted by the inhabitants living on the northern and north eastern borders of the United States, with the British Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. This trade, on the part of the United States, consisted principally of bulky articles, which found their way to market down the River St. Lawrence.

The free navigation of that river is of essential to the commerce and property of this commerce.—Upon it also depends, to a great extent, the value of those extensive tracts of land, which border upon this river, and the immense bodies of water which discharge themselves into it. As the different population had seated itself upon the shores of these rivers and lakes, looking to Montreal and Quebec as their natural and proper market, and to the River St. Lawrence as the great highway which nature has opened to them, for the conveyance of their products to a place of profitable sale. Many of their products are of so bulky a nature as forbids their being transported to any other market.

They believed, and still believe, that their right to the navigation of this river was secured to them both by treaty and national law.

They had not the remotest idea that Great Britain had the right to deprive them of it, or shackle it by duties and impositions, which might amount to a prohibition.

Mr. S. said he did not wish to detain the House, by an argument upon this point, to show that they were correct in this view of the subject, and that the right to freely navigate this river, was secured to them if not by existing treaties, yet by ordinations equally sacred and binding, arising from the laws of nature and nations. He begged permission to produce an authority from that able and distinguished statesman Thomas Jefferson.

The right on the part of the western people to navigate the Mississippi when the shores of that river were in possession of Spain, formed an analogous case, and in this report to the President of the United States, upon that subject, Mr. Jefferson remarked, that, will we appeal to the law of nature and nations, as expressed by writers on the subject, it is agreed by them, that, were the river Mississippi, where it passes between Florida and Louisiana the exclusive right of Spain, still an innocent passage along it is a natural right in those inhabiting its borders above. It would, indeed, be what those writers call an imperfect right, because the modification of its exercise depends, in a considerable degree, on the convenience of the nation through which they are to pass.

But still a right, as real as any other right, however ill confined; and where it to be refused or to be so shackled by regulations not necessary for the peace or safety of its inhabitants, as to render its use impracticable to us, it would then be an injury of which we should be entitled to demand redress. The right of the upper inhabitants to use this navigation, is the counter part to that of those possessing the shores below, and founded in the same natural relations with the soil and water; and the line at which their rights meet, is to be advanced or withdrawn, so as to equalize the convenience resulting to each party from the exercise of the right by the other. This estimate is to be fairly made, with a mutual disposition to make equal sacrifices, and the members on each side are to have their due weight in the estimate.

This, Mr. S. said, he believed to be a sound and correct view of the law of nature and nations, applicable to the St. Lawrence as well as the Mississippi. No wonder, then, that the inhabitants living upon the St. Lawrence and upon the extensive waters which flow into that river, view the Act of the British Parliament, passed on the 5th day of August last, regulating the trade with, and fixing the rate of duties on, goods and produce imported into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, from the United States, as a most flagrant and highhanded violation of their rights, and as one which loudly calls for the interposition of this Government. The St. Lawrence is to them what the Mississippi was to the people of the West. The value of their lands; their labor and their produce, depended upon the free navigation of this river; and they never will yield to the idea that they hold so invaluable a right, subject to the whim or caprice of a commercial rival. They feel that by the sacred obligation of the law of nature and of nations, and they will not shrink from the responsibility of maintaining it at all hazards.

Question lost—Majority, 11.

On Motion of Mr Hagerman, seconded by Mr. Casey, the Report of the Select Committee on the Petition of William Smart and others was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the whole House on the Monday following.

Mr. Jones of Grenville from the Committee, to whom was referred the Banking Institutions of this Province, and Paper Currency circulated therein, Reported that the Committee had proceeded to such consideration, and having taken the examination of Witnesses, that it appears to the Committee that the said Institution is illegal and declared to be a nuisance by the Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the fortieth year of the Reign of Geo. II. Chap. 37, and that therefore its Notes and Bills are void, and only recoverable under the provisions of the said Act—That in consequence of the difficulty of recovering small sums under the said Act it becomes almost nugatory, Your Committee would therefore recommend the enactment of a Law by which relief may be afforded to the Creditors of the said Institution.

The immediate failure of the said Bank appears to your Committee to have been evidently occasioned by the criminal conduct of its President, Cashier, and Teller, in various acts detailed in the said examination.—The conduct of the Directors of the said Institution is also reprehensible, inasmuch as no enquiry appears to have been made by them into the actual state of the Bank.

A large deficiency appears in the funds of the said Institution, occasioned by an actual abstraction of money; of which abstraction, the President, Cashier, or Teller must be guilty—The Cashier however having the sole charge of the funds as a part of his duty, whether guilty or not is liable for the amount.

Your Committee would therefore recommend to Your Honorable House to legalize the Bonds referred to, in the examination of Mr. Bartlet, and vest the whole of the estate and effects of the said Institution in Commissioners, in trust, first, for the payment of all the debts of the said Bank, and, secondly, for the payment of Stock to others (concerned therein) than the Directors.

From the following statement of the present situation of the said Institution, Your Honorable House will see that in so doing ample justice will be done to the Public.

The amount of Stock actually paid in is £11,138 10s.—of which £3 940 was paid by the Directors.

	19.076	4	1
Stock other than that of the Directors, is	7,896	10	0
	£26.970	14	1
To pay which the following sums are applicable,
Amount of debts due the Bank ascertained by Bonds and Notes,	£22 227	15	11
Bank debts,	1,000	0	0
Deficiency to be made up by the Cashier,	8884	3	0 1-2
	29,111	19	11 1-2
Amount to be paid,	26.970	14	1
Leaves to be paid to Directors on account of their Stock if the above sums are available,	£2,141	5	10 1-2

At the same time your Committee would recommend the necessity of affording Public relief in the present case they would beg leave to impress upon Your Honorable House the propriety of guarding against the recurrence of a similar evil by preventing the establishment of Banking Institutions without Acts of Incorporation by the Parliament of this Province.

For the purpose of effecting the object herein recommended Your Committee beg leave to report a Bill which they submit for the adoption of Your Honorable House.

(Signed) JONAS JONES,
CHAIRMAN.

No. XXI.

REMARKS ON THE BILL FOR RESTRICTING THE SALE OF SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS TO THE INDIANS.

Even they are the handy work of the MOST HIGH, and to be ranked in the number of the sons of the Morning

Much credit is certainly due to Mr. WILMOT, and to those gentlemen who have turned their attentions so humane an object as the preservation of the health and morals of those poor remnants of the Indian Tribes, which still wander through the settlements of UPPER CANADA, or dwell in the remote parts of the organized Counties and Districts of the Province.—Their case has long appeared to us truly deplorable. Left but too much in the power, and at the mercy, of a set of unprincipled marauders and ruffians to the character of Traders (or their Furs, (and for such spoils as they are able to obtain from the Wilderness) these remnants of the aboriginees of the country too frequently experience not only a lawless spoliation of their property, but every species of injustice and mal treatment.—No doubt there are a few men of respectability who have trading posts in various parts of the interior who would not countenance the kind of treatment to which we allude;—but, it is certain that the greater part of the under strappers employed in tracking the Indians, and robbing them of their Furs, are the vilest and most unprincipled miscreants it is possible to conceive, resorting to the most deleterious agencies for the attainment of their ends—and of these agencies the use of ardent spirits is certainly the most powerful.—The Indian who is of a serious and philosophical turn of mind, with a wonderful command over his passions, when sober, becomes infuriated, ferocious, and mad, when intoxicated, capable of directing any mischief, whether upon himself or others, and wholly regardless of consequences; and, such is the relish for this fatal poison when the first barriers of reason are once broken down, that there is scarcely any sacrifice which the unfortunate victim will not make to secure the reiterated draught until all is riot, debauchery, madness or death.—In one small tribe alone, to our certain knowledge, not less than four Suicides and two Murders occurred within the short space of a few months, entirely owing to the unrestricted use of ardent spirits

The object of Mr WILMOT's Bill is undoubtedly humane, and it might lead to some good, were it possible to render it effective in the present circumstances of the Country.—But, whilst the Indian trade is carried on as it is at present, we have no doubt that most of the important provisions of this Bill will be rendered nugatory through the difficulties of conviction, and the lightness of the penalties. To stop the evil complained of in the present circumstances of the Country, the penal enactments should be not only heavy—but even vindictive, and even then it appears to us they would prove unavailing.

We have thought of a plan by which we think it far more likely the moral condition of the poor Indians might be gradually improved, (and at the same time no inconsiderable revenue gained for the public service) than by any other system that could be at present adopted. and we shall lay it without any hesitation before the public, however open to cavil it may be

The central and northern parts of several Districts of this Province, but especially of the Newcastle and Midland Districts, are still very rich in Furs and Peltry of all kinds.—to much so, indeed, that in several extensive tracts of country, owing to a decrease in the Indian Population, the wild animals have increased.

It cannot be doubted that the Imperial Government at home have the power if our local Government here, have it not, to allot those Districts, so abounding with Furs, &c. into so many forms to be let on lease to particular individuals, at stated times, in the same way in which the King's Post on the river Saguenay in the Lower Province are let—the Leases, or Leasees, to be restricted by such provisos and conditions as it may be found necessary to adopt towards an amelioration in the condition of the Indians—but to have the exclusive right of maintaining Posts in the back country and of trading with the natives.

We are confident that exclusive privileges of this kind in the various Districts where Furs abound would let at very high rates, and it would be an easy matter to compel the Lessee to adopt any plan of gradual moral improvement the Government might deem it right to lay down.

(To be continued next week.)

VOL. II. YORK U. C. THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1823. No. X.

York, U. C. March 4th, 1823.

This day, about one o'clock, the Honorable the Legislative Council waited upon His EXCELLENCY the LIEUT. GOVERNOR with an Address of which the following is a copy:—

To His Excellency Sir PERCEVERE MAITLAND, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

The Legislative Council have agreed on a dutiful and humble Address to His Most Gracious Majesty the King, on the proposed change of the Constitution given to the Inhabitants of this Province; at this time under the consideration of the Imperial Parliament.

Enjoying every blessing which can be expected from the active operation of this free and happy Constitution—Your Excellency will perceive that the Legislative Council do not feel themselves called upon to pronounce any opinion on the contemplated change concerning the general policy of which they are unable to decide.

They have seen the Province gradually changing from a dreary wilderness to a fruitful and populous Country under former Administrations, but since your Excellency's appointment to the Government, the progress of improvement has been vastly more rapid. The settlements have widely extended on every side, and in the short space of four years the organized parts of the Province have been nearly doubled and the population greatly increased.

With such facts before them the Legislative Council, as becomes faithful and loyal Subjects, contenting themselves with expressing in their dutiful and humble Address to His Majesty, which they most respectfully intreat your Excellency to transmit to be laid at the foot of the Throne, their perfect reliance on the wisdom and justice of the Imperial Government.

WM DUMMER POWELL,
Speaker.

Legislative Council Chamber,
March, 1st, 1823.

To which His Excellency was pleased to reply,

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN,

I shall not fail to transmit to His Majesty's Ministers, your humble and dutiful Address to your Sovereign, that in compliance with your entreaty, it may be laid at the foot of the Throne.

The facts which you attest—the wilderness converted into a populous country—the active operation of your free and happy Constitution,—the more rapid march of improvement which you have to say with reason all unite, as you rightly make the application, to shew the reasonableness and propriety of your reposing with the most implicit confidence on the wisdom and justice of His Majesty's Councils.

The particular allusion you have made to recent events, I receive with pleasure as a proof of your cordiality towards my Government, which have been conducted on a principle of faithful obedience to my Sovereign's ample instructions. If like efficacy have been given to my Royal Master's pleasure respecting this interesting and valued portion of His Dominions, I feel all that I owe to the other branches of this Legislature, in your enlightened Council, and the steady tenor of your loyal co-operation.

Executive Council Office,
York, 26th June, 1822.

NOTICE is hereby given, by order of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in Council; that unless Andrew Miller, the original Locatee of the Western Quarter of Lot number fifteen, in the fifth Concession of the Township of Ernestown, in the Midland District, or his representative, do shew cause within six months why the Location should not be rescinded, it will be granted to Mary Robertson, wife of John Robertson, of Ernestown, aforesaid.

To preserve to the future Historian of the Canadas, valuable materials for his work; to the Merchant, the views which were taken of the probable effects of the Union on the developement of the Commercial Resources of these Provinces; and to the General Reader, a source of important and useful information, are among the advantages anticipated from the intended Publication.

Editorial Commentary.

The "True Catholic Christian" will find his communication in our columns of this week. To make room for it we have been obliged to postpone the further consideration of measures for the protection and moral improvement of the Indians.—The subject to which the Catholic Christian alludes is very important; but we have a dread of all Legislative interference in matters of this kind where it is not absolutely called for—and this dread is felt not merely because all such interference more or less affects the rights and liberties of the people, but it goes to the increase of our Statute Book in a needless manner, which is another evil of no trifling amount.—Previous to the reign of Henry VIII. all the Statutes of England were comprised in one volume;—now, they alone constitute a voluminous library, and it requires the study of years to comprehend them.

It is best to adhere to ancient simplicity as long as possible.—The Magistracy of the country are fully competent to the putting down of any riotous proceedings, either of Orangemen, or of any other factious body. Magistrates are the true and constitutional conservators of the peace, and the discretionary power with which they are invested enables them to take cognizance of those offences which it is now thought proper, by many in this Province, to bring before the consideration of Parliament. No persons are more likely to see and appreciate the danger, when danger really exists, and to laugh at it where it is only imaginary, than the Magistrates, whose authority guided by a wise discretion and a certain decision and boldness, where it is required, is sufficient for the cure of very alarming disturbances; witness what was done in Yorkshire against the Luddites by RADCLIFFE, who was afterwards knighted for his extraordinary services.—His local knowledge, and firmness, and great discretionary power as a Magistrate enabled him, without Legislative interference, to put down the most alarming conspiracy that ever existed in that quarter of the Empire.

It appears to us there is a greater readiness to increase our Statute Book by fresh enactments than to study the existing laws of our country, on many subjects of infinite importance and manifold bearings, for which provision has been already made.

Some of our readers being desirous of having the Correspondence of the Attorney General, which has been laid before Parliament and printed by order of the House, published in this paper—we have this week commenced the undertaking to be regularly continued.

We receive the interesting communication of "Tyrtillian" just as our paper was going to press—so that we must defer all further notice of it until another opportunity, which we shall endeavor to find next week. The satire possesses too much merit to be neglected; and we take this opportunity of assuring the author that he may indeed confide in our secrecy and honor. Even his hand-writing will be seen by none but ourselves, unless by his own permission.—We know what is proper on such occasions, and we are fearless of a sense of duty points out what ought be done.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

A Statistical table of Europe for 1822 fixes the collective population of that quarter of the world at 200,000,000—the average number for the square mile at 58 persons—the tithes, taxes and public burthens generally at 180,000,000 pounds, sterling, which is 18 shillings per head.

Briskness of Trade. – During the last quarter, the return of woollen cloth, mad in the various Districts of the West Riding of York, exceeds the return of any former quarter within the memory of man.

MR. GOURLAY.

Mr. Robert Gourlay, of Wily, Wilts, and whose name has so often appeared before the public, attended the Magistrates of Salisbury, on Tuesday last, to obtain an order for a weekly maintenance, upon the overseer of his parish. The Court, attracted by the novelty of the circumstance, was very crowded; Mr. Gourlay attempted to read the nature of his application, but was not permitted. A Sunday newspaper was produced, containing a letter from him, in which he said that it was not from necessity but from choice, that he had thrown himself upon his parish. He justified the language it contained, by saying, "having gained a settlement at Wily, he did not see why he should at all become burdensome to his friends; he had no doubt but amongst those he saw around him he could raise ten pounds, but this was not what he wanted—he wanted labor, he did not wish to eat the bread of idleness." On being interrogated as to his having property, he said that "there were £1500 invested in the hands of trustees, but not for his benefit and over which he had no control." He denied having any property. The Magistrate paid him that respect which his talents and integrity demanded, and made the most ample allowances for those eccentricities which have proved a source of misery to himself and to all his connections. He was eventually allowed three shillings per week; and the conceptient inhabitant of Deptford Cottage now labors on the roads through the day, and reposes at night under the roof of a poor house.—Devizes Gazette.

A LIBERAL SPIRIT.

The first stone of a Protestant Church laid by a Catholic Duke.—The first stone of a new church has been laid at Attercliffe; the Duke of Norfolk, attended by Earls Fitzwilliam and Surrey, Lord Milton, and others, presided.—The singularity of a Catholic Duke laying the first stone for a Protestant church, elicited the following remarks from his Grace: "He felt no scruple at what he had done; in many respects he considered himself as much a Protestant as any of his fellow subjects; that he had taken the oaths of allegiance to a Protestant King, and if that king were ever to become a Catholic, he should consider himself absolved from his allegiance."

(Trade with the United States, continued from our last.)

This law of the British Parliament, of August last, subjects their produce, passing into or through Canada, to the most injurious and heavy imposition. It cannot be viewed in the light of a regulation simply for "the peace and safety" of our Canadian inhabitants, as a "modification" of our right for the convenience of British subjects living upon the borders of the river. Indeed, Mr. S. said it he was correctly informed, many of the most enlightened people of these provinces were opposed to the provisions of the act in question, and considered it as detrimental to them as it was vexatious to the American people.

It will be thus perceived, that this act of the British Parliament asserts the right to tax, at pleasure, all our produce thus transported, and of course to make our commerce, upon these waters an instrument of revenue, or entirely to destroy it by the imposition of such enormous duties as would amount to an actual prohibition. And what, sir, is the nature and extent of our commerce, thus shackled and interrupted by this regulation? It may not be great, compared with that of the nation, but it is necessary and valuable to those interested, and whose rights are as much to be respected and as strongly sustained, as though they filled a greater space in the eyes of the Union. To shew that the commerce is not inconsiderable, nor underserving the encouragement of the government. Mr. S. read a statement of the exports from the Lake ports interested, viz.

Do.	17	1,081,871
Do.	18	1,356,039
Do.	19	1,493,052
For the year 1820		1,662,061
Do.	21	1,180,991
Do.	22	1,228,963

A great share of this commerce consisted of the articles upon which heavy duties were laid by the act of Parliament of the 5th of August last. Flour and Lumber were two of the most heavy and profitable articles in the list thus taxed, and virtually prohibited from being hereafter transported down the river St. Lawrence. Thus it is seen, that this obnoxious act of August last, has a most destructive operation upon this commerce and appears in the light of a bold assumption on the part of Great Britain to deprive us hereafter of the right to transport our products to market upon the waters of the St. Lawrence.

Is this to be tolerated, or is it to be resisted by all the means in our power? Shall the rights of these people who have settled upon these remote waters, in the full confidence of being protected in the enjoyments of this great highway, which nature had provided for them, be thus trifled with & the Government not interpose its arm for their protection? No, Sir, I trust the same determined spirit that governed the councils of the nation when the western people were interrupted in similar rights, still exist and will extend protection to those interested in the navigation of the St Lawrence. If you yield to this encroachment, it will grow into a precedent, and the right to freely navigate this river, will be virtually and forever abandoned. The rights of a most valuable population, more numerous than that of both the Canadas, settled in six different states and in one territory, will thus be disregarded by their own Government, and left without a remedy. Under these circumstances, it becomes this Government to take the most prompt and efficient measures to convince Great Britain of the folly and injustice of her policy. If negotiation will not do, let us again try the virtue of counterveiling regulations, as contemplated by the resolution. If Great Britain is resolved to make the St. Lawrence the theatre of operations, let us meet her with duties affecting her as injuriously and as vitally as they can us. Such is the course and navigation of that river, as to compel the boats which descend it to come within our territory, where we can visit upon her own commerce, if we are driven to it by the effects of her own policy, and rouse her to a just sense of our mutual rights and convenience.

We may in this manner, interrupt all water communication between her provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and cause to her an evil of greater magnitude than that which she is inflicting upon us. But, Sir, I have no disposition to encourage any but the most peaceful feelings and relations between this nation and that. In particular, Sir, I would, with the greatest reluctance, advocate any measure which should tend to interrupt that good harmony and friendly intercourse which exists between the inhabitants of Canada and our own citizens. I hope, Sir, that negotiation may effect the desired object, but, if that does prove inefficient, I trust that our government will feel bound, by every principle of policy and of justice, to resist this violation of our rights, and that they lack neither the energy nor the power to effect the object contemplated by the resolution.

Mr. Walworth, of New-York, said, that the subject referred to in the resolution offered by his colleague, was one in which his constituents had a deep interest; it was also of great importance to the citizens of all such parts of the United States as bordered on the frontiers of Canada. That, by the 3d article of the treaty of the 19th November, 1794, a reciprocal intercourse was secured to the citizens of the United States and Great Britain on the northern and Western frontiers of the U. States. There could be no discriminating duties imposed by either party. Peltries imported from Canada were exempted from the payment of any duties and no transit duty could be imposed upon goods transported through the territories of either by the late war between the United States and Great Britain. The British government acting under that construction of the treaty had imposed discriminating duties on lumber of the growth or produce of the United States imported into Great Britain from the Canadas; and by the Acts of the British Parliament of the 24th of June and 5th August last, heavy duties had been imposed upon the principle articles of exports from the United States to Canada, which in substance amounted to a prohibition, notwithstanding the Citizens of the United States had thus been deprived of the benefits secured to them by the treaty of 1794, the Provision of that treaty had been incorporated into our revenue laws, and British subjects still enjoyed the full benefit thereof.

Letters from Mr. Commissioner Robinson, on the Canada Trade, and Canada Union Bills.

(COPY.)

LONDON, May 16th, 1822.

SIR,

I have the honor to report to you, for the information of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that having arrived in London on Saturday the 22d March, I delivered at the Colonial Office, on Monday the 24th March, the letters and dispatches with which I was charged; and wrote to Earl Bathurst the letter marked (A.) Mr. Wilmot, the under Secretary of State for the Colonies, wrote immediately to request that I would call upon him the next day, which I did, and Earl Bathurst appointed Wednesday the 26th March for receiving the Address and Report of the Legislative Council and Assembly, I accordingly presented them on that day to his Lordship.

From that time I had repeated interviews with Mr. Wilmot, and on the 4th April addressed to him the letter marked (B.) and was requested to attend the next day at the Colonial Office, in company with Mr. Caldwell, the Receiver General of Lower Canada, and a Member of the Legislative Council there, and with Mr. Marshall, the Solicitor General of that Province, and I was desired to prepare the heads of a Bill, such as I conceived would provide fairly for adjusting the differences between the two Provinces, and submit it to those Gentlemen, that they might, on the part of Lower Canada, make such objections or remarks in writing as they might think proper. The late period of the Session of Parliament, made it desirable that no time should be lost, and on the 7th April I delivered to Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Marshall the paper marked (C.)

Their remarks were submitted to my perusal, but no copy has been communicated to me. They did not indeed offer any material objection to the substantial provisions of the Bill I had proposed. Not long after, Mr. Caldwell shewed me the Resolutions which were passed in the Assembly of Lower Canada, at the close of their last Session, respecting the claims of Upper Canada, and which his Excellency has no doubt seen. In reply to the statements and positions advanced in these Resolutions, and also to the remarks made by Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Marshall, I addressed to Mr. Wilmot the letter marked (D.)

At the desire of Earl Bathurst, I also had fifty copies of the Report of the Legislature of Upper Canada with the Appendix printed, and placed them at his Lordship's disposal.

Having at the request of Earl Bathurst, and of Mr. Wilmot, been present at several conferences at the Colonial Office, in which the Union of the two Provinces, or rather of their Legislatures, was proposed and discussed, I communicated freely my opinions upon the probable consequences of such a measure, and gave information upon the several points to which I was interrogated.

That I might not be misunderstood I addressed a letter to Mr. Wilmot, (E.) communicating a statement of my sentiments upon the contemplated Union of the Legislatures, for the consideration of Earl Bathurst, with whom I had soon afterwards a personal interview on the subject, and His Majesty's Government having, after the fullest consideration, determined to propose to Parliament a Bill for giving a joint Legislature to the Canadas, I found I could not render a more effectual service to Upper Canada, after a determination had been come to upon this important measure, which I was neither instructed to solicit nor to oppose, than by using by best endeavors that the Union should be effected in such a manner as would most surely guard the interests of Upper Canada, and be most likely to promote its future welfare.

The Bill which has been prepared for that purpose is now under the consideration of the Law Officers of the Crown, and notice of it will be given in Parliament immediately. I will send it to you as soon as it is printed, and would transmit a manuscript copy now, but that it is uncertain of course, until the Law Officers have made their Report, whether it will be brought in in its present shape. I send you the heads shortly extracted, and I have reason to believe that the Bill will be passed during this Session, very nearly in its present form, as from various considerations unconnected with the financial questions between the two Provinces, the expediency of giving them an United Legislature seems so strongly impressed on the minds of all persons here, and His Majesty's Government, in particular, appears to consider it so desirable for many reasons, that I have little doubt an Union would have been at all events proposed during the present Session of Parliament, and I cannot but consider myself fortunate to have had it in my power at so critical a moment to afford such information, and intercede for such provisions on the part of Upper Canada, as I hope will best secure its interests, and promote its prosperity under the great change contemplated.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient,
Humble Servant,
JOHN. B. ROBINSON.

To MAJOR HILLIER,
Secretary to His Excellency Sir P. MAITLAND, K. C. B. Lt. Governor, &c. &c. &c.

(COPY.)

The Lieutenant Governor thinks proper to transmit Copies of a communication from the Commissioner in England by which his detention at the Seat of Government will be made known to the House of Assembly

The Lieutenant Governor while congratulating the House on this event, as likely to have an influence highly favorable to the interests of this Colony in the important arrangements now depending in the Councils of the Parent States, feels confident that the House of Assembly will not fail to place at his disposal means towards defraying the expences of a service which must be protracted far beyond the period originally contemplated

LORD'S 76. GOWER STREET, BEDFORD SQUARE. December 28. 1822.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st October, 1822. in which you conveyed to me the wish of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that as the object of my mission to England had been accomplished, it might be convenient for me to return to my duties in that Province by the middle of January or as soon after as circumstances would admit; and I beg to refer to you for the information of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that being in constant communication with the Colonial Office on several matters involving the Interests of Upper Canada, and being more particularly engaged in assisting in the details of a plan for promoting Emigration to Upper Canada by the aid of the Government, upon a system which is at present under consideration, and which it should be ultimately adopted cannot fail to be of the greatest advantage to the Province; I feel no time in acquainting Earl Bathurst with the necessity for my immediate departure from England by transmitting to him your letter of the 21st October with a note from myself, of which I enclose you a copy—His Lordship was absent from London at the time, but the under Secretary of State requested me to remain until I should hear from His Lordship, and yesterday I received a letter from Mr. Hume of which I transmit you a copy.

His Excellency will perceive by this letter that my stay in this Country is necessarily protracted beyond the period to which it would otherwise have been limited, upon the receipt of the instruction conveyed in your letter of the 21st October, for which I had been waiting with anxiety, doubtful whether under existing circumstances it would be most proper for me to remain longer in this Country or to return to Upper Canada.

I have the honor to be, &c
(Signed) J. B ROBINSON.

I have the Honor to be, &c

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

MR. EDITOR,

I beg of you to publish in your next Register the few following sentences hastily committed to paper. I regret that I cannot command time enough to make my ideas more full; upon the important subject to which they refer.

A Petition has been presented to the House of Assembly, praying that measures may be devised to prevent any future Meetings and public Processions of Orange Societies in this Province. Little as this subject appears to occupy the public mind, it is one which ought to call forth strong measures of prevention at this time. Not a Session should be lost without doing something. If a law cannot be passed this Session, let the Houses concur in Resolutions declaring their disapprobation, nay, their abhorrence, of such anchristian like conduct.—No Protestant in this country can pretend that he is in fear of any evil from a Catholic.—Any exhibition of the kind alluded to, is therefore wanton, and is produced by a spirit at once proud, insolent and demoniacal. Such a display is a mockery of the Christian Religion, which is the Religion of Peace; insulting to the feelings of all good men; and degrading to the character of the Province.

If such things are sanctioned here, who among us can presume to express any feeling of indignation and horror at those deeds of cruelty, bloodshed and blasphemy, which are committed at an Auto da fe, and which proceed from the same anchristian like spirit. The character of the guilt is the same, though as it may be less in degree

Let it be remembered by every good man in the Province, that Civil Liberty cannot be preserved in a country where Religious feuds are permitted; and that where they are permitted, there is danger they will be encouraged, and fomented for purposes destructive of the interests and liberties of the people at large. The population of this Province is made up of materials necessarily more discordant or at least various in many particulars than is good for our prosperity or peace as a people, and it behoves our Legislators and all public authorities to consider this fact particularly, and to avail themselves of every means in their power, no only collectively, but individually, to allay every feeling of irritation, and to promote harmony among us, as members of one family, who have met together from far and near, in search of peace and plenty.

Let us thank our Heavenly Father, that we have found plenty; such plenty as few people have possessed in a greater degree. Let all of us, therefore, of every persuation, fall down before HIM in grateful adoration, and pray for that grace which may enable us to love HIM as he himself hath commanded us and then we shall love one another also; for if we say that we love God, and do yet hate or despise our neighbour, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

That we may all love one another as Christians, and the Children and Servants of a blessed REDEEMER, is the prayer of one who is neither a Roman Catholic, nor an Orange-man, but one who is endeavouring to do his duty as a TRUE CATHOLIC CHRISTIAN.

MR. EDITOR,

THERE is a nuisance in Bellville at present, which (with your permission,) I shall endeavour to sweep from society. I have reference to a trio, whose ridiculous pretension to Satire have elicited a multitude of "illfa'rad" effusions, intended to bespatter the fair fame of their neighbours, but who possessing neither wit nor talent at composition, labour on with piteous assiduity in their unprofitable vocation, earning nothing but the contempt they merit.

It were vain to hope that reason could effect a reformation in the conduct of the Junto, nor might as well preach consistency to your sapient neighbour the "Observer," but a little bones ridicule may achieve a cure; if not, their case is hopeless. I should be loath to proceed harshly, however, at first, as the disease is deep seated, and of long standing, which without proper precaution, might terminate unfavourably.—I merely wish at present; to convince my patients of their danger, and to warn them against improper treatment. They will therefore, submit to the following:—

Receipt.—The present letter taken in any schicle but indifference; say, a tea-spoonful of reasonable reflection immediately before their next meeting, and should the medicine fail in its proper effect, it must be followed by a potion infinitely more difficult to swallow, and by a few pills whose astringent quality, must render them extremely difficult of digestion.

I am Sir, &c.

CENSOR.

Bellville, 17th Feb. 1823.

