Editorial Commentary.

The last mail has brought some late dates, by which we learn that some additional advantages have been gained by the British Troops in India, in consequence of the confusion into which the Burmese forces had been thrown by the assassination of the King of Ava.

It still continues to be rumoured that a Dissolution of the British Parliament will take place after the close of the present Session

Sir J. C Smith, Bart, Sir Geo C Hoste, Knt and Capt Harris, of the Engineers, have arrived in Canada. Their object is a tour of inspection of the fortifications in His Majesty's North American Dominions.

A gene al respite for Mr Savery, convicted of Forgery on his own plea of Guilty, has been sent down to Bristol by express.

No less than Three of the Wives of a Brahmin who died lately at Santpore have asked permission to be burnt with the dead body of their departed husband. One of them was fifteen years old, another twenty-one, and the third twenty-seven!

Cheering intelligence has again arrived from Greece. The Egyptian forces which landed at Modon have been completely defeated and it is said that Ibrahim Pacha himself is blockaded in the fortress at that place. The Greeks have made a very rich booty It is added that the campaign has opened decidedly in favour of Greece, and that glorious news may be shortly expected from that quarter.

The Canada and Nova Scotia Steam Navigation Company has been formed in London—with a capital of £50,000. The Prospectus is out. Its object is the establishment of a regular line of Steam Packets—from Quebec to Halifax, touching at Miramichi, Richibucto, &c.

It would seem by a report, just received, and which is by no means unlikely to prove true, that the famous encounter at Warwick between a Lion and Six Mastiffs is all a hoax: at least many of the London papers assert that to be the case; and, that Mr. Wombwell, himself, is the author of it.

All the papers assure us that the Embassy of the Duke of Northumberland to France, in order to attend the Coronation at Rheims, on the part of His Majesty the King of Great Britain, will be one of the most splendid missions which have been sent from England for some centuries. The magnificent spirit of the King will be nobly represented by his Grace, whose personal worth and vast estates render him one of the greatest subjects in Europe. He will be accompanied, specially, by four Noblemen of the first families, namely, by Lord Hervey, Lord Pendoor, brother to His Grace, Lord Pelham, and Lord Leveson Gower, second son of the Marquess of Stafford and the Countess of Sutherland. Besides these Noblemen his train will be composed of other gentlemen and attendants to the number of nearly one hundred; but what is most gratifying to find is, that the whole expense will be defrayed by the Duke This is worthy the spirit of the heir of the Percys. The last great embassy of this kind was that of Geo. Villars, the great Duke of Buckingham, the splendour of which is recorded in history.

The Duke of Northumberland has taken the most magnificent Hotel in Rheims. It has 25 windows in front.

The Coronation will take place on the 12th of June.

TRIAL OF MR. SAVERY.

Some weeks since, we noticed the arrest of Mr. Savery, the son of a respectable Banker of the City of Bristol, on a charge of forging a Bill of Exchange. It will be remembered, that this unfortunate gentleman had embarked on board of one of the packets for New York and was taken from the ship by the officers of police. His trial took place at the April term, held in Bristol—On being placed at the bar, he plead Guilty. This plea was wholly unexpected by the Court; and being delivered in a firm voice, produced a great effect, particularly on the Judge, Lord Gifford, who changed colour, and remained silent for some time. At length he King an easily in the prisoner's face he inquired if he had been induced to make that plea by the hope of pardon—He replied, that he had done it deliberately His Lordship told him to consider a short time before he determined to persevere in that plea. The prisoner shook his head, reclined on his hand and again covered his face, agitated by grief.

Clerk of the Arraigns. "Shall I enter the verdict, my Lord?"

The Recorder. "Wait a short time."

The prisoner was then removed; and on being brought back, and saying that he persisted in his plea the Judge putting on his black cap, addressed him in a very solemn manner, and after urging him not to indulge the hope of a pardon, proceeded to pronounce the sentence of death. The prisoner seemed to lose all power of breathing, and dropped down his head. Mr. Smith, one of the prosecutors, who had before attempted to address the Court, made way through the crowd, by the witness box, and very agitatingly exclaimed

"My Lord as the prosecutor, I recommend him to mercy, if mercy can be shown. The consequences of his crime were limited. the public have suffered nothing—hardly any thing.

Lord Gifford leant back in his seat, visibly affected; but made no reply The prisoner was then removed from the dock, amidst the deathly silence of a crowded Court, many of the persons present well knowing the prisoner and his father the banker.

LIVERPOOL, April 19.

The House of Lords assembled on Wednesday after the Easter recess, and the House of Commons on the following day.—The subjects which will, during the remainder of the Session occupy the attention of Parliament are of a most interesting nature, and intimately connected with the safety, the prosperity, and the happiness of the country The question which most pre eminently demands the impartial and dispassionate consideration of both Houses, is that which involves the claims of our Catholic fellow subjects to a full participation in the privileges of our free constitution The present seems a conjuncture most auspicious for the favourable consideration of the momentous question The country is in profound peace, enjoying a state of an unusual prosperity; the prejudices which once beclouded the public mind on this subject are dissipated, and the alarms to which they gave the have vanished with them.

COMBAT

Between the Lion Nero and Six Mastiffs of the true English Breed.

FOR FIVE THOUSAND SOVEREIGNS, ON THE RACE-COURSE AT WARWICK, ON TUESDAY LAST.

DOGS

1	Crack . . .	Handled by .	Thomas Ewlt.
2	Billy . . .	ditto . . .	Charles Howell.
3	Crib . . .	ditto . . .	William Foster.
4	Neptune . .	ditto . . .	Thomas King.
5	Jerry . . .	ditto . . .	John Childers.
6	Nelson . . .	ditto . . .	William Welch.

This singular contest was attractive in a great interest, and the door of admittance was crowded long before the hour of admission, which was fixed for one o'clock As soon as the doors were opened (although the price of admission was 7s 6d to the place was crowded in every part, and the most intense anxiety prevailed for the time to arrive. Betting way fairly be quoted at five to four on the dogs, it being generally supposed that the lion was over matched, from the natural propensity of the dogs to hold their prey—while any power of resistance remained, as three of them were to attack him at once At length the lion approached to "Cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war!" As soon as the lion Nero was b ought into the area he evinced something of his natural ferocity by pawing the earth, roaring tremendously, and lashing his sides with his tail for several minutes. At a quarter past two the dogs were brought in and Crack, Billy, and Nelson, were let slip at the royal beast: Nelson appeared a little intimidated, but the others rushed at their formidable antagonist with great spirit. Nero no sooner saw them advancing, than he couched on his forepaws and sprang on Billy, grasped him in his jaws, and literally crushed him to pieces. Betting was now sharp in favour of Nero, as Nelson and Crack hung immoleated on his shaggy mane, until he shook them off Nelson succeeded in pinning him by the under jaw, while the other fastened on his near hind leg. Nero forcibly threw up his head; and raising his near fore paw, made a plunge at the latter, but Crack escaped, and in turning to nose him, met the rage of the beast cleverly for a few moments; Nelson loosened his hold, and was biding to his flanks, caught a blow with the Lion's paw, which broke his back, and thus two of his opponents were disabled on the ground.

The door of the carravan was now opened, and a sensation of bustle took place for a few moments. In about five minutes Cribb, Neptune, and Jerry, were brought out (Crack being kept in reserve to supply the place of the disabled dog) The Lion was again brought out: he appeared little worse for his fatigue, and put his three new combatants with unabated spirit —All the dogs rushed at his nose, and came in finely, without coming in contact with his deadly paws. This did not last long, for shaking them off, he got Cribb within the grasp of his leviathan jaws, and every bone was crushed in an instant. The other dog was next slain, and the royal beast having his work before him, began to finish it in earnest. Poor Crack no sooner came within reach than he received a death blow, and the mireped beast seemed goaded to madness; he lashed his sides, and rushed on Neptune, and succeeded in maiming him in the left side, which reduced him to a helpless state. Jerry only was able to meet the royal beast; and as the articles specified, that if the number of dogs should be reduced to one the remaining one should be drawn, and the owner entitled to £100, victory was consequently declared in favour of Nero amidst shouts of declening applause.

The King and the Canadian Chiefs —Further interesting particulars.—Windsor April 9.—The interesting Canadian Chiefs (whose visit to this place we have already stated) accompanied by Sir John Chapman, and Mr. Irving Brock, brother of the late gallant Sir Isaac Brock, who fell in Canada during the last American war, proceeded on Thursday by invitation to the Royal Lodge, and were introduced to his Majesty on the lawn. Immediately on seeing the King, the portrait of the late sovereign with which they had been invested by Sir Isaac Brock, attracted his Majesty's attention, who observing to them that as they had the portrait of his late father, perhaps they would have no objection to wearing his, immediately hung a handsome gold medalion round their necks, which they kissed with the utmost fervour."

The Grand Chief then addressed his Majesty (in French) in the following words:—

"I was instructed not to speak in the Royal presence, unless in answer to your Majesty's questions; but my feelings overpower me; my heart is full; I am amazed at such unexpected grace and condescension and cannot doubt that I shall be pardoned for expressing our gratitude. The sun is shedding its genial rays upon our heads. It reminds me of the Great Creator of the Universe—of Him who can make live and who can kill. Oh! may the gracious and beneficient Being, who promises to answer the fervent prayers of his people, bless abundantly your Majesty; may he grant you much bodily health and, for the sake of your happy subjects, may he prolong your valuable life. It is not alone the four individuals who now stand before your Majesty who will return to the end of their lives a sense of this kind and touching reception; the whole nation whose representatives we are, will ever love and be devoted to you—their good and great father."

His Majesty's answer to their adress was most gracious. It was in French also, and in substance as follows:

"He observed, that he had listened with great delight to their affecting and loyal Address; that he had always respected the excellent people who formed the various tribes in his North American possessions, and that he would avail himself of every opportunity to promote their welfare, secure their happiness, and prove himself to be indeed their father.

His Majesty then conversed with them in the same language in the most affable manner, for above a quarter of an hour.

After seeing the interior of the Royal Lodge, the stables, the animals, and the birds, Sir Andrew Barnard conducted them to Cumberland Lodge, where a table, provided with refreshments, was prepared for them.—Thursday evening they left Windsor for London, expressing their gratitude at having seen "their great father King George," and the manner in which they had been received. Besides the medallions hung round their necks, his Majesty presented each of them with a print from his full length portrait by Sir Thomas Lawrence. We understand the business which brought them to this country, was to recover possession of some lands that had been taken from them during the American war; and that a promise has been given them that in case the same lands cannot be restored to them, they are to have a grant of another track of land.

Mr. Hayne and Miss Foote.—The Observer of yesterday (April 3,) contains a minute account of the manner in which the second intimacy between Mr. Hayne and Miss Foote commenced, and of the circumstances which prevented the union of the parties after the arrangements had been made. "His offer (it is said) was received with becoming caution: he must settle five hundred a year pinmoney on his wife —agreed; he must leave her own income under her sole control—agreed; he must settle three hundred a-year for life on the mother, in the event of the daughter's death—agreed. The mother must live with the daughter—agreed. Every thing, in reason, was conceded: and even more—to which we will not now advert. The settlem nts were drawn up by Miss Foote's own solicitor. Mr. Hayne's solicitor was never consulted Mr Hayne's trustees were Sir Lambert Cross Bart, and Edward Bosanby, Esq of the Third Dragoon Guards. Those for Miss Foote—George Rennins and Mr. Platt. Mr. Hayne signed the settlements at five o'clock on the evening of Thursday week; and, on the same evening, after her performance, Miss F. followed his example. "Well, but (said Prudence) Miss F. will have an excellent benefit. She will do well at Glasgow and Liverpool, and elsewhere. Why should this money be lost? why not marry privately, and let the ample harvest be reaped?" "No (said Mr. H.) I can never suffer Mrs. H to appear on the boards." The bill for drawing the settlements was £200: this was paid. The first year's pin money was paid in advance Every thing promised the completion of the lover's hopes: they were to set out for Dover on Sunday, after Fawcett's benefit, where the marriage was to take place, and then off to the Continent to revel in the luxury of passion On Saturday, Mr. H. received a note: Miss F. was to meet him in his private box at Covent-Garden after the play. He was there; but she came not. He rushed to Keppel-street; she had not come from the Theatre. He was referred to the house of her solicitor. Thither he flew—and, there, to his astonishment, he was told, verbally and coldly, that, upon consideration, Miss Foote had determined to pause: and it was hinted that she could not consent to relinquish her theatrical engagements, unless some provision was made for her father and mother, during her life, as they must be left destitute, if unaided by her labours' Such is the nature of the story we have been told; and which as we before said, we believe to be true."

Foreign Intelligence.

IMPORTANT—INVASION OF CUBA.

The following highly important intelligence, is contained in a New Orleans paper, of the 20th April.—Whether the Mexicans will succeed in subjugating the island of Cuba, is problematical The Havana has unharmed stood the brunt of as powerful forces as are now destined against it. It is said that there is good ground for believing that the Spanish garrison is disaffected, and that for this reason the enterprise is now undertaken. The most important consequences to our commerce must necessarily follow.

Extract of a letter dated Alvarado, March 28, 1825

"We have been all bustle here of late, making an effort to wage war with Cuba, by sending troops to Campeachy, where, report says, 12 or 13,000 men are concentrating to invade the Island of Cuba, by way of check mating the famous Castle of St. Juan de Ulloa: 1,500 men, well equipped, went out of this port this morning in six merchant vessels, taken as transports; the brig Margaret Wright, Chamberlain, of Norfolk, Virginia, the others were English, French, and one of this country, under convoy of two heavy gun boats — This government pays them extravagantly well, and has better credit for liberality than any other.

"The government armed schr. Iguala and a gun boat, succeeded in capturing a Spanish government armed felucca from Cuba. which had supplied the castle, and was returning A report is in circulation here to-day, that Bolivar will join St. Anna with troops, and with such forces for the invasion as to render success certain; the soldiers enlisted from this country are well adapted for such an enterprise. I enclose you the proclamation of St. Anna, which may be worth publishing. The independence of that Island, I fear, will ruin the agriculture and injure the commerce of the United States. I leave to futurity events as they transpire."

PROCLAMATION.

The Commanding General of the State of Yucatan, to the division destined for the Island of Cuba

Soldiers!—You will, for some days, leave your own soil to occupy that of a neighboring enemy. Your object should be the possession of one of the principal fortresses of Havana. The state of war in which we are placed with the Spanish nation, the interests of this country, and the clamors of good men in the island of Cuba, who have petitioned for aid, however trifling, from the Mexican Republic, authorise the present undertaking Occupying an enemy's position by a military manœuvre, doing away injury to the nation, and securing innumerable advantages instead thereof, and diverting a country of brothers, are inappreciable services which I cannot decline.

Soldiers!—The operation you are about to execute is the first of a combined plan.—The military and many of the inhabitants will co-operate with you for its fulfilment. You will maintain at every hazard, the position you occupy until I can join you.

Soldiers!—You are going to perform for your country, a most important service, the effecting of which will elevate you to the rank of heroes. You are about to secure the independence of this republic for ever as well as that of the Island of Cuba.

Soldiers!—The nation confides to your valor and virtue the destiny of thousands. I cannot doubt but 1500 men, animated with intentions like yours, will be enough to intimidate and even vanquish the handful of mercenary soldiers, whom the Capt General of that Island can count upon; as otherwise, we have more than enough in the single Province of Yucatan, to perform it with activity and enthusiasm.

ANTONIO LOPEZ de Santa ANNA

Campeachy, March 7, 1825.

MR. O'CONNEL'S LETTER,

To the Chairman of the Catholic Association of Ireland.

(Concluded)

Sixthly—There is nothing sought for, or desired in the way of security, inconsistent with the doctrine or discipline of our Church. This part of the business is taken up in a way, full of kindness and good sense. It is felt that, to give an Emancipation Bill, which, instead of conciliating would increase irritation and jealousy, would be mere folly—and, therefore, the securities sought for, are sought for in their proper place—namely, the affectionate gratitude of the Irish people—and, in such an arrangement as will make the nomination of our Prelates essentially domestic and national, without trenching upon the Canonical rights of the Catholic Church. The allegiance of our Dignitaries, which was never doubted, will thus be placed within the view of the law, but nothing at all of Veto, or Vetoistical arrangement, is sought for or desired — Those who are supporting the Bill on both sides of the House, have combined in putting it forward in the most cordial and satisfactory way. In short, our Emancipation, if thus obtained, will be just what all liberal Protestants, as well as ourselves have desired—namely UNCONDITIONAL EMANCIPATION.

Seventhly—It is proposed to make a provision, by the Bill, for the Catholic Clergy; such a provision as would give them the means of doing acts of charity, instead of being almost under the necessity of obtaining it. But it is not intended, by such Provision, to alter or effect the existing jurisdiction of the Catholic Prelates in Ireland; neither is there any new oath required, or any thing but what the most conscientious Catholic can desire. In short, if we are now emancipated, we shall be so in the true spirit of British generosity, and in a way to make every Catholic in Ireland pour out blessings upon his Protestant fellow-subjects. I do, indeed, think, that a new era is arriving fast, when religious dissensions will cease with religious disabilities.

Eighthly—It has been suggested for some time past, by many Members of Parliament connected with the Government, that the elective franchise, in counties, but not in cities, should be raised form 40s. to £5 or £10. It is not to be raised in cities, because in cities the Corporation can make poor freemen; and therefore the counteracting qualification will be left low; besides in cities there are none of those overwhelming large landed proprietors who can make a host of poor freeholders, and traffic upon them as if they were actual slaves. The quantity of perjury and crime produced in counties, by the present system is enormous; and the prepondearting influence which the 40s. free holders give to great landholders over the resident intellects and honesty of a county, is quite frightful. For my own part, I really think that raising the qualification to £5 or even to £10 would add to the Catholic influence in Ireland; but, however that may be, it is not necessary to be in any haste to form an opinion on this subject, as before any measure of this kind is adopted, full time will be given for deliberation, and for consulting the sound sense of the Irish people.

Ninthly—It is intended to give the Emancipation Bill a first reading, in about a week, and then to have it printed for circulation in England and Ireland; and we shall have full time to deliberate on it in all its clauses. The second reading will be after Easter. I wish I did possess any influence in the Catholic Association—I wish I deserved the confidence of my beloved countrymen—if I did, I would use it just to this extent—to implore that neither the Association, collectively, nor, if possible, any individual belonging to it, would give any opinion upon the change of the elective franchise, until the Bill was printed, or until my arrival amongst you. Indeed, I mean to carry with me the printed Bill after its first reading. I know something, I think, of human nature, and if I can judge from the symptoms of the times, Emancipation is certainly at hand.

I have made a great sacrifice in coming here—this sacrifice continues—I wish it was ten times as great! I do not boast of it; but I have been amply recompensed in the strong belief, that the Deputation has done good. The Gentlemen who compose it, and especially our Chairman, Lord Killeen, deserve, I think, eternal gratitude.

There is one more cheering circumstance. I perceive a kind and generous feeling amongst the Irish Members, who hitherto, opposed us violently. Believing me that they are worthier and better men than our passion allowed us to think. I see the beginning of better days—of mutual oblivion of the past—of mutual affection, and real and permanent conciliation for the future—I hope I may say,

Erin, Oh, Erin, thy winter is past,
And the hope that lived through it,
Shall blossom at last.

I have the honour to be Sir,
Your most faithful Servant,
DANIEL O'CONNELL.

LORD BYRON'S CONVERSATIONS.

By Captain Medwin.

"Talking of romances, he said: 'The Monk' is perhaps one of the best in any language, not excepting the German. It only wanted one thing, as I told Lewis, to have rendered it perfect. He should have made the daemon really in love with Ambrosio; this would have given it a human interest. 'The Monk' was written when Lewis was only twenty, and he seems to have exhausted all his genius on it Perhaps at that age he was in earnest in his belief of magic wonders. That is the secret of Walter Scott's inspiration: he retains and encourages all the superstitions of his youth. Lewis caught his passion for the marvellous, and it amounted to a mania with him, in Germany; but the groundwork of 'The Monk' is neither original nor German: it is derived from the tale of 'Santon Barsisa.' The episode of 'The Bleeding Nun,' which was turned into a melodrama, is from the German.

"'There were two stories which he almost believed by telling. One happened to himself whilst he was residing at Manheim. Every night, at the same hour, he heard or thought he heard in his room, when he was lying in bed, a crackling noise like that produced by parchment, or thick paper. This circumstance caused enquiry, when it was told him that the sounds were attributable to the following cause:—The house in which he lived had belonged to a widow, who had an only son. In order to prevent his marrying a poor but amiable girl, to whom he was attached, he was sent to sea. Years passed, and the mother heard no tidings of him, nor the ship in which he had sailed.—It was supposed that the vessel had been wrecked, and that all on board had perished. The reproaches of the girl, the upbraidings of her own conscience, and the loss of her child, crazed the old lady's mind, and her only pursuit became to turn over the Gazettes for news. Hope at length left her: she did not live long, —and continued her old occupation after death.

"'The other story that I alluded to before, was the original of this 'Alonzo and Imogene,' which has had such a host of imitators. Two Florentine Lovers, who had been attached to each other almost from childhood, made a vow of eternal fidelity. Mina was the name of the lady—her husband's I forget, but it is not material. They parted. He had been for some time absent with his regiment, when, as his disconsolate lady was sitting alone in her chamber, she distinctly heard the well-known sound of his footsteps, and starting up beheld, not her husband, but his spectre, with a deep ghastly wound across his forehead, entering.—She swooned with horror: when she recovered, the ghost told her that in future his visits should be announced by a passing bell, and these words, distinctly whispered, 'Mina, I am here!' Their interviews now became frequent, till the woman fancied herself as much in love with the ghost as she had been with the man. But it was soon to prove otherwise. One fatal night she went to a ball.—what business had she there! She danced too; and, what was worse, her partner was a young Florentine, so much the counterpart of her lover, that she became estranged from his ghost. Whilst the young gallant conducted her in the waltz, and her ear drank in the music of his voice and words, a passing bell tolled! She had been accustomed to the sound till it hardly excited her attention, and now lost in the attractions of her fascinating partner, she heard but regarded it not. A second peal!—she listened not to its warnings. A third time the bell, with its deep and iron tongue, startled the assembled company, and silenced the music! Mina then turned her eyes from her partner, and saw reflected in the mirror, a form, a shadow, a spectre: it was her husband! He was standing between her and the young Florentine, and whispered in a solemn and melancholy tone the accustomed accents, 'Mina, I am here!' She instantly fell dead.

"'Lewis was not a very successful writer. His 'Monk' was abused furiously by Matthias, in his 'Pursuits of Literature,' and he was forced to suppress it. 'Abelino' he merely translated. 'Pizarro' was a sore subject with him, and no wonder that he winced at the name. Sheridan, who was not very scrupulous about applying to himself literary property at least, manufactured his play without so much as an acknowledgment, pecuniary or otherwise, from Lewis's ideas; and bad as 'Pizarro' is, I know (from having been on the Drury-lane Committee, and knowing, consequently, the comparative profits of plays,) that it brought in more money than any other play has ever done, or perhaps ever will do.

"'But to return to Lewis. He was even worse treated about 'The Castle Spectre,' which had also an immense run, a prodigious success. Sheridan never gave him any of its profits either. One day Lewis being in company with him said,—Sheridan, I will make you a large bet' Sheridan, who was always ready to make a wager, (however he might find it inconvenient to pay it if lost,) asked eagerly what bet? 'All the profits of my Castle Spectre,' replied Lewis. 'I will tell you what,' said Sheridan, (who never found his match at repartee,) 'I will make you a very small one,—what it is worth.'

"'I asked him if he had known Sheridan?

"'Yes,' said he. 'Sheridan was an extraordinary compound of contradictions, and Moore will be much puzzled in reconciling them for the Life he is writing. The upper part of Sheridan's face was that of a god—a forehead most expansive, an eye of peculiar brilliancy and fire; but below he showed the satyr.

"'Lewis was a pleasant companion, and would always have remained a boy in spirits and manners (unlike me!) He was fond of the society of younger men than himself. I myself never knew a man, except Shelley, who was companionable till thirty I remember Mrs. Pope once asking who was Lewis's male love this season? He possessed a very lively imagination, and a great turn for narrative, and had a world of ghost stories, which he had better have confined himself to telling. His poetry is now almost forgotten: it will be the same with that of all but two or three poets of the day.

"'Lewis had been, or thought he had been, unkind to a brother whom he lost young; and when any thing disagreeable was about to happen to him, the vision of his brother appeared: he came as a sort of monitor.'"

Natural History.

Toads.—At Inowraclaw, in Poland, on the 13th ult as M. Wrukiewski, a landholder, was employing some workmen to dig up clay, after penetrating a bed six feet thick, which to all appearance had never been disturbed, they came to loose sea sand, on which lay, in several small groups, between thirty and forty toads, which at first seemed to be dead, but were soon animated by the warmth of the rays of the sun. In consequence of inspiring the atmospheric air, they died in about two hours, except a few which were put into the ground, where they were still living two days from the date of their discovery. The mass of clay is so hard, that not even a root or a worm could perforate it, and much less these animals. The little hollow in the sand, too, in which they lay, was surrounded with a hard incrustation. Their skin, which is soft, shining, and without excrescences, is very different from that of the common toad.

Annual return of Migrating Birds to the same spot. The late Dr. Jenner, in a curious paper on the migration of birds, published since his death in the Phil Trans for 1824, mentions the following curious experiment: "At a farm house in this neighbourhood I procured several swifts, and by taking off two claws from the foot of twelve, I fixed upon them an indeliable mark. The year following, their nesting places were examined in an evening, when they had retired to roost, and there I found several of the marked birds. The second and third year a similar search was made, and did not fail to produce some of those that were marked. I now ceased to make an annual search; but at the expiration of seven years a cot was seen to bring a bird into the farmer's kitchen, and this also proved to be one of those marked for the experiment.

THE STRUGGLES OF GREECE.

The following beautiful lines are extracted from the Poem, entitled Athens, by Winthrop Mackworth Pread, Esq. which obtained the Chancellor's Medal at the Cambridge Commencement, 1824.

Oh! by the mighty shades that dimly glide
Where victory bestrews upon the turf or tide,
By those who sleep at Marathon in bliss,
By every laurell'd brow and holy name,
By those who fell at glorious Salamis,
By every thought of freedom and of fame,
By all ye hear, by all that ye have borne,
By all ye see, and the glance of scorn;
The fruitless labour, and the broken rest,
The bitter torture, and the bitterer jest,
By our sweet infants' unavailing cry,
Your sister's blush, your mother's stifled sigh,
By all the tears that ye have wept and weep.—
Break, Sons of Athens, break your weary sleep.

Yes! it is broken! Hark the sudden shock
Rolls on from wave to wave, from rock to rock;
Up, for the Cross and Freedom! far and near,
Forth starts the sword, and gleams the patriot spear,
And burst's the echo of the battle song,
Cheering and swift, the banded hosts along,
On, Sons of Athens! let your wrongs and woes
Burnish the blade, and nerve the whistling bows;
Green be the laurel, ever blest the meed,
Of him that shines to day in martial deed,
And sweet his sleep beneath the dewy sod,
Who falls for fame, his country, and his God!

The hoary sire has bound his locks of gray,
Scorned the safe hearth, and tottered to the fray;
The beardless boy has left his gilt guitar,
And bared his arm for manhood's noble war,
E'n the weak girl has mailed her bosom there,
Clasped the rude helmet on her auburn hair,
Changed love's own smile for valour's fiery glance,
Mirth for the field, the distaff for the lance.
Yes! she was beauteous, that Athenian maid,
When erst she sate within her myrtle shade,
Without a passion, and without a thought,
Save those which innocence and childhood brought,
Delicious hopes, and dreams of life and love,
Young flowers below, and cloudless skies above,
But oh, how fair, how more than doubly fair,
Thus, with the laurel twined around her hair—
While at her feet her country's chiefs assemble,
And these soft tones amid the war-cry tremble,
As some sweet lute creep el equently in,
Breaking the tempest of the trumpet's din—
Her corselet fastened with a golden clasp—
Her falchion buckled to her tender grasp—
And quivering lip, flushed cheek, and flashing eye,
All breathing fire, all speaking 'LIBERTY!'

It is intended that one third of the capital be reserved for persons residing in Canada.

Communicated for the Observer.

Sir,

Having just seen a machine for pulling up the stumps of trees invented by a Mr. Harris, an ingenious mechanic who resides on the Lake shore, in the Town ship of Trafalgar, I am very desirous that his invention should be made public as well for the good of the country as for his remuneration. I shall not attempt a description of this engine, but rather solicit the people who are interested in effectually clearing their lands to call on Mr. Harris and judge for themselves. It is extremely powerful, multiplying the force applied to it 700, or 800 times, which also can be increased or diminished as occasion may require, being very simple and may be wrought by men or horses. It is capable of pulling out the largest stumps, and can be moved from place to place by a single yoke of oxen. The machine, I understand, will when delivered and erected, cost about $25; but should Mr. Harris get a number of orders, he will be able to furnish it under $20

Every landholder, or, at least, every two or three neighbours ought to have one of these machines—they would be very useful on the roads As two men can easily pull from 16 to 20 large stumps per day.

I have only to add, that this notice, which I shall feel much obliged to you to publish, has been unsolicited by, and, indeed, is unknown to Mr. Harris.

I am, Sir,
Your Obedient Servant,
A TORONTO FARMER.

Resolved, 1st,—That it appears to this Committee, that at the last Election for the County of Essex, Francis Baby, Esq and Nicholas Little, appeared at the close of the Poll, to have an equality of votes, and that the Returning Officer made a return only of one Member, John Alexander Wilkinson, Esq. making no return of another Member on account of the said equality of votes.

Resolved, 2nd,—That the Election appearing to the Committee to have been in some respects irregularly conducted, and the votes being equal on the Poll Book, it appears to the Committee that under these circumstances, the Election, except so far as regards the said John Alexander Wilkinson, Esq. should be declared void, and that a new Writ shall issue for the Election of one Member to serve in Parliament for the said County of Essex.

Commons House of Assembly, }
25th March, 1825 }

Messrs. ROLPH, and Thomson, were appointed a Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the above Address.

Mr. ROLPH from the Committee to confer with the Committee appointed by the Honourable the Legislative Council on the subject matter of the intercourse between the two Houses, reported as follows:—

The Legislative Council have desired this Conference to acquaint the House of Assembly, that it was not the intention of the Legislative Council, by any expression used by them in their resolutions communicated by message to the House of Assembly, to cast a personal censure upon their Speaker, nor did they conceive that language used only to describe the form of receiving their message by the House of Assembly could have been so applied.

The Legislative Council desires also to acquaint the House of Assembly, that in noticing the departure from the usage which had always before prevailed in the House of Assembly in regard to messages received from the Legislative Council, they have been governed only by a desire to preserve order and regularity in the proceedings between the two branches of the Legislature, which they are convinced cannot be attained with more certainty than by observing known and long established rules; that although they would on this account prefer that the mode of communication between the two Houses remained on its former footing, they would not have been found unwilling to conform to any parliamentary usage for which precedent can be found in the Mother Country, nor are they disposed to inquire rigidly into the origin of forms which have obtained the sanction of long usage either in the Mother Country or in this Province, but they can not but believe that the most certain method of preserving that good understanding which they desire should prevail between them and the House of Assembly, is to come to an explicit explanation in the first instance with respect to any unprecedented deviation from those established usages common to them both.

If indeed the construction of the 21st Rule of the House of Assembly, had admitted in the judgment of that House the delivery of messages from the Legislative Council to the Clerk at the Table to be by him handed to the Speaker, the Legislative Council would have felt no disposition to except to a practice which would have conformed as they believe to the present usage of the British House of Commons, and which the Legislative Council regard as an additional courtesy rather than a departure from the ancient order.

The Legislative Council finding that the House of Assembly maintain in their first Resolution, that their Rule introducing an entire deviation from the practice which had prevailed since the first institution of the Legislature is no infringement on the privileges of the Legislative Council, would have been happy to find precedents in the usage of the Imperial Parliament, which it might have been thought had led to its adoption, but they have hitherto looked for them in vain, and they are unwilling to suppose that the House of Assembly would desire to introduce a new mode of intercourse, in which both branches of the Legislature are equally concerned, unless it were for the purpose of adhering more closely to those usages in the Imperial Parliament to which neither branch of the Legislature has hitherto discovered a reluctance to conform

On motion of Mr ATTORNEY GENERAL, it was ordered that the House should, on the morrow take into consideration the report of the Committee of Conference upon the subject of the 21st Rule of the House, and that that matter should stand first on the order of the day for the morrow.—Adjourned

SATURDAY, 26th March, 1825.

Leave was granted to the ATTY. GENERAL, to bring in the petition of John S. Baldwin, and others, merchants of the Home District—and of Wm Hands. Esq. and Joseph C Lewis Leave of absence was granted to Mr. VanKoughnett, after the following Monday, during the remainder of the Session.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. McDonell of Glengary, after the following Wednesday, during the remainder of the Session.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the House went into the consideration of the report of the Committee of Conference on the subject of the intercourse between the two Houses.

Mr ROLPH moved that is might be Resolved, that the explanation given by the Honourable the Legislative Council, disclaiming any intention to convey, by their resolution, any personal censure against the Speaker of this House, is satisfactory

In amendment, Mr ATTY GENERAL moved, that after the word "that" in the original motion, the remaining words be expunged and the following inserted, "the Commons House of Assembly are satisfied to find that no personal censure of their Speaker was intended by the Legislative Council in their message, and they trust the Honourable the Legislative Council will readily excuse their misapprehension upon that point"

On which the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows.

YEAS.—Messrs. Atty General, Gordon, Charles Jones, McLean, Morris, VanKoughnett, and Walker.—7.

NAYS.—Messrs Atkinson, Beardsly, Beasly, Clark, Ewing, Hamilton, Hornor, Ingersol, D. Jones, Lefferty, Matthews, McBride McDonald, McDonell, Peterson, Playter, Randal, Rolph, Scollick, Thompson, Thomson, Walsh, Wilson, and Wilkinson—24.

The Question was decided in the negative by a majority of 17, and lost accordingly.

The original Question was then put and carried Nem. Con.

Mr ROLPH moved that it be Resolved, that the construction of the 21st Rule of this House admits of the delivering of the message, from the Honourable the Legislative Council, to the Clerk at the table, to be, by him, handed to the Speaker.

In amendment Mr. ATTY. GENERAL moved, that after the word "that" in the original motion, the remaining words be expunged, and the following words inserted, "this House will so far alter their 21st Rule as to admit of the delivering of the messages, of the Hon the Legislative Council, to the Clerk at the table.

Mr. ROLPH moved that it might be Resolved, that this House, in exchanging the above explanation with the Hon. the Legislative Council, is conscious of a sincere and undeviating disposition to continue its intercourse with that House, in that harmonious manner which will conduce to their mutual dignity, and the advancement of the public good.

Which was carried,

Mr ROLPH moved, that a message be sent to the Hon. the Legislative Council, acquainting that House that the House of Assembly has received the communication of that Hon. Editorial Commentary.

THE IRISH CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION BILL has passed the second reading, in the House of Commons, by a majority of 27—having received the strenuous support of Mr. CANNING. This determines in fate in that House—though it is by no means conclusive as to what may be done by the Peers, before whom the Archbishop of Armagh is summoned to give evidence.

HIS Excellency, the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, inspected the Troops at Kingston on Wednesday the 1st inst. and proceeded on the following morning, in a Batteau for the Lower Province.

IT may be satisfactory to those gentlemen of the Gore District who have forwarded the notice, published in this day's Gazette relative to an application which it is intended to make to the Provincial Legislature for the passing of a Law in favour of the creditors of absconding debtors—to be told, that a Member of the Assembly, who took his seat but a few days before the prorogation of last Session, and who had not time then to bring it forward, is preparing a modified Bankrupt Law, adapted to the circumstances and present state of this country, which it is his intention to submit to the consideration of Parliament at an early period of its next Session; and, in which, provision is made enabling creditors not only to attach the property of absconding debtors; but, also to attach both property and money in transitu, or in the hands of a third person, which is the custom of some of the large trading communities of England, and particularly of London—The Bill alluded to will contain many provisions alike beneficial to the creditor, and to the honest debtor—who has been, hitherto, but too frequently involved in all the disabilities, oppressions, and fatal consequences, which should alone be the portion of him who would fraudulently appropriate to himself the time, the labour, and the property of others.

AFTER one week's calm deliberation on the merits of the communication which has been sent to us on the subject of the new steam boat Toronto, and its proprietors, engineers, &c &c &c. including MR. CAREY—and his twenty-per-cent-premium-advertisement, signed "A COMMITTEE-MAN"; we have decided on withholding it,—as being too personal without the promise of any good and adequate results. We are, ourselves, such warm advocates for every species of improvement that we should be sorry to be the means, even indirectly, of checking the exertion of any individual—though that individual should be no higher than an infant engineer of very small pretensions.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Conveyance of Mails.—A proposal is under consideration by Government for an improved system of conveying the foreign mails. The plan suggested would extend to their most distant possessions in every quarter of the globe. It is calculated that the rapidity of conveyance would be such as to produce an average saving of 2 months' interest on the aggregate amount of foreign remittances. Three years are required to completing the arrangements necessary for establishing a general communication with every point from which foreign mails are received. The decision of Government on this proposition was expected daily.

Contrast.—The funeral of the late King of France is said to have cost the nation about $400,000. The sum would pay the salary of the President of the U. States for sixteen years.

The Wandering Jew.—A few days ago there was a fellow with a long beard in London, who professed himself to be The Wandering Jew. He did not adhere to the legend, which was of little consequence, as his visiters were not likely to be better informed than himself, but laid claim to higher antiquity than the Jerusalem shoemaker, and declared that he had been with Noah in the ark. Noah he said had refused to take him in; but he got in secretly, and hid himself among the beasts, which is the reason why his name is not mentioned in the Bible; and while he was there, the he goat had given him a blow on the forehead, the mark of which was visible to this day. Some person asked him which country he liked best of all that he had visited in his long peregrination? he answered 'Spain,' as perhaps a man would have done who had really seen all the world. But it was remarked as rather extraordinary that a Jew should prefer the country of the inquisition. 'God bless you, sir,' replied the ready rogue, shaking his head and smiling at the same time, as if at the error of the observation, "it was long before Christianity that I was last in Spain, and I shall not go there again till long after it is all over."

The Debtor and Creditor.—A short time since, a prisoner in the Fleet sent to his creditor to inform him that he had a proposal to make. On his arrival the prisoner observed, "I have been thinking it a very foolish thing for me to lie, here and put you to the expense of 2s 4d a week. My being so chargeable to you has given me great uneasiness; and God knows what it may cost you in the end. Therefore, what I would propose is this: you shall let me out of prison, and, instead of 2s. 4d., you shall allow me only 1s. 6d a week, and the other tenpence shall go towards the discharge of the debt."

Sin of Knowledge.—A learned Frenchman, who resided a long time in England, has written a work entitled, The Sin of Knowledge; thus adding one to the seven deadly sins of the Roman Catholic Church. He proves, or attempts to prove, with Stahl, that, as death came into the world by eating of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, human reason is the real original sin from which springs all the legion of disorders which afflict the human race.

An apt Scholar.—A French priest, travelling, stopped at an inn, and directed the hostler to give his nag a feed of oats. When he was about to depart he called the servant to him, and demanded whether the horse had been fed? and being answered in the affirmative, the second interrogatory was, whether he had not muzzled his mouth to prevent him from eating? This the hostler answered in the negative. "What!" continued the priest, 'did you not even grease his teeth, in order to make him eat slow, and by that means save half the oats?" "Bless me, no," exclaimed the hostler, "such a thing never entered my head." The priest being satisfied, mounted his nag pursued his journey. Some time after, as he was passing that way, he stopped at the same inn, and again directed the servant to feed his horse. When as before was brought out for him to re-mount, the same interrogatories were propounded, "Did you muzzle his mouth?" "No, on my life, father," said the servant clapping his hand upon his breast. "Did you not grease his teeth?" inquired the priest. The servant grinned, but said nothing. "Answer me on your salvation," exclaimed the priest; "did you not grease his teeth?" The hostler hesitated, and looked confused, as the priest, grinning with rage, pressed the disagreeable question—"Did you not grease his teeth?" "Faith, father, I did," answered the hostler; "but do not get in a passion at me, for you put me up to it. I tried the experiment upon the first horse that arrived at the inn after you left it, and finding it answered so well, have practised it ever since."

New Locomotive Power.—A person has advertised in the Liverpool papers, that he would exhibit, at the expense of £500, "the cause in action, which will move against wind and tide, with any velocity required, a vessel upon the water, without strain, sails, oars, levers, paddles, or machinery whatever."

Weaving woollen cloth by steam.—Among the numerous uses to which steam has been applied of late years we observe it started in the London papers, that a person in Stockport, England, had produced a piece of blue cloth by steam, intended for the king, which appears to be the most perfect fabric ever exhibited.—It had been compared with some French cloth, worn by the Emperor Alexander, and which was manufactured expressly for him, and found to be so much superior in quality as to preclude all competition.

From a late London Paper.

Ghosts in the vicinity of Portsmouth.—A curious attempt at robbery took place a short time since, near this town. A gentleman, who was returning home after spending the evening at a friend's house at a short distance in the country, when crossing a field (the night being dark) saw something approach him which appeared very tall, and concluding it was the ghost with which the neighbourhood had, for some time past, been represented to be infested, was resolved to see what it was. When the ghost advanced near to him it threw open what he supposed to be a cloak, and discovered an appearance intended to represent a skeleton with glaring eyes. The gentleman then drew back slowly, and the ghost was advancing when he heard a noise on his right, and a man suddenly appeared who demanded to know where he was going, and on his asking what business that was of his, the man drew from his bosom a pistol, and, with an oath, demanded his money.—The gentleman having with him a stout stick, struck the hand of the fellow, and the pistol went off. He then gave him a back handed blow with the stick and knocked him down; and seeing the ghost, who had altered his appearance, preparing to attack him, he made his escape; and having procured assistance, returned to the spot, but unfortunately could not find the delinquents. This is the only attempt at highway robbery that has been heard of in this neighbourhood for some years past. This story being in circulation, tempted two idle young men to the mad frolic of trying to frighten their neighbours; and having suddenly made their appearance in Green lane, one mounted on the shoulders of the other with a white sheet covering both, the apparently tall and supernatural figure caught the attention of several persons at that time (about ten o'clock in the evening) gossiping near their homes, when one of them exclaimed, "here's the ghost coming." The terror in consequence became general; and lamentable to relate, was not to a fine young woman who was far advanced in a state of pregnancy, and whose husband was just gone to sea; for, having escaped into her house, she sunk down in the fright, and in less than twenty hours had ceased to exist. The delinquents are known, but hitherto they have escaped the vigilance of the peace officers, who are in pursuit of them.

Remarkable proof of the immortality of the soul.—Gennadius, a physician, a man of eminence in piety and charity, led in his youth some doubts of the reality of another life. He saw one night, in a dream, a young man of celestial figure, who bade him follow him. The apparition led him into a magnificent city, in which his eyes were charmed by melodious music, such as exceeded the most enchanting harmony he had ever heard. To the inquiry where he proceeded these ravishing sounds, his conductor answered, that they were the hymns of the blessed in heaven: and disappeared. Gennadius awoke; and the impression of the dream was dissipated by the transactions of the day.—The following night the same young man appeared, and asked, whether he recollected him. "The melodious songs which I heard last night," answered Gennadius, "are now brought again to memory." Did you hear them, said the apparition, "dreaming, or awake" "I heard them in a dream." "True" replied the young man; and our present conversation is a dream. "But where is your body, while I am speaking to you?" "In my chamber." "But know you not that your eyes are shut, and you cannot see?" "My eyes are shut indeed" "How then can you see?" Gennadius could make no answer. In your dream the eyes of your body are closed and useless; but you have others, with which you see me. Thus, after death, although the eyes of your flesh are deprived of use and motion, you will remain alive, and capable of sight and motion by your spiritual part. Cease, then, to entertain a doubt of another life after death." By this occurrence Gennadius affirms, he became a sincere believer in the doctrine of a future state.—Farmer's Cab.

ALARM OF THE CHINESE.

A curious Chinese document has reached this country, in reference to the Burmese war. It is a proclamation of the Emperor of China, grounded on a dispatch from one of his Governors—the Governor of the province of Yunnan—bringing under his attention the state of the frontiers. The Governor states that the Burmese are engaged in a war with the English, and have been defeated in most of the engagements which they have hitherto had; and he recommends that the frontier, towards the Burmese territory, be erected "fortifications and towers," to prevent the violation of the Chinese territory by either of the parties. The Emperor directs that a line of fortifications be erected all along the frontiers, according to the recommendation of the Governor. This proclamation is translated from the Pekin Gazette.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

(From the Etoile, dated Tuesday, April 5.)

We have the following accounts from our correspondent at Constantinople of a horrible event unknown in the annals of its history, which has taken place in that capital:—

"At the hour of midnight, two men belonging to the guard were going by the side of the houses which border the little cemetery. Suddenly they perceived a porter bearing a large chest on his shoulders, who, on being questioned, answered that he was carrying to the port the effects of a traveller who was on the eve of his departure. In consequence of the suspicions which they reasonably conceived, the guards conducted the porter back to the house from which he had come; and as he refused to open the chest, on the pretext that he had not got the key, one of the Turks remained, and the other ran to inform the Bach aga (commander of the guard) of what had passed. The latter immediately repaired to the spot with his attendants. They forced open the chest. What a horrible sight! They saw two dead bodies cut in pieces, one that of a Jew the other of a Frank. They were struck as with a ray of light. They recollected that several individuals had disappeared from Pera and Galata, whose relations and friends could not by any means account for their strange disappearance.

"The Bach aga caused this house and four others belonging to Turks, which together with the first formed as it were an island, to be surrounded. After a strict search, they were convinced that these five houses had internal communications. They proceeded to dig, and found a well which contained several dead bodies. The men and women who inhabited this infernal den were arrested, and the crime has been discovered in its whole extent. The object of their association was to draw into the snare any one who had fine stuffs to sell, or another whom they invited to come and exchange to advantage his money for that lately issued

"Two or three women were particularly employed to call in those who passed, and who, when they were once drawn into the snare, were stripped and murdered by the men. Such a tissue of iniquities and horrors could not long escape the watchful eye of justice. It has seized on all the guilty, who have been condemned to death, and executed without distinction of sex. The Sultan then coommanded that the doors and windows of the five Turkish houses should be walled up, and should thus remain with the stamp of reprobation, and as a lasting monument of a crime without parallel and frightful by its infamy."

STATE OF IRELAND.

We have given below, some interesting extracts from the evidence given before the committee of the House of Lords, appointed to inquire into the state of Ireland. Com. Adv.

Daniel O'Connell, Esq. examined—Has not some countenance been given to the miracles of Prince Hohenlohe?

Yes, the miracles, through the intercession of Prince Hohenlohe; there were two instances published; one by Dr. Doyle, and the other by Dr. Murry. I investigated the documents published by Dr. Murry, and certainly they are of a staggering nature there must certainly be perjury or a miracle, or one of those extraordinary occurrences is to my mind unaccountable

Have they not received the sanction of some of the Roman Catholic Bishops?

Yes, of Dr. Murry. The doctrine of the Catholic Church is that miracles have not ceased; we believe that the miraculous powers are to continue as long as the church—miraculous power through intercession, or, as mentioned in Scripture by reverence for the Saints or their relics. Particular miracles we are not bound to believe. Each Catholic is at liberty to reject the belief of each particular miracle; but we are bound to believe that the miraculous powers have not ceased, and will not cease. We conceive they are suspended according to the will of Providence, and brought forward when he is pleased so to order it Coupled with that tenet, we are permitted to be credulous upon the subject of each particular miracle, and not to admit it, but on the most conclusive ground. In the case of the miracle Dr. Murry proclaimed, the lady herself must be guilty of perjury, or she recovered with the most extraordinary rapidity. The fact, to my belief, depends upon the credit belonging to her

The Rev. John Burnett, examined—What are those doctrines which you think the Protestants usually attribute by mistake to the Catholics?

The Protestants are in the habit of understanding that the Catholics hold the doctrine of exclusive salvation—that is, that no person who is not a Catholic, can be finally saved. The Protestants imagine also, that the Catholics hold what they are not required to keep faith with heretics in any contract into which they may enter with them, whether by oath or otherwise. The Protestants generally—I speak of the South of Ireland, where I live myself—the Protestants generally, in that quarter, imagine that the old doctrine of the Pope's power to put an infordel out of a kingdom, for the purpose of subduing the sovereign and the subjects to the See of Rome, is also held by the Roman Catholics; and they imagine that the old doctrine of the Jesuits that the end will justify the means, is also held by them; that if the interests of the Catholic Church are the end, any means may be employed for effecting it. I do not think that the Roman Catholics in general hold these doctrines.

The Rev. James Doyle, D. D. examined—Bishop in the Roman Catholic Church; of the Diocese of Kildare and Leighlin.

Do you think there would be no objection on the part of the Roman Catholic Church to a provision being made on the part of government towards the maintenance of the Roman Catholic Clergy?

This, like some other matters which have been alluded to, is one on which the feelings and opinions of others are concerned, and I cannot undertake to speak; but for myself I would much prefer deriving my support, as I do at present, from the contributions of the poor people for whom I labour. But I know that this measure has been contemplated by persons who are anxious to relieve the Catholic laity from the disabilities under which they labour at present; and I should not withhold my consent from any arrangement which would go to alter the mode of paying the Catholic Clergy, if such opposition on my part would be any obstacle to an arrangement which I consider necessary for the settlement of the country Whether this opinion which I hold is the same as others may entertain, I cannot state I would also add, that any impression I should remain on the minds of the noble lords on account of that preference which I would give to the present mode of payment over the other—I mean, lest an impression should remain on their minds that I would be indisposed to have any communication with government in that way; the cause, them, of my feeling as I do, is, lest the Catholic clergy in some time hereafter, not finding themselves dependent upon the people for their support, might relax in their zeal in the discharge of their duties. This is the chief, I might say, the only cause, which would make me wish, as far as I am personally concerned, that things were suffered to remain as they are, correcting abuses according as they might arise.

Do you conceive that there exists a desire, on the part of the Catholic Church generally, or of many individuals in it, suppressing the arrangements referred to in a former question to be made or not, to possess themselves of any revenues of any part of the Church of England?

Whether such arrangement were made or not made, I never discovered in others, nor have I ever entertained myself any disposition whatever to be put in possession of any portion at all of the revenues or property belonging to the established Church I will add, that if any portion of that property were offered to me, I would not accept of it; that if it were proposed to grant the stipend at present spoken of out of the tithes received by the Clergy of the establishment, I would not be induced to accept of it.

Are not Catholics prohibited intermarrying with Protestants by the Council of Trent?

No; there is not a syllable about it in that Council.

Do you consider the marriage of a Protestant with a Roman Catholic valid?

It is valid in a Civil and Ecclesiastical point of view.

Have you ever known a marriage between a Roman Catholic and a Protestant, solemnized by a Protestant Clergyman, dissolved by a Priest?

Never; it could not be done; nor by the Pope nor Council, nor any authority on earth, unless there is a Canonical impediment (which the difference of religion is not) in errening.

Did you ever know an instance of a marriage of that kind dissolved, by which the woman became an outcast?

Never? it could not be done.

If a Roman Catholic and Protestant intermarry, and the children are brought up Protestants, does the Roman Catholic incur any censure?

No, never.

Have you never known the Catholic Clergy make it a condition in a marriage between a Catholic and a Protestant, that the children should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith?

They advise it; it is in the nature of religion, that the Ministers of it seek to make all the proselytes they can.

Have you ever known them refuse to perform marriages unless that condition were acceded to?

I have; but if they should, the parties can go to the Protestant Clergyman, who has equally the power of marrying them

If the wife is a Roman Catholic and the husband is a Protestant, and the husband converts the wife to the Protestant faith what course do you pursue with respect to her?

The person who ceases to be a Catholic, ceases to frequent our assemblies, and we know no more of him.

The power of deposing Kings is completely obsolete?

I think completely extinct

Not acknowledged?

I have not heard of a Divine who has maintained it for a long time; it is a thing we reject at our schools. I have learned theology, and taught it myself for several years. I have defended in public theses, printed and published, that the Pope had no such authority and that it is decidedly contrary to reason and the public good.

You would say the same of an oath being not binding because it was made with an heretic?

Yes, that is too blasphemous to be contemplated.

Will you have the goodness to explain what is meant by the infallibility of the Pope?

There are so many divines who have written upon that subject and they have given such very long definitions of it, that I should do much better by referring your lordships to them, than by giving a definition myself. Melchior Cano has a long treatise upon the infallibility of the Pope.

Qualities of the Cocoa Nut.—The official paper of Santiago de Cuba, of the 9th March, mentions the following accidental discovery of an important quality in the Cocoa Nut, hitherto unknown to men of science:

"A respectable lady, inhabitant of Cumana, who lately arrived in this city, has given the following information to the President of the Royal Patriotic Society of Cuba.—A maid servant, through forgetfulness, left a marble mortar in a tub of cocoa nut juice, into which the oil of the fruit had been extracted. After many days' diligent search, it was found at the bottom of the tub, but to their great surprise, as soft as wax which had been heated at the fire, and the upper part nearly united. The softness which the marble had acquired assisted in restoring it to its former natural shape, which it preserved, having obtained its usual hardness on being exposed to the air. The president of the society thought this information worthy of the minutest attention and consequently prepared the cocoa nut juice in the manner above stated, which he emptied in to a glazed earthen vessel; and placed therein a slab of marble, stained with ink, and other wise much injured by spots, which in process of time had destroyed the whiteness of the marble. This was done on the 24th of February, and on the 27th, the slab was removed perfectly clean, the stains entirely effaced, and the whole bearing evident signs of the powerful action of the liquid. The success attendant on this first experiment, induced the president of the society to conceive the probability that the dissolvent quality of this liquid could be extended to metals. To ascertain this, he threw into the liquid a piece of silver, (which from use had acquired the colour of lead) one of copper that had become very black, the lock of a pistol covered with oxyd, and a pair of iron compasses in the same state. All these articles, at the expiration of 24 hours, were taken from the juice perfectly clean and restored to their former colour, although without polish, which however, was soon given to them, by washing them in water into which powder of barts-horne had been dissolved, and when dry rubbing them with a brush. These experiments were exhibited by the president to many of the members of the Society and other persons whose curiosity had led them to witness the trial."

Description of a machine called a Camel, on which a Ship of the Line is carried over a sand-bank into deep water. From Mrs. Guthrie's Tour in the Crimea.

These Camels are a kind of large flat bottomed wooden cradle, in which vessels of great burthern, are carried over banks and bars where there is not water of sufficient depth for a ship of half the size without such aid. They form a hollow cradle when united, but separate longitudinally from stem to stern for the convenience of sinking one half under each side of the Ship, merely by opening a plug and letting the water into them: and then, on pumping it out again, the huge machine (tied together under the vessel's bottom at stem and stern) rises majestically to the surface carrying on its hollow back a 100 gun Ship like a boat. In this manner all our ships of the line are floated over every obstruction, in either the Neva or Dneiper, down to Cronstadt in the first instance and to the Black Sea in the second, and are secured from oversetting by the breadth of the float, and the dwarf like jury masts set up for a short passage to the port where they are to be rigged, armed and victualled."

TWO SEA SERPENTS!!

Uncommon Fish.—Being on board the brig Mary & Eliza, of Boston, from Baltimore, on Wednesday, 27th April, 1825, at 6 A. M. Race Point, Cape Cod, bearing S. S. E distant four leagues, discovered something a little on our larboard bow, hauled up for it. When at a small distance, found it to be a living animal—took it to be what has been called a Sea Serpent. We passed it a small distance tacked ship and stood for it again. Found that there were two of them—they made from us—however, we soon overtook them; we had a fair view They appeared, when head to us, more like horses swimming than any thing we could compare them to. Their length appeared to be about 40 feet, their head and neck about six or eight feet, which they kept out of the water about 4 feet. From the top of their heads to the water, the head part appeared to be full of bunches like barnacles, or knots, of divers colours; being about 100 feet from them we could view them well. Their bodies appeared to be of the colour of the whale, their tails lay flat ways in the water, and spread about eight feet, like a whale's tail. After viewing them about 15 minutes, we tacked ship, and stood on our course. They likewise tacked and swam after us, when they appeared more like horses than ever, and their way through the water was nearly as fast as ours. There was a white streak running about two thirds round their heads at the water's edge, which we took to be where the mouth was—They sometimes blowed like whales. The spout holes were about four feet from their nose, on their backs. They had a blunt nose. They must either be Sea Horses or Sea Serpents, for such fish none on board ever saw before.

THE INSIDE OF THE WORLD.

Mr. Editor; I read in your paper of yesterday, an account of a British ship having reached a higher south latitude than Cook, or any other navigator before has been known to do, and yet was unobstructed by ice and nothing appeared to hinder proceeding onward.—I feel confident, and have long since published my opinion, that the concave countries can be reached with facility by proceeding southwardly in any of the southern seas, and particularly from the Indian Ocean.—Ought not this confirmation of my doctrines to encourage Mr. Gray or Mr. Giraud, to incur the expenses of a suitable exploring outfit towards the south, both for fishing and discovering? Either of whom could, I presume, meet the expense without endangering their prosperity. According to my system, it is highly probable that a ship properly directed on such an errand, would reach a country where the inhabitants are concave antipode to those of the exterior tropical regions, which country may be consted quite around the concave, along a circle of 20,000 miles in circumference, and a great part abounding in tropical productions, and the sea so free from dangerous storms, as to be every where navigable by steam boats; and if as is probable, the concave lands are much chequered by such channels as Parry found so far as he penetrated, then the ships might pass through to Cook's Inlet; and thus establish our claim, by right of discovery; and extend our commerce and fisheries, in immeasurable extent.

I believe I could pilot such an expedition without, in any material degree, missing the proper course.—Respectfully.

JOHN CLEVES SYMMES.

Ladkah Sheep.—An English traveller named Moorecroft, in Tartary, among other novelties which have attracted his attention in natural history, makes special mention of the Ladkah sheep. This animal he describes, when full grown, as being scarcely so large as an ordinary lamb of five months old; "yet in the fineness of its fleece, the flavour of its flesh, and the peculiarities of its constitution, it is said to be inferior to no race. It is as completely domiciliated as the British dog. In the night it shelters in a walled yard, or under its master's roof; in the day it feeds often on the surface of granite rocks, where cursory observation can scarcely discover a speck of vegetation. If permitted, it will pick up crumbs, drink salted or buttered tea or broth, or nibble a clean picked bone. It gives two lambs and is shorn twice in a year." Mr M. has procured some of them to import into England. We believe our climate did not well suit the full blooded merinos. Suppose we procure some of these? By the account given, they would live luxuriantly among the most rocky and barren parts of New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut.—N. Y Spectator.

SINGULAR FACTS, IN REGARD TO INDIAN CORN, ASCERTAINED BY EXPERIMENT.

Having somewhere read that seed selected from the point or small end of melons, cucumbers and pumpkins would exhibit a greater increase than if taken from the middle or but end, I tried the following experiment the last season on corn, which, though not conclusive, should yet lead to further inquiry and examination:

In the centre of my field there were two pieces of ground, each 105 feet square, which were divided and planted with seed from the point, middle and but end, of the ear, according to the following diagram:—

Task No. 1.

Point.
Middle
But-end

Task No 2.

But end.
Middle.
Point.

When the corn was harvested, the product was as follows, viz.—Task No. 1, point 3 pecks; middle 1 peck and 4 quarts; but end 2 pecks. Task No. 2 point 2 pecks and 4 quarts; middle 1 peck and 3 quarts; but end 2 pecks. Both tasks were planted at the same time, cultivated in the same manner, and I am not aware that there existed a difference of soil.

Farmers, who doubt the above improvement in seed corn, would do well by trying the experiment in planting a few hills.

To the theorist, and him who is emulous of penetrating the arcana of nature, the solution of the problem, presented by the above facts, is respectfully submitted, by

To render Bottled Beer ripe.—The following method is employed in Paris by some venders of bottled beer to render it what they term ripe.—It is merely by adding to each bottle 3 or 4 drops of yeast, and a lump of sugar, of the size of a large nutmeg. In the course of twenty-four hours, by this addition stale or flat beer, is rendered most agreeably brisk. In consequence of the fermentative process that takes place in it, a small deposite follows, and on this account the bottles should be kept in an erect position. By this means white wine may likewise be rendered brisk

To keep Potatoes for Sea Provisions—Slice them and bake them slowly and they will keep and form good flour for years.

To keep off or drive away bed bugs.—Make a strong decoction of red pepper, when ripe, and apply it with a common paint brush to the joints of the bedstead, wainscotting, &c. where these odious insects usually resort, and it will speedily kill, or expel them.

To bottle table beer—As soon as a cask of table beer is received into the house it is drawn off into quart stone bottles with a lump of white sugar in each, and securely corked. In three days it becomes brisk, is equal strength to table ale, remarkably pleasant, very wholesome, and will keep many months.

To keep hops for future use—Hops lose all their fine flavour by exposure to the air and damp. They should be kept in a dry close place, and tightly packed.

Eye Stone—It is said that a grain of flax seed possesses all the valuable properties of the eye stone

Simple Remedy—An intelligent farmer of this town (says the Norridgewock Journal) has communicated to us, what, he says, is an effectual remedy against injury to horses and cattle which may have eaten too much grain. It is simply to administer a pint of melted hog's lard, as soon as the fact is discovered. He says he has tried the experiment a number of times and always with success.

ENGLAND'S DEAD.

BY MRS HEMANS.

Son of the Ocean Isle!
Where sleep your mighty dead?
Show me what high and stately pile
Is rear'd o'er glory's bed?

Go stranger! track the deep,
Free; free, the white sail spread,
Wave may not foam, nor wind wind sweep;
Where rest not England's dead.

On Egypt's burning plains,
By the Pyramid o'er sway'd,
With fearful power the noon day reigns,
And the palm tree yields no shade.

But let the angry sun
From Heaven look fiercely red,
Unfelt by those whose task is done!
There slumber England's dead.

The hurricane hath might,
Along the Indian shore,
And far by ganges' banks by night
Is heard the tiger's roar.

But let the sound roll on!
It has no tone of dread
For those that from their toils have gone:
There slumber England's dead.

Loud rush the torrent floods,
The Western wilds among,
And free in green Columbia's wood,
The hunter's bow is strong.

But let the floods rush on!
Let the arrow's flight be sped!
Why should they reck, whose task is done,
There slumber England's dead.

The mountain storms rise high,
In the Snowy Pyrenees,
And toss the pine-boughs through the sky,
Like rose leaves on the breeze.

But let the storm rage on!
Let the forest leaves be sped!
For the Roncevalle's field is won
There slumber England's dead.

On the frozen deep's repose,
'Tis a dark and dreadful hour,
When round the ship the ice fields close,
To chain her with their power.

But let the ice drift on!
Let the cold blue desert spread!
Their course with mast and flag is done,
There slumber England's dead.

The warlike of the Isles,
The men of field and wave!
Are not the rocks their funeral piles?
The seas and shores their grave?

Go stranger! track the deep,
Free, free, the white sail spread!
Wave may not foam, nor wild wind sweep,
Where rest not England's dead.

NELSON, May 28th, 1825.

At a meeting held at St. Ann's Hotel in Nelson (pursuant to public notice) on Saturday the 28th instant, for the purpose of devising means for building a bridge across the 12 mile creek on Dundas street in Nelson, and digging the hill on the north bank of said creek, on the original allowance for road.

JAMES M'BRIDE, Chairman.
WILLIAM J. SUMNER, Secretary.

The following is a comparative statement of the arrivals at Quebec, on the 26th of May 1824, and the same period in 1825. There is no instance when so many vessels were in port so early in the season. It is gratifying to find that a greater number of them than usual have cargoes. A greater number than usual, we believe, have proceeded to Montreal; that port being now easily reached by the use of the tow boat. There are undoubtedly better prospects as regards the trade of this vast and rapidly improving country than ever. Intelligence, enterprize, and prudence, among our merchants and a strict attention to the quality of our exports, will soon raise the Canadas to very great importance.

26th May, 1825,	211	59,274	2,157.

Irish Emigration.—A Cork paper states that nine vessels will sail from that port alone for Quebec, in the course of and during the ensuing month with 2,000 emigrants and their families.

On the 16th £30,000 were voted by the Commons for defraying the expense of an enlarged scheme of emigration from Ireland to Canada.

Arrival of McNab's Settlers.

Emigrants.—Upwards of 150 Settlers from Perthshire, Scotland, arrived here yesterday in the Niagara, on their way to the Township of McNab, on the Ottawa River, McNab of McNab, the proprietor of the Township, being in this City when the Niagara arrived, went on board, in full Highland Costume, accompanied by Miles McDonald, Esq. and a Piper Mr. McNab cordially shook hands with his countrymen, and gave them a true highland welcome to Canada. These emigrants appear to be persons of intelligence, and from their robust forms we suppose they will be an acquisition in a new country, particularly as they have been accustomed to the pursuits of agriculture in their native one.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

Interesting Spectacle.—We witnessed last evening a sight of no small degree of interest, namely the arrival by the ship Niagara, of a body of fine Highland peasantry in number about 150 as settlers for the Mc Nab Township on the Ottawa river. This enterprising gentleman has with a feeling and conduct which cannot be too extensively imitated, obtained from the Government a tract of excellent land for the purpose of providing for the surplus population of his estates in Scotland. He was in this city, and in full costume accompanied by his piper, went on board and welcomed them on their arrival in port. The happiness of the interview was sincere, cordial, and mutual, such as brought to mind the venerated feelings between the Chieftain and his clansmen in days of yore.

We have only to add (although this is a thesis on which much might be said) that McNab, brings these settlers here and places them on Lands at his own expense thereby exempting them from that suffering and distress which never fails to accrue from persons of their simple habits coming to a strange country, and wandering about for months without knowing to what hand to turn, or where to seek advice.

Serious Accident.—We regret to learn that Niel McLean, Esq. while on a shooting excursion this morning, was accidentally shot. It appears that he was in the act of getting over a fence, when his gun unexpectedly went off, and the whole charge passed through his thigh. We sincerely hope the wound will not prove dangerous

From the Montreal Herald.

We have been favoured with the perusal of a prospectus of "THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICAN SHIP BUILDING COMPANY" The capital of this Company is £500,000, raised in 10,000 shares of £50 each; a portion of which will be reserved for persons in the Colonies desirous of becoming share-holders. The advantages to be derived from the establishment of this company are, 1st. The employment of a numerous and useful class of persons in the Colonies; and by a beneficial diffusion of capital and labour, an increase of the national importance of the Colonies; and 2d. an ample remuneration to the proprietors—who, independent of the local advantages which will attend their undertaking may reasonably look to the favourable rates of exchange, and the freight in their ships consigned to England for sale, as sources of considerable and immediate profit. The company whose affairs are to be conducted by a Board of Directors, intend to construct vessel adapted for all trades, and purposes, under the particular inspection of the company's agents, by practised shipwrights, and with such due attention to the selection and seasoning of the Timber, as it is hoped, will materially improve the character of vessels built in the Colonies It this company will be established we have no doubt the diffusion of capital which its operations will occasion must do a great deal of good in the country. This good would be attended with tenfold advantages, if all the materials for rigging the vessels would be manufactured in the country. The manufacture of sail cloth and cordage would not only give employment to a number of poor persons, but encourage the growth of hemp and flax beyond any other plan that can be devised. Our iron founderies would also be encouraged, and they ought to be so by every possible means, both as to their local operations, and as to their importation into foreign ports. There is no manufacture which occasions so great a consumption of wood as a furnace, or which contributes so much to the clearing of a country over grown with it.

Editorial Commentary.

We are informed from the Lower Province that Mr. Gothuhy the Banker of London lately on a visit to Quebec and Montreal is so fully convinced of the great advantages to be derived from the Welland Canal that he has authorised a gentleman of Montreal to subscribe, in his name, for One Hundred Shares; and, he also proposes to take stock to a large amount in the canal which has been proposed between La Prairie and St. Johns.

A Strange report is in circulation, seemingly, not without foundation that Maria Louisa, the widow of Napoleon is secretly married to a one-eyed Count, named Neiburgh, who is represented to be of ugly features and of a ferocious aspect.

The Geneva Palladium, a paper of the United States, complains bitterly that between 90 and 30 large waggons filled with emigrants, of the most respectable appearance, from Pennsylvania passed through Geneva on their way to Canada—and seems to wonder what can be the reason of such a movement taking if their own Government has not land enough!

We have the following from the last Montreal Herald:—

On Saturday last, His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland arrived in this city from Upper Canada, on a tour of inspection, and was received by the customary salute from the garrison of St Helens. On Monday His Excellency reviewed the 70th regiment on the Champ de Mars. The precision with which this fine and soldier like corps went through its various exercises and evolutions, elicited, we understand, the warmest approbation of the General, who gave his direction to Col. M'Gregor, to communicate the same to all the Officers and Privates of the Corps—After the review, His Excellency visited the different departments of the garrison, with which he was also pleased to express his satisfaction. Yesterday, His Excellency and suite set off for Quebec, receiving another salute from St Helens as they passed.

Letters have been received in town from His Excellency the Governor in-Chief wherein His Lordship expresses a hope that he will arrive in Canada about the first of September, and will sail either from Leith or Greenock

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

N. South Wales.—His Majesty's Government have lately taken the case of the Members of the Church of Scotland, in New South Wales, into their most favourable consideration, and besides other proofs of his enlightened liberality in reference to their spiritual interests, the Right Hon Earl Bathurst has been pleased to place their Church on the civil establishment of the Colony, and to assign their Ministers a very liberal and permanent provision from the Colonial Revenue. Sir Thomas Brisbane the Governor is also zealous in his efforts to secure the permanent establishment of the Scots Church.

Ireland.—All the Irish papers speak of the increasing prosperity, tranquility, and happiness of Ireland.—Midnight plunderings give place to manufacturing industry. Orders have been issued for withdrawing the armed police from several districts, as being no longer requisite.—The following is on a violin maker's sign board at Limerick: "New villins mad here and old ones rippard, also new heads, ribs, backs, and bellys mod on the shortest notice; N. B New guts of the best quality. Shoes mended &c. Pat O'Shoguassey, painter."

Filial Respect.—Among the qualities which distinguish the Irish peasantry, there is none which shines with more brilliancy than their filial piety. No nation, not even the Chinese, can pay more respectful attention and implicit obedience to their parents. As there are no parish work houses in Ireland, except in some of the principal towns, the country would abound with destitute old people were it not for the gratitude of their progeny. The Irish peasant, especially the mountaineer, protects his parents in the decline of their years.—The mothers assist in nursing, carding or spinning; the fathers hobble about the farms directing the young men at their work. At night, the best and easiest seat is appropriated to the ancient father and mother; and the most nutritious food in the house is served up to them.—"It is really," says a traveller who had seen much of the habits of this people, "an edifying and lovely sight, to behold the respectful attention paid by those peasants to their aged parents, while the grand children are taught to address them in the most endearing language, nay, to crave their blessing, and supplicate the Deity for them in prayer." Nor does the final love of the Irish mountaineer expire with his parents. He closes their eyes, attends their remains to the tomb with grateful sorrow, and occasionally visits the grave of those who gave him being, and bedews it with his tears. From such a disposition, what excellent virtues might be produced with proper cultivation!—London Museum.

Bolivar.—Capt Cochrane gives the following account of the Liberator:—Bolivar is a good swimmer, an elegant dancer, and fond of music; he is a very pleasant companion at table; neither smokes nor takes snuff, nor does he ever taste spirits. He endeavours to check the flattery with which he is not unfrequently assailed. At a ball which he gave, a lady rendered herself very conspicuous by leading him with obsequious and importunately fulsome adulation. Bolivar at length said to her, in a mild but firm tone: "Madam, I had previously been informed of your character, and now I perceive it myself. Believe me a servile spirit recommends itself to no one, and, in a lady, is highly to be despised."

(From the London Times, March 29.)

MR. GOURLAY.

A petition, of which the annexed is a copy, has been despatched to the Lord Chancellor, and a similar one to Mr. Bennett, of Wiltshire, to be presented to their respective houses of Parliament:

To the Right Hon. the Lords Spiritual and Temporal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, the humble petition of Robert Gourlay.

Showeth.—That we know from the scriptures of religion, and long experience, that three score and ten years sum up the life of ordinary men; and that a few only, by reason of greater strength, are four score years.

That, at sixty years of age, human ability, as well bodily as mental, begins to decay; and so convinced of this are the people of the United States of America, that they have a law obliging judges to retire from the bench at sixty years of age.

That the present Lord High Chancellor is a man of extraordinary vigour; yet, seeing he was born in the year 1750 his term of existence cannot be long protracted, while his strength must be decreasing, to the hazard of great national, as well as numerous individual interests.

That your petitioner, having been a suitor in Chancery for upwards of 12 years, has repeatedly heard the Lord Chancellor complain of want of memory, and conceives that he has grievously suffered therefrom.

That while the Lord Chancellor was delivering judgment in your petitioner's cause in January, 1824, his Lordship discovered that defective documents had been put into his hands; and it clearly appeared to your petitioner, that the same had been so drawn up purposely, to impose on his Lordship, and to vitiate the judgment.

That your petitioner was then desirous to have judgment delayed till correct documents were supplied, but was unable to obtain his desire; and a decree passed, in your petitioner's opinion, so contrary to justice, that it could not have proceeded from the Lord Chancellor had he been in the vigour of his.

That the Lord Chancellor has been appointed one of a commission to inquire into Chancery delays: that no inquiry is more important, and no individual more competent than the Lord Chancellor to perform the duties of such a commission, were his lordship otherwise disengaged.

Your petitioner therefore entreats that your Lordship's house will address His Majesty to the effect, that the present Lord Chancellor, while he retains all the honours and emoluments now enjoyed by him, may be immediately removed from every other employment save that of reforming the Court of Chancery, and rendering it efficient for the speedy and sure ends of justice and equity—And as in duty bound he will ever pray.

Preparations for the Coronation of Charles X.

Extract of a private letter from Rheims:—"We are assured that a camp of ten or twelve thousand men will be established round the city at the time of the Coronation. It is believed that the infantry regiments of the nearest garrisons will be encamped in tents, and the cavalry will be cantoned. His Majesty after having received the Holy Unction, will review all these troops. It is certain that Aides-de-Camp of the Minister of War have come here to fix upon a spot suitable for the establishment of a camp, and are choosing the villages for the cantonments of the cavalry

Extract of a private letter of the 5th instant from Rheims:—The Archbishop's palace, where the King and Royal family will reside at the time of the coronation, has been as it were rebuilt in a truly magnificent style. The state apartments of the King, Dauphin, Dauphiness, and Duchess, of Berry, will surpass in richness and elegance, whatever Versailles and Marly ever presented of most brilliant What will be particularly admired in this new structure, are the grand chamber constructing in advance of the principal front, the royal banqueting room which is 120 feet in length, and the King's bed chamber which is of unexampled magnificence. M. Ansel de Pujol's fine picture representing the coronation of Clovis, will be placed in the reception room. The ancient Church of St. Remi, to which the King will go on horseback, on the day after his coronation, is also undergoing considerable repair The town of Rheims will join in the pomp of these august ceremonies. Between the bounds of the department of the Marne and the entrance of the town, four triumphal arches of different kinds will be erected upon the road by which his Majesty's carriage will pass. The Mayors of all the parishes will assemble upon the road to present to the King the homage of the population. From Tuneguez, a small village one league from Rheims, to the portico of the Cathedral, the road will be bordered on both sides by columns surmounted by the arms of France or trophies, and connected together with verdant wreaths, or tissues of the country. A monument dedicated to the Departement industry, will stand in the midst of the promenade. It will consist of two rich semicircular galleries connected by a triumphal arch dedicated to commerce and agriculture. Beneath the arches of the galleries will be exhibited productions of the finest manufactures of the Marne. A piece will be got up at the theatre, which it is expected his Majesty will honour with his presence.—Notwithstanding the extraordinary high price of lodgings, provisions are cheap, and the authorities have adopted measures to prevent a monopoly. The Hotel de Moulinet, upon the Parvis of the Cathedral, has been let for 16000fr. for four months, to two Cafe-keepers of Paris, who have relet it for 80,000fr. to the Duke of Northumberland. By order of that Nobleman a great number of hands have been sent to embellish it. The works to be executed will render it a real palace, and will all turn to the advantage of the proprietor of the hotel.

SOUTH AMERICA

The latest paper received from Buenos Ayres, contains the Treaty lately concluded between the British Government and that Republic. Its provisions for the regulating of the commerce of the two countries are liberal, and perfectly and in all respects reciprocal.—The inhabitants of the provinces are also allowed as great privileges in their commerce with the British colonies, as are enjoyed by the most favored nation. By one provision, the subjects of Great Britain are allowed the full enjoyment of liberty of conscience, "being allowed to perform divine worship either in their own private churches and chapels, which they shall be permitted to build and maintain, in convenient situations approved of by the government and provinces;—and by another stipulation, the government of the United Provinces obliges itself to co-operate with the British Government in abolishing the Slave Trade.

COLOMBIA.

"The Third Renunciation of the Presidentship of Columbia, made by the Liberator.

"To his Excellency the President of the Senate.

"Excellent Sir.—The peace of Peru, which our arms have effected, by the most glorious victory of the new world, has terminated the war on the American Continent. Thus Colombia has no longer an enemy in her own territories, or in those of her neighbours. I have therefore fulfilled my mission, consequently it is time to realize the promise I have so often made to my country, of retiring from public life when an enemy was no longer to be found in America

"All the world observes and confesses that my continuance in Colombia is no longer necessary, and no one is more sensible of this fact than myself. I must even add that I deem my glory at its height on beholding my country free, consolidated, and tranquil ere I withdraw from its glorious shores My absence in Peru has manifested the truth of this fact, and I flatter myself that in future, the liberty and glory of Colombia will still further increase. The legislative body, the Vice-President, the army, and the nation, have demonstrated in the very outset of their career, that they are worthy of liberty, and fully capable of sustaining it against every opposition. Let me honestly confess to Your Excellency, that I wish that both Europe and America should be satisfied of my abhorrence of supreme power, under whatever aspect or name it may be conferred on me. My feelings are wounded by the atrocious calumnies lavished on me, at once by the liberals of America, and the serviles of Europe. —Day and night I am disquieted by the impression that my enemies entertain, of my services in favour of liberty being prompted by ambition. In short I venture to state to Your Excellency with unusual frankness, which I hope will be excused, that I think the glory of Colombia will suffer by my continuance in her territories; in as much as it will always be imagined that she is threatened by a tyrant; and the outrage thus offered to me will in some sort tarnish the lustre of her virtue, since I form a part, although the least, of the Republic.

"I beg Your Excellency will be pleased to submit to the consideration of the Senate, my renunciation of the Presidency of Colombia. Its admission will be an ample recompence for my services in both Republics.

"Your Excellency will please to accept the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

"SIMON BOLIVAR.

DISCOVERY OF A NEW ISLAND.

In the South Seas.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

We copy the following account of the discovery of a new island in the southern Ocean, from the last papers received from New South Wales. The merit of this discovery rests with capt Hunter, of the Donna Carmelita, and from the log book of that ship we copy the following interesting account.

JULY 29.—Fine clear weather, carrying all possible sail. At 11h, 30m. P. M. saw the land bearing S. W. distance six miles; up courses and shortened sail to the top sails, and stood towards it at day light; fresh Breezes; the land discovered proved to be an island. At three A. M. close in under the lee of it, observed a number of fishing canoes to leeward, which were flying for the shore with all possible despatch; hore down and intercepted one of them; with a great deal of persuasion got one of them to come on board, when I presented him with a hatchet and a piece of white cloth, which pleased him much, as he showed it to all the canoes about the ship and after that, we did not want for visitors. About this time a chief came on board and on my making signs that we wanted refreshments, he sent all the canoes on shore and staid himself on board with a few others.

At 11. So close in shore, armed and manned the cutter and dispatched her on shore in charge of our first officer and our friend the chief keeping another on board as a hostage.

At one P. M. the canoes returned from shore, to the number of thirty, laden with hogs, yams, plantains, &c. and traded with the greatest honesty for iron hoops nails, &c. They seemed to be very expert swimmers, as they often got their canoes overturned but it never incommoded them, for they soon put them to rights. They are about the colour of Malays, but have more of the European features. The canoes are very handsome, not unlike those of Ceylon, and ornamented with shells.

At four P. M. the cutter returned from the shore having on board twelve hogs, agreat quantity of yams and tropical fruits of all kinds.

The following is the Chief Officer's report of the island of Onaeuse, or Hunter's island.

At one P. M. got close in shore, the natives desired us to pull in shore, when we observed a great concourse of people assembled on a bluff point of land. The surf being pretty high, we landed opposite the people. The native in the cutter pointed out the King (Fa fowah i), and the Monarch with his attendants came forward and seated himself close to the boat, when the native desired me to walk toward the King. I thought it best to go unarmed as it would make them have more confidence in us; most of them were armed with clubs with short round heads, and some with spears from 24 to 40 feet long, and a few were much longer. A great many women numbers of whom carried two spears were present. I was desired to sit down close to the King, and after making my obeisance presented him with a white shirt putting it on him. I likewise gave the same to his brother; both seemed highly pleased and in return made a present of a hog, a basket of yams, and bannanas and cocoa nuts. After sitting some time I made the King a present of a looking glass which seemed to surprise them greatly: it was of no use to the King to the Queen, and from her all round, every one taking a look at it and then touching the crown of their heads with it; and the same ceremony was performed with every little present made them. The King took a shell from his neck and gave it me. I then made signs if there was any water to be had, they said How tow, and pointed among the hills. I expressed a wish to go and see the watering place; the King got up and desired me to follow with our friend the native. I took the carpenter and four armed men in case of accident. The King had gone by a shorter route over the hill; however I soon found it was not the watering place they were taking us to, for we found ourselves on the beach, not far from the boat in a kind of cove, with a smooth beach, where we saw his Majesty seated with all his attendants, and I was requested to sit down opposite to him on the ground, which I accordingly did. The beach was marked out into apartments by rows of stones. The women were ordered on one side, but only for a short time, when they all crowded round us, and were particular in looking at our shoes, and buttons, but were very civil. Shortly after the King's mother came down, an elderly woman about 50, the King himself seemed about 30 Queen about 20, stout and good looking, and was the only one that had her bosom covered. She was a very fine figure, her teeth perfectly even and very clean. All the women and men had their little fingers cut off by the second joint on the left hand, and the women had their cheek bones perforated, and the blood smeared round about an inch. Some of them were tattoed with a red colour, especially in their arms, mostly in circles about an inch round; they were uncommonly civil. I did not seem at all bashful. The signal being made from the ship for us, I expressed a wish to go on board and his Majesty expressed a wish to go also, which as he would not take canoes to bring him back I declined. I left a ram and an ewe for the benefit of future navigators and made signs to the natives not to kill them. The women were all naked excepting a small covering round the body; and the men mostly wore a kind of mat round their bodies with leaves of trees woven into them like a Highlander's kit. The island was entirely composed of lava, in some places almost a metal. It lies in the lat. of 15. 31' S. and long. 176. 11 E. by Sun and Moon, brought up by chronometer for 4 days previous — Free Press.

Poetry.

ROSETTE.

From the French of De Berenger.

Would'st thou, but yet in youth's sweet prime,
In me awaken passion's fire?
Alas! the chilling hand of Time
Has quench'd each spark of fond desire,
Once—simplest charms held magic sway,
That blissful dream I still regret;
For Love's bright hour has pass'd away;
Thou ne'er can'st be to me—Rosette.

An equipage they call obeys,
To whirl thee to the admiring throng;
But poor Rosette on market days,
On foot tripped gracefully along,
And oft to wake my jealous fear,
Glanced shly round—the arch coquette:
No, no, the spell's dissolved—I ne'er
Can love thee as I loved Rosette.

Then hast a thousand mirrors' aid;
There all thy dazzling charms are shown;
One only had Rosette, poor maid,
I thought it was the Graces' own.
No splendid couch woo'd her to rest,
Aurora's earliest smiles she met
No thou can'st ne'er within my breast
Wake what I felt for poor Rosette.

Thy brilliant wit deserves full well
My humble lyre's most greatful meed;
Why should I be ashamed to tell,
Rosette could neither write nor read.
In love's soft language skill'd alone,
Her thrilling tones—I hear them yet;
Ah me! is love for ever gone,
Such as I felt for poor Rosette?

Her charms I own, were less than thine;
Her heart was not more warm and true;
Not brighter did her blue eyes shine
On him who now is cold to you.
But when youth's sun around me shone,
That glowing beam which now has set;
Its gay illusions all are flown,
And love—has vanished with Rosette.

Shipping Intelligence.—The following comparative statement of the amount of shipping and tonnage at the same period during the last and present season exhibits a gratifying increase in the trade of this country. Some allowance must, however, be made for the very great disparity from the circumstance of the vessels coming to this country last season having experienced continual foul wind and bad weather. It was in the beginning of June before any great number began to come in—The increase is, nevertheless considerable.

May 29, 1824—34 vessels—8,465 tons——52 Settlers
May 29, 1825-224 vessels—60,537 tons—2517 Ditto.

Several outward bound vessels have gone to sea during last week; among them were the new ships Royal George, for Dublin, Thomas Lautie, for Greenock, and Duncan Gibb, for Liverpool.

Prince Edward's Island—The Legislature of Prince Edward's Island has adjourned, after a session distinguished by harmony, which is stated not to have occurred for many years past. The Assembly preserved throughout a tone of great moderation, acting with prudence, but firmness. It has prayed that the Island may be permitted to share in the advantages of the late free port act. It also instituted an inquiry into the loan of the public money to private persons, and presented an address relative to abuses in the Court of Chancery; in which they state that unlawful and excessive fees had been taken by Mr. Lane, the Registrar of that Court  But the main object to which the wishes of the House are bent, and which the people will never rest satisfied till they accomplish, is the repeal of a permanent revenue act, which rendered the late Governor independent of the House, and enabled him to rid himself of their presence and complaints at pleasure." * * * * * "The Speaker of the House, at the time of prorogation, having stated that they had passed a bill for increasing the revenue, chiefly out of the confidence they reposed in His Excellency, closed a short but impressive speech with the following sentence:—"I trust under these circumstances, your Excellency will not be surprised, when I state on this occasion, that the Colony looks first and with much anxiety, to the period, when your Excellency will feel yourself at liberty to give your assent to an annual Act, for appropriating the whole produce of the revenue, a boon, which will give the highest satisfaction, and be long and gratefully remembered."

From Neilson's Gazette.—The quantity of the fish called Shad now brought to our markets is very great. They were sold yesterday at 4 and 5 cents each. Each fish weighs from four to six and seven pounds. The number of Shipping in port and the scarcity of good Oxen has caused the price of beef to rise to 6d and 6d per lb. and Shad are very seasonably taken by the poor as a substitute.—Courier.

A melon, perfectly ripe and of a fine flavour, was on Tuesday cut from the hotbeds of J. Fes. Perrault, Esq. at the Ayle Chaux, &c. near this city.—Mercury.

From the U. C. Herald.—A Squirrel Hunt took place in East Lobrough on Thursday last, when 1024 of those little animals were killed.

Horse Stealing.—About the 27th ultimo three Horses were stolen from a gentleman named Burnham, who resides on the American shore near Greenbrough. The thieves were followed by Mr B and overtaken at Earnest Town on Sunday the 29th ultimo. In the pursuit that took place upon the villains being discovered, one of the stolen horses, a very valuable animal, fell and broke his neck. The rider and the other two horses were secured, but the principal rogues fled to the woods and have not since been heard of.

(First Session of the Ninth Parliament)

No. XX.

WEDNESDAY, 30th March, 1825.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the petition of John Low and four hundred others, praying that the County of Prince Edward may be erected into a separate District,—was read.

Mr. GORDON from the Committee of Finance, reported as follows:—

The Committee of Finance to whom were referred THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS, ACCOUNTS IN DETAIL, AND ESTIMATES sent down to your Honourable House, by His Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor, at an early period of the present Session, in pursuance of your order, have examined the same and beg leave to report thereon as follows:—

No 1. 2. and 3 are statements of duties collected at the Port of Quebec from the 11th Oct. 1822. to 5th April 1823, from 6th April to 10th Oct. 1823, and from 11th October 1823, to 5th April 1824.

For the first period it appears that the proportion due to Upper Canada, (including bonds outstanding not under prosecution) after deducting the expense of collection, is £6176 12 7 Sterling—Currency, of which the sum of £1195 3 4 1-2 is Crown duties under 14th Geo 3d, the sum of £1846 15 4, however, was so considered, as appears by a statement from the Inspector General on a reference to him for explanation, owing to the absence of the returns from Lower Canada, when these duties were brought to account—the difference £471 9 11 1-2 is subsequently credited to the Provincial Fund.	6862	13	6 3 4

For the second period it appears that the like proportion due to Upper Canada as above is £8198 3 2 Sterling.—Currency, £ 9109 1 3 1-2 of which £4414 13 6 belongs to the Crown Fund and £4694 7 9 1-2 to the Provincial Fund.

For the third period it appears that the like proportion due to Upper Canada as above is £6778 15 4 1-2 Sterling. Cy. £ 7531 19 3 1-2 on part of which is considered Crown fund but the further sum of £387 3 10 3-4 due on the last periods from the Crown to the Provincial fund is to be added, being so much of the Provincial fund deducted for the drawbacks, payable out of the Crown duties for this period, amounting in the whole for the three periods to £ 23803 19 0 3 4 exclusive of the £387 3 10 3-4 to be credited as hereinbefore explained

No. 4. and 5. are separate general statements of the Receiver General's receipts and payments between the 1st July and the 31st Dec. 1823. and 1st Jan. and 31 Dec 1824. with abstracts of the warrants issued by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor for the said period. By these it appears that the monies paid into the Provincial chest for the first period amounted to £8672 8 6 1-4 viz: from the Receiver General of Lower Canada on account of his proportion of import duties levied at the different Ports, £5196 5 1

From Inspectors and Collectors	3105 3 5 1 4
From Magistrates for do. on Ale and Beer Licences	21 0 0

		8572 8 6 1 4

To which add the balance in the Receiver General's hands on the 30th June 1823, . . 2656 9 4 3 4

TOTAL, £11228 16 11

The amount paid by the Receiver General for the same period, was,	12376 0 5 1 2

		12659 7 8 1 4
Which left him in advance on the 31st December 1823		1430 10 9 1 4

The payment made into the Provincial chest for the last period are, viz:

Amount received on debentures under Stat 4 Geo. 4	£	24000 0 0

To which add this sum in advance by him on 31st December 1823, 1430 10 9 1 4
		37541 6 0 1 4

Leaving in the hands of the Receiver General on 31st December 1824, a balance of 17425 2 7 1 4

Among the warrants issued in this last period it appears that the enormous sum of £882 has been allowed to Mr. Fothergill, His Majesty's Printer, under the Statute 4 Geo 4. Chap 14. for Printing the Statutes of the last Session of Parliament. By a communication from the Inspector General to your Committee, dated the 26th ultimo by order of the Lieutenant Governor, it appears that the amount for this service has been revised by a Board of audit, and a deduction of £397 10s. made from the original allowance, leaving for the service in question, the sum of £514 10 sums which your Committee, notwithstanding the deduction made, consider much beyond a fair remuneration for the service performed.

No. 6 is an abstract of warrants issued on the Receiver General, under Provincial enactments from the 1st Jan to 31st Dec. 1824, and amounts to No. 7.

No. 7. contains a general statement of the receipts and payments of the Receiver General, on account of the appropriation for the administration of justice and support of the Civil Government for the year 1825, in continuation from No. 9 of the accounts for that year.

By this it appears that the sum remaining unexpended on the 31th November 1824 was £3549 4 8 currency. £3247 15 4 8-4 was required to complete the service of the year as per account of warrants, leaving a surplus applicable to the service of the year 1824, the sum of 11 8 3 1 4

No 8, is a general statement of the receipts and payments on account of the appropriation for the year 1824 with an abstract of warrants annexed

The receipts are as follows:
The sum appropriated by the 4th Geo. 4 Cap. 25, . . .	£3720 0 0
Amount transferred from the Crown duties under 14th Geo 3d .	3600 0 0

Leaving applicable to the unsatisfied services of the year . . .		3837 15 11

Your Committee would here beg leave to bring under the notice of your Honourable House, that by the foregoing accounts, Nos. 7. and 8 and by the detailed accounts last sent down by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, it appears the fees of the Clerks of Assize continue to be charged—amounting for the year 1823 to £393 2 and for 1824 to £159 14 6—also, the usual allowance of travelling expences to the Crown Lawyers, amounting for 1824 to £166 13 3 8 4 and the usual allowance of £90 Sterling per annum to the Atty General for a Clerk and the rent of an office.

The Contingent account of the Attorney General, including allowance for a clerk and for office rent for the half year ended 31st December 1823. is 375 1 3

Contingent account of the Solicitor General the same period . . . 260 10 7 3 4

Do. do. including as before, for the Attorney General for the half year ending 30th June 1824 . . . . 316 15 9 1 2

Contingent account of the Solicitor General, for same period. . . . 42 14 9 3 4

The total amount of the contingent accounts of the Attorney General and Solicitor General for the year 1823, was £1628 4 6 3 4 and for 1824, ... 1231 7 7 1 2

Travelling expenses for 1824, . .	166 13 3 3 4
For Clerks of Assize for 1824, . .	109 14 6
Total for the Crown Lawyers and Clerks of Assize for 1824. . .	1557 15 5 1-4

How far it is advisable to continue these payments, in the manner and to the extent they are now made, is left to the wisdom of Your Honourable House to determine; but your Committee would observe that the Attorney General receives a salary of £300 per annum, and the Solicitor General of £100 per annum, from His Majesty's Government and that added thereto, the amount of Extracts from fines and forfeitures in the several Courts of Assize and Courts of Quarter Sessions within the Province, would, in the opinion of your Committee, if so applied, largely contribute towards remunerating those officers for the services rendered by them.

By the same accounts it appears that the annual expenditure for the Surveyor General's office is about £1800 Currency. In referring back to the history of this department it appears that in former years, His Province paid for surveys at one time £7000 at another £5000, and at a third £3000, amounting in all to £15000. That in the year 1818 the Parliament declined to provide for the payment of any more Surveys—and that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in His speech from the Throne at the close of the Session of that year said, that in future he hoped to relieve the Province from the annual demand for the support of the Surveyor General's Department," and in His Excellency's Speech at the close of the Succeeding Session, he congratulated the House of Assembly, "that the plan which had been adopted for meeting the expense of surveys, had so well succeeded as to have put it in His power to relieve them from any demand on account of that service." No appropriation has since been made for Surveys, but the expenditure of the office still continues to be provided for as before stated; and your committee think it proper to suggest, that as the purchases of land by the Government are believed to be made on very moderate terms; and that from its annual amount annually so large sums greatly exceeding their cost, and in the advantages of which the Provincial Treasury does not at present participate, it ought not to be burthened with the payment of any portion of the expense of the department.

There appears to have been paid for postage, by the various offices, upwards of £400 within the year, a charge with which, your Committee think, the Province ought not to be burthened, if the management of the Post office department within the Province is found to yield a saving over and above the necessary expenses, but which is a matter out of the power of your committee to ascertain.

Your Committee beg leave next to advert to the large sums annually paid the Government Printers—for 1824 the amount is something more than £700, a sum which cannot but be deemed to be when it is recollected that a printing establishment has been maintained for the use of the Government Printer at the public expense.

No. 9 is a general statement of the receipts and payments of the Receiver General on account of the permanent appropriation of £2800 Currency, by Statute 56 Geo 3d. Chap. 26, from the 11th November 1823 to the 31st December 1824. By account No. 10, of the year 1823, it appears there remained unexpended on the 11th November of that year the sum of 1965 8 3

Appropriation for 1824, . . .	2800 0 0
TOTAL	3835 8 3
of which £3010 17 10 has been paid by warrants of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor as per abstract annexed to the account, ...	3010 17 10
Leaving a balance in the hands of the Receiver General on the 31st December 1824, of	£ 794 7 5

By this abstract of warrants last alluded to, it appears that payments have been made as follows, which your Committee find to be new charges.