FOR

PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTION

A succint Report of the Speeches made; the Resolutions entered into; and the Petitions signed, by the Inhabitants of Lower and Upper Canada who were favourable to the Union of the two Provinces:

TO WHICH WILL BE ADDED,

WHICH APPEARED IN THE

PUBLIC PRINTS ADVOCATING THAT MEASURE.

Subjoined to the facts and opinions thus collected, a brief retrospect of the affairs of the Canadas will be presented; to which will be added, a brief review of the advantages likely to accrue to these Provinces from that consolidation of their strength and resources, which the proposed measure of Union evinces to be the object of the beneficent Policy of His Majesty's Government.

To preserve to the future Historian of the Canadas, valuable materials for his work; to the Merchant, the views which were taken of the probable effects of the Union on the development of the Commercial Resources of these Provinces; and to the General Reader, a source of important and useful information, are among the advantages anticipated from the intended Publication.

When we reflect on the vital importance of the proposed Union, and on the deep interest which it has excited among all classes of the community in both Provinces, we cannot help thinking that the present attempt to present, in a less fugitive form than the Newspapers, a Record of those memorable Proceedings, will be generally approved and encouraged.

Interesting Correspondence.

We are still without any intelligence of much political importance from Europe.—Threatening appearances of war are still exhibited on the part of France against Spain, but without any direct act of hostility being committed.—It seems probable that the extensive and valuable island of Cuba will be shortly added as another gem to the Imperial Diadem of Great Britain, notwithstanding the repeated longings and envyings of brother Jonathan.

Having been requested by a friend for whom we entertain much respect, to publish the Editorial remarks of the Montreal Gazette for February 20th, on the "Bidwell Case", we have done so in this sheet, and with the greater pleasure, since the view of the subject there taken is very nearly analogous to our own, and the question is undoubtedly of vast importance to this Province. We are of opinion that if Mr. BIDWELL is elected to a seat in our Parliament, he will find that the question of his right to so high a privilege, has not been finally set at rest!

Since, in our two last numbers, we have been induced to notice the proceedings of the American Congress, respecting the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, we could not well avoid re-publishing a very sensible and judicious communication addressed to the Editor of the Quebec Gazette, (on that subject,) under our Domestic head—We are obliged to our Newmarket friend for his hints on the same important affair, and we shall probably make use of them hereafter, according to his desire: his instance of the Sound at the entrance of the Baltic, however, appears to us to make rather too much in favour of the Americans, since it is where the river passes through their territory, that they would levy duties, if any where; the case of the Scheldt is more in point.—But Great Britain will necessarily reject with indignation these preposterous claims of our ambitious neighbours, who ought never to have been allowed to approach within a hundred miles of the St. Lawrence. A success that has been rather accorded to, than achieved by, them, seems to have intoxicated these arrogant republicans, and led them to assume a language, and plot at designs, highly unbecoming a people so lately brought to the verge of national bankruptcy, in consequence of an inconsiderate and assassin like appeal to arms, when they idly conceived the power of England to be tottering before the usurped empire of NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE.

The keen and elegant Satire received from our accomplished correspondent "Tressillian" would have appeared in this sheet, but he has requested a postponement for a short time, and it is granted. We hail with a lively pleasure the rising of this bright star in our region, and he need not fear that we shall throw the "cold chain of silence" over his harp.—We think we discover the germs of a very superior talent in the composition we have received, giving token of higher excellence hereafter, and we do, indeed, hail with joy the brightness of this rising light, in the hope that the communications of his genius, when more matured, will go to the enlightening of many of those who have hitherto sat in darkness, and to the shewing of more [illegible]

LONDON, February 15, 1822.

Yesterday being Valentine's Day, the General Two-Penny Post Office was under the necessity of employing nearly 100 more sorters, the day before, in order to circulate with due expedition, the Anatomy Poesy, and embl matic assessment hearts and darts, which the love-stricken of both sexes brought fit to send to the respective objects of their passion; the amount of revenue, on that day alone, being £1500. It is calculated that there could not have been less than 300,000 of these inflammatory packets go through the Post Office, within forty eight hours.

Asia.—A manuscript of the eighth century, hitherto unknown, of a translation of the Bible into the Georgian language, by St. Euphemius, has been discovered in the convent of Mount Athos.

Riches and Benevolence.—The London papers mention a man living at Gibraltar, named Aarou Cordoza, who outrivals the munificence of Bagdad Sultans, and realizes the fictions of Arabian story. With a princely fortune, he possesses the means, and with a generous soul, the spirit, to exercise an unexampled benevolence. Gibraltar, the place of his birth, testifies to the various large pecuniary donations made to distressed objects of all descriptions. Such have been his deeds of benevolence, to both English and Spaniards, in moments of extreme exigency, to the army and navy, that the public thanks of the whole garrison, drawn out on parade, and of the marine commanders, have been rendered him in the most solemn manner, for his protection, and promoting the measures of Government. And during the recent troubles, the Spanish nation have recently decreed him public thanks, and recorded in their archives the obligation the kingdom owes him, for his extraordinary liberality to the Spanish refugees. He is of noble extraction; his ancestors (secret Israelites) quitted Spain to avoid persecution, and with a vast property settled in Gibraltar, where he has constructed the most elegant mansion on the rock. His hospitality and munificence have obtained him the appellation of "King of the Jews;" no being, plebeian or royal, scarcely ever excelled him in benevolence and generosity.

Reported Marriage of the King.—The report of the marriage of His Majesty to a fair [illegible] gains more and more ground every day. It was erroneously supposed that the Royal Marriage Act restrained the Sovereign, as well as the rest of the Royal Family, from marrying a subject. His Majesty, is, however, unrestrained by any law from marrying whom he chuses; but another question arises—whether he could marry without the consent of Parliament?—Morning Chronicle.

An extraordinary Shot.—A clergyman in the eastern part of Sussex, a few years since, at a single discharge of his gun, killed a partridge, shot a man, a hog, and a hogsh. broke fourteen panes of glass, and knocked down a gingerbread kings and queen that were standing on the mantle piece opposite the window. The above may be added upon as not exaggerated, but [illegible] literally as it has [illegible]

[illegible] of Dublin to [illegible]—Miss [illegible] and a Freeman of Dublin, at the late [illegible] election.

Currents of the Ocean.—The following paper was found in a bottle which was picked up at Scilly on the 11th instant (December) and transmitted to Lloyd's:—

"Western Ocean.—On board the brig Royal Union, Daniel Grant, master, from Quebec to Dublin, out 22 days, lat. 46, 15. N. long. 45 10. W. of Greenwich, by James Pelan, cabin passenger—Friday, September 27, 1822.

LONDON, 56 Gower S
April 4th, 18

Sir,

In the different interviews with which you have so obligingly honored me, the contemplated provision for regulating generally the commerce of the Canadas have come alone into discussion. These are of a nature deeply interesting to both Provinces, and the principles on which they are founded clearly manifest the most indulgent and liberal spirit on the part of His Majesty's Government towards the Colonists. No duty can be more pleasing to me as an inhabitant of Upper Canada, than to give any information, and contribute any assistance in framing these provisions, which my knowledge of its local interests may enable me. At the same time I cannot forbear to represent, that a Bill of the kind proposed would go a very little way in removing any of the difficulties in which Upper Canada is at present involved with respect to its Revenue, and would not apply at all to some of the most material points on which its Legislature have now a second time most earnestly brought the interpositions of His Majesty and the Imperial Parliament, as the only means of indemnity against the injuries which they represent the Province to have sustained from Lower Canada, and the only hope of protection against the recurrence of the evils to which it has been exposed by its state of dependence on the Legislature of another Colony.

I was unwilling to interrupt the consideration of the general measures under discussion, by pressing the particular points last alluded to, [illegible] been afforded you to give the necessary attention to the Address and Report which I had the honor of submitting through Earl Bathurst to the gracious consideration of His Majesty; nor should I do so now, but that I am desirous you should bear those subjects in mind rather as connected with or distinct from, the proposed Bill, in time to avail yourself of every information which the discussion of that Bill may afford you an opportunity of obtaining.

— INDEX AT FRONT.

I need not at present recapitulate the different subjects on which the Legislature of Upper Canada have prefered their petition to His Majesty, looking anxiously but confidentially forward to the just interposition of His Majesty and the Imperial Parliament in adjusting its financial relations with Lower Canada as the only means of rescuing its Government from the immediate disgrace of a Public Bankruptcy, and of providing for its future support; they are fully and explicitly stated in the report which accompanies the address, and their proof rests principally on matters of public record. and on other documents to which that report expressly refers.

I shall be happy to attend at whatever time you may do me the honor to appoint, to give any additional explanation.

I have the honor to be, &c.

BIDWELL'S CASE.

FROM THE MONTREAL GAZETTE.

Feb 28.

In endeavoring to ascertain how far the Assembly of Upper Canada was justifiable in coming to this decision upon so important a point there appears to us only one simple question which can present itself for our consideration—Whether Aliens by the mere act of residence in this country, have a right to claim the same political immunities with the natural born subjects? We have no hesitation in the word to say, that they "have not; and in a case which has uniformly engaged the most serious deliberations of the wisest governments, we should indeed conceive it a severe and prejudicial law which would at once open the gates of our free and independent Denization to every denomination of foreigners without the least restraint or disqualifying mark of distinction. An act of settlement by foreigners in a neighbouring State has always been looked upon with jealousy and disgust, and though we are free to admit that in many instances this is a childish and illiberal opinion, yet in the unparalelled circumstances in which Great Britain is placed—with commerce circumnavigating the globe—and colonies in almost every corner of the world—we know not the country whose rights relative to Aliens are more firmly established than those of our metropolitan State. The attention of the Imperial Government to this piece of political jurisprudence has never been relaxed, and in the enactment of the constitution of the Canadas—the identical law in virtue of which the Assembly of Upper Canada enjoy the rights which they are at this moment exercising—the doctrine was enforced in a manner which renders illustration as unnecessary as opposition or cavilling would be futile. By the Act of the 31 George III. cap. 31, s. 22, which is the present constitution of both the Canadas—it is enacted, "that no person shall be capable of voting at any election of a member to serve in such Assembly, in either of the said Provinces, or of being elected at any such election, who shall not be of the full age of twenty one years, and a natural born subject of His Majesty, or a subject of His Majesty naturalized by Act of the British Parliament, or a subject of His Majesty, having become such by the conquest and cession of the Province of Canada." We have no access to know what the import of those arguments were which were set forth in Perry's petition; but however prone they might be to favour the views of Mr. Bidwell, we will venture to affirm, that they did not go the length of denying that Mr. Bidwell was a native of the United States. Indeed Mr. Jones, in a resolution drawn up for the purpose of incapacitating that gentleman from being elected, expressly affirms that he was "born in the United States of America, since the independence of those States, and consequently is by common law an Alien." Now we would ask in what new light Mr. Bidwell and his friends could have possibly understood the plain and positive law which we have just quoted, so as to found upon it one of the most arrogant and unconstitutional privileges that was ever yet demanded. Is Mr. Bidwell a natural born subject of His Majesty? No. Or a subject of His Majesty naturalized by Act of the British Parliament? No. Pray then where is his right to elect or be elected a member to serve in the Assembly of either of these Provinces? No where. Is it not plain then to the meanest capacity, that the Returning officer, in rejecting the shadowy claims of Mr. Bidwell, did no more than his duty as a man and as a loyal subject, and that, had he acted otherwise in the face of the law which was at the moment staring him in the face, he must certainly have betrayed his duty to his King and to his country.—We report that the Returning officer did right. In this opinion we are partly borne out by the third Resolution of the Assembly upon the same subject—a resolution quite irreconcilable with the two former which we have quoted——"That it is the opinion of this House that in so doing the Returning officer did not act corruptly or maliciously, but from misconception of his duty, and that this House does not see any necessity for censuring the said Returning officer for his conduct at the said election." This is the very acme of sophistry, for if the Returning officer "did not act corruptly or maliciously", why find it at all necessary to disturb the election of the member he returned? After declaring the last election null, the assembly proceed to declare by their 4th Resolution "that the said Marshall S. Bid well in so far as ALLEGIANCE is concerned was, and is elligible to a seat in this House." This is really alarming and heretical doctrine and is as much as to say, that any man who has the courage to swallow the Oath of Allegiance, whether otherwise qualified or not is entitled to elect and be elected a member of Parliament for Upper Canada. But happily for the peace and good government of this country, this is not the doctrine maintained by our present constitution, and is as diff reut from that assumed by this Resolution as naturalization is from consecration

On this very important subject we find ourselves opposed by a whole host of differing opinions; but, as the law at present stands, we think we have adopted the only impartial view that can be taken of it. We have no private motives whatever to influence our conduct, and of the parties more immediately interested we know nothing. Mr. Bidwell, for aught we know, may be a saint or a sinner, a Grecian, a Roman or an American; but we cannot see any thing in his case or that of any other man similarly situated, which can induce us to waver in his favor the least tota of the laws by which our country is governed —If he and other citizens of the United States find it to their advantage to abandon their native country and place themselves under the protection of British laws, it surely does not become them to undermine those laws by insinuating claims and privileges at perfect variance with the whole scop of their nature and intent. It is true that these laws will ever be extended to those who claim their aid; but is there no distinction to be drawn between a stranger and a native? The general law of Nations is perfectly decisive of the question, and the individual law of this Country has drawn such a prominent line of demarcation as to place its violation beyond the reach of force or fiction. A bug and cry may indeed be set up by the Emissaries of a contrary doctrine about political rights and land titles; but this cannot alter a jot of the law, and as we may safely aver, that foreign Emigrants have no complaints to make in relation to personal protection and security of property, we think they ought to content themselves to abstain from all interference with political matters and leave them to be enjoyed more liberally by their more fortunate posterity. We shall close this article by a quotation from a late number of the Quarterly Review which we deem of the highest importance to the people of both provinces. ——"Since the peace, the influx of Americans from the United States to our Provinces, has been incessant, and the numbers are daily increasing to an alarming extent. It would not perhaps be expedient or practicable to exclude them from residence in Canada while there is no interruption to the amicable relations between Great Britain and their Republic; but the continuance of the subjects of the United States, in our territories during a period of warfare is fraught with danger. During the last war, the efforts of the disaffected in Upper Canada, principally subjects of the United States, by birth, were attended by the most mischievous consequences The enemy were constantly supplied with intelligence by them, and every impediment studiously thrown in the way of the public service. It will become a most serious consideration how the recurrence of the same evils may be avoided, when the proportion of naturalized Americans in our dominions shall, in all probability, have become ten times greater than it was in the year 1812. If, under a vigorous and watchful administration, it is deemed possible to retain such settlers among our population without peril; one precaution should at least be carefully adopted, no man should be found in employ of the Colonial Government, whose connections bind him by the ties of interest or of blood to the American Republic."

COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Neilson,

Sir,

I should be sorry that you or any of your readers who feel interested in the welfare of these Provinces should trust to a broken reed in a point of the utmost importance to them, I therefore beg leave to correct a statement made under the editorial head in your paper of last week in the commenting on the motions of Mr. Sterling and Mr. Walworth in the American Congress relative to the free navigation of the River St. Lawrence. You observe, "We "are so situated that retaliation can have very little "effect, as opposite to that part of the present na- "vigable channel, now within the American bound- "ary, a channel on the British side may at a small "expence be made navigable." In this Sir, you will find yourself mistaken—the part of the channel you refer to as of course that opposite Mille Roches, a few miles above Cornwall, where Barnhart's island has unfortunately been yielded by our Commissioners to the Americans.—The water on our side of this island is so shallow, and so interrupted by rocks, (from which its name of Mille Roches is derived) that I believe there is nothing to prevent men from wading across; at any rate I know from experience that a single log of heavy timber cannot be floated down. The navigable channel, is as you observe, within the American boundary, being on the south side of Barnhart's island, and it is no doubt alive in the memory of your readers who have descended the Long Sault, as their arrival in it must have been a moment of relief from nervous sensation after leaping its tremendous Cascades.—This Channel is in a deep bed, and runs in eddies so smooth and rapid that the heaviest gale has not the power of making a ripple on its surface. This description must satisfy you that it is as impracticable to make a navigable channel on the British side, for rafts and loaded boats, as it would be to turn the channel of the River in our own neighborhood into the valley of Cap Rouge, and bring it out by its supposed ancient bed, the Bijou, into the River St. Charles.—No Sir, our trust must be in our natural and just right to the free navigation of the Channel, and our will to support it; and in Article 3 of the Treaty of 1794, of which I annex you an extract for insertion—Treaties however do not exist for ever, and in some future negociation at Ghent or other distant part this little point may be forgotten—moreover it will be seen that the Americans by their late unjust pretensions are neither willing to allow what we claim by the treaty and what is naturally our right—the result will shortly be seen, but it is lamentable that a matter of such vital importance to us should ever become a disputed point—a subject of anxiety and doubt to us.

Barnhart's Island was British Territory, as nature and common sense pointed out to the people of both nations in the vicinity, and was inhabited by British subjects previous to the late resignation of it by our Commissioners to the Americans—it is perhaps the extreme of presumption in any individual, and in some measure odious however strongly he may feel for the honor and interest of his country, to venture an opinion on the decisions of the zealous men who had their nation's trust reposed in them, it is therefore with reluctance, but excited by the apathy which appears to prevail on the subject throughout the Province, (except among our friends at Cornwall, who, from the local situation saw, but too late, the mischief which had been done,)—that I say I think it would have been far better for us if government had saved the trouble and expense which had been incurred, done nothing or even given to the Americans the Islands of Penobriot, of Amherstburgh, or others which they claimed than have bereaved ourselves of, and put into their possession the Gate of the Water Communication between the two Provinces—I say the Gate of the Water communication, and those who know the situation know that I say it truly.—The waters at Amherstburgh where produce is of low value, would probably never become a subject of difference, and if it would be of minor importance, but that the free navigation of the St. Lawrence for our timber and produce even at the entrance of our Cities should be left a point of dispute for us is intolerable and surely will not continue to be regarded by us with calm feelings.—The Union of the two Provinces has of late occupied the thoughts of our wisest men, but knowing well the leading spirit of the American character, I must presume to say that I look upon it as a matter of straw compared with the present subject.

We are told that Mr. Oswald, our Commissioner in 1784, cried when the mistake which he had committed was pointed out to him of dividing the waters of the Lake and fixing the St. Lawrence as the boundary; it is to be hoped that we shall not live to deplore the loss of the free navigation of it.

I fear I have encroached greatly on your limits, but the importance of the subject to all of us and the deep interest I feel in it, must be my excuse.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

A SUBSCRIBER.

18th Feb. 1823.

Extract from the Treaty with the United States 1794 herewith.

Art. 3d.—It is agreed that it shall at all times be free to His Majesty's subjects and to the citizens of the United States, and also to the Indians dwelling on either side of the said boundary line, freely to pass and repass by land or inland navigation, into the respective Territories and Countries of the two parties on the Continent of America, (the Country within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company only excepted) and to navigate all the Lakes, Rivers and Waters thereof, and freely to carry on Trade and Commerce with each other.

And further—No higher or other Tolls or Rates of Ferriage than what are or shall be payable by natives shall be demanded on either side, and no Duties shall be payable on any Goods which shall merely be carried over any of the portages or carrying places on either side, for the purpose of being immediately re-embarked and carried to some other place or places.

VOL. II. YORK, U. C. THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1823. No. XII.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA.

At three o'clock this day, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, being seated on the Throne, in the Legislative Council Chamber, and the House of Assembly being present, His Excellency was pleased to prorogue the present Session of Parliament with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

THE state of the Public Business, not requiring the continuance of your deliberations, I think it proper to close this Session of the Provincial Parliament.

The gratification which you would otherwise have enjoyed in promoting works of public utility, has unavoidably been limited by the temporary diminution in our receipt from Quebec, and the demand upon the Public Revenue for defraying the interest of the projected Loan, for the relief of the Sufferers by the late War, a measure which was proposed for your co-operation at the opening of the Session. The Bill which you have presented to me for this purpose, is from its nature, necessarily reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure.

The consideration which you have given to the Laws about to expire, and particularly the judicious amendments which you have made in continuing the Act granting a duty on Stills, call for my warm acknowledgements.

I feel persuaded that very important benefits will result from the pains which you have taken in order to procure a faithful and authoritative record of Judgments pronounced in the Court of King's Bench. By the means which you have afforded me, though not, I fear, sufficiently ample to defray the charge of an additional Circuit into all those Districts with which there may be a suitable communication by land from this seat of Government, I shall, nevertheless, be enabled to establish a Court of Assize and Nisi Prius which from their increase in population, call for it in a more particular manner. I had hoped it might have been found possible to extend the benefits of such Gaol Deliveries to other parts of the Province, by some enactment which would enable prisoners to claim the privilege of trial at the Assizes, Assizes, and I hope that it may hereafter be found practicable by some temporary provision to accomplish this object. By these measures you have shewn yourselves anxious to ensure to your Country those solid benefits of security, peace, and good order which are only to be completely enjoyed when our great Constitutional principle of government by Law is rendered effectual by the easy and upright administration of Justice.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I thank you, in the name of His Majesty, for the Supplies which you have unanimously voted for the Service of this year.

In addressing you, probably for the last time, I feel much gratified in being enabled to express to you my approbation of the principles which have governed your appropriation of the public means, and which have been characterized, as well by a scrupulous attention to the interests of the people, as by a proper regard to the honorable support of His Majesty's Government.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

The contemplated Union of the two Legislatures is still depending in His Majesty's Councils, in which I am authorized to assure you, there exists the greatest anxiety to promote by every means the interests, safety and prosperity of both Provinces. Whatever measures shall be finally adopted will proceed only from this principle, and with a decided aim at these objects. Such are your Sovereign's paternal feelings respecting this valued portion of His Dominions. Should a more extended field of Legislation be opened to your exertions, His Majesty entertains the most confident expectation that you will carry into it a spirit of harmony and conciliation, with that disposition to promote His Majesty's honor and His People's welfare, which has so eminently distinguished your conduct; and the happy effects of which have been manifest, not only within the circle of this Province, but, as you have, in a particular manner experienced on late occasions, in that consideration and confidence which it has acquired for the Representations of this Legislature with the Parent State.

And further; His Excellency, in the hope of avoiding the necessity of rescinding any of the Militia grants, is pleased to direct this Public Notification; that all Lands granted to Militia Men, upon which the Settlement Duties shall not have been performed within the limited period, will in pursuance of general instructions given to the Surveyor General in all similar cases, be declared vacant, and will be granted within Six Months after the expiration of that period, to the first applicant, unless the Original Nominee, shall before such subsequent application, have lodged a Certificate of his having performed the Settling Duties.

Editorial Miscellany.

After a long and arduous Session, in which much business of importance has been transacted, our Parliament was prorogued yesterday, and the Speech of His Excellency, the Lieut Governor, on the occasion, will be found on this day's Gazette.

War between France and Spain is now inevitable. The Russian, Austrian, and Prussian Ambassadors have left Madrid, and a Spanish Force had actually violated the French territory. What will be the result of these events God only knows! A formidable fleet for the Mediterranean was preparing in the British Ports, and every thing announces the determination of England to watch with close attention the operations of the belligerents, and to be prepared for the worst; though, at present, in a state of strict neutrality.

As few things give us more real pleasure than to notice the gradual improvement of this country in agriculture and useful domestic manufactures, we feel grateful to Col. Burwell, the worthy Member of Parliament for Middlesex, for his permission to publish an extract from a letter which he has just received from the London District, respecting the Iron-Works lately established in that part of the country, wherein his correspondent thus expresses himself:

"It is with much pleasure I am able to communicate the intelligence of my having been yesterday an eye witness of some interesting operations at the Iron Furnace, near Port Norfolk—I was one of a large party which said 'till near 6 o'clock p. m. and had a fine view of the whole process of moulding, as well as casting a number of large kettles, some of them of forty gallons each. A great variety of other useful kitchen utensils have been cast within these few days; which have a very pretty appearance—fully equal, I think, to any castings I ever saw, excepting that they are not quite so smooth as future castings will be, when the sand employed in the process has been longer in use."

TRESSILIAN will perceive that we have taken two slight liberties with his fine satire which we are sure he will forgive: the first we considered necessary to make the application more general, without weakening the point, or having the slightest tendency to divert the shaft from its ultimate object—this was altering the definite, to the indefinite article:—the second alteration we thought but fair, that one Dunce should not be pushed too far above his fellows, in public notoriety, by having his name at length; we have therefore taken the liberty of giving the "C——" only, instead of that celebrated name so well known in the nurseries of England, and amongst the political canaille of Upper Canada. As to the poem itself, it very far surpasses any thing of the kind that has hitherto been written and published in this Province; there are couplets in it that would not disgrace the pen of BYRON: indeed it is, throughout, very much in the style, and after the spirit of that noble Bard. Since there is nothing so much dreaded by the vicious and stupid, and foolish ones of the earth as the keen and well directed shafts of the satirist, we hope this able writer will direct his great and promising talents to their proper objects.

The clever poem of "Y." addressed to "Parliolph," has been received, and will appear in our next.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

LONDON, December 15.

Precautionary Measures.—England will be prepared for the worst emergency. Seven sail of the line are at this moment getting ready; and we expect to see ere long, a considerable fleet of observation sent to the Mediterranean.—Morning Chronicle.

The very able state paper, in point of Composition, sent by Mr Canning to the Duke of Wellington at Verona, and presented by his Grace to the Congress, is said to rival even the celebrated Manifesto written by the same person, and published by our Government during the Continental war.—Morning paper.

A plan is said to be in preparation, to light all the public clocks in London with gas by night.

Electioneering Pun.—It is said that a celebrated barrister has been so successful in his canvas to represent the University of Cambridge, that it is enough to give the other candidates the Scarlet Fever.

It is, if not a surprising, a very dreadful fact, that out of sixteen hundred civil bill processes at Macerow, in the county of Cork, thirteen hundred should have originated in tithes!

The Widow of Napoleon.—Maria Louisa, the Ex-Empress of France, has it is reported, been invited to visit England, towards which the Grand Duchess feels a strong inclination, provided she can obtain the permission of her father, the Emperor of Austria.

Lord Byron.—We have been informed, says the Salem Observer, by a friend, recently returned from Italy, that Lord Byron has ordered a Yacht to be built, in which he intends to visit the United States.

Hunting Dogs.—A Frenchman has arrived in London with 200,000 francs at his disposal, to purchase hunting dogs for the Prince of Conde.

His late Majesty's Monument.—The workmen are now employed in completing the pedestal of his late Majesty's statue in London road. When the whole is finished it will be surrounded with iron railings, and at the corners will be placed four columns, on each of which a gas lamp will be fixed.

Progress of Christianity.—[The following article is copied from Bell's Weekly Messenger of December 2d 1822.—The facts stated are too singular and striking to be ascribed to mere chance or accident.]

At the last meeting of the Sheffield Public Society, the following interesting facts were mentioned:—Gibbon, who in his celebrated history of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, has left an immortable memorial of his enmity to the Gospel, resided many years in Switzerland, where, with the profits of his works, he purchased a considerable estate. This property has descended to a gentleman, who, out of his rents, expends a large sum annually in the promulgation of that very Gospel which his predecessor industriously endeavoured to overthrow, not having had courage openly to oppose it. Voltaire boasted that with one hand he overturned the foundation of Christianity, which it required the hands of twelve Apostles to build up. At this day, the press which he employed at Ferny to print his blasphemies, is actually employed at Geneva in printing the Holy Scriptures. Thus the self same engine, which he set to work to destroy the credit of the Bible, is engaged in disseminating its truths. It is a remarkable circumstance, also, that the first provisional meeting for the reformation of an Auxiliary Bible Society at Edinburgh, was held in the very room in which Hume died.

Ganganeli once meeting a Capuchin well mounted, humourously asked the barefooted friar how long it was since St. Francis rode on horseback? and was tartly answered, "Ever since St. Peter rode in a coach."

The witty Lord Ross, (not the present nobleman of that name) had a great aversion to gentlemen of the medical profession: in a fit of illness, a friend advised him to send for a physician—"No," said he, "I am not yet prepared to die!"

Game Laws.—At a meeting of magistrates, held not long since in Somersetshire, a very respectable farmer was summoned before them for killing game on the manor of one of the then sitting magistrates, and convicted in the penalty of £5. The farmer pleaded very hard against the conviction, but all in vain: he then stated that he had an information to lay against a respectable person then present. He was requested to lay it on oath; he did so, and had the aforesaid magistrate convicted in the penalty of £10, for killing game, he having neglected to take out his certificate.—Devizes Gaz.

Superstition at Grenada.—In the afternoon a procession was formed, and the image of Jesus Christ carried through the streets, as large as life, on a cross; the multitude chanting a hymn, which had a solemn effect. The next day they formed another procession, and carried the image of the Virgin Mary, dressed up in great style. They say she was found in a box, coming up the river against the current. This is believed by them, and spoken of with seriousness. The inhabitants, for a week following, slept out of town, fearing the earthquake on its return, would do greater damage.

To be acquainted with the rules and forms of this people, especially their religious ceremonies, is so difficult that a stranger is continually off his guard. While passing a church, one must be careful to take off his hat, and at dusk in the evening, when the bells strike, if you are walking, take off your hat and stop long enough to say the Lord's prayer. After this time of night if it is a rare thing to meet any one out of doors—those that do go out, carry a string of beads and a cross hung around their necks, which is the same as a prayer book to them. The mountain on the edge of the town can very plainly be seen split at the top by the late earthquake.

Vienna, Nov. 29.—His Majesty has appointed his grandson, the Duke of Reichstadt (the young Napoleon), sergeant in the regiment of infantry of the Emperor. Yesterday the uniform of this regiment was sent to him, which gave him the liveliest pleasure.—Paris paper.

From the Sydney Gazette, 24th May

Extraordinary Death.—The following is the melancholy end of Captain West, of the India whaler, who visited Port Jackson in March, 1822, to

—INDEX AT FRONT.

refit, and resumed her voyage in the ensuing month :—Capt. Moore, of the Woodlark, informs us, that the unfortunate commander spoken of, was heading his boat as usual one day, about three months since off New Zealand, when the trail bark was stove in by a blow from the whale to which they were fast, and the animal almost at the same instant seized captain West by the middle of the body, and nearly tore him asunder. He was immediately picked up and taken on board, when the vessel made for the land; and the hapless mariner, scarcely alive, in a wretchedly mangled condition, was conveyed on shore, where all the assistance that could be rendered was promptly afforded him, but, in four days after the accident captain West entered the eternal world. He was interred in Mr. Hall's garden at New Zealand, alongside of Mr. Wilson, his chief officer, which had fallen a victim to miserable intemperance, and who had been interred about 15 months. The vessel goes home, therefore, under the command of the second officer.

When the town of Sheffield first became famous for its cutlery, a very curious knife, calculated for a variety of uses, was executed with great care, and sent to the Cutler's Company in London. On one of the blades was engraved the following challenge :—

"Sheffield made both haft and blade;
London, for thy life, show me such another knife."

The London cutlers, to show that they were not inferior to their more northern brethren, finished, and sent down to Sheffield, a pen knife, containing only one well tempered blade, in which was a cavity, and in the cavity a piece of straw, fresh and unsinged. Some lines on the blade, mentioning this fact, induced the Sheffield cutlers to break it, when they found the straw, and unable to account for the manner in which it was done, or to imitate it, they confessed themselves surpassed in ingenuity.

Mental composure.—The Abbe Delille had a mistress who was possessed of great violence of temper, the ebullitions of which however were never able to shake his composure. One morning a storm arose while the workmen were employed in putting one of the apartments in color—this you know, is the custom in France, the color is red and prepared with size, and after it is laid on and dry, it is polished with bees-wax and a brush. Fearing to increase the gusts of the lady by opposition, the Abbe took the resolution to decamp. Madame however pursued him with her reproaches, and, maddened by his escape, she seized a pail of red wash, and as the Abbe very thoughtlessly passed under the window, she discharged the contents on his reverend head. Delille looked up and coolly exclaimed, "Voila, mon Abbe changé en cardinal." He slowly mounted the staircase, and without murmur, and even smiling, said to the astonished painter, "Suisje le premier rompe ou a Thisle?" The wit was very severe—for to live as man and wife without marriage is called in France un marriage en detrompe.

Effectual Method of driving away Rats.—Set a trap and take one alive, smear him over with a composition of oil of vitriol and oil of turpentine, turn him loose into his usual haunt, and no more rats will be seen.—This method has been tried, and the premises have been cleared of these vermin for two or three years.

Port Wine.—The quantity of Wine drank in Great Britain is more in proportion than in any other country not producing its own; and it is remarkable, that of 24,659 pipes of Port Wine, which were shipped from Oporto in 1821, 23,331 pipes were sent to Great Britain alone.

NORTH WEST PASSAGE.

In the absence of positive information from Captain Parry and his enterprising companions, every thing that throws a light on the subject of the expedition and the probability of its success, must naturally excite interest. Mr. Eccles, the late surgeon of the Brunswick, makes the following observations on the probability of Capt. Parry's gaining the long sought passage :—

"Having been employed this year in the whale fishing trade, I think I shall be enabled to strengthen the probability of their succeeding in penetrating more to the westward than hath hitherto been, on account of the winds proving more favorable to the prosecution of their voyage along the American coast. Out of five months employed in the whale fishing in Davis's strait and Baffin's Bay, the wind blew from the south and westward nearly three, and always with such violence as leaves little doubt in my mind, that the tract which Capt. Parry determined to pursue, along the coast, would be clear of ice. But the connection which the ice holds with the land in narrow straits, and which requires no ordinary force of wind to blow it off, may be started as an objection to what I have advanced—let it be remembered, however, that the south-westery winds acted upon the ice in the summer months when the sun never set, and whose rays falling upon the land and rocks with which the ice was connected, were absorbed, and rendered capable of diffusing a degree of heat sufficiently powerful to thaw and set the floes at liberty.

"After looking over the principal meteorological journals kept in those regions, I have not yet discovered one in which the south-westerly winds were so prevalent as this year, and the opinions of the majority of the Commanders of the north fishing ships, with whom I had frequent opportunities of conversing, acknowledge the same.

"I have a sanguine expectation of one day (not far distant I hope) hearing of this passage being discovered, by which our geographical and natural knowledge will not only be improved, but science and commerce extended."

From the North American Review, No. 38.

MISSOURI RIVER.

We now see the Missouri stretching far to the north and west, not a tributary, but in itself a principal and mighty river; not of secondary or doubtful magnitude, but beyond doubt the largest river of the known world. The Platte, the Arkansa, and other tributaries of this prodigious stream, would in the old continent be rivers of the first rate magnitude. These, with the Ohio and other eastern branches, draw off the waters of a tract of country now familiarly designated as the 'valley of the Mississippi.' To ears accustomed to associate with the term valley the idea of a low ground between hills, in which a few shepherds might feed their flocks, or a few tenements might find shelter from the wind and storm, this name, first applied to the country of the Mississippi, we believe, by Kalmey, sounds singularly large. Herein a valley, in whose fertile shades there repose more inhabitants than the United States contained at the beginning of the revolution. A valley, over which two thirds of the continent of Europe might be spread out, and hardly suffice to cover it.

We have spoken of the Missouri as the largest river known upon the face of the globe. We shall be understood, of course, as including the part of the Mississippi, which is below its confluence, and of which the Missouri is undoubtedly the true continuation. According to the best authorities, the Missouri brings into the common channel four times as much water as the Mississippi; it is at least twice as long, and some of its principal branches are even longer than the last named stream.—The length of this majestic river, from its remote sources in the Rocky Mountains, till its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, is between four and five thousand miles. During three thousand miles of this course its apparent size is hardly diminished, and even at the Mandan villages, Mr. Brookeridge informs us, that its full channel appeared to him not less broad or majestic than that of the Mississippi at New Orleans. Still higher up, it receives tributary branches, which might compare with the Danube or Indus in magnitude. We know of no other river which draws from such an extent of country, or connects together climates so remote and dissimilar. The Amazon, formerly accounted the chief of streams, hardly exceeds three quarters of the length of the Missouri. The Mississippi of New Holland, which from its size and distance from the sea in the direction of its course, was a few years since thought to exceed all other rivers in extent, has since been "ridden down into bogs and morasses." There remains but one stream, which, for the palm of superiority, may hereafter come into competition with the Missouri, and this is the Niger.

HORRIBLE IMMOLATION.

From the Bengal Hurkaru, Oct 23d, 1822.

To the Editor,

Sir—Knowing that you are a Philanthropist, I beg leave to inform you that directly opposite to Fort William, and not above 100 yards to the southward of the late Mr. William Jones' dwelling house at Seebpore on Monday morning at gun fire, a widow, the mother of a large family, was put on a pile of combustibles, and burned to death, attended with circumstances of cruelty which I shall endeavor to describe partly as seen by myself and as I was informed by others.

On Friday the 11th instant, about noon, an old Brahmin died, and at the time of his death was possessed of considerable riches and had two wives, one of whom was many years younger than the other, and by each of these wives he had a large family of children, boys and girls, now living. The moment this man expired, his eldest son, heir to all his property, posted off to Allypore, and applied to C. R. Barwell, Esq. Magistrate of the suburbs of Calcutta, for a license to burn his own mother and his stepmother, with the body of his father: but it appears Mr. Barwell then granted license for one wife only, the eldest to be burned. Confident, however, that by another application leave would be obtained to burn the other wife also, the pile was raised, and every preparation made to burn them both on the following day at noon; but at the hour of noon on Saturday no license from Mr. Barwell for the destruction of the youngest woman had arrived, and no license was granted during the whole of that day.

The news of this rather novel circumstance soon spread along Seebpore and Howrah, and thousands of people of all descriptions were assembled to learn the particulars, and many of them, and me, the family and Brahmin friends voluntarily confessed, that both wives must be burned, or neither of them could be burned, as the one for whom the license was obtained had declared that she would not be burned alone.

On Sunday, circumstances remained just the same as on Saturday, for Mr. Barwell was inflexible, and no license to burn the younger wife could they obtain from him, notwithstanding they used every art, artifice, and invention, which the craft and cunning of a Brahmin could conceive.

On Sunday, as on Saturday, crowds of people were in attendance from morning till night, and to all the Europeans who enquired, the declaration of the deceased's family, and attending Brahmin were the same, that the one wife could not be burned alone, she having discented therefrom, and great hopes began now to be entertained by the humane, that Mr. Barwell's firmness would save them both; but the poor creatures were at this time from the moment their husband had breathed his last, on Friday at noon, kept locked up and not allowed to taste a morsel of victuals of any description, and the hope which had been entertained of their being saved from the flames was greatly damped by the fear that both would be starved to death by their merciless keepers.

On the following morning, Monday the 14th inst. at gun fire, notwithstanding the previous repeated acknowledgments and confessions of the attending Brahmin and the family and friends of the deceased, that they could not burn the one wife alone, at that selected period when they thought few eyes would be open to view their proceedings, the elder woman was dragged from her prison of starvation, made to mount the pile and clasp the putrid carcase of her husband, which from its size and distance from the sea in the direction of its course, was a few years since thought to exceed all other rivers in extent, has since been "ridden down into bogs and morasses." There remains but one stream, which, for the palm of superiority, may hereafter come into competition with the Missouri, and this is the Niger.

Magistrate of the suburbs of Calcutta, for a license to burn his own mother and his stepmother, with the body of his father: but it appears Mr. Barwell then granted license for one wife only, the eldest to be burned. Confident, however, that by another application leave would be obtained to burn the other wife also, the pile was raised, and every preparation made to burn them both on the following day at noon; but at the hour of noon on Saturday no license from Mr. Barwell for the destruction of the youngest woman had arrived, and no license was granted during the whole of that day.

The news of this rather novel circumstance soon spread along Seebpore and Howrah, and thousands of people of all descriptions were assembled to learn the particulars, and many of them, and me, the family and Brahmin friends voluntarily confessed, that both wives must be burned, or neither of them could be burned, as the one for whom the license was obtained had declared that she would not be burned alone.

On Sunday, circumstances remained just the same as on Saturday, for Mr. Barwell was inflexible, and no license to burn the younger wife could they obtain from him, notwithstanding they used every art, artifice, and invention, which the craft and cunning of a Brahmin could conceive.

On Sunday, as on Saturday, crowds of people were in attendance from morning till night, and to all the Europeans who enquired, the declaration of the deceased's family, and attending Brahmin were the same, that the one wife could not be burned alone, she having dissented therefrom, and great hopes began now to be entertained by the humane, that Mr. Barwell's firmness would save them both; but the poor creatures were at this time from the moment their husband had breathed his last, on Friday at noon, kept locked up and not allowed to taste a morsel of victuals of any description, and the hope which had been entertained of their being saved from the flames was greatly damped by the fear that both would be starved to death by their merciless keepers.

On the following morning, Monday the 14th inst. at gun fire, notwithstanding the previous repeated acknowledgments and confessions of the attending Brahmin and the family and friends of the deceased, that they could not burn the one wife alone, at that selected period when they thought few eyes would be open to view their proceedings, the elder woman was dragged from her prison of starvation, made to mount the pile and clasp the putrid carcase of her husband, which from its size and distance from the sea in the direction of its course, was a few years since thought to exceed all other rivers in extent, has since been "ridden down into bogs and morasses." There remains but one stream, which, for the palm of superiority, may hereafter come into competition with the Missouri, and this is the Niger.

HORRIBLE IMMOLATION.

From the Bengal Hurkaru, Oct 23d, 1822.

To the Editor,

Sir—Knowing that you are a Philanthropist, I beg leave to inform you that directly opposite to Fort William, and not above 100 yards to the southward of the late Mr. William Jones' dwelling house at Seebpore on Monday morning at gun fire, a widow, the mother of a large family, was put on a pile of combustibles, and burned to death, attended with circumstances of cruelty which I shall endeavor to describe partly as seen by myself and as I was informed by others.

On Friday the 11th instant, about noon, an old Brahmin died, and at the time of his death was possessed of considerable riches and had two wives, one of whom was many years younger than the other, and by each of these wives he had a large family of children, boys and girls, now living. The moment this man expired, his eldest son, heir to all his property, posted off to Allypore, and applied to C. R. Barwell, Esq. Magistrate of the suburbs of Calcutta, for a license to burn his own mother and his stepmother, with the body of his father: but it appears Mr. Barwell then granted license for one wife only, the eldest to be burned. Confident, however, that by another application leave would be obtained to burn the other wife also, the pile was raised, and every preparation made to burn them both on the following day at noon; but at the hour of noon on Saturday no license from Mr. Barwell for the destruction of the youngest woman had arrived, and no license was granted during the whole of that day.

The news of this rather novel circumstance soon spread along Seebpore and Howrah, and thousands of people of all descriptions were assembled to learn the particulars, and many of them, and me, the family and Brahmin friends voluntarily confessed, that both wives must be burned, or neither of them could be burned, as the one for whom the license was obtained had declared that she would not be burned alone.

On Sunday, circumstances remained just the same as on Saturday, for Mr. Barwell was inflexible, and no license to burn the younger wife could they obtain from him, notwithstanding they used every art, artifice, and invention, which the craft and cunning of a Brahmin could conceive.

And it further appears by the said Report that the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, have failed in establishing any regulation for the future, by reason that they could not agree upon the proportion of duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of drawback on the goods consumed therein. Be it enacted, &c. that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act to appoint by Commission under the Great Seal of their respective Province one Arbitrator who together with a third Arbitrator to be named and appointed in like manner by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of (Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick,) and to be a subject of His Majesty inhabiting the said Province of Nova Scotia, &c. shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada, upon the Province of Lower Canada, under the several agreements heretofore subsisting between the said two Provinces since the division of the Province of Quebec, and alledged to be unperformed, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements and also all claims of the said Province of Upper Canada, on account of any matter not embraced within the same.

Literary Notice.

We have received the following Communication from Bath, to which we are directed to call the attention of our readers;—and as we are inclined to encourage a taste for literature, and especially to foster the growth of native talent in this Country, we hope the author will not languish for want of that kind of patronage which all authors, whether highly or lowly gifted, thirst after.—Ed.

"In a short time will be issued from the Press, a new Romance, intitled the Life, Character, and adventures of Jerry Sneak, the Italian Gallant, 8vo. Price five shillings in boards. From what has been seen of the manuscript, the public may be assured the character is well drawn, and that it presents another correct view of ancient Chivalric notions, as displayed by our hero's repeatedly falling romantically in love with the fair sex, and his miraculous escape from numerous intrigues. It is thought by those who have seen the manuscript that, if this be the first of the Author's productions, he bids fair to rival the celebrated Authors of Gil Blas and Don Quixote."

POETRY.

We cannot introduce the following poetic "Epistle" with greater propriety, than by a few quotations from the letter in which it was enclosed.—ED.

"I have no doubt you have long regarded the work alluded to as any thing but a credit to its author. The base and unmanly attack which he has made, and continues to make, upon the nature of the first respectability, have long since rendered his productions a disgrace to himself, and a nuisance to the public;—but the utter want of delicacy and of feeling, which he displays in his treatment of female character calls with unanswerable appeal, for the indignant reprobation of every generous mind

"I could have wished that some poet of loftier pretensions and wielded the pen of satire on this occasion; but though I despair of doing justice to the subject, yet the wrath of my feelings supplied me at least with the confidence, which the task I have undertaken, required.

"If it is thought I have been too severe on one or two of the Devotees of Dulness, I have at least spared them the pain of inscribing their contempt, ——". "I think from publicity as from a secret; for if  were to discover his Satirist, I might expect all the vengeance of his remorseless malice.

I consider the Editor of a periodical work, like yours, as a kind of literary Confessor, to whom a thousand transgressors in poetry and in prose may unburden their consciences; with the either corrects their errors, or condemns them as incorrigible; but still the finger of FRANCOMASTER is upon his lips, and the errors of his penitents sleep in secresy and silence.

"You will doubtless ask, why I have not first endeavored to procure an insertion of the "Epistle" in one of the L. C. papers?—To this I reply, that I have learned how to appreciate the generous promises of a Yankee Editor;—and, I thank Heaven, that it is now in my power tolerably my national pride, by thus placing unhesitating confidence in an Englishman to whom I am unknown."

AN EPISTLE TO "A SCRIBBLER."

Sad is the Scene when chill November shrouds
The earth in darkness and the sky in clouds;
When, o'er the length'ning night and gloomy day
The "Polar Spirit" reasumes his sway;—
Sad, though the exhausted Genius of the storm
In the dense clouds should veil his slumbering form;
Sad, though his voice be hushed o'er sea and isle,
When from his work of wrath he breathes awhile;
When, as the time o. Autumn fade away,
The viewless hand of ruin and decay
Flings o'er the misty lake and sombre hill,
Sepulchral silence desolate and chill.

Yet cease, ye fond regrets! that vainly rise
For lovelier evenings past, and brighter skies:—
Hark! from the stillness of nocturnal gloom
Unearthly tones of soothing music come!
'Tis "Hope, the Enchantress:" rising doubly bright
From shades that vanish at the glorious light;
She sings that absent Spring will soon return
To grace with flowers her renovated urn;
Brief is the space ere Winter's reign be o'er,
When earth shall smile in verdure as before,

But ah! there is a Winter dark and drear,
That changeth not with nature's changing year;
Hope cannot gild the gloom of its control—
The breast less, chill December of the soul!
A mockery of life—a living grave,
Deep, dark, and sluggish as the Asphaltic wave!

Beloved of vice, and infamy, and shame,
"——," "——," whatsoe'er thy name!
Thine is the Winter of the Soul! the gloom
But not the quiet of the desert tomb! (1) [light," Thine are the cheerless hours "that loathe the
An- thine the horrors of the sleepless night;
While conscience pours upon thy heart and brain,
Remorse unbounded, ceaseless, and in vain!

Thak of thy earlier days when warm and gay,
Virtue and Hope were guardians of thy way;
Whence'er the future, fancy's witchery threw
The gilt-ring veil or rad.ance ever new;—
Then turn thee, maddening to the crimson page. (2)
The blushing trophy of thy worthless age!—
Behold the banners of thy crimes unfurled—
Behold—and shudder with a shuddering world!

Who, Satan dubbed thee his Apostle here,
He named thee "Luke," and muttered with a sneer,

"My Poe's Evangelist hath galled me sore;
"Therefore' to shew I hate his cause the more,
"Go thou! and prove thyself, by deeds of shame,
"An impious satire on his saintly name!"

* * * * *

Yet not for vice and infamy alone
To future ages shall thy name be known;
Dulness herself adores thee as her swain,
And adds one mistress to thy brutish train.
The puny dunces of the scribbling school
Acknowledge thee their far superior fool,
Lo! "W*," and "E*s," trembling stand, (3)
With nonsense in their heads, and pen in hand,
Awe-struck, they turn their leaden eyes to thee,
And one cries, "Ba!"—the other, "Zee, zee zee!"
And there Beau——— comes with simpering grace,
And blundering C——y with his vacant face; (4)
Lucus, ("a non lucendo!") joins the throng,
And —— more famed for boozing than for song:
There, too, the "Man of Malt" thy goddess woos
With rhymes even muddier than the ale he brews;
And there "G. C." appears, the mournful call,
Who writes sad elegies—to make men laugh!
Lo! when he sings, each mourner's eyes o'er-run
With tears—not tears of sorrow, but of fun!)
These, and a hundred others, sing thy praise,
And Dulness smiles propitious on their lays;
Whilst thou, with whom the genial goddess reigns,
Vouchsafest each a SCRIBBLER, for his pains;
And Cloacina lifts her vase to spread
Her choicest odours o'er thy ponderous head—
The self-same vase from which the fetid shower
Baptized thy genius at its natal hour.

* * * * *

Oh! happier they, whom misery and tears
Have swept in silence to the night of years,
Than thou, though gold and jewels glittering sheen
The guerdon of thy evil deeds had been!
Deeds which have blazoned thy detested name
In dark yet burning characters of shame.
The hiss of public scorn,—the muse's wrath,
Are scattering vengeance o'er thy lonely path;
Say, wouldst thou shun it as it falls from high?
—Fly from mankind—to some drear desert fly!
Then crouch, deep-howling, in thy sullen lair,
Abhorred thy crimes, unpitied thy despair!

POST CRIPT,

Addressed to such of a "SCRIBBLER'S" Correspondents as have enrolled themselves in "Captain Flash's" Company.

But you, ye nameless vermin of the quill!
Apt graduates in the school of Fanny H——!
Ye wretched panders to degraded taste!
What shall atone for all the ink ye waste?
What shall atone for youth's best hours misused,
Religion scoffed at, decency abused?
—Back!—to the counter, or the tavern-bar,
And plod o'er invoices or bills of fare!
Repent your waste of leisure and of ink,
And ere you try to scribble, learn to think!

(1) "The desert tomb!" In the most desolate and inaccessible parts of Turkey, the eye of the traveller frequently rests on some funereal monument, the gloomy yet peaceful memento of sanguinary plunder or revenge.

(2) "The crimson page." Alluding to a late unutterable compilation by the "——— of ———"

(3) In this and the subsequent lines, the reader will easily recognize the signatures of some of those contributors or promoters of public merriment, whose absurd efforts, in the Canadian papers have so often provoked the laughter and derision of their readers.

(4) "And blundering C——y." The reader will be convinced of the propriety of this epithet, if he will only venture to examine the heap of trash which this worthy master has in the shape of a newspaper, once a week over the Upper Province.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 14.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1823.

ERRATUM.

In making up our last number an oversight was committed which, though it may have escaped the observance of many, it is necessary to mention.—Two paragraphs beginning with the words, "We respectfully beg leave, &c." and the words, "In addressing your Excellency, &c." which, in fact ought to conclude the third address to the Lieutenant Governor were accidentally, in the hurry of making up the forms at a late hour in the night, thrown into the second address—published in our Register of last week,

Editorial Commentary.

Whatever may be the talents of the Emperor ALEXANDER as a General in the field, it must now be allowed that he is a perfect master of political manœuvre in the cabinet. Whether he will be finally successful or otherwise, as "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong" we cannot pretend to say, though appearances are at present much in his favour. He seems to have very nearly matured his grand design upon the eastern barrier of Europe, and he has certainly played his men with a masterly hand. He began by exciting the Greek to an insurrection on one side, and the Persian to actual invasion on the other; whilst, in order to prevent the only league that might possibly be formed against him, at all likely to thwart his purpose, he enjoles the pious descendant of St. Louis into a most unjustifiable attack on Spain, not doubting but England would be gradually drawn into the assistance of an ancient ally, thereby fully occupying both the attention and the means of the only powers, France and England, which, united, might have effectually warded off that blow which is now to open all the East to the arms, policy, and ambition of the already immensely power ful Autocrat.

As to Austria and Prussia, they are effectually, perhaps permanently, pinned to the sleeve of the CZAR by the Holy Alliance:—they are cat's-paws, with which to scratch to the right and left, as they may be wanted!

To render no effectual assistance to the brave Greeks, was a very important part of the great design, since their long persevering struggles after freedom not only tended to weaken the Turk, but also to weaken themselves, and render them more easily fitted for Russian slavery, when the hour arrived in which the great blow was to be struck.—When that great, wicked, woman, the magnificent CATHARINE bequeathed her vast designs to her successors, she little dreamt they would so rapidly approach maturity;—and, if the mighty departed are permitted to look back on the mad career and delirium of human ambition, and enter into its frenzied enjoyments, many a ghastly smile must gleam on the wan countenance of the imperial shade!

Although the article is lengthy for the little space we have to allot to it—yet we have thought it right to continue it in this sheet, what may be called the Manifesto of Spain in reply to the French Minister at Madrid, because it is a very important document, marking, probably, not only a great era in the History of Spain, but of all Europe, for the times are now pregnant with events of the most portentous, and doubtful, nature originating in this Spanish revolution:—whether the great incense-cloud which appears to be preparing, is destined for the sacrifice of all that is left of rational freedom, and limited monarchy in Europe; or, that it may be raised to witness, and to blaze into endless perdition, the last throws and agonies of an ancient and widely extended despotism, remains to be determined by events now rapidly assuming a decided character.—Our readers may shortly expect news of the highest importance to all Christendom.

After mature consideration we are obliged to declare the address to "Bardolph" inadmissible in our columns. All personalities, as well as ill-timed persons are odious! We care not with how much severity bad principles, or pernicious doctrines, are attacked;—but to seize upon, and expose, any personal weakness, or defect, rather than the moral offence, seems to us very like gibbeting a murderer's hat and cloak, rather than hanging the murderer himself!

We cannot oblige a "Protestant" by inserting his remarks on Orange Societies this week, for want of room; but we shall endeavour to accommodate him in our next—particularly as we wish to animadvert on some part of his reasoning.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

To the Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty at Paris, &c.

"The Government of his Catholic Majesty has just received communication of a Note sent by his Most Catholic Majesty to his Ambassador at this Court, and of which your Excellency will receive a copy for your information.

"The Government of his Majesty has few observations to make upon this Note, but in order that your Excellency may not be embarrassed as to the line of conduct you ought to pursue under these circumstances, it has deemed it its duty frankly to state to you its sentiments and resolutions.

"The Spanish Government has never been ignorant that the institutions spontaneously adopted by Spain would excite the jealousy of several of the Cabinets of Europe, and that they would be the object of deliberation at the Congress of Verona. But, firm in its principles, and resolved at every sacrifice to defend its present political system and the national independence, it has tranquilly awaited the result of this Congress.

"Spain is governed by a Constitution promulgated, accepted, and sworn to in 1812, and recognized by all the Powers who assembled themselves in Congress at Verona.

"Perfidious Counsellers prevented his Catholic Majesty, Ferdinand VII. from swearing, on his return to Spain, to this fundamental Code, which the whole nation desired, and which was destroyed by force, without any remonstrance on the part of the Powers who had recognized it; but an experience of six years, and the general will, engaged his Majesty, in 1820, to the views of Spaniards.

It was not a military insurrection that established the new order of things at the commencement of the year 1820. The courageous men who so decidedly declared themselves in the Isle de Leon, and successively in other provinces, were only the organs of general opinion, and of the desires of the whole nation.

"It was natural that a change of this nature should make some disaffected; it is an inevitable consequence of all reform which has for its object the diminution of abuses. In all nations there are individuals who can never accustom themselves to the yoke of reason and justice.

"The Army of Observation, which the French Government maintains at the foot of the Pyrenees, cannot calm the disorders which still exist in Spain. Experience, on the contrary, has proved, that the existence of this sanitary cordon, (recently transformed into an Army of Observation,) has only increased the hopes of the fanatics who have propagated the cry of rebellion in our provinces by exercising the idea of an immediate invasion of the territory.

"The principles, the views, or the fears, which have influenced the conduct of the Cabinets which assembled at Verona, cannot serve as a guide to the Spanish Government. It abstains, for the moment, from making any reply to that portion of the instructions of M. the Comte de Lagarde, which relates to it from the said Congress.

"The days of calm and tranquillity which the Government of his Most Christian Majesty wishes to the Spanish nation, the latter does not less anxiously desire for herself and her Government. Both being persuaded that the remedy can only be the work of time and perseverance, they are, as they are bound to do, making every effort to accelerate their useful and salutary effects.

"The Spanish Government appreciates the offer made to it by his Most Christian Majesty to contribute all in his power to its happiness; but it is persuaded, that the means and the precautions which his Majesty adopts, can produce only contrary results.

"The aid which the French Government could, at the present moment, to give that of Spain is purely negative: it must dissolve its army of the Pyrenees, repulse the factious enemies of Spain, who take refuge in France, and oppose itself in the most energetic manner against all those who indulge in declaiming, in the most shameful manner, the Government of his Catholic Majesty, as also the institutions of Spain and her Cortes. This is what the right of nations demand,—a right respected by those with which civilization reigns.

"To say that France desires the welfare of Spain and her tranquility, whilst firebrands, like those which feed the evils that affect her, are kept continually flaming, is to fall into an abyss of contradictions.

"Whatever may be the determination which the Government of his Most Christian Majesty may deem it expedient to come to under these circumstances, that of his Majesty will be to continue tranquilly in the path traced out to it by its duty, the justice of its cause, and the character of firm ness and attachment to constitutional principles which eminently distinguish the nation, at the moment in which it is placed; and, without entering, for the moment, into an analysis of the hypothetical and ambitious expressions contained in the instructions of the Comte de Lagarde, upon the independence of the Government, upon the repose and prosperity of the nation, as also upon every thing which may increase the elements of her welfare, ought to inter at no Power more anxiously than herself; that her motto, and the rule of her present and future conduct are, constant attachment to the Constitution of 1812, peace with all nations, and especially the never admitting the right of any Power whatever to interfere in her affairs.

"Your Excellency is authorised to read this Note to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, and to give him a copy if he requires it. Your judgement and prudence will suggest to you the firm conduct worthy of Spain, which you ought to pursue at this moment.

"Such are the communications which his Majesty orders me to make to you.

[Signed] EVARISTE SAN MIGUEL."

M. de San Miguel, afterwards read the three Notes of Prussia, Russia, and Austria, and said:—

"The Government of his Majesty has considered that it was neither becoming nor just to reply to these Notes, because they are full of invectives, calumnies, and suppositions directed, not precisely against the nation, but against those who governed, and against the individuals who have co-operated to our regeneration.

"The Government of his Majesty having knowledge of the contents of these Notes, has thought it becoming, (reserving, however, the right to publish its principles and the justice of its cause in a sincere exposition of the history of our Revolution,) to declare, in the most decided tone, that it neither recognises, in any manner, the right of intervention, nor admits the necessity for any foreign Cabinet to intermeddle with its affairs.

"I have now the honor to read to the assembly the Note which will serve as an answer to the different Cabinets.

"It would be unworthy the Spanish Government to answer the Notes of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, because they are only a tissue of lies and calumnies; it confines itself to making known to you its intentions.

"1. The Spanish nation is governed by a Constitution which was solemnly recognized by the Emperor of Russia, in 1812.

"2. The Spaniards, friends of their country, proclaimed, at the beginning of the year, 1812, this Constitution, which was abolished solely by violence, in 1814.

"3. The Constitutional King of Spain freely exercises the powers vested in him by the fundamental code.

"4. The Spanish nation does not in any way interfere with the institutions and internal regime of other nations.

"The remedy for all the evils which may afflict the Spanish nation, only concerns herself.

COPY (C.)

And whereas the division of the Province of Quebec into the two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any manner to obstruct the intercourse, or prejudice the trade to be carried on by the inhabitants of any part of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries, and it has accordingly been made a subject of mutual stipulation between the two Provinces in the several agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any duties upon articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such duties as they might think fit upon articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada, of which duties a certain proportion was by the said agreements provided to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada.