To the Adjutant General of Militia, being an excess for contingencies of his office beyond the allowance authorized by Statute from 19th March to the 30th June 1823 . . . 35 9 7 1-2

To the same for the half year ending 31st December 1823. . . . 31 2 4 1-2

To the same for the half year ending 30th June 1824, ... 45 15 4

TOTAL to the Adjutant General, . . 112 7 4

To Lieutenant Colonel Fitzgibbon Assistant Adjutant General in addition to his salary from 19th March 1823 to 18th January 1824, ... 50 0 0

To George Hillier Esq private Secretary, being to reimburse him his travelling expences between York and Queenston, on the Public Service, between the 1st July 1822, and the 8th December following, and the 1st April and 7th November 1823, including £115 5s. for passages in the Steam Boat, Frontenac, during the former period not included in a former warrant 48 14 5

To Lieutenant Colonel Fitzgibbon, Assistant Adjutant General of militia, being to reimburse him his travelling expenses, and remunerate him for services in the investigation of certain recent occurrences in the District of Bathurst, ... 75 0 0

To the Honourable John Henry Dunn, being to reimburse him so much paid his Agents in Lower Canada for their Commission and trouble in the prepayment and borrowing from the Military Chest and Treasury of Lower Canada, for the public use of the Province during the suspension of the Receipt of duties accruing on imports at Quebec, ... 156 17 9

To the Honourable John Henry Dunn, being to enable him to defray the charge of given public notice to the claimants for losses incurred during the late war, ... 169 18 9

To the Honourable Joseph Wells, Chairman of the Board of Commissioners of claims for losses sustained during the late war being together with the amount of a warrant paid out of the Provincial Revenue for £131 15, the amount of an account for the contingent expenses of the said Board, for the half year ended 30th June 1824. . . . . 100 9 8

With respect to the Contingencies of the Adjutant General's Office, it appears by a communication from the Inspector General, that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor did not conceive it to have been the intention of the Legislature in limiting these contingencies, to compel that officer to pay out of his personal allowance, any sum actually required for the Public service over and above the sum of £26 limitted as aforesaid. To the general expenditure of this fund, your committee for it their duty, in justice to the country, to call the attention of your Honourable House.

No. 10, is a statement of the Provincial Revenue rising from duties on licences issued to Shopkeepers, Innkeepers and Distillers in the several Districts of this Province, from 5th January 1824 to 4th January 1825, so far as the several Inspectors have reported the same, by which it appears that the gross Revenue collected amounted to. 3699 17 10 1 2

Deduct allowance for collection at ten per cent	369 19 9 1 4
Leaves of net Revenue, . . .	3329 18 1 1 4

Which compared with the receipts from the same sources the preceding year, shows a deficiency of £233 17 11 3 4 as appears by the following statement viz: the net Revenue from shop, tavern and still licences to the 4th October 1824 (as per account No. 1, of that year) was 3563 16 2 1 2

And the amount collected between the 5th October 1823, and the 4th January 1824 was, as ascertained by reference to the Inspector General, ... 373 17 10 1 2

TOTAL, . . 3937 13 1

Amount of Revenue from the 5th January 1824, as before stated 3329 18 1 1 4

In favour of 1823, ... £233 17 11 3 4

The deficit occurs on the duty on Tavern and still licences, and principally on the latter, which your committee cannot account for otherwise than by ascribing it to the high price of Grain.

No. 11, is an abstract account of revenue arising from duties on Merchandize imported from the United States, at the several Ports of Entry within this Province from the 1st January, to the 31st December 1824, so far as the collectors have reported the same, by this it appears the gross amount collected was 4194 0 2 1 4

From which deduct the allowance for collection	226 3 6 1 2
Leaves a net Revenue of . .	3967 16 7 3 4

Comparing this statement with the corresponding account of the preceding year, there appears an increase of net Revenue of £963 2 9 3-4 and the expense of collection is lessened in the proportion of about 25 to 40

In noticing this increase your committee have to observe that it is occasioned by the articles bearing an ad-valorem duty, while on the other hand, in the article of Salt there is deficiency of Revenue amounting to £348 14 3 from the importation being less than last year by nearly 14000 Bushels, and that with respect to the article of Tobacco the quantity imported has fallen off, though the duty was reduced by the act of the last Session of Parliament, a circumstance which has disappointed the expectations which it appeared reasonable to entertain

No. 12, is an account of Revenue from licences issued to Hawkers and Pedlars, as per returns, from collectors received between the 1st January and 31st December 1824.

The net Revenue arising from this source for the period stated, is,	228 0 0
And from the same source the preceding year	156 15 0
Which shews an increase of	71 5 0

No 13, is an account of Revenue from licenses issued to Auctioneers and from duties on sales at auction, collected from the 1st January to the 31st December 1824, so far as reported.

The net Revenue arising from this source is £97 15 5 3-4 and exceeds that of the preceding year £31 14 11.

By these different statements it appears that the whole net Revenue collected in the Province is, so far as the same had been reported, for the year ending the 31st December 1824, £6899 13 2 3-4

The Tonnage duty for 1823 amounted to £78 8 2 The law imposing this duty having been repealed in the last Session of Parliament, this source of revenue has of course ceased: Your committee must remark that the expense of the Light House at Gibraltar Point, costs the Province from £30 to £100 annually, which should, undoubtedly, be defrayed by those benefiting by the Light House, and would therefore recommend the enactment of the law imposing the duty.

No 14, is the estimate for the year 1825 for the administration of justice and the support of the civil government of the Province that is to say,

Administration of Justice,	2400 0 0
Government Office,	1150 0 0
Receiver General's Office,	500 0 0
Surveyor General's Office,	1500 0 0

Repairs, &c. of Government House,	200 0 0
Casual and other expenses,	500 0 0
Amounting in all to Sterling	£9460 0 0

being £360 more than the estimate for 1824 which difference is made up by the new item of £450 for printing the Statutes of the present Session and an addition of £90 to the Estimate for the Government Printer

The Resources applicable to this service are estimated as follows:

Duties under the 14th Geo 3d. in Upper and Lower Canada,	2430 0 0
Surplus of the appropriation for 1824, beyond the sum estimated to complete the service of that year,	450 0 0
	2880 0 0

Leaving to be provided for from the Provincial chest the sum of £6580 sterling being £1080 more than the appropriation for the last year

The excess required appears to be owing principally to the small sum at which the Revenue under the 14 Geo 3d Chap. 88 in Lower Canada, is estimated; and that it is estimated far too low. Your committee have before them the best evidence, namely an official statement of the duties levied at the Port of Quebec in the Quarters ending the 5th July and 10 Oct 1824 by which it appears that the amount collected under 14 Geo 3d was

	23828 19 5
Less amount of drawbacks and duties retained as having been overpaid by mistake,	447 8 10 1-2
	23381 10 7 1-2
One-8th for Upper Canada is	2672 6 1

Exceeding the sum estimated as before stated (£1500 Sterling equal to £1666 13 4) £3009 12 9.

Your committee have compared the estimate for the current year with the estimate and expenditure of 1824 and submit the same as follows for the information of the House.

No 16. is a detailed account of monies outstanding in hands of Inspectors and Collectors on the 1st January 1825, amounting to £3348 14 1.

No 17, is an account of monies paid to the Receiver General of the Province by Inspectors and Collectors on account of duties since the 1st January 1825, amounting to £2407 15 5 3-4 which left outstanding at the time at which the accounts were transmitted to your Honourable House £941 18 7 3-4

No 18, is a subsidiary of accounts in detail paid out of the various Provincial appropriations between the 1st January and 31st December 1824

The debentures outstanding amount to £42 333 6 8.

Provision has been made in the Estimate for the redemption of £6666 13 4 on the 15th Feb. ult. leaving a debt of £35666 13 4 Currency, bearing an interest at 6 per cent, and amounting to £2140 per annum.

Upon a general review of the Finance of the Province as it stood at the commencement of the year, it appears to your committee that the public debt, consisting entirely in outstanding debentures may be taken at £35666 13 4 Currency, of which the £8000 incurred on account of the Burlington canal, is a loan, the repayment of which it is hoped, may safely be reckoned upon.

The actual debt may thus be fairly taken at £27666 13 4

It is proper, however, to take into consideration that the Government has paid into the Bank of Upper Canada instalments to the amount of £8125 which has been producing an annual interest of 6 per cent, and which if considered as assets equal merely to its nominal amount, will leave a debt of something less than £20000 to be discharged by the Province from its future resources

It will appear from the General estimate of income and expenditure (Acc. No. 15.) that there is not at present such an excess of revenue above the annual charge as would enable the government speedily to redeem the debentures, but it is satisfactory to find that the general revenue has increased in a considerable degree within the last year; and it seems but reasonable to anticipate, that an increase of population will have the certain effect of augmenting that source of revenue as well as that derived from importation at Quebec; with respect to the latter resource, in which increase is of much more consequence, your Committee find that the amount of duties paid at Quebec within the last year, very considerably exceeds the anticipation of the Inspector General From the calculations which your Committee have made upon the return of merchandize imported, they believe the proportion of 1-5th of those duties for the year ending 31st December last, will amount to nearly £22000. The increasing population of both Provinces and the extension of Trade, must, it is conceived, unavoidably augment the revenue, and it is also to be taken into account, that the duties upon Teas, which are to be imported into Quebec from China will, in future years, add very materially to our resources.

Your Committee need scarcely observe, that although by the provisions of the Canada trade act this Province is secured in the receipt of 1-5th of the amount of duties collected at the Port of Quebec, that proportion has ceased to be the established allowance since July last, and that it now depends upon the decision of Arbitrators, one of whom is to be appointed by His Majesty to make such other distribution of the revenue as may appear to them just.

Signed, JAMES GORDON, Chairman.

Committee Room, House of Assembly, 29th March, 1825.

Mr GORDON moved, that two hundred copies of the above Report should be printed

In amendment Mr. HAMILTON moved that, after the word "that" the whole should be expunged, and the following should be inserted, "the Report on the public accounts be referred back to the Committee on finance."

On which the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows:

Yeas—Messrs Clark, Hamilton, Hornor, Matthews, McBride, McCall, Randal, Rolph and Wilson—9.

Nays—Messrs. Atkinson, Atty General, Beardsly, Beaty, Burnham, Coleman, Gordon, D Jones, Lefferty, Lyons, McDonald, McDonell, McLean, Morris, Peterson Playter, Scollick, Thomson, VanKoughnett, Walker, Walsh, Wilkinson and White—23

The Question was decided in the negative by a majority of 14, and lost accordingly

The original Question was then put and carried

On motion of Mr. MORRIS, the Report of the Committee of Finance was ordered to be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Mr D JONES from the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Matthew Leech, Esquire, informed the House that the Committee had agreed to a Report which he was directed to submit for its adoption

The Report was ordered to be received, and it was read as follows:

The Select Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Matthew Leech, having examined the same, and duly considered the matters therein set forth, beg leave to report: That it appears, upon an investigation of the proceedings in the cause alluded to by the Petitioner upon a judgment in which he is confined in execution, as appears by his Petition, that the same were not, in many respects, conformable to the practice of the court in which such cause was instituted. The omission, on the part of the plaintiff, to observe such practice in the management of that suit, may have enabled him to obtain final judgment in it by surprise upon the defendants, inasmuch as they were not apprized of those proceedings in the cause which, in conformity with the practice of the Court, should have necessarily taken place to enable him to obtain the same, a notice of which, such practice requires to be given a defendant in any suit. To this circumstance may probably be ascribed the inattention of the Petitioner to the suit in question, and his negligence in availing himself of a defence to the action, which, he seems to consider a just and legal one; and sufficient to do away with the Plaintiff's right of action against him. To whatever cause, however, his want of attention, in this respect, be imputable, the Petitioner may, as he complains, have sustained such injustice by the irregularity of the proceedings; and as it would therefore conduce to the ends of justice, to have an opportunity afforded the Petitioner of contesting, by means of a regular trial, the plaintiff's right of action against him. The Committee are of opinion that relief should be extended to him, and some measure devised to enable him to attain it; considerable time having elapsed since the passing of the judgment, referred to in this Report, the Court from whence the proceedings in the suit emanated, may not, consistently with its practice, at this time interpose its authority to grant the Petitioner relief, which circumstance, in the opinion of your Committee, renders his application to this House justifiable, and his case a subject worthy of its consideration.

The Committee do not feel themselves warranted in pointing out any precise mode of extending relief to the petitioner, as under the peculiar circumstances of his application for it, they consider the expediency and manner of granting it, would more properly become the consideration of this House.

All which is respectfully submitted.

DAVID JONES. Chairman.

Committee, Room of Assembly, 29 March 1825.

On motion of Mr. D. JONES, it was ordered that the report of the select Committee on the petition of Matthew Leech should be referred to a Committee of the whole House on the morrow.

Agreeably to the order of the day the Religious Sects relief Bill was read the second time

Editorial Commentary.

Alarming, though somewhat contradictory, news have arrived from Greece,—and the most formidable preparations, for a general and simultaneous invasion, are making on the part of the Turks and Egyptians.

A French General, named Boyer, has lately arrived in Egypt assumed the Turkish dress, and received an appointment to the first rank in the army, with the pay and dignity of a Bey.

No less than 170 new vessels, of various tonnage, are building this season, in New Brunswick—and labouring men of every description in great request at high wages.

We rejoice in being able to state that there is no doubt, whatever, of the British Ports being now open for the admission of Canadian Wheat at all times on payment of a duty of five shillings a quarter.—This is glorious intelligence for both Provinces and if our farmers do not prosper the fault must rest solely with themselves, or be attributable to the want of enterprize and public spirit in our merchants

A Bill is in progress through the House of Commons for the extinction of feudal and seigniorial rights and burdens in Lower Canada.

It appears, from good authority, that the British Parliament will be actually dissolved next month;—and, it is said, that the cause of this sudden decision may be found in the agitation of the great Catholic question;—that the divisions which have occured upon this subject, in the Cabinet, have assumed so serious a character as to be calmed, or prevented, only by such an expedient

The DUKE OF YORK has made a speech in the House of Lords upon the Catholic Question, which it is no wonder has excited an extraordinary sensation throughout the country, both in England and Ireland; and which has called forth a very powerful and characteristic burst of eloquence from Mr. BROUGHAM in the Commons House. We regret that our narrow limits, and the lateness of the hour, prevent our inserting at length the whole debate. But we cannot refuse to give a place to the speech of His Royal Highness on this occasion—intending to insert that of Mr. BROUGHAM next week

His Royal Highness the Duke of York.—I hold in my hand a petition from the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of St. George, Windsor, praying that no further concession may be made to the Roman Catholics. I am sure that any reference from so learned and respectable a body will be received with the attention which it deserves and, therefore, I should not have troubled your Lordships, with any observations in support of it, if I did not feel that this was an occasion on which any man will be permitted to address your Lordships. I do this more readily on this present occasion, because feeling that I am not in the habit of taking part in your discussions, I will not interrupt the progress of the debate on the bill to which the petitioners refer, if it should come before this house. It is now twenty five years since this measure was first brought into discussion I cannot forget with what events that discussion was at that time connected It was connected with the most serious illness of one now no more; it was connected also with the temporary removal of one of the ablest, wisest, and honestest Ministers, that this country ever had—From that, when I gave my first vote on this Question to the present, I have never seen any reason to regret or to change the line which I then took. I have every year seen more reason to be satisfied with my decision. When the question comes regularly before your Lordships, it will be discussed much more fully and ably than I can do it. But there are two or three subjects on which I am anxious to touch one is that you place the Church of England in a situation in which no other Church in the world is placed; the Roman Catholic will not allow the Church of England, or Parliament, to interfere with his Church, and yet he requires you to allow him to interfere with your Church, and to legislate for it There is another subject still more delicate, on which I cannot, now, refer, help me in a few words I speak (I beg to be understood) only as an individual: I desire not to be understood as speaking for any body else—but consider my self, the situation in which you place the Sovereign By the Coronation Oath, the Sovereign is bound to maintain the church established, in her doctrine, discipline, and rights inviolate An Act of Parliament may release future Sovereigns, and other men from this oath, or from any other oaths to be taken. I consider the situation in which the Sovereign is thus placed, I feel very strongly on this subject; I cannot forget the deep interest which was taken upon it by me now no more, I cannot here help adverting to the distressing situation in which my Royal Father was placed by the repeated endeavours which were exerted to establish the claims, notwithstanding the obligation which his Coronation Oath imposed on him; and I cannot help thinking that to this was owing the many years' illness which he suffered. (Here his Royal Highness was compelled to pause,) I beg your Lordships to understand that I am not speaking for others but for myself. I have been brought up from my early years in these principles; and from the time when I began to reason for myself, I have entertained them from conviction; and in every situation in which I may be placed, I am determined, to debate or censure or obloquy I may be exposed by the declaration to persevere in my opposition to these claims, "So help me God!"

We have deemed the various extracts relative to newly proposed American Canals, found in this days publication,—and the sale and settlement of the Grand Island, in the Niagara River, of so much political importance to the CANADAS, that we hope none of our readers will consider their admission occupying too much space.—The death of the late public spirited, enterprising, and determined COL. CAMPBELL, who perished at Sandwich,—as we foresaw at the period of that melancholy event, was proved a serious misfortune to Upper Canada;—since he was fully resolved, as one of the Commissioners on our side (and he had great influence) never to consent to the cession of either Barnhardts or the Grand Island.—But he fell in an untimely hour—our ministers were not sufficiently well informed of our interests, and our localities—and the two great river keys of our country were riven up to our rival?

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LONDON, April 326.

Yesterday the four Canadian Indian Chiefs were introduced to the Lord Mayor. The visiters of his Lordship were, the Grand Chief, the Second Chief, the Chief of the Council, or Minister for Foreign Affairs, as the citizens called him from his very statesmanlike appearance, and the Chief of the Warriors, or Commander-in-Chief of the Huron or Wyandot nation. They came over to England, his Lordship was informed, for the purpose of settling claims to some territory to which the Government of this country consider England entitled. They had been introduced to His Majesty, and had the honor of a very long conversation with him. And each of them wore at this interview a gold medal, which had been presented by the King They appeared in their grand national dress: their faces were painted and their hair, which was long and flowing, was decorated with feathers and with the tails of various animals. To their ears were appended large silver rings of rude & fantastical workmanship. Their noses were decorated with similar ornaments and they wore silver plates on their arms. They were armed with tomahawks and scalping knives, which they wore in ornamental belts—When they reached the private door at which they entered, one of them looked in amazement at the magnificient liveries of the Lord Mayor's footman, and asked in French whether the bedizened servent was not the king of the city They were received by the Lord Mayor, the Lady Mayoress and a party of his Lordship's friends, in the large parlour in which Wilkes used to entertain his convivial visiters. The Grand Chief, after he had performed certain ceremonies in recognition of the Lord Mayor as a friend of the Wyandots; and exhibiting a band of amity between them and his Lordship, addressed his host in the Indian language, which was translated by the Chief of the Warriors into French, as the orator proceeded. The Grand Chief stated, that he had left his children and Grand Chief stated, that he had left his children and his countrymen on the other side of the great waters, and had come over to this county with his brethren to see the king of all his nation as well as of this country; that he had seen the King, whose goodness to the Indians would ever bind them to his service, and unite them in battle against all his enemies; that, gratified as they had been by what the good King had done and said for the Indians, and having heard much of the Chief of this great city, who was said to be worthy of so true and bountiful a King of the most powerful and friendly people, he could not think of departing without fixing his eyes upon that Chief. (At this moment the sun shone in suddenly on the party.) The sun that now shone upon them looked kindly and happy at the meeting It was a proof that the Great Father of All, to whom all kings and chiefs were tributary, approved of the knitting together of their hearts, and of the friendship which he hoped would never be overcast by any clouds of discontent, but would continue in one bright and warm ray until all the world went to rest in the darkness of eternity. The Lord Mayor expressed himself highly gratified that the distinguished travellers had visited his house before their departure from this country. He expressed his confidence that the King, whom they had seen, would ever act to them in the manner of the kindness of which they had declared themselves so sensible, and he was sure that, on their parts. they would maintain that friendship, and continue that aid which had entitled them to so many thanks during the late war. The condition of the Indians was deeply interesting to all good and humane people, and his Lordship was convinced they never would be in want of generous and warm friends and advocates in this county. The visiters then at the request of his Lordship seated themselves and partook of a very elegant collation. Their conduct at table was marked by great politeness, and by remarkable attentions to the ladies. After the cloth was removed, they sung several national songs, of a most terrific character, to the dismay of the ladies and the astonishment of the gentlemen, and, withdrawing from the table, they danced the war—lance, and gave the war—loop to the full capability of their lungs. The chief of the warriors, who is 64 years of age, was remarkably active, and capered about in the most surprising manner. After they had thus amused his Lordship, and themselves, and the ladies, they were conducted through the principal rooms in the house. They were particularly struck with the Egyptian Hall, and the room in which the ancient pulvinar once stood. The Lady Mayoress presented each of them, upon their departure, with a testimonial of respect, and they concluded their visit, most warmly testifying their sense of the hospitable and affectionate treatment they had met with at the Mansion-house.

The Silent Woman.—Madame Regnier, the wife of a law officer at Versailles, while talking in the presence of a numerous party, dropped some remarks, which were out of place, though not very important. Her husband reprimanded her before the whole company, saying, "Silence, Madam, you are a fool!"—She lived 20 or 30 years afterwards, and never uttered a word, even to her children! A pretended theft was committed in her presence, in the hope of taking her by surprise, but without effect, and nothing could induce her to speak. When her consent was requisite for the marriage of any of her children, she bowed her head and signed the contract.—Madame Campan's Journal.

FRANCE.

A memoir was lately read in the Academy of Sciences at Paris, by a Doctor Villerme, "On the mortality in France in the class in easy circumstances, compared with what takes place among the indigent." In two arrondissements of Paris, the first and twelfth, he makes it appear, the former, which is inhabited by the rich persons, has a mortality of one to fifty, and the latter, which is inhabited by poor, has a mortality of one in twenty-four, there being no other assignable cause for this enormous difference, than wealth and poverty. He found the deaths in Rue de la Mortellerine, where poor people are crowded together in unhealthy lodgings, four times and a half as numerous as in the quays of the Isle St. Louis, where rich people live in large and well ventilated apartments He also shews that the mortality in the hospitals rises or falls with the rate of wages of those who enter them:—Of Jewellers, Compositors, &c. &c. there die in the

SPAIN.

CADIZ, that once opulent City, the commercial emporium of the world, is running its course, like all mutual things, to abandonment and ruin. The Churches and public buildings, both externally, and internally, are in a state of dilapidation, and its Cathedral, which was to have been the glory of Cadiz and the admiration of Europe, the building of which cost millions, is now partitioned into workshops. The pompous and formidable Navy of Spain, which in former days, floated in insulting security in her wide and spacious Bay, is long since annihilated from the waters of the deep, and the rich galeons, which annually poured in their vast wealth from the Mines of Mexico and Peru, to feed the sickly appetite of pampered sensuality, are no more. Neptune too has declared war against the city, and decreed that his watery element shall ride rampant over its walls; already he has made great inroads on its boundaries, and I doubt whether the treasury of France (for Spain has none) will be adequate to repair its rotten walls. Commerce also has taken her departure, and is now on her wings to other distant regions, and left nothing behind but power and distress Men are to be met at every corner, in the attitude of supplication for the daily wants of nature, who not many years ago, were among the first merchants of the city Every day turns out a fresh supply on the town, and those whom the blind goddess has been more favourable to, studiously avoid their quondam associates who now supplicate their charity. Families who, during the former seige of Cadiz occupied the first rank in society, and were the very centre of attraction and admiration on the Alameda, are now the criminal agents of gaming tables; and the panders of prostitution. Others again, who wish to preserve an apparent virtue in the reverses of fortune, live more retired, and are never to be seen beyond the doors of their comfortless habitations but on Sundays and holidays, to comply with their religious obligation to hear mass.—London Paper.

UNITED STATES.

The practability of a water communication from Boston to Montreal and Quebec, by the way of the Middlesex canal and Merrimac river, up the Penigewasset, or by the Winnipissiogee, and Squam Ponds, to Plymouth, thence to the Connecticut by Baker's river and a canal, thence by the Passumpsic, Barton river, Memphremagog lake, and St. Francis river, to the St Lawrence, seems to be no longer doubted by those who have attended to the examination of the subject. The fund of information derived by the meeting in this town, on Wednesday last, from Mr M'Duffie, a professed surveyor, and practical engineer, was of the most satisfactory nature. He demonstrates by an extra observation of the whole, and as usual survey to the greater part of the route, that the plan is practicable and much easier of accomplishment than has been generally supposed. The importance of this undertaking must be apparent to every one who considers that this route is through the very heart of New-Hampshire, the northern, but an important and productive part of Vermont, and through the centre and decidedly the best part of Lower Canada—striking the lake St Peters, which communicates with the St Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec. The whole distance from Boston to this point is about 300 miles, or 350 to Montreal; all but about 100 of which is now navigable for boats and small craft—and for supplying water for the locks and canals the remaining distance, there are streams and bodies of water very conveniently situated.

The enterprise must be vastly important to the citizens of Boston in a commercial point of view—and so much of a national object, in affording the best and most direct course from an important part of our coast to the Canadas, as to insure, we should think, the patronage of the General Government. Nor will the government of Canada, we have reason to believe, be at all backward in encouraging the measures, and promoting its accomplishment within its own limits.—Con. Reg.

ANOTHER AMERICAN CANAL.—We have been informed by a gentleman from Hatley, that last week, Mr. Clinton, (son of the Governor of New York) Mr. Smith, and another were employed viewing, and marking out a line from Memphramagog Lake, on the Stanstead line, to the town of Barnet in Vermont, for a Canal for boat navigation; the distance we understand is about 50 miles. If a Canal will be cut through the above line, (and there is every probability of it,) the inhabitants of the Townships on the frontiers will have a water communication to New York, the town of Barnet being at the head of the navigation on the Connecticut River, and thus the produce of these fertile districts will be diverted from our markets, for it cannot be supposed that the owners would, in the present state of the roads between this City and the townships, (and we are sorry they are likely to remain comparatively impassible) send their articles to this place at an enormous expense, and trouble, when they can have the means of transporting them by water from their doors. The enterprise of the people of New York is astonishing, and no obstacle appears too difficult for them to overcome.—They are determined to leave nothing untried for acquiring a monopoly of the Canadian produce, and trade. They are completely flanking us, to use a military frase; their great western Canal was intended to draw the trade of Upper Canada to New York, in that direction, and so it most assuredly will, if measures are not speedily taken to counteract them, by opening a route to our markets, which will be equally, if not more advantageous, and which is actually in the power of the people to accomplish. They now contemplate draining our Eastern townships of their surplus produce by a new Canal, as mentioned above, which they will eventually do if the legislature of this province do not open good roads of communication, or cause some better means of facilitating the intercourse between the St Lawrence and the townships than are at present in existence.

GRAND ISLAND.

This valuable possession of the state, formerly the property of the Creek Nation, was sold in lots on Friday last, at the Capitol, pursuant to law.

It will be recollected that Mr. Noah of New-York, made application to the Legislature at their session of 1819, for the purchase of Grand Island, setting forth in his memorial that his object was to establish a Jewish settlement or community on that spot. The selection was considered every way eligible, and at once drew public attention to that fine portion of land, but the commissioners under the Ghent Treaty, not having concluded their surveys, it was doubtful whether in running the line Grand Island would fall to the State or to Upper Canada. The point having been decided by the line running through the channel on the Canada side, the state authorised it to be sold and the proceeds to be appropriated to the Canal fund.

The purchasers on Friday were few, but were among the most spirited and enterprising in the state, and the Island, together with the small islands, which were valued at about $50,000, and by many supposed to be valued much higher, brought seventy six thousand dollars. Two acres, and the most eligible acres for cities on the island, were purchased for Mr. Noah, one at the point facing Lake Erie, and containing upwards of 1000 acres, and the other containing about 1000 acres directly opposite to the mouth of the Grand Canal, together with Tonnewanta, Beaver and Frog island,—the whole amount of his purchase was about $20,000. Tonnewanta Island containing 69 acres, and valued at 312 dollars sold for 1400.

This may be considered as the last valuable possession owned by the state. Lands are every where locating, particularly on the bord rs of the canal.

Whether Mr. Noah may succeed in his laudible designs in persuading his nation to emigrate to America, cannot at this time be foretold. He has however, pursued the object with great steadiness of purpose, which bears every appearance of confidence. It has been a matter of some surprise, why so few of the Jewish people have directed their attention towards this favoured spot, where, not only equal privileges await them, and a perfect freedom in their temporal and religious concerns, but every facility of Trade, Commerce, Manufactures, and Agriculture are at their command. It must arise from their having no knowledge of these advantages, and the presumption is, that when they are spread before them in a manner warranted by facts, a disposition to see this chosen land will at least prevail.

We find the Jewish bankers in London, Paris Amsterdam, Vienna, &c. making great loans to Mexico, Colombia, Rio de la Plata, Chili—Loans for Mexican and other mining companies, to the amount of more than a hundred million of dollars, besides continental loans. Only ten millions of dollars judiciously invested in the western district of our state, would realize a safe and golden profit and give additional life and activity to that rich and flourishing section of our country. We are all interested therefore in such representations of our actual condition as Mr. Noah may and will make to his friends abroad. There are sufficient inducements for enterprising capitalists to build a city on Grand Island It is within a few miles of Lake Erie, having the trade of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and the great Lakes, together with Upper Canada, and the Northwest Territory. It is also within a few miles of Lake Ontario, commanding the trade of that lake and the markets of Montreal and Quebec—it faces the mouth of the canal, having a water communication direct with New-York, and is in every respect one of the most eligible and commanding positions in the state for a commercial city, the Niagara river having four feet water around the island, and the current near that spot very trifling.

In the rapid settlements of this state it was not to be expected that Grand Island could long have been overlooked, and giving to Buffalo and Black Rock all the advantages of position, it will still constitute an important depot, particularly when the Ohio canal is completed, and the produce, together with the commerce generally of Lake Erie, find their way to New York through the canal.

We understand that in the course of the summer the foundation stone of the city will be laid, with suitable masonic, military and religious ceremonies, probably about the period when the canal is completed and opened

We hope to see not only Jewish capitalists but merchants, agriculturists and mechanics of that nation settling in this state. Admitted to full enjoyment of the rights of citizens, they have every inducement to honor and enterprise; labouring under no civil or religious disqualification, neither oppressed by law nor tethered by prejudice, all that will be expected of them is a conscientious discharge of the duties of good citizens, and no more We see daily the blessings and advantages of free and liberal institutions, and separating church and state in our government—Emigrants of every religious denomination who crowd to our shores are well received—equally protected, and equally pat-

sonal rights without limitation. The good effects of such institutions are to be found in the increase of population, from three millions to eleven millions of enterprising people.

From the Philadelphia National Gazette.

At the commencement of the present week, we finished the perusal of General Count Segur's "History of Napoleon and the Grand Army, during 1812," and intended to review it in some detail, but the topics of the day have required all the space which we could afford. It is one of the most interesting and impressive works that we have read; bears the stamp of exact truth; powerfully effects the imagination and heart; conveys the most salutary lessons, and inspires, without having been expressly designed for this effect, absolute horror of the spirit of war and conquest. Never have been recorded more dreadful sufferings, and a more miserable catastrophe, than those of the grand army in the expedition of 1812; nor have any been more graphically and skilfully described. General de Segur has written as an eye-witness of the whole campaign; he has portrayed the conduct, and developed the character of Napoleon, as a near observer, who enjoyed access to the highest and original sources of information for all that he deemed necessary to complete his purpose. We learn from the London journals that an English translation of his volumes was about to appear. We may expect, therefore, to see an American edition of them, which, when it shall be issued, cannot be too widely diffused, whether with a view to the mere gratification of the public or moral excitement. There is no other piece of military history so imposing in the subject, so striking and awful in the events, so authentic in the details, and so fertile in example and admonition.

Marshal Ney seems to be the author's hero, though Napoleon is his chief object. He was not an enemy of the latter; he continued to be dazzled by his renown, title, and talents; but his statements of fact enable the reader to judge of a character which, when he speaks of it in general terms, he exalts magnificently from a sort of habit and inveterate policy. After having exhibited his leader under the influence of real infirmities of temper and intellect,—a prey to conflicting sentiments, distracted by hopes and apprehensions,—he yet exclaims—"Such was Napoleon above the passions of men by his own greatness," &c.

Before the Congress of Erfurth, in a conversation with Sebastiani, who remonstrated against his idea of a partition of European Turkey, Napoleon at length exclaimed—"you are right.—I renounce my project—but I shall annex Spain to France. "How," cried Sebastiani—"annex it! and what becomes then of your brother." "Do you think," rejoined Napoleon, "that one gives away a kingdom like Spain? I am resolved to unite Spain to France. As for Joseph he shall be indemnified. I will secure the consent of the Emperor Alexander by allowing him to seize upon Turkey as far as the Danube."

His counsellors, military and civil, disliked the invasion of Russia as wanton and hazardous; they laboured to divert him from the project; the arguments or altercations between them and him on the subject were frequent and warm, and some of these discussions are related by General Segur. Napoleon appealed to his star—to destiny; for he appears to have been a confirmed fatalist; he added—"You fear for my life in the war; it is thus that in the season of conspiracies I was to be alarmed by Georges; he was always after me, was it said; he would fire upon me. Well! he might have killed my aid-de-camp at the most; but kill me! that was impossible; I had not then fulfilled the will of destiny—I feel myself impelled forward to an end which I do not see," &c.

Among his motives for persisting in his plan were his jealousy of the power and elevation of the Emperor Alexander; and end of the dispositions of his armies and the ambition of his generals, while they remained without distant employment; and the belief that he was condemned by fate to the necessity of constant warfare. At an early period, he had what General Segur calls "the instinct of a premature death." An acrid humor, says the historian, vitiated his blood; he experienced paroxysms of pain in the stomach; in 1806 he cried out in one of these fits, to Count Lobau, that he had within him the cause of a prompt dissolution—that he should die of the same disease as his father. His constitution was sensibly impaired before he set out on the Russian expedition. He had become irascible and capricious; displayed either anger or incredulity at unwelcome news; and thus taught his subalterns either to deceive him by false reports or remain silent to his injury. His generals murmured, however, and complained that he did not allow them to enjoy what they had won by battles and services; that he perpetually dragged them to new conquests; that when Europe was overrun, Asia must be invaded.

"One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind.
Coop'd up he seem'd in earth and seas confin'd
And struggling, stretch'd his restless limbs about
The narrow globe, to find a passage out."

Macedonia's madman was never more spoiled by success, more intoxicated with power, and more vainglorious, than Napoleon, to judge from Segur's narrative. "You all think," said the French emperor to a Russian envoy and minister of state, "that you know how to make war, because you have read Jomini; but if his book could have taught you, would I have allowed it to be published?—Does your emperor think of resisting me? He is a general only on the parade ground. My head is my council—all comes from that—but who will direct Alexander? &c." At times, he decried his favourite pursuit:—He asserted that "the art of war was nothing else than the art of collecting a larger body than the enemy on a given point." After the battle of Borodino, his aid de-camp found him in his tent, with his head resting on his hands, and heard him remarking, as to himself—"What is war, a trade of barbarians; wherein all the skill consists in being the strongest on a given point."

We shall proceed with our notes in our next.

Natural History.

An Elephant in a state of petrefaction, has been found in excavating the earth near the walls of the city of Lyons, France. Some amateurs of ancient history, have attempted to show that the animal may have been one of those belonging to Hannibal's army; geologists consider it an antediluvian. The bones of an ox were found at the same time, and the excavations are continued with the hope of finding something more.

ANIMAL ENGRAFTING.

A Doctor Diffenback, of Berlin, has been performing some experiments in animal engrafting which may, perhaps have been the foundation, of those ascribed to the Sieu Majendic, besides several curious transfers of black chicken's feathers into white pigeon's tails, and vice versa, he has succeeded in the implanting of various plumage into the skins of puppies, kittens and rabbits; and then again of a cat's whiskers into the back of a plucked pigeon. A claw was also detached from a pigeon's toe, and translated successfully to its tail and another pigeon after being scalped, had its head mended with a flap cut out of its thigh, which bore hair, however, instead of feathers; and a rabbit, after having its nose cut off, was repaired by the Taliacotian operation. The Doctor, it seems did not spare himself or his acquaintance, but deprived a friend (a female probably) of an eyebrow, and implanted it on his own arm.

Perhaps our elderly gentlemen will take a hint from the operations, for a better way of hiding baldness, than by glueing a piece of false hair to their heads—There is an ox now exhibiting at the horse bazaar, with a pair of extraneous legs on his back, one of the successful insertions, no doubt, of Dr Diffenback.—English Paper.

INFLUENCE OF THE MOON ON THE WINDS.

Mr. S. G. Dacosta of Nelson Terrace, Stroke Newington, has published the following statement, which at all events, is worth attention:—

Those spots, or the figures commonly called the man in the moon, is positively the guide to the winds, or the wind itself; and to prove the same, I submit the following rules, viz:—

1st. The Moon at the full, at about twenty minute past twelve o'clock at night, say in straight line before you, is due South; the top part called North, the bottom South, right side East, and the left West.

2d. The first appearance of the full moon is in the East when said figure resemble an imperfect eyebrow, or wing; and should its appearance remain the same, after arriving at due South, then the winds will be Northerly, say North East and North West, till the next full moon; but if altered at the said time, in the smallest degree, say by a slope which varies very much, the winds will be in conformity. When the slope is nearest the middle, variable winds will be produced, as it touches in all quarters except the South East; and when the figure is erect on the West side, the winds will be westerly till the next full.

3d. This said figure is never erect on the East side, which accounts why we have so little South East Winds, and that little which we do have, I conceive, is from one of its lower limbs occasionally touching in a very small degree, in said quarter say like the stroke of a pen; or in going round, meets with some obstruction. Some astronomer may hereafter, by examining and comparing notes be able further to elucidate this.

4th. It strikes me very forcibly, that where the trade winds prevail, the moon has the same appearance as I have described, viz that the figure is always at the top, I am in hopes some Captain will answer this phenomena, as it will prove my system.

5th. In examining my plan it must be done with the naked eye, as all glasses I have looked through only prevent, instead of assisting me in my observations, as they only shew an innumerable quantity of small objects, from which I cannot deduce any thing.

6th. I recommend to astronomers and artists, to examine in addition to my rules laid down, the first appearance and shape of the new moon, and its progress all the way to the full, as I transiently once observed only about half of said figure at the end of the first quarter, which produced the same proportion of winds, say about half easterly and half westerly; therefore the more corresponding proofs that can be obtained the better; as I further conceive, if the weather is also put down, when the same appearances return the same wind and weather will also return by analogy. And as the full moon is often obscured by clouds, the following night may also shew sufficient to judge how the winds, and I hope the weather will be; as lately so it happened, that the full by the Almanack, was at three o'clock in the morning, which was after the usual time of examining, independent of its being obscured which caused me to examine the following night, at the usual time, and I was nearly correct, and quite satisfied of its utility.

I recommend astronomers and artists (they being the most fit) to improve as well as to examine my system, because any person with a good sight, can prove sufficient to be satisfied that I am correct in what I have laid down; but my chief desire is, that the above gentlemen should examine as I conceive they will be from time to come, to make Almanacks monthly, detailing the winds and weather; therefore the first that will be at the trouble shall receive some share of such benefit that I may derive of so valuable a discovery, as I have no doubt all Europe will subscribe, and not least this nation agreeable to its invariable characteristic.

Poetry.

From a late English Paper.

LIBERTY.

BREATHES there the man whose servile breast
Is sunk in langour's fatal rest,
Whilst o'er him, 'mid the gathering storm,
Oppression rears her hateful form?
Who, when her foot to earth would tread
Those rights for which his fathers bled,
Hoves not nor strives to stay their fall,
But one by one resigns them all?
Breathes such a man? I will not ask
What country gave him birth:
He did not spring from English mould;
For such a soul, thus tamed, thus cold,
Would rouse his angry sires of old,
And drag them back to earth

Breathes there the wretch, whose feeble eye
Ne'er pierced the film of Slavery—
Who never felt the glow of shame
O'erspread his cheek at Freedom's name—
Nor blush to see himself accurst,
Of slaves, the veriest and the worst?
Breathes such a wretch? O'er eastern climes,
Unheeded, let him roam;
His low a haughty Tyrant's frown;
A den of slaves his home.

There let him dwell, for crimes like those
May well the darkest spirit please;
Where burning suns and deserts dry
Parch up the springs of energy;
Where even language owns the sway
That tramples on the Soul's decay;
And cannot find a word to tell
That sound which treasures love so well,
There let him dwell, to Freedom lost,
Contented if he can,
Whilst Nature, shrinking from his shade,
Shall view with scorn the thing she made,
And blush to call it—Man.

But I, whom northern climes have rear'd
Whose cheek the cutting wind has sear'd,
Whose ear hath fancied as it past
That freedom spoke in every blast;
Whose foot hath wander'd with delight,
O'er Snowden's cliff and Skiddaw's height,
Where Britain's ancient sons dofied
The haughty Romans' baffled pride,
Who oft have read th' heroic page
(The record of a former age,)
Which paints my bardy sires of yore,
The hopes they felt, the fears they bore;
Shall I thus nurtur'd, basely tame,
Renounce the glories of their name,
And quit the path they trod?
Whilst busy infamy shall trace
The recreant level of his race,
His children's curse, his sires disgrace,
The outcast of his God?

Never!—Oh! Never! Curse the thought
That dwells on ease by Freedom bought!
Whither the heart that does not burn
When justice weeps o'er Freedom's urn!
And be that eye in darkness set
Which views nor views it with regret!
Mine be the choice my fathers made—
Be mine their battle cry,
When fighting for the rights of yore,
Dauntless and brave, each warrior swore
To conquer or to die."

The Question was carried in the affirmative by a majority of 20, the Report was received, and the several Resolutions put and carried as f lows:

Resolved,—That it is a matter of regret to this House to find by a despatch communicated by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War and Colonial Departments, does not feel himself at liberty to recommend to the favourable consideration of His Majesty the several addresses on the subject of half pay, to the late Battalion of Incorporated Militia, under an apprehension, on the part of His Lordship, that an inconvenient precedent might, thereby, be created.

Resolved—That though this House feels an anxious desire and would rejoice to see the Incorporated Militia of this Province placed upon the same footing as the Voltigeurs of Lower Canada, a Battalion similarly constituted, differing only in name, and certainly not possessing superior claims for gallantry or usefulness, the state of the Province and of the Public finances wholly precludes the possibility of carrying into effect the suggestion contained in the despatch of Earl Bathurst.

Resolved,—That the late war with the United States, having been undertaken in vindication of national rights, and arising from no cause of controversy occasioned by the colonies, this House considers any claim for allowances of half pay or other consideration for military services attaches more exclusively to the Government of the empire than to that of any particular colony, in which such service may have been rendered, and that under these circumstances, this House must still entertain a hope that His Majesty's Ministers may find it consistent with good policy to recommend the Incorporated Battalion of Militia of this Province for the same mark of favourable regard conferred upon the Voltigeurs of Lower Canada or an allowance equivalent thereto.

Resolved,—That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor founded on the foregoing resolution, and praying that His Excellency will be pleased to communicate the same to His Majesty's Government.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in North America, &c. &c. &c

May it please your Excellency,

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament Assembled, having taken into consideration a despatch from Earl Bathurst, His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the War and Colonial Departments, on the subject of half pay to the officers of the late Battalion of Incorporated Militia—humbly beg leave to express to your Excellency our regret that His Lordship does not feel himself at liberty to recommend to the favourable consideration of His Majesty, the several addresses in behalf of that corps, under an apprehension that an inconvenient precedent might there by be created.

Though we cannot but feel an anxious desire and would rejoice to see the Incorporated Militia of this Province placed upon the same footing as the Voltigeurs of Lower Canada, a Battalion similarly constituted, differing only in name, and certainly not possessing superior claims for gallantry or usefulness, necessarily compels us to observe, that the state of the Province and of the public finances, wholly precludes the possibility of carrying into effect the suggestion contained in the despatch of Earl Bathurst.

At the same time we may leave humbly to observe that the late war with the United States, having been undertaken in vindication of national rights, arising from no cause of controversy occasioned by the Colonies, we cannot but consider that any claim for allowances of half pay, or other consideration for Military Services, attaches more exclusively to the Government of the empire than to that of any particular Colony, in which such service may have been rendered; and under these circumstances we must still entertain a hope that His Majesty's Ministers may find it consistent with good policy to recommend the Incorporated Battalion of Militia of this Province for the same mark of favourable regard conferred upon the Voltigeurs of our sister Province or an allowance equivalent thereto

We request that your Excellency will be pleased to communicate this address to His Majesty's Government.

I shall comply with your request of transmitting your address, praying that half pay may be granted to the Officers of the late Incorporated Battalion of Militia, to His Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonies: but at the same time, I feel it incumbent upon me to remark, that when I forwarded your former addresses on the same subject, I did not fail to express my sense of the manner in which the services of that corps gave those addresses to consideration; and such consideration, I have every reason to be assured, they have received from His Majesty's Government.

Editorial Commentary.

In the despatches which have arrived from Sir A. Campbell in India, detailing further successes against the Burmese,—amongst other compliments paid to the brave troops under his command, is the following:—"When it is known that 1300 British Infantry stormed and carried by assault the most formidable entrenched and stockaded works I ever saw, defended by upwards of 20,000 men, I trust it is unnecessary for me to say more in praise of men performing such a prodigy; future ages will scarcely believe it. The prisoners declare that our appearance before their works was treated by them all, (from their Generals downwards) with the utmost derision and contempt, so confident were they in their immense superiority in numbers, and the fancied security of the works they had constructed."

Indisposition obliges us to postpone some interesting matter which it was intended to have noticed in this place, the present week, until our next.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Mr Stanley, M P. the eldest son of Lord Stanley, who has lately returned from a tour in the United States and Canada, is to be married (says a London paper) to Miss Wilbraham.

The Universities of Aberdeen and Glasgow, have resolved to confer no more degrees in Medicine, except after regular examination by experienced professors.

Forgery.—A forgery has been discovered on the bank of Ireland to a large amount, which was traced to Edward Hogan, a merchant of Dublin, who had always born a very fair character, was held in high estimation, and has an amiable wife and 12 children. He has as yet eluded the vigilance of the police, although a reward of 100l is offered for his apprehension.

Lord Chatham's testimony in favour of religion

[From a letter addressed to his Son]

"I come now to the part of the advice I have to offer you which most nearly concerns your welfare, and upon which every good and honourable purpose of your life will assuredly turn; I mean the keeping up in your heart the true sentiments of religion. If you are not right towards God, you can never be so towards man. The noblest sentiment of the human breast is here brought to bear the test. Is gratitude in the number of a man's virtues? if it be, the highest benefactor demands the warmest returns of gratitude, love and praise: Ingratum qui dixerit omnia dixit —If a man wants this virtue, where there are infinite obligations to excite and quicken it, he will be likely to want all others towards his fellow creatures, whose utmost gifts are poor, compared with those he daily receives at the hand of his never failing Almighty Friend. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth," is big with the deepest wisdom. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and an upright heart, that is understanding." This is eternally true, whether the wits and rakes of Cambridge allow it or not. Nay, I must add of this religious wisdom, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace," whatever your young gentlemen think of a harlot and a bottle, a tainted health, and battered constitution. Hold fast, therefore, by this sheet anchor of happiness, Religion; you will often want it in the times of most danger, the storms and tempests of life cherish true religion as preciously, as you will fly, with abhorrence and contempt, superstition and enthusiasm. The first is the perfection and glory of the human nature; the two last, the deprivation and disgrace of it. Remember, the essence of religion is "a heart void of offence towards God and man;"—not subtle speculative opinions, but an active, vital principle of faith."

Vanity turned to account.—The most extensive Institution of the kind in Europe is the public Hospital at Milan. It is endowed with land, which produces a yearly revenue of £780,000 sterling, and there are continually additional benefactions, to promote which one incentive is held out, which has been found to have the most beneficial influence; he who bequeaths a bout, and wherever the battle of the young lady had gone, it occasioned a titter.

hundred thousand francs, has his whole length portrait painted at the expense of the charity, and those who bequeath half that sum, have their portraits painted in half length, which are exhibited to the public on certain grand festivals. Thus the trustees have well calculated upon those passions which so often set reason at defiance; and have found that men unjust to themselves, are often generous to posterity; and vain to be well thought of for those qualities for which, when alive, they would not pay a fraction of a farthing.

Antidotes to poisons.—Mr. J. Murray, in a paper in Brewster's, Edinburgh Journal of Science, just published, after detailing a number of experiments on frogs, rabbits, &c says, "I have no hesitation to pronounce with most positive certainty, that in Ammonia will be found a complete antidote to hydrocyanic (or prussic acid,) and in acetic acid, an effectual counter-poison to opium."

English Workmen abroad.—Englishmen, abroad, though able workmen, are, in general, persons of extremely bad characters, continually drunk. At Messrs Manby's works, at Charenton, where some of the workmen receive £12 per week, hardly one has ever saved a farthing. They drink nothing but the most expensive wines, and never leave the Cabarets until the whole of their wages is exhausted. Two men employed from Chaillot, in setting up a steam engine, drank 18 bottles of wine in three hours. And a man and a boy drank 27l. in a fortnight.

Swimming Soldiers.—In a recent work on swimming, and its applications to the art of, by M. le Vicomte de Courtivron, a French Field Officer, he recommended the formation of a company of swimming soldiers in every regiment, and describes the various important duties of which they would be capable, among which is even that of conducting cannon placed on rafts to any desired position!