And whereas in consequence of the cessation of such agreements as above recited, it is necessary to protect the Province of Upper Canada from any evils which might arise from the exercise of an exclusive control by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the imports and exports into and out of the Port of Quebec. And it is further expedient in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada, to provide with sufficient certainty for the support of its Civil Government, and for other permanent and necessary charges upon its Revenue to establish such control as may prevent the Legislature of Lower Canada from repealing suddenly and without affording to Upper Canada an opportunity of remonstrance, existing duties upon which the principal part of such Revenue may depend. Be it therefore enacted, &c. that all and every the Duties which at the time of expiration of the last agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada on the importation of any goods, wares, or merchandize into the Port of Quebec, shall be payable and levied until the Act or Acts imposing the same or any of them shall be repealed by an Act or Acts of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts repealing such duties shall, after a copy of the same has been transmitted to the Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament according to the forms and provisions contained in the Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, ch 31, passed in the 31st year of His late Majesty's Reign, entitled &c. and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

And be it further enacted &c. That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other duties shall or may be imposed on articles imported by sea into the said Province of Lower Canada shall have the force of law, until the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament as provided for in certain cases by 31 Geo. III. ch. 31, and His Majesty's assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a copy of such Act having been transmitted to the Governor of the Province of Upper Canada. within from the passing of the same Provided always nevertheless that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if the concurrence of the Province of Upper Canada therein shall be signified in the manner to be specified in this Act.

(Note accompanying the foregoing Draft)

I have drawn up with as much connection as I could, in so short a time, the substance of the different provisions which I have already proposed on the part of Upper Canada.

To reduce them properly to detail will require more particular consideration, but the heads I have given will shew, I hope, with sufficient precision, the nature of the different enactments which appear to me necessary to place the two Provinces on a fair footing with respect to each other in matters of trade and revenue. It is impossible to say that in proceeding with the detail, more eligible modes may not suggest themselves of attaining the same ends with equal justice to both Provinces, and it is very probable that additional precautions may be found necessary to give effect to the measures proposed, but I am willing to be understood that I have no intention to urge on behalf of Upper Canada any measure distinct in principle from those embraced in this sketch, unless it occurs to me in time to admit of my giving Mr. Caldwell notice of it before his departure

(Signed) JOHN B. ROBINSON.

Editorial Commentary.

During the publication of the Parliamentary Register, and the Correspondence of Mr. Commissioner Robinson, it must be seen by our readers that it is impossible for us to adhere strictly to our former plan of arrangement in this paper; but, that plan will be resumed when those important documents are all published.

In the absence of that warlike intelligence from Europe which we daily expect to receive, it is in our power this week to gratify a few of our correspondents by publishing their communications.—As to VERAX, we would fain have refused him admittance, so far as relates to his prefatory remarks, thinking that quite enough has been said on the subject in this country; but, as he is a valuable correspondent, we do not wish to offend him by a refusal.

Wishing to be strictly impartial in our vocation as Editors, we could not refuse to publish Mr. SMITH'S letter on the subject of his Map; although we have taken the liberty of softening down a few of those expressions which appeared to us somewhat more pointed and severe than the occasion either called for, or justified—the more especially, as some facts were assumed which, to our own knowledge, did not exist. As Mr. SMITH has likewise frequently, in the course of his address, quoted the words "interesting notice," apparently with a view of playing upon them, it is but just that we should state that the word "interesting" was added to the advertisement by ourselves, in consequence of the satisfaction we experienced on finding the public were about to be gratified by this long expected desideratum. It was the only alteration, or rather addition, made by us; and, as it was almost involuntary, we feel assured Mr. RIDOUT will pardon us.—Mr. SMITH, who appears to be a deserving young man of talent, seems hurt by the application of the term "surreptitious," as he thinks, to his Map;—and, like all other parents, whether real or foster, evinces a good deal of sensibility for his offspring, which is all natural enough; but we hope he will excuse our saying, that as his Map is to appear so long before the one to be published by the Surveyor General, the public will have ample time and opportunity for doing him justice, should his performance deserve it, before any other competitor of consequence comes into the market; and, that he will find it a profitable speculation, we have not the least doubt.—Such being the case, and as there is abundant patronage in store for both undertakings, we are sorry to remark any appearance of angry feeling between the parties, a feeling that we hope will speedily subside.

Being great enemies of what are termed party distinctions, we have admitted the letter from "A PROTESTANT" with some reluctance; because, although the greater part of what is stated may be fact, all such productions serve to keep alive the very flame we wish to see expire for ever.—If we have a dislike to muddy waters we ought not to stir up those pools wherein we know that mud lies at the bottom.—Most things are in themselves innocent.—It is the motive which characterizes an offence.—Even in ordinary civilized society, one of the first rules of good behaviour is to avoid giving umbrage, either by word or deed, to those who may be present; but, in the general business of life, and in a more enlarged society, voluntarily to amuse ourselves by exciting evil passions or propensities, and bitter recollections, which we know to exist, and which, by being again awakened, may be productive of bad consequences to many individuals, is unquestionably criminal.—Where is the creature made up of flesh and blood, that loves persecution, or takes pleasure in being ridiculed, or insulted?—Unless our convivial societies, as well as all our other amusements, are innocent, the sooner we abandon them the better; at all events, there is something due to the feelings of those with whom we have daily intercourse; and, as to religious intolerance, it is manifestly, and universally, on the decline, wherever there is any thing like civil liberty enjoyed.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

British Ministry.—The following changes in the British Ministry, are announced in the Sun of the 20th. Mr. Bragge Bathurst retires; Mr. Vansittart takes the Duchy of Lancaster; Mr. Frederick Robinson is to have the Chancellorship of the Exchequer; and Mr Huskinson is to succeed Mr. Robinson as President of the Board of Trade.—Other changes will of course be necessary.

The Emperors of Austria and Russia, and the King of Naples, arrived at Vienna on the 5th of January.

England, Spain, and Portugal.—The Courier of January 22, says, England it seems, is pledged to support Portugal, in case of attack; yet Portugal is about to form an alliance, offensive and defensive with Spain, against France In that case the cause of Spain will become the common cause of the Peninsula.

A palpable Hit—In a late fighting party, the morning being hazy, the Duke of Wellington was so intent on his game, that he lost sight of his party and in firing, lodged a charge of shot in the face of Lord Viscount Granville. The wound was not dangerous, and his lordship has recovered.

Singular Character—There is at present living at a place called Glenarie, six miles from Inverary, a person of the name of John Monroe, at the advanced age of 95, who makes a point of walking daily, for the sake of recreation, the six miles between his residence and Inverary; or to the top of Tuilich hill, which is very steep, and distant about two miles. Should the rain pour in torrents, so much the better, and with the greater pleasure does he perambulate the summit of the hill for hours in the midst of the storm. Whether it is natural to this man, or whether it is the effect of habit, cannot be said; but it is well known he cannot endure to remain any length of time with his body in a dry state. During summer, and when the weather is dry, he regularly pays a daily visit to the river Aray, and plunges himself in headlong with his clothes on; and should they get perfectly dry, so irksome and disagreeable does his situation become, that like a fish out of water, he finds it necessary to repeat the luxury. He delights in rainy weather, and when the "sky lowers and the clouds threaten" and other men seek the "bield or ingle side," then is the time that this "man of habits" chooses for enjoying his favorite element in the highest perfection. He never bends his way homewards till he is completely drenched; and, on these occasions that a drop may not be lost, his bonnet is carried in his hand, and his head left bare to the pattering of the wind and rain. He at present enjoys excellent health; and notwithstanding his habits, he has been wonderfully fortunate in escaping colds, a complaint very common in his moist climate;—but when he is attacked, whether in dry weather or wet weather, whether in summer or winter, his mode of cure is not more singular than it is specific. Instead of confining himself and indulging in the ardent sweating potions so highly extolled among the gossips of his country, he repairs to his favorite element, the pure stream of the Arca, and takes one of his headlong dips with his clothes on. He then walks about for a few miles, till they become dry, when the plan pursued never fails to check the progress of the disorder. In other respects there is nothing singular regarding his manners or habits.—Stirling Journal.

Progress of Civilization.—The whole number of Students at the Transylvania University in Kentucky in all the Languages and Sciences, is three hundred and eighty-six, on a spot where, less than fifty years ago, Hunting and War were the only studies of the aboriginal race. The attempt to anticipate what will be the progress of improvement in such a country, in fifty years to come, looking back to fifty years past, fills one with astonishment.

Cause of the Greeks.—The accounts of the operations of the Greeks and Turks, are but few. The successes of the former, however, have continued. The account of the signal destruction of the Turkish ships, by the Greek fire ships is confirmed. As a reward for those Turkish officers who escaped, the Grand Seignior ordered their heads to be taken off The reports by the last arrival, of a revolution having taken place in the government at Constantinople, are also amply confirmed, Haleb Effendi, the bloody enemy of the Greeks, was at first banished, and afterwards followed and beheaded. A battalion of troops has been raised in Germany, who were on their way to join the Greeks. One hundred and twenty Greeks had also passed through Silesia to join their countrymen.

Spain.—A letter from Madrid, January 10, says, when the Minister of State began to read the notes from the Allied Cabinets, the most profound silence reigned in the hall and in the galleries, but no sooner was there heard an expression offensive to the Spanish nation, or to its government, than might be seen indignation painted on the countenances of the deputies and of the strangers who were present. "One circumstance, says the Expectador, excited our attention, viz; that in the seat appropriated to the diplomatic corps, no persons were seen but the English Ambassador, the individuals attached to his legation, and some English travellers, that is, free men, whose faces manifested the same indignation as those of the Spanish Deputies at beholding the audacity of those who wish to interfere in our affairs."

Signs of the times in England—At Plymouth Fair, a few days since, ten moor sheep were sold for nineteen shillings; out of which the owner had to pay ten pence for penning, so that each sheep made not quite one shilling and ten pence! A respectable farmer, of North Petherton, sold at the late Fair, twenty prime Somerset Ewes for fifteen pounds. The same farmer sold a Pig two years ago, for ten shillings more than the twenty Ewes now fetched! At Nottingham, three well fed suckling pig, weighing full 28 lb. was sold at the market for 3s. 3d.—One Nobleman in Suffolk, from mutiny come of eight thousand a year, has got of his last half year's rents, twenty one pounds! Another who has, seventy-two tenants, has distraints in the houses, corns, and goods of fifty-three of them!—An Agriculturist who resides near Taverton, informs us, that upwards of five hundred acres of land in his neighbourhood, are now unoccupied, owing to the unparalleled distress of the landed interest.

The celebrated Dr. Charles Hutton, F. R. S. died at his house in Bedford Row, on the 21st, in the 86th year of his age.

The illustrious discoverer of vaccination, Dr. Jenner, died at his residence in Gloucestershire, on the 26th of February, aged 74 years,

St. Petersburg, June 27.—The ship of the Russian American Company, Kutusow, which left Cronstadt in 1820, returned there the 2d inst. It brings back from New Archangel, in exchange for the cargo that it has sold there, precious furs to the value of about two millions. Our American Colonies prosper: the best understanding exists there with the neighboring savage tribes. But our establishments and our commerce, which every day take a great increase, begin to inspire some jealousy to the English, and even to the Americans of the United States.

The Rev. Dr. Chalmers of Glasgow, has accepted the vacant Professorship of Moral Philosophy in the University of St. Andrew's, which has excited deep and general regret at Glasgow.

Mr. Abernethy has addressed, it is said, a letter to the Secretary of State, on the necessity of repealing the late Act of Parliament, which subjects ill nurrection-men (as they are called) to severe punishment for violating the sanctity of the tomb. Under the present restrictions dead bodies are become very scarce in London, and some of the dissecting rooms are absolutely without an adult subject.

From the late Foreign Journals.

Comets.—According to the calculation of M. Olbers, of Bremen, after a lapse of 83,000 years, a comet will approach to the Earth in the same proximity as the Moon; after 4,000,000 years, it will approach to the distance of 7700 geographical miles; and then, if its attraction equals that of the Earth, the waters of the Ocean will be elevated 13,000 feet, and cause a second deluge. After 200,000,000 years it will clash with the Earth.

Extensive Resurrection.—The practice of robbing graves to supply Surgeons with subjects for anatomy is carried to an extent truly revolting. We were informed some time since, by a Physician of eminence, that upwards of 2000 subjects are yearly furnished to the various hospitals, &c. in London.

Progress of Civilization.—The Sidney Gazette states, that Francis Williams, late Cashier of the New South Wales Bank, has been sentenced to 14 years transportation, on his own confession, for embezzling from the said Bank no less than £11,975.

French Army of Spain.—The following officers have been named to command in the army which will invade Spain, viz:—Lieut. General the Marquis LAW DE LAURISTON; Lieut. General HARO; Lieutenant General Viscount DONNADIEU; Lieut. General GUILLEMONT; and Lieut. General FOORAT. They all bear decorations of the Legion of Honor, and figured in the Bulletins of Buonaparte's wars. LAURISTON was for a long time Chief Aid-de-Camp of the Ex-Emperor.

Three regiments of the cavalry of the Royal Guard destined for Spain, will be commanded by Generals LAURISTON, RABBE-N, and CASTELNAC.

Presentiment.—A singular circumstance took place in Staffordshire, England, in January. A lad named Thomas Beresford, whilst washing in a reservoir belonging to a Steam-Engine, fell in and was scalded to death. One of the persons invited to the funeral expressed himself, alleging that his own funeral was near at hand. In less than an hour he was taken ill, and died the same day.

An Attorney properly lashed.—Damages to the amount of £1000 were lately obtained in the Court of King's Bench London, by a gentleman against an Attorney for a transaction in which the Attorney had neglected to take proper and valid security.

Mary Ann Clark was tried and convicted of keeping a Disorderly House. It appeared that she had two or three daughters, (young women,) and that she kept a house of the most lewd and infamous kind.[1] In the language of one of the officers, who was called as a witness upon the trial, "It is the worst house I ever saw, but one, in New York."—and the evidence of others fully justified the assertion. The foul hag had been in the habit of sending to her resort of infamy, for the basest of purposes, youths of both sexes, of from 10 to 14 years of age. The Court, after a severe reprimand of the disgraceful conduct of the prisoner, sentenced her to the Penitentiary for one year. She begged to have her daughters go with her to the treadmill, or to go to the Almshouse, as they had no father, and nothing to live on.

New Appointments.—Lord Francis Conyngham attended at the Foreign Office on Monday, for the first time since his appointment as Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Lord Chawdivan, it is said, will be Envoy to the Court of Berlin, in the room of Sir G. Rose, who retires: the emoluments are £8000. per annm.

An alteration in the uniform and swords of the Royal Marine Officers is about to take place.

The first Marquiss Townshend and General Wolfe. —The great General Wolfe, though a young officer, was, at the siege of Quebec, placed in the chief command. Marquiss Townshend, who was also engaged in the siege, and who had a great talent for caricature, in ridicule of Wolfe's measures, sketched his portrait drawing lines of circumvallation round a privy. The officers were assembled at mess, when General Townshend handed round the caricature, which at length reached Wolfe himself. He quietly put it in his pocket, saying—"I will have it framed, this must be enquired into; we live over-to-morrow, this must be enquired into; but we must first beat the enemy."

Mr. Vansittart.—We learn from the Courier, that the Right Hon. Nicholas Vansittart, retires from the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, in which important office he is to be succeeded by the Right Hon. F. Robinson, President of the Board of Trade. Perhaps, (says the Courier) there never existed a Statesman who had fewer infirmities and more virtues than Mr. Vansittart. Besides being a man of much resulted integrity, so clear in his great office, he was a man easily accessible, affable in the highest degree, kindly in all his fienlines. It, to our opinion, he had one fault as a politician, it was that he carried forbearance to his enemies to too great an extent. Mr. Vansittart is to be appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the room of the Right Honorable Charles Bathurst, and is to be raised to the Peerage.

Mr. Huskisson, is to succeed Mr. Robinson as President of the Board of Trade, and is to be succeeded by the Right Honourable C. Arbuthnot in the office of woods and forests. Mr. Lushington takes Mr. Arbuthnot's situation at the Treasury, and Mr. Herries is to be appointed to the Secretaryship which Mr. Lushington held.

58 Gower Street, April 18th, 1822.

Sir,

Mr. Caldwell has very politely directed my attention to the Courier Newspaper of Friday last, in which you have published the Resolutions passed by the Assembly of Lower Canada in their last Session respecting the questions between the two Provinces of Canada, on the subject of Revenue. "That the right of Upper Canada with respect to goods, "wares, and merchandize imported into Lower "Canada, or exported therefrom, consists only of "a right of passage through the said Province of "Lower Canada, or depends on conventional ar- "rangements between the two Provinces," is a position which, if admitted, would do nothing to obviate the difficulties which occasion the present embarrassments of Upper Canada, because, as far as respects the alteration of conventional arrangements, the very hardship complained of is that there is none in force to regulate the present, or to provide for the future intercourse between the two Provinces, that Lower Canada omitted through a period of nearly two years to appoint Commissioners to treat, and that when Commissioners were appointed for that purpose, they were not authorized, as they declared, to look into the past, and would accede to no terms which our Commissioners could possibly concur in for the time to come upon the remaining part of the Resolution, namely, the abstract position that Upper Canada has no other claim but to "a right of transit of goods through "the Lower Province," I beg to observe that Upper Canada has not only a right of transit, but of a free transit, that is, relieved from any duties which may have been imposed upon such goods, on their entrance into Lower Canada, and that such right has been uniformly recognized by every provisional agreement, since the division of the Provinces. It is conceived, indeed, that Upper Canada has even claims beyond this in respect of goods, which having paid a duty at Quebec under the 14th Geo. III. as well as under Provincial enactments, are consumed in neither Province, [illegible] exported to the United States of America. These claims, though of inferior moment, are urged in the Report which I have had the honor to present, and the reasons stated on which they are grounded. But if the claim of Upper Canada were confined to the right of free transit of such goods as her inhabitants consume, the express declarations of the last Commissioners appointed by Lower Canada would deprive her of that right, for they unequivocally declare, in writing to our Commissioners, that "they will "agree to no other arrangement than that each "Province shall collect its own revenue, and that "they will pay us no drawbacks." But the duties imposed by the 14th Geo III. will continue to be levied on importations at Quebec, and no doubt the Legislature of Lower Canada will always add to these duties others of their own, therefore, if they will henceforth pay no drawbacks to Upper Canada, whatever revenue so should to raise from European merchandize as it comes into our Province, can only be obtained by imposing duties in addition to those already levied on the same articles, when they arrived at the Port of Quebec, of which we are to receive no drawback, and over which we are to have no control.

Upon the remaining Resolutions I beg to remark that the claims of Upper Canada upon the Lower Province are grounded principally upon former provisional agreements, which it is contended have not been complied with, and proofs offered to substantiate claims under them to a very considerable amount, Lower Canada, on the other hand, denies, though in the positive terms, that such claims exist; it is submitted that Arbitrators can best decide this question. But it is moreover conceived that beyond these claims under agreements unperformed, there may exist others equally clear and just, which those agreements ought not to preclude, unless they are such as the Commissioners who framed those agreements were authorized to adjust, and did in fact consider.

The agreement entered into at Quebec on the 7th June, 1817, between the Commissioners of Upper and Lower Canada, which by these resolutions is not recognized as valid, related only to the payment of a particular sum of £1585, on account of arrearages claimed by Upper Canada, and is wholly unimportant as to any question remaining now to be considered. It was no far sanctioned by the Legislature of Lower Canada, that they passed an Act appropriating the sum to Upper Canada which was ascertained by that agreement, and I cannot conceive for what purpose a question is now raised about it, for it was but a portion of what is claimed, and was neither expressed, nor pretended to be in satisfaction of the claims of Upper Canada, but quite the contrary.

As to the assertion contained in the Resolutions, that the proportion of Goods imported into Lower Canada, and consumed in Upper Canada has materially diminished since the last agreement in 1817, it is fully met and particularly considered in the Report of the Legislative Council and Assembly of Upper Canada, and documents are appended to that report which clearly substantiate whatever is advanced in it on that head.

COMMUNICATIONS

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

You will confer a favor upon me by inserting in your Paper the inclosed Letter. I feel confident that you will see the necessity which exists for doing away with the injurious effect which the notice therein alluded to is calculated to produce.

Your Obed. Servt.

DAVID Wm. SMITH.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Having observed in the Gazette of last week a very "Interesting Notice," purporting to have come from the Surveyor General's Office, announcing the intended publication of a Correct Map of this Province, I cannot, in justice to a large number of respectable friends, as well as to myself, refrain from offering to the Public, through the medium of your valuable Paper, a few remarks upon the illiberal attempt that has been made to promote the success of one undertaking by depreciating the merits of another.

The "Interesting Notice" is given "in order to prevent those persons who are desirous of having an Authentic Map of Upper Canada from being imposed upon by a Surreptitious Copy," and were it not that I am aware of no other person, (save the Surveyor General and myself,) having made known his intention of publishing, I should be at a loss to discover whether the allusion is really made to my Map; and were it not for the apparent assertion, that it was copied surreptitiously from his, (which is as untrue as it is unmanly,) I should not think it worth the time it would occupy to give it an answer; but in order to do away with all appearance of unfairness on my part, and to remove any stigma that could possibly be supposed to attach itself to me, the following recital will, I conceive, be quite sufficient.

During the first session of the present parliament, the House of Assembly requested His Lieutenant Governor to cause an Accurate Plan of the Province to be laid before them for their use, and the Draftsmen of the Surveyor General's office being ordered to prepare one accordingly, in the ensuing Session it was transmitted to the House in compliance with its request, when one of the members becoming desirous of having a copy made for his own private use, applied to me as a fit person to execute it.

The Map was accordingly delivered to me for that purpose, and remained in my possession about three months, by which time I had complete; a copy; but as the Gentlemen who had employed me to copy it did not apply for it, I considered it to all intents and purposes my own.

I will now, Sir, leave it to yourself, and a candid Public, to determine, whether the manner in which I procured the copy is at all to be deemed "surreptitious."—Far from it;—on the contrary, it was well known even to persons connected with the Surveyor General's office, that the Map was in my possession for the express purpose of taking a copy.

After returning the original, I proceeded to make additions and improvements to my own Map, and feeling very sensible of the benefits which the country would generally experience from the publication of an authentic document of that kind, and also being aware of the disadvantages felt from the want of it, and having no certain prospect of that want ever being supplied otherwise, I completed it with the suggestions of several friends, and determined upon laying it before the Public. The flattering encouragement which the undertaking has received, has by no means diminished, but, as may naturally be expected, has increased my desire to have it completed, and in such a manner as to deserve an extensive patronage.

Although not engraved in London, I feel warranted in affirming, that the execution of it will meet every reasonable expectation, as it is to be executed by an Artist from Edinburgh, now resident in Quebec; and as to its accuracy, I shall modestly rest the proof of its merits in that respect upon the "Interesting Notice" of the Surveyor General, since the chief materials of my Map are derived from the same source with his own.

With regard to the assumption of an exclusive copy-right, I have only to remark, that the Gentleman who made the original Map receive salaries amounting between them to upwards of £500 in the year; and as it was a document prepared for the express purpose of informing the Public, and as it was in fact made public by being laid before the Representatives of the People, neither the Surveyor General nor his Draftsmen could be supposed to have an exclusive privilege to the copy-right unless it was because they were so amply paid for making it.

The Surveyor General, in his "Interesting Notice," informs the Public that he has obtained the permission of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor to bring forward the publication—and, I am confident that that patronage is sufficient to ensure him ample success.—When my determination to publish the Map was originally taken, I was flattered I confess, with the promise of that patronage; but, owing no doubt, to the representations of that party which was most likely to be affected by my success, that promise was withdrawn; and I am now left to my own energies, and the support of a generous and discriminating Public for remuneration; and I am pretty confident that I shall not be disappointed. Let the event, however be what it may, I shall have this satisfaction, that were it not for my endeavours, the Country would have remained, for years to come, as it has for years past, deprived of that information which is so material to its growing prosperity.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

DAVID Wm. SMITH.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Having seen a Petition that was published in the Observer of Monday last, which is called "A Petition against Orange Societies, and all other "Party Distinctions," and which is said to have been presented to the House of Assembly, I wish to make a few remarks thereupon, which I hope you will admit into the columns of your Register.

Although I am neither an Orangeman nor a friend to "Party Distinctions," I feel myself called upon to point out a few of the many falsehoods which that Petition appears to me to contain.—It is a matter of deep regret, that men who make such large professions of religion should endeavour to impose upon others by misrepresentation and falsehood.—If we turn over only a very few pages of the history of the period to which the promoters of the Petition allude, we shall find that they were not "Orangemen," but men with very opposite sentiments, who were to be blamed for the disorders and the crimes committed.

The Petition states, that "in Ireland the unthinking and inexperienced youth are trained from the first dawning of reason with the malignant poison of party spirit, and thereby exposed to commit excess."—If the petitioners mean the offspring of "Orangemen," I flatly deny the charge.—Pray, Mr. Editor, what is an "Orangeman?"—He is a man that is sworn to be faithful and true to his King, and to defend his country to the uttermost; aye, and even to protect a Catholic in the enjoyment of his civil rights and property; and being sworn to do so, is it possible he can instruct his children to act in opposition to his own oath?

But, if the Petitioners mean the youth of the Catholics, I can afford them a greater degree of credence, for it is no difficult matter to prove that they are taught from their infancy to persecute, and to hate those of all other religious persuasions under the broad and general title of Heretics.

If, by the "excesses committed in Ireland, the recollection of which will never be obliterated from the minds of the people of that unfortunate country," the petitioners mean excesses committed by Orangemen, I deny the alledged fact, and challenge them to point out a single instance in which Orangemen were the first aggressors!—But, if they mean excesses committed by Catholics, I am obliged to allow they have stated what is fact:—for, the excesses committed by Catholics are unfortunately but too well known.

In the time of Charles I. of England, no less a number than 200,000 Protestants were most cruelly butchered by the Catholics in poor, devoted, Ireland! and, to use the words of an Historian, on that occasion,—"neither age, sex, nor condition, found any pity.—In such indiscriminate slaughter, neither bonds, nor alliances, nor authority, were any protection.—Numbers were the instances of friends murdering their inmates, relatives, their kinsmen, &c. In vain did flight save them from a first assault; certain destruction extensively spread abroad, met the hunted victim at every turn!"—How dreadful the havoc!—How shocking the scene!—And, have the descendants of those murderers mourned over the crimes of their fathers?—No! to this day the Catholics of that country annually celebrate on Mid summers'eve, by bon fires and other rejoicings, their victory gained over the Protestants. It is said, they formerly collected the bones of their murdered victims, and burned them; but now, for want of the bones they burn wood!

These Petitioners likewise state that, "it is a fact too well known to every person acquainted with the affairs of Ireland for the last 30 years, that the 12th of July has never passed by, without some deplorable calamity, occasioned by Orange processions—and, as often as the Orange Flag has been unfurled in that country, it has, almost uniformly, been stained with blood."

It is true that such has been too much the case: but I must again aver that the Catholics have been, in every instance, the persons who made the first attack.—Such appears to be the disposition of the greater number of that people, that as soon as they discover any thing, even a part of apparel, of an orange colour, either upon a man or woman, their blood begins to boil, and to work they go, to the certain injury of the person wearing it—I would ask those men from whence originates their dislike to an orange colour more than to any other?—They will, no doubt answer, because it was the colour worn by the Prince of Orange at the Battle of the Boyne! That was certainly a glorious day to the British nation, when civil and religious liberty triumphed over Romish superstition! But what would have been the consequence if William had not conquered on that day? those of the opposite party can tell, whose ancestors had invited the Protestants to a feast at Drogheda, on the banks of that same Boyne-water, under pretence of friendly intercourse, and murdered the whole of them.

But, Sir, it has not been always so that when the Orange Flag has been unfurled, blood was there once necessarily shed.—I have been this day informed, by a most respectable man in the Town of York, that in that part of the country from whence he lately came, the Orange Flag has been successively unfurled for ten years without either any blood being shed, or any other serious disorder being committed.*

I might point out a great many other facts to show that in every instance where outrage has been committed, the Orangemen have been compelled to defend themselves, or to lose their lives.—But the Catholics seek after a more tolerant and christian-like spirit, and the time will soon arrive when these blended religious and political distinctions, and parties must cease;—and, for my part, I do think the time is at hand, at least in this country. If you think I have unnecessarily thrust myself forward on this occasion I must again refer you to the false statements of the Petition alluded to for my justification.

I am, &c.

A PROTESTANT.

Newmarket, March 20th, 1828.

* This Newmarket Protestant must allow (if his own reasoning is true) that there could not be many Catholics, (perhaps there were none) in the part of the country alluded to, else

"THE PRETENDER'S SWORD."

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

Observing a few weeks ago that you gave us several columns of amusing matter on the subject of the "Pretender's Sword" said to have been discovered in Glengary, within this Province, I beg leave to call your attention, and that of your readers, to the following interesting anecdote which is to be found in the "Magic Lantern," a valuable periodical publication of these times; with a view of inquiring whether the Brother of the Pretender, or an obscure peasant was most likely to be in possession of the "precious relic," and whether it was likely that a man, in the circumstances of the Prince at the time of his disaster, would throw away his only defence, and whether it was not much more likely that the Glengary Sword belonged to some more obscure, flying, Chieftain, whom the poor peasant mistook for his supposed Prince, and who was glad to throw away every thing for the disguise of humble obscurity, and to expedite his flight?

Before I conclude, I must assure you that it is merely a simple love of truth, interm ingled with a little antiquarian curiosity, which induces me to put any query on the subject.

I am, your constant reader,

Anecdote of Cardinal York, and Lord Nelson.

When Napoleon Buonaparte entered Rome with his army, all who were not favourable to the conqueror fled from the city; and as nearly all Italy was under his control, there was scarcely any resting place for the fugitives.

Cardinal York, brother to the Chevalier St. George, commonly called "the Pretender," was particularly obnoxious to Buonaparte, from having reflected severely upon his cruelty in a charge he made to his Clergy as Bp. of Arisa. He removed to Venice, where the French troops followed him, and he escaped in the disguise of a mendicant friar. He begged his way to a village near Cape Otranto, where he lay secreted for several weeks, subsisting on the charity of the cure of that place. The Agamemnon, 74, was then cruising near the coast, under the orders of Captain Nelson, and he learnt the deplorable situation of the Cardinal. Fretting all those antipathies called up by the name of Stuart, and the Cardinal being a presumptive heir to the British Crown, Nelson determined to assist the last of the Stuarts. He went himself on shore, found the illustrious unfortunate in rags, and invited him on board his ship. The Cardinal hesitated not to throw himself on his generosity. He was accommodated with a part of the Captain's cabin, and proper apparel, suitable to his dignity, furnished him. He remained on board seven weeks, during which period the ship was thrice engaged in action. The Cardinal walked the deck with Captain Nelson perfectly undismayed, amidst a scene of carnage. As to which he had hitherto been a total stranger. As soon as convenient, Captain Nelson landed him in the Austrian territories, forcing upon him £100 to defray his expences to Vienna. The old man shed tears when he left his benefactor, and was regretted by all on board, to whom he was endeared by his mild and unassuming manners. Nelson frequently spoke of him with admiration, and said, "That man's example would almost make me a convert to the Catholic Faith!"

The Cardinal had a handsome pension assigned him by the Emperor, and six months after his escape to the Agamemnon, he was on board of her again, in the harbour of Genoa. Fortune then smiled upon him, and his delight at seeing his deliverer was sincere. In the fulness of his gratitude he embraced all the officers, and ran about the ship shaking hands with the crew. He repaid his pecuniary obligation to Nelson, and would have trebled the sum, which Nelson refused. He sent on board fruits, bread, wine, and meat, sufficient to keep the sailors feasting for several days, and kept open house on shore for all the officers.

When taking his final leave, he presented Nelson with a Sword, which the "Pretender" had used all his life; it was plainly mounted in silver, and highly valued by Nelson. It is difficult to tell which to admire most, the generosity of Nelson or the gratitude of the Cardinal; both did honour to their distinct professions, and this anecdote is equally creditable to the memory of two great and good men.

RESOLVED—That we are further impressed with the liveliest sense of the gracious consideration of our Sovereign, in suggesting such comprehensive measures to His Parliament, as were considered best calculated to remove all grounds for future jealousy and misunderstanding between the Sister Colonies, and most conducive to their good government and prosperity.

RESOLVED—That it appears to us to have been a part of the measures so suggested, to Unite the Legislatures of the two Provinces, thereby imparting to us a just share in all Colonial deliberations affecting the interests of both Provinces.

RESOLVED—That if having been judged expedient to reserve this important part of the projected measures for reconsideration at a future Session, We avail ourselves of the opportunity afforded us by the delay, to offer at the foot of the Throne our assurances of implicit reliance on the wisdom and justice of our beloved Sovereign and his Parliament, confidentially assuring ourselves that whatever measures it may please them to adopt, they will be such as are best calculated to secure the freedom and promote the prosperity and happiness of His Majesty's faithful Canadian Subjects.

RESOLVED—That while we thus express our sincere and unbounded confidence in the justice and liberality of the Government of our gracious King, yet we should feel ourselves justly liable to the reproach of ingratitude, were we not to express our acknowledgments of the happiness we have derived from the Constitution, as conferred upon us by the Imperial Parliament in the thirty first year of the Reign of our late lamented and revered Sovereign, and we trust that this feeling will be received as an excuse for the hope which we, His Majesty's faithful Commons of Upper Canada, with humble and respectful deference, pray leave to express, that if the contemplated Union be ultimately decided upon, alteration of its provisions in other respects may not form any part of the policy of His Majesty's Government.

On which debates ensued.

POETRY.

The following lines on the Children of Israel's passage through the Red Sea, and journey through the Wilderness, Mr. Pope thought superior to any thing he had ever met with in the English language. The author is unknown.

When Egypt's King, God's chosen tribe pursued,
In chrystal walls th'admiring waters stood;
When through the wilderness they took their way,
The rocks relented, and pour'd forth a sea;
What limits can Almighty goodness know?
When seas can harden, and when rocks can flow?

Colonial Commentary.

Those who have the conducting of Newspapers may certainly do a great deal of mischief, either by wilful, or thoughtless misrepresentation. It will scarcely be credited by our worthy Upper Canadian subscribers who are so well acquainted with that singular degree of harmony and good understanding which has so long and so uniformly subsisted between our present exemplary LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR and the two Houses of Parliament, that the late short, we may say momentary, misunderstanding which occurred but a few days before the late prorogation, on the subject of the detailed public accounts, and which has been so thoroughly and satisfactorily explained, should have been construed by a zealous Editor in the Lower Province (Montreal Gazette,) into a ground of necessity for an immediate union of the two Provinces, in language strangely grotesque like this:—"In the face of such proceedings, &c. who will say that an union is not necessary, in order to put a stop to this deluge of political strife, and animosity?—If, however, such an event do not take place, heaven help both the GOVERNOR and the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, and grant them patience under their sufferings!"——!!!——If this learned Editor is never to be drowned in any other deluge than that which springs from political strife between our Lieutenant Governor, and his Parliament, he seems to stand in much greater jeopardy of "ganging t'other way ost o' this wicked world!"

But another of the Montreal Editors has a handsomer, and far more just, method of complimenting our Government upon an occasion where a handsome notice was the smallest tribute due—The Herald thus more appropriately expresses himself:

"We regret, that the selections we had made for this day's publication, previous to the receipt of the Upper Canada papers, compels us to exclude the dignified reply of His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland to an address of the House of Assembly of Upper Canada, on the mode of preparing the Provincial Accounts. The firm and temperate manner in which he asserts his determination to maintain the just rights of the Crown, and to permit no innovation therein, at the same time that he manifests a disposition ready to acquiesce in the reasonable requests of the Representatives of the people, do equal honor to his Patriotism as the King's Representative, and to his urbanity and feelings as a man.

"We shall avail ourselves of the first opportunity to re publish the documents to which the above remarks refer: they merit particular attention on account of the firmness which is manifested on one side, and the good sense and personal regard shewn for his Excellency on the other."

It cannot have escaped those of our readers who are attached to the recollections that will for ever hang upon the days of former times—that our neighbours of the United States, however far they may indulge themselves in contemning the ancient splendour, and all that gives pride, and distinction, and honor, to the elder nations of Europe,—are singularly, often indiscreetly, pertinacious and garrulous on the discovery of any supposed relic of remote antiquity in their own land, and many have been the smiles extorted from our grave visages by their long, fanciful, dissertations on old Indian Castles, Encampments, Tumuli, &c.—; but, we own we were not prepared for such a paragraph as the following, on the discovery of some stenographic memoranda in that truly venerable and classic City of Detroit, founded by the antient of days in times when the Genius of History had scarcely lighted on the muddy brains of our new original race:

"The Detroit Gazette states that a manuscript volume, of between 3 and 4 hundred pages, has lately been discovered by Col. Edwards of that town, under one of his buildings. The Book is in a tolerable state of preservation, and is said to be a fine specimen of penmanship. It has been compared with more than thirty different Alphabets, ancient and modern, and although the characters in which it is written bear a slight affinity to several of them, it is very clear that they belong to neither. There is no doubt, from the Latin sentences interspersed through it, that it is a religious work—probably the production of some learned theologian of the seventeenth century, written in a peculiar cypher."!!!"

English dates to the 9th of February, together with His Majesty's Speech have arrived, but too late for this paper; we shall therefore endeavor to put forth a Supplement on Saturday next, in which the highly interesting report that "NO UNION IS TO TAKE PLACE" will be also discussed.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

SPAIN.

Felicitations were received by the Cortes from various part of the country approving in the warmest terms of the measures adopted by them on the 9th and 11th of January, and furnish great reason to believe that the spirit of patriotism will in a great degree silence dissention, and excite the Spaniards to oppose the power of France in one resolute and united body. The inhabitants of Olivenza, a town on the frontiers of Portugal, on receiving the news of the sessions of the 9th and 11th, forget all their party feelings, assembled around the Constitutional stone, and, with an abrade at their head, shouted viva to the constitution, and the constitutional king. Dissentions had before prevailed among them; but from this moment they all resolved to unite for the defence of their country.

The soldiers and citizens who had been raised by voluntary enlistment for the temporary security of Madrid, were disbanded on the 2d of February, with the thanks of his majesty, with orders that the officers should all resume their stations if in case of necessity they should again be called out.

The plan of voluntary enlistments for the defence of the country, which was proposed by the Constitutional Junta of Madrid, has been powerfully seconded by the government, and the whole body of citizens. All sorts of corporate bodies, and individuals without number have crowded to offer their services, old men and young, and those of respectable families were seen performing the duty of centinels in the city; and at a single suggestion from the governor, the local national militia of Madrid was joined by the militia of the Towns of the province, the city of Toledo, and many other places. The Government made preparations for arming all the troops which it had called out for its defence, the companies of inspection and the alumni of the central university; and all were ready to fight in the defence of their country and liberty, their lives and fortunes.

The following translations may furnish some idea of the devotion to their country manifested by numerous individuals:

"At the session of the 29th of January, Don Pablo Lopez, well known by the name of the lame man of Malaga, voluntarily returned to the Cortes half the sums of money paid to him in 1820.

"Don Juan Carfa presented a petition, praying that the time which was necessary to allow to his only son, now 16 years old, to enlist for the service of his country, might be overlooked."—Ib.

A French Revolutionary Army—It is said a letter has reached town, which states, that one of Buonaparte's distinguished Generals, (LALLEMAND,) was at Barcelona, occupied in raising a corps of 10,000 men, composed of Frenchmen, disaffected to the present Government, who were to be called Les Chevaliers de la Liberte; and in case of War breaking out between Spain and France, were to march into the latter country under the tri colour'd banner, with the object of exciting an insurrection, driving out the Bourbons, and seating the young NAPOLEON on the throne of his Father.—N. Y Mercantile Advertiser.

Progress of Christianity—The Queen of Thibet has been converted to the Roman Catholic Religion, and has sent to the Pope five 80 Missionaries.

RUINS OF IONA.—The classical antiquarian will regret to understand that a considerable part of the roof of the celebrated Nunnery of Iona has fallen to the ground. The ruins have buried under them the greater number of the beautiful and antique tombstones of the sisterhood, who are interred beneath. It is hoped that the noble proprietor will give the necessary orders for removing the rubbish, for it were matter of deep regret to the public that such venerable relics of religious antiquity should be consigned to that oblivion, which the good taste of the present age was rescuing them from. Upwards of 1000 visitors, including many foreigners of distinction, 'paid the tribute of a sigh,' during the last summer, to the departed glory of the towers of Iona. The most noble and the most beautiful of Northern Europe, during the early ages, were inmates of its cloisters, and we hope that the interesting monument of their existence will still be made visible to the public eye.

York, 11th April, 1823.

MR SMITH'S communication, instead of serving the good purposes intended, has only tended to shew the instability of the ground which he has taken; and he has in every respect condemned himself by the very facts brought forward on his exculpation. He merely shows that he has not fraudulently obtained the copy, and endeavors to found his whole right to publish the work of another on that single circumstance. He must know, however and his profession must have taught him, that in being merely employed to take a copy of that map or of any other work which after having been finished is left on his hands by his employer, could give him no further right than to that individual copy;—he might sell it;—he might destroy it—if, in his wisdom he was so pleased;—but he would have no right to publish it. His accounting for the possession of the original, and the subsequent taking of a copy through a Member of Parliament (were that the fact) is exceedingly lame—the source is not legitimate, as the M.P. had no authority to give him a copy, or to allow him to take one. Would this M. P. himself have a right to publish without the authority of the House of Assembly, even for its own benefit?—No! Would the individual member himself have a right to publish for his own benefit from a plan which belonged to the House collectively?—No!—Then, how can Mr Smith deduce his right and authority to publish what evidently did not belong to him, through a person who had no power to give it?

The public will judge whether he has not surreptitiously, or fraudulently, made use of this copy, if, indeed, he has not surreptitiously obtained the original, and consequently the copy. He says "he was employed as a fit person to make a copy," and forsooth because the M. P. don't exactly find it convenient to take it off his hands, he considers himself fully entitled to publish, what has cost another individual the labour of years, to pay himself for the trouble of making a single copy.—Really this is very modest—it must have been an excellent copy indeed, and he must have given it infinite consideration, when nothing less than the sum total of the profits which ought to be received by him who framed the original would satisfy him for his trouble.

But even this was not enough for his ambition; he tells his friends he will publish; they applaud; he is flattered; he tells us this has not lessened his desire to have it published, and he is now determined to have a name at the expense of another:—so he goes on, right or wrong, and wishes to be thought patriotic, by giving to the public, not his map, as he calls it, but the Surveyor General's, let who will suffer by it. This is what the world calls making a fraudulent use of a thing; for he owns himself that he obtained it for "the express purpose of making a copy (not for publication) which he says, "was well known to persons connected with the Surveyor General's office," he however took precious care that his intention of publishing should never come to their knowledge till he was fairly started; and it was not till he had first been at New-York, with his proposal that "the persons connected with the S. G's. office" knew any thing about the matter. He then says, "I proceeded to make additions and improvements to my own map"—His own map! he acknowledges it to be the work of another, and his "additions and improvements" look rather suspicious, as he is no surveyor, draftsmen, or engineer, either civil or military—he is a student at law, and could have no opportunity of getting such documents as are necessary to make additions and improvements to a map framed by persons who had access to every document and knowledge to make use of them in the line of their business, and paid every attention to make it complete up to that time—they must have been had either from plans issuing from the S. Genl.'s office, or from some private surveyor's gleanings, and these he now claims as his own!!

And to wind up the whole of his admirable letter, he rests the whole proof of the accuracy and merits of his map upon the Notice of the Surveyor General, which he so strongly deprecates, he says, "since the chief materials of my map are derived from the same source with his own"—sure enough he says truly the materials were first put together as a map of the province at the S. Genl's office, and he obtains a copy of it in the manner stated by himself; and, then, as I must understand from his communication, servilely copies it—and we are about to see a map of the province by DAVID WILLIAM SMITH! He gives himself a satisfaction in the idea "that were it not for his endeavours the country would have remained for years to come as it has for years past, deprived of that information which is so necessary to its growing prosperity." The fact is, that the very map from which he made his copy was made from a part of a map now in contemplation, and now advertised by the S. General, and I have good reason to believe he knew that to be the case—so that his patriotic efforts dwindled into the desire of raising his name, and gaining emolument by a map surreptitiously obtained in the first place; surreptitiously made use of for publication in the second; and, to have every thing in due keeping, surreptitiously defended by a flimsy quibble!—What is the reason he did not resort to the usual mode of getting subscribers—why did he not advertise his plan openly, and give it publicity through the papers of the province, or in the American papers, if he rested so securely on the right which he wishes to persuade us he has through this fictitious M. P.? This was the best and most natural method of informing the public that a map was to be published for their benefit—yet this was not done. What will the discriminating Public say to this reading of the Gentleman's statement? Will they say that he has done away with the appearance of wilfulness on his part? Will they say that he has removed the stigma attached to him for the part he has taken in this affair? Or will they say that he has acted upon the plain principle of mine and thine, inculcated in us all from our infancy, and of which he cannot be supposed to be ignorant?—The construction they will put upon it is so obvious, and so plain, that the most unthinking person could not for a moment hesitate in coming to a conclusion

His openly saying, that His EXCELLENCY gave him a promise of Patronage, and then withdrew it, can hardly be believed—we all know His EXCELLENCY's love of justice too well to imagine for a moment that he would be influenced by the mere suggestions of any party.—Leaving it with you, Mr, Editor, and consequently with the Public,

I remain Yours, &c.

EDITORIAL COMMENTARY.

The last arrivals have brought us matter of the deepest and most lively interest—His MAJESTY's Speech, breathing the soundest political doctrine and truly British feeling, must be grateful to his loyal subjects in every part of his widely extended empire; and, what enhances the value of the royal, and ministerial, sentiment, thus so publicly announced, at a time when every thing valuable and dear to man in his civilized state through a large portion of Europe appears to be endangered—is that singular and delightful unanimity which seems to prevail between all parties in the House of Commons.—Thanks be to HIM that "ruleth among the nations" there is yet one powerful barrier against political despotism and religious intolerance remaining in Europe;—and long may the Divine blessing like the "day spring from on high" rest upon it—to the enlightening and protection of thousands—even to the uttermost parts of the earth!—

Amongst the interesting news received by the last mail none has been more truly grateful to us than the information, (which we believe to be authentic,) that the illustrious CAP. PARRY has achieved the greatest exploit ever contemplated by man—by circumnavigating the northern boundaries of this vast continent—at the same time that his own name is rendered immortal, another unfading triumph of perpetual glory is accorded to the Genius of Britain—the mistress of every sea—the daring explorer of every region.—

"O, Albion;—O, my country!—great and beautiful art thou amongst the nations!"

The important question of the "Union" is now at rest.—The abandonment of the measure, by Ministers, has been so far officially announced, that we cannot doubt the fact.—We may, however, expect to hear further particulars, as to the immediate causes of this abandonment, from the various agents of these Provinces at present in England—as soon as their reports can be received.—For our own parts we have very little doubt that the measure was proposed to, and pressed upon, Ministers—by a particular party who did not scruple to misrepresent the sentiments and opinions of the great majority of the people who are, without doubt, generally averse to the Union in both Provinces.—As to the policy or impolicy of the measure, it is very difficult, and at present useless, to come to any decision upon it.

Amongst other subjects of congratulation we have to announce one more immediately, concerning this promising country which is of vast importance, if properly attended to; and we do most sincerely hope that the facts alluded to will prove a new and strong excitement to the industry and skill of our farmers and millers. We have been favoured with the sight of an extract from a correspondence of the first respectability at Quebec which contains advices from the West Indies, stating, that the shipments of Upper Canadian Flour, which were made last season, have given entire satisfaction—after speaking of the quality in the highest terms, it is at last declared to be, in all respects, superior to any thing imported from the United States! The merchants, and farmers, and millers, of Upper Canada have now only to act in concert, and with proper spirit and enterprize in order to drive the Americans from the West India Market for ever!

Opening of the British Parliament.
SPEECH
OF THE LORDS COMMISSIONERS TO BOTH HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT,
On Tuesday, Feb. 4, 1823.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

We are commanded by His Majesty to inform you, that since he last met you in Parliament, his Majesty's efforts have been unremittingly exerted to preserve the peace of Europe.

Faithful to the principles which His Majesty has promulgated to the world, as constituting the rule of his conduct, His Majesty declined being party to any proceedings at Verona, which could be deemed an interference in the internal concerns of Spain, on the part of foreign powers; and His Majesty has since used, and continues to use, his most anxious endeavours and good offices to allay the irritation unhappily subsisting between the French and Spanish Governments, and to avert, if possible, the calamity of war between France and Spain.

In the East of Europe, His Majesty flatters himself that Peace will be preserved; and his Majesty continues to receive from his Allies, and generally from other Powers, assurances of their unaltered disposition to cultivate with His Majesty those friendly relations which it is equally his Majesty's object on his part to maintain.

We are further commanded to apprize you, that discussions having long been pending with the Court of Madrid respecting depredations committed on the commerce of His Majesty's subjects in the West Indian seas, and other grievances of which His Majesty has been under the necessity of complaining, those discussions have terminated in an admission by the Spanish Government, of the justice of His Majesty's complaints, and in an engagement for satisfactory reparation.

We are commanded to assure you, that His Majesty has not been unmindful of the Addresses presented to him by the two Houses of Parliament with respect to the Foreign Slave Trade. Propositions for the more effectual suppression of that evil were brought forward by His Majesty's Plenipotentiary in the conferences at Verona; and there have been added to the treaties upon this subject already concluded between His Majesty and the Governments of Spain and the Netherlands, articles which will extend the operation of those treaties, and greatly facilitate their execution.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

His Majesty has directed the estimates of the current year to be laid before you. They have been framed with every attention to economy; and the total expenditure will be found to be materially below that of last year.

This diminution of charge, combined with the progressive improvement of the revenue, has produced a surplus exceeding His Majesty's expectations; His Majesty trusts, therefore, that you will be able, after providing for the services of the year, and without affecting public credit, to make a further considerable reduction in the burthens of his people.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

His Majesty has commanded us to state to you, that the manifestations of loyalty and attachment to his person and government, which His Majesty received in his late visit to Scotland, have made the deepest impression upon his heart.

The provision which you made in the last session of Parliament for the relief of the distresses in considerable districts in Ireland, has been productive of the happiest effects; and His Majesty recommends to your consideration, such measures of internal regulation as may be calculated to promote and secure the tranquility of that country, and to improve the habits and condition of the people.

Deeply as His Majesty regrets the continued depression of the agricultural interest, the satisfaction with which His Majesty contemplates the increasing activity which pervades the manufacturing districts, and the flourishing condition of our commerce in most of its principal branches, is greatly enhanced by the confident persuasion that the progressive prosperity of so many of the interests of the country cannot fail to contribute to the gradual improvement of that great interest, which is the most important of them all.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.
HOUSE OF LORDS—Feb. 4.

HIS MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

The Earl of Mosley rose to move the address, in doing which, his Lordship delivered a handsome comment and explanation on each of the heads of the Speech On the subject of Ireland, his Lordship remarked, that many painful discussions had taken place in that House, respecting the unhappy situation of Ireland, and the disturbances that had so long prevailed there But he now hoped they would follow up the auspicious recommendation of their Sovereign, and turn their serious attention to the state of Ireland, with a view of correcting its evils Those evils must be probed to the bottom—(Hear, hear)—and it would be the duty of all their Lordships, to co operate with the benevolent wishes of their Sovereign in correcting the state of that country. He wished that those landed proprietors of Ireland, who had so long absented themselves, would return to their country and assist in promoting the objects of the government. (Hear, hear) He did not mean to make any allusion to those who came here to attend their duty in Parliament; but it was notorious that a large class of persons had been habitual absentees from their estates in Ireland, and that no small share of the grievances by which Ireland had been afflicted arose from their absence. He therefore hoped they would go back, and by their presence and example assist in bringing about an ameliorated state of things in that country.

The Marquis of Lansdown delivered a very able and energetic speech on the affairs of France and Spain, condemning in the strongest terms the conduct of France and the allied Sovereigns; and invoking the genius of British liberty, the origin, spirit, and character of our institutions, and our people, to assist the Spaniards if war took place.

The Earl of Liverpool said, that it was the object of His Majesty's Ministers, in the speech which had been submitted to the House, to insure unanimity from all parties—unanimity particularly on the subject to which the Noble Marquis had alluded.

The policy of the British Government was influenced, with regard to Spain, by the principle of non interference with the internal regulation of any State, and that it should let every country judge for itself how it should be governed. This policy was particularly acted upon in the present instance, as the misunderstand and this fatherly, safety on the property of the case itself, without any reference to a note addressed by the government on a former occasion to Verona. (Hear, Hear!) His Majesty's Ministers were explicit on the neutrality which they had recommended with respect to Spain; and a Noble Baron opposite had declared that he was satisfied with the explanation which was given by himself on that head.—The Duke of Buccleugh, who was the question as one regarding Spain; as one purely Spanish, and not to be mixed up with considerations of the policy of any other country. (Hear!) The Constitution was a compact the Spanish nation and its King agreed to in a time of war, and since acted upon. If that Constitution wanted correction, it was within the power of the legal Sovereign, and the representatives of the nation, to effect it. (Hear!)—Conversion only should be made, and not abrogation enforced. (Hear!) Whatever shades of necessity for interference, open or concealed, might be applied to other countries, none of them could be with propriety applied to Spain. Those who have taken the lead in that nation, have not attempted to push their principles into other countries. They have remained watchful of their own interests, anxious to preserve their own Constitution, but not seeking to dictate to the people of other countries or intimidate the subjects of other Sovereigns. Above all, their conduct deserved approbation, if it were contrasted with the steps pursued in other countries, where revolution was attended by horror and afflicting evils. If any disapprobation could attend the mode in which the people of Spain advanced their objects, this at least should be admitted, that their steps were not tainted by crime or violence. (Hear, hear!) With these considerations there could be no doubt as to the wisdom of the policy of the British Government, and that a strict neutrality should be preserved, even if the question was viewed as one of justice only. But when regarded as one of expediency, it surely was the wisest course to keep this country in a position to act as a mediator, and without shrinking from the avowal of the principles on which it acted, to be in a state to arrest the threatened evils, and, if possible to prevent hostilities. (Hear, Hear!) His (Lord Liverpool) trusted, that he had spoken satisfactorily with respect to the question of war itself; and, he would add, with respect to the injustice of that war. He trusted that he had expressed himself both explicitly and satisfactorily on the impolicy, and the evident injustice of such a war, as affecting interests and results to which he looked.—He could assure the noble lord, with an anxiety, perhaps greater than ever that which the Noble Lord himself felt) arising from causes that must be sufficiently evident to all who heard him (Hear, Hear!)—he looked to the effect of such a war, not upon Spain herself only, but upon France also; and through France upon the whole of Europe. (Hear, Hear!) Much as he dreaded the war as affecting Spain, he would fairly confess that he dreaded it still more, looking to its possible future consequences, as they must affect France. (Hear, Hear.) With respect to the question generally, there was no man, he was persuaded, in the kingdom, who, under the circumstances in which we were placed, would not feel that the policy of this country was neutrality. (Hear, Hear.) But while he (Lord Liverpool,) said this, he would never at the same time follow up the idea, come it from whom it might, that if a case arose of imminent danger and of indispensable necessity, this country was not in a state herself to undertake a war. (Hear, Hear!)

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Feb. 4.

In the House of Commons, the address was moved by Mr. L. Childe, and seconded by Mr. Wildman, and was carried unanimously.

In the debate on this subject, Sir J. Yorke expressed his approbation of the address. It was not alone (he said) in favour of the principles avowed in the speech of his Majesty, as regulating the conduct of his government with foreign powers, that he would now raise his voice; but he was delighted to find that they were now going back to those old original principles which had been once the boast of England. He found from the speech of his Majesty, that his representative at Verona had declined being a party to any proceedings which could be deemed an interference with the internal concerns of Spain. It was the duty of every representative to preserve the peace. That he felt to be his duty.—They ought to do more; they ought to raise their voice against any attempt to regulate the internal concerns of the Spanish nation; for in his mind a more outrageous act of violence against a great and powerful nation was never committed.—(Much cheering.) It was fresh in the recollection of every person that it was by the gallant exertions of the noble Spaniards that the Bourbons were placed on the throne of France, and restored to possession of that sovereignty from which they were about to precipitate themselves by their own temerity (Hear, hear!) Was it possible that this country could remain an indifferent spectator after a gun had been once fired on the other side of the Bidassoa?—Could a country like this, sensitive as it was in every point of its commerce, hold a neutral position, when so many of its interests would be exposed to danger in the event of such a war as that which was likely to take place? He did not think it possible for England whose commerce extended from pole to pole, and would consequently be seriously affected by a contest which might involve Europe in another war, to refrain from taking a part in it. In no case could she enter into a contest with more credit to herself than in supporting the liberty and independence of Spain against the unjust and outrageous attack of France. There was not a bosom in this quarter which was not filled with abhorrence and detestation at so unprincipled an attack on the right which another country had to frame its own government. The gallant member concluded by saying that he was firmly of opinion, that in the event of a war, this country could not remain neutral. (To be continued.)

SPAIN.

Answer of the King to the Message of the Cortes.

MADRID, Jan. 19, 1823.

The following is the answer of his Majesty, the King of Spain, to the Message of the Cortes.

"Messieurs Deputies,

I have received with lively satisfaction the Message which the Extraordinary Cortes addressed to me on the 11th inst. and perceiving in it the conformity of their sentiments with my own, I, anew, congratulate myself upon being placed at the head of a nation which so many qualities distinguish. The sentiments of honour and national independence, so profoundly rooted in the hearts of Spaniards, offer me the securest guarantee that the existing political institutions—the object of their predilections, will continue unalterable, notwithstanding the efforts of their most violent enemies; how in this respect, can I entertain the slightest doubt, when I am witness of the effusion of the patriotic sentiments and generous resolutions which will render the sittings of the National Congress on the 9th and 11th of this month eternally memorable? Those days have shewn, gentlemen, what a nation is capable of when the conformity of elevated sentiments give so generous an impulsion to confidence. They are the most positive and most eloquent answers to the calumnious imputations with which the communications of Foreign Cabinets are filled, and which have excited the surprise and indignation of the Extraordinary Cortes. Nations will at once see the free manifestation of my sentiments and principles; they will be convinced that the constitutional King of Spains enjoys the free exercise of all rights vested in him by the fundamental code; they will form an exact idea of the true origin of the disorders which afflict the country, and must affect France.

The sacrifices which under these circumstances, the honour and independence of the state require, will be great; but nothing is considered too great a sacrifice by a nation habituated to suffer, and to hear no other cry than that of liberty and honour. For myself, convinced more and more of the imperious necessity that all the children of this great family should assemble round the Constitutional Throne, I will steadily follow the route which my duty prescribes to me; and if the spectacle of a nation destined to defend her independence and laws do not restrain those who meditate to invade her, I will place myself at her head, certain of victory in the most just of causes, which is at the same time that of all the free nations of the earth.

(Signed) "FERDINAND."

"At the Palace, January 11, 1823."

In the sitting of the Cortes of the 15th, it was resolved THAT THE KING SHOULD REPAIR TO CORUNNA, and on the 16th, His Majesty with the royal family, was to set out for that place.

BOSTON, March 31.

LATEST FROM GIBRALTAR

By the Brig Jew, Captain Doane, which arrived at this port yesterday, we received files of Gibraltar papers, and prices current, to the 19th February. The papers contain numerous accounts of the unsettled state of Spain. We extract the following articles, which relate to the war between France and Spain.

At the request of the Government, the Spanish Cortes voted, on the 6th inst. 30,000 additional men to put the army on the War Establishment, (124,579 men,) with strict injunctions to the Provincial Deputations, to see them raised, dressed and armed, within the precise term of one month, and empowering them to supply to this object whatever public monies they can lay hold of.—They also authorized Government to dispose of the Active Militia; to employ such men as have served their time in the latter, if they volunteer their services, and also those who have served in regular corps, whether native or foreigners; to enlist foreigners, although they never served, if they think they can be trusted; to introduce into the kingdom arms, ammunition, and warlike stores of every description; and, lastly, to build, purchase or embargo as much craft as may be required to fit out, for the present, 150 gun vessels for the protection of the Spanish coast, granting, at the same time, 3500 sailors to man them.

His Catholic Majesty has confirmed General Mina in the command of the Army of Operations in the 3th Military District, (Catalonia;) appointed General Ballesteros to that of the armies in the 5th and 6th Districts, (Arragon and Navarre;) and ordered an army of reserve to be assembled in the (province of Madrid,) which will be commanded by Count Abisbal.—These officers will at the same time be commandants General of those four districts.

The Spanish Cortes have empowered Government to admit produce in payment of the arrears of taxes, for the purpose of victualling the fortresses and other places where magazines are to be established; to use all legal means (distress included) to enforce the payment of the taxes in future, and to collect, by anticipation, those which will become due on the 30th of June next.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTICES.

Mr. Huskisson has been returned to the House of Commons from Liverpool.

Mr. Vansittart has been promoted to the peerage, under the title of Lord Bexley. Mr. F. Robinson is his successor in office.

Political strength of England.—At a dinner given at the termination of the Norwich election, Mr. Canning was in the chair. When he was toasted, he delivered a speech, in which he observed, that he was determined to support the most liberal principles, and was proud in stating, that the nation was never more able to support them in the event of her being compelled to take up arms.