Tattlers.—This species of mortals are more or less, an annoyance to domestic happiness in most parts of the world. They often go on with impunity from one tattling story to another, until scandal and defamation constitute a principal of their enjoyment Instances of the baleful effects of this kind of gossipping is at every ones door, and very few escape the malicious sarcasms of the tattler. Unfortunately we have no statute in our laws to punish them, but such as are become obsolete. In former times, indeed, in England "the ducking stool" was held in terrorum over such gross offenders; but now, the venum of the human tongue is left to the cognizance of the civil law, which seldom reaches the real offender. Hence a poor inoffensive man, is often punished for the indiscretions of the tongue of his dearly beloved helpmate.

Catherine of Russia though her private life afforded an ample field for the exercise of this passion; yet she was not proof against its effect, however true the tattle might have been. She perhaps concluded that it was no business of the tattlers to interfere, and she determined to punish their officiousness.

A young Russian lady, of the first rank in Petersburg, married the Count M. who had formerly been a favourite of the Empress. It seems that her curiosity worked many secrets from her husband respecting his intimacy at court, and that she tattled them to her female friends, who sent them as great secrets, through the city of Moscow where she resided.

Not long after, just as the lady and her husband were assigning themselves to sleep, they were alarmed by a knocking at their chamber door, which the husband unbolted, when a stout police officer entered, with a large rod in one hand, and the imperial order in the other. The Count was ordered to go on the further side of the bed, and to make no disturbance, as in the next room there were several brethren of this summary minister of justice in waiting. The lady was then ordered to descend from the bed, just as she was, and to lay herself upon the floor; the officer then tied her hands and feet, and gave her a severe whipping. When he had finished this discipline, he loosed her, raised her up, and said "this is the punishment which the Empress inflicts upon tattlers; and for the next offence you go to Siberia." The story soon buzzed a-

On the privileges of Divorce.—The following inscription is written in large characters over the principal gate of the city of Agra, in Hindostan; "In the first year of the reign of King Juliet, two thousand married couple were separated, by the magistrate, with their own consent. The Emperor was so indignant on hearing these particulars, that he abolished the privilege of divorce. In the course of the following year, the number of marriages in Agra was less than before by three thousand; the number of adulteries was greater by seven thousand; three hundred women were buried alive for poisoning their husbands; seventy five men were burned for the murder of their wives; and the quantity of furniture broken and destroyed in the interior of private families amounted to the value of three millions of rupees! The Emperor re established the privilege of divorce."

Fine Trait.—The following noble trait in the character of an English soldier, then belonging to a regiment now in the Canadas, is taken from an English magazine. General Bernier was wounded at Vimiers on the 21st August 1808.

"When the French General Bernier fell by his wound, the soldiers of the 71st regiment who were immediately upon him, in the heat of their fury, were about to bayonet him, when corporal Ross interfered to restrain his comrades, and to save the fallen General. Bernier immediately offered his purse to his protector, who nobly refused it, saying, that to save a fallen enemy was a principle of feeling, as well as of duty in a British soldier."

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

A London paper of May 10, says the present proceedings of the French Government afford materials for reflection The great aim manifestly is to establish the omnipresence of the Catholic priesthood, by bringing all the concerns of education under their exclusive management, and permitting no other instruction to be given to the rising generation than such as tend to forward their designs, and to bring the great body of the nation once more under the dominion of their councils. They are advancing step by step and there is, apparently, no stretch of guilt that will deter them from their purpose. It is the general opinion in Paris that the recent assassination of Paul Louis Courier was the deed of some agent of the jesuitical faction, as he had just finished and was about to put to the press, a work in which all his powers of raillery and sarcasm were known to be employed against them.

It was in a wood belonging to him at Veretz, near Tours, that the body was found, pierced with three balls

The fact is, the ordonnance obliging marriage ceremony to be performed first in the Church, and then at the Municipality—the threat of excommunicating all mothers who do not baptize their children within ten days of their birth—the rejection of Protestant sponsors—the insisting on the production of confessional certificates—the difficulty of obtaining Christian burial—all these form a mass of tyranny and oppression from which the people will sooner or later rescue themselves; cannot be otherwise.

NETHERLANDS.

The government of the Netherlands has lately cast at the iron works of Sirsing, the head of the immense lion that is to ornament the grand national monument on the plains of Waterloo. The weight of the head alone is 5,000 lb. or nearly 2½ tons; the weight of the entire lion will be 60,000 lb. or nearly 30 tons English.

UNITED STATES.

Among the petitions on the 16th ult presented to the New York Legislature, was one from the Seneca Indians, stating that they are much troubled with hungry priests, who preach to them doctrines they do not understand, nor believe—that they are lazy and won't work—that the habits of the women are becoming worse, by their being among them, and that the men drink more whiskey—that they make them bad friends and neighbours, &c.; and praying that they may be prohibited from residing among them.—Philadelphia Paper.

On Thursday last the water was let into the Canal from Black-Rock to the Tonawanta Creek. On Friday morning a boat descended the Niagara River from Black-Rock, entered the Canal at the Locks, at the mouth of Tonawanta Creek where it was met by a boat from the East, having on board Mr. Bouck, Canal Commissioner, engineers, &c. and returned through the Canal to Black-Rock, where a national salute was then fired.

The navigation of the Canal is now open from this place to Albany, with the exception of a few miles this side of Lockport, and a portion between this village and Black Rock.

On Thursday next, the new Steam Boat Henry Clay, will be launched at Black Rock.—Buffalo Patriot.

A new and daily line of mail stages is established from the city of Albany to Rochester, running through this village, Cazenovia, Manlius, Syracruse, Montezuma and Lyons. This route is shorter by about sixteen miles than through the valley of the Mohawk; it is easier for passengers; lies through a more airy and slightly country; affording prospects inferior in extent, beauty and grandeur, to none in the United States.—The old line through the flourishing village of Cooperstown to Oxford in Chenango county, is connected with this.—Cherry Valley Gaz.

It is stated as a fact, that the body of a drowned man was found and raised to the surface of the Schuylkill river, on Tuesday last, by putting three ounces of quicksilver in a small paper box, that box in another, and then putting the whole in a loaf of wheat bread, carefully pasted over with thick paste, well dried to prevent the water from getting in. It was then placed in the river about 60 feet from where a previous experiment was made, and in ten minutes it reached the spot, when the body of the man immediately appeared three feet from the loaf, and the latter disappeared.—Dem. Press.

Tremendous Whirlwind in Ohio.—On the 18th inst. was experienced at Burlington and its vicinity in this county, one of the most tremendous whirlwinds that was ever known. It commenced about ten miles west of Burlington, tearing every thing in its course till it reached the above place, which it has literally swept from the ground. It then continued its ravages in a north east direction, to the average width of little more than a mile, through the whole extent of the county; where it has terminated we have not heard. Several of our citizens have been to the place and the accounts which they give almost surpass belief. The inhabitants of Burlington were alarmed by a loud, rolling wind, and upon looking to the west, they discovered something like a dark, black cloud; and as it approached, the appearance of trees and limbs flying and hurled in every direction in the air, was seen. They flew to to their houses, and in a few seconds every thing was turned over; they could neither hear nor see: every house in the town was swept to the very ground; logs-houses were carried away to the very lowest logs, and stables and houses hurled in the air; and what is most astonishing, only three persons were killed. To witness the scene, it would be supposed no person could have escaped. Some were taken up and carried off some distance; others clung to whatever they could get hold of; and so violent was the wind, that a boy who ran to shut a door, was thrown with such violence against an opposite wall that his brains were dashed out; another standing in an orchard, was struck by a small limb, and his head actually cut in two. The scene of desolation which it has occasioned is most appalling. [illegible] forms of two and three hundred acres of land [illegible] a tree left standing; the woods are [illegible] ted, and almost every animal in the neighbourhood has been destroyed.

[illegible] appening to be out ploughing at the time when [illegible] an came on, were suddenly surprised by the appearance of trees flying in the air, accompanied with a heavy noise. At first they could not credit their eye sight; their curiosity was excited and they remained looking at it with astonishment; the main current of wind passed some distance from them; it came on so rapidly that before they could get into any houses they were overtaken; the limbs and trees commenced falling, and tore up by the roots and twisted off every tree around them. One of the men was carried to a small prairie that was near, and here he continued hanging to a bush, until at last the bush and he both were carried away. He however succeeded in fastening to another till the storm was over. While in this situation, he represents the limbs and bodies of trees striking the earth and tearing up the ground for some distance in deep furrows, and then again rising; after it was over he went to look for his companion. He, when he found the storm was on them, had run to the side of a log which was near him, when directly he perceived a very large tree falling on the spot where he was; he had the presence of mind to move a short distance, when the tree fell and burried the log in the ground. He then ran under the side of the large tree that had fallen, and he there remained — When his companion came to hunt him he halloed; at first he did not hear him, until he approached nearer, when he answered him from under an immense heap of timber. It was impossible for him to get out until the other fell to work with his axe and cut away the legs, when he found him unhurt. Their oxen were completely mashed to pieces, and not a tree was left standing round them.

Another Farmer, who had just built a large brick house, and had his farm in a good state of improvement, happened to be a short distance from it when the wind came on; he secured himself by holding to a stump, and remained in this situation until the storm which lasted two or three minutes, was over, when he rose to go to his house, every thing was complete desolation around him, and he went directly on a contrary direction from that in which his house stood.— After going over trees and heaps of timber, he at last found where his house had stood. It was almost ruined. He supposed his wife and family were destroyed, but, upon looking into the cellar, he there found them safe. His wife upon seeing the storm, and supposing the house would be blown away, ran with her children into the cellar.

Several, from whom we have the above facts, state that remarkable large trees were taken up by the roots, and carried for some distance——One tree in particular, between three and four feet thick, which had been standing near a house, was torn up by the roots, and carried to the distance of almost two hundred yards. A more violent hurricane was never witnessed in any country.

There are now about one hundred and twenty five thousand children in the Sunday Schools in the United States.

IRISH ELECTIVE FRANCHISE BILL.

Mr. Littleton said, that in rising to move that this Bill be now read for the second time, he must entreat the indulgence of the House while he endeavoured to explain the nature of the objects, as well as the advantages of the measure. The motive by which he was impelled to bring it forward sprang from the conviction, that the present mode of exercising the Elective Franchise in Ireland was pregnant with the ruin of the property and population of that country And he was the more induced to choose the present time for urging it on the adoption of the House, because he thought that any measure which should assimilate the exercise of the Elective Franchise in Ireland to the practice of England, which should tend to destroy the multiplication of fictitious but yet efficient voters amongst the poor, and for the most part Catholic population of Ireland, was an indispensible accompaniment of a measure for restoring their rights to the orders higher of Catholics.

Mr Brougham began by professing himself to be very imperfectly informed on the question before the House. He felt all the anxiety which such a want of information was calculated to produce; an anxiety increased by the awful circumstances under he would call them awful—under which the friends of the Catholic Question were placed who were called upon, whether willing or not, to enter upon the discussion of a measure having no natural or necessary connexion with that great question, and which was calculated to defeat all the objects which that question was attended to promote The present Bill had been mixed up with the Bill for relieving the Catholics, in a very remarkable way. It was impossible to vote for the Bill without further information — No two persons had agreed in their evidence on the subject — They had all given different descriptions of the fact and the remedy. The House ought to pause, and that period of pausing should be occupied with inquiry. Until a larger body of facts were laid before the House it would be unsafe to carry the measure Conciliation was at present the great watch-word with respect to Ireland. but who would be bold enough to say that if this Bill and the Bill of Emancipation were both carried, the one would so recommend the other, as to secure the benefits without incurring the evils of either! The benefits of both must be remote—the evils of one immediate. If any said did say so, he would admire him as a bold and confident prophet without feeling disposed to take him as a guide. Catholic Emancipation, simple and unadulterated, would be a pledge to Ireland that Parliament was determined to conciliate; but if it were accompanied with another measure bottomed on other views, and liable to misconstruction, all its conciliatory qualities would be destroyed. This was his foreboding view of the subject If he were disposed to make the sacrifice of his opinion on the present Bill, who would ensure him that the Catholic Question would be carried? They were reckoning without their hosts—they were reckoning without their Lords—(Hear!)—It was not proper that he should make allusion to the other House of Parliament, but he might allude to what passed in another place. He felt alarm, not only on account of the Government of Ireland, but also on behalf of the Government of England; for the stability of the monarchy, as by law established—(hear!)—and as settled by the Revolution of 1688. What he had heard had given him such deep and serious alarm, that he confessed before God that he could not believe his ears when he was told of it. It was impossible it could be true. The newspapers were full of libels. No man could believe that a Prince of the Blood royal, the presumptive Heir of the throne, would venture to promulgate that when he came to the Throne—

Mr. Plunkett here arose amidst some confusion and cries of "Order," and said that he regretted not having at an earlier moment risen to order and put a stop to the line of argument adopted by his Hon and learned friend; but as that Hon. Gentleman had said that he would not allude to what had passed elsewhere, the House he remained silent. Since, however, his Hon. and learned friend had alluded to the public prints and to the opinion of an illustrious Prince, he owed it to the House, to that illustrious Prince, to himself and to the interests of the great Catholic Cause, which his Learned friend had placed himself felt so deep an interest, to intreat him to deliberate and not to pursue any further the line of observation he had commenced

The Speaker said, that if the inference which the Right Hon. Gentleman had drawn from the observations of the Hon. and Learned Gentleman was correct, then his conclusions were undoubtedly proper It was impossible for any one to define more clearly than the Hon and Learned Gentleman had himself done the privilege and duty of Members in this respect; and he (the Speaker) was prepared to believe that in the subsequent part of his speech that definition would have been violated If the inference of the Right Hon Gentleman was correct, then no doubt it would be improper to persevere in the same course— (Hear!)

Mr. Brougham said he was convinced that his Right Hon. Friend meant his interruption to be in perfect courtesy to himself, and at the same time to be of service to the Catholic Question — He had interrupted him, however, before the period arrived when the Speaker might have considered him as disorderly But no one had a right to interrupt another because he deemed that he might become disorderly. Such might be the practice in the Irish Parliament, but not in the English Here it was the custom to take down the words of a Member, and he (Mr Brougham) was always ready to answer for any improper use of expression he might be guilty of As to the charge of alluding to another place, it was a thing which took place every day. Surely no one would say that he was the first one who ever made such allusions. It was the common practice to conceal them under the fleeting phrase "another place" It had been done by his Learned Friend (Sir J Mackintosh), who alluded to the Prelate, and by the Hon Baronet opposite (Sir W. W. Wynn)— Would it not be strange, mean, and low-spirited, if they were to allude to certain things in that other place, and not to the highest? He had heard the Lord Chancellor attacked in this House, and 24 hours afterwards he had heard the same Learned Lord allude to the notice taken of him and vindicate himself from it. What were allusions to be made to the Bishops, to the Peers, to the Lord Chancellor, and not to the Princes of the Blood! The moment that is done, up jumps a quia timet and in the most disorderly way accuses another of disorder. The whole of the Peers the whole of the Lords are assailed, and might be so.

Col Wodehouse rose to order. He wished to know what the Hon and Learned Gentleman meant by the two words quia timet—(Loud laughter.)—

Mr. Secretary Peel begged to ask of the Hon and Learned Gentleman, whether on such an important question, when it was desirable to have a calm discussion, it would not be better not to persist in those allusions which were certain to introduce a warmth into the discussion most unfavourable to the fair consideration of the subject.

Mr. Brougham said, that he thanked the Right Hon. Gentleman for his suggestion, because it was no doubt sincerely made; but he would not forego his right to make such allusions, inasmuch as they appeared to him most important It was said, that this measure ought to be carried because it would facilitate the carrying of the Catholic question. Twenty four years ago that might have been said, but at that moment was there a single man who believed that the Catholic Question could be carried.—(Hear!)—Was he then to abandon his right as a Legislator to examine that point? No man could imagine that the measure of Emancipation would pass When the ominous news of a recent event should go forth to England and Ireland, it would sound a knell of despair to the Friends of the Catholic Question This must operate on every member in making up his mind. They had received fair notice of what was to come He would not accuse any man of frankness, or want of honesty, or want of conscience. But to go no further he would say that they had an obstinate frankness, an undeviating honesty, a perverse conscientiousness, and nothing but the most perilous boldness could encounter the resistance now brewing against the Catholics.— He did not believe that any thing but more votes could carry the question. Within the last twenty hours that which had occurred shewed that if any thing could save England from convulsions, and Ireland from endless disorder, it must be a large increase of votes on the Catholic question. This was the time—(Cheers)— this reign was the time—(Loud Cheers)—yet a little while and it would be too late, and the time would be gone for ever Yet "a little more slumber—a little more folding of the hands to sleep," as they had slept Session after Session, and Parliament after Parliament, for the last twenty years and they would find intolerance and despotism coming upon them "like an armed man," and the opportunity of saving Ireland and of pacifying England would be departed from their grasp.—(Hear, hear, hear!)—If he were a lover of discord—(Hear, and laugh)—I am not a lover of discord," continued the Hon and Learned Gentleman, "and those who perhaps deem me so are themselves only not lovers of discord, because they prefer the solitude of unshrinking obedience to an absolute military despotism— (Cheers)—He respected every man's conscience, and God forbid that he should not give to others the same toleration he expected for himself He had said out of that house as well as in it, that the want of conscience, of frankness, and of honesty were the last charges he should bring against any man, but he would say, that honesty itself often assumed a perverse and pernicious character, and the greatest hopes and wisest measures were frustrated by it. "So help them God;" but he trusted in vain— It became them then to set their House in order. If last year the Catholic Question had failed when there was no movement against it, they ought to strain every nerve on this last occasion. God knew what events might happen, and God forbid they should happen soon —(Loud Cheers)—but when they did happen, although the Bill should be carried up, not by a majority of 10, or of 27, but by an unanimous vote of the House and of the country though it streamed with blood, yet would it find a difficulty of acceptance on the part of the Crown. These were his reasons for voting against the present Bill. It would deprive them of the precious and inestimable opportunity of pacifying Ireland The House had been timely informed that before long it would be impossible to carry the Catholic question without involving England in a perilous conflict with the Throne.—(Hear!)

The Bill was then ordered to be committed

CANADA TENURES.—A Bill "to provide for the extinction of feudal and seigniorial rights and burthens on lands held à titre de Fief and à titre de Cens in the Province of Lower Canada, and for the gradual conversion of those tenures into the tenure of free and common soccage, and for other purposes relating to the said Province," was read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on Monday next and to be printed.

On the motion of Mr W. Horton, and after a few words from Mr Baring and Mr. Hume, the Canada Corn-mg Bill was read a second time and ordered to be committed on Friday next.

REMARKABLE OURANG OUTANGS.

Extract of a letter from a Merchant in Batavia, to another in this city, dated Feb. 7, 1825.

"I have shipped in the Octavia, Captain Blanchard, an Ourang Outang, (or the real man of the woods) to your consignment, and Capt. B. This animal is I suppose one of the greatest curiosities that has ever been sent to America. I have known one to be sold in London for the sum of £10,000 sterling. This animal is very tender of the cold weather, and great care should be taken that it is kept in some warm apartment. He is perfectly docile and harmless. I have had him six months at my house without being confined, and almost every day during the time he has visited my table for a glass of claret, fruit &c. and possesses many pleasant tricks, which is very seldom to be found in those that come from the Island of Borneo, as they are generally vicious and wild This animal is about 5 years old, and with good care will still grow much larger. He came originally from the Island of Borneo, and will eat almost any thing that is offered him."

The Ourang Outang, above mentioned, died on Thursday night after the ship anchored at this port. The shipper calculated to realize the sum of $20,000 provided he arrived and in good health. He measured 4½ feet in height —Boston Patriot.

OURANG OUTANG.

In our Calcutta files, received by the George, we find an account of a meeting of the Asiatic Society on the 5th of January. Among other donations, the skin extremities, and parts of the head and neck of a large Ourang Outang, killed on the coast of Sumatra, were presented to the Society by a Capt. Cornelson. According to the account given below, which was read at the meeting, this animal must have been of very uncommon size and strength None of the specimens which have been exhibited in Europe have ever exceeded three feet in hight, and their principal characteristic has been a mild imitation of the domestic habits of man, but this one is said to have been nearly eight feet high, and very ferocious.—Salem Gazette.

It appears, that an officer of the ship Mary Anne Sophia, was on shore at a place called Ramboon, near Touromon, on the West Coast of Sumatra, where he discovered the animal in a tree. He assembled his people and followed him to a tree in a cultivated spot on which he took refuge. His walk was erect and waddling, but not quick, and he was obliged occasionally to accelerate his motion with his hands: but with the bough of a tree he impelled himself forward with greater rapidity. When he reached the trees his strength was shown in a high degree, for with one spring he gained a lofty bough, and bounded from it with the ease of smaller animals of his kind. Had the circumjacent land been covered with woods he would certainly have escaped from his pursuers, his mode of travelling, by bough or tree, being described as rapid as the progress of a very fleet horse. But at Ramboon there are but very few trees left in the midst of cultivated fields, and amongst these alone he jumped about to avoid being taken. He was first shot on a tree, and after having received five balls, his exertion was relaxed, owing no doubt to loss of blood; and the ammunition being about this time expended, they were obliged to have recourse to other measures for his destruction One of the first balls probably penetrated his lungs, for immediately after the infliction of the wound he rising himself by his feet from a branch with his head downwards, and allowed the blood to flow from his mouth. On receiving a wound he always put his hand over the injured part, and the human like agony of his expression had the natural effect of exciting painful feelings among his pursuers

With the assistance of the peasantry, who seemed as amazed at the sight of the animal as the crew of the Mary Anne Sophia, never having seen one before, although living within two day's journey from the vast and impenetrable forest on the island, they cut down the tree on which he was reclining exhausted, but the moment he found it falling, he exerted his remaining strength and gained another tree, and then a third, until he was finally brought to the ground and forced to combat his assailants, who now gathered very thickly round and discharged spears and other missiles against him. The first spear made of a very strong and supple kind of wood which have resisted the strength of the strongest man, was broken by him like a carrot, and had he not been at this time almost in a dying state, it was feared that he would have severed the heads of some of the party with equal ease. He fell at length under innumerable stabs inflicted by the peasantry — The animal is supposed to have travelled some distance from the place where he was killed, as his legs were covered with mud up to his knees The hands and feet of the animal had great analogy to the human hands and feet, only that the thumbs were smaller in proportion, and situated nearer the wrist joint than the thumbs of the human beings generally are. His body was well proportioned; he had a fine broad expanded chest and narrow waist. His legs however, were rather short, and his arms very long, tho' both possessed such sinew and muscle, as left no doubt of their power and strength. His head was well proportioned with his body; the nose was prominent; the eyes large, and the mouth larger than the mouth in men. His chin was fringed from the extremity of one ear to the other, with a shaggy beard curling luxuriantly on each side, and forming altogether an ornamental rather than a frightful appendage to his visage. The hair of his coat was smooth and glossy when he was first killed, and his teeth and whole appearance indicated that he was young and in full possession of his physical powers.—He was nearly eight feet high.

NEW BRUNSWICK,

The subscriber has been requested by the society lately formed in Glasgow for promoting the moral and religious interests of the Scottish settlers in British North America, to make it known in this, and the neighbouring provinces, that they will be happy to open a correspondence with any body of settlers, whose case is recognized in their plan and constitution, and that letters addressed to either of the interim secretaries, viz:—the Rev. Dr. Scott, of Greenock, and the Rev. Robert Burns, of Paisley, at the Religious and Charitable Institution Rooms, No. 3, South Frederick-street, Glasgow, or at their own residences, will receive immediate attention. The editors of newspapers in the colonies will oblige all concerned by inserting this notice.

GEORGE BURNS, D. D.

St. John's New-Brunswick, 19th May, 1825

From the Montreal Courant.

On Thursday last 568 Irish Emigrants, including women and children, arrived here in the Lady Sherbrooke Steam Boat and proceeded on their route to Upper Canada yesterday morning. These are the first of the 2000 for whom Government have made arrangements in this country; they are principally from the south of Ireland, and are, we understand to be located in the neighbourhood of the Rice Lake, near the lately settled townships in rear of Smith's Creek. They are accompanied by two medical men, who, we are informed also act in the capacity of superintendents. By habits of industry and good conduct, these people may, under the fostering protection of the Government, become comparatively independent, in a country where local prejudices, oppressive rents, and precarious employment do not interfere to prevent their enjoying that portion of competence which renders the mind at ease, and affords a prospect of comfort to the rising generation, for whose future welfare no provision could be made in the country of their ancestors.

From Neilson's Gazette.

Canadian Wheat.—The boon now granted, for there can be little doubt that the Bill admitting our grain for consumption in the United Kingdom, at all times, will pass this Session, has been long solicited by this Province, by humble petition Perhaps we were over sanguine in our last paper, in stating that its immediate effect will be a rise of from one to two shillings per minot, in the price of wheat No such rise has as yet taken place; the present prices in England, the expenses of cleaning, shipping, freight, insurance, the necessary rate of mercantile profit, and the duty in England will not admit of it. The price of Canada Wheat at Liverpool on the 10th May was 10s. per 70 lbs The weight of our minot may be from 60 to 65 lbs. The price here will, however, soon be settled by competition. It is obvious that it will be regulated by prices in England, which are liable to much fluctuation We shall, however, always have a market, and a better one than can be had any where else, with a preference over foreign wheat, even should the present Corn Laws be altered, as is intended next year.

James Monk, Esquire, Chief Justice of Montreal received the honour of Knighthood at His Majesty's levee held on the 27th April last.

The London Gazette of the 23d April, announces that His Majesty has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood on Commissary General Wood, lately at the head of the Commissariat Department in the Canadas. General During is appointed Governor of New South Wales

Canada Company Shares, £10 paid, had fallen to £20 a £22 on the 29th April; on the 28th March last they were at £40½; which is a great decline in the course of the month During the first part of April the shares were nominal. The Canada Commissioners arrived at New York on the 26th of February, and sailed thence on the 8th May. There is no doubt that the new prices have been regulated by advices from York, U. C., and that these were less favourable than the stockholders expected.

His Majesty's ship Nimrod, Capt. Wallis, was to sail from Halifax, N S. in the beginning of this month, on the annual cruize in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence for the protection of the fisheries, &c.

His Majesty's Ship Orestes, Capt. Henry Litchfield, sailed from Portsmouth 25th April for Bermuda, Halifax, Quebec, and Newfoundland: the London Courier says, with despatches. It appears probable that she will bring out the English coin, with which it is now intended to pay persons employed in His Majesty's service in the Colonies, a measure attended there is no doubt with advantage to the Colonial Trade.

The Lorette Chiefs attended the Anniversary of the London Deaf and Dumb Asylum on the 27th April last. His Royal Highness the Duke of York, patron, was in the chair. They were introduced to his Highness and after the usual toasts, their health was drank

A very fine large ship of about 400 tons was launched this morning from Mr Taylor's Ship-yard She is called the George Canning.

We are informed that the Aid, Capt. Alder, launched on Saturday week last, is not built on Mr Annesley's plan of ship building, as we stated in the Gazette of the 6th instant.

The Rev. Thomas Phillips, D. D. of Queen's College, is appointed head master of the Royal Grammar and District Schools in Upper Canada —Lon. Paper.

CANADA TEA SHIPS.

The New York Albion of the 11th instant gives the following information respecting the Canada Tea Ships:

We have received a letter from Canton dated 5th Feb. last, which informs us that the East India Company were loading two ships, one of 800 tons for Quebec, and another of 600 for Halifax, with Teas chiefly Hyson Skin, and Young Hyson The latter adds, that those ships would sail in about a fortnight. In the last English papers we observe an advertisement of the East India Company, for proposals to charter two ships, to proceed to Calcutta, and from thence to the British North American Provinces, with Tea. These are probably intended for the second year's supply.

MAIL TO AND FROM THE UNITED STATES.

We understand that arrangements are made for conveying the mail daily, from Youngstown (on the opposite side of the river) to the Post Office in this town. Letters and papers from New York, now reach us in six days—and letters to be sent to Europe will arrive at New York in the same time, in readiness for the packets. We are also informed that all letters and newspapers from the States, whether the postage is paid or not, are sent across and forwarded by the Post Master here, to any part of the Province —Niagara Gleaner.

THE LARGE SHIP.

We are sorry to state that the attempt to launch the Large Ship this morning, at the Island of Orleans, failed; at about 40 minutes before Eight o'clock, she was put in motion, and after gliding slowly along the ways a little more than half her own length, from the cradle giving way, or from some other cause, which we have not heard explained, she settled on the ways: several attempts were made to set her again in motion by hawsers from the Hercules and Laprairie Steam-boats, but without effect, the hawsers from the first boat snapping without in the least moving the ponderous mass. We understand, however, her case is not considered desperate, and that it is hoped she may be got off at the evening flood, as she is still upon her ways and has sustained no visible injury. The concourse of spectators was perhaps less numerous then at the launch of the COLUMBUS, the Steam-boats were generally crowded with passengers, the Military Bands attended, and the river was thronged with boats; a little after nine, the company began to arrive in town, evidently chagrined at the unfortunate failure, not on account of their own disappointment, but in consideration of the anxiety which the builder and the proprietors must endure whilst the vessel remains in this state.

Messrs Lefferty and Lyons were ordered as a Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the above address

Mr ROLPH from the Committee appointed to draft a Bill founded on certain resolutions of the House relative to the Commercial Intercourse of this Province with the United State of America, reported a draft which was received and read the first time.

On motion of Mr. ROLPH, the41st. rule of the House was dispensed with, and the Intercourse Bill was read a second time and Committed.

The Chairman reported the Bill as amended.

The Report was ordered to be received and the Bill to be engrossed and read a third time on the morrow.

Mr ATTY GENERAL, from the joint Committee of Conference on the internal Communication of this Province, reported as follows:

The Joint Committee appointed to confer upon the improvement of the Internal Navigation of this Province, have had before them the several reports of the Commissioners appointed under the Provincial Statute 2nd Geo. 4th, Chap 2nd, which they have read with great interest, and especially the third or last report, accompanied with an able and very judicious letter, addressed by Mr. Macauley, the president, to Mr Gordon, one of the members of the Board, and submitted by the latter to the Committee.

All these papers are subjoined to this report in an appendix, and the Committee have much satisfaction in calling attention to them as to documents which are, in their opinion, highly creditable to the zeal and intelligence of the Commissioners

With respect to the Estimates in detail, however important It is to ascertain their accuracy, it can scarcely be expected that the Committee can of their own knowledge either verify or discredit them, or in fact, that they can do any thing more than express their judgments as to the degree of confidence they appear entitled to from the means which were employed in procuring them. On this point the Committee is happy to beli ve their is no ground to discourage a reliance upon their General accuracy. On the contrary. Mr Clowes, after the experience the Commissioners have had of him, appear, to possess fully their good opinion of his professional knowledge and of his respectable character, and the Committee finds no reason to apprehend that the result of his surveys would not be found generally correct, except that, as in all similar undertakings of great extent, there is a chance that obstacles might present them-elves in the progress of the work, which it is not always possible to discover or foresee

The probability of some obstacles occuring which would enhance the cost, is perhaps too great to admit of its being safely kept out of view in any case, but as this is purely a contingency, and no calculation can possibly be made to meet it, the Estimates must necessarily be assumed to be, in the main, correct in the absence of any known reason for suspecting their accuracy

To these Reports, therefore, the Committee refer as containing the best, and in truth, the only satisfactory information it is in their power to present, as to the means of improving the Internal Navigation of this Province, and indeed, in the observations contained in the Reports, so comprehensive a view is taken of the subject, and the public interest involved in it, are discussed with so much candour and judgment, that the Committee would unwillingly bespeak attention to any attempt of theirs to reason minutely upon the same points with less advantage of leisure and far less opportunities of knowledge. They have, therefore, confined themselves to such remarks as occurred on a general review of these important results of the labour of the Commissioners

Though many of the improvements of which the Inland Navigation of this Province is susceptable are perfectly obvious, and they had, therefore, been very early the subject of discussion, the first attempt to direct the attention to them by any public measure (if we except the provision made by the Legislature in 1819 for surveying the waters of the St. Lawrence) was, by the Act of 1821 appointing the Board of Commissioners, whose labours are comprehended in the subjoined Reports. It is due to the memory of the late Colonel Nichol, formerly an active and very intelligent Member of the Legislature to remark, that his zeal in the cause of public improvements occasioned this measure to be brought forward at an earlier period than it would otherwise have been, and that so long as he lived he persevered very faithfully in carrying it into effect

When the state of the Province, even at the present moment, is considered with regard to its Population and its resources, it must be acknowledged that it was at an early stage of its advancement that attention was thus turned to objects so important. It has been not unusual to reproach the people of Upper Canada with a want of enterprize and exertion, in not having sooner applied themselves to works of this description.—A comparison not very strict, with the neighbouring States, has appeared to give occasion to such reproaches, but they are in truth undeserved.

When the State of New York contained four times the present population of Upper Canada, and when its resources from its commercial advantages and the greater general opulence of its inhabitants, exceeded those of this Province in a proportion infinitely greater, no work of the magnitude of some of those which we now venture to contemplate, had been undertaken or even thought of

When in very recent years the patriotic zeal of a few men of more than ordinary talents, inspired them with courage to propose the wonderful undertaking which the State of New York has now carried nearly to its completion, it appeared to most persons so far above the means of the country to accomplish, that it was with difficulty, the plan could be at first supported against the prejudice of public opinion, but it is obvious, that when it was determined to proceed in its execution, it was in the power of that State to furnish great resources for the undertaking.

It cannot, with any reason, be thought to reflect shame on this country that it has hitherto felt itself unable to commence works of far less cost.

It must be remembered, that with more than a million of Inhabitants whose circumstances are, generally speaking, much more opulent, the State of New York possesses a very flourishing Sea Port which attracts the riches of Commerce and affords the means of raising with ease and certainty a great revenue by indirect taxation, and that her more advanced State with regard to Population and Trade, not only makes her infinitely more equal to any great undertaking like that alluded to, but affords a more certain prospect of an immediate and profitable return.

It is in one respect fortunate for th a Province, that the State of New York has found itself able, at so early a day, to attempt the completion of an Inland Navigation, which might well have been thought to exceed its power. An example has in the progress of this great work, been afforded to the people of Canada, sufficiently applicable in all essential points to form the ground of satisfactory calculations.

With respect to the general face of the country (not noticing some particular features) the climate and change of seasons, which call for some consideration, the price of labour and most profitable mode of employing it, the circumstances are so far similar as to make experience in the one country highly useful in the other, and the resemblance in other respects is sufficiently strong to enable us to estimate with tolerable accuracy, the probable effects of such improvements on the Commerce and the Agriculture of this country, by observing the progress of both under the change of circumstances produced by the Canal in the State of New York.

With such advantages it is fair to presume, that the Commissioners, and those they have employed, have not materially erred in their estimate of the probable expense of the several improvements suggested. There is at least much less room for apprehension of any material error being discovered in proceeding to put their plans in execution, than there might have been under other circumstances.

Upper Canada, regarding only those parts of it within the great waters which appear to be capable of cultivation, contains an area of about 50,000 square miles, the soil of which is, with very little exception, most favourable to agriculture, and the climate being equally propitious, there is no doubt, that when it is sufficiently peopled, its productions, and consequently its trade, must be immense. An inspection of the map discovers remarkable facilities afforded by nature to Inland Navigation; and it is impossible, but that in time, besides those shorter inland cuts connecting the different chains of waters and communicating at intervals with the St Lawrence, advantage will be taken of the remarkable features of the country, to render navigable without interruption, the double access to the Ocean by the great waters commoning the Frontier of the Province, and by those which inclose its settlements to the northward.

To these grand objects the public attention should undoubtedly first be called for in these consist the distinguishing advantages with which the Province is so remarkably favoured It is very probable that works of a similar nature, but of much more limited extent, might be undertaken in particular sections of the Province with a more certain prospect of an immediate recompense, but there are reasons more obviously applying to Upper Canada, than perhaps to almost any other Country, why the accomplishment of the greater objects should receive the first, and engross the whole attention of the Provinces, though in the present state of Trade and Population, a less return of profit should follow their completion.

It was no doubt with this conviction that the Legislature has first and principally directed the attention of the Commissioners unto the exploring the most practicable route for a Canal between Lake Erie and the Eastern boundary of this Province "

With what success they have performed their duty, is to be learnt by an attentive perusal of their reports and an examination of their Estimates, which it is believed, so far as they may be relied on, are by no means discouraging to those who may have ventured before to look forward to the commencement of undertakings apparently so disproportionate to the present means of this Province.

Editorial Commentary.

We are happy to find that the Austrian and Turkish accounts of the desperate condition of the Greeks have turned out to be incorrect. The Greeks were never in better spirits, and they entertain the most confident hopes of ultimate success.

Governor Troup has addressed a message to the legislature of Georgia which is deemed highly treasonable by the news-mongers of the United States; and, in truth, with some justice, seeing things as they are them The Governor is outrageous against the general Government, invites his people to an appeal to arms, and to a secession from the Union. His language is remarkable, and deserves the close attention of those who contemplate, and of those who may in any degree be affected by, the local politics of the Union. We make the following extract from his message:—

"Since your last meeting our feelings have been a gain outraged by officious and impertinent intermeddlings with our domestic concerns Beside the resolutions presented for the consideration of the senate by Mr. King of New York—it is understood that the Attorney General of the United States, who may be presumed to represent his government faithfully and to speak as its mouth piece, has recently maintained before the Supreme Court, doctrines on this subject, which, if sanctioned by that tribunal, will make it quite easy for the congress, by a short decree, to divest this entire interest without the cost to themselves of one dollar, or of one acre of public land—this is the uniform practice of the government of the United States—if it wishes a principle established, which it dare not establish for itself, a case is made before the supreme court, and the principle once settled the act of congress follows of course. Soon, very soon, therefore, the United States government, discarding the mask will openly lend itself to a combination of fanatics for the destruction of every thing valuable in the southern country —one movement of the congress unresisted by you and all is lost Temporize no longer—make known your resolutions that this subject shall not be touched by them but at their peril—but for its sacred guarantee by the constitution we never would have become parties to that instrument—at this moment you would not make yourselves parties to any constitution without—of course you will not be a party to it from the moment the general government shall make that movement.

"If this matter be an evil it is our own—if it be a vice we can implore the forgiveness of it; to remove it we set not either their sympathy or assistance—it may be our physical weakness—it is our moral strength.—If like the Greeks and Romans the moment we cease to be masters we are slaves—we thenceforth minister like the modern Italians to the luxury and pleasures of our masters—poets, painters, musicians and sculptors we may be—the moral qualities, however, which would make us fair partakers of the grandeur of a great empire would be gone—we would stand stripped and desolate under a fervid sun and upon a generous soil, a mockery to ourselves, and the very contrast of what with a little firmness and foresight, we might have been. I entreat you, therefore, most earnestly, now that it is not too late, to step forth, and having exhausted the argument, to stand by your arms. Your fellow citizen,

G. M. TROUP."

Viewing all republics, ancient as well as modern, as so many imperfect sys as of government, differing only in their respective degrees of imperfection, we consider the growth and extension of the Federal Government of the United States as a subject of the deepest interest;—as an experiment on a large scale of a system, which, it appears to us, is contrary to the universal order of nature, from the Divinity, downwards, to the communities of the meanest insects; and so satisfied are we of the impossibility of any long duration of the present order of things in the United States—that we have no doubt there are many now living who will see an entire disruption of the North American Federal Government!

We lament with others the untimely death of Mr John Doyle, aged 19, who was unfortunately drowned in our Bay on last Sunday-week; yet, we cannot help here noticing the very reprehensible and weekly practice, not in this Town only, but throughout the Province, of numbers of young men amusing themselves in various sports—and particularly in the diversion of sailing pleasure boats, during those hours which should be appropriated, either to the private or public worship of the Supreme Being.—If in England, and in other well-ordered communities, those who tipple in Public Houses during the performance of divine service are punishable by fine and imprisonment, there can be no good reason urged why those who wilfully profane the Sabbath, by other practices not less reprehensible, should not be mulcted in some adequate correction.—We have frequently had occasion to remark that fully two-thirds of the fatal accidents which have occured in this country have happened on that day which has been appointed, from the highest authority, a day of sanctification and of rest.

It gives us pleasure to call the attention of our readers to an advertisement in the Gazette of this day, which holds forth to the young gentlemen of this town, and its vicinity, an opportunity of learning the Broad Sword Exercise, and Cavalry movements, on an improved plan, very superior to any thing that has been heretofore seen in this country. We should not speak so decidedly in favour of Mr. Midford, had we not reason to know that he makes no profession which it is not in his power fully to realize We very much doubt whether his equal, particularly in the Sword Exercise, could be found on this continent Volunteer Troops of Horse will find this a very favourable opportunity for perfecting themselves in the Exercises which to them are indispensible. Mr. M's terms are very moderate.

Many of the friends of Mr. Thomson, editor of the U. C. Herald, have presented him, in the most handsome manner, with an elegant piece of plate, ordered from England for the express purpose, on which the following sentiment is inscribed,

Liberty will have become extinct,
when an Editor of a Public Print, who performs his duty with impartiality and spirit, shall cease to be regarded as an invaluable member of Society.

This generous donation is intended as a testimonial of respect for the public character of Mr. Thomson, of which he is certainly very deserving—and we wish him many years enjoyment of the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

The first number of the 'Canadian Freeman,' a new weekly periodical work, edited by Mr. Francis Collins, has made its appearance, making the fourth newspaper printed in this small town. The Canadian Freeman professes independent principles, and liberality of sentiment, and freedom from party—and comes forward in an unostentatious and very unobtrusive manner. It is impossible to find fault with the humble pretentions that are made, and we are the last who will repine at the success of him who has deemed it necessary to make this addition to Canadian Literature.—Should all the four Prints that are published in York, meet with sufficient patronage, it will augur well, at least, for the spirit of inquiry, and for an increasing zeal after knowledge, in a population that is extremely united.

Total number of Settlers which have arrived at Quebec, up to the latest period of our advices, this season, is 4,412.

London Horticultural Society.—The Horticultural Society of London have despatched one of their most able collectors to the mouth of the Colombia, David Douglas, who was formerly one of the head gardeners at Glasgow Botanical Garden After spending the ensuing season, in collecting on the north west coast, through nearly ten degrees of latitude, he will cross the Rocky Mountains in latitude 55, and fall in with Captain Franklin's line of route at Isle de la Crosse, and return overland with that enterprising officer to Hudson's Bay.

Perpetual Motion—We copy the following communication from the Commercial Advertiser. Our readers will take it for what it is worth.

Mr. Editor—I have been induced to visit the invention of Roswell Saltonstall, in this city, and would recommend it to all the friends of science throughout the world.

It is a large Wheel, upon the lever principle, whose self motion is rotatory, and in exact conformity with the laws of nature. By its construction, it contains perpetual circumvolution; and can be made beneficial to all mechanical operations, and for Nautical purposes. This effort of genius deserves the attention of an enlightened public, and has already drawn from several gentlemen of this country, and an individual of the highest standing in Europe the most unqualified approbation

There is not the least doubt but that the secret, which has employed the attention of thousands, has been, by the inventor, successfully developed.

ARCHIMEDES.

Seduction and Suicide.—On Friday evening an inquest was holden at the Three Cups public-house, Oxford road, on the body of Christina Marie Briscoline, aged 19 years, who put a period to her existence by poison on Tuesday last, under the following distressing circumstances:—Louisa Morcani, of No. 7, Drew's place, (with whom the deceased resided for the last three or four months,) stated, that the deceased was niece to her husband, Carlo Morcani, a manufacturer of artificial flowers, at whose instance deceased came over to England, about a year and a half ago, to assist him in his business. The deceased having received a liberal education, and being a young woman of extremely insinuating manners, was offered a situation in a very eminent florist's house in New Bond-street, which she accepted, and where she had the misfortune to attract the regards of a gentleman ranking high in life, who ultimately effected her ruin, and took her with him into the country, where she remained until the birth of an infant, which dying soon after, the deceased was abandoned by her seducer, and in the month of October she returned to London, her spirit quite broken and her whole appearance betraying the utmost wretchedness. Her constant wish was to return home to her native country. On this subject she had repeatedly written to the person by whom she was seduced, entreating such pecuniary assistance as would enable her to quit England forever; but only in two instances were her letters answered—the one was a little before Christmas, conveying a direct refusal in harsh terms; and the latter about ten or twelve days ago, when deceased received a letter from him, inclosing a £10 note, with a few words of extremely unkind import.—"You say that the death of your child has tended to impair your health, and to incapacitate you from pursuing your business as hitherto. This is of a piece with the artifice of your sex Who ever dreamt of meeting with such sublime feelings in the bosom of an Italian flower-girl? I only regret that you did not accompany your brat, (which I never believed to be mine,) and then I should have been freed from both incumbrances, at once. The inclosed will be the last assistance you can expect from me, and is more than I have any right to give you"—Witness stated, that since the receipt of this letter, deceased wept almost incessantly, and talked in so wild and incoherent a manner, that she (witness) began to apprehend her reason was fled for ever. On Tuesday she went out and did not return until near seven o'clock in the evening, and when questioned as to the cause of her staying so long, she replied in a hurried tone of voice, "I have settled every thing this day, but it has cost me many tears." Witness thought that she alluded to her departure for Italy, and observed, "Christina, you must not think of going; there is no occasion for it." Deceased sobbed bitterly, and said, "Yes, yes, but I must Oh, God forgive him that forces me to such an act!" She then said that she had some matters to arrange, and went up stairs to her room for that purpose, in some short time witness followed her up stairs, and found her sitting at a table with writing materials before her. She was naturally of a florid complexion, but at that time she was dreadfully pale, and appeared to labour under great distress of mind. Witness did not see her after, until the servant girl informed her that "Mademoiselle was in a fainting fit," and upon going up to the room, she found her lying on the floor, perfectly inanimate, and to all appearance dead. She then went for a surgeon, who declared that it was all over, the deceased having evidently swallowed poison.—Robert Moore said the deceased wrote a letter, which she directed witness to put into the General Post Office.—The letter was sealed with black wax, and contained an enclosure. When deceased spoke to her, she was much enfeebled, and her eyes were red and swollen, from weeping.—Mr. Dubois, the surgeon, said, when he was sent for on Tuesday evening, the deceased appeared to have been dead some hours previously. On annalysing the contents of the stomach, there appeared to be a greater quantity of laudanum than he had ever witnessed in any similar case.—The Jury expressed themselves in strong terms of reprobation at the unfeeling conduct of this wretched young woman's seducer; and concluded by saying, that they only regretted it was not in their power to couple his name with the infamy that attaches to it from this melancholy event, of which he was unquestionably the cause. Verdict: The deceased committed suicide by poison, whilst in a state of temporary derangement.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

From the London Morning Chronicle, May 14.

In the Sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday last, an interesting discussion took place on an item on the Budget of 29,000 francs, for the foreign service of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. General Foy alluded to the funds set apart for the establishment of Consulates in South America, and to the assurance given by the Minister of Marine, that there, as well as every where else, their merchant vessels would be protected, and observed that several shipments had, in consequence, been made from the ports of France, and Bordeaux and Havre in particular. The Consulates, however had not been established. the protection had not been given, and all that had been known of French missions was, that of the American Government, had lately declar-d in a public document, that the conduct of the Agents had been suspicious and perfidious.

The answer of M de Villele is curious —

"Should we have imitated the example of England [profound silence] ? Should we, like England, have recognized the independence of the Spanish Colonies ? I demand of the Speaker, if France, with respect to these Colonies, is in the same position as England, either in point of commercial interest or principles? And first, as to the first point. England, since 1807, is in possession of the protectorate of that commerce, and she has, I will not say millions, but thousands of millions embarked in that country. France has only entered into this commerce within these few years, and it does not exceed thirty millions of imports, and sixteen millions of exports. You see that the difference is great between these two positions. With respect to moral considerations, with respect to principles, a Bourbon reigns over Spain. France has, by a glorious expedition, restored the reign of that King. Would it be moral, would it be conformable to the principles which we respect, and which we shall always respect, I hope, because these principles are the safeguards of nations, as well as governments, that France should not recognize, in spite of Spain, and contrary to the protestation of her Government, the independent existence of these Colonies ?

"But let us look further.—Would the recognition be for the interest of that country ? No Gentlemen, France conforms to her principles, and her interest is called on to play the most elevated and honourable part, that of mediatrix, and to that all her efforts will be directed . . . I declare that our agents never were charged with any thing beyond acting as mediators, and certainly a Government may exhibit its policy when it is so clear and frank."

[A Bourbon reigns over France, and France is a moral Country! France cannot therefore, act like England. The times are changed since a Bourbon acknowledged that he owed his Throne, under Heaven, to a Guelph, and since that Bourbon was enabled, by a British General (a stain which will never be effaced from his name,) to murder the gallant Ney. England is now, it seems, a suspected country, which must be placed under quarantine, on account of her pestilential principles.]