Horrible.—A shocking catastrophe has occurred at the Theatre Royal, Newcastle. While playing "Tom and Jerry," a false alarm of fire was given, and such was the rush to leave the theatre, that seven persons were killed, and many injured.

Well done cock and bushin!—It is said that one of the most esteemed actors of the day is shortly to turn the tables upon the nobility who have chosen partners from the theatre, by leading to the altar a lady of nearly the highest rank among subjects, with a fortune commensurate with her station.

Captain Parry and the North West Expedition.

HIGHLY INTERESTING AND IMPORTANT.

Captain Parry's Expedition.—The following paragraph, if true, is more important than any other item that has met our view. "Information has reached the Admiralty from Russia, stating that our navigators had accomplished the object of their voyage, the ships having been spoken off Icy Cape, by several vessels belonging to Kamptschatka. If this be correct, the great geographical problem is solved, and probably our bold navigators are now on their way home, by way of the pacific ocean." This we copy from the Southampton Chronicle, of the 28th—the latest paper received.

Mr. Comp'y. Gen'l. Turquand.—The numerous friends of Mr. Commissary General Turquand will be gratified in learning that gentleman's safe arrival at New York, on his way to this City to take charge of the Commissariat Department in the Canadas.—Quebec paper.

Just as this Supplement was going to Press we received contradictory news relative to the Union, which it is now said from respectable authority in Montreal "is to take place." Mr. Wilmot's being declared to Mr Stuart, such to be the determination of Ministers!

[illegible] INTELLIGENCE.

YESTERDAY being St. GEORGE'S day, the York Militia were paraded, and went through their various evolutions in honor of His Most Gracious Majesty's birth day, with great credit to themselves.

Mr. SMITH'S second letter on the subject of his MAP has been received; but, being lengthy, it came too late for insertion this week.—The Communication of HIBERNICUS is likewise postponed from necessity.

We are obliged to Mr. Burwell for his letter on the manufacture of Maple Sugar, as it will be of use to many of our country friends who are inexperienced in the very useful practice recommended. The samples which have been sent to us are the fairest, and most beautiful, we have ever seen, and shew the high state of perfection to which the LEMLEYS have brought this important species of domestic manufacture.

We have the pleasure of presenting our readers with a short digest of the latest and most interesting news from Europe.

VERY LATE FROM EUROPE.

War had not yet commenced between France and Spain. In a late debate in the House of Commons, Mr. CANNING said "the hopes of preventing peace between those powers, were materially diminished, but not DESTROYED."

It is said that France has informed the British Minister at Paris, that his further attempts to mediate between the French and Spanish Governments, would be unavailing.

The fleet from Brest had sailed, and it was reported they were destined against Cadiz.

Disaffection has appeared among the French troops on the Spanish frontier.

The Spanish Cortes are said to have granted letters of marque against French vessels—and 40 commissions had been taken.

LONDON, March 4.

There having been no political news since Saturday, the funds have advanced 1 1-2 per cent. Consols to day are 78 1-8. All Foreign securities are steady—Spanish, 30.

The exportation of munitions of war to Spain and her dependencies, is permitted in England. France is fitting out several squadrons for sea.

Two vessels are said to have sailed from England to Spain, with arms and ammunition.

Besides allowing arms to be exported to Spain—it is proposed in England to permit enlistments for her service.

Paris, February 25.

News from Madrid of the 16th has been this day received by an extraordinary channel. The Cortes under the fear of a war, have offered a full and entire amnesty to all the Royalists who have arms in their hands. General Morillo is to command the army of reserve of Andalusia. If the King is removed to Seville.

Portsmouth, March 1.

We hear that Lord Exmouth has offered his services to command a small squadron of observation which is to be fitted out in case of hostilities between France and Spain—Recruiting parties have been sent out to complete the corps of marines to the number voted by the House of Commons; about 700 will be required for this purpose.

In the House of Commons, on the 3d, the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed his resolutions respecting the establishing of a new Sinking Fund of 5,000,000. After a long debate the Committee divided on a motion, of Mr. Tierney to alter the sum to 2,000,000, which was lost, and the resolutions were adopted.

The London Gazette contains an order in Council of Feb 21, revoking a former order which prohibited for six months, the transportation of arms and ammunition to Spain, Africa, or the West Indies.

The revenue of England last year, was 54,414,630l. sterling leaving, after the current expenses, a surplus of 4,965,518l.

The report of the Passage of Capt. Parry, into the Pacific ocean is contradicted.

It was believed at Madrid on the 23d Feb. that the King of Spain would be sent to Corunna or Cadiz, for safety.

An attempt had been made to set fire to the Powder Magazine at Seville, but was discovered in season to prevent the explosion, and the conspirators, (the guards.)

The Spanish Ambassador in London had contracted with one manufacturer alone for twenty thousand barrels of gunpowder, to be shipped with the least possible delay. A vessel had sailed for Cronnon with five thousand stand of arms, being the second export of arms for Spain.

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

New York, March 29.

Mexico.—We learn, by advices from Mexico, that the arrangement which has taken place between Yturbide and the Congress, is not as favorable to the cause of the mushroom emperor as was anticipated. He retains the name, and the insignia of royalty; but every thing real and substantial, respecting the Government, is transferred to the Congress.

Indians in Mexico.—A report lately made by a Committee of Congress gives the following account of the condition of the Indians in Mexico:—

"The Revolutionary Government, immediately on its installation, released them from the service of the militia, (personal service in the mines,) which was the most obnoxious to them. The tribute was continued from necessity, as it afforded a revenue which could not be relinquished at that period. In 1814, they were relieved from the payment of the tribute, and took an active part in favour of the Creoles. The first step of the Independent Government of Mexico, was to remove all the restrictive regulations by which the Indians were kept in a state of minority and pupilage; and to the honour of that government, they now enjoy all the rights and immunities of other citizens. About nine tenths of the inhabitants of those provinces are said to be Indians and castes; and it appears, that within the last fifty years, instead of diminishing, they have increased in numbers, notwithstanding the injuries they have sustained.

Irish Pig Merchant.—An Irish pig merchant, who had more money in his pocket than his ragged appearance denoted, took an inside passage in one of our stage coaches during the late severe frost. A dandy, of the first order, who was a fellow passenger, was evidently annoyed by the presence of Pat; and having missed his handkerchief, tasked him with having picked his pocket, threatening to have him taken before a magistrate of the next stage. Before they arrived there however, the exquisite found his handkerchief, which he had deposited in his hat.—He made a very awkward kind of an apology upon the occasion; but Pat stopped him short, with this remark, "Make yourself easy, my honey; there's no occasion for any bother about the matter. You took me for a thief; and I took you for a gentleman; and we were both mistaken,—that's all my honey."—Liv. Mercury.

Singular Fact.—Such is the singular state of things, that wheat has been imported from England into the United States, at a profit for six months past. Neither American nor English gold, bears a premium now with exchange in the New York market.

English gold, however, bears a premium, on the British par value, of about five per cent.

Mines of Lake Superior.—It is said that the Copper and Iron, known to abound on the borders of Lake Superior, the Detroit Gazette says, from the mountainous and rugged character of the country, we are warranted in the belief that its other metallic resources are equally important. Indeed it is a matter of historical record that silver ore, of a very productive quality, has been found there. Many years since, a quantity of this ore was carried to London, which yielded seventy five in the hundred of pure silver.

Duelling.—Mr. Gough, in the Surry Assize Court at Kingston, Jamaica, found guilty of sending a challenge to Henry Lord Garrigues, was put at the side bar, and was sentenced to pay a fine of £40, and find security to keep the peace, himself in £100, and one surety in £50, and to stand committed till this fine be paid, and the security entered into.

Col. Gordon, for carrying the challenge, and posting Mr. Garrigues, was fined £30, and directed to find similar security.

The Sea Serpent again.—Captain Thomas, of the brig Abigail, arrived at Mobile, from New York, on the 25th Feb in lat. 29 41 lon 86 1-2, saw a fish judged to be between 50 and 60 feet in length—head as large as a long boat; body appeared to be full of joints; velocity estimated at 18 miles per hour. All on board had a distinct view of the monster.

Greeks.—The Greeks continue, with spirit, their war against the Turks. They have recently captured several valuable vessels bound to Constantinople.

Accounts from Smyrna to Dec. 19. The Turks were busy in adding to its fortifications for fear of an attack from the Greeks.

The Greeks have sent an Archbishop to Rome to negociate a union between the Greek and Catholic Churches.

Longevity of Orange Trees.—There is an orange tree, still living and vigorous, in the orangery at Versailles, which is well ascertained to be four hundred years old. It is designated the Bourbon, having belonged to the celebrated Constable of that name in the beginning of the 16th century, and was confiscated to the crown in 1522, at which time it was 100 years old. A crown is placed on its cuisse, with this inscription printed below. "Semé en 1421."

Extensive Insolvency.—We copy the following paragraph from the London Farmers' Journal of the 20th January last. It exhibits a state of things arising either from misfortune or fraud, which might be received with incredulity, if the information had been derived from any other source:—

"It appears from a report made by the House of Commons in May last, that fifteen thousand two hundred and forty-nine persons had been discharged from the Insolvent Debtors Court under the present Act, whose debts amounted to £11,000,000; and the whole proceeds paid into the Court was only £50,064, making a dividend of about five farthings in the pound!"

Spain.—We have translated the following extracts from a long, temperate and well written article on the state of the Spanish nation, published in the Madrid Universal of 1st February—

"The departure from Madrid of the Ministers of the three Powers, has not produced the least alteration in the public tranquility, nor caused the slightest agitation in the minds of the people; they have looked upon this event with as much indifference as if they had been simple individuals.

As to danger from abroad—if foreigners invade Spain, we will invade France; if they send against us 100,000 men, we will send 200,000 to meet them. If they succeed in the first onset in occupying some provinces, we understand well enough what must be done to dislodge them; if they persist in their designs, we will not be driven from ours and Spaniards need not fear that foreigners can overcome them in contancy. But it is said that the French are very rich and the Spaniards are poor, & this is precisely our advantage. No people ever preserved their liberties by mere dint of money; and if the Spaniards had been as rich, and as much accustomed to comforts and luxuries as the French, few of them would, on the approach of Napoleon, have abandoned their homes. We are indeed poor, but not so much so as our enemies suppose; and finally we are patient and enduring, and shall want neither bread nor steel."

The plan of voluntary enlistment for the defence of the country, which was proposed by the Constitutional Junta of Madrid, has been powerfully seconded by the government, and the whole body of citizens. All sorts of corporate bodies and individuals without number have crowded to offer their services, old men and young, and those of respectable families, were seen performing the duty of sentinels in the city; and at a single suggestion from the governor, the local national militia of Madrid was joined by the militia of the towns of the province, the city of Toledo, and many other places. The government made preparations for arming all the troops which it called out for its defence, the companies of its inspection and the alumni of the central university, and all were ready to fight in the defence of their country and liberty, their lives and fortunes.

Naval Geography.—Captain Smith, of His Majesty's ship Adventure, who has been employed for several years past, under the orders of the Lords of the Admiralty, in surveying several parts of the Mediterranean, has lately returned from an arduous survey of the coast of Africa. By this service, the hitherto unknown Gulph of Syrtis has been thoroughly explored, and the survey of the whole coast between Tripoli and Alexandria is now, for the first time, entirely completed.—In addition to the valuable hydrographical information acquired by this survey, the sites of numerous ancient cities and stations have been accurately determined, and such data obtained, as will throw very important elucidations on the writings of Herodotus, Scylax, Strabo, Leo, and Edrisi.

Freedom of the Press.—A meeting of Delegates from the States of Germany was to be held, to consider of restraints upon the Press.

HIGHLY IMPERTINENT FROM THE STATES

From the Baltimore Morning Chronicle.

"Rumours are afloat, and we fear more than rumours, that our government have received official information from our Ministers abroad, that it is the settled determination of the English ministry to take possession of the Island of Cuba. We know that the last despatches that were received, were enclosed in an envelope, endorsed very important intelligence. Two cabinet councils have been held since the reception of these despatches, and nothing has transpired since they have broke up. On this subject, the National Intelligencer preserves a guarded and ominous silence. Our government it is perfectly well known, would not suffer Cuba to pass under English jurisdiction, with the remark, who is ignorant of the fact, that the question has occupied two cabinet councils. We are perhaps nearer than many are aware, of being concerned, not as neutrals, but as parties in the ensuing contests of Europe. Is there any other question growing out of the present hostile attitude of Europe, that could so directly affect the interest of America? Cuba in the United States, immensely important, not only in its natural, but likewise in its political and commercial connexion with the country."

How modest, how unassuming, master Jonathan! but, in truth, Friend BULL wont ask thy consent, whether he takes possession of Cuba or not! However, we have no objection to this way of talking provided retaliation is allowed. The State of New York is "immensely important" to Canada "not only in its natural, but likewise in its political and commercial connection with the country"—and when the new canals are all finished—we hope "cabinet councils" will be held—and that the Yankees will not be suffered to hold that State any longer!—Ed

Daring Robbery.—A Robbery to a very large amount has been committed within these few days under singular circumstances, at Milton, Dorsetshire, the seat of Lady Caroline Damer. Her Ladyship is at present in London, and the Abbey has been for some time in care of a few servants. The strong room in which the family plate and other valuables has always been deposited was so constructed as to be supposed to be doubted to offer their services, old men and young, and those of respectable families, were seen performing the duty of sentinels in the city; and at a single suggestion from the governor, the local national militia of Madrid was joined by the militia of the towns of the province, the city of Toledo, and many other places. Unlucky Defiance.—General M'Clure, the hero of Niagara, who applied the torch to Newark, has published a letter in the Advocate of this morning, in which the Post, Commercial and Statesman, are hung up together as so many traitors during the late war. But the best of the joke is, the General justifies the burning of Newark, as an act of retaliation for burning the Capitol at Washington, when the fact is, that General M'Clure made his campaign in the autumn of 1813, and General Ross in the summer of 1814.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FEBRUARY 4.

Mr. Brougham said, he joined that gallant officer in expressing those feelings which he was sure beat in every English bosom—of unqualified detestation and abhorrence, which if qualified, could only be by a feeling of hatred, as of indignant contempt and disgust at the hypocritical language in which these atrocious principles have been promulgated to the world. He nevertheless approved of the examination used in the Speech, because it might not be prudent to speak more explicitly, and he complimented the mover and seconder of the address, for their manly comment on this subject. There should be but one feeling of reprobation excited against a bold civilized barbarism for having issued a Manifesto, by which he showed every disposition to reduce the rest of Europe to the same state of barbarism in which his own subjects were. It would bring down confusion on France, or rather that small portion of Frenchmen, who contemptible in force as they were in talents, having gained the ascendant over the throne and armed public, would attack our dearest ally, influenced by a base and selfish motive to put down an existing Government, under the false and prejudiced impression that it was incompatible with their peculiar views. Were it not for the extreme pressure of the calamities under which the country now labored, the proposal would indeed be more shocking, and England might stand forward in the defence of her ally without apprehending those consequences which would now be the result of a conflict with France, overwhelmed as she was with debt and taxation. Situated as England now was, he would advocate the necessity of her holding herself in such a position as might rather prevent than precipitate a war. He felt he was justified in so doing by the change of circumstances, without evincing himself to the charge of inconsistency. He then spoke again of the probability of a war, and recommended economy in every practicable way to our house establishments, because he judged it prudent to add something to our naval expenditure. It was necessary to observe, that the policy of this Government dictated a sacred duty towards other states, which were closely interwoven with the interests of this country. They were and by treaty, in the event of an attack upon their ally, Portugal, to protect her interests, and secure any attempt to interfere with her independence, while to avoid this ill-fated expedition against the liberty of Spain take place, would render the necessity of their taking a part in the contest so probable, that he was persuaded, in one week more, England would be dragged into it. He fervently hoped that Ministers had not used such language to the other powers as would induce them to think that this country could observe a strict neutrality, because such a plan would have been neither more nor less than to court all those to which every means should be taken to avoid. His trusted Government was sincere in its wishes towards Spain, because he was convinced that all would willingly, cheerfully, and joyfully co-operate with it in carrying those wishes into effect (Hear hear.) He therefore hoped that Ministers distinctly stated to the French Government their resolution in the event of a war to assist the Spaniards, because he was well aware, that such a resolution would be followed by measures likely to arrest those evils which all were of one mind in condemning.—With regard to the official notes of the allied powers, it must be seen that they were totally devoid of principle. It appeared, he said, admitting their most powerful conduct was right, that the cause of his Imperial Majesty had not been enlightened till within the last ten years, because [illegible] Ancient Majesty had ordered [illegible] directly with that Cortes, and with that very Constitution which his Imperial Majesty's enlightened reason has since taught him to condemn; for from 1812 to 1821 not a single iota of the former Constitution has been changed.—He then recognized the same Cortes, and condescended to give it that chosen epithet, 'legitimate,' the name which they go by themselves, and yet this Cortes they now declare to be the grand cause of this outcry. What, he would ask, was the grand cause of this crusade against Spain? Why, it was the legitimate attempt of the people to recover their lost rights. The army has overthrown the despotism which mutiny had established, and it reflected the security of our own dominions; it swelled a shout at the honor and security of Great Britain. (Hear, hear!)

—INDEX AT FRONT.

("Prairie Dogs.")

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir, ,

Observing the inclosed notice in several of the American papers, and being fond of Natural History in all its departments, I shall be much obliged to any of your numerous Correspondents for such further particulars respecting this apparently non-descript animal, as it may be in their power to give.

I remain, Sir,
Yours, &c.
AN ENQUIRER.

Prairie Dogs—The Rev. Samuel Giddings, Methodist Missionary of St. Louis, who took a tour among the Western Indians last spring and summer, gives the following account, in his journal of these singular animals:

'June 14, 1822.—We passed a village of barking squirrels, or prairie dogs. They have the appearance of the grey squirrel in colour and shape, but they are three times as large. Their noise exactly resembles that of the smaller kind of dogs. They burrow in the earth, and are never seen far from their habitation. They live on grass and herbage; and not a spear of grass is suffered to grow within the bounds of their village. On the first appearance of danger, they flee to the mouth of their burrow, and when it comes near, they enter, and can rarely be driven out by smoke or water. Thousands dwell in the same village, forming a little community. Their burrows are from ten to twenty feet apart, with a mound of dirt at the entrance, of from one to two feet in height, which serves as a watch-tower. On the approach of danger, they raise an incessant barking. We were much annoyed during the night by the barking of these animals.'

Mr. Fothergill,

Aware of the pleasure you manifest on all occasions, in giving, through the medium of your excellent paper, publicity to every thing relative to our domestic manufactures, I take the liberty of enclosing to you two small samples of maple sugar, made this season in our vicinity, and requesting that you will please give this an insertion in the Weekly Register.

The fair sample is the produce of the early part of the season; the other, near the close. It was made by Mr. John Lumley, a native of Yorkshire, England, who, with his numerous family, is famous for the manufacture of that almost indispensible article of living.

Mr. Lumley's mode of manufacture is worthy of imitation. He provides a rough made bucket for every tree—cost about 1s. c'y. each; by which means, all the produce of the tree is saved in the cleanest manner. His store-tubs are also made of staves, containing from 100 to 250 gallons each, as may be most convenient, with which he takes care to be well supplied. He boils in broad shallow kettles, and converts daily the syrup into sugar, [illegible] over-boiling, as he can [illegible] herewith.—When the season is over, he scalds out his buckets and tubs with hot water, and packs them away under shelter, until again wanted.

In the spring of 1821, the different members of his family manufactured rising of 6,700 pounds of maple sugar, equal in quality to a medium of the two samples I send you. One of them, who had only 90 trees boxed, obtained from them 300 lbs. of sugar, besides making some molasses and a barrel of vinegar. This year has not been so productive by nearly one half; yet they have made from 6 to 7 and 800lbs each.

Poetry.

The following lines by Barnard Barton, on the death of a Youth of great promise, will remind the admirers of Cowper of some of that author's smaller pieces.

"We had hopes it was pleasure to nourish,
(Then how shall our sorrows be mute?)
That those bright buds of grace would flourish,
And burst into blossoms and fruit.

But our hopes and our prospects are shaded;
For the plant which inspir'd them hath shed
Its foliage, all green and unfaded,
Ere the beauty of spring time hath fled.

Like foam on the crest of the billow,
Which sparkles, and sinks from the sight;
Like leaf of the wind-shaken willow,
Though transiently, beauteously bright:—

Like dew drops, exhal'd as they glisten;
Like perfume, which dies soon as shed;
Like melody, hush'd while we listen—
Is memory's dream of the dead."

A DESPATCH,

Of which the following is an Extract, has been received from His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, by the Lieutenant Governor.

(COPY.)

Downing Street London,
13th. January 1823.

Sir,

I am commanded by the King to acquaint you, that, with a view to the relief of those of His Majesty's Canadian Subjects who suffered from the Calamities of the late War with the United States of America, it has been determined to order an immediate payment, at the rate of five shillings in the pound, on account of the losses sustained, by individuals in Upper Canada, according to the valuation made by the first Commission, it being assumed by His Majesty's Government, that no Claim is likely to be so much reduced in its revision as to render it imprudent to anticipate by this partial payment the more deliberate investigation directed to be made under the second Commission.

If, however, it should have been already directed by that Commission, or if it should be known to you that any Claim which has been unworably reported upon, ought to have been totally rejected, you will feel it your duty to direct the payment in respect of such claim to be suspended, until an opportunity has been afforded for its revision.

I have only further to desire, that you will make His Majesty's gracious intentions to be made known in the Province; and, as soon as the mode of payment can be arranged with the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, you will receive more particular instructions for your guidance.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most Obedient Humble Servant,
(Signed) BATHURST.

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

On Wednesday the 23d. instant, being the day appointed for the celebration of His MAJESTY's birth, His Excellency the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, accompanied by his Staff, inspected the 2nd. regiment of Lincoln Militia, and r the command of the Hon. COL. CLARK, at Stamford; and, afterwards the 3d. regiment of Lincoln, under COL. WARREN, at Chippewa; and we understand His Excellency was pleased to express his approbation of the appearance of the respective corps.

In a Speech, to which it seems scarcely possible to do sufficient justice, (whether we consider the tone of its eloquence, the comprehensiveness of its views, the accuracy of its detail, the soundness of its reasoning, and the intimate knowledge of the affairs of England which it throughout displays,) Mr. ROBINSON, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, has shewn, that the clear surplus revenue of Great Britain, for the last year, was £4.965 519; and, that the surplus revenue for the present year may be taken at £7.244,202, of which sum, five millions are to be formed into a sinking fund for the further reduction of the National Debt, and, upwards of Two Millions to be applied to the remission of Taxes. The present actual receipt of the public revenue of GREAT BRITAIN is stated to be the enormous sum of £52,200,000! Such an exposition of the circumstances of our beloved country, after the unexampled contest in which she has been for so many years engaged, not only proves the depth of her resources, and the elasticity of her energies, but it shews that she has been contending in a good cause, and that the blessings of God are upon her labours: for, "the Earth is the LORD's, and the fullness thereof!" The spectacle which is at this moment exhibited by England is sublime,—glorious, and resplendent, beyond all former example,—and shews what results to nations, as well as to individuals, by a strict regard to moral rectitude;—a persevering intrepidity in the dark and tedious hour of danger; and, above all, by a faithful observance of those nicer feelings and distinctions which the civilized world has agreed to identify and symbolize in the word HONOR;—a word that many, especially in this new world, would fain imagine to express a bubble, or a yet more nameless thing, but which does in fact comprehend, and denote, every virtue and high quality that can adorn, or dignify the human race.

Nothing can more clearly evince the paternal solicitude and justice of Great Britain towards these her dependencies than the attention which she has paid to the sufferers during the late war with the United States, even before the Commissioners have finally determined upon the equity of the claims—The Dispatch on this subject, which is published in the Gazette of to day, must be read with peculiar interest by numerous individuals of this Province, who will have reason to rejoice in a determination so honorable to the Crown's Servants, as [illegible] cannot fail to produce a most favourable excitement throughout the Province by the immediate distribution of so considerable a sum as Fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling! For our own parts, we rejoice that it falls amongst a numerous class of brave, and estimable, and loyal subjects.

We are happy to learn that our LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has received a Despatch from the Colonial Department at home of similar import with that communicated to the Governor in Chief, and which was lately made public, on the subject of the Union; which, it seems, is for the present absolutely abandoned by Ministers.—We say happily, because we are satisfied that however beneficial such a measure may prove hereafter, this is not the time to carry it into effect.

Had we not determined from the first upon a line of the strictest impartiality, in all disputes of a private or party nature, —and resolved to administer justice, without regard to persons, whenever it was asked at our hands—we should have declined publishing the letter of HIBERNICUS, which appears in this day's paper. We have often declared our strong aversion to party distinctions of all sorts; and, being fully convinced that the best way of destroying them is to avoid fomenting, and sometimes even noticing, the passions, and follies, and prejudices, from which they spring, we take this opportunity of assuring the contending parties on the present occasion, that we must forbear inserting any further communications of a similar nature, since we cannot think of making the "WEEKLY REGISTER" a vehicle of party spirit or contention, and of mutual recrimination. Having published the "Protestant's" epistle, it might have worn the appearance of injustice, and of a leaning to party, had we refused the letter of "Hibernicus." This day's publication will, we hope, acquit us of all participation in feelings and distinctions we have for a moment been obliged to contemplate, but not to admit.

Much of what has been just written applies also to another domestic affair that has given us no small degree of pain.—We allude to the controversy in which Mr. SMITH has precipitated himself on the subject of his Map.—Having already published an ample statement of the case on both sides, the question of right must be placed with sufficient strength and fairness before that tribunal whose privilege it is to decide; after mature deliberation, therefore, we find ourselves obliged to decline bringing Mr. SMITH's second letter before the Public; and, after what has been said, we think he ought not to censure such a determination.—Before we finally dismiss this controversy, however, justice demands that we should make one comment on what has passed —Being assured that His Excellency the LIEUT. GOVERNOR, is far above even the suspicion of an act of injustice, and utterly incapable of holding out a single fallacious hope to any individual no matter his station, or process, we entertained doubts, at the time, as to the accuracy of one part of Mr. SMITH's statement which nearly amounted to conviction;—but, not having an opportunity of ascertaining the fact at that time, we could not presume positively to deny it—this was the inference (or as some will have it, the assertion) that the patronage of Government had been promised to Mr S but was afterwards withdrawn.—We are now authorized to state, in the most decided manner, that no such patronage was ever either given, or promised.

Skeleton of a Rhinoceros.—The skeleton of a Rhinoceros was discovered a short time ago, by some miners in search of lead ore, ninety feet below the surface of the earth. In the neighbourhood of Wicksworth, in what is called diluvian soil The bones are in a perfect state, and the enamel of the teeth uninjured

Deep Snow in England.—On Wednesday week, the fall of snow was greater than was ever remembered by the oldest inhabitant at Tronnisle, in the parish of Bronpion near York; and we are sorry to state, that a man, his wife, and three children, who lived in a cottage adjoining the road, which had been nearly six hours, covered with snow, by its drifting, when found by their neighbours, were dead, clasped to each other's arms.

The snow has been so deep in the County of Durham, that a road was actually cut through a drifted pile of 40 feet high, leaving an archway so that the mail passed under it.

Stealing of Dead Bodies.—The following plan for preventing the stealing of dead bodies, is taken from Medical Gazette.—"As soon as the Corpse is deposited, let a truss of long Wooden straw be opened, and, distributed in the Grave in layers, as equally as may be, with every layer of earth, till the whole is filled up. By this method the corpse will be effectually secured, as may be found by experience; for it is certain that the longest night will not afford sufficient time to empty the grave, although the common implements of grave digging be made use of for the purpose.—Inverness Courier.

General Steam Vessel Company. On the 15th of February, there was a meeting at the London Tavern, of a number of Gentlemen who have associated under the name of the General Steam Vessel Company. They are to have a capital of £200,000 sterling, in 4000 shares, to build or purchase Twenty-four Steam Vessels, each of eighty horse power, and to be employed to and from London, and various ports on the Continent and Peninsula

Germany.—The Review said Wurtemburch, the Press, the Deliberative Assemblies, and the publishing of Debates, are to be put down.

Parliamentary Bull. On account of the great number of suicides, a member of the House of Commons moved for leave to bring in a Bill, to make it a capital offence [This reminds us of an opinion given by a young limb of the law, some years since, and about the time that the state prisons were erected—in answer to the question, what should be the punishment for suicide? Answered—Imprisonment for life.]

Emperor Iturbide.—News from Mexico about March 1st states, that many towns had declared for the liberal government; and General Rivavera was marching on Mexico to besiege Emperor Iturbide, whose reign is near an end.

BRITISH FINANCES.

In the House of Commons the Chancellor of the Exchequer made a statement of the finances of the country. He calculated that there would be a surplus of revenue in the ensuing year of seven millions two hundred and forty four thousand pounds sterling. He proposed that five millions be appropriated to the reduction of the national debt, and that the taxes be reduced two millions.

At the conclusion of this speech, which was heard with the utmost attention throughout, a general burst of applause proceeded from every part of the House, and extended to the gallery where the clapping of hands was only restrained by the interference of the officers

Mr. Maberly read the resolutions he intended to propose to the House, for the abolition of the Sinking Fund, and to apply the five millions to a further remission of taxation.—Mr. Ricardo made a few observations on the same subject.

Mr. Baring spoke in favour of a Sinking Fund. Several Members of the opposition eulogized the brilliant, luminous arrangement and good feeling which pervaded the speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer Lord Milton said, that he could not but congratulate the House and the Country upon the spirit that had been manifested by the new Government. He could tell it, since there was an evident change in all its feelings, and even in all its modes of dealing with important public questions.

The reductions proposed are as follows:

Male servants occasionally employed in trade,	37,208

In the House of Commons of the 25th of February, Mr. Hume, the great Parliamentary Œconomist, proposed that in order to rid the Parent Country of the Expences which were annually drawn from it, to support the Public establishments in this Country; and from the expences which she must necessarily be under in defending Canada, should another War be commenced between Great Britain and the United States, that Canada should be permitted to govern, support, and maintain it-self, be severed from England entirely and totally independent either of her or troul or assistance. By this event, the Honorable Gentleman said England would be a gainer of half a million per year, besides the advantage she would reap from a commercial intercourse, which he affirm would be considerably superior to what it could be when under the dominion of England

As a proof of the latter stateme t, he instances the United States, and declares that it is "notorious that America, since her separation, had been a greater consumer of our manufactures than she had, or could have been during her dependence on this country "—This novel motion of Mr. Hume's we do not pretend to justify, although there may appear much plausibility in his mode of reasoning. That Canada has been an enormous expense to England, since the conquest in 1759, no person can deny, and that there are many reasons to sanction the belief that she will continue to be charged with a large yearly expenditure on account of Canada, we fear all can doubt—yet the ministers are not prepared in the present instance to adopt the whole of Mr. Hume's motion, and therefore, as extraordinary assurances given to him by Mr. Wynne, Mr. Hume said he had "no objection to withdraw his motion."

PARIS, Feb. 26.—(Extract of a private letter.)—"Being in the anti-room of the Chamber of Deputies this day, I had, you know, a full view of each member, the tribune being exactly in front of me. So anxious were the Cote droit for some excuse to annoy and attack Manuel, that they interrupted him a dozen times in the middle of his sentences You must have an idea of the provoking coolness with which (when calm was restored) he always took up his speech precisely at the place where he had left off, and concluded his sentences in a manner very different from the anticipated meanings given to them by his opponents. But when he came to that passage alluding to the death of Louis XVI and the tendency of which was to show, that "that event necessarily resulted from foreign interference," great tumult ensued. Hyde de Neuville sprang from his place—flew up the steps to the tribune, and would have torn Manuel from it, but the latter prevented such an outrage by stepping on one side. The outcries against Manuel were deafening—the rage of the cote droit must have been extreme I saw their menacing gestures, but unfortunately lost the purport of their features, their faces being turned to the tribune —During this scene, Manuel stood with his arms folded—with an imperturbable sang froid, from which he only departed when the cries became more than extraordinarily loud, in order to ascertain, by the assistance of his glass, from what individuals they proceeded. Think not that the cote gauche was either passive or silent;—turning to the cote droit, little —— —— with all the scream of tone and manner which distinguishes him, said—"Yes, ye saints [—] Pharisees ye have read your Bibles to some purpo—se read your garments, and ye cry out 'cruelly him' without listening to his justification!" However disagreeable this may appear, it had partly the effect intended by ——— for it redoubled the fury of the party to whom it was addressed, but it failed to produce that which I knew he sought for—an obtrusive gesture or personal reply from the —— of ——— The noise and confusion became so great, that the President was obliged to suspend the sitting without having been able to procure for Manuel the hearing of his explanation and defence, which I am assured would be found in the termination of the tumultuous scene, one half of which had only been uttered."

PARIS, Feb 27.—Thursday Evening, seven o'clock

"We are all full of reports here—one more absurd than the other. The main asserts, that war is still uncertain—another that the Ministry are to be immediately changed—but why, no one can say.—They are in full possession of the confidence of the Sovereign and their majority in the Chambers increases daily. The liberal party in the Chamber of Deputies are making every effort to render the war unpopular. But the scene that occupied yesterday in the Chambers is likely to render them unpopular among all well thinking persons

"It is probable that the fermentation in the Chamber of Deputies will accelerate the departure of the Duke D'Angoulême, and induce the Government to move the army forthwith.

"There was a meeting last night at a leading Opposition Member's. It was proposed, if Manuel should be expelled the Chamber, that the party should all secede. But this was negatived——"

SPAIN.—The London Courier of the 3d ult. gives important news from Madrid of the 21st of Feb. The king of Spain, after dismissing his ministers, was compelled, by the influence of the mob at Madrid, to reinstate them, who surrounded the palace, uttering the most sanguinary threats against the monarch, because he had presumed to exercise one of the simplest acts of the royal prefogative. The national militia were on guard at the palace, dispersed the mob, and saved the king's life "Who, says the editor of the Courier, will now say that the king of Spain is free? How long will it be, before the resemblance is complete between the Spanish and the French revolution? a resemblance, which, it seems, should be smited for ere these measures are adopted that would prevent the completion of the frightful counterpart.

The session of the extraordinary cortes closed on the 19th of Feb. The Speech which was delivered in the name of the king, it would, says the Courier, be an insult to common sense, to consider as declaratory of his sentiments. It spoke, indeed, the sentments of the ministers—the ministers of the cortes—the ministers of the communero —but, not the ministers of Ferdinand—and of course, it approved of all that had been done by themselves. The crisis is manifestly at hand, and the next news will be highly important.

[The speech of the king, on closing the extra session, remark, that the interruptions it had experienced, have increased the moral force of the nation; and a hope is expressed, that the civil discord will soon terminate, and the code of 1812 will be firmly established.]

It appears, by Madrid dates to the 22d ult. that the French accounts have been exaggerated. It is true that the removal of the king had been pressed by his ministers, but he refused to quit the capital, and the ministers resigned. The tumult which it occasioned, alarmed the king, and his sentrested them, at all events, to keep their portefeuilles for the present until he could form a government.—They assented, and it is supposed the king will precedeto their recommendation to leave Madrid and keep them.

Alerino says, "it is true I do not like the Constitution, but I like still less the foreigners who would invade my Country" The different parties which existed in Spain, it is said are forming themselves into one body, and that the general cry is, amongst all classes, liberty or death.

Communications;

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

SIR,

As an Irishman, approving the spirit of the Petition against Orange Societies, and all party distinctions in this country, which was presented to our Legislature during the last Session, I feel myself called upon to make a few remarks on a Communication published in your Paper of the 10th instant, signed a "PROTESTANT," and dated from New market—But, in the first place, Sir, I have to return you my undeigned thanks, for the liberal and enlightened view you gave of that subject, in your editorial remarks of the same date.

This "New-market Protestant," Sir, sets out with the appearance of liberality—as an enemy to party distinctions; but, the malignancy of his design is soon revealed—the document he has published is not only an open slander on Catholics, but upon all Protestants, and is calculated to cause many liberal Protestants in this country to blush—Who could expect, Sir, that in the 19th Century—in this enlightened and well-read age, any person signing himself a "Protestant"—professing the Christian Religion, would have the hardihood—the unblushing effrontery, to accuse the Catholic Church, undoubtedly the Fiestling of Christianity, of inculcating the principles of persecution and hatred against all other religious persuasions;—and that, too, in a public Newspaper! The writer of the Letter now alluded to, may assume the name of a "PROTESTANT," but he is unworthy of the name of a liberal Protestant

Let us see the picture of the Teachers of the Catholic Church, drawn by this humane, enlightened, and charitable "PROTESTANT of the New market Church:—

"I say he, "the Parliamentary [illegible] Catholics, I can afford them a greater degree of credulity, for

—INDEX AT FRONT.

It is no difficult matter to prove, that they are taught from their infancy to persecute and hate those of all other religious persuasions, under the broad and general title of Heretics.

We will now contrast this portrait, Sir, with the character given of the same Teachers, by one of the most enlightened and eloquent of the Irish "Protestant" Barristers—Mr. PHILLIPS, at a public meeting in the city of Dublin, on the subject of the Veto :—

"The Catholic Clergy in Ireland are pure examples of the doctrines they promulgate; pious in their habits—they have no care, but for their flock—no study but the gospel. It is not in the gaudy ring of country dissipation that you will find the STRANGFORDS—the PERCEVALS—the BLAKES, the DENNYS, the MOYLANDS, or the COPPINGERS of the present day:—no not at the levee, at the lounge, or the election riot:—you will find them wherever good is to be done, or evil to be corrected—tearing their mitres in the van of misery—consoling the captive—reforming the convict—enriching the orphan—ornaments of this world, and emblems of a better—preaching their God through the practice of every virtue—monitors at the confessional—apostles in the pulpit;—at the death bed, pouring the sacred unction on the agonies of the pale pair.—Oh! I would hold him little better than the Pirate Robber, who would turn the fire of their eternal welfare into the impure and perishable mass of worldly prefer ment." Who, I ask, Sir, after reading the above, will not consider the "New market Protestant" worse than the "Promethean Robber," and exclaim, in the language of Phillips, "Oh! prejudice, where is thy reason! Oh! bigotry, where is thy blush?

The "New-market Protestant" says he felt himself "called on to point out a few of the many falsehoods" contained in the Petition. Now, Sir, after he has taken up nearly two columns of your Paper in attempting to point out these falsehoods—I ask him, what falsehood has he shewn? Or, has he not, on the contrary, failed in the attempt, and fully proved the truth of the Petition? This logician of the "New-market" school says, "If by the excesses committed in Ireland, &c. the Petitioners mean excesses committed by Orangemen, I deny the alledged fact, and challenge them to point out a single instance, in which the Orangemen were the first aggressors!—but if they mean excesses committed by Catholics, I am obliged to allow they have stated what is the fact!!!" This, Mr. Editor, is a new way of "pointing out falsehoods," and could never enter into the brain of any other person than a New-market wiseacre; "the Petition never stated who the aggressors were, but simply that excesses were committed and he, admitting they were committed by either side, proves the truth of the Petition.

With respect to the swaggering "challenge" which he here gives, to point out where the Orangemen were the first aggressors, I accept it, and will give him one instance, out of many that I could give; namely, their late attempt to assassinate the Marquis Wellesley Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in the Dublin Theatre;—once the "New market Protestant" can prove that His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, by obeying the orders of His Majesty, in preventing the Orangemen of Dublin from decorating the Statue of King William, in College green, with orange colours, and making their accustomed procession on the 4th of last November, was the first aggressor.

The next falsehood which he attempts to point out in the Petition, is, where he says, "These Petitioners likewise state, that 'it is a fact too well known to every person acquainted with the affairs of Ireland for the last 30 years, that the 12th of July has never passed by without some deplorable calamity, occasioned by orange processions—and, as often as the orange flag has been unfurled in that country, it has, almost uniformly, been stained with blood.'" He first acknowledges the last, by saying that "it is true that such has been too much the case," and then goes on to shew, that when Catholics see orange colours on man or woman, "their blood boils, and to work they go, to the certain injury of the person wearing it;" but shortly afterwards, he convicts himself of falsehood, on the evidence of his "respectable" friend in York, by saying that in a certain part of Ireland, where the "orange flag was successively unfurled for ten years, no blood was shed—no murder committed" by either side;—although it is well known there is not a corner of Ireland without Catholic inhabitants! Now, Mr. Editor, (as you have already shewn by your own note on the wretched production), is not this convicting the writer of that Petition of falsehood, with a vengeance? I may here observe, with the "Protestant" himself, "What a havoc in the common rules of argument!—how shocking the scene! of distorted and unhappy opposition!

With respect to his allusion to the children's play on mid summer's eve, I ask him, in what page of Irish history did he meet with it? Such a slander may take in Upper Canada, but it can never gain ground in Ireland, or with any person acquainted with that country, as it is a notorious fact, that both Protestants and Catholics join in the amusement of the bonefire, and that it is chiefly carried on by children, of all religious persuasions, for pay sake, "about cockcrow," or, as regard to, its origin. The only traditions I ever could find for it are two: first, to commemorate an expulsion of the Danes. Secondly, (and what is most generally believed) that it had its origin in Heathen superstition, when the inhabitants worshipped the sun, in the middle of summer.—The allusion to the Drogheda feast is too gross to require any remark.

This pious "New market Protestant," who seems possessed of so much Christian charity and benevolence towards his brethren of the Catholic Church, asserts that he is not an Orangeman, yet, immediately afterwards, the cat slips out of the bag—he enters the society of the Lodge, and attempts to explain the Orangeman's oath! He says an Orangeman is sworn "to protect a Catholic in the enjoyment of his civil rights and property," cautiously omitting the word religious. Now, Sir, [Lord deliver us from such protection!] Now, Sir, this [Lord deliver us from such protection!] Now, Sir, if he be not an Orangeman, how can he pretend to explain their secret oaths? I would rather imagine, Sir, that he is an Orangeman—but is ashamed to acknowledge it, although to the Orangemen, in my opinion, have reason to be ashamed of him, as such a lame advocate would injure any cause I may observe, Sir, in the words of I forget

"How well the subject suits his noble mind,
"A fellow feeling makes us wond'rous kind!"

He says, Sir, that he "regrets to see men who make such large professions of religion, impose on others by misrepresentations and falsehoods;" but instead of proving this plain dogmatic assertion, he stands himself convicted of palpable misrepresentations—gross falsehoods—and the most glaring intolerance; designed, in my opinion, to throw a foul aspersion on my native country—noble under all her misfortunes—and with a view to stir up, in this country, the very feelings and party spirit, which the Petitioners wish to crush—for the benefit of every Irishman in the country.

I have made the above observations, on the Communication signed a "PROTESTANT," not that I considered any well informed person would think it worthy of an answer, but merely to counteract the impression it may have on prejudiced or illiterate minds.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your ob't servant.

A DESPATCH,

Of which the following is an Extract, has been received from His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, by the Lieutenant Governor.

(COPY.)

Downing Street London, 15th January 1823.

SIR,

I am commanded by the King to acquaint you, that, with a view to the relief of those of His Majesty's Canadian Subjects who suffered from the Calamities of the late War with the United States of America, it has been determined to order an immediate payment, at the rate of five shillings in the pound, on account of the losses sustained by individuals in Upper Canada, according to the valuation made by the first Commission, it being assumed by His Majesty's Government, that no Claim is likely to be so much reduced in its revision as to render it imprudent to anticipate by this partial payment the more deliberate investigation directed to be made under the second Commission.

If, however, it should have been already directed by that Commission, or if it should be known to you that any Claim which has been investigated by you, ought to have been totally rejected, you will feel it your duty to direct the payment in respect of such claim to be suspended, until an opportunity has been afforded for its revision.

I have only further to desire, that you will cause His Majesty's gracious intentions to be made known in the Province; and, so soon as the mode of payment can be arranged with the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, you will receive more particular instructions for your guidance.

I have the honor to be,
SIR,
Your most Obedient Humble Servant.

WEEKLY REGISTER.

VOL. II. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"—we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. No. 19.

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1823.

Editorial Commentary.

WE detained this number of the "Register" to the latest minute, in the expectation of highly important News from Europe; which, however, did not arrive by yesterday's mail—but we may hourly expect to hear of the commencement of hostilities between France and Spain, an event that will apply the torch to an immense pile of combustibles, whose blaze will probably reach to every corner of the civilized world.

The very pretty lines of "X. Y. Z." from Port Hope, have been received, and we intend to give them insertion at an early period. The poetical address of "T" has been also received. It has our attention, though we entertain many doubts that however the "conquering eyes" of his mistress (which are said to have filled "the subject world with sighs!") may be gratified by this display of the "deadly thrall,"—she cannot derive much pleasure from the contemplation of the "faeces" in the "secret deeps of his stomach!"—besides; as it appears this love-sick swain wears a "beard," which he is in the habit of "scratching"—we would strongly recommend the Tonsure before he rushes, thus unshaven, into the fearful presence of a mistress capable of "covering his face with pimples" by a single glance of her eye!

Selections from British & Foreign Journals.

A public dinner has been given in London to the Spanish and Portuguese Ambassadors, which was attended by upwards of 400 Noblemen and Gentlemen of high rank and talent. On this occasion the following new patriotic song was given in great style by Mr. Broadhurst, to the tune of "Scots wha hae," &c.

Spain awak'd from slavery's trance—
Spain who spurn'd the yoke of France,
Saw Napoleon's hordes advance,
Flush'd with victory:

Spain, in native valor rising,
Backward drove th' invading throng;
Bold her sons, and this their song—
"Death or Liberty!"

Proud Iberia, gallant land!
Rear'd the pile by Freedom plann'd—
Fir'd the torch by Freedom fann'd—
Soon'd to bend her knee!

Urg'd by foreign despots, Gaul
Flies to arms, and, venturing all,
Forc'd to fight, but fights to fail,
Leagued 'gainst liberty!

Shall (forbid it, Heaven!) the men
Who, from mountain, rock, and glen,
Baffled France, as France was then,
Now defeated be?

Shall they break their patriot vow,
Who master'd strength, to weakness bow,
Yield to France, as France is now?
No—they shall be free!

Britons! you whose patriot train
Oft has spurn'd oppression's reign—
You whose hearts beat high for Spain,
Pledge one cup with me:

"Soon may Spain, in justice strong,
"Backward drive th' invader's throng;
"Bold her sons, and this their song—
"Death or liberty!"

Russian Empire in America.—By the arrival at New-Bedford, on Tuesday last, of the ship Belknap, Gardner, from the Sandwich Islands, we learn that the brig Pearl of Boston, had arrived at Woahoo, from the North West Coast, having been ordered off by the officer commanding the Russian North West Company at Norfolk Sound. After leaving the port, she was boarded by the Russian frigate Apollo. Documents delivered to said brig by the commander of the Apollo, declare the Russian claim to extend from lat. 51, North, on the North West Coast of America, northward to Behring's Straits, and from thence to latitude 45, 50 North, on the Coast of Japan; and that all vessels, of whatever nation they may be, that are caught within 100 (Italian) miles of these limits, (except in cases of distress) will be subject to confiscation, national vessels not excepted. The Apollo was about to despatch vessels, and also proceed down the coast for the purpose of ordering all vessels off which might be found within these limits —Our citizens, government, and all, have been flattering themselves that the Czar of Muscovy was not in earnest when he issued his famous decree in effect declaring himself Czar of one half of North America also The above, however, we presume, will open their eyes. The question is—shall we submit to it?—Com. Advertiser.

Basin of Albany.—The bill authorising the construction of a basin in the city of Albany, at the termination of the Erie and Champlain Canals, having passed the two Houses of Legislature, were on Saturday, approved and signed by the Governor

Sir William Lumley.—The good people of Bermuda have given over all hopes of again seeing their late Governor, Sir William Lumley, in those islands.

A Scotch Doctor outwitted.—A doctor in Scotland was employed by a poor man, to attend to his wife who was dangerously ill. The doctor gave a hint amounting to a suspicion, that he would not be paid. I have, says the man, five pounds, and if, says he to the doctor, you kill or cure, you shall have it The woman died under the doctor's hands; and after a reasonable time, he called for his five pounds. The man asked the doctor if he killed his wife? "No." "Did you cure her?" "No." Then said the poor man, you have no legal demand, and turned upon his heel.

Marriage by proxy.—It is well known that the rich heiress of Burgundy was not only betrothed to the Archduke Maximilian, but that Louis, Count Palatine of Voldentz, one of the ambassadors of the Archduke, had, in his name, solemnized the nuptials The ceremony was performed as follows:—The fair bride was placed in a becoming negligee in the conjugal bed. By her side stood her stepmother, the Princess Margaret of York, together with the first lady of the bed-chamber. The Count Palatine then made his appearance in a singular military negligee, that is to say, with his right leg and arm clothed in mail. In this manner he lay down beside the bride; close to him stood the honorable counsellors, and between him and the princess was placed a naked sword. After they had continued in this posture for a few minutes, and probably not even looked at one another, they rose and received the congratulations of the company.

It is difficult to conceive for what purpose this strange, and, to a modest bride, certainly disagreeable ceremony was invented.

The same Maximilian who, in this instance, suffered his place to be supplied by another, on an occasion where the duty is in general most cheerfully performed in person, did the same service in his old age for one of his grandsons, in whose stead he espoused an Hungarian princess. The father of the blooming bride was so enchanted with his agreeable manners, that he wished to have the emperor himself, who was then a widower, for his son in law; but the latter, with equal wit and good sense, replied, that he had often heard his father say, that it was impossible to despatch an old man in a more civil way, than by persuading him to marry a young and beautiful woman.

M. de Chateaubriand.—Mr. Brougham, in calling on the minister of Foreign affairs in the House of Commons for some Explanation in relation to a statement in one of the French Chambers made by a minister whose name stands at the head of this article, gave the following account of his devious politi al course.

"The object, however, of Mr. Brougham's present enquiry was to ascertain the accuracy of a statement made in the speech of that minister, whom it was unnecessary to name, and whom he might be permitted to distrust. One who was already well known as a writer of romantic books, and one who has lately, by some strange chance, been made a Minister—one who had signalized himself by a bombastic work on the genius of Christianity, had immediately afterwards become a devout worshipper of Bonaparte; had afterwards transferred his adoration to the Bourbons, but not before he had carried his piety so far as to compare the young King of Rome, Napoleon II. (with no great reverence) to our saviour Jesus Christ. Eloquence had sometimes in some places been a pernicious enemy to freedom, and fine writing was not unfrequently able to recommend hurtful sophisms; but yet he felt no great fears on the part of Spain that her liberties would fall before eloquence and fine writing of the quality of M. Chateaubriands's."

The eagle eye of Mr. BROUGHAM, thus penetrates into the very Soul of the most unholy of all Holy alliances:

"A state of declared neutrality on our part would be nothing less than a declared permission of those evils which we condemned, and a tacit allowance of the atrocious principles which we were unanimous in deprecating. Our assistance would be necessary to avert the wicked enforcement of principles contrary to the law of nations, and repugnant to every idea of national independence. Could any thing be more absurd, more inconsistent, than that Spain should now be repudiated as illegitimate by those, some of whom had in treaties with her, described her government in its present shape, by the very term, "most legitimate Government." Not only was the conduct of the Allies inconsistent with the treaties of some among them with Spain, he would show that their principle of internal interference was wholly at variance with treaties recently made amongst themselves. Those Holy Allies were opposed to their own principles, and by such was the attempt now made to crush the independence of a brave people. Whenever there was a free heart or virtuous mind, there Spain had a natural and an unalienable friend. For his own part, he could not but admire the mixture of firmness and forbearance which the Government of Spain had exhibited. Let the pretext, however, for the war be what it might, the real cause of it was not hard to conjecture. It was not from hatred to Spain or Portugal, considered simply as Spain and Portugal, that the Allied Sovereigns were for marching their hordes into the Peninsula—it was not against freedom on the Ebro, or freedom on the Mincio, that they were making war: no, it was against freedom wherever it was to be found—it was against freedom by whatever men it was possessed—it was against freedom by whatever safeguards it was guaranteed. Freedom was the object of their most inveterate hate, and against freedom they were ready to employ every species both of force and fraud. They dreaded its institutions—they abhorred its spirit; all the benefits which it has conferred upon mankind, all the monuments which have been raised in its honor, all the miracles which have been effected by its influence, they hated with the malignity of demons, for they were compelled to fear and tremble at the very sound of its name. It was on this account that, disguise it as they might, they could feel no real friendship for the people of this country. As long as England remained the country that she was at present, as long as Parliament formed a free and open tribunal to which the oppressed of all nations under heaven could appeal against their oppressors, however mighty and however elevated in doing as I have done, and do the things that I recommend in be done."

—and with all its abuses, it was still too free to please the taste of the continental despots—so long would England be the object of their hatred and machinations, sometimes carried on in secret, sometimes carried on openly, but always carried on with the same unremitting vigour and activity. The principles on which this band of congregated despots had shown their readiness to act, were dangerous in the extreme, not only to free states for reasons which he had before explained, but also to the states over which the very members of this unholy junto presided. Resistance to them was a matter of duty, and the duty of this country was in consequence plain. .

Republican qualifications for a Representative of the people.

From the Baltimore Chronicle, March 20.—Major Robert Bailey offers himself to the freeholders of Monroe, Greenbrier, Nicholas, Kenawa, Cabell, Mason, Randolph, and Louis counties, Virginia, imploring them to elect him, the aforesaid major, as their representative in congress.

His qualifications are various—first he states that his father died at the battle of Cowpens, defending the liberties of America—secondly, he inbibed from his parents, his republican principles—thirdly, he promises, should he be elected, to bring in a bill retrenching the salaries of public officers—fourthly, he promises to vote just as his constituents shall dictate—fifthly, to accept no office in the gift of the executive—sixthly, he engages to send to his constituents the journals of the house—seventhly, that where his constituents do not express their opinion, he will be governed by his own.—On this su ject the redoubted major shall speak in his own language.

"I am a child of my own raising; I know what it is to work hard for a small compensation; I know what it is to live rich and independent; I am well acquainted with foreign affairs; and it must be given up that I am with domestic affairs. know what would be good wholesome laws; and depend on my best endeavours to make them. I am well acquainted with every situation in life. I have been a ploughboy, and farmed largely. I have been a tavern keeper, a merchant, keeper of the Sweet Springs; the keeper of Berkley Springs; the keeper, in Washington City, of one of the best hotels that ever was kept in America."

Amidst such a meridian blaze of perfection, we are sorry that the Major has compelled us to examine the other side of the question; he justly observes, however, that the human character is imperfect, and after avowing his faults, he goes on;

"I believe, if any man would look back and find that his conscience don't charge him with something at least as bad as the accusations brought against me; I will agree for that man to be my executioner and destroyer. But I don't pretend to excuse myself on these grounds; there are none of us free from faults; for mine have been many; but they are unclouked. and I have pleaded forgiveness, as before described. And should I meet with your forgiveness, and be your choice, I will repay you all with works and gratitude.

"I have been a great gambler, and out lost thousands and tens of thousands of dollars; and called it pleasure. When I offered you my services in this district before, and told you I would not quit it, even if you elected me; but now I see my folly. I hope no man will ever gamble, who has any regard for his business; for as sure as he takes to gambling, so sure will his business go to ruin, and he be lost to society, and be in the broad way to hell, without repentance, which it has pleased God to grant me. I only wish that every man particularly every young man, that ever heard of me, would read my book, to receive benefit; as it was my intention when it was written that it should be of use to the human family, as well as profitable to me; that they may now see the inconsistency of

The following constitutes the Major's confession and apology, for having separated himself from the society of his own wife.

"I make these notes by way of apology for leaving my wife, as I have explained in "Bailey's Memoirs." I have left her sixteen years past: but in affluent circumstances, with a good plantation, elegant furniture and plate, slaves to wait on her; paid every debt, so that not one cent could come against her; and loaded two waggons with groceries home to her; and took my two children away by force, and gave them the first education. My son, Edward B. Bailey, who is as well educated as any man in America, is now a practising lawyer in the town of Union, Monroe county. My daughter, Caroline Matilda Bailey, was educated in the best style in Lexington and Winchester, and sent home to her mother. Mrs Bailey's two children, which she had by John Rosang, I educated well, and treated them better than their poor father did. I was told they never lived happy together; and it was my unfortunate lot to be unhappy. We both wish each other well, and think that the public have nothing to do with our private affairs. Look at David, who put Uriah, the chief captain of the host, in front of the battle, and had him killed for the sake of his wife Bathsheba. I don't put myself in competition with these great and good men. King David repented sorely; Robert Bailey has repented sorely, and his misfortunes have been many, prodigality, gaming, &c."

"We are inclined to believe in one part of the Major's declaration at all events, and that is, that he is not descended in a direct line from Solomon: we have what Diplomatists would say official evidence of the fact.

HIS LATE MAJESTY'S LIBRARY.

In our last we noticed the annexed patriotic and generous letter of his Majesty to Earl Liverpool, and have now much pleasure in laying it before our readers. It records one of those royal acts which make kings known with honor to posterity far beyond the fame of victories or conquest.—We therefore abstain from praise—it is its own eulogy. We have only to add, that a numerous meeting (sixteen) of the trustees of the British Museum was held upon the subject of the disposition of this princely gift last Monday, at which the question was adjourned for further consideration Upon this it will depend the advice for incorporation with the national library, or for a separate establishment under the same direction.

(Copy.)

Dear Lord Liverpool—The King, my late revered and excellent father, having formed, during a long series of years, a most valuable and extensive library, consisting of about one hundred and twenty thousand volumes, I have resolved to present this collection to the British nation.

Whilst I have the satisfaction by this means of advancing the literature of my country, I also feel that I am paying a just tribute to the memory of a parent, whose life was adorned with every public and private virtue.

I desire to add, that I have great pleasure, my lord, in making this communication through you. Believe me, with great regard, your sincere friend,

BRITISH INDIGO.—A discovery has been recently made, which promises the most important consequences in a commercial and agricultural point of view About two years ago, 280 acres of land near Flint, in Wales, were planted with the common hedybuck, or rose mallow, with the view of converting it into hemp or flax In the process of manufacture, it was discovered that this plant yields a beautiful blue dye, equal in beauty and permanency to the best blue ind go.

Ribbon Men.—The Ribbon men of the County of Dublin have signified, through their Pastors, their readiness to surrender their arms, to break up their association, and take voluntarily, and cheerfully, the oath of allegiance.

CONSUMPTION.—If the writer be not mistaken, he has formerly alluded to a remarkable case which is to be met with in the Monita et Precepta, of Dr. Mead.* A young and interesting girl was apparently within a few days of death from confirmed consumption, when a vivid representation, by the visiting clergyman, of future punishment and pain, produced the effect of positive insanity. She raved furiously, but now breathed freely! The functions of her lungs were restored, as reason was suspended, and until her mind became again tranquil, all manifestation of pulmonary malady totally disappeared.

LORD BYRON IN ITALY.

Signior Thomasi De San Clare, celebrated on the London stage, had been making the tour of Italy to improve his musical tactics. He was at Reggio, in Calabria, and anxious to proceed to Viegna by the shortest route, where he was engaged to sing before the Emperor. He embarked without passports in an open boat bound to Ancona, a capital town on the Adriatic Gulf, but was seized near Cape Otranto by a Venetian galley, and thrown into prison, where he managed to have a letter delivered into Lord Byron's hands, who very soon had him released. He sang at the nobility's concerts, and became a general favorite. He was also very partial to swimming, and gave a singular proof of his experiness in that exercise. At a moonlight meeting on the shore, he sang to amuse many of the chief nobility without receiving any recompence, and was wearied out with encores when the Duke de Montesano insisted upon his repeating a song. He remonstrated in vain, and they pressed upon him till he stood on the last of the Virgin's steps leading to the water.

They thought he was now safe; but to their utter astonishment he made a low b w, and taking to the water like a spaniel, swam across to the square, amidst thunders of applause. Except upon the stage, the Signior was never after troubled with an encore. He lodged at an hotel adjoining that of Lord Byron, who honored him with particular notice. Sir —— had for some time vainly endeavored for an introduction to his Lordship. He was a blackleg, and vulgar in his language and deportment; more over, his wife was a blue stocking, and had penned a novel, in which Lord Byron was introduced as a repentant husband. For these reasons the doors of Lordship's clothes, and his supposed Lordship received the Baronet at his hotel Added to his na- tural stupidity, Sir —— was puffed and vain deceived. The company consisted of several bon vivants; the Baronet sat on the right side of the Signior, fully convinced that he was elbowing the immortal bard. The Signior gave some of Lord Byron's songs in a strain of burlesque that created infinite mirth. Sir —— listened with gravity, and marked time with his head. At the close of the evening a bill was presented of "a heavy weight," the mock Lord having left the chair and the room. Sir —— stared; Capt. E——n remarked that they were in a hotel, and every body was glad to pay for seeing my Lord Byron. The Baronet discharged the bill, and went home highly pleased with his new acquaintance. Next day, when promenading, Sir —— met his Lordship in a dress similar to that worn by Signior Thomasi; and after rubbing his spectacles, saluted him with a "How do ye do, my Lord? How does the wine sit on your stomach?" His Lordship did not exactly stomach this mode of salutation, and peevishly exclaimed, "Sir, I don't know you." "Not know me!" said the wiseacre, "for whom you sang so many rich songs last night?" "The man is mad," muttered his Lordship, and pushed rudely past him.