BURMESE WAR.

The Edinburgh Observer contains an extract of a letter from a Surgeon in the Indian Army, which says, that the Burmese War "is the bloodiest, perhaps, ever carried on,"—"No quarter," the latter continues, "is given by these cannibals—every prisoner they take of ours is crucified, and a cut made down his belly, his bowels let out, and in that state he is left to die. I am sorrow to say, many of our people have already suffered this death. We, however, by our turn, mow them down in thousands, and take their stockades, or forts, afloat as we get up with them. Sometimes 40 or 50 of them, on being approached by our troops, will stand still, bind their eyes, and be shot.—This has frequently happened At other times, excessive numbers will make a rush out from a jungle, and succeed in cutting off some of our troops; but if they see a tolerable body of Europeans, they make off direct again for the jungle A shell was thrown some weeks ago, and about 50 or 60 men, women, and children, got close to it, ensured for a few seconds at the fuse, when it went off, and killed all around."

GREECE.

"Official despatch from Gen. Condouriotis, President of the Executive Body, to the Greek Deputies, Orlando and Luriottes.

"NAUPLIA, March 18 (30.)

"The day before yesterday I quitted Napoli, after having signed different despatches for you, of which P——— will be the bearer.

"I have received your despatches of the 2d (14th) February last, from which I perceive that you have contracted in London a second loan for the government and Transmit, at present, those despatches to Napoli de Romania.

"Our fleet has sailed out, and I hope it will be able to meet that of the enemy which left Modon immediately after having landed troops there, perhaps on account of its having heard that ours was on the way to attack it. The Egyptian troops disembarked at Modon amounted, as detailed in the despatches which P——takes, to about 10,000 men, and I have the satisfaction to announce to you, that according to intelligence which I have this moment received from the head quarters the enemy has experienced what might have been expected from so rash an enterprise, for, in a sanguinary engagement near Navarin, on the 15th (27th) instant, our troops, under the command of Generals Carataxo, H. Cristo, Caraiscakis, Zervelles and Scourtzis, after a great slaughter, put the enemy to flight.—A body of 3000 Egyptians was surrounded on all sides, and, it is thought, they all perished or were taken prisoners.

"I cannot give you more satisfactory intelligence. I shall remain here two or three days, to send forward different corps of troops; and afterwards I shall proceed, in the first place to Modon, to inspect the divisions which are there; and thence I shall go, through Arcadia, to Patras to join the troops which blockade that fortress; and from that place I hope shall be able to give you other pleasing news."

It was only two days previous to the above pleasing intelligence being received in London, that reports were circulated of the success of the Turks. These accounts were received from Constantinople and Zante, in letters of the 9th of April. The Courier of the 14th of May, in alluding to the official report, published above, says;

We feel it proper to recall the attention of our readers to the official intelligence which we yesterday gave, relating to the affairs of Greece This document may be considered as the more important, because it tends to allay the fears expressed upon this subject, by a morning paper It appeared by our news of yesterday, that the Greeks had obtained a decisive victory over the troops landed at Modon, and that the Greek fleet had actually sailed From the same authentic source we further learn, that the Greek Deputies in London have information from Zante down to the 16th April, which is several days subsequent to the unfavourable reports alluded to, and it makes no mention of them, or of any thing that, in the slightest degree, corroborates them.

FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Remarkable fish story.—The Salem Register of yesterday states that while a t ape Ann fishing schr. was lying on the Middle Ground a few days since, with her anchor down, and her men employed in fishing, they suddenly perceived their vessel was moving at a rapid rate—after she had gone a considerable distance, they saw a large whale rise to the surface of the water and blow—when he disappeared the vessel was again carried swiftly through the water, and again the whale rose and spouted, and they perceived the water coloured with blood The fish then sunk, and the schr remained stationary. The crew now endeavoured to raise the anchor, but found they could not! Soon after a brig came up with them, and on being informed of the circumstances, such several men on board the schr. to assists in weighing anchor, which they effected with considerable difficulty, and when they took it on board found a part of the entrails of the whale upon it!

It is supposed the fish either swallowed the anchor, or in diving to the bottom, struck upon it with such force as to cause it to enter his body. This, altho' a fish story, we have reason to believe is essentially true.

Daniel D. Tompkins, late Vice President of the United States, died at Staten Island on the 11th instant, in the 51st year of his age.

THE LAKE OF GUATAVITA.

This Lake which our countryman, Captain Cochrane desires to drain, is famous in the legends of Colombia. The story runs thus;

"Previously to the conquest of the country by the Spaniards, a large district, containing about a million of inhabitants, was subject to the Cacique of Guatavita; who there had a considerable capital, and kept up an army of thirty thousand warriors, which caused him to be much respected by the neighbouring tribes; who brought him and his people gold dust in exchange for the produce of their fields, they generally being cultivators of the soil.—This Lagoon, situated between nine and ten thousand feet above the level of the sea, and formed on the summit of a conical mountain, they considered as the residence of their protecting deity, to whom, from a religious motive, they thought it necessary to make offerings twice a year In consequence of this, all the Cacique's subjects assembled at stated times, with their gold offerings; and forming in grand procession, advanced with music to the Lagoon, winding up the mountain by a well designed broad road, conducting to the summit, a few feet below which were then washed by the water of the lake. Arrived there, the Cacique and the principal Chief embarked in large canoes, by steps formed in that break; (my informant pointing to a rent in the top of the mountain which the eye could just make out.) The people at the same time distributed themselves all around the Lagoon. On arriving at the centre, the Chiefs anointed the Cacique, and powdered him over with a profusion of gold dust; from which practice, in various parts of South America, has arisen the name El Dorado.

On a signal given, the multitude turned their backs on the Lagoon; and at the moment when the Cacique plunged into its bosom, they shouted, and threw in over their shoulders, as far as they could, their offerings. This done, the Cacique landed, and returned to his capital, in the same manner as he came, considering that the sins of himself and people, committed during the last six months, were expiated. According to a calculation, made from a basis laid down by Monsieur de la Kier, of the Royal Institute of Paris, who particularly examined every document relating to the Lagoon, there ought to be gold and precious stones yet buried in it to the amount of one million one hundred and twenty million sterling On the Spaniards conquering the country, they so cruelly persecuted the natives to obtain gold, that most of them threw what they had left into the Lagoon. The Cacique himself caused to be cast into the centre of it the burdens of fifty men, laden with gold dust.

"Some of the Chiefs, when afterwards taken prisoners, and ill used by the Spaniards, revenged themselves by saying, 'If it is gold you want, go and search at the bottom of the Lagoon, and you will find sufficient there;' supposing the undertaking to be impossible. The Spaniards however, attempted it; and had got within fourteen feet of the bottom, when the sides fell in with a tremendous crash; and the Lagoon having springs in it the waters began to rise. The Spaniards, however, had time, by examining the banks, and washing the mud and soil, to procure a sufficient sum to pay the Government a quinta of one hundred and seventy thousand dollars, (a quinta is three per cent.); and one emerald procured and sent to Madrid, was alone valued at seventy thousand dollars. Several attempts were made previously to the breaking out of the revolution; but none succeeded. At last, having a speculating turn, (continued my friend Pope,) I determined to undertake it.—Getting a grant from the executive government, I formed a company with sixteen shares, each person giving me 5 hundred dollars, in all eight thousand, which I thought would be sufficient; but unfortunately it has now cost me 20,000 dollars, and there are still thirty three feet of water left."

Capt C. adds—"An old Spaniard, sounding in the centre, drew up with the lead a small branch of a tree, in the mud surrounding which was found a golden image, worth about one hundred dollars; so there is every reason for hope."

Natural History.

Trenck's Mouse.—Baron Trenck, in his memoirs, mentions, that whilst shut up in a dungeon by his savage persecutor, "Frederick the Great," he had so tamed a mouse, that it would play around him, and eat from his mouth. He adds, "in this small animal I discovered proofs of intelligence, too great to ever gain belief; were I to write them, priests would rail, monks grumble, and such philosophers as suppose man alone endowed with the power of thought—allowing nothing but what they call 'instinct' to animals—would proclaim me a fabulous writer. This intelligent mouse had nearly been my ruin. I had diverted myself with it during the night it had been nibling at my door, and capering on a trencher. The sentinels happened to hear our amusements, and called the officers: they heard also, and said all was not right in my dungeon. At day break my door resounded; the town major, a smith, and a mason entered; strict search was made; flooring, walls, chairs, and my own person; were all scrutinized, but in vain. They asked what was the noise they had heard. I mentioned the mouse, then whistled, and it came and jumped upon my shoulder. Orders were given that I should be deprived of its society! I earnestly entreated they would at least spare its life. The officer on guard gave me his word of honour that he would present it to a lady, who would treat it with the utmost tenderness. He took it away, and turned it loose in the guard room; but it was tame to me alone, and sought a hiding place. It had fled to my prison door, and at the hour of visitation ran into my dungeon, immediately testifying its joy by its antic leaping between my legs. It is worthy to remark, that it had been taken away blindfold—that is to say, wrapped in a handkerchief. How then did it find its master? Did it know or did it wait for the hour of visitation? All were desirous of obtaining this mouse, but the major carried it off for his lady. She put it into a cage, where it pined, refused all sustenance, and in a few days, was found dead."

Curiosity.—The tooth of some unknown animal was found by the workmen on the Canal, on the 14th inst. 3 feet below the surface of the earth, in the bed of the Sandy Creek, at Murray, Genesee co. It measured 7 inches in length, is 1¼ inches in circumference, and weighs two lbs. two oz. In what manner this mammoth tooth was deposited where it was found, and whether it was originally the property of a ruminating, cardiverous or amphibious animal, must be left for the decision of Dr. Mitchill and Capt. Symmes.

Anecdotes.

HENRY.

Earl of Holsatia, surnamed Iron, by reason of his extraordinary strength and courage being a favorite of Edward III, king of England, was hated by the courtiers, who taking advantage of the king's absence, prevailed, on the queen to make trial whether he was nobly descended, by exposing him to a lion, alleging the lion would not hurt him if he was truly noble. For this purpose a lion was turned loose in the night; and Henry, having a nightgown on, over his shirt, with his girdle and sword, in which posture he used to walk in the morning, in the base court of the castle to take the air, met with the lion roaring and frizzling his shaggy crest, but the earl being undaunted, said in a harsh and angry tone, "Stand, you dog;" at which the lion crouched at his feet, and the earl took him by the neck and put him into his den, leaving the nightcap upon the lion's back, and so walked off unconcerned; and looking up to the windows were the Courtiers were, said "Now let the proudest of you all, that boast so much of your noble birth, go and fetch my night-cap, and take it for his pains;" but they shamefully pulled in their heads, and made no reply. Cranis Hist. Saxon.

EMPEROR FRANCIS II.

One arm of the Danube separates the city of Vienna from a large suburb called Leopoldstadt. A thaw inundated this suburb and the ice carried away the bridge of communication with the capital. The population of Leopoldstadt began to be in the greatest distress for want of provisions A number of boats were collected and loaded with bread, but no one felt hardy enough to risk the passage, which was rendered extremely dangerous by large bodies of ice. Frances the Second, who was then emperor stood at the water's edge; he begged, exhorted, threatened, and promised the highest recompences, but all in vain; whilst on the other shore, his subjects famishing with hunger stretched forth their hands and supplicated relief.—The monarch's sensibility at length got the better of his prudence; he leaped singly into a boat loaded with bread, and applied himself to the oars, exclaiming, "Never shall it be said that I made no effort to save those, who would risk their all for me." The example of the sovereign, sudden as electricity, inflamed the spectators, who threw themselves in crowds into the boats. They encountered the sea successfully, and gained the suburb just when their intrepid monarch, with the tear of pity in his eye, held out the bread he had conveyed across at the risk of his life.

"MR. QUIN'S ACCOUNT OF SCOTLAND.

"This actor being once asked if he had ever been to Scotland and how he liked the people? "If you mean (replied he) the lower order of them, I shall be at a loss to answer you; for I had no further acquaintance with them than by the smell. As for the nobility they are numerous and for the most part proud and beggarly. I remember when I crossed from the North of Ireland, into their land country, I came to a little wretched village, consisting of a dozen huts, in the style of the Hottentots, the principal of which was an inn, and kept by an Earl. I was mounted on a shrivelled quadruped, for there was no certainty of calling it horse, mare, or gelding, much like a North Wales goat, but rather larger, and without horns. The whole village was up in an instant to salute me, supposing from the elegance of my appearance, that I must be some person of large fortune and great family.—The Earl ran and took hold of my stirrup while I dismounted; then turning to his eldest son, who stood by us without breeches, said, "My Lord, do you take the gentleman's horse to the stable, and desire your sister, Lady Betty, to draw him a pint of two-penny, for I suppose so great a man will ha' the best liquor in the whole boos." I was obliged (continued Quin) to stay here the whole night, and to make a supper of rotten potatoes and stinking eggs; the old Nobleman was indeed very complaisant, and made me accept of his own bed. I cannot say that the dormitory was the best in the world, for there was nothing but an old box to set upon in the room, and there was neither sheets nor curtains to the bed. Lady Betty was kind enough to apologise for the apartment, assuring me, "Many persons of great degnaty had frequently slept in it, and that though the blankets luck'd sae black, it was not quite four years sin they had been washed by the Countess her mother, and Lady Matilda Caroline Amelia Elenora Sophia, one of her youngest sisters." She then wished me a good night, and said, that the Viscount her brother, would take particular care to grease my boots."

Poetry.

LACHIN Y GAIR*

BY THE RIGHT HON. G GORDON, LORD BYRON.

Away, ye gay landscapes, ye gardens of roses!
In you let the minions of luxury rove;
Restore me the rocks where the snow flake reposes,
Though still they are sacred to freedom and love;
Yet Caledonia! belov'd are thy mountains,
Round their white summits though elements war,
Though cataracts foam, 'stead of smooth flowing fountains,
I sigh for the valley of dark Loch na Garr.

Ah! there my young footsteps in infancy wander'd,
My cap was the bonnet, my cloak was the plaid;
On Chieftains, long perished, my memory ponder'd,
As daily I strode through the pine cover'd glade;
I sought not my home till the day's dying glory
Gave place to the rays of the bright polar star;
For fancy was cheer'd by traditional story,
Disclos'd by the natives of dark Loch na Garr.

"Shades of the dead! have I not heard your voices
"Rise on the night rolling breath of the gale?"
Surely the soul of the hero rejoices,
And rides on the wind, o'er his own Highland vale:
Round Loch na Garr, while the stormy mist gathers,
Winter presides in his cold icy car;
Clouds there incircle the forms of my fathers,
They dwell in the recesses of dark Loch na Garr.

"Ill-starr'd, tho' brave, did no visions foreboding,
"Tell you that fate had forsaken your cause?"
Ah! were you destin'd to die at Culloden,
Victory crown'd not your fall with applause;
Still were you happy in death's earthy slumber,
You rest with your clan in the caves of Braemar,
The Pibroch resounds to the piper's loud number,
Your deeds on the echoes of dark Loch na Garr.

Years have rolled on, Loch na Garr, since I left you,
Years must elapse e'er I tread you again;
Nature of verdure and flowers has bereft you,
Yet still are you dearer than Albion's plain.
England! thy beauties are tame and domestic,
To one who has rov'd on the mountains afar;
Oh! for the craggs that are wild and majestic,
The frowning glories of dark Loch na Garr.

Parliamentary Register,

OF

Upper Canada.

(First Session of the Ninth Parliament.)

No. XXIII.

WEDNESDAY 6th April, 1825.

Continued.

After examining the Estimates and Reports, the consideration remaining to be weighed, are, the probable influence of the projected improvements upon our security and welfare, the scale on which they should be attempted, the expense at which they can be accomplished, and the means of meeting that expense, the time at which they may and ought to be undertaken, and in what order.

Upon all these points the Commissioners have offered very valuable remarks; and the Committee may without any censurable failure in their duty, forbear much additional observation of their own upon points upon which great diversity of opinion will undoubtedly prevail, however much they may be discussed, because they invole considerations so various in their nature, and so combined a view must be taken of the several questions, that it would be vain to pretend to demonstrate satisfactorily the precise conclusion to which the suggestion of the Commissioners ought under all circumstances to lead.

That a Canal from Kingston to the Ottawa River, would in the event of a War, not merely diminish beyond measure the charge of our defence, but render its success greatly more certain, admits of no doubt. Happily present appearances indicate no interruption of the good understanding between Great Britain and America, on the contrary, they afford a well grounded hope of its permanence; but without bringing probabilities into discussion it may be affirmed, that, it would be most imprudent to reckon on a very long continuance of peace.

In the event of a war, protracted as the last, the safety and the saving of transport, conducted by such a Channel, would, it is believed, fully compensate to the nation the charge of the improvement proposed, and it is more evident that to give full effect to the sound and liberal policy which has created the Military Settlements on the Rideau, and introduced, since the war, a loyal population of more than 10,000 souls where there was before no inhabitant, and which is now surmounting at considerable expense the interruption of the navigation of the Ottawa, it is necessary to perfect the water communication removed from the enemy's Frontier, and leading in truth, from the Ocean to Kingston, which is the key to Lake Ontario and the principal Military Station in the Province. The Naval armaments and supplies, but in a less degree to the proposed Canal connecting Lakes Erie and Ontario, such a work would undoubtedly facilitate military operations in defence of the Province to a great extent under any probable circumstances, and would not so decidedly ensure the safety of the Western portion of the Province as the first mentioned Canal would of the Eastern, because the enemy, if in possession of the Lake, might still cut off resources from below and render the use of such a work partial and uncertain.

With respect to the advantages to Trade and Commerce which the projected communications would procure, little can be said that has not been urged and nothing, that observation in a neighbouring County, does not readily suggest. In this view, the improvement which would connect the waters of Lake Erie and Ontario, is undoubtedly the most important, because, the more remote that portion of the Province is from the Ocean, the more ruinous is its commerce and consequently to its agriculture, is any natural obstruction which increases materially the difficulty of transport.

To a country so situated, the manufactures its inhabitants consume at a higher charge, and if the only articles they can furnish in return are subjected to the same charge which almost exclude them from the markets, there is reason to fear, a depression of circumstances, a discouragement to exertion, and ultimately perhaps, even a consequent interiority in moral character, amidst great positive advantages of climate and soil.

When the great importance in a commercial point of view, of an uninterrupted navigation from the country bordering on Lake Erie is thus considered, it is very gratifying to find that a hope is held out of its speedy accomplishment by the exertions of a private Company at a much less expense than that contemplated by the Commissioners, but by a route which may perhaps as effectually serve the interests of the country in time of Peace.

If the Welland Canal should proceed upon the scale now contemplated by the Company, adapted to Sloop Navigation, it is to be supposed that, for all purposes of Commerce, the extension of the plan reported by the Commissioners, might be postponed 'till the population of the country should become such as to warrant its being entertained for the reason that it would serve the interests of a much greater extent of interior country and would terminate at a safer and more commodious harbour

The latter reason would undoubtedly indicate the Canal projected by the Commissioners, at which point would bear evidence to the Military defence of the Country—but if the Welland Canal should be carried successfully through, it is conceived that no sufficient motive would remain for desiring the completion of the other until many more necessary improvements of a similar kind had been first executed

The benefits which may be expected to accrue to agriculture and trade from a Canal leading to the Ottawa from Kingston, are investigated at some length in the paper alluded to, (No.) and although with whatever candour and intelligence the inquiry is there conducted, it is very possible that the results may be questionable to many; the Committee will not pretend to discuss the merits of Estimates founded on details by which it may be to a certain degree verified or refuted by any who have more leisure and better opportunity to examine them

The Question on what scale it would be expedient to undertake either of the Canals projected, seems to have appeared very doubtful to the Commissioners, and it certainly is one which admits of much discussion and calls for great consideration

Beginning in the westward, it is certainly most important that the Lakes should be connected by a Navigation which will allow of the same Vessels continuing their voyage without discharging their Cargoes, so that a Schooner laden at Amherstburgh could proceed, without breaking bulk, to Kingston or Prescott. The present design of the Welland Canal Company admits of this to be follow extent contemplated by the Commissioners, and it is, therefore, for the moment, unnecessary to discuss the Points as regards that part of the communication. With respect to the other great Canal from Kingston to the Ottawa, it remains an important and somewhat difficult Question.

The comparative expense is—On a Scale of 7 feet in depth 40 feet in width at the bottom, and 61 feet in width at the surface of the water, the bank- to slope one foot and a half to one foot perpendicular, the Locks to be of stone and 100 feet in length by 22 feet in width, with turning Bridges 22 feet in the clear and 10 feet wide—Cost £229,265 14 11 2

On a scale of 5 feet in depth 28 feet in width at the bottom, and 46 in width at the surface of the water, the banks to slope 1½ feet to one foot perpendicular, the Locks to be of stone, and 80 feet in width with turning Bridges 15 feet in the clear and 10 feet wide—Cost £145,892 7 8 1-2

On a scale 4 feet in depth, 20 feet in width at the bottom, and 30 feet in width at the surface of the water, the banks to slope one foot and a half to one foot perpendicular, the Locks to be of wood and 75 feet in length by 10 feet in breadth, with turning Bridges 10 feet in the clear and 10 feet wide—Cost £62,256 6 10.

The Committee in estimating the weight of those arguments which would lead to the adoption of the largest scale on the ground of greater military security, cannot avoid stating that, if the idea is entertained of facilitating by such a Canal the naval defence of the Upper Lakes, by the introduction of Vessels of War of a small class from the sea, they consider such an anticipation by no means a safe one. It is evident, that it would be at any time in the power of the Americans to construct on the Lakes, Ships of such overwhelming force, that Vessels of the small class which could ascend by the Canal, could render no effectual service and it would be at last reduced again to a contest of Ship building in the harbours of the Lakes

A Canal larger than is necessary to transport with convenience all description of Naval and Military Stores would, by its greater dimensions afford, in the opinion of your Committee, no additional security to the Province.

Judging then they are inclined to prefer the plan second in order, being a Canal 5 feet in depth.

So far as the interes is of Trade are concerned, the Committee see more reason to deliberate. It is, however, to be considered in the first place, that unless the Canal at the Ottawa and the La Chine Canal are altered so as to be of corresponding dimensions it would be perfectly useless to construct ours on the enlarged scale If that could be anticipated with certainty, and if it would be clearly desirable to have the Canal on the larger plan, it would seem good policy to make every exertion to attain that object at once, and to commence it accordingly; because though the smaller works alluded to might, at a tolerable expense, be enlarged to suit the greater, it would scarcely be rational to calculate upon enlarging at a long a line of Canal as that from Kingston to the Ottawa, when once completed It is but too too clonable however, whether the Policy of Lower Canada will ever admit of such an enlargement of the LaChine Canal as would allow of Navigation by Vessels that could continue their voyage to Atlantic Ports There are obvious interests against it, and it must be expected these will have their influence. If, however, this difficulty did not interfere there is still, in the opinion of the Committee, much reason to be satisfied with the smaller scale

That the same vessel which navigate one of the Upper Lakes should be able to pass to Kingston and Prescott is clearly of much consequence, because they are equally fit for every part of the voyage and they are as a means of transhipment at a moderate charge of toll and lockage upon a short line of Canal; but unless we could contemplate that these same vessels would continue their course to the West Indies or other parts beyond Lower Canada, which for several reasons could scarcely be expected. It would perhaps not be advisable to construct a Canal at so great a cost merely to admit of their continuing their route to Montreal or Quebec instead of stopping at Prescott or Kingston.—It is true one transfer of the Cargo would be saved but on the other hand the toll must be so much greater on a Canal of such length with many locks constructed on such large dimensions, and the wear and tear of a vessel of considerable size and value passing through a long navigation of that description, might prove of such that little would be lost by avoiding it at the expense of a transhipment into large and secure Canal boats at Kingston, But when, in addition to the considerations, these Committee reflect that the River St Lawrence, when the obstacles in some parts of its course are removed, will present a much more direct and natural course for the navigation of vessels to Lower Canada. they are of opinion that, looking merely at the Commercial interest of the Province, a Canal on the smaller scale would be most advisable as being most easily and certainly to be compassed within a moderate period and as affording to every necessary degree the accommodation required

At the same time it is clear that if the Parent State concurring with the Colony in a work so essential to the preservation of her dominions in this quarter of the world, should assume a share of the charge, it would be highly expedient to attempt a Canal on the largest dimensions

The expense of this and of the other undertaking suggested by the Commissioners, is to be looked for in their estimates, and assuming their calculations to be correct, the most material inquiry is whether, in the present state of our Revenue, and with the resources which might be called in aid without imposing oppressive burthens upon the people, a sum could be raised sufficient to meet the principal undertaking—the Canal from Kingston to the Ottawa. The very encouraging offer from His Majesty's Government, which was communicated to both Houses by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor at the commencement of this Session, would, if we can avail ourselves of it, ensure the necessary advance being procured upon the most favourable term and with such periods of repayment as might be thought most convenient.

An increase of Revenue sufficient to provide for the payment of the interest and for the gradual liquidation of the principal of a loan of such sum as would be necessary for carrying into execution the plan of the Commissioners, might, it is believed, be obtained without injury to the commercial interests of this Province and without inconvenience being felt by any of its Inhabitants, if the Legislature of Lower Canada, recognising the importance of such a work to that Province, should be disposed to concur in imposing a small additional duty on such articles imported as could easily bear it, uniting their resources for a work of common advantage, there is no doubt that the Provinces would be fully equal to the immediate execution of a canal on the smaller scale adapted to commercial purposes—but, if, as has been mentioned, the mother country, regarding a Canal upon the largest scale proposed, as a work certain to contribute most essentially to the military defence of the Province, should consent to participate in the charge, the Committee conceives that the means of this Province would enable it, to meet the exertion which ought, in that case, to be made on her part, to accelerate the period of her security.

Whether the time is now arrived when the Province should actually attempt the execution of work which but a very years ago would have been considered altogether visionary, is another point to be determined—so far as the decision should be influenced by the most reasonable expectation that can be formed, as to the return such works would immediately yield, the calculations which are given in some of the papers annexed may form perhaps as safe a guide as the Committee could pretend to furnish

One thing is clear, in the peculiar circumstances of Upper Canada, a Country of great capability, thinly peopled, and requiring above all things, that capital and population should be attracted to it by every possible means, the same reasons, which might be properly urged in other countries, should not apply to induce us to delay such undertakings till they are certain to afford profit.

It is greatly the interest of the present generation to submit to some temporary sacrifice in the prospect of a very rapid recompense. The most natural order here would be that the improvement should precede in order to accelerate the population and commerce of the country, rather than to await the arrival of a period when the existing circumstances of the Country would, in a commercial point of view, at once justify the enterprise.

The great impulse which would be given to the country by the demand for labour, the encouragement it would afford to emigrants of capital to remove to this Province, and the confidence it would create in the security of the colony, would amply warrants, in the opinion of the Committee, the commencement of the canal at the present period, although the expectation of the Commissioners of an immediate indemnity should appear too sanguine.

As to the order in which the internal improvements suggested should be taken up by the Province, it appears obvious to the Committee that the concurrence of the parent state ought to determine us to apply our first exertions . the communication from Kingston to the Ottawa, and besides the prospect of a canal from Lake Erie to Ontario being accomplished by a private company, appears to the Committee to put it out of question that public attention should be turned to the other with the least possible delay.

At the same time the Committee are of opinion that, regarding only the commercial interests of the Province in time of Peace with the United States and setting out of view all other considerations, the improvement of the River St Lawrence would naturally first engage attention, because there can be little doubt that a much less expenditure than would be necessary for effecting an Internal Communication, would render this direct and natural Channel to the Ocean, more convenient for all purposes of trade

Under any view of the subject, it appears to the Committee so important that no time should be lost in ascertaining the nature and probable cost of the required improvement of the St. Lawrence that they have come to certain resolutions on this subject which, they trust, will meet with the approbation of the Legislature. and which are annexed to this report. The most unfortunate disadvantage to which we are subjected in our navigation of the St. Lawrence by the canal at Barnhart's Island to the Americans, if that cession must be final, demands the earliest and most earnest attention of the Province, in order that before any expense is incurred in improving the channel of the river in other parts of its course, it may be known how we can best avert the evil of our extraordinary exclusion from the navigation at that point

Upon the subject of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, the Committee have to state that they have had under their consideration the Petition of David Sutherland Esq. and others, praying to be incorporated by Law, a company for improving the navigation of the St Lawrence by deepening its bed and removing obstructions and by facilitating the ascent of boats by chains and fastenings to be used in the channel It appears to the Committee, from the information they have received, that there is ground to believe the improvement thus suggested might be accomplished at an expense easily to be compassed by a private association but besides that they have not the means of satisfying themselves as to the expediency of adopting such a mode of improvement they are apprehensive that it might interfere with the more obvious and effectual system of making a channel fit for Sloop navigation near the shore with locks, where they may be necessary, and a towing path, and they would therefore recommend the petitioners to apply to the Legislature of Lower Canada.

The Committee recommends that a sufficient number of copies of this Report with the accompanying resolutions, of the same shall meet with the concurrence of the Legislature, be printed, and that the Act of 1821 subsisting the Commissioners for the improvement of the internal navigation, the several reports of the Commissioners in their order, and the letter of Mr Macauley referred to, be printed as an Appendix.

All which is respectfully submitted.

Chairman of the Committee for the Legislative Council.

WILLIAM MORRIS,
J. GORDON,

Joint Committee Room, April 6th 1825.

Resolved.—That the offer of His Majesty's Government to grant a loan of £70,000 to assist in opening a Canal from the Ottawa River to Kingston, calls for the warmest gratitude of His Majesty's Canadian Subjects and the earliest consideration of a measure so important to the prosperity of both Provinces.

Resolved,—That the extensive tract of fertile country on the line of the proposed Canal will without a water Communication to market, long remain unsettled and the inhabitants of that populous portion of the Province still more remote from the St. Lawrence will continue to suffer great inconvenience and loss in carrying their products over land to its banks.

Resolved,—That a Canal connecting Lake Ontario and the Ottawa River will, secure to the Government the most effectual means of defence in the event of a war with the United States of America. and to the Inhabitants of Upper and Lower Canada a safe inland navigation, where the exposed situation of the St. Lawrence might render commerce dangerous and perhaps impracticable.

Resolved,—That it is proper to request the Legislature of Lower Canada to unite with this Parliament in carrying into effect a work of equal importance and interest to the inhabitants of both Provinces, and in order to raise a fund to pay the annual interest of the proposed loan, and ultimately to liquidate the principal, it is necessary to impose a small additional duty on such articles of general consumption imported into Quebec as will best bear it, and prove least burthensome to the Subjects.

Resolved,—That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Gove nor , praying that His Excellency will be pleased to communica e a copy of the foregoing resolutions to the Government of Lower Canada to be laid before the Parliament of that Province.

Resolved,—That it is expedient, to ascertain with the least possible delay, the depth of water on the North side of Barnharts Island, in the River St. Lawrence, the facilities which that channel afford for boat navigation and the transportation of Lumber, and whether, in case of its being found capable of improvement so as to admit of such navigation without difficulty, rafts of timber and heavy rafts descending the River from Prescott can be conveniently brought into that Channel.

Resolved.—That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying that His Excellency will be pleased, as soon as the season will permit, to direct a survey of the said part of the River St Lawrence for the purpose aforesaid, and that the person employed to perform the same be instructed to report to His Excellency, for the information of the Legislature, the practicability and probable expense of removing the obstructions and deepening the bed of the River so as to allow rafts of the ordinary breadth drawing four feet of water, to pass down.

Resolved.—That the expense incurred in making the said survey, be made good to His Excellency at the next session of the Legislature.

Resolved,—that it is expedient to address His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying that His Excellency will communicate to the Government of Lower Canada the expediency of the Legislature of this Province, that the recommendation of the Arbitrators sanctioned by our Act 4th Geo. 4 Chap. 22 should also receive the sanction of the Legislature of Lower Canada in order that it may be carried immediately into effect, the subject matter thereof being of such great and undoubted interest to both Provinces

Resolved —That it is expedient to address His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, to pray that His Excellency, in case the Legislature of Lower Canada shall separate without making any provision for carrying into effect the recommendation of the Arbitrators above referred to, will direct a survey to be made, for the information of the Legislature, of the waters of the St Lawrence from the Town of Johnstown to the eastern extremity of this Province, in order to ascertain in what manner and for what expense a navigation can be effected, fit for Schooners drawing seven feet of water, to ascend as well as descend, and affording a towing path along the whole line of the canal, with the exception of the Lake saint Francois, and that part of the River which will be embraced on the survey to be made near Barnharts Island

On motion of Mr GORDON, the report of the Joint Committee on the internal navigation was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the whole house on the morrow.

Agreeably to notice Mr. PETERSON moved. that a Committee should be appointed to examine and report upon the contingent accounts of the present session. and that Messrs. Gordon, Rolph McBride, D Jones, and Thomson, do compose the same.

In amendment Mr. GORDON moved, that his name might be expunged and Mr Brady's name be inserted.

Which was carried

The original Question as amended was then put and carried.

Adjourned.

Editorial Commentary.

Although we were always opposed both in politics, and religion, to our old friend and relation MORRIS BIRKBECK, of late so famous as the founder of an English Settlement in the State of Illinois, we cannot but lament the untimely fate of a man so remarkable as COBBETT himself (with whom he was very intimate) for the great strength of his natural abilities, and for the peculiar point and energy of his style. It appears that he had been on a visit to the no less celebrated MR. OWEN, now of New Harmony, and was drowned, on his return home, in a branch of the Wabash. He was a first cousin to the present DR BIRKBECK of London and to the Banker of that name of Settle, in Yorkshire

THE DUKE of SUSSEX and several of the Lords who were in the minority on the great Catholic question have entered their Protest against the decision which has been come to in the House of Peers—On the other hand, it is stated in several of the London papers that the speech of the DUKE of YORK, which so materially contributed to the loss of the Bill, "has been printed in LETTERS OF GOLD" and is offered for sale in the public streets at the price of twelve shillings and sixpence.

It is stated there is a bill now before Parliament on the subject of the Customs that will repeal no fewer than 465 Acts of Parliament.

The Canada Company Bill passed the Commons on the 20th of May.

In the message which BOLIVAR has addressed to the Congress of Peru, is the following remarkable and glowing passage.

"Legislators! In giving up to Congress the supreme power which you deposited in my hands, allow me to congratulate the people in having rid themselves of the greatest curse in the world. War, by the victory at Ayacucho, and of despotism, by my resignation Proscribe forever, I beg you, that tremendous authority; that authority which was the grave of Rome! It was laudable, no doubt in Congress, in order to resist the dreadful calamities and to face the furious storms which desolated the country, to place her laws on the bayonets of the liberating army: but, as the nation has obtained domestic peace and political liberty, the laws only ought to govern "

In refusing One Million of Dollars which had been voted to him—he adds, "was not the confidence reposed in me by Congress a sufficient honour? Was not the glory which it conferred in placing in my hands the destiny of its country, sufficient to satisfy me? Why, then, seek to humiliate, to confound me by excessive favours, by the offer of a treasure that I cannot accept. Were I to receive the rewards offered me by Congress, my services to Peru would be obscured by their liberality. My most anxious wish is to hold Peru my debtor for the feeble services that I have consecrated to her cause.

To disdain the traits of generosity with which Congress honours me, is far from my intention; but I have never accepted similar rewards from Colombia, therefore it would be highly inconsistent to receive from the hands of Peruvians that which I have refused from those of my fellow citizens."

Whatever may be the motives which have induced this disinterestedness—it must be allowed to be very uncommon in the present age.

By our last private advices from London we learn that MR. HUME is exerting himself to carry a Bill through the House of Commons that will prove of great advantage to these colonies—Its object is to obtain a "free" transmission of Newspapers, both to and from the mother country, and all her colonies, in order that our friends at home may know what is going forward in every part of the empire without cost. This is surely a most desirable object.

We have been a good deal amused by some of the squibs which are afloat relative to the supposed injurious effects of the Canadian Land Company—one of the most ludicrous of which goes to assert that the freedom of our Electice Franchise will be thereby greatly endangered! For our own parts, if we can only be assured of more abundant capital, we shall be very willing to run all risks of that nature.

A "Canadian Land Agency" independent of, and hostile to, the "Company" is forming in London, on an extensive scale, in which MR. ASGELL, late of this town, seems to be taking an active part. A Prospectus, well written, and very elegantly printed, has been sent to us. The object which this new scheme professes to have in view is the "Investment of Capital on an original and approved Plan"—and for the disposal of Estates situated in the American Colonies of Great Britain. without subjecting either buyer or seller to any kind of risk! A reading room forms part of the establishment, which is furnished with Maps, Plans of Townships, published works on the Colonies, Official Reports, Acts of the Imperial and Provincial Parliaments, Colonial Newspapers, Magazines, and Price Currents, with every other article bearing upon the subject, and which may be desirable for the use of Gentlemen interested in the welfare of Canadas, and other Britans-Atlantic possessions.

Annual Subscribers to the Rooms, . . . 3 Guineas.
Quarterly, . do. . . . . 1 Guinea.

We shall endeavour to give some extracts from the pamphlet, together with a further detail of the plan, next week.—In the mean while we may add that corresponding agents are to be appointed in every district of these Provinces.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

The Catholic Relief Bill, was rejected in the House of Lords May 17th, on its second reading, by a majority of 48, (178 to 130.) This decision produced a considerable sensation.

The Globe and Traveller remarks, that "though the bill was rejected, it was supported by a majority of the higher ranks of the hereditary nobility."

A meeting of the English Catholic Association was held in London on the 21st, to express their ideas on the subject of the rejection of the Catholic relief bill The Duke of Norfolk was in the chair, and the meeting was addrssed by Mr. O'Connell

Perpetual Motion —Mr. William Sturgeon, of Woolwich, has shown that a magnetic bar, mounted freely on its axis, passing through its two poles, and in this state subject to currents of electricity, passing from its equator or middle point, towards each point, is thereby caused to revolve on its axis.

Hydrophobia —Dr. Fayerman, of Norwich, has published a case of the cure of hydrophobia in a patient named Charles Roberts, a strong man, aged 42, who was quite raving. It was effected by the use of superacetate of lead (Goulard's Extract) which he administered in doses of from 5 to 10 drops, on lumps of sugar, accompanied by bleeding.

Dentrifice.—Take sage and salt, of each a like quantity, and pound them together; then bake the mixture till it be hard, and make a fine powder, thereof, then therewith rub the teeth evenings and mornings, and it will take away all yellowness.

WELSH ANTIQUITIES.

We copy the following from the Carmarthen Journal:—

Valuable Historical Antique —Mr. HOLFORD, of Kilwyn, had upon a part of his estate, at a considerable distance from the mansion, a pyramidal stone, of prodigious magnitude, which he was desirous of removing near the house, but was deterred from the attempt by its apparent impracticability. In his absence, Mr. Holford, jun. with the view of giving his father an agreeable surprise, upon his return, collected a great number of the neighbouring tenantry, to essay its removal. The whole latent pressure of earth having been removed, a team of five and twenty horses were put to, and succeeded, with some difficulty, in dislodging this ponderous mass from its site, and exposed to view a tablet, with the following inscription:—

A PEWL A BRECEIb Odd un yvan
hon hyd FLWdd An Ad Xxviii
AG ELim AP O Wen Goch
ALA ddwyd AC—CAddwydunman
oxco f rnecthy onift 1604.

Which, when translated, we take to be "St. Paul preached on this spot, about the year of our Lord 48;" and "Elim ap Owen Goch, suffered martyrdom, and was buried in the same place, for preaching Christ, 1604." This is an antique of considerable importance in a historical point of view, determining as far as such evidence can, the hypothesis of our Learned Diocesan—that St. Paul preached the Gospel in Britain When this inscription was made does not appear, but even admitting it was as late as the early part of the 17th century, it shews the existence of a tradition to that effect, or of some historical record of which this tablet is probably a transcript From the distinctness of the date we are inclined to think the latter, and that our ancestors were desirous of transmitting this interesting fact to posterity is apparent, from the immense labour which must have attended the sepulture of this tablet. We congratulate the principality upon the discovery of this ancient rule; and we congratulate the Bishop of St. David's upon the discovery of this strong corroborating evidence, that Great Britain (aye, that Carmarthenshire) is within the limits of St. Clements "Eis to terma t es Lusons"—a point for which his Lordship had contended long and earnestly, and, as we think, successfully. The discovery of this interesting tablet determined Mr. Holford to examine a cairn or tumulus, also upon his property, the result of which was the discovery of two earthen vases; one of which, through the carlessness of the workmen, was broken; the other, in which were human bones, was preserved Under these also was found a tablet, with an inscription, partly Welsh and partly corrupt Latin, of which the following is a transcript:—

Hic JACET iN KAIRN hoN
Co Rpvs Lvprs
DA Escop TRECASTELL
Llosecd AD. 427

This bears the date of the fifth century, and is inscribed to the memory of Lupus, Bishop of Trecastle, whose remains it is supposed they contain. Both those discoveries were made in the parish of Monthvey and if an examination was set on generally in the principality, we are sanguine that many valuable antiques may be rescued from oblivion, and that the cause of history would be materially benefited by the recovery We should have observed, that in digging up the tablet which records St. Paul's preaching in this island, human bones and ashes were found.—The pyramidal stone (one of the meini hirion alluded to in Archdeacon Beynon's address at the opening of the Cymreigyddon Meeting in our hall,) was formerly surrounded with its hedge Since its deportation to the lawn at Kilwyn, part of it has been polished, and it proves to be a block of red marble, beautifully variegated with blue veins. The farm on which the stone stood, was formerly called Gelly-maen, obviously deriving its name from the stone The other inscription, it will be seen, records the martyrdom of Elim ap Owen Goch, for preaching Christ.

Foreign Intelligence.

GREECE.

We have received by the Brig Clio, Smyrna papers to the 18th of April. We have not room to day for extracts. The following memorandum which was handed to Capt Goodwin, on the day on which he sailed by a merchant of Smyrna, furnishes the latest news from that quarter.

"From our latest accounts from Morea, it appears the Egyptian expedition had effected the landing of about 14,000 troops; two actions had occurred before Navarin and Calamata in which the Greeks had been successful, and had taken a great number of prisoners The Greek fleet has sailed from Hydra, to the amount of about 40 sail, in quest of them, and it was expected an action between the two fleets would soon occur.—A brig of war and some other vessels had been taken by the advanced ships of the Greek squadron. Patras was closely besieged by land and blockaded by sea; a French ship of war just arrived here, had been ordered off by the Greek squadron, and not allowed to enter. President Conduriotti was there in person Gen. Colocotroni and his party suspected of treason was closely confined at Hydra to await their trial The Samiots have sent a deputation to Hydra for succour of some ships, as they expect an attack from the Ottoman fleet which was granted to them. The Ottoman fleet have partly come out from Constantinople. A squadron of Algerines are daily expected in the Archipelago, against the Greeks; great preparations are making by the Turks to enter the Morea at all points. The Greeks were also making great preparations to meet them —Boston Repy.

The Courier of the 14th contains the following remarks:—

"We feel it proper to recall the attention of our readers to the official information which we yesterday gave relating to the affairs of Greece —This document may be considered as the most important, because it tends to allay the fears expressed upon this subject, by a morning paper. It appeared by our news of yesterday, that the Greeks had obtained a decisive victory over the troops landed at Modon, and that the Greek fleet had actually sailed. From the same authentic source, we further learn, that the Greek Deputies in London have information from Zante down to the 16th April, which is several days subsequent to the unfavourable reports alluded to, and it makes no mention of them, or of any thing that, in the slightest degree, corroborates them."

Athens, Feb 28, 1825.

"Ulysses has promised the Turks that as soon as the Albanians, whom he expects from Larissa, shall arrive, he will march against Athens to subdue it. A letter received here from Condura, announces that the Turks to the number of 7000 have entered Thebes Some people deny this intelligence altogether, and endeavour to quiet the minds of the public by the assurance, that the only foundation for it is, that there are 2000 Albanians who have arrived in Eubia to reinforce the garrison of Negropont.

"I wrote to you that the Ipseriots had obtained from the Greek government, permission to build a city at the Pirœus, and for this purpose, they have already measured the circumference of the rampart they mean to erect on the foundations of the ancient walls. In making these excavations, they have discovered the position and vestiges of the ancient gates. But alas, in a short time, we shall have to think of something else besides building a city. If Ulysses falls upon Athens with the Albanians, there will remain to us nothing but the sad alternative of taking refuge in the Acropolis, with the risk of being starved, or of saving ourselves miserably at Salamis, where we shall be within the reach of the Turkish fleets

"I do not even know what dependence we can place on the garrison of the citadel where there are no Albanians, and which is entirely composed of strangers, entirely devoted to Ulysses. What interest can they have in fighting for us and exposing themselves to the severest privations and to the greatest dangers."

Thebes and Athens had been relieved from their apprehensions by the departure of the 2000 Albanians for Negropont. It appears that the Turks will not set until the Pacha who commands in Albania shall be ready to advance for the Gulf of Lepanto. The Egyptian fleet is blockaded in the Bay of Modon. The Greeks have never felt more confidence.

Letters had reached London from Zante, dated as late as the 27th April, which confirm the former accounts of the defeat of Ibrahim Pacha before Navarin, in his operations against that place, he lost a considerable part of his troops, together with the whole of his baggage and artillery; and we may now regard his expedition as having wholly failed. Beyond this gratifying intelligence, nothing of importance transpired yesterday.

Letters from Trieste of the 5th of May, in the Augsburg Gazette, confirm the defeat of the troops of Ibrahim Pacha in the Morea. It was on the 27th March that the Greeks attacked the Egyptian troops, who were entrenched under the walls of Modon, and entirely destroyed them This victory has decided the fate of the expedition of Ibrahim Pacha. Several European officers who commanded those troops fell into the hands of the Greeks, and have been sent to Napoli de Romania.

A letter from Corfu of the 11th ult. states that an agreement has been entered into between the Turkish Government and the Pacha of Egypt, by which the latter is to receive for 50 years the Revenue of the Morea, in the event of his being able to effect the conquest of that country from the Greeks.

MEXICO.

A Paris paper states, that Ferdinand is willing to recognize the independence of Mexico, on condition that his brother the Infant Don Francisco de Paulo shall be placed on the throne, under the protection of Spain M. Vallejo has been despatched to Milan, on a mission to the Emperor of Austria, with this project.

UNITED STATES.

GEORGIA LEGISLATURE.

State Legislature.—In the House of Representatives, on the 6th instant, Mr Lumpkin, from the Select Committee, to whom was referred so much of the communication of the Governor, as relates to the improper interference of the United State's Government, with our domestic affairs, presented the following report and resolution:—

"The Committee to whom was referred so much of the Governor's Message as relates to the disposition which has so often, latterly, unhappily evinced itself in the different branches of the general government to control the domestic affairs, and to intermeddle with and to endanger the peace, the repose and the union of the Southern States, after deliberating on the subject with the deepest feelings of sorrow and regret, have to proclaim, that the hour is come, or is rapidly approaching, when the states from Virginia to Georgia, from Missouri to Louisiana most confederate, and as one man, say to the Union—we will no longer submit our retained rights to the snivel ing insinuations of bad men on the floor of Congress—our constitutional rights to the dark and strained constructions of designing men upon judicial branches; that we protest the doctrine and disclaim the principle of unlimited submission to the general government.

The great objects of the American Union were as simple in practice as beautiful in theory; they were as easily understood as they were important; the relations with foreign nations were confided to the United Government. The powers necessary to the protection of the confederated states from enemies without, and from enemies within alone were given. All others were retained to the several states as separate and sovereign, and must not be usurped by construction—legislative, executive, or judiciary

When from 1770 to 1776 the government of Britain was levying a war of restriction upon Boston and the north, no narrow feeling, no unworthy suspicions, no sectional jealousies were harboured in the bosoms of the men of the south, but with one voice and with simultaneous impulse from Virginia to Georgia, they united their fate with their colonial brethren. When from 1801 to 1811 the mighty powers of France and England, in all things else hostile to each other, combined to drive from the seas of the world the ships and the commerce of the northern states, the men of the south did not meanly stoop to calculate the cost, but resolving that the wrongs of a part were the wrongs of the whole American family, proclaimed defiance to both, and conquered, and won on the mountain wave, and in the marshes of the south the freedom of the trade of the world

These are the feelings we brought into the confederacy; with these we shall leave it, if unprincipled men prosper in the unholy work of demolishing the noble, the august, the splendid fabric of our Union

The states of the south will convey the products of a fertile soil and genial climes to the markets of the world. The world will open wide its arms to receive them. Let our northern brethren then, if there is no peace in Union, if the compact has become too heavy to be longer borne, in the name of all the mercies find peace among themselves. Let them continue to rejoice in their self righteousness; let them bask in their own elysium, while they depict all south of the Potomac, as hideous reverse. As Athens, as Sparta, as Rome was, we will be, they held slaves we hold them. Let the north then form national roads for themselves, let them guard with Tariffs their own interest, let them deepen their public debt until an high minded of aristocracy shall rise out of it. We want none of all these blessings. But in the simplicity of the patriarchal government, we would still remain master and servant under our own vine, and our own fig tree, and confide for safety upon Him, who of old time, looked down upon the state of things without wrath

Be it therefore resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia in General Assembly met.— That we concur most heartily in the sentiments on this subject, communicated by His Excellency the Governor, that "having exhausted the argument, we will stand by our arms," " and for the support of this determination we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honour."