The trick soon reached the ears of his Lordship, who was ill pleased with his name being made so free with; and the Baronet, unable to stand the quizzing, quitted Venice in disgust. His Lordship, fertile at invention, laid a plan to be revenged upon the forward ballad-singer, who had the vanity to suppose he had a person "worthy of any lady's eye." The Countess of —— undertook to make him believe she was smitten with the charms of his person, and in a short time succeeded. The Signior professed himself her admirer, and an assignation was fixed upon to take place in her apartment, where there was only one door, and no hiding place of any description. His Lordship, as concerted, thundered at the door shortly after the Signior had entered; and the lady, under pretence of saving him, thrust him into the chimney, and fastened the board with a spring lock.

His Lordship ordered a cold collation, and a concert of music, as numerous friends came with him.—For the space of three hours the entertainment was kept up merrily, and the Signior suffered penance in the chimney! Imagine to yourself a July day in Italy, and then think what the Signior must have endured. One of the company expressed a wish to change instrumental for vocal music, when Lord Byron observed, he had a bird in the chimney which could imitate the notes of Signior Thomasi to admiration. Going near the chimney, he, in a whisper, demanded a song. On pain of further confinement, the Signior, humbled in spirit, began and finished with some humour the air——

"Pray set the mournful captive free"

His Lordship, then producing sundry benefit cards, made the company (most of whom were those that enjoyed the joke at his expence the preceding evening) purchase them at a high price, remarking that every one was glad to pay for hearing Signior Thomasi sing The son of Apollo was then released, and a free pardon granted on his promising never again to soar beyond his professional sphere.

Commissioner Robinson's Correspondence.

Upon the last resolution it is only necessary to observe that it could scarcely have been anticipated by Upper Canada, that the Legislature of the Lower Province would delay for so long a period, the appointment of Commissioners to renew the consultation, and that after they had by that omission subjected us to so great ill inconvenience, it seemed not an unreasonable expectation that they would proceed to ascertain the proportion, by the means which had been last resorted to, rather than aggravate the evils of the delay by the unforeseen requisition of a mass of evidence of past transactions which no precaution or expense which Upper Canada could have employed, would have rendered satisfactory, and which it was well known, at the time it was demanded, could not possibly be obtained.—In truth, the attempt to take an account of all the goods which passed from the one Province in to the other had been abandoned by both Provinces as impracticable, and it is not singular, that we had not, without the aid of the necessary Officers for that purpose, persevered in a system which it was found could not be carried into effect while those Officers existed, and which had been therefore discontinued.

It is true that the Commissioners of Upper Canada would not consent to the mode, proposed for ascertaining the proportion of duties to be paid since the expiration of the last agreement, because they represented and proved that that mode was impracticable and that the result could not be satisfactory. All this appears in the report of the last Commissioners, but I am enabled to shew that sufficient evidence was in fact collected by one of the Commissioners of Upper Canada in conjunction with one from Lower Canada to prove at least the rights to more than the proportion contended for, and in the face of that evidence such proportion was nevertheless refused.

I have only to add that these resolutions of the Assembly of Lower Canada are wholly silent on the most important point, and that with respect to the past claims of Upper Canada, they suggest no means, and hold forth no prospect of their adjustment, while nearly the whole of our revenue for the three last years is detained in their Treasury. These resolutions it is also to be observed, were adopted by the Legislature of Lower Canada, after a knowledge of every point upon which the Province of Upper Canada has entreated the interposition of His Majesty, and the Imperial Parliament; for the Legislature of Upper Canada prayed His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland to transmit to the Government of Lower Canada, for the information of the Legislature of that Province then in Session, a copy of the Address to His Majesty, and of the Report which I have had the honor to present to Earl Bathurst, and I know that these papers were transmitted long before these resolutions are stated to have been passed.

The remarks made by Mr. Caldwell and Mr. Marshall, upon some of the enactments proposed by me, for placing on a just footing the financial concerns of the two Provinces, do not affect the most material of these provisions, and the points they involve are so particularly adverted to in the Report I have presented, and in this paper, that I need not at present, urge any thing further upon them. I will only observe that nothing can be more mistaken than to deny the claim of Upper Canada to a just proportion of the duties levied under the British Statute of 14th Geo. 3d.

The Annual vote of the British Parliament pays only some specified salaries.—It defrays but a part and not the greater part of the expense of administering Justice, and supporting the Civil Government within the Province of Upper Canada. How can it then be proposed that Upper Canada shall remain embarrassed from want of funds to meet these objects while upon the articles she consumes, duties are paid at Quebec which are expressly appropriated to that purpose, but which it is now contended are to be wholly expended in Lower Canada.

It is should appear to you that any of the points raised by the Legislature of Upper Canada are so themselves questionable, or are rendered so by any statements or arguments advanced on the other side, I shall be much obliged by having an opportunity afforded me of further explanation.

I have the the honor to be, &c.

OF

UPPER CANADA.

No. X.

SATURDAY, 8th March, 1823.

Mr. Nichol from the Committee to draft the above Address, reported a draft which was received and read the first time.

On Motion of Mr Randal, seconded by Mr Wilson of Wentworth, the fifth Rule of the House was dispensed with as far as related to the Address, and it was read the second time.

Mr. Walsh, from the Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the Address of the Commons House of Assembly, on the subject of Militia Lands, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency had been pleased to reply as follows:—

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

Possessed of my Sovereign's pleasure respecting the distribution of the lands which I had most earnestly solicited at his most gracious hands, in behalf of a gallant and loyal set of men, it was carried into effect under my orders with particular attention and indulgence, which is still extended to special and satisfactory pleas, yet, I trust so moderated by discretion as not to subject the Royal Bounty to be dishonored by indifference, or neglect: of these circumstances, I think on an occasion like the present it is proper that I should remind you; when without any acknowledgment of what has been done—without any thing brought before me which ought to influence me to such a measure, I am called upon in the hasty form indeed of a request, to annul a deliberate and well considered decision of my own, publicly recorded in the orders issued by my command in my capacities of Lieutenant Governor, and His Majesty's Captain General of this Colony.

Placed in this extraordinary situation, I am compelled to express my regret, that I cannot, in the present instance, enjoy that gratification which you may be assured I shall always experience when my duty and that proper respect which I owe to my station, shall not forbid me to assent to any request with which the House of Assembly may think it expedient to put it in my power to comply.

Mr. Randal, seconded by Mr. Clark, moved that the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on the subject of John Hardey's petition, might be concurred in, and that it should be engrossed and read a third time on the following Monday.

In amendment, Mr. Rattan seconded by Mr Gates, moved that all the words in the original motion be expunged, after the word "that," and the following inserted:—"The House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the whole, on the Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor."

Which was lost.

The original question was then carried and ordered.

On Motion of Mr. Hagerman, the District Attorney's Bill was referred to a Committee of the whole.

Mr. Gates in the Chair.

The House resumed.

Mr. Gates reported the Bill as amended.

On the question for receiving the Report, the House divided.

YEAS.	NAYS.
Messrs Nichol, Willson of Wentworth, McLean of Stormont, Jones of Leeds, Hamilton of Wentworth, Gates, Burwell, Hamilton of Lincoln, Hagerman, and McDonell—10.	Messrs. Randal, Chisholm, Clark, Walsh, Baldwin, Kerr, Casey, Rattan, Vankoughnet and Bostwick—10.

The question was carried by the casting vote of the Speaker, and the Report received accordingly.

On Motion of Mr. Hagerman, seconded by Mr. McDonell, the District Attorney Bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time on the Monday following.

Agreeably to notice, Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Hamilton of Wentworth, moved that it might be resolved, that emigration into this Province was of the highest importance, and deserved encouragement in every possible way.

2nd, That the circumstance of extended emigration into the Province from the United States of America, was inconsistent with His Majesty's Government, it was the indispensable duty of the Commons House of Assembly to express its opinion on certain matters connected with that important subject, being a source of information which it was presumed by the House would be highly acceptable.

3d. That emigration had been retarded and diverted from this Province, by the great increase of fees for grants of Land.

4th, That the benefits of emigration were further greatly limited by the nature of the system of Location, whereby numbers of poor people were seated down on portions of Land distant from each other, and remote from mills and roads, as necessary for the comforts of settlers.

5th. That the want of men of capital, with its usual advantages of superior education, influence, and example, living amongst the new settlers, was a peculiar disadvantage to this Province.

6th. That these inconveniences would be greatly, if not entirely, removed, by the granting of Townships, or other large tracts, to persons of capital, undertaking the settlement thereof, on the reasonable terms of making roads, building mills, providing smiths' forges, tools, and other necessaries requisite for such settlement.

7th, That the reservation of two-sevenths of he Lands the one for the support of a Protestant Clergy, the other under the denomination of Crown Reserves, had a most injurious effect upon the settlement and prosperity of the Province, by the reason of the separation it occasioned between poor settlers, the neglect of the roads and the frequent non-occupation of the best mill seats. The reservation for the support of the Clergy, being made by law, the House did not suggest any change therein; but the other servation reserved by order of His Majesty's Government, would, if granted to settlers, greatly improve the country, and, in effect, be more beneficial to Government by the general prosperity it would give throughout the settlements.

8th, That the Crown Reserves, by reason of their divided and scattered position offered no field for the expenditure of any useful capital, they remained then, as at first, only fit for the poor or laborious settler.

9th. That the Lands in Upper Canada formed a safe foundation for the expenditure of capital, but as capital must be concentrated in order to be useful, the division of the Townships into two sevenths of Reservations, a small proportion unfit for Settlement, and the rest in Locations, half perhaps occupied, the other half unoccupied, rendered it wholly impossible that any capital could be embarked in the purchase and improvement of large tracts.

10th, That a tract of two hundred acres of Land was a very moderate quantity for an industrious man with a family; that less was scarcely worth his occupation;—that fifty acres was no inadequate to the hopes of an industrious Farmer, that he could not with prudence accept it.

Quitting.

St. Johns, N. B. April 3.

At Fredericton, (N. B.) on the morning of the 27th ultimo, after an illness of ten days, His Excellency Major General, George Stracey Smyth, Lieutenant Governor and Commander in Chief of the Province of New Brunswick, &c. &c. &c. By birth, education, and feeling, he was an Englishman, and no man ever exhibited a more genuine or ardent attachment to the constitution of his country in Church and State. He attained the rank of Major General in the year 1812, and under His Majesty's Commission bearing date the 9th of April the same year, he administered the Government of this Province in the absence of Lieutenant Governor Carleton, by the title of President and Commander in Chief until August 1813, when he went to England on leave of absence. He resumed the Government in August 1814, and continued in the administration thereof until he again left the Province the 25th June, 1816, to administer the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia. On the 1st of July, 1817, he commenced the permanent Administration as our Provincial Governor, having on the death of Lieutenant Governor Carleton been appointed by His Majesty's Commission bearing date the 28th of February, In his last moments he was peculiarly composed, collected, and resigned. His not only made those domestic arrangements which a regard to the welfare of his family naturally prompted, but within two hours of his departure he signed a Commission which was necessary for giving to public business, and for proroguing the House of Assembly which had just finished the business of the Session. His remains are to be conveyed to Halifax, to be deposited in the same vault with those of his late wife whom he has survived nearly six years.

Editorial Commentary.

It is probable that at this moment WAR is raging with the utmost fury in the Spanish Peninsula.— Our readers will find some very interesting notices and extracts from the last arrivals. We do not wish to occupy the little space allowed us this week by any lengthy discussions of our own, though the times appear to us pregnant with the most stupendous events. The political atmosphere of Europe seems to require another general and awful visitation of tempest, whirlwind, and tornado, in order to disperse those foul and congregated vapours which still envelope many of her antient dynasties. The lessons of experience seem not to have produced the desired end;—they must be renewed until wisdom is perfected.

In the assertions of a person who can deliberately and publicly avow a falsehood, were of any material consequence, we would ask Mr. SMITH who it was that informed him we were "not at liberty to set down here with," as to the section of communications sent to this paper? and in what station his optics were when he saw a letter of his inserted in a paper in which it never was inserted namely, The Upper Canada Gazette? This piratical and veracious Map-Seizer ought to have been pretty sensible of our perfect liberty, and also of our singular impartiality in allowing his extraordinary statement a place in the "Weekly Register," especially since it contained what the public has very generally esteemed a highly impertinent attack upon one of the most respectable men in the Province, and one who is an "Officer connected with Government." If his Map is not drawn with a greater regard to truth than what is displayed in his letters; his friends have just cause to fear a total and a richly deserved discomfiture.

Selections From British & Foreign Journals.

Greece.—The Hydriots keep under strict blockade the fortresses of Coron & Modon, which do not deserve the honor of a siege, and it can no longer be doubted that all Peloponnesus will be freed between this and April next. Four hundred Cossacks, at first armed with slings, implements of husbandry, and a few fowling pieces, have conquered for themselves altars, laws, a country, arsenals and arms; for the Greeks now possess 150 field pieces, 700 carriage guns, 80,000 muskets; and their navy consists of four hundred vessels from 20 to 600 tons.—Journal des Debats.

Trieste, Feb 26.—Letters from Corfu of the 9th have been received. The brave Bozzaris and his son had advanced with intrepidity to Vrachori, capital of Etoli, (beyond the Morea.) The Turks did not dare to give battle, and retired to Vrachori, where they endeavoured to defend themselves.— They fought in the streets with the utmost rage, but at last retired into the houses, whence they were driven by the Greeks setting fire to the town, and all the Turks have perished. The Greeks hope that after this glorious event they may collect all their forces under the walls of Larissa (capital of Thessaly) in the course of the month of March.—Ib.

Constantinople, Jan. 25.—The administration of the Turkish government has acquired much regularity and solidity since the death of the Vizier Haleb Effendi.—The ministers seem low to pursue only the public good and the interest of their master. The Greeks have never been better treated than they are at present even in the times of the greatest tranquillity. On new year's day, there were some serious disturbances in the Greek Metropolitan Church. The rioters were arrested and brought before the Turkish Magistrate. He referred the cause immediately to the Greek Patriarch, saying, that he could not encroach on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Chief of the Greek nation.

The following fact is still more striking. On the day when the news of the surrender of Napoli di Romania arrived in the capital, all the Hydriots and Ipsariots who had been imprisoned in the Caiques were released, and lodged in the barracks of the arsenal. This measure was principally extended to those who had been taken with arms in their hands.

True figure of the Earth.—Captain Sabine, who was recently in New York, and accompanied Captain Parry as astronomer, in his voyage to Melville Island, is to proceed to Spitzbergen, for the purpose of making observations to determine the true figure of the earth, similar to those he has already made on the Coast of Africa, the West Indies and America. The Griper gun brig is fitting out at Deptford for the conveyance of Captain Sabine.

The Sailors' Medicine Chest.—The surgeon of a ship of war, some years ago, whenever any of the crew complained of indisposition, invariably prescribed copious draughts of salt water, instead of physic which he obliged them to swallow. By some accident, this disciple of Sangrado fell over board. A number of the seamen immediately rushed forward to rescue him from a watery grave, which one of his drenched patients observing, loudly sung out, "Avast, you Lubbers! the Docter will take no harm, for he has only fallen into his own medicine-chest."

Affair of honor.—A rumor has for some days been in circulation of a duel between two distinguished foreigners. The following is an authentic statement of this affair:—About two years ago the Neapolitan General Carascosa, announced his determination of calling out Lieutenant General William Pepe, late Commander of the Neapolitan forces. Very shortly after the arrival in London of General Pepe, he received a letter from General Carascosa, in which, after charging General Pepe with conduct injurious to his reputation, he pointedly avowed his opinion, that military revolutions were in all cases contrary to the principles of honor; that any change in the Government of Naples was unnecessary; and still less in that of Spain. The letter concluded with a challenge in the usual terms. To this letter General Pepe replied, by declaring his opinion, that every free State was indebted for its liberty to military revolution.—That the Spaniards were now a prey to civil anarchy, only because certain individuals, calling themselves Liberals, were, in fact, hostile to the Constitution of the Cortes; that he had employed the authority which his rank and his command had given him at Naples, to resist the despotism of a Government, which, while it rendered the people miserable, was of no actual advantage in the reigning dynasty—and concluded by accepting his challenge.—On the 20th of February, the Generals met; Count Santa Rosa, Ex minister of War of Piedmont, attended General Pepe, and M. Brunet, a French gentleman, General Carascosa. The two parties were sworn—and the combatants engaged—but at the second pass, General Pepe's sword snapped short near the guard, on which the seconds interfered, and the affair, as is usual in such cases, was deferred.—A second meeting took place on Friday last, a few miles from London, not far from Kew Bridge. On engaging, General Carascosa attacked with great impetuosity, but after several passes on both sides, General Pepe, seizing his adversary's sword with his left hand, disarmed him; and placing the point of his sword at his breast, had his life in his power. Here the affair would have terminated, but General Carascosa, on recovering his sword, renewed the combat, which was warmly maintained until he was finally disabled by a thrust from General Pepe in the right shoulder. General Pepe, on seeing his adversary incapable of further defence, declined availing himself of his advantage, and thus the duel terminated."—Sun, March 6.

The force of genius.—It is a singular fact, notwithstanding the numerous nobility of Great Britain, and the necessary influence of wealth and rank, that the Lord Chancellor, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the President of the Board of Control, are all of pleben origin. This fact has afforded the noblesse of France an opportunity to evince at once their pride of ancestry, and the liberality of sentiment which they acquired during their exile. It is said that the French Ministry, on recovering from the first impression made by the proceedings of the British Parliament, and the opinions and abhorrence expressed upon the projected crusade against the liberties of Spain, "vented their rage in personal invectives against the Members of the British Administration. They termed the Ministry generally, un Ministere canaille—(Ministers of the rabble;)—and then, proceeding in the abstract, and by detail, Qu'estce que M. Canning? they demanded: Le fils d'un actrice—(the son of an actress:)—Lord Liverpool? Le fils d'une pauvre homme de lettres—(the son of a poor man of letters:)—M. Peel? Le fils d'un fabricant—(son of a manufacturer:)—M. Huskinson? Un garcon Apoticare—(an apothecary's apprentice:)—Le Lord Grand Chancellier? Le fils d'un Marchand de charbon de terre—(the son of a coal merchant:)—Voila, comme ils sont tous!—Tous roturiers—un Ministere tout a fait cannaille!—(Behold what they are;—All plebeans—a Ministry from the rabble!") We have here a striking example of the force of talents, when steadily exerted, and well directed, to surmount the obstacles which in the monarchial governments impede their progress to eminence and power. The Bourbons, of whom it was aptly remarked by Buonaparte, that they "have neither learned nor forgot any thing, during the last twenty five years," cannot believe in the existence of genius or wisdom, unless found in connection with royal or noble blood. Louis XVIII. is unquestionably a man of education and sense; but aside from him, we doubt whether the united talents of the whole Bourbon race, would equal those of the five Ministers above mentioned.—Commercial Advertiser.

CHIMNIES.—In 1200 they were scarcely known in England; one only was allowed in a religious house, one in a manor ditto, one in the great hall of a castle, or a Lord's house—but in Gentlemen's houses of large fortune, they had nothing but what was called Rere Dosse, that is a raised back in their halls, where their food was dressed, where they dined, and the smoke found its way out as it could. In King Henry the Eighth's time, the University at Oxford had no fires allowed, for it is mentioned, that after the Students had supped, which took place at eight o'clock, they went again to their studies till nine; and then in the winter, they having no fire, they were obliged to take a good run for half an hour, to get heat in their feet before they went to bed.

Evils of Fortune-telling.—A lady had been married about seven years, had three little girls, and was near her confinement a fourth time, when her husband, being absent on business, wrote to request she would search his bureau for a paper of some consequence; in doing which she found another, inscribed, "Minutes of my fortune, told me in the year 1789," which was seven years prior to her marriage. Curiosity prompted her to open it, when she found as follows:—"E. D. tells me that I am to marry, in seven years, a lady with blue eyes, fair complexion, and light hair, with whom I am to live very happily; that I shall have three daughters; that in giving birth to a boy, the fourth child, my wife shall die." This paper fell into the lady's hands but a few days before she was confined, and caused a depression which she could not throw off; but when the sex of the child was known, the strange coincidence of the three girls, and the boy being, as predicted, the fourth child, so entirely seized her imagination that in three days she lost her intellects, and in less than three weeks (during the whole of which time she was completely deranged) she expired.

Three Remarkable Historical Coincidences.—Among the curiosities in the British Museum there are shewn two Helmets, one Roman, found in this ground, on which the battle of Cannæ, fought 216 years before Christ, and the [illegible] feathers, brought from one of the Sandwich Islands by Captain Cook. On comparing these, the shape will be found exactly alike, and the latter was made by an uncivilized people at the distance of upwards of 2,000 years since the battle of Cannæ was fought, and who never heard of the Roman name.—The second coincidence is found in the same collection. Two breast-plates are shewn to the visitors, exactly corresponding in uniformity of shape, one taken from the bosom of an Egyptian Mummy, which had been dissected, if I may be allowed to use the term, in the Museum, and the other brought by Captain Cook, among various other curiosities, from the South Sea Islands.—The third coincidence is the manner, described by Captain Cook, in which the South Sea Islanders roast their hogs. This is by means of hot stones placed under ground, and in Ossian's Poems the reader will find that the Caledonians of that time made use of the same method in cooking their hogs for the table.

Miracles.—St. Gregory the Great affirms—and who will doubt him?—that a little Monk got into such a habit of working miracles, that at length the Prior forbade him to exercise his supernatural talent. The Monk conformed to the order; but one day, seeing an honest brick layer falling from the roof of a house, he hesitated, between monastical obedience and charity, in saving the poor man's life; and only ordering him to remain in the air, he ran to acquaint the Prior with the case. The Prior gave him absolution for the sin of beginning a miracle without his leave, and allowed him to go through with it,—but never to do the like again.

Quick Travelling.—The Norwich Mercury says, "much has been repeatedly said of the extraordinary expedition with which the communication is carried on between the various parts of this kingdom. We have, however, to record an instance of expeditious travelling, which exceeds any thing of the kind hitherto heard of. On Wednesday last the Day and the Times coaches started from London; the former from the Spread Eagles, Grace-church-street; and the latter from the Swan with Two Necks, Lad-lane, at half past five. They came near each other shortly after they left town, and a trial for swiftness throughout the journey was the consequence. The Times arrived in Norwich at half past five, in the afternoon, and the Day at 20 minutes past five, having performed the distance in 12 hours, including all stoppages. It is supposed that in some part of the journey the coaches travelled at the rate of 20 miles an hour. While we mention this extraordinary rapidity of conveyance, we cannot but express our disapprobation of the conduct of the drivers who, for the mere gratification of outstripping each other, thus wantonly risked the lives and limbs of their passengers. We trust, however, that this will be the last time we have to record such a fact; or if it be not, we sincerely hope that the Magistrates will take cognizance of such repetition, and restrain, by the powerful arm of the law, a practice which the accidents daily occurring, have not sufficient weight to put a stop to."

A TOUCH OF THE MARVELLOUS.—Lord Blaney, an Irish Peer, and a General Officer in the English Army, who, it will be recollected was taken prisoner by the French near Gibraltar, and was afterwards sent into France, has lately published an account of his adventures in that country, in which he relates the following most extraordinary occurrence, stated to have taken place while he and his fellow prisoners were drinking their wine after dinner, near Gueret, in France:—

"Three of the wine-glasses broke spontaneously in pieces, and the wine ran about the table and on the floor; the clock, which had before struck tolerably correct, now struck two hundred and sixteen: the screech owls, of which there were abundance in the neighbourhood, made a hideous noise; and appearances," says his Lordship, "were altogether so very strange, that I observed, there must either have been an earthquake, or some most extraordinary event had taken place.—Our imaginations, from being wound up to the highest pitch of conjecture and anxiety, to devise a cause for such strange occurrences, were soon set at rest by a most violent rapping at the door, which proved to be an express, that brought us the agreeable and wonderful intelligence of Napoleon's abdicating the Throne.

Count Amedee d'Escars, Aide-de-Camp to the Duke d'Angoulemе, set off this morning. The Prince Generalissimo will depart on Saturday (to-morrow.) All the arrangements are made for commencing hostilities between the 1st and 5th of April.

The Emperor of Russia, is stated to have directed a communication to be made to the king of France, that he, Alexander, was highly delighted with Louis's speech at the opening of the session, and that "when such sound doctrines are proclaimed from the legitimate throne of France, the reign of the Jacobins at Madrid is drawing to a close."

Extract of a letter from a Mercantile House in Liverpool, dated 6th March, to their Correspondent in this City

"The report to day is favourable to the cause of Spanish liberty, viz. that 600 men have gone over to the Spanish army from the French—that the Spanish General Mina is marching upon France, his vanguard being composed of 30,000 Frenchmen, under the tri coloured flag."—N. Y. Daily Ad.

From the Norfolk Beacon, April 29.

Highly important.—It is stated in the Bermuda Gazette of the 20th of March, that the British had taken possession of the Island of Porto Rico, and it was believed also, that Porto Cabello, the only place in Caracoas now remaining to the Royalists, was likewise placed under the protection of the British flag. It is added, that a French fleet was expected to arrive soon in the West Indies.

Accounts from Portsmouth of the 11th March, say that orders were received at that place for the immediate equipment of a number of vessels of war, amongst which are the Queen Charlotte, 120 guns, Ramillies, 74 guns, and the Albion, 74 guns—the whole to be properly fitted with every necessary article of rigging, masts, &c. and a full complement of men for each ship.

The British Government has entered into contracts with several houses engaged in the Russian trade, for the supply of 3000 tons of hemp for the Navy. The prices agreed to were, 2000 tons St. Petersburgh hemp 30*l* to 1000 Riga 43*l*.

LONDON, March 15.

We are informed, upon the best authority, that several Officers of the Legion of Honor, who have served under the Imperial Standard, have recently left this country to enter into the Spanish service, in which they are to receive commands.—Globe.

M. MANUEL.—The following is an accurate account of Manuel, the Deputy expelled from the French Chamber.

"He is about 45 years of age, but looks younger;—has a pleasing appearance, and a countenance strongly expressive of talent. He is decidedly the best speaker in the Chamber; and in consequence of his admirable eloquence, he has been the terror of the Ultras and a pillar of strength to his party. At the late election, every possible artifice and intrigue were tried to prevent his return.

The English Journals which contains the account of the dinner given in London, to the Spanish Ambassadors, have been seized by the French police.

In consequence of the warlike intelligence from France and Spain, Consols opened yesterday at 73 5 8, with great bustle in the market.—Spanish bonds fell to 28 1-4, and were afterwards done at 29 1-4.

The number of houses destroyed in the late fire at Canton was, according to the English accounts, 13,000. Ten and two nights, the landed safe at Ithaca, and met the fugitive bard, astonished at her magnanimity. In summer days, this action would have formed the theme of an Epic Poem, and pained by a boy, she spread her little sail to the breeze, and departed away, refusing to let any one of us partake of the deserted Island of Sappho and Phaon.

The barren island of Ithaca had charms for the gloomy mind of his Lordship; and I have reason for supposing, that during the enjoy n e of our adventurous days, the manes of Ulysses ploughing the sea and, when he affected madness, to remain from the siege of Troy, may not have been a fiction, for a more barren and desolate place can scarcely be imagined. The Countess took views from it in many places; her pencil is as often in her hand as his Lordship's pen in his; but it was only chance that ever favoured us with a sight of the productions of either.

On his Lordship's return to Santa Maura, we all embarked on board of a small latteen vessel and sailed for Venice. The first night we encountered a violent storm, which compelled us to seek shelter in a small creek on the west side of Sicca. His Lordship proved a good seaman, and showed his "inhis Lordship proved a good seaman, and showed his "inprovidence in the darkened hour." But for his threats and promises, we should have perished on the rocks. The crew, consisting of Albanians, were the most mutinous towards the end of their service. This his Lordship reminded him of after dinner, and gave him a snuff box, which he desired him to keep as a memorial of his gratitude. The [illegible] fellow's heart was so full that he could not keep the [illegible] box contained a note for 50*l*.

Returned from Ithaca to Venice, we frequently made excursions to the neighbouring towns and villages, where his Lordship was well known; and not unfrequently we had warning given at breakfast to be ready for a journey in two hours. This was the usual mode of taking us unprepared. As persons conversation ever lead to a belief of what were his Lordship's intentions; all his actions appeared to spring from the impulse of the moment. It was not always pleasant, nevertheless, to be thus taken by surprise; and the next day, a knight of the first crusades to make ready for a campaign, who had but one suit in which he slept. Whether he is in his commoner, daily, or full court dress, the only change he makes, in dressing on a pair of tan red brown and red leather boots, and flinging a spotted silk cloak over his shoulders. With a case of pistols in the belt, and a large English pohlition a sharp in his hand, he is armed cap-a-pie for all weathers. If he had half a dozen sets ready to take care of the luggage, he invariably would carry a small portmanteau behind him, which held a change of

The Countess of G——ha occasioned us no noble both in Italy and England, all the romantic tales of his Lordship's being her out of a convent are fictions; she is no subject for a nunnery. Her father is the head of an ancient Roman family, much reduced in its fortunes; he has not his palaces formerly, much reduced in its fortunes; he has not his palaces for their supports, and Lord Byron by chance occupied it when his daughter was given in marriage to the Count G——, an officer poor in every thing but titles. Lord B——made the bride a liberal present of jewels, and in a short time he became the locum tenens of his bridegroom. An amicable arrangement was made, the Count set off to join his army at Naples, newly organised, and the Countess remained on the proof of the noble Lord, where the latter sees as no [illegible] Italian woman, not more [illegible] Spanish female woman, not more [illegible] guitar of the household. [illegible] Spanish female woman, not more than twenty-two years of age, of a gay, volatile disposition; rides like an Amazon, and fishes, hunts and shoots with his Lordship. Nature appears to have formed them for each other. She is beloved by all the domestics, and is friendly to every one that wants her aid. She speaks English with purity, and possesses many accomplishments.

Her spirit is of the most intrepid description. Two months ago we went on a shooting party to the Island of Santa Maura, the ancient Leucadia, where Sappho took the love er's leap, and buried in oblivion all memory of Phaon's inconstancy. My Lord was taken with one of his odd vagaries, and, without saying a word to any one, embarked in a boat to Ithaca. Chance directed a boat to St. Maura, putance to Ithaca. Chance directed a boat to St. Maura, putance to Ithaca. Chance directed a boat to St. Maura, putance