Be it further resolved, That His Excellency the Governor be requested to form a copy of the resolutions to the Executive of each state in the Union respectively, with a request that they lay the same before the several Legislatures, and that His Excellency do also forward a like copy to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, instructing the former, and requesting the latter to co operate in all national measures, having a tendency to thwart the objects herein deprecated."

The above report and resolutions were read and laid on the table. It was understood that when they were called up a substitute would be offered for them.

[From the Missouri Advocate, May 13]

The Fur Trade.—Our anxious wishes follow the expedition led by General Atkinson to the Upper Missouri for the pacification of the Indians and the protection of our fur trade The treaties of trade and friendship expected to be concluded by the General and Major O'Fallon, are among the measures of first rate importance for the people of Missouri. Our fur trade beyond the Mandan Villages is now lost to our citizens and monopolized by the British, and the recovery of it will depend upon the success of the expedition which now ascends the river. The value of this trade is but little known in the United States Even in its present almost ruined state, when the rich region of the Rocky Mountains is monopolized by the British, it still affords a lucrative branch of commerce, and gives employment to a great number of our citizens.—The exports, for the last year from this city were worth 270,000 dollars, and consist of—Deer skins, pounds weight, 250,000; Beaver fur, do. 250,00.; Buffalo, robes, number, 17,000; Bear skins, do 8000; Otter skins, do 4,500; Racoon, do 25,000; Muskrat, do 81,000; Mink, do. 1000; Cat, Fox and Wolf, do. 1,5000; Marten and Fisher, do 4000.

But while we look at this list with some degree of gratification, how much indignation it excites to see the amount taken by the British, a great part of which is obtained from our own territories. A late exposition of their trade shows it to be worth, one year with another, a million of dollars, and to consist of the following skins—Beaver, 120,000; Marten. 30,000; Muskrat, 20,000; Fox, 5000; Otter, 4000; Bear, 2000; Mink, 2000. Buffalo, 5000; Lynx, 6000; Wolf, 4000; Elk, 1000; Deer, 12,000.

In trading with the Indians within our territories, the British have the advantage of introducing their goods without payment of duties This is equal to 33½ per cent When Capt. Pike was at the head of the Mississippi in 1804, he ascertained that we lost 26,000 dollars duties annually by smuggling on that frontier.—The amount must be much greater at this time on the Upper Missouri. A military post at the Yellow Stone would more than save the difference of price in subsisting it, by preventing smuggling in that quarter. But the greatest smuggling is now done up the Columbia river. The British ships enter the mouth of that river, and send their goods up to the mountains, and transport their furs back upon the same route to China Hence another reason for establishing a military post and naval station at the mouth of the Columbia.—The interest of the fur trade alone requires that St. Louis should be made a port of entry.

BUFFALO.

It is stated in a pamphlet recently published in relation to this place, that there is not a gunsmith or shipwright in the village. Ship carpenters would undoubtedly do well there. It is also stated that wheat is never offered for sale at this place—it is only a staple in the shape of flour. Wind mills and steam grist mills would answer a good purpose there.

This village has 1050 tons of shipping. It has 2412 inhabitants We recommend the purchase of the pamphlet from our friend Mr. Shaw, the bookseller.

The St Josephs—From all that we can gather from the surveyors, who have been recently employed in the vicinity of the head waters of the St. Joseph's we are led to believe that country to be inferior to no district in this territory. Mr. Brookfield, who has been surveying in ranges two and three west, townships 7, 8, 9, and fractions 10 south, in these two ranges, informs us that the land is principally rolling, the soil black and exceedingly rich, and the country watered by innumerable streams and small lakes. It is generally well timbered with white and rock oak, whitewood, maple, beech, lynn black walnut, hickory, butternut, upland, elm, blue, white and black ash, &c.—under growth, ironwood, moose, spicewood, grapevines, hazel, &c. On the streams are many fine bottoms and valuable sites The north part of this district is about seven miles south of the great Chicago trail.—Detroit Gazette.

[From the New Haven Herald]

Extraordinary Insect.—The Corooy, Queen Beetle or Queen Bug, from Havanna, is still alive, at the Museum in Church street.

This astonishing insect is about one inch and a quarter in length, and what is wonderful to relate, she carries by her side, just above her waist, two brilliant lamps, which she lights up at pleasure, with the solar phosphorus, furnished her by nature. These little lamps do not flash and glimmer, like that of the Fire Fly, but give as steady a light as the gas light, exhibiting two perfect spheres, as large as a minute pearl, which affords light enough in the darkest night, to ensble one to read prin by them On carrying her into a large closet, in the day time, she immediately illuminates her lamps, and instantly extinguishes them on coming again into the light. But language cannot describe the beauty and sublimity of these lucid orbs in miniature, with which nature has endowed the queen of the insect, kingdom.

The Dog Billy—On Tuesday night the Cock-pit, in Tufton street, Westminster, exhibited an almost unparalleled scene, when the celebrated Dog Billy, whose wonder has been repeatedly recorded in the Sporting Magazine, for a bet of twenty sovereigns, exhibited to a multitude, at least two thousand, the chief part of whom were Amateurs well known in the sporting circles —There were no less than twenty carriages in Tufton street, a sight, perhaps never before witnessed there. The match was, that this extraordinary dog would kill one hundred rats in twelve minutes; and the bet was made by Dew, the proprietor, but bets to the amount of several hundreds were pending. The floor of the Pit was whitened, and the whole of the rats at once let loose. Dew and Cheetham, the rat-killers, were the only persons admitted into the Pit. The company were arranged in the gallery, and had a perfect view of the whole. The space which the dog had to exhibit in was 12 feet square. When let loose, he viewed them with an eager eye; but, on time being announced, and the signal being given, he went to work. The slaughter was dreadful; and in seven minutes and a half they were all slaughtered in heaps, amid loud cheers; and in nine minutes his mouth was washed with brandy, and the slaughtered taken away. The dog was decorated with fancy ribbands, and £60 was offered for him upon the spot. His master declined the offer, but offered to back him £50 against any dog in England.

New Zoological Society of London.—A prospectus (says the Literary Gazette) has been circulated under the auspices of Sir H. Davy, the object of which is the formation of a society for the promotion of Zoology, on a similar plan to the Horticultural Society, for the improvement of gardening. It is rather a curious project, and proposes to have all the fish of the waters, all the birds of the air, and all the beasts of the field naturalized in and about London.

ON SLAVERY.

[COWPER]

Hey, ah! what wish can prosper, or what prayer,
For merchants rich in cargoes of despair,
Who drive a loathsome traffic, gage and span,
And buy the muscles and the bones of man?
The tender ties of father, husband, friend,
All bonds of nature, in that moment end;
And each endures, while yet he draws his breath,
A stroke as fatal as the scythe of death.
The sable warrior, frantic with regret
Of her he loves, and never can forget,
Loses in tears the far-receding shore,
But not the thought that they must meet no more:
Deprived of her and freedom at a blow,
What has he left that he can yet forego?
Yes, to deep sadness ruliently resign'd,
He feels his body's bondage in his mind;
Puts off his generous nature; and, to suit
His manners with his state, puts off the brute.
Oh most degrading of all ills that wait
On man, a mourner in his best estate!
All other sorrows virtue may endure,
And find submission more than half a cure;
Grief is itself a medicine, and bestow'd
T' improve the fortitude that bear a load;
To teach the wanderer, as his woes increase,
The path of wisdom—all whose paths are peace.
But Slavery!—virtue dreads it as her grave;
Patience itself is meanness in a slave;
Or if the will and sovereignty of God
Bid suffer it awhile, and kiss the rod;
Wait for the dawning of a brighter day,
And snap the chain the moment when you may.
Nature imprints upon whate'er we see,
That has a heart and life in it—BE FREE!
The beasts are charter'd—neither age nor force
Can quell the love of freedom in a horse:
He breaks the cord that held him at the rack,
And, conscious of an unincumbered back,
Snuffs up the morning air, forgets the rein,
Loose fly his forelock and his ample mane;
Responsive to the distant neigh he neighs,
Nor stops till, overleaping all delays,
He finds the pasture where his fellows graze.

LOWER CANADA.

From Neilson's Quebec Gazette.

The large timber ship the Baron of Renfrew, was safely launched on Saturday last, the 25th, at one o'clock in the afternoon She had, in the attempt on the Saturday previous, stopped on her ways, owing to the grease being consumed by the fire. She went majestically into the water, and afterwards drove up with the flowing tide near to the town. On the tide ebbing, the Hercules tow-boat took her down the channel of the St Lawrence north of the Island of Orleans, where she was anchored a little to the north west of the anchorage ground of the Columbus The Baron Renfrew looks much better in the water than the Columbus did, her breadth being ten feet greater. She exactly corresponds in shape with the Columbus, but in upon the whole superior in many respects to her. It is understood that she will not sail before the end of July

Measurement of the Baron of Renfrew.

Length 309 feet.
Breadth 60 do.
Depth 38 do. internally, 57 externally.
Anchor 4 1-2 Tons.
Tonnage 5,858 Tons.
From Taffrail Rail to Keel 50 feet.
Mainmast above Deck, 75 feet
Main Yard 75 feet. Bowsprit 60 feet.
Depth of Water when loaded 24 feet.
Length of Taller 28 fathoms, and 14 inches diameter
Main Cable 27 inches 100 fathoms, and weight 126 Cwt.
Chain Cable 120 fathoms, links 14 inches long 7 inches over, of 2 inch Bar Iron.
Cargo on board when launched. 4000 tons Timber.
Cargo, from 9 500 to 9,000 tons
30 times round the Capstan make a mile.
9 times round the Vessel make a mile
Five times the surface of deck equal to one acre.
200 tons timber to build her.
12 ton Oakum
125 tons Iron.
Is 10 feet wider and 5 feet deeper than the Columbus.

Comparative statement of arrivals, &c at the Port of Quebec for the periods ending the 30th June 1824 and 1825.

Years.	Vessels.	Tonnage.	Settlers.
1824	311	80,556	2,961
1825	291	83,780	4,594

The difference in the number of ships and tonnage for the two years is very trifling, and it is not probable that the proportion will be greater at the end of next month.—In settlers there is an increase the present year over the last of 1,633, and late accounts from Ireland state that several vessels had had on for passengers; 2 000 of the number already arrived were sent out by Government.

Vessels cleared 235 —In port 115.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL R. B. FEARON.—It will be fresh in the recollection of many of our readers, that this is the Officer who commanded that part of the 21st Regt. which had lately so narrow an escape from being burnt in the Duke of Kent East Indiaman, when on their way to India, and who for his resolute conduct upon that occasion has been distinguished with several marks of his Sovereign's approbation. There are other peculiar circumstances in the life of Lt Col Fearon, not unnoticing notice He is the son of Lt. Col George Fearon, who former ly commanded the 31st Regt. and was afterwards killed when acting as Dep'y Qr Master General in the West Indies under General Abercrombie The present subject of this notice is a Canadian by birth, was born in Quebec in 1783 When nearly two years of age he had a miraculous escape from a tame bear at Fort St Johns, in this neighbourhood The servant took him in his arms, as he had been in the habit of doing to one the bear; and on presenting the animal with a piece of bread to make him sit up for the child's amusement, the ferocious creature (which had been previously teased into a rage by some person) made a spring at the servant and dashed the child out of his arms with his paw The servant started back, and the child was only saved from being torn to pieces by the timely interposition of another soldier who happened to be upon the spot, and luckily pulled him up beyond the reach of the chain, at the instant the bear was going, with open jaws to attack him. When only 14 years of age he was a Lieutenant in his Uncle, Captain John McCombing a Company in the 31st Regt at the storming of the Visor in the Island of St. Lucy, where nearly half his regiment was killed or wounded, he escaped with a slight wound Same that period he has served in almost every army on the continent and in the mediterranean since 1796, and never been again wounded. It is rikewise a singular circumstance that he was born in the 31st Regt. and has never left it; but fairly fought his way to his present rank, and is we understand the only man now in the Regt who left Canada with it in 1797.

A mission to London to be undertaken, when 1000 shares of £100 each are subscribed for, and an instalment of one pound per share to pay expenses; to be borne by the Company, it formed, out of first instalment.

No. II

Is the Prospectus of the Company:

It states, that the Land Company already formed, not having extended its operations to Lower Canada, although it offers perhaps greater inducements than Upper Canada, it is necessary for the prosperity of Lower Canada that a Company should be formed for it.

The Capital to be One million sterling

It enters into the causes which have retarded the settlement of the Townships, "rich in soil, pure water and healthy atmosphere," viz: "The reserves, want of roads, discouragement of American loyalist emigrants, prejudices of Canadians, and facility offered by the water communication to ready and to proceed up the River. It states the present population of the townships at 30,000 souls composed of American Loyalists and their descendants, and British Emigrants, that their improvements are of great value, and that under the operation of the Road Laws, they will have good roads to Quebec and Montreal in the course of two summers, they made a Settlement and one of From which he has seven miles of postage, from the present settlement to Vermount to the St. Lawrence, and that a canal from Boston by the Connecticut to the Vermount line is now under survey.

It also mentions the vast extent of cultivable lands north of the St. Lawrence; which may be laid open to settlement by a road from the Jacques Cartier to the Ottawa, besides the lands on the Saguenay, &c.

That the price of lands in the Townships, from the vast quantity of the commodity, has been merely nominal; that present circumstances must raise the price, and that now is the time to buy.

It estimates the Clergy Reserves at	800,000 acres
Crown Ditto	800,000
Ungranted Lands in Surveyed Townships,	2,000,000
Ungranted in Townships not Surveyed,	1,000,000
	4,000,000 acres

These, it is supposed, may be purchased at
2s. 6d per acre, or £500,000
Outlay for communications, &c. 100,000
General objects, 250,000
That these lands may be sold at 7s 6d per acre, one fourth down, the remainder in three years, at interest; last year's interest £1 13 9, for 100 acres

The profit in a township of 33,600 acres is taken at 27,600 dollars, on an outlay of 25,000 dollars

When all the Lands in a Township belong to the Company, the profit will be much greater.

The Company engages:

10 To take all the ungranted Lands of the Crown, with the whole or half of the Crown and Clergy Reserves at a valuation.

To build a Protestant Church and a School House, and a Grist and Saw Mill, in each Township, where the Company may have one half of the soil

The same in all Townships where they may have all the Crown and Clergy Reserves, without any other right of soil

To open Roads, build Bridges, through each Township.

To settle in whole or in part in ( ) years after the Grant passed.

To be paid, one third on receiving Grant, one third in one year, remainder in two. No year's payment to exceed £30,000 Currency.

The Government to engage,

To incorporate the Company.

To grant the lands free of expense.

To put the Company in possession.

No III.

Subscribers of Shares of £100 each.

YEAS.—Messrs Atkinson, Gordon, and C. Jones.—3.

NAYS.—Messrs. Brandby, Beasly, Clark, Coleman, Hamilton, Hornor, D. Jones, LeBerry, Lyons, Mattheus, McBride, McCell, Morris Peterson, Playter, Randal, Thompson, Thomson, Wilkinson and White.—20.

The Question was decided in the negative by a majority of 17 and lost accordingly

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Ancaster Boundary Bill was read the third time.

Mr. D JONES moved that the Bill might pass, and that it should be entitled, "An Act to provide for ascertaining and establishing the division line between the Townships of Ancaster and Flamborough West, in the District of Home"

On which the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs Atkinson, Clark, Coleman, Gordon, C. Jones, D. Jones, LeBerry, Matthews, McBride, McCell, Morris Peterson, Playter, Randal, Thompson, Thomson, Wilkinson, and White.—16

NAYS.—Messrs. Beardsly, Beasly, Hamilton, Hornor, Lyons,

Peterson, Playter, and Wilson.—8

The Question was carried in the affirmative by a majority of 8 and the Bill was signed and sent up to the Hon. the Legislative Council for concurrence.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Prince Edward division bill was read the third time.

Mr. COLEMAN from the Committee to whom was referred the petition of the Inhabitants of the Town of Bellville, reported a Bill founded on the said petition

The Report was ordered to be received, and the Bill was read the first time

Mr. COLEMAN moved, that the bill for establishing a Police in the Town of Bellville be read a second time to-morrow, and that the forty first rule be dispensed with as far as rein as to the said bill.

Which was lost under the 42d Rule

On motion of Mr. COLEMAN, the Bellville Police Bill was ordered to be read a second time on the following Monday.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Commercial Intercourse Bill was read the third time

On motion of the ATTY. GENERAL, the Intercourse Bill was ordered to be recommitted that day

Mr PETERSON moved, that the following be added as a Rider to the Bill for the division of the Midland District.

"Provided always, and be it in ther enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or person administering the Government shall not declare the said County of Prince Edward a separate District, until the Inhabitants thereof shall have erected a good and sufficient Gaol and Court House in or adjacent to the Village of Hollowell in said County

Which was carried.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the House went into Committee of Supply.

The Chairman reported progress and obtained leave to sit again the next day

Mr. BEARDSLY from the Committee to wait on His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the Address of this House on the subject of fees on grants of land, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency had been pleased thereto to make the following reply,

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I am restrained by an instruction from the King's Government from furnishing, without His Majesty's special permission, any account of the territorial Revenue of the Crown, except to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury. I will, however, submit your Address to His Majesty and it will afford me pleasure if I shall receive the royal Command to supply, in the ordinary detailed form, such information as will most satisfactorily correct any erroneous opinions, that may have been entertained, with respect to the amount of that Revenue and its appropriation.

In the mean time I will take upon me to furnish you with the general information that upon the fund to which your inquiries are directed, there is charged an annual payment of one thousand pounds Sterling, being a commutation for fees which were once received by the Lieutenant Governors of this Colony, and that the whole amount of receipts arising from the grant or lease of the Crown Lands has never yet sufficed to pay the necessary expenses of gratuitous grants to the descendants of Loyalists and others, and to meet the annual charge above mentioned; which is the only portion of the Lieutenant Governor's stipend derived from any source within this Province.

I must further inform you that it is chiefly to this source of Revenue that His Majesty's Government looks for the future means of relieving the Treasury of the Mother Country from the burthen of the heavy payments annually made to the Indian tribes for cessions of territory to the Crown; without which it would have been impossible to provide for that extensive line of emigration which has proved so beneficial to the Province

The Prince Edward division bill was then read a third time passed, and sent up to the Honourable the Legislative Council for concurrence.

Mr MORRIS from the Committee to wait on his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor with the address of this House for information respecting the Canada Land Company, reported delivering the same, and that His Excellency has been pleased to make thereto the following reply

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The Canada Company, to which your address refers, has not yet been incorporated. Information has been transmitted to me of the terms on which it was contemplated to constitute a company to be called "the Canada Land Company" but I do not feel at liberty to communicate that information without the express sanction of His Majesty, on which point I shall not fail to apply immediately for His Majesty's pleasure.

I have, however, no hesitation in making upon me to state to you generally that the objects of the intended Company will be to purchase waste and unlocated lands in this Province, and to settle, clear, and dispose of such lands, together with the subsidiary objects of making advances of capital to settlers, opening and improving roads, and other internal communications and promoting the cultivation of such articles as can advantageously be exported from the Province

I propose to you the early of a commission under the great seal of this Province, issued by His Majesty's command under which certain Commissioners have been appointed with reference to the objects of the proposed company

Mr. HAMILTON moved, that the reply of His Excellency to the address of this House respecting the terms on grants of land be taken into consideration in a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow

In amendment Mr. GORDON moved, that after the word "It" and in the original motion the words "will be duly" be inserted

Which was carried.

The original question as amended was then put and carried.

Adjourned.

FRIDAY, 8th April 1825.

Leave of absence was granted to Messrs Burnham and Bidwell

Leave was granted to bring up the following petitions, of Mr. Matthews, complaining of certain grievances respecting the sale of confiscated estates—of Samuel Street Wilmot, complaining of the ineligibility of Charles Fothergill, Esquire, a member of the House—and of Smith and others respecting a pier at Cobourg

Agreeably to the order of the day the Welland Canal bill was read a third time.

Mr. MORRIS moved, that the Welland Canal Bill should be then recommitted.

In amendment Mr. ROLPH moved, that after the word "that" all be expunged, and the following words inserted "Messrs Clark, Hamilton, McBride and Morris be a Committee to report such amendments as they think advisable to the bill on the Welland Canal, and that they make their report this day."

On which the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows.

YEAS.—Messrs. Beardsly, Hamilton, Lefferty Matthews, Rolph, Randal, Walsh and Wilson.—8

NAYS.—Messrs. Atkinson, Beasly, Clark, Coleman, Gordon, Hornor, Ingersol, C. Jones, D. Jones, McBride, McDonald, Morris, Peterson, Playter, Scollick, Thompson, Walker, Wilkinson and White.—19.

The question was decided in the negative by a majority of 11 and lost accordingly

On the original question the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows.

That in the opinion of your Committee a pier or breakwater, sufficient to shelter Vessels which might be induced to put in through stress of weather, as well as to secure to them a safe and convenient place for loading or unloading their Cargoes, at or near the village of Colborne, in the Newcastle District, is a very desirable object, and will be more especially so should the proposed Canal from the harbour of the Presquille to the head of the Bay of Quinte be completed, as Vessels passing up the Lake through said Canal, will be, by that means, with a trifling improvement in the Big Bay, in the Township of Wellington, furnished with harbours of shelter at convenient distances between the Presquille and York

Your Committee further beg leave to state, as their opinion, that if the petitioners or others be edied by such improvements can raise by sub cription, or otherwise, a sum sufficient with the aid of one thousand Pounds from the Provincial Treasury, to complete the object alluded to, it may be expedient, should the funds of the Province be found sufficient to admit, to grant the petitioners the said sum of one thousand pounds, upon ample security being given for the completion of the work.

Editorial Commentary.

We are sorry to hear that the great ship Columbus has founde red at Sea—Crew saved, her cargo of 10,000 tons was contracted for in Nova Scotia.

We are obliged to postpone our promised extracts from the prospectus of the Canadian Land Agency Institution" of London.

The communication of "Scrutator" on the subject of the Orange Society, and the unprovoked calumny which the Canadian Freeman, notwithstanding his pretended neutrality and aversion to party, has thought proper to shower upon his brave and loyal countrymen, is under consideration; but we fear it is too long for insertion in the Register. It is a pertinent and sensible production, and not at all too severe a retaliation on the unjustifiable attack which has been made on a few unoffending individuals; and, if we decline publishing, it will be only on account of its length. We have been informed, and we believe truly, that there was not a single Orangeman in the procession which excited so much spleen in the Freeman. According to request, the toasts that were drank on the 12th instant are given under our domestic head.

On Thursday last a public meeting, respectably attended, was held for the purpose of adopting resolutions relative to the building of a new STEAM BOAT, of a superior description, which it is intended shall ply between York, Burlington Bay, and Niagara. A committee of management is formed, and Eighty-eight shares, at $100 each, are already taken up. The cost is estimated at £6,500 with an Engine of 40 horse-power.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Sir BENJAMIN BLOOMFIELD has been created an Irish peer, by the title of Lord BLOOMFIELD.

Unlawfulness of War.—A most singular pamphlet has just been published, under the title of "A Letter addressed to the King, by Thos. Thrush, on resigning his commission as a captain in the Royal Navy, on the ground of the unlawfulness of war."

The Catholics.—We are sorry to perceive that the spirit of religious persecution is becoming prevalent in France. This is unfortunate for the friends of the Catholic Bill.

The news of the rejection of the Catholic Bill was celebrated at BEDFORD, for which Mr. WHITBREAD was so long a Member, with great satisfaction

Several addresses have been presented to the DUKE of YORK from various parts of the Kingdom, thanking him in strong terms for his opposition to the Catholic claims. His celebrated speech has been printed in letters of gold, and is sold by all the Booksellers. Who then will say, the public voice is in favour of these claims?

The townof MANCHESTER was illuminated in consequence of the decision of the House of Lords against the Catholics.

The Manchester Petition against the Catholic Emancipation Bill to the House of Lords had 43,028 signatures attached to it. It measured 435 feet, and weighed 23lbs.

Ireland.—During the last year the following quantity of provisions was imported, from Ireland, at Liverpool: Beans and hams, 120,606, cwt.; beef and pork, 6399 Beans and hams, 120,606, cwt.; beef and pork, 6399 tierces and 17,070 barrels; butter, 179,904 cwt.; corn, 635,889 quarters; meal and flour, 240,349 cwt., spirits, 8943 gallons; sheep wool, 13,02,321 lbs.; cows and oxen, 25,025; horses, 632; sheep, 44,879; pigs, 25,120. The butter exported to Liverpool exceeded that to London in the number of 26,814 firkins.

If the linen manufactures in Ireland are, as said, on the decline, the weavers in that country have found other employment, which is rapidly increasing. In the year 1822,556 045 yards of cotton goods, of various kinds, exported from thence to England was thought an astonishing exertion; last year, the quantity had increased to 6,418 645 yards.

English Judges.—On the 20th of May a motion was made in the British House of Commons to increase the salaries of Judges as follows:—"The Judges of the Court of King's Bench, from 9000*l.* to 10,000*l.*; the Chief Justices of the Common Pleas, to 8000*l.*; Master of the Rolls, 7000*l.*; Chief Baron of the Exchequer, 7000*l.*; and the Vice Chancellor, to 6000*l*"

LONDON, May 21.

Discovery in the Pacific.—On Thursday, his Majesty's ship Blossom, Capt. F. W. Beechey, sailed upon her interesting voyage of discovery and survey in the Pacific.—After visiting Pitcairn island, Otaheite, Easter, and Friendly Islands, and settling, indisputably the position of all the Islands with which that neighbourhood abounds, we understand the Blossom is to proceed to Behring's Straits, and if the season admit of it, to proceed around Icy Cape, (which has not been effected since Capt. Cook's discovery,) along the northern shores of America towards Hacla and Fury Strait, for the purpose of falling in with Capt. Franklin or Capt Parry; and if Capt. Beechey finds the sea open, it is most likely that he will not omit so fortunate an opportunity of accomplishing this desirable object. We understand, also, that the Blossom is to complete the survey of the coast of America in such parts about Behring's Straits as are imperfectly known; and after having rendered Capt. Franklin the assistance he may require, she is to proceed entirely upon discovery, directing her route for such purpose towards those part of the Pacific which are the least known or frequented. She is furnished with a large supply of presents for the purpose of bartering with the islanders, and has on board a handsome present for the King of Otaheite and the King of the Sandwich Islands. The lords of the admiralty have appointed Mr. Tradescant Lay as naturalist to the expedition.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

From the London Sun, Monday Evening, May 16.

The French papers which arrived last night contain accounts of the reception of the Duke of Northumberland by the King of France. All honours usually offered to Ambassadors Extraordinary were extended to the Duke. Three of the royal carriages filled with Officers of the Court, proceeded to his Grace's Hotel, and returned with three other carriages, containing the Ambassador and his suite. The King received his Grace sitting on his Throne, and surrounded by his Officers of State. The following is extracted from the Monitor of Friday last:

PARIS, May 12.

To-day, after Mass, his Excellency the Duke of Northumberland, Ambassador Extraordinary from his Britannic Majesty, to be present at the King's Coronation, was presented to his Majesty and the Royal Family in a public audience.

The Duke of Ragusa, Major General of the Royal Guards, whom his Majesty had appointed to accompany the Ambassador, Baron La Live, and M. de Viviens, having repaired to his Excellency's Hotel, conducted him to the Tuileries in the royal carriages.

The Marquis D'eus Breze, Grand Master of the Ceremonies of France, Marquis de Hochecorses, Master of the Ceremonies, and Baron Saint Felix, and Viscount de Gedin, received the Ambassador at the foot of the grand staircase, and accompanied him to the audience

The Marquis de Riviere, Captain of the Gardes du Corps, received his Excellency at the door of the apartment of the Gardes who were under arms.

The King was on his Throne and the Dauphin on his right hand, and on his left the Duke of Orleans and the Duke of Bourbon, Prince of Conde, and surrounded by the great Officers of the Crown.

At the entrance of the Ambassador the King rose, and his Excellency having been presented to the King by Baron La Live, complimented his Majesty in these terms:—

"Sir.—I have the honour to appear before your Majesty charged with felicitations from the King my master on the approach of your Majesty's Coronation.

"In expressing the most ardent wishes for the prosperity of your Majesty, the King my master is equally induced by his generous principles, and by a cherished remembrance of a private friendship.

"I have also the orders of my King to express to your Majesty the wish which he constantly feels for the maintenance of the good understanding which exists between the two nations, and which is so essential to their mutual interests as to the general happiness of mankind"

After his compliment the Ambassador presented his credentials to the King, who gave them to Baron de Damas, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The King replied:—

"M. le Ambassador,—I receive with the more pleasure the expression of sentiments which you address to me in the name of his Britannic Majesty, as they are perfectly in unison with my own. I shall always remember with gratitude the proof of friendship which he gave me in times of misfortune I hope that no circumstance—no event, will ever trouble the union which on it to prevail between two nations made to esteem and love each other."

The audiences of the King and the Royal Family being finished, his Excellency was conducted back to the saloon of the Ambassadors, and thence to his hotel, with the same ceremonies as were observed in conducting him to the audience.

The Hereditary Prince of Schwartzenburg Sondushausen was presented to the King and Royal Family in a private audience.

At two o'clock the King gave a public audience to Sidi Mahmond, Envoy of the Bey of Tunis, who complimented his Majesty on his accession, and delivered his credentials. The same day the British Ambassador Extraordinary dined in the apartment of the Dauphin, at a table of 45 couverts

The diamond ornaments of the Order of the Garter to be worn by the DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND at the Coronation of the King of France, are estimated at 1,500,000 francs.

GREECE.

The Augsburg Gazette contains the following intelligence:—

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23

Alarming news has arrived from the Morea. Ibrahim Pacha is in a desperate situation; he is surrounded by the Greeks, who are hastening to the spot from all quarters The landing of the Egyptians in Greece has been a signal for a levy en masse. The electric spark has not a more speedy effect. The Captains of the Christian vessels arriving from the coasts of the Morea, consider Ibrahim as nearly ruined, but the Turks still flatter themselves that he will extricate himself from his embarrassment. We hear nothing of the army of Redsched Pacha, which was to penetrate into the Morea by land

THE CARACCAS.

Having a Journal lying before us, which gives an ample account of the state of Caraccas so late as the year 1822, we shall proceed to lay before our readers, as being a description of the actual condition of that rich and flourishing Republic by a recent witness, and up to so late a period We find it necessary to condense it, but shall retain (as much as possible) all the substantial and more valuable information

On the 7th of April, 1819, (having previously received a commission in the Patriot Cause of South Columbia), I arrived in the bay of San Griego in the island of Margarita, and disembarked the following day, and marched to Pampatar. The principal town, which I visited on the following day, is the city of Assumption, which is a handsome town and picturesquely situated. The island is very wild, but abounds in fruits The roads are merely passes, and are covered with the prickly pear, the thorns of which are horrible. The inhabitants are in a very wild state, and all either go barefooted, or wear sandals made of bullocks' hides. The Indians are numerous, and live by fishery. Both Europeans and Indians live on Indian corn and cassava, which, when dry, eats like saw dust, and when wet, like paste.

Having staid here about ten days, I sailed for Barcelona, a town in the Caraccas. We landed there the next, and found it a large town, with good houses, and a handsome church It is surrounded by gardens, and particularly by a thick wood of low bushes. There are a great number of small beaten tracks, scarcely perceptible, leading from the town into the country. The town is situated on a river, about six miles from the sea coast.—The river is rapid, and full of alligators. When I was there, there was a hot burning sun, but the country pleased me The town was full of cotton and hides, and appeared to enjoy a large trade. It is about the fourth town in the Caraccas, Caraccas being the first, La Guira the second, Porto Cabello the third, Maracaibo the fourth, and then Barcelona, Cumana, Coro, &c.

Some weeks afterwards, in the beginning of August, we marched to Cumana, and found the country in the highest state of cultivation and new and beautiful. Nothing wanting but peace and order, and abounding in tropical shrubs and flowers. We had crossed several mountains to reach it from Barcelona, and were astonished at the immense number of small monkies, of a light green colour, frolicking on the trees. We passed through Cumanacoma, and found it a considerable town, situated in a valley, and surrounded with mountains; the ground around it very fertile, and noted for its tobacco The country is very rich in sugar and Indian corn. We passed abundance of lime and pepper-trees, the pepper-tree growing wild every where. The tigers are extremely fierce and numerous, and my companions kept a good look out lest they should leap upon their horses. Nothing could exceed the beauty and fertility of the mountains; trees high and bushy, growing from the brow to the bottom, and rendering the roads a long and dark arcade through the whole descent.

On the 26th of August, 1819, we passed through Maturin, a very large town, situated on a river, and trading with Trinidad I was astonished at the immense number of rats and their large size This town is rich in mules and cattle, which it exports to the West Indies.

On the 28th of September I left Maturin for Angostura, and shall never forget the wild but rich and beautiful country through which I passed. The first portion of our journey, for two days, was through boundless savannahs, covered with thick herbage, and variegated with flowers. Our path was incessantly crossed by immense numbers of wild deer, white, black, and of every colour (red, green, yellow, &c.) few if any just above us. Sometimes we passed through woods, but more often amused with the frolics of the small monkies in the trees; at other times we had to walk with our guns on the rest, in order to be prepared for any tiger which might spring out of the thick shrubbery at our side It was extremely picturesque to hear in the woods or plains, as we frequently had to do, a bright, large, full orb moon over our heads, and thousands and ten thousands of animals in the wood, bellowing and screaming through the night, around us. But one or other of us was obliged to keep watch during the night for fear of the tigers. The Chickevis, or River Pig, greatly interested me: I saw five of them by the River Orenoco as I reached it. They were like sheep, and about the size As soon as they saw us, they ran into the water and disappeared

Whilst at Angostura, I had time to study the country, and the people; and though I must praise the country for its rich soil and beautiful scenery, I cannot speak so well of the inhabitants. I will here set down what I chiefly noticed. The Captain General of the Caraccas, now the Republic of Columbia, is about three times as large as England, Scotland, and Ireland together. It does not contain more than one million of inhabitants. It is divided into six provinces inclined to think not so many. It is divided into six provinces (the names of which are Venezuela, Cumana, Maracaibo, Varinas (the names of which are Venezuela, Cumana, Maracaibo, Varinas Guiana, and the Isle of Margaretta) The capital of Venezuela, and of the whole Captain-Generalship, is the city of Caraccas, which gives its name to the whole country.

The principal cities next to Caraccas are Guayra, Porto Cabello, Cumana, Maracaibo, Varinas, and Angostura. The principal rivers are the immense Orenoco, and the Apure which runs out of it. The produce of the country is sugar in vast quantities, cotton, indigo, coffee, cocoa, hides, and ten millions and an odd number of dollars, or about three millions pounds sterling I set this down from the Custom-House books, adding only what I the country for the amount of sugar, which is not included in the registers In peace time, namely, in 1796, the value of the exports reached the enormous sum of eighteen millions of dollars, or four millions and a half English.

In an expedition which I made up the Orenoco, myself and some other English were taken prisoners by the Royalists and were immediately sent to Guayra I was received very kindly, and had permission to return to England upon my parole not to serve again. I staid about two months afterwards in the country, which I employed in visiting the Caraccas and its neighbourhood.

I set off for Caraccas in the middle of January, 1822; the morning was very fine, but bright and cold Caraccas is fifteen English miles from Guayra, the road being over an exceeding high mountain; the summit of which is covered with clouds. It is wooded all the way up, and the road passes under the trees On reaching the top, I saw the town before me, and was really astonished at its beauty and magnitude. It did not disappoint me upon entering it.

I found it to be situated at the foot of the mountain over which I passed, having four or five streets, about a mile in length, running by the side of each other, and these intersected by cross streets There is one large square, and several smaller ones.—The houses are painted white outside, and shine beautifully in the morning and evening sun, and some of them are tastefully ornamented with carving work and paintings; but (under the frequency of earthquakes) they do not exceed one story. There is no cathedral, with a high spire, which stood the late shock, that levelled so many inferior buildings to the ground. Many churches still remain in ruins, but several are entire, and are handsome edifices The shops make a good display in many streets, and there is a constant ingress and egress of mules, laden with produce for embarkation, or with imported goods for large town, with good houses, and a handsome church It is surrounded by gardens, and particularly by a thick wood of low bushes. There are a great number of small beaten tracks, scarcely perceptible, leading from the town into the country. The town is situated on a river, about six miles from the sea coast.—The river is rapid, and full of alligators. When I was there, there was a hot burning sun, but the country pleased me The town was full of cotton and hides, and appeared to enjoy a large trade. It is about the fourth town in the Caraccas, Caraccas being the first, La Guira the second, Porto Cabello the third, Maracaibo the fourth, and then Barcelona, Cumana, Coro, &c.

leaberg's Catalogue of North American plants, to their proper places in Jussieu's arrangement, has been added.

This work is highly spoken of, as exhibiting the most recent improvements and discoveries that have taken place in this department of natural knowledge. But what engages our attention the most is the beautiful specimens of Lithography by which it is embellished, and which were executed at the Lithographic Press of Barnet & Doolittle of this city, from the pencil of Mr. Stansbury. As this important and elegant art is little known in this country, we believe the following particulars of its discovery and progress, and the principles on which it is founded, will be acceptable to our readers:—

Lithography is the art of taking impressions from Drawings or Writings made on Stone. It was discovered at Munich, in 1800, by a singer in the theatre there, who was accustomed to engrave music on slabs of slate, to save the expense of metal. He chanced to drop soap on one part of the slab, and found that in that part the ink adhered to the slate, and in print ing gave an impression, as well as if the figure had been engraved. He immediately conceived the idea of only marking the surface with a soapy substance, instead of engraving into the slate He succeeded in printing from this; and afterwards substituting a light coloured compact limestone (which abounds near Munich) for the slate, he laid the foundation for all that has since been done in this new and elegant branch of the fine arts. He was patronised by the Elector of Bavaria, and subsequently by the Emperor, both of whom granted his exclusive privileges in the use of his discovery. From Germany the art was introduced by stealth into France. The Count Lasteyrie for this purpose assumed a disguise, obtained admission to one of the establishments at Munich, where he laboured as an assistant for eight months, and then returned to Paris where he taught his own servants, and thus set up a Lithographic establishment of his own. The art was adapted to the habits of the French, and made very rapid progress; it was applied to the first department of engraving, and was found for some of them, especially for representations in natural history, to be superior to any other method There are now no less than sixteen establishments of this kind in Paris, those of Count Lasteyrie and Mr. Engelmann especially, are of great extent and value. In England, Lithography was first introduced by a Mr. D'Offenbach in 1807, who went from Munich to London for that purpose. It met at first with rather a cool reception, so much so that D'Offenbach's successor returned to Germany in disgust. But it continued to be used by government for the multiplication of military plans and maps, to be sent to the army, (for which purpose, and for despatches of all kinds it was also used by Bonaparte,) until by degress the art became more known and estimated; and it is at present in use to a considerable extent, both in the mercantile community for the copying of letters, invoices, &c. and among the lovers of beautiful art for drawings of every description, the celebrated Mr. Ackermann has brought it by his patronage to a high degree of improvement. Last year two gentlemen from Paris, came to this city with a lithographic press and a quantity of the Munich stone; but being press and a quantity of the Munich stone; but being strangers to our country and its habits, they did not adopt the proper mode of making themselves and their intentions known, and hence have remained in comparative obscurity. Several specimens, however, of landscape figures and flowers, were executed here during the winter, by Mr Stansbury, Mr. Milbert, and Journal, were also printed at the same establishment. But the present is the first instance of an extensive work in which the plates are exclusively from stone.

The art rests upon the three following principles: 1st, The facility with which water is imbibed by calcareous stones 2d, the strong adhesion which exists between resinous or oily substances and calcareous stones. 3d. The affinity which resinous or oily substances have for each other, and the quality which they possess of repelling water, or any body moistened with water. From these principles the following results may be deduced. 1st That the tracings made upon the polished surface of a calcareous stone, with any resinous or oily substance, adhere so closely to it that they cannot be removed without employing mechanical means for their separation 2d That while the other parts of the stone receive and imbibe the water which is poured upon it, the water is repelled by the resinous or oily parts. 3d. That when any coloured substances of any oily or resinous nature is passed over the stone thus prepared, the colour will adhere to the greasy tracings, while it will be resisted by the watered parts of the stone. The process, in short, depends entirely upon the watered parts of the stone retaining the oily coloring matter and the resinous tracings repelling the water; so that when a sheet of paper is applied to the stone duly prepared, the oily tracings which alone are coloured, give the impressions

Cheapness and despatch distinguish this art. A page of music written upon stone, in an hour, has yielded seventy thousand impressions. But this is not its only advantage; the admirable truth and precision, with which it renders every original touch of the drawing, gives it a decided superiority to every other branch of the art of engraving. Whatever ease or softness exists in the drawing, exists in the same perfection in the impressions thus taken from it; whereas, the first etchings or engravings are, at best, but translations from one language into another, and can never give the spirit of the original; but in lithography all the prints are multiplied originals. What a rich inheritance might have descended to us, if the old masters had possessed this art. How many rapid effusions of the imagination, how many glowing conceptions and brilliant first thoughts would they have thrown upon the stone, and thus made eternal, which they threw upon scraps of paper soon lost, or, at best, confined to a single hand, and which they either threw to the wind, and wasted in irrecoverable oblivion!

Anecdote.

ANECDOTE LITTLE KNOWN.

During almost the whole of the last century, the family of the Parisian executioner, so celebrated amongst the people, under the name of Charlot, inhabited a solitary house, situated about the centre of the Petite rue St. Nicholas, between the faubourgs St. Dennis and St Martin. At the commencement of the reign of Louis XV., M. de Lally, since so celebrated by his unhappy destiny, and the zeal which filial piety has given to the re establishment of his fame, returned towards midnight, with some youths of his own age and rank, from the Guinguettes of Raper, renowned at this period for their excellent matelotes. As they approached near the house of Charlot, they heard violins and sounds of merriment, whence they concluded that dancing was going forward within. Heated with the good cheer they had been enjoying, they took a fancy to partake of the amusements which these sounds informed them they were near. They knocked; a servant opened the door; they asked leave to enter.—The girl, not daring to take upon herself to admit them, called her master, to whom these young gentlemen repeated their request. "It is impossible to receive you, gentlemen, (answered Charlot) my house is not public; and our sports are about to cease, for I perceive that it is already very late." These wild youths, however, insisted, and hoping to secure their admission if they made themselves known, they said they belonged to the Court, that they came from a party at the theatre, and intended to finish their evening by joining the amusement of an honest and respectable family. Charlot, after making useless efforts to dissuade them from their project, found there were no other means of ending the matter but by saying—"The higher your rank, gentlemen, the less possible it is for me to receive you; you would approve of my refusal if you knew who I am."—"And who are you, then?" said one of the party.—"Gentlemen, do you insist upon it? know then that I am the hangman of Paris."—"Ah! this is strange!" cried M. de Lally, "is it you who hang break arms, legs, &c. ?"—Charlot interrupted him and said—"These are, in fact, my duties; but I have assistants for obscure criminals. However, when a man of your rank, Sir, has the misfortune to fall under the rigour of the laws, I consider it a duty, an honour to perform myself the decrees of justice."—Twenty five years after, M de Lally died under the hands of this same man.

Here's the sword with which thy Sire,
Drove his foes before him;
There the steed, thro' blood and fire,
Which oft to triumph bore him.

Sheath'd too long has been the blade,
Fresh gores soon shall stain it;
Long unchees'd the steed has stray'd
Thy hand now shall rein it.

To the trump, thy father's ear,
Ne'er again shall listen:
Nor, (as drawn the foe more near,)
His eye with ardour glisten.

Yet, with GLORY HE DIED,
Shou'dst THOU FALL to-morrow,
From my cheek the smile of PRIDE,

Sly BERLEBUB took all occasions,
To try Jon's constancy and patience;
He took his children, took his health,
He took his honour, took his wealth.
His servants, horses, oxen, cows,
The sly one never took his spouse
But Heav'n that brings out good from evil
And loves to disappoint the DEVIL,
Had prodi-termined to restore
Two-fold all Jon had had before,
His servants, horses, oxen, cows—
Short-sighted DEVIL! not to take his spouse.

Editorial Commentary.

The late arrivals confirm all the former encouraging accounts from Greece. The Turkish power is clearly on the eve of a final overthrow, and happy will it be for the general interests of Christendom should the present campaign be, as it appears not unlikely to prove, the last. Notwithstanding the aid of several French Officers, IBRAHIM PACHA of Egypt has totally failed in his attack on the Morea, and his army is for the most part destroyed. We have no room for the particulars. A letter from Zante, dated May 2d has this passage 'The campaign is the last for the Turks. Greece will be free and independent; its future glory immense.' The presumptive heir to the throne of Mahmoud is a more; and Constantinople is overwhelmed in a general despondency.

It is further stated that the Greek Admiral MIAULIS, after a battle of eleven hours, near Lodi, took 8 Turkish Vessels, and burnt and sank 13 others — The RECHID PACHA at the head of a large body of Turks has been also defeated by land.

We are rejoiced to learn that Major DENHAM and his party have arrived in safety at Paris, on his return to England. His expedition is said to have been still more successful than was at first reported. It is said that several populous kingdoms, with walled towns and cities have been discovered in places which our present maps of Africa represent as fat, vital deserts without inhabitants. A resident Englishman (Mr. Tyrwhit) is now actually established in the very centre of the continent of Africa, in perfect security, and with permission to hoist his flag as British Consul.

The CANADA TENURE BILL was read a third time in the House of Commons on the 30th of May, and passed.

In the House of Lords, on the CANADIAN CORN BILL, the Earl of Liverpool said "Tax freight and insurance would amount to 12s 6d per quarter, which, with the addition of a duty of 5s also per quarter, would be a sufficient protection. (to the British grower) Were it not to be inferred also that it could only come on British ships, the more the demand should increase, the more would trade prosper. Canada took all our manufactures; she should be protected with the means of paying for them, by being placed on a proper footing. It was only an act of kindness to Canada. If her situation were considered, and your wisest neighbour she was placed, the propriety of adopting a liberal policy towards her would be seen."

The paragraph which is inserted under the Domestic Head, in this day's Register, relative to certain Indian Manuscripts, is going the rounds of our Canadian papers, and is repeated in this publication with a view of soliciting further information on the subject, and answers to the following queries:—

What are the subjects treated of in them last mentioned M. S. S.? Are they not clearly the work of the French Jesuits?

Is there any evidence that any of the Indian languages of this northern continent are written languages?

A part of the CANADIAN COMPANY for the "Investment of Capital" and "Land Agency" with a Capital of £500,000 in 10 000 shares of £50 each is given also under our Domestic Head, in this day's Register, our limits forbidding an insertion of the whole.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LONDON, May 25.

The Funds.—The settling day at the Stock Exchange to-morrow is looked to with the deepest interest. The extent of the speculations, the fall of nearly 5 per cent, without any political cause, has not been experienced for a series of years, and we do not remember, during the time of the late war, that the fluctuation was greater, or the public mind more excited. Not only are English funds affected, but every description of investment has fallen in a very alarming manner. Foreign Stocks, Mining, and other Shares, and indeed all description of floating security, have suffered. The general gloom that pervades the English market, is however, severely felt in the Foreign.

Population of Ireland.—From the returns just printed by order of Parliament, it appears that the population of Ireland amounts to 6,801,827. Males, 3,34 ; 826 ; females, 3,459 931. The number of persons chiefly employed in agriculture, is stated at 1,138,069. Those engaged in trade or manufactures or handicraft, at 1,170 014. The population of Dublin is stated to be 227.355.

Archives Generales—(From the Lancet.)—The police of Paris have apprehended and imprisoned a man who had been in the habit of satisfying an unnatural appetite with food of the most disgusting description. Animal substances in a state of putrefaction, and even the human body itself, was regarded by this miserable being as very delicate morceaux. He found his way into the burial grounds, and with certain instruments succeeded in pulling out of the graves the bodies recently interred. What is still more extraordinary, he would feast upon the intestines in preference to the other parts of the body; and when he had thus regaled himself, he filled his pockets with the same material for a future meal. When interrogated on the subject of this dreadful depravity, he said that from a child he had been fond of what others called loathsome food; and expressed his surprise that any one could blame him for a taste to him so natural. His answers to whatever questions were put to him were precise and rational, although there appeared at times a little incoherency in his manner. He acknowledged that he sometimes felt the greatest inclination to devour children, but he did not possess courage enough to kill them — He is at present incarcerated in the Bicetre, for fear of the consequences which might result from his horrible propensities. This report was communicated to the conductors of the Archives by Dr. Bertheilot, and, therefore, its authenticity may be relied on.

To take mildew out of linen.—Take soap, and rub it well; then scrape fine chalk, and rub that also in the linen; lay it in on the grass; as it dries, wet it a little, and it will come out at once doing.

Water on the Brain.—A most interesting experiment was made a few days ago; that of introducing a cannula into the ventricles of the brain of a child of two years old, that died the day before of water in the head, the consequence of acute inflammation of the brain after a fortnight's illness; and upon whose case there had been a great deal of discussion about performing this operation in life, at the father's request, after every other means had been pronounced hopeless: but to which, with the exception of Mr. LIZARS and two of the younger number of the profession, some of the most eminent medical men in this place could not be prevailed upon to accede, nor even to give it the sanction of their presence. After the operation, which was performed with great dexterity by Mr. LIZARS, and after the examination of the brain, which was found perfectly sound, the father observed, in the presence of Dr. Barclay and several other medical men, that he had no doubt the time would come when this operation, in desperate cases of water in the head, would be as common as cutting for the stone is now; to which Dr. Barclay not only assented but added, "and much more simple." Edinburgh Star.

Activity of the Populative Principle.—There lately died at Borowsk, in the government of Kaloga in Russia, a merchant named B. Roudakoff. He was aged 80 years, and he had the rare happiness to be surrounded by forty children, of whom twenty-one were by his first wife and nineteen by his third. He had no children by his second, with whom he lived nine years. The youngest of his sons was commonly called Athanasius the 40th. This account reminds the Brussels Oracle of the following anecdote.—Louis XV. before the battle Fontenoy, joined the army of Marshal Saxe to make the campaign of the Netherlands, accompanied, instead of suis de camp, by several of his mistresses, and among others by the famous Madame de Montespan. Being at Lisle, he learned that a merchant of that town named Van den Berg, had forty two children by two wives. The King of France having sent to him, made known to him, his desire of seeing all the family of the merchant assembled at his house. They were assembled the next day to the number of a hundred and twelve children and grand children. Louis XV. delighted to see so numerous a family, asked, Mr. Van den Berg what he could do to his advantage — "Sire," replied he, "all I desire is to be exempted from imposts"—which request was granted.

Foreign Intelligence.

MEXICO.

Mexican papers to the first of June have been received at the office of the National Gazette, from which the following selections are made.

On the 10th of May the Senate ratified the treaty between Great Britain and the Mexican Union. Thirteen of that body united in offering an additional article, containing a formal acknowledgment of Mexican Independence; but the article was rejected after having been referred to a committee.

The first "Constitutional Federal Congress" terminated its session on the 31st May. The paper "El Sol" of the 22d furnishes the long discourse delivered on the occasion by the President of the Union, and also the answer of the Congress. Both performances are of an interesting character. The President adverts, with expressions of pride and complacency, to the recognition of Mexican Independence by Great Britain, and to the treaty between the two powers which the Congress had just sanctioned.

On the 31st May, Henry George Ward was received with great pomp by the President of Mexico, as Charge d'Affaires of His Britannic Majesty. Mr. Ward, after he had read aloud his credentials, pronounced an address, wherein he dwelt upon the lively interest which his Sovereign felt in the aggrandizment and prosperity of the new Republic, and his desire to maintain the relations of friendship that had been so happily established. The President made a suitable reply.

The treaty between Great Britain and Mexico establishes reciprocal freedom of trade, and mutual enjoyment of the advantages allowed to the most favoured nations. Every vessel built in the Mexican States, or "nationalized according to their laws, owned by a citizen or citizens of Mexico, whose captain is a Mexican by birth or naturalization, and three fourths of whose crew have been admitted into the service with the knowledge of the Government, is to be considered as Mexican." This description is to be in force for ten years, when the matter is to be open to a new arrangement. The subjects of the British government are not to be molested on account of their religion; but it is not specified that they are to have the privilege of public worship.

By an "additional article," it is agreed that "any privileges which it may be convenient for the United Mexican States to concede to Spain (the only power that could pretend to any which Great Britain might not have) shall be in no manner exclusive or prohibitory, and be limited to a determinate number of years."

GERMANY.

A Brussels Journal announces, that among the productions of industry which will be sent from Western Flanders to the exhibition at Harlæm, is a piece of cloth which has in its breadth, 4,200 threads, so fine that they cannot be discerned but by a magnifying glass. This piece was spun and woven by a brother and sister. There is also, a spindle of thread, imperceptible through fineness, which is valued at 400 Dutch florins per pound.

HOLLAND.

A Dutch Jew recently died at Amsterdam, who bequeathed funds for arming and equipping six 74 gun-ships. At his death there were found in his house forty-four tubs filled with coin bearing the effigy of all the Sovereigns of the world. Eight days were occupied in counting these pieces. This capitalist, who was in his 96th year, had visited all Europe, Africa and America, and part of Asia.

The Dutch frigate Pallas, with the Duke of Saxe Weimar, as a passenger, sailed from Falmouth, Eng. May 27, for New York.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor of Russia has recently issued a prohibition for specie to be carried out of the Empire.—Travellers are not allowed to have more than 50 rubles in silver and 10 rubles in copper coin.

THE ASHANTEES.

The ALBION quotes from the HAMPSHIRE TELEGRAPH a letter from Cape Coast Castle, under date 5th March last, from which it appears that the Ashantee power is completely overthrown, and will never again be able to undertake hostile measures against the British possessions in that quarter. Since their defeat they have become a divided people and the Assin nation our allies, and other powerful tribes have taken up arms against them. The writer of the letter in question adds that there is no longer the least doubt but the Ashantees were instigated to the last warfare by the Dutch authorities at the neighbouring settlements of Elmina, with the view of engrossing the whole of the gold and ivory trade to themselves. The coast is, we are sorry to add, represented as being the very hot-bed of disease. The crew of H. M. Sloop Barin was so sickly that she was ordered to cruise off the Cape de Verds. The crew of the Commodore's ship the Maidstone, however, preserved its health.

UNITED STATES.

At Southold L. I. in May last, the following numbers of shad, or, (as they are generally called) mossbunkers, were taken by a seine, named the sea serpent, at single draughts, viz:—One of 400,000; another of 700,000; a third of 1 200,000!!! These fish are taken for the exclusive purpose of manuring the soil; from 8 to 12,000 are usually put on an acre. Some of the seines are about 100 rods in length, and from 12 to 20 feet in depth.

FRANCE.

The French papers show that the Duke of NORTHUMBERLAND worthily maintains the character of his country in FRANCE. He is deservedly popular, which may in some measure be accounted for by the practice which he has of throwing handfuls of silver as he rides among the populace.

CORONATION OF THE KING OF FRANCE.

RHEIMS, May 29.

Before 5 o'clock this morning, the throng began to assemble at the Cathedral which was filled at an early hour.

The dauphiness wore a dress of gold ground, embroidered with silver, and a diadem of diamonds. The Duchess of Berry had a dress of pink and silver lama; her hair was full dressed and ornamented with a wreath of roses mixed with diamonds.

At half past seven o'clock the clergy repaired to the metropolitan church.

The Archbishop of Rheims advanced towards the alter, being preceded by the Bishops of Soissons and Amiens, performing the functions of deacon and sub deacon, and the Archbishops of Besancon and Bourges, and the Bishops of Autun and Evreux, who were appointed to chaunt the litanies.

The Clergy, the deputations and the persons invited by the King, having taken their places, the two Cardinals, supporters of the King, wearing their mitres, copes, and stoles, and accompanied by the chapter in copes, proceeded to the King's apartment, to seek his Majesty.

Upon the chapter's arrival at the door of the King's chamber, whither the Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Bourbon, the great officers of the crown, and the great and other officers of the household had previously gone, the grand chamberlain of the cabinet knocked at the door. The grand chamberlain inquired in a loud voice—"Whom do you require? The Cardinal de Clermont Tonnerre, first of the two cardinal supporters, replied—"Charles X. whom God hath given us for King." His Majesty's usher then opened the door. The two Cardinals approached the King, who upon their entrance rose from his chair. The Cardinals saluted His Majesty, who returned the salutation.

At this moment the Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, and the Duke of Bourbon, departed for the church.

The first of the two Cardinals presented to the King the holy water, and said the prayer.—At the conclusion of the prayer the two Cardinals conducted His Majesty to the church.

The procession moved in the following order:—The chapter of the Cathedral—the ordinary foot guards of the King's body, marching in two files, and headed by their officers—a band of music—the heralds at arms—the King at arms—the assistants of the ceremonies—the grand master of the ceremonies—the four knights of the order of the Holy Ghost appointed to bear the offerings—the King's pages upon the sides—the Duke de Polignac, appointed by the King to bear the train of the royal mantle. Next came the King, having on his right Card nal de Clemont Tonnerre, and on his left the Cardinal de la Fare. On each side also were three guards de la Mouche. Behind His Majesty, on the right and left, were two captains of the body guards, the major of the body guards, the chancellor of France, and the duke d'Uzes, representing the grand master of France, and bearing aloft in his hand the truncheon of grand master. On his right was the grand Chamberlain, and on his left the first gentleman of the chamber.

His Majesty wore a silver robe; his slippers had also binding of silver.—On his head was a black velvet cap, with two white aigrettes, separated by a diamond cross. The King's pantaloons were of silk.

Upon the King's reaching the entrance of the church the Cardinal de la Fare said the prayer.

As soon as the King entered the choir, the Archbishop of Rheims, standing, and without mitre, said, upon His Majesty's passage, the prayer—"Omnipotens Deus cælestium moretor" after which the King was conducted by the two Cardinals to the seat prepared for him in the midst of the sanctuary, under a lofty canopy a little in advance of the first flight of steps that separates the sanctuary from the choir.

All the attendants having taken their seats, the Archbishop of Rheims arose and presented the Holy Water to the King, who, to receive it, uncovered himself. The Archbishop then with drew behind the alter, to put on his pontifical ornaments. During this time the choir chaunted Sextet. The Archbishop afterwards returned bearing the Holy Ampulla.

The Prelate was seated and the King kneeling before him, repeated, in a clear and distinct voice, the following oath:—

"I promise in the presence of God, and my people, to support and honour our holy religion, as is the duty of every Christian King, and the oldest son of the Church; to do justice and right to my subjects, and to govern according to the laws of the Kingdom, and the Constitutional Charter—which I swear faithfully to observe, So help me God, and his Holy Word."

The King then rose, and afterward took the oath as Grand Master of the Orders of the Holy Ghost (by which he swears to live and die in the faith of he Roman Catholic Church,) of St. Louis, and the Legion of Honor.

His Majesty being conducted to the foot of the alter by the two Cardinals, laid aside his first robe, which was taken off by the First Gentleman of the Chamber, who delivered it to the First Valet de Chambre. The King gave his cap to the First Gentleman, Master of the Wardrobe, who delivered it to the oldest Valet de Chambre present.

The Dauphin afterwards came and put on the King's golden spurs, which were upon the Alter.

The Duke de Conegliano, as Constable, after having laid aside his sword, advanced towards the King by the right side. His Majesty rose and approached the Alter, which was approached at the same time by the Archbishop, who consecrated the sword of Charlemagne, by saying the prayer—Exaudi quæsumus Domine, preces nostras, &c. This benediction being concluded the Archbishop girt the sword around the King, but immediately took it off again; then having drawn it from the sheath, which he restored upon the Alter, he said the following prayer, in deliv ering the drawn sword into the King's hands:—Accipe hanc gladiem cum Dei benedictione.

At the conclusion of the prayer, His Majesty kissed the sword, and laid it upon the Alter.

After several other prayers, the Archbishop prepared the Sacred Unction. The King, conducted by the two Cardinal supporters, returned to his seat. The Archbishop caused the reliquary to be opened, which contained the Holy Ampulla, and drew from it, with the point of a golden needle, a portion which he mixed with the Holy Unction. The choir then chaunted the anthem—unum francorum inclytum, etc.

The Cardinal supporters united the openings made in the King's dress for the anointing, and conducted His Majesty to the Alter, before which he prostrated himself upon cushions placed there for the purpose. The four Prelates appointed to chaunt the litanies then advanced to the foot of the Altar.

Consecration of the King.

The litanies and prayers having been said, the Archbishop seated himself with his back to the Alter, and the King was conducted near him by the two Cardinal supporters. His Majesty kneeled. The Archbishop, seated and with his mitre on his head, said the prayer—Omnipotens sempiterne Deus guber nator cæli.

The Bishop of Soissons, performing the functions of Deacon, took from the Alter the Holy Unction, and presented it to the Archbishop, who took some of it with his thumb, and anointed the King as follows:—Upon the top of the head, making the sign of the Cross, and saying—Ungo te in regem de oleo sanctificato, etc; upon the breast, the two Cardinal supporters holding open His Majesty's waistcoat and shirt at the moment of the anointing; between the two shoulders; upon the right shoulder; upon the left shoulder; at the bend of the right arm; and at the bend of the left arm.

The Grand Chamberlain next advanced to put on His Majesty the tunic and the dalmatic of crimson satin sprinkled with gold fleurs de lis, which the Master of the Ceremonies and one of his assistants had taken from the Alter. The Grand Chamberlain put over them the Royal Mantle of violet coloured velvet sprinkled with gold fleurs de lis, lined and bordered with ermine, which the Grand Master of Ceremonies brought from the Alter.

The King, arrayed in his Royal apparel, kneeled down. The Archbishop, seated and wearing his mitre, took again the Holy Unction which was delivered to him by the Bishop deacon.

The prayers being concluded, the first Valet de Chambre approached and presented to the Bishop deacon a pair of gloves upon a dish of silver gilt, which he took and held whilst the Archbishop, standing up, consecrated the gloves, saying the prayer,—Omnipotens Creator. The Archbishop next sprinkled the gloves with the Holy Water and drew them upon the King's hands.

The same ceremonies took place for the ring, which the Archbishop put upon the fourth finger of the King's hand, saying; "Accipe annulum, etc." The delivery of the sceptre and hand of Justice was performed in the same manner.

CORONATION.

The Archbishop wearing his mitre, took with both hands the Crown of Charlemagne from the Altar, and placed it above the King's head, but without touching His Majesty. The Princes immediately stretched out their hands to support it The Archbishop held it with his left hand, and said, while consecrating it with his right hand :—Caromet te Deus corona, gloria atque justitia. After which the Archbishop alone placed the crown upon the King's head. The Dauphin and other Princes then held forth their hands a second time to support it, the Archbishop saying: Accipe coronam regina, in nomine patris etc

The ceremony of the coronation being concluded, the Archbishop lifted up the King by the right side, and His Majesty was conducted to his throne. The procession moved in the following order: The Heralds at Arms, the King at Arms, the oldest assistant of the ceremonies; the Grand Master of the ceremonies, &c. &c. The King holding in his hands the sceptre and the hand of justice, and supported on his right by the Archbishop of Rheims, advanced towards the throne The Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, and the Duke of Bourbon, conducted by the master and an assistant of the ceremonies, approached to the steps of the throne, walking on the King's left.

Upon arriving at the lowest step of the throne, the King at Arms and the Heralds at Arms stopped and ranged themselves upon the sides on the right and left.

Three Guards de la Manche ascended the steps of the throne, and took their station on the side of the Epistle. Three others took their station on the side of the Gospel

The Chaplains bearing the Archbishop's crosier and cross, stopped at the foot of the steps leading to the throne, the one on the right and the other on the left.

The King thus conducted, ascended the throne by the steps on the side of the Gospel. His Majesty upon arriving at his throne, remained standing, having on his right the Archbishop of Rheims. The Dauphin, the Duke of Orleans, and the Duke of Bourbon, placed themselves upon folding stools on the right of the King.

The two Cardinal supporters were upon similar stools on the King's left.

THE RATTLE-SNAKE.

From the Richmond Inquirer.

A CURIOUS SPECTACLE.

The exhibition of Mr Neale's Rattle-snakes at the Eagle, is too great a curiosity to be passed over It is one of the most singular sights which we have ever witnessed.

Mr. Neale is a French man; while in North Carolina he attempted to procure some rattle-snakes, for the purpose of making out a collection But some of the observations and experiments he made, induced him to believe the possibility of taming this poisonous reptile; he finally made the trial, and has succeeded in a manner which is calculated to astonish every beholder. What the process he employed is unknown to us—he probably availed himself of the power, which a contest over the appetite of the animal gives him—she dwells very much too on the charms of music: while inflamed by hunger, and irritated by the application of hot iron, the creature is soothed and softened by a slow and plaintif A-ain.

Mr. Neale has two rattle snakes—the male, which is 4 feet 9 inches long, has 8 rattles to his tail thus proving him to be 8 years old—he has had his snake 4 years. The female is much smaller, and has five rattles—she has been with him 35 months—is great in her docility, that he will take them up, after speaking a sort of jargon to them, and stroking down their backs as if they were so many strings—he will put them crawl up his breast and face, caress and kiss him, coil and twist neck, and while one of them is thus hanging around him, he all take up and exhibit the other The perfect harmless ness of the reptile, and every attachment to his keeper is truly astonishing Meanwhile Mr. N himself thoroughly at ease—completely self possessed, diverting the spectators with the exhibition of his snakes, or instructing them by his explanations. He says, he has no fears whatever, for he depended[ly] of his command over the animal, he is satisfied he can cure the bite of it—of the remedy he makes no secret—Wash your mouth first with warm sweet oil, and then suck the wound—next, drink not a drop only of the decoction of the snake root, and it operates as a strong emetic. This is the receipt which he recommends, and which he believes to be infallible.

There is no deception practised upon you. He opens the mouth of the snake, and shews you his fangs. They are in the upper jaw alone—two on each side, and have the faculty of retowing themselves, in case they are drawn out by a violent blow—the fang is within the mouth, bent, sharpened and sheathed like the claw of a cat, and turned towards the throat; the orifice through which the poison is ejected is a small groove on the upper side of the fang, but were its point and the upper curve; the poison bags lie at the roots of the fangs. But to remove all doubts of the poisonous qualities of these snakes being uninjured, Mr. N. proposes to have a public exhibition this week, when the snake will kill a young hare by a slight stroke, and then immediately devour him

Perhaps no one has had so good an opportunity of studying the habits of the animal His remarks will of course form a valuable addition to natural history. He is an intelligent man, and a memoir may be expected from him, when he arrives in Europe.—The male snake has just cast his skin; and the new one is most beautiful The tail has a fine glossy black. He says, they renew their skins every two months, three times in the year; perhaps from October to April, they remain torpid, and this function is suspended Most probably it varies in different snakes with the quantities of food they can obtain Mr N generally feeds his once a week.

They have also a rattle every year after the first They scarcely ever shake it but when they are strongly excited, or to strike the attention of their prey He contends that the use of their rattles is to draw upon themselves the eyes of their victims, which generally consists of the fleetest animals, as birds, squirrels, &c. As soon as the eyes meet, he says, the process of charming commences. He believes in this faculty, for he has seen it exemplified in a garden by his own snakes; the victim will hop from bough to bough, and rock to rock, overcome with apprehension, until approaching each other, the snake seize him He denies altogether what some naturalist assert, the deleterious qualities of their breath—for he has often kissed them, and in blowing their breath upon him, he has found it uncommonly sweet

Mr N has other snakes in his collection—as a wampum snake, beautifully streaked, and so called after the Indian ornament; it is a small species of the Box Constrictor, which winds itself round its prey and kills not by poison, but by stricture—it even squeezes the rattle snake to death He has also the common black snack—and the lead colored American adder, of the description of the flat heads. He has all these under the same command—exhibiting almost the same docility as the rattle snake—the spectacle is not dangerous, nor even disgusting—and is well worthy the attention of the curious.

VOYAGE OF THE TEA SHIPS.

In the (Old) Quebec Gazette we find the following particulars of the voyages of the Moffatt and Juliana, Indiamen, lately arrived in this port:—

"They sailed from London on the 12th of August last, left Portsmouth on the 4th of that month and arrived at Canton on the 24th of January. On the 28th of February they passed Quebec, kept company 26 days, and separated off Java, met again off the Cape of Good Hope, separated, and arrived the same day off St. Helena. After leaving that island they did not see one another till their arrival at Quebec, within a few hours of each other, a most extraordinary proof of good management and the perfection of the art of navigation on board of both ships The space traversed by them in ten months has been to about 38,000 miles—The Moffatt is about 800 tons, the Juliana about 500—the former has 9 941 chests of Tea, the latter 5 900, forming in all 15,841 chests Both vessels are in high order, and take cargoes from hence to London."

The probable amount of Duties on the teas from the same paper, is we understand one fourth less than they will actually amount to—the other particulars are generally correct

"The amount of Provincial Duties on the Teas brought by these vessels, will be about sixty thousand dollars, the grass amount of the sales of the Tea will probably be about eight hundred thousand dollars The quantity imported may, however, be too great for the consumption, although it will increase with the lowness of the price. According to the regulations of the East India Company the sale of the two cargoes being the sale of a republic at stated periods, and no delivery made till the quantity to be delivered is paid for. The East India Company having a monopoly of Tea, it is obvious, that the price will eventually be regulated by the cost of procuring it—another article from the United States by smuggling, which it is the interest of the Company to put a stop to, but which cannot be done with the present and increasing facility of internal commercial intercourse between the Provinces and the United States, otherwise than by underselling. The consumers of Tea will of course be gainers by the new competition; for the smugglers were almost beginning to have a monopoly.

Canadian Commerce—Late letters from England favor the idea that the number of shipping this year will greatly exceed that of the last, and it is confidently expected that the trade will not be much short of 700 (last year it was 619) Timber is in great abundance, and at what are considered moderate prices; white pine 4d red do 8 1 2 a 9d. oak 1-4 a 1-6 deal £7 10s a 8 10. Staves £15 Ashes Pots 30s. Pearl 32:; Wheat is nominal and little doing; Fine Flour 27s. Superfine do. 30

Complimentary—(The following is extracted from a letter published in the New York Daily Advertiser of the 6th instant, from one of a party of Americans who lately visited Quebec

"The manners of the Canadians, so far as we had opportunity to become acquainted with them, were most emphatically polite, friendly and hospitable. From the time we entered till we left it, we never met with the slightest mark of incivility. On the contrary, though strangers, and of course destitute of any particular claim upon their attention, we were uniformly treated with civility and kindness, and the remark is as applicable to the officers of the army as to the citizens. To some of the officers we were indebted for the most pointed and polite attention while engaged in examining the curiosities at Montreal and Quebec.

Indian Manuscript.—We are indebted to the politeness of one of the Reverend Missionaries to the Lake of the Two Mountains for the perusal of a manuscript in the Algonquin Language, which the Reverend gentleman has made considerable progress in transcribing from a very old manuscript, said to have been executed by an Indian of the Algonquin tribe The Reverent gentleman is a great proficient in the Algonquin and other Indian tongues; and we can assure the public that the correctness and beauty of the manuscript now in hand would do honor to any penman, and is equal to any thing of the kind we have ever seen. It is besides prettily illuminated with various religious devices. The original copy was a translation from a prayer-book in the French Language; but whether translated by the Indian who wrote it, we have not been able to learn. The learned Missionary agrees with Charlevoix in thinking that although the Algonquin language has not the same force with the Huron, yet it has much more sweetness and elegance. Both have a richness of expression, a variety of turns and phrases, a propriety of diction, and a regularity which are perfectly astonishing. He says, moreover, that the number of words in the Algonquin resembles words in the Greek and Latin, is truly surprising; the number in a given space he told us, but we have forgotten it As we understand, there are a number of manuscripts in the Indian tongues in the hands of several gentlemen in Canada the subject of which few or more are able to tell, we would suggest the propriety of submitting them to the inspection of the Reverend gentleman forming the mission to the Lake of the Two Mountains, who, we are certain, would be happy to render every assistance in deciphering, if not translating, them. If ancient, they may contain matter of great curiosity, worthy of being submitted to the public.—Montreal Herald.

TEAS DIRECT FROM CHINA.

Public Sale of Teas direct from China,—

THE AGENTS for the Sale of the East India Company's Teas in Canada, hereby give notice, that there will be exposed to public sale at their Stores, in Quebec and Montreal, 6000 Chests and Boxes of Teas, lately arrived from China, consisting of the following Green Teas, viz:—

The former to commence on Monday the 15th, and the latter on Monday the 22d August next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and to continue until the above quantities shall be disposed of. The delay in bringing the Teas to sale arises from the propriety of giving due notice and in order that every package may be opened, its contents examined, and any damaged part removed, conformably to the practise observed in London, which has obtained for the Company's Teas so decided a character for superiority of quality. The conditions will be given in catalogues, to be issued six days previous to the sale, during which time each tenth chest will remain open for the inspection of intending purchasers.

Editorial Commentary.

The information received from our private correspondence in London, and communicated to our readers a short time ago, relative to Newspaper-postage from the British Colonies, is fully confirmed. Mr. Hume has obtained a pledge from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that all newspapers from the Colonies shall be placed on the same footing with those from Ireland. Hitherto the heavy expense attending a transmission of printed papers to England has amounted to an interdiction. In this instance a reputed Radical has been of some service.

The award of the arbitrators between this Province and Lower Canada was signed on the 23d inst. and will shortly be made public.

Although the first Bill (which passed the Commons) on the subject of Canadian Corn, has been lost in the Lords—owing to inadvertency—there is every probability of another Bill, framed by Mr. Huskisson, for the attainment of the same objects, passing during the present Session.

In Lord Liverpools' speech on the Canadian Corn Bill, that reverentiable nobleman stated, that, "one fourth of all the ships, employed in the British Trade were engaged in the Canada Trade."

It was expected in England that the Parliament of Great Britain would be prorogued by the King, in person, about the 1st of July.

The Greeks have gained another great naval victory.

The Marquis of Hastings succeeds the Marquis Wellesley as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

The Old Gazette, of Quebec, seems very angry with that part of Mr. F's speech (in our House of Assembly) which relates to the situation of King's Printer in the Lower Provinces, as reported in the Observer—although I have been obliged to confirm the most important of Mr F's allegations—as they were really made, for all that he remarked, in reference to Mr. Neilson, himself, was simply, that "it had been said" the old types, &c. &c. had been worn out in the Government service, &c. &c. and that new ones had been purchased by Mr N. himself; as Mr F. has lately purchased types for himself. But it seems as if the occasion had been seized for no other purpose than for that, of venting the Editor's spleen against the Executive—and for reasons best known to himself—What became of the first types used in this Office, nearly 30 years ago, from whence they came, or who bought them, we cannot say, knowing nothing at all of the matter.

We have no doubt the "Freeman" wishes to engage with us in a paper hostility, in order that his own effusions may get the more noticed.—But he is very greatly mistaken if he supposes we shall employ our limited columns in any such unprofitable, and, surely we may add, disgraceful, warfare. His choler, without doubt requires a "cooler," but to use the language of Hamlet, were we "to put him to his purgation" we should perhaps "plunge him into more choler," for a less subject to play upon, were not worth the while, we never saw. We should not even have noticed his column of abuse, were it not for two assertions which incul pate others as well as ourselves The first of these relates to the right of voting on mere London Tickets, which never was advocated by Mr. F. or by any of his friends. But the right, where an "Equitable Freehold, (by the full performance of Settlement Duty on the Faith of Government solemnly pledged,") had been secured by the fulfilment of all that was required on the part of the Lessee, even though the Deed had not issued, was insisted upon, and will probably be insisted on again, with more success, at some future period, should it be necessary. The second assertion this voracious note-taker, himself, knows to be untrue, for if he has got the notes he pretends still to have in his possession, he must see by them that Mr. Ward confessed he publicly thanked Mr. F. (as he really did.) for quelling that riot which this Fire-the Faggot would make it appear he wished to foment—Out upon such unprincipled variet, who set upfor "faithful witness of the passing time." Verily their reward goes with them!

It is with much pleasure we announce the arrival, in York, of Mr. Dwyer, Lecturer on Elocution, and formerly of Drury Lane Theatre, in London, who has already given us public recitations on the evenings of Saturday and Monday last; but, owing to the shortness of the notice, we are sorry to say he had a much thinner attendance than his merits deserve. This Gentleman is the author of one of the best practical essays, on the finest of all arts, that we have ever seen. It is simple, lucid, and demonstrative, and the examples have been chosen with great taste and judgment. We are informed that it has been so highly esteemed by competent judges in the United States, as to become a standard book in the seminaries of that country Mr. Dwyer proposes to deliver a Lecture this evening, in the great room of the Mansion House Hotel, and it is to be hoped his merit will be rewarded by a numerous attendance It is so seldom, in this remote corner of the Empire, that our youth can have an opportunity of benefitting by such valuable lessons, from a master of his subject, and one which of all others requires practical elucidations, that we cannot help expressing a strong hope Mr Dwyer will find his exertions in this town amply rewarded.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Colonel Cockburn, Mr. Galt and Mr. Davidson, three of the Commissioners for ascertaining the value of the Crown and Clergy Reserves in Upper Canada, arrived in Liverpool, in the Cortes from New York, 5th June. Sir John Harvey arrived the following Tuesday in the Manchester, 19 days from New York.

Great Mortality.—The Canadian Courant says, that between the 1st day of June and the 10th of July, no less than 160 children, besides a number of adults, were interred in the French burying ground at Montreal.

Singular effects of Lightning.—On Tuesday last, about 12 miles from this city, five horses were struck by lightning and killed instantly. What renders this a singular occurrence, is the fact, that the person who was riding one of the horses at the time, was uninjured. Hartford Times.

Dissenters.—The Dissenters Marriage Bill has been read a third time in the House of Commons and finally passed.

Culture of Silk.—The culture of silk in Egypt, is said to have been undertaken by orders of the Pacha, on a scale equally extensive with that of cotton: and on the soil and climate are alike favorable to the growth of the mulberry, and the breeding of the worm, it is believed that there will, at no remote period, be a very increase in the produce of a commodity now in such universal request throughout Europe.

The Thellusson Estate.—In the late intelligence from England, it is stated that an argument was recently commenced in the House of Lords in a case involving the validity of the will of the late Peter Thellusson, Esq. a merchant in London, who died on the 21st of July, 1796, leaving about £700,000 of productive personal property, real estate in England worth £140.000, and two plantations in the West Indies, and directing by his will, that it should be divided 60 years hence amongst those who could then prove they were heirs—and if there were then none such to be found, the property was to go then to the King. His present heirs have laboured hitherto unsuccessfully to break the will, and have now made a new effort. His wife, three sons, three daughters, and ten grand-children, were living at the time of his death.

Various computations have been made of the probable value of this accumulated property at the time of its ultimate division, founded of course on the probable duration of the lives of the Testator's descendants.—The lowest calculation makes it nineteen million of pounds sterling, or 84,360,000! about twenty-eight millions, one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, to a share!

EXPEDITION TO THE NIGER.

We have great pleasure in learning the arrival in England of Major Denham and lieutenant Clapperton (the latter of the Royal Marine forces), who left this country in the year 1821, on an exploratory journey into the interior of central Africa connected with ascertaining the source, course, and termination, of the river Niger, which has been an object of geographical research more than 2000 years Our illustrious modern traveller, Mungo Park, threw a mere full and decisive light on this subject than ever had been made to appear during this long period; after penetrating through a variety of the kingdoms of western and interior Africa, he came at length to Sego, the capital of Bambarn, where he beheld the long sought majestic Niger glittering in the morning sun, as broad as the Thames at Westminster, and flowing slowly to the eastward." He then traced its course downwards to Silla. and upwards to Bammakoo, (about 1000 miles), where it first became navigable, to an extent of 300 miles. This, however, appeared to be only a commencement of the career of this mighty stream, leaving its subsequent progress involved in increasing mystery. Jackson, Horneman, Tuckey, Bowditch, Bitchie, Lyon, Laing, and now Denham and Clapperton have all since, by their preservering efforts, contributed to our previous mass of information respecting the most celebrated of African streams. We understand that Major Denham and Mr. Clapperton have ascertained with great certainty, that Lake Tyad is a great fresh water lake, having no outlet, and that it is fed by two large rivers, one of which, the Shary, flows from the mountain of mountains in which the western branch of the Nile (otherwise the White Nile) takes its rise. The Shary runs in a direction nearly due north from its source to the lake; whilst it is ascertained that the other river, called the Yae, enters the lake on its N. W. side, flowing from the westward; but it is not a continuation of the Jaliba, or river of Timbuctoo. These travellers confirm the account of the Mohammedan priest, that between Cano and Nyffe there is no river communication. Cano is in lat. 13. N. long. 9 E. and Sucotoo, which our adventurers subsequently visited, is in 12 N 5 E. This town is the capital of a great nation of which we appear to have had no previous information, though the King of the country (whose name is Bello) was much pleased with the appearance of our countrymen, and, to their surprise, they saw his house was furnished with English crockery. Which, it appeared, he had obtained, in the way of traffic, with the inhabitants of the Bight of Benin. He expressed a hope that a mode would be found by which his subjects could trade with the English. His country appeared very productive, and abounding with cattle. It further appears, by the information collected by Messrs. Denham and Clapperton, that the Timbuctoo River runs S. E to Nyffe, then southerly, and empties itself into the Bight of Benin; which ascertained fact is of much importance, as it opens a communication with the Atlantic, and will greatly facilitate the object intended to be pursued by Major Laing, in the course of the ensuing winter or the next spring—Whilst crossing the Desert our travellers were much distressed for want of provisions, yet they have happily arrived home in tolerable health, having suffered less from the climate than any of their predecessors in this arduous enterprize. They were every where well received by the natives, who made them various presents, which are on their way to England, from Malta. Among them are five live Ostriches and a beautiful Horse for our King, presented to him by one of the native princes —Hampshire Telegraph.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers of the 8th of June, received at Portsmouth, give an animated account of the King's public entry into that capital, on his return from the Coronation. The day was fine, and the pageant seems to have been very splendid —And what is it?

SPAIN.

A letter from Madrid of the 12th May says—

"The revolt of the garrison at Seville, presented an aspect the more serious as the civil authorities and officers took no steps to prevent the pillage to which the rebels gave themselves up. The cause of their revolt is unquestionably the wretchednesswhich they suffer. The garrison of Santander has also revolted, and the men traverse the town crying—"The Constitution forever." The insubordination of these likewise is certainly occasioned by their misery. They rather resemble a troop of beggars than soldiers of a State.—The Governor of Santander had great difficulty in restoring order. A multitude of persons have been arrested among the troops, the officers and even respectable merchants of the town. On the following day a proclamation was issued offering a great reward to any one that would make known the authors of the plot, for our Government sees nothing but plots where it ought to behold the natural and unavoidable consequences of its own mal-administration and the necessities of the soldiers. A few days ago some royalist volunteers, being sent to a pot-house to put down a dispute, augmented the tumult. The corregidor of Madrid repaired to the spot, and having reproached the volunteers, the latter bound him, and two officers that accompanied him, who were only rescued by the arrival of an armed force. The King has given orders for immediate inquiry to be made into the affair, and for exemplary punishment to be awarded to the guilty."

Ferocity of the American Panther.

From the Jackson, (Tenn.) Gazette.

Some time in last March, in the County of Fayette, as the daughter of Mr John Jarman, a little girl of 12 or 13 years of age, was returning home about sun rise from a visit to her uncle, Mr. Coouts, who lived in the neighbourhood, she was discovered by a large panther, which, after keeping her in view a few seconds, stole cautiously behind her, and sprung upon her, and seized her by the back of her neck. The screams of the little girl first brought to her assistance a small dog, which, having ventured to assail the panther, was instantly disabled —The rage of the fierce animal, increased by this interference, was again exerted upon the girl with horrible effect, when most fortunately a larger dog came up and seized the panther. A most furious engagement ensued, which was about to result in the entire defeat of the dog, but for the timely aid of the two Messrs Coouts, who flew to the scene of action, and with clubs soon put to death the panther, and rescued the girl During the whole time the bold invader evinced no desire to quit his prey; but on the contrary clung to the little girl with a fierceness and perseverance, that seemed superior to danger, and to increase with the strength and number of assailants.

SEGUR'S RUSSIAN EXPEDITION.

"The following account of the horrible sufferings of the French Army under Napoleon, in its Retreat from Moscow is to be found in Segur's Russian Expedition, a work of great interest and authority. The point at which this extract commences is on the day after Bonaparte left his suffering soldiers at Smorgoni to make the best of his way to Paris "

"On the 6th of December, the very day after Napoleon's departure, the army exhibited a still more dreadful appearance —You might see icy particles floating in the air; the birds fell from it quite stiff and frozen. The atmosphere was motionless and silent; it seemed as if every thing which possessed life and move ment in nature, the wind itself, had been seized, chained, and as it were frozen by an universal death. Not the least word or murmur was then heard; nothing but the gloomy silence of despair, and the fears which proclaimed it

"We flitted along in this empire of death like unhappy spirits The dull and monotonous sound of our steps, the crushing of the snow, and the feeble groans of the dying, were the only interruptions to this vast and doleful silence. Anger and imprecations there were none, nor any thing which could indicate a remnant of heat; every day did strength enough remain to utter a prayer; most of them even fell without complaining, either from weakness or resignation, or because people only complain when they look for kindness, and fancy they are pitied

"Such of our soldiers as had hitherto been the most preserving, here lost heart entirely Sometimes the snow opened under their feet, but more frequently its glassy surface affording them no support, they slipped at every step, and marched from one fall to another. It seemed as if this hostile soil refused to carry them, that it escaped under their efforts, that it led them into snares as if to embarrass and slacken their march, and deliver them to the Russians in pursuit of them, or to their terrible climate

"And really, whenever they halted for a moment from exhaustion, the winter, levying his heavy and icy hand upon them, was ready to seize upon his prey. In vain did these poor unfortunates, feeling themselves benumbed, raise themselves, and, already deprived of the power of speech and plunged into a stupor, proceed a few steps like automatons; then blood freezing in their veins, like water in the current of rivulets, congealed their heart and then flew back to their head; these dying men then staggered as if they had been intoxicated. From their eyes, which were reddened and inflamed by the continual aspect of the snow, by the want of sleep, and the smoke of bivouacs, there flowed real tears of blood; their bosoms heaved heavy sighs; they looked at heaven, at us, and at the earth, with an eye dismayed, fixed, and wild; it expressed their farewell, and perhaps their reproaches to the treacherous nature which tortured them. They were not long before they fell upon their knees, and then upon their hands; their head still wavered for a few minutes alternately to the right and left, and from their open mouth some agonizing sounds escaped; at last it fell in its turn upon the snow, which it reddened immediately with livid blood; and these sufferings were at an end.

"Their comrades passed by them without moving a step out of their way, for fear of prolonging their journey, or even turning their head, for their beards and their hair were stiffened with the ice, and every movement was a pain They did not even pity them; for, in short, what had they lost by dying? what and they left behind them? They suffered so much; they were still so far from France; much divested of feelings of country by the surrounding aspect, and by misery; that every dear illusion was broken, and hope almost destroyed. The greater number, therefore, were become careless of dying, from necessity, from the habit of seeing it, and from fashion, sometimes even meeting it contemptuously; but more frequently, on seeing these unfortunates stretched out, and immediately stiffened, contenting themselves with the thought that they had no more wishes, that they were at rest, that their sufferings were terminated! And, in fact, death, in a situation more certain, and uniform, may be always a strange event, a frightful contrast, a terrible revolution; but in this tumult and violent and continual movement of a life of constant action, danger, and suffering, it appeared nothing more than a transition, a slight change, an additional removal; and which excited little alarm.

"Such were the last days of the grand army. Its last nights were still more frightful; those whom they surprised marching together, far from every habitation, buffeted on the borders of the woods; there they lighted their fires, before which they remained the whole night, erect and motionless like spectres They seemed as if they could never have enough of the heat; they kept so close to it as to burn their clothes, as well as frozen parts of their body, which the fire decomposed. The most dreadful pain then compelled them to stretch themselves, and the next day they attempted in vain to rise

"In the mean time, such as the winter had almost wholly spared, and who still retained some portion of courage, prepared their melancholy meal. It consisted, ever since they had left Smolensk, of some slices of horse-flesh broiled, and some rye-meal diluted into a bouillie with snow water, or kneaded into muffins, which they seasoned, for want of salt, with the powder of their cartridges.

"The fires of these fires was constantly attracting fresh spectres, who were driven back by the first comers These poor wretches wandered about from one bivouac to another, until they were struck by the frost and despair together, and gave themselves up for lost They then laid themselves down upon the snow, behind their more unfortunate comrades, and there expired Many of them, devoid of the means and the strength necessary to cut down the lofty fir trees, made vain attempts to light a fire to warm their limbs; but death speedily surprised them around the trees in every sort of attitude.

"Under the vast pent houses which are erected by the side of the high road in some parts of the way, scenes of still greater horror were witnessed Officers and soldiers all rushed precipitately into them, and crowded together in heaps. There, like so many cattle, they squeezed against each other round some fires, and as the living could not remove the dead from the midst, they laid themselves down upon them, that they might expire in their turn, and serve as a bed of death to some fresh victims. In a short time additional crowds of stragglers presented themselves, and being unable to penetrate into these asylums of suffering, they completely besieged them

"It frequently happened that they demolished their walls, which were formed of dry wood, in order to feed their fires; at other times, repulsed and disheartened, they were contented to use them as shelters to their bivouacs, the flames of which very soon communicated to these habitations, and the soldiers whom they sustained, already half dead with the cold, were completely killed by the fire. Such of us as these places of shelter preserved, found next day our comrades lying frozen and in heaps around their extinguished fires. To escape from these catacombs, a horrible effort was required to enable them to climb over the heaps of these poor wretches, many of whom were still breathing

"At Youprasnoi, the same village where the Emperor only missed by an hour being taken by the Russian partisan Sealwin, the soldiers burnt the houses completely as they stood, merely to warm themselves for a few minutes. The light of these fires attracted some of these miserable wretches, whom the excessive severity of the cold and their sufferings had rendered delirious; they ran in like madmen, and gnashing their teeth and laughing like demons, threw themselves into these furnaces, where they perished in the most horrible convulsions. Their famished companions regarded them undismayed, there were even some who drew out these bodies, disfigured and scorched by the flames and ate it but one true bite they ventured to pollute their mouth with this loathsome food !"

CHARACTER OF Mr. BROUGHAM BY SIR JAMES MACINTOSH.

An interesting circumstance, and one at which we heartily rejoice, took place at Glasgow on Monday last. Sir Walter Scott and Mr. Brougham, in the month of November last, appeared as Candidates for the office of Lord Rector of the University of that city for the ensuing year. The votes, which are taken by what are called nations, were then declared to be equal.—The casting vote therefore devolved on the preceeding Rector Sir J. Macintosh, who, in virtue of his office, on Monday last attended a meeting of the committee, and exercised his privilege in favour of Mr. Brougham The assembly of Students in the Hall was unusually numerous, and they received their late Lord Rector with enthusiastic applause Previous to his bestowing his vote, he addressed them in a speech of the most powerful eloquence, in the course of which he gave the following classical and elegant delineation of the character of Mr Brougham.

"I wish not to enter into the indelicate and invidious task, Gentlemen, of drawing any comparison between the two most eminent persons who have divided their suffrages. I am not sufficiently qualified to make such a comparison; but in truth the comparison, to be reasonable, must be founded on a resemblance which does not exist in the present case. But, although I had the other qualifications requisite, I am free to confess that I possess not impartiality. However the election had turned out, the object would have reflected honor on your choice; the difficulty lay in the richness of the objects. I should have proceeded in silence to discharge my duty, if I did not think that I might make one or two observations on the subject most wholly without use to the younger part of my hearers—(Applause.) The example of an extraordinary man in the direction of his powers is lost to the majority of mankind; but the course of his studies, the maxims which regulate and guide him and the habits which distinguish his pursuits, may be of great use to all who apply themselves to literature or science — Happy were it to know and pursue the course of study and the habits of the gentleman to whom I am about to give the casting vote. His course of study affords no countenance to any of those views which are apt to slacken the ardour of youths—no countenance to the maxim, that any superiority of genius can compensate for arduous labour. No man knows better his labour to advantage or is more constant in its employment His mind is powerful and robust: it can labour long, and apply intensely, and yet it is ever ready in labour. No maxim is more false, none more inconsistent with our experience, or tends more to produce coxcombs and pigmies in intellect, than that which affirms that intense study is not necessa ry or the improvement of natural talent. He would say to you, in the language of one of the most distinguished characters in the ancient world. 'Patchor nec in adolescentia diffamun meo ingenio quriare adjumenta doctrinæ.' —(Cicero Pro L Murena.) He who used this was no plodder nor drudge. He possessed the richest variety of powers and accomplishments, and he tells you that he distrusted his natural genius, and sought the aids of knowledge.—Mr Brougham's example (applause) and talent were founded and fostered not by superficial studies. His naturally strong understanding was first exercised on the severer sciences, in which he greatly distinguished himself. And I may assure you of their value, not only to those who study them with a professional view, but as systems of mental gymnastics. No man ever felt Mr Brougham's nobility, who did not acknowledge the skill and strength of his understanding His example is well fitted to guard us against another prevalent fault and vulgar prejudice, that those who aim at general principles are entitled to neglect accuracy of knowledge. Such men despise the knowledge of the value of which they are ignorant. But by means of the electric rapidity of his conception he searches through the intricities, and sees the whole of a question, before other men have looked at the beginning, and in a moment can turn his undivided attention to another subject.

His most remarkable powers of mind—his eminent knowledge and just view of the true interests of this mighty empire—his capacity to observe facts the most minute, which would have escaped every other mind —his ability to reduce them to order and method, and of preventing them from oppressing his mind—the vivacity with which he addressed his audience and the powerful influence of his eloquence; all conjoin in recommending him as an example fit to imitate and worthy of being admired.—(Applause) Mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet. This naturally robust animus and corpus flowes clear and thus furnished with every sort of useful and accurate knowledge, has not in the least degree disinclined him to the cultivation of classical literature. In Scotland we may sometimes look down on studies of the latter kind, and Professors in other countries may have looked on our pursuits with a disregard equally unreasonable. Scholars are more excusable in despising the several studies than philosophers in despising classical literature? It is so far, imperfect philosophy. (Applause) In the multiplicity of his pursuits as a lawyer and a statesman, the authors of antiquity have ever been his study. His genious whispered to him their importance, and he has never failed to listen to

Those ancients, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democratic,
Shook the arsenal, and fulmin'd o'er Greece,
To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.

With singular precision Milton frames to himself eloquence of the highest kind; and the views which he has of its power are of such a sort that they could not be applied even in the eloquence of Cicero. Nothing of ornament or of show, nothing of amusement or delight, is here; all is errible and urges on to battle and victory. You hear of eloquence which wields at will the fierce democracy, carries terror and dismay to the most distant seat of the tyrant, and guards by its energy, Athens and Liberty. That overwhelming species of eloquence which Mr. Brougham has cultivated, has been greatly assisted by his study of the great masters of antiquity. With him eloquence is not a matter of parade or of holiday recreation, not even of elegant pleasure or refined delight, but one of those mighty instruments by which he could excite the feelings of men and convince their understanding, lead them to truth and justice, and root out their prejudices, and conquer their passions. In conclusion, without any derogation from that illustrious person to whom I before alluded, and who knows my admiration of his character, the name of Mr. Brougham may rouse the not less generous ambition of serving our country in public life" (Applause) I give my casting vote to Henry Brougham Esq

Great applause followed this decision, and Mr. Brougham was declared, in the usual form, to be elected Lord Rector of the university of Glasgow.—Sunday Times

EXTRAORDINARY CONTEST.

Helena Scharsegin, the natural daughter of the Emperor Maximilian the Second, was the greatest beauty of her time in Germany. Her extraordinary personal charms naturally attracted admirers. Among these, Rauber, a German baron, and a Spanish nobleman of distinction, solicited her hand; each flattered himself with the hope of becoming the Emperor's son-in-law, both Rauber who was his favourite, and the Spaniard a grandee of the highest rank.

The competition of these two threw the Emperor into the greatest embarrassment. He was unwilling to offend either by a refusal, and yet unable to devise any way of satisfying both. His good genius at length suggested this mode of deciding the matter. He made known to the rival candidates that he who should fairly put his antagonist into a sack, should receive the hand of the beauteous Helena

A day was appointed for the contest, and each of the champions was provided with a sack adapted by measure to the stature of his opponent. Figure to yourself two rivals in the flower of their age contending for such a prize as was here to reward the exertions of the conqueror. Strength and stratagem were alternately employed to obtain the victory. The conflict was long and obstinate. The dexterous German, at length, watching his opportunity, threw his nervous arm about his antagonist, and thrust him with his impetuous passion, and all his Spanish grandezza, into the sack for which he had suffered himself to be measured.

The Emperor was overjoyed at the prowess of his countryman, and rewarded the victor with the possession of the beautiful Helena Scharsegin

CARDINAL RICHLIEU,

Who certainly did not abound in the milkiness of human nature, had once the wisdom and generosity to behave in the following manner:—An officious informer waited upon him, to tell him of some very free expressions that certain persons had made use of against his eminence.—"Why, how now, you rascal!" replied the cardinal, "do you dare to call me all these names to my face, under pretence that they were said by some worthy persons whom I know to have a due respect for me?" Then ringing his bell with great vivience, he said to one of his pages, "Kick that impertinent scoundrel down stairs."

THE HAUNCH OF VENISON.

At Number one dwelt Captain Drew,
George Benson dwelt at Number two;
(The street we'll not now mention)
The latter stunn'd the King's Bench Bar,
The former being lamed in war,
Sung small upon a pension.

Tom Blewitt knew them both—than he
None deeper in the mystery
Of culinary knowledge;
From turtle soup to Stilton cheese,
Apt student, taking his Degrees
In Mrs. Rundell's College.

Benson to dine invited Tom:
Proud of an invitation from
A Host who "spread" so nicely:
Tom answered, ere the ink was dry,
'Extremely happy—come on Fry-
Day next, at six precisely"

Blewitt, with expectation fraught,
Drove up at six, each savoury thought
Ideal Turbot rich in;
But ere he reached the winning-post,
He saw a haunch of venson roast
Down in the next door kitchen.

"Hey! Zounds! what's this? a haunch at Drew's?
I must drop in: I can't refuse:
To pass were downright treason:
To eat Ned Benson's not quite staunch;
But the provocative—a haunch!
Zounds! its the first this season!

"Ven'son, thou'rt mine! I'll talk no more"—
Then rapping thrice at Benson's door;
"John I'm in such a hurry!
Do tell your master that my aunt
Is paralytic, quite aslant,
I must be off for Surrey."

Now Tom at next door makes a din—
"Is Captain Drew at home?" "walk in;"
"Drew, how d'ye do?" "what! Blewitt?"
"Yes, I—you've ask'd me, many a day,
To drop in, in a quiet way,
So now I'm come to do it."

"I'm very glad you have" said Drew,
"I've nothing but an Irish stew"—
Quoth Tom (aside) "no matter,
'Twon't do—my stomach's up to that—
'Twill lie by, till the lucid fat
Comes quivering on the platter."

"You see your dinner Tom"—Drew cried,
"No, but I don't though," Tom replied—
"I smok'd before," "what?"—"Venison—
A Haunch"—"oh! true, it is not mine;
My neighbour has some friends to dine?"—
"Your neighbour! who?"—George Benson."

"His chimney smoked; the scene to change,
I let him have my kitchen range
While his was duly poked'd;
The ven'son you observed below,
Went home just half an hour ago;
I guess its now demolished.

"Tom, why that look of doubtful dread?
Come, help yourself to salt and bread,
Don't sit with hands and knees up;
But dine for once off Irish stew,
And read the "Dog and Shadow" through,
When next you open Æsop."

Upper Canada.

(First Session of the Ninth Parliament)

No. XXVI.

TUESDAY 12th April, 1825.

On motion of Mr WILSON, the petition of John Carey of the Town of York, was brought up.

On motion of Mr. COLEMAN, the petition of John Carey and Francis Collins was brought up.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the petition of John Carey praying for remuneration for services performed, was read and referred to the Committee to whom was referred the Contingent Accounts.

On motion of Mr COLEMAN, the petition of John Carey and Francis Collins praying for remuneration for past services was read, and referred to the Committee on the Contingent Accounts

Agreeably to the order of the day the Supply bill was read the third time, passed and signed, and sent up to the Honourable the Legislative Council for concurrence.

Mr ATTY GENERAL, from the Joint Committee of conference on the subject of the Report of the Commissioners of the pretended Bank of Upper Canada, submitted a report which was read as follows:

The Joint Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Commissioners appointed under the Provincial Statute 4th Geo IV Chap 22nd for settling the affairs of the pretended Bank of Upper Canada and also the petition of John Cumming Esq. and others, praying that they may be relieved from the restriction imposed upon them by the said Statute in respect to the alienation of their real estate have considered the matters referred to them and agreed to the following report:—

The Committee having examined the provisions of the statute above mentioned, and of that passed last session in amendment, and having perused the report of the Commissioners, cannot but express their regret that since the Legislature deemed it expedient to interfere, their interposition should have proved, hitherto, so very ineffectual.

Notwithstanding the measures of the Commissioners, detailed in the present and in their preceding report, the creditors are to this moment wholly unsatisfied, and the only object which the Legislature could have had in view remains unaccomplished. So far as the interests of those persons are concerned, whom it was the desire of the Legislature to protect. It is to little purpose to examine whether the obstacles complained of by the Commissioners as obstructing their proceedings were really unsurmountable and whether in the execution of those powers committed to them, they pursued always the most judicious course.

The great error, in the opinion of the Committee, seems to have been in the particular mode of interference adopted by the Legislature, and although it is probable that most, if not all, of the difficulties which undoubtedly were left in the way of the Commissioners, might, if foreseen have been effectually removed; the Committee are of opinion that a system more simple might have been adopted which would have afforded a speedier and more certain indemnity to the public, with less chance of injury to the Stockholders or directors of institution.

To the last consideration the Committee would not willingly appear to attach too much consequence because they are sensible that the Stockholders, when they created an institution in direct violation of a positive statute are fully answerable for all the bad consequences to the public, though they may have arisen entirely from the misconduct of directors who must have been chosen by themselves, and with respect to the Directors, the same reasoning applies with additional force On the other hand however, as security to the public was most probably the only motive for Legislative interference, the Committee conceive, that course was to be preferred which was likely to attain that object with the least injury to the Association cause the indirect penalty, which, under any law of this kind, would fall upon the Stockholders and Directors, must fall unequally and might very probably be most injurious to those who had the least share in producing the mischief, and who would nevertheless be least willing to endeavour improperly, to evade the consequences.

It appears to the Committee, that instead of taking out of the hands of the association the management of their affairs, it would have been more prudent and every way less objectionable to have enabled them to compel the payment of debts contracted with them and to have made it their interest to settle with their creditors with the least possible delay—taking care to provide an ultimate recourse upon the property of the Stockholders for making good any deficiency

These results, could, in the opinion of the Committee, have been best accomplished by an act containing the provision of the Bill which they now beg leave to report—and which, they are aware, would have been liable to much less exception had it been adopted before interference in another manner had been attempted. The Committee have not failed to consider the objection which may be urged by the Stockholders against putting matters on this footing at so late a period, but at the same time, they are sensible that the Legislature had no other object in view but the protection of the public, and that if they have hitherto failed in extending relief, the persons creating the illegal institution have, neither in the management of it, nor by their conduct since its failure established any claim to a consideration that should now intervene with the public interest

The Committee regret much to find how heavy an expense has been incurred by the Commissioners in the discharge of a very arduous and disagreeable duty imposed on them by the Legislature for which no remuneration whatever was provided, they have examined the accounts which shew that the sum of £744 7 9 has been actually disbursed by the Commissioners from their private means and that for £377 2 11 they are still morally, if not legally, responsible

The propriety of taking this claim of the Commissioners into immediate consideration need not be enforced by the Committee.

NOTICE.

ALL Persons are hereby cautioned against purchasing a Promissory Note given by the Subscriber to one John Adams, or bearer, for Thirty five Dollars payable in January next, as the same was fraudulently obtained.

PETER THUM.
Port Hope, 1st August, 1825.

N. B. The above mentioned Note was given in part payment for a Horse purchased by the Subscriber from the above person, calling himself John Adams, on the First day of August, and, from circumstances manifested since the sale, the Subscriber has reason to believe the said John Adams, or person so calling himself, had stolen the Horse. He was accordingly pursued, and was overtaken; but he escaped from the persons who had him in custody, leaving a bundle of his clothes in their possession.

(Signed)
PETER THUM

Further Notice and Reward of $15.

It appears on a further inquiry that the above mentioned Horse was actually stolen from Mr. Timothy Street, residing West of York, on the Dundas Road, and there is every reason to believe that the person who stole him, and who sold him to Mr P. Thum calling himself John Adams,) is in reality one Henry Helmka, who had been working in Mr. Street's Vicinity, where he called himself by the name of Williams.

This is therefore to give notice. That a reward of $15 will be given to any one who will give such information as the said thief may be apprehended. He appeared about 24 or 25 years of age—5 feet 9 or 10 inches high—dark complexion,—eyes, auld nat, and limps a little in his talk; had on a blue coat, (not very fine) black waistcoat—white pantaloons—and shoes.—He escaped by sticking into the woods near Mr. Bramish's Tavern—Township of Darlington—and it is supposed directed his course Westward.

TEAS DIRECT FROM CHINA.

Public Sale of Teas direct from China.—

THE AGENTS for the Sale of the East India Company's Teas in Canada, hereby give notice, that there will be exposed to public sale at their Stores, in Quebec and Montreal, 6000 Chests and Boxes of Teas, lately arrived from China, consisting of the following Green Teas, viz:—

The former to commence on Monday the 15th, and the latter on Monday the 22d August next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and to continue until the above quantities shall be disposed of. The delay in bringing the Teas to sale arises from the propriety of giving due notice and in order that every package may be opened, its contents examined, and any damaged part removed, conformably to the practise observed in London, which has obtained for the Company's Teas so decided a character for superiority of quality. The conditions will be given in catalogues, to be issued six days previous to the sale, during which time each tenth chest will remain open for the inspection of intending purchasers.

Editorial Commentary.

Success continues to attend the British Arms in the East, and we may shortly expect to hear of a fortunate and triumphant termination being put to the Burmese War

In a sermon lately preached by IRVING, in London, he delivered the following extraordinary dictum:—"It is in the purposes of Providence to consume the PAPACY, but not to reform, or spare it. It is as much the enemy of Christ, in darkness as of light"—and to such a passage from a Presbyterian Minister, we cannot be at much surprised at one of the articles in FATHER MURPHY'S creed which runs to this terrible effect,—"No faith is to be kept with He-retics, though bound by the most sacred oaths; for they have followed S—n, and Luther, and Calvin!" But, it is surely of the nature of blasphemy for one of mere human ordination thus to talk, as if in the secrets and councils of the SUPREME. To those who cannot even think of that GREAT, EVERLASTING, INCOMPREHENSIBLE and ADORABLE BEING, without feeling their own utter unworthiness, there is something so horribly shocking in this species of assumed and wicked familiarity with things so infinitely beyond their grasp, as to want a name

CANADA Shares in London, are at 38 to 39 per cent premium

A very droll mistake appears in a late Albany Gazette—the paragraph runs thus—"The Lt. Governor of Upper Canada, Peter Robinson, arrived at New York, on Wednesday, in the Pantheon, from Liverpool!" We were by no means aware of so rapid a promotion in the person of the worthy Agent al aded to, and confess our utter inability to class this species of Treason against the true Representative of our beloved Sovereign in this Province.

In the battle of Vioches gained by the Greeks on the 17th of April, the Turks left 3000 killed, and 800 wounded, on the field—with 20 standards, and all their artillery. The battle lasted from the dawn of day to 8 o'clock in the afternoon, and was most bravely contested.

HIS MAJESTY has been pleased to direct that three more of the disunited Scotch tities shall be restored,—CARNWATH, ARGILL, and WEMYSS

MR BURDETT has brought in a Private Bill to incorporate the new University of London. It is said the expense, for a student, will not exceed Ten Pounds a year—and that it will be open to all dissenters from the church—MR HUME recommended that the Duke of CUMBERLAND'S son should be educated there among the mechanics and cockneys, who will be graduated in the London University!"

THE remarks of MR. NEILSON in a late Quebec Gazette have called up DR FISHER on the same subject, (Mr. Fothergill's speech in our House of Assembly relative to the Executive publishements) and those eminent combatants appear to be settling to in earnest—As to MR F's remarks, much greater importance has been attached to them, than they merited, and the trifling confusion of the words "I am keen sick," &c by the Reporter, has occasioned a construction which the member who delivered it never intended his speech should bear.—However, DR FISHER is not far wrong in his supposition that the language alluded to by him, as having been used by some papers in November 1823, led to the inference that the Executive had claimed some of MR N's private property within his own walls!—although MR Fothergill never asserted, nor ever dreamt of asserting, that the Executive had actually claimed, and prosecuted their demand upon it

"In his remarks on MR. FOTHERGILL'S speech, the Editor of MR. NEILSON'S Gazette has made a summary of the arguments formerly alled ed by him against our appointment to the present "Quebec Gazette." For our answer, we must refer our readers to the first four or five numbers of this paper. It may be correctly stated, as far as we know, that 'Government never furnished a farthing for the establishment of the Quebec Gazette.' But that paper was established up n the patronage of Government pr mised to it in respect of printing the official documents and it probably never could have been established without such patronage, which as a new paper, was necessary to its very existence. In fact a salary allowed to the death of the proprietor in 1789, shews the kind of patronage it received. We can know nothing now of the freedom of the Quebec Gazette at that period which freedom however, is hardly to be reconciled with the salary and the trammels alluded to. Is it now asserted that MR BROWN never had a commission—never acted under the control of the Government—and that the Government was never suffered to influence the Quebec Gazette?" Upon our words it is, Government must have been a very good natured or a very careless body! Perhaps it was the other way and Government seeming it advisable of the "control and influence of the Quebec Gazette," roused itself, and shook off its fetters and the Gazette at the same moment."

"But the most serious charge comes a charge which has already been disproved, and which has occasioned the mistake under which MR FOTHERGILL labours. 'They managed to induce the present Proprietor to accept the Commission of King's Printer which had never before existed in this Province, and under cover of that Commission they laid claim to his property in the Gazette and did actually deprive him of many of its advantages without complaint, or alleged cause of complaint against the Proprietor'

"It is more surprising than MR FOTHERGILL'S mistake, that a gentleman of MR NEILSON'S age experience and knowledge of the facts, should have written the paragraph above quoted. Next week, we probably may expose the misrepresentations it contains, which we have printed in italics; and we conclude by assuring the Editor in question that if he is not satisfied as we are, with the decision of the Court we shall immediately on his obtaining its reversal lay down our pen and submit to be silenced for ever."

IF report, and from a respectable quarter too, says truly—the arbitrators for settling the claims of the Province on the Lower Province have considered their labours—and we are to have One Fourth, instead of one fifth heretofore allowed of the revenue arising from Import duties. If it be so, and we have no reason to doubt the fact—the thanks of this Province are due to the Honourable WARD CHIPMAN for his assistance in bringing us a little nearer to our just quota; for, we must again repeat that this Province, by the scale of its population, is fully entitled to one third

FRANCE has at length acknowledged the Independence of the Haytian Government.

The preparations for the approaching Ceremony of laying the first Stone of London Bridge, are of a very splendid nature

MR. PEEL we understand, has sent out a commission to Bengal for Major-General Daniell to take the usual oaths as Earl of Carnwath.

WE are pleased to hear that MR. DWYER has been induced to remain in York for a few weeks, to give an entire course of THE LECTURES on the principles and practice of ELOCUTION. His first Lecture will be given in the Ball Room at the Mansion House Hotel this evening, to commence at 8 o'clock. It is in MR D's plan to combine amusement with instruction, by selections of the highest comic, as well as of the deepest tragic, interest—from our greatest poets, as well as from our best dramatic writers—knowing his merit, we have no doubt these Lectures will be duly appreciated by those professional men who may be l it convenient to attend—and such opportunities of practical improvement in the finest, and most commanding, of all arts, seldom occur in this remote corner. We trust the subscription, which is still deficient, will be filled up—as it is but 5$ for the whole course; and, each subscriber has the privilege of introducing a Lady—As MR D has certainly not met with that general patronage in this town which he had reason to expect—we should be pleased to hear that these Lectures were thrown open to the public—at a small advance on the subscription tickets.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Catholic Affairs.—"Without (says the Dublin Evening Post of Saturday, the official organ of the Catholics of Ireland,) trenching in the slightest degree on the late Act of Parliament for the suppression of the Catholic Association; on the contrary, grounding the measure on that very Act—it is intended to revive that body. A resolution to this purpose will be proposed, and no doubt will be passed, at the next aggregate meeting. Means will also be taken under the Act to collect the Catholic Rent." This paragraph is curious.

Unitarian Marriage Bill.—On the 3d June, the Unitarian Marriage Bill was thrown out of the HOUSE OF COMMONS by a MAJORITY of four.

£6,000 per annum, has been granted to the Duke of Cumberland for the education of his son

£20,000 has been voted for a compensation to the Americans for slaves carried off in the war.

MR. POOLE who writes for the stage recovered £80 damages from Ellision the manager at Drury Lane for an assault.

Singular Fortunes.—Mr. Walker, the sugar baker, who died worth £250,000 a few years since, was originally porter to a wax chandler, with wages of £16 a year Alderman Kennet, afterwards Lord Mayor, was in early life a waiter at the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes tavern, Hatton Garden. Alderman Bates, and the amiable Alderman Smith, both kept public houses, and the latter had been also a gentleman's waiter. Crosby the pason maker, was originally a charcoal boy, and died a few years ago worth £600,000. There is a pavior now or recently living in London, who is worth £250,000. The famous Mr. Rothschild, who has been called the "King of Jews and the Jew of Kings," was a dealer in Manchester cloths, originally, and now possesses millions, and is the prime mover of all the most important loans in Europe.

McGregor.—The Cacique of Poyais, it appears, still governs his dominions on the Mosquito shore, though he does not possess a single foot of land in any quarter of America. His Highness now resides at Paris, and there maintains the government which the King of the Mosquitors has prevented him from exercising in his own proper states.

Effects of Temperance.—We find, from the registers of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, that as a consequence of their temperance, one half of those that are born live to the age of 57 years, whereas Dr. Price tells us, that of the general population of London, half that are born live only 22 years. Among the Quakers, 1 in 10 arrives to 80 years of age; of the general population of London, only 1 in 40. Never did a more powerful argument support the practice of temperance and virtue.—Medical Intelligencer.

Irish Mines.—Captain Vivian, the great Cornish Mine Captain, has passed through Cork on his way from the Andley Mines to the Mines of Knockmahon, Co. Waterford. Captain V. is on a tour of survey for the Mining Company of Ireland, to introduce the newest improvement of the Cornish system of working, from which we augur the most happy results to the country at large, but more particularly in the developement of the rich mines on the estate of Baron Lord Andley.—South. Reporter.

Cork Jacket, or Cork Waistcoat.—A Mr. Dubourg, of London, a gentleman very fond of swimming, but subject to the cramp, was led to consider of some method by which he might enjoy his favourite diversion with safety. The result was an improvement in the cork waistcoat. His consists of four pieces of cork, two for the breast, and two for the back, each pretty near in length and breadth to the quarters of a waistcoat without flaps; the whole is covered with coarse canvass, with two holes to put the arms through: There is a space left between the two back pieces, and the same between each back and breast piece, that they may sit the easier to the body. Thus the waistcoat is only open before, and may be fastened on the wearer with strings, or if it is thought more secure, with buckles and leather straps. It does not weigh above 12 ounces. Mr. Dubourg tried his waistcoat in the Thames, and found that it not only supported him on the water, but that two men could not sink him, though they used their utmost efforts for that purpose. If those who use the sea occasionally, and especially those who are obliged to be almost continually there, were to have those waistcoats, it would be next to impossible that they should be drowned. It would also be of vast service to those who, for the sake of health, bathe in the sea; and even the most delicate and timorous young lady might, by the help of one of these jackets, venture into a rough sea.

Irish Fidelity.—It is stated in a European paper, that during the late discussions of the Catholic question in one of his examinations, Dr. Doyle disclosed with great candour and frankness, an historical exposition of the highest interest. It was unknown, before, that until the death of the last of the Stuarts, the Pretender had always nominated to the vacant Sees in Ireland. The English government, with all its gold, had never been able to get at this secret; and, when we reflect that it was, perhaps, in the keeping of ten thousand individuals, so admirable an example of guarded fidelity towards the legitimate sovereign recalls to recollection, that the only General of Maria Therese, whom the King of Prussia despaired of being able to corrupt, was an Irishman; and that Louis XVI. had no more faithful defenders than the Irish attached to his service.—Al. Gaz.

LONDON, JUNE 6.

Lady Morgan.—An inquest was held on the body of Lady Mary Morgan, late of Upper Seymour Street. Her Ladyship had been for some time at variance with her family on pecuniary affairs, which her sister being anxious to remove, called on her a short time since, but she seemed inexorable. However, on her departure, deceased appearing to relent, her attendant sent to the Lady, when she again called; but the deceased declined any concession, appeared much dejected, and in the evening retired to her chamber, locking herself in; and late the next morning, a noise was heard in her room, when the servant entered and found her lying on the floor, with part of a cambric handkerchief round her neck, and the remainder affixed to the lath of the bed stead, her weight having broke it. Dr Hullin was immediately fetched, but the body was cold and lifeless. Verdict,—Temporary Derangement.

EAST INDIES.

The following paragraphs are extracted from the Calcutta John Bull, received by the last arrivals from India:—

Chittagong, Feb 6.—The enemy have evacuated the Mengdos Stockade, and shewn great prudence in so doing, for the approach of our gun boats, and an intercepting force up the river Mengdon, left their body, about a thousand strong, much exposed

We still grow incredibly annoyed: we have, now, ships, guns, and gun boats, adequate to the conquest; all is, therefore, straight forward. The Burmese have no serious intention of resisting us. We may now conclude, and negociate a peace on our own terms. We have plenty of provisions

Every arrival from Egypt confirms the previous accounts of the plague having manifested itself in that country. A letter was received this forenoon from the Agent to Lloyd's at Mitford, dated Sunday, which states the arrival at that port of the Dalmarnock, Portages, and the Unity, from Alexandria, all with bad clean or suspected bills of health, as cases of plague were occasionally occurring in that city

Natural History.

Faithfulness of the Dog.—The extraordinary fidelity of the dog has excited the wonder and admiration of every age—A more singular and exemplary instance has perhaps never been recorded than is now witnessed at the gates of the Fleet prison. It is known that the regulations of the prison prohibit the admission of these sagacious animals into the interior, two of them therefore, following their masters to this abode, were stopped at the door near to which they have ever since remained their exclusive More than once during the period of their imprisonment the owners have been severally removed by Habeas to the King's Bench, and each time they were regularly attended by their faithful friends, which, during their sojourn there, remained as near to them as possible. One of them in particular, is never absent many minutes together from the gates of the Fleet, nor has it been for nearly three years—the duration of its unfortunate master's incarceration. Surely it would not be too much to relax the prison regulations and reward such unprecedented and unwanted faithfulness by admitting these poor animals to share the company of their masters.—London Paper.

Anecdotes.

LATE KING OF PRUSSIA.

The late king of Prussia rung his bell one day and nobody answered. He opened the door and found the page asleep on the sofa. He was going to wake him when he perceived the end of a billet sticking out of his pocket. He had the curiosity to know the contents; he took and read it. It was a letter from his mother, who thanked him for having sent her a part of his wages, to assist her in distress, and besought God to bless him in his filial goodness. The King returned to his room took a roller of ducats, and slid them with the letter into the page's pocket. Returning to his apartment, he rang so violently that the page awaked and entered. "You have slept well," said the King. The page made an apology, and in his embarrassment he happened to put his hands into his pocket, and felt with astonishment the paper of money. He drew it out, turned pale, and looking at the king burst into tears without being able to speak a word—"What is the matter" said the King, "what ails you?" "Ah! Sire, said the young man, throwing himself at his feet, "Somebody would wish to ruin me—I know not how this money came into my pocket" "My friend," said the King, "God often sends us good in our sleep, "give it to thy mother, salute her in my name, and tell her I will take care of her and you—Oxford Gazette.

ARCH DUKE CHARLES.

When the Archduke Charles was on his way from Bohemia, to take command of the Austrian army, he met near the scene of action a number of wounded soldiers, who had been abandoned by their commander on the road, for want of horses to draw their carriages in their retreat The prince, who on many occasions has exhibited striking instances of humanity, immediately ordered the horses to be taken from several pieces of cannon, that were already retreating, saying, "the life of one brave man is better worth preserving, than fifty pieces of ordnance" When General Moreau, into whose hands the cannon thus abandoned had fallen, heard of the motive that had prompted the sacrifice, he ordered the whole to be restored, observing, that he should be unworthy of being the opponent of his imperial highness if he took an advantage of so noble an act of humanity

Iron Company.—The reports respecting this Company's having succeeded in their endeavours not to say very well founded. Some difficulty was made about passing their act of incorporation, but the result is not known: and as Sir James Kempt and other persons connected with this Province are in England, they will perhaps be able to satisfy his Majesty's Ministers, that it was not intended to interfere, with the prerogatives of the crown

Parliamentary Register,

(First Session of the Ninth Parliament)
No. XXVII.

TUESDAY 12th April, 1825.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Reuben Alward, reported a bill for his relief, which was received and read the first time.

On motion of the ATTY GENERAL, the bill for the relief of Reuben Alward, was read a second time and committed.

The Chairman reported the bill without amendment.

The Report was ordered to be received, and the bill to be engrossed and read a third time that day.

Mr MATTHEWS, from the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Mille Allen, reported as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the Petition of Mille Allen, beg leave to Report as follows:

That from the matter contained in the Petition, and which your Committee have no reason to disbelieve, the conduct of the Magistrates, Commissioners in the Court of Request, before whom the trial mentioned in the Petition was heard, and determined, was highly exceptionable: and they cannot but observe that the issuing of the execution so long after the judgment obtained against the unfortunate Petitioner, and the circumstances which attended the sale of her stove for so small a sum, and the assumption of that property by one of the said Magistrates, give the transaction a very unfavourable appearance From the poverty of the Petitioner and from the belief entertained by your Committee that much injustice arises from those inferior jurisdictions, your Committee recommend that His Excellency should be addressed to make such inquiries as may afford a ground for redressing the grievances of the Petitioner, and checking such oppression in the future

J MATTHEWS,
CHAIRMAN.

Commons House of Assembly, 12th April, 1825.

On motion of Mr. MATTHEWS it was ordered, that an Address should be presented to His Excellency, with a copy of the Petition of Mille Allen, requesting him to direct such an inquiry into the truth of the facts alledged, as may enable His Excellency to order restitution by the justices, and check such oppression for the future; and that the forty-first rule be dispensed with as to the same, and that Messrs. Hamilton and Lefferty be a Committee to draft and report said address.

Mr Boulton, Master in Chancery, brought down from the Honourable the Legislative Council the bill entitled, "An Act to alter and amend the Laws now in force, for regulating the Commercial Intercourse between this Province and the United States by Land or Inland Navigation and to make further provision for the same," which they had passed without amendment and withdrew.

Mr LEFFERTY, from the Committee to draft an Address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, on the subject of the Petition of Mille Allen, reported a draft which was received and read the first time.

Mr. MATTHEWS moved for the second reading of the Address respecting the Petition of Mille Allen.

On which the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken, were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs Beardsly, Clark, Coleman, Fothergill, Hamilton, Hornor, Ingersol, Lefferty, Matthews, McBride, McCall, Playter, Randal, Rolph, Scollick and White.—16.

Mr. Speaker,

M. this day.

WM. DUMMER POWELL.
SPEAKER.

Legislative Council Chamber, 12th April, 1825.

On motion of Mr MORRIS, the request of the Honourable the Legislative Council for a conference on the Supply Bill, was acceded to, and Messrs. Hamilton Walker, Wilkinson and Clark were appointed a Committee for that purpose.

A message was then sent to inform the Honourable the Legislative Council of the same.

The House went again into Committee on the Address to His Excellency on the subject of the Petition of Mille Allen

The Chairman reported the Address without amendment.

The Report was ordered to be received

On motion of Mr MATTHEWS, the Address was order to be engrossed and read a third time that day

Mr MORRIS moved, that an humble Address should be presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the subject of the loan offered by His Majesty's Government to open a Canal between the Ottawa river and Kingston, and that the thirty second rule should be dispensed with to enable him to move for the said address, which was ordered.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the bill for the relief of Reuben Alward was read the third time, passed and signed, and sent up to the Honourable the Legislative Council for concurrence

Mr HAMILTON from the Committee appointed to confer with a Committee of the Honourable the Legislative Council, on the subject matter of the bill entitled, "An Act granting to His Majesty a sum of money in aid of the funds for defraying the expenses of the Administration of Justice and support of the Civil Government of this Province," reported as follows:

Instructions prepared by the Honourable the Legislative Council for their Committee of Conference on the bill entitled, "An Act granting to His Majesty a sum of money in aid of the funds for defraying the expense of the Administration of Justice and support of the Civil Government of this Province."

The Legislative Council have desired this Conference, to acquaint the House of Assembly, that on considering the Bill sent up from that House, entitled, "An Act granting to His Majesty a sum of money in aid of the funds for defraying the expense of the Administration of Justice and support of the Civil Government of this Province," they find that the proposed appropriation falls much below the estimate for the required services, as appears from the estimate laid on their table by the command of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor.

The Legislative Council being entirely unacquainted with the grounds and reasons of this difference are desirous of being made acquainted with such information as the House of Assembly may be inclined to furnish, and which may have induced that House to depart from the estimate.

Agreeably to the order of the day the address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the subject of the petition of Mille Allen was read the third time.

On the Question for passing the address the House divided, and the Yeas and Nays being taken were as follows:

NAYS.—Messrs. Atkinson, Att'y General, Beasly, Coleman, Gordon, Ingersol, D Jones, Lyons, Morris, Peterson, Thompson, Walker, Walsh, Wilkinson and White.—15.

The Question was decided in the negative by a majority of three and lost accordingly.

Leave was granted Mr. MORRIS, to bring in an address to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor on the subject of the loan offered by His Majesty's Government to open a Canal between the Ottawa River and Kingston, and the address was read the first time.

On motion of Mr MORRIS, the address was read the second time and committed.

The House resumed the Black Rod being at the door.

Mr Boulton, Master in Chancery, brought down from the Honourable the Legislative Council the Bill entitled, "An Act to authorize the Justices of the Home District to raise a further sum by loan to be applied in completing a Gaol and Court House for said District." And the bill entitled, "An Act for the relief of Reuben Alward," which they had passed without amendment; also the Bill entitled, "An Act to repeal the several Laws now in force relating to the late pretended Bank of Upper Canada and to make further provision for settling the affairs of that institution," which the Honourable the Legislative Council had passed, and to which he was directed to request the concurrence of the House of Assembly, and having retired, the Bill sent down by the Honourable the Legislative Council, respecting the late pretended Bank of Upper Canada, was read the first time.

Mr MORRIS moved, that the Bill sent down from the Honourable the Legislative Council entitled, "An Act to repeal the several Laws now in force relating to the late pretended Bank of Upper Canada and to make further provision for settling the affairs of that institution," be read a second time to morrow, and the 41st rule be dispensed with for that purpose.

In amendment Mr ROLPH moved, that after the word "moves" all be expunged and the following words be inserted, that the Bill entitled, "An Act to repeal the several Laws now in force, relating to the late pretended Bank of Upper Canada and to make further provision for settling the affairs of that institution," sent down from the Honourable the Legislative Council, be read a second time this day six months.

NOTICE.

ALL Persons are hereby cautioned against purchasing a Promissory Note given by the Subscriber to one John Adams, or bearer, for Thirty-five Dollars payable in January next, as the same was fraudulently obtained

(Signed)
PETER THUM.
Port Hope, 1st August, 1825.

N. B. The above mentioned Note was given in part payment for a Horse purchased by the Subscriber from the above person, calling himself John Adams, on the First day of August, and, from circumstances manifested since the sale, the Subscriber has reason to believe the said John Adams, or person so calling himself, had stolen the Horse.—He was accordingly pursued, and was overtaken; but he escaped from the persons who had him in custody, leaving a bundle of his clothes in their possession.

(Signed)
PETER THUM.

Further Notice and Reward of $15.

It appears on a further inquiry that the above mentioned Horse was actually stolen from Mr. Timothy Street, residing West of York, on the Dundas Road, and there is every reason to believe that the person who stole him, and who sold him to Mr. P. Thum (calling himself John Adams,) is in reality one Henry Heimka, who had been working in Mr Street's Vicinity, where he called himself by the name of Williams.

This is therefore to give notice That a reward of $15 will be given to any one who will give such information as the said thief may be apprehended. He appeared about 24 or 25 years of age—5 feet 9 or 10 inches high—dark complexion,—eyes, and hair, and lisps a little in his talk; had on a blue coat, (not very fine) black waistcoat—white pantaloons—and shoes.—He escaped by striking into the woods near Mr. Beamish's Tavern—Township of Darlington—and it is supposed directed his course Westward

Editorial Commentary.

Our stock of large paper being exhausted, we are under the necessity of using a smaller size until the arrival of a fresh supply, of which we are in daily expectation As long as we are favoured with so many advertisements, and to compensate our country subscribers, we shall continue to publish, a Supplement, as we have done this week.

THE Parliamentary Register for the last Session is completed in the present number

By the last arrivals from Europe, just received, we have some highly interesting articles of intelligence

THE relatives of an Officer, serving in our army, against the Burmese, resident in Bath, have received a letter stating that the KING and QUEEN of AVA, with an IMMENSE TREASURE, have been captured in a Fort where they had taken refuge; and, that the writers share of prize money, though of no higher rank than a Lieutenant, was estimated at £18,000!—

ODYSSEUS, the Greek Traiter, has been taken at the head of his Turkish corps, and will probably suffer death—800 Turks surrendered with him In their revengeful rage the Infidels, that escaped; massacred all the Christians in their power!

But these events are of minor importance when compared with the following intelligence from Trieste, under date of June 7

"A Message of Joy for the Hellenes!—I wrote to you on the 31st of May, that reports were spread here of many victories gained by the Greeks, but I would not relate them to you before the confirmation arrived. Now, however, I can tell you, as certain, and free from all doubt, that on Wednesday, the 6th [18th] of May, towards midnight, and at daylight on Thursday, the 7th [19th.] the glorious and holy day of the assumption, the brave Greeks burned the whole of the remainder of the Egyptian fleet in the port of Navarino. At the same time, the troops under the President Conduriotti and Mavromichaelis fell on the Egyptian army, beat it completely, and made themselves masters of their camp. Few, very few, Egyptians, escaped to Modon. This glorious and unexampled victory has freed Navarino from the enemy.—We have also learned, as certain, that Mahomid Ali, the Satrap of Egypt, is dead. If it be not true that he is already dead, he will die on learning the entire destruction of his formidable expedition, which we have confirmed from all quarters."

The foregoing highly important article is from the London Courier. And, in addition to it, we have the following confirmatory paragraph from the Paris Etoile of the 17th of June:

"The Gazettes of Leghorn and Genoa announce the arrival in those ports of vessels from the Ionian islands, which confirm all the accounts brought to Trieste by the Corfu packet boat via the destruction of the Egyptian fleet, and the shutting up of the remains of Ibrahim's army in Modon"

The Nuremburgh Correspondent of the 14th of June, also states, "that accounts have been received at Ancona, and other parts of Italy, of the defeat of the Egyptian fleet by Admiral Miaulis, who is represented to have burnt a considerable portion of the ships which composed it, on the shores of the Morea, where the Turkish fleet from Constantinople, under the Captain Pacha, was daily expected" With all these statements before us, there can be no doubt that the Almighty has again crowned the patriotic Greeks with a series of signal successes over their moslem oppressors.

"The fleet of the Greeks, amounting to 100 sail including fire ships, had separated into three squadrons. The first has gone to meet the fleet from Constantinople, composed of two large frigates, six corvettes, and thirty-two smaller vessels, which is between Tenedos and Mytelene This division has surprised 21 Russian and Austrian vessels, laden with provisions, which they were carrying to Negropont Patras, and Lepanto. They have been all taken, and were brought into Napoli di Romania

"The second squadron has gone to block up, in Suda, the Egyptian fleet of 90 sail, viz —50 ships of war, and 40 transports. It has made four attempts to get out, the 17th, 21st, 28th, and 29th April, but has been always forced to put back. In these various attacks a Turkish brig has been burnt by the Greeks; a frigate had its rigging burnt, and most of the crew leaping in their fright into the sea, were taken prisoners.

"The third squadron was destined to take on board, and convey to Missolonghi, the troops of Tino, which are in the Morea, and was then to crusie on the coast of Western Greece

A corps of the enemy's troops, commanded by the celebrated Mustapha Bey, endeavouring to penetrate into the western part of Livadia, was beaten on the 22d and 24th April, by Gouras, who repulsed it to Zeitouni, and took many prisoners

"The most complete union prevails throughout all Greece. A commission of eight members has been ordered to present to the Government, in eight days, a plan for the organization of a corps of 10,000 or 12 000 regular troops. Odysseus has surrendered himself to the government."

SEVERAL other articles of foreign interest must be reserved for our next.

A Bill has passed the House of Commons making the crime of throwing Oil of Vitriol and Aqua Fortis upon people, a capital offence

MR. WATT has sold his horse Mennon to the DUKE OF WELLINGTON for the enormous sum of Nine Thousand Guineas!!

It is said to be in agitation to restore SIR ROBERT WILSON to his rank in the army, at which all unprejudiced men must rejoice

NOTWITHSTANDING great efforts were made to procure a pardon, Probert, the infamous accomplice of Thurtell, in the murder of Mr Weir, has been executed for horse-stealing—It was found impossible to obtain even a respite It is said that he also was the son of an alderman of Norwich.

CONSIDERABLE bets were depending whether Parliament would be prorogued or dissolved

It seems, after all, that an engagement, backed by a wager of 5,000 guineas, is actually to take place in England, between the Lion Nero, and a number of Mastiffs of the old breed

COL. FORREST, the author of a Tour on the Ganges and Jumna, in the East Indies, has announced for Publication in London "A Picturesque Tour through the Province of Lower and Upper Canada" At which we cannot but rejoice, as it must contribute towards making this fine country better known.

THE Kingston Chronicle informs us that "About 600 of the settlers under Mr. Robinson's superintendence, left this place on Wednesday, in the Frontenac, for Cobourg; we understand they are to be located in the townships of Douro, Emily, and Verulam The orderly manner in which they embarked, and the affecting leave they took of the Surgeons who came out with them, are convincing proofs of their agreeable disposition and goodness of heart In short, the behaviour of the whole 2,000 since their arrival at this place, has been highly commendable, and we have no doubt of their proving valuable settlers

It is very much to be lamented, that the lower classes of the people of this Province are so generally ignorant of the terrible responsibility in which persons are involved, who attempt to conceal the pregnancy, and delivery, of a woman having a bastard child; as there is reason to fear it is not an uncommon offence. By the 21st of JAMES I. c 27. and which is here in force, "the mother of a bastard child, concealing its death, must prove by one witness that the child was born dead; otherwise such concealment shall be evidence of her having murdered it" A very melancholy case of this nature occurred last week in this town, in the person of a young woman, otherwise of considerable merit as a servant; who, after repeatedly denying her state of pregnancy, was privately delivered of a fine male child, which was discovered in a Privy, on the following morning. A Coroner's Inquest was held upon the body of the hapless infant, and a verdict of "Concealment and Wilful Murder" against the unfortunate mother, was returned The miserable young woman contrived to make her escape from those who had her in custody, at the very moment of her committal to gaol, and has not since been heard of

WE have to acknowledge the receipt of a beautiful and original Poem, entitled, "Evening" by "an unfortunate" (and surely we may add accomplished)—Lover of the Muses" which has too much merit to be denied a place in our next delivery; although it is rather too long for our columns — Any further comment must be deferred 'till next week, when the poem shall be published

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

A Bill entitled "The Canada Tenures Bill." passed the House of Commons on the 20th of May last, the substance of which is contained in the following extract from the Canadian Spectator.

"According to this law, Seigniors holding of the Crown may change their title of the ungranted lands of their seigniories into that of free and common soccage, on the conditions fixed by Government; and an appropriation of land for the Protestant Clergy is not necessary

"Censitaires and others holding from Seigniors, may also change their tenure into that of free and common soccage, and extinguish all feudal burdens, for an indemnity agreed on between the parties, or awarded by "experts," if the Seignior refuses to act, by a judgement of court.

"Due notice in all cases is to be given for persons interested in the lands, to oppose the change

"These lands, the tenure of which shall be so changed, and all lands hitherto granted, and to be granted, by the Crown, in free and common soccage, are, as to alienation, descent and dower, and in all other particulars, to be subject to the English law existing respecting this tenure.

"Commissioners are to be appointed for trying the fact of performance or non performance of conditions upon which lands have been granted by the Crown; and lands where conditions are found not to be performed, to escheat to the Crown.

"The Bishop of Quebec is to surrender to the Crown Clergy Reserves, where a surrender is deemed necessary by government, for lands of equal value and extent

"The Island of Anticosti, and certain parts of Labrador are to be connected to Lower Canada."

Lambeth and the Vatican, or anecdotes of the Church of Rome of the reformed churches, and wars and sectaries.

A very entertaining miscellany has lately been published under the above title, from which the following curiosity is extracted; it appears in the Parish Regi ter of Bermondsey, in 1604 "August—The forme of a solemn vowe made betwixt a man and his wife, the same having been long absent, through which the woman being married to another man, took her again as followeth;"—

The Man's Speech.—Elizabeth my beloved wife, I am right sorie that I have so long absented myself from thee, whereby thou shouldst be occasioned to take another man for thy husbande; therefore I do nowe vowe and promise in the sight of God and of this companie, to take thee again as my owne, and not onlie forgive thee, but also dwell with thee, and do all other duties unto thee as I promised at our marriage

The Woman's Speech.—Ralphe, my beloved husbande I am right sorrie that I have in thy absence, taken another man to be my husbande; but here before God and the companie I do renounce and forsake him, and do promise to keep myself onlie unto thee during life, and to perform all the duties of a first promised vowe done during marriage

The Prayer.—Almighty God, we beseech thee pardon our offences, and give us grace ever hereafter to live together in thy feare, and to performe the holy duties of marriage one to another according as we are taught in thy holie worde; forthy dear sonn's sake, Jesus amen

"The vow concluded thus.—The first day of August, 1604 Ralphe Goodchild, of the Parish of Barking, in Thames Street, and Elizabeth his wife, were agreed to live together and thereupon gave their hands one to another making either of them a solemn vowe so to do in presence of

"William Stere, Parson,
"Edward Coker, and
"Richard Eire, Clerk

"This difficult case of conscience must be left to the casuists, The poor abbandoned husband renounce does not appear in the lessons this renunciation of the lady was to be expect-ed in his acquiesced in the transfer"

Foreign Illustrious!—It is remarkable that all the English Monarchs who have wedded French Princesses have met an untimely end. Edward the Second, who married Isabella of France, was murdered in the most cruel manner, by Gurney and Mautravers, at Berkeley Castle Richard the Second, married also to a Princess named Isabella, by Sir Piers Eaton and accomplices, at Pontfret Castle, or, as thought by Some, starved to death there. Henry the Sixth killed in the Tower, as said, by Richard Duke of Gloucester; and Charles the Second, who married Henrietta Maria daughter of Henry the Fourth, beheaded in front of the Palace, at Whitehall.

ON JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

The following account of the famous South Sea schemes extracted from a very scarce publication intitled "the Chronicle of the King's of England from the Norman conquest until the present time, written in the manner of the antient Jewish Historians;" by NATHAN BEN SAMUL, a Priest of the Jews, Birmingham. 1772" It may be new to some of our readers and not inapplicable to the present times. Edit. In speaking of the reign of George I. the writer says:—

"And it did hold it came to pass in these days, that a strong delusion was sent amongst them, and all the people of the land were stricken with madness.

"They looked towards the Southern Sea, and behold a surprising bubble arose on the surface of the water; its circumference filled the firmament of heaven, and its height reached unto the clouds.

"And in the midst of the bubble were seen the appearance of sumptuous palaces, fine gardens, gilt chariots, gold, silver and precious stones, and whatsoever the heart of man could desire

"And the people ran together in crowds saying, we will be rich; we will all be lords and princes of the earth.

"Many also disposed of their lands and their houses, their goods and their merchandize, their plate, their jewels and their clothes, in order to purchase the shadows in the bubble.

"How beit the delusion began to abate, and whilst they were looking, lo the bubble brakes and all the gay appearances vanished into smoke!

"Then were heard weeping and wailings, and bitter lamentations: he whose delusive dream had fattened him with delicious gardens and a sumptuous palace, awaked to find himself in a wretched garret, or sweeping those walks which he had planted for himself; he whose gilt liveries had glittered in his imagination, is compelled for want to wear one himself; and he who fed on venison at a guinea a mouth, now dines in Pudding Lane on a twopenny chop

"But woe unto you managers, woe unto you bubblers, woe unto you the directors thereof! for the miseries of the land are at your doors, the cries of the poor are against you; the ruin of thousands compell them to curse you, and the vengeance of heaven shall fall heavy on your heads

What kind of Meats are most digestible.—Illustrated by Sir Astley Cooper's experiments

Exp. 1—Four dogs were severally made to swallow two parts long and narrow, of pork mutton, veal, and beef. On killing them an hour afterwards, the pork had lost ten parts, the mutton nine, the veal four and the beef none

Exp. 2—Four dogs were made severally to swallow the same portions of the same meats, and were killed in two hours The mutton had lost 16 parts, the beef 34, the veal 31, and the pork 20

Exp. 3—Four dogs had the same quantities and were killed in three hours. The pork had lost 98, the mutton 97, the beef 37, and the veal 46

Exp 4—Four dogs had the same quantities, and were killed in four hours. The pork was wholly digested, the mutton had lost 94, the beef 76, and the veal 69.

Exp 5—Four dogs were severally made to swallow two nuts, long and narrow, of beef, rabbit, cod fish, and cheese. They were killed in two hours, when it was found that the beef had lost none, the rabbit none, the cod fish 74, and the cheese 20

Exp 6—Six dogs were severally made to swallow 100 parts of muscle, skin, cristle, sinew, bone, and fat They were killed in 4 hours, and it was found that the fat was all digested; the muscle had lost 36; the skin 22; the gristle 21; the sinews 8; and the bone 6 In another experiment, the whole of the bone was digested in 6 hours

These experiments, performed by Sir Astley Cooper, show that the stomach of a dog can more easily digest pork and fish than other meats; and we see no experimental nor hypothetical reason why it should not be the same with the human stomach and that of all carnivorous and omnivorous animals. Until similar and equally effectious experiments be performed upon the human stomach, we cannot dispute this. Would it not be proper, for the general benefit of mankind, to try such experiments on criminals executed for murder?

Foreign Intelligence.

UNITED STATES

The cannons, balls, &c. belonging to the United States, near lake Ontario and Champlain, are soon to be transported to the arsenals on the sea coast. The English government are also collecting their ordnance, &c. from different posts in Upper Canada, and transporting the same below. These movements indicate that the two governments have the strongest confidence that the amicable relations which exist between them will not soon be interrupted.—Buffalo Emporium.

Birds of America.—Mr Charles Lucien Buonaparte has published in this city the first volume of his Supplement to Wilson's American Ornithology, in a style worthy of the subject Mr Say's Entomology was supposed to be the most splendidly executed book that had appeared from the American press Wilson's work, until Mr. Say's, took the lead, but Mr Buonaparte's exceeds in magnificence both of those publications.—Philadelphia paper.

FRANCE AND HAYTI.

Acknowledgement of the Independence of Saint Domingo by France.—This intelligence which is fully confirmed by yesterday's American mail, is one of the most extraordinary events of the present times St Domingo at the breaking out of the French Revolution, was the richest and most flourishing Colony of France, and indeed one of the finest of European possessions in the West Indies It was lost in consequence of the proclaiming the freedom of the Blacks, and the subsequent war with England It was attempted to be recovered by Buonaparte, at the Peace of Amiens, and twenty or thirty thousand French troops were sacrificed in the enterprize, which was entirely frustrated by the recommencement of the war between France and England Since the restoration of the Bourbons, they have intrigued and treated to regain the Colony, and now, they finally acknowledge its independence The negociation was carried on and completed at Portau Prince, under the guns of 2 French ships of the line, 7 frigates and 5 smaller ships of war, on all 14, and finally terminated with great demonstrations of joy and friendship by both parties.

St Domingo, or Hayti as it is now called, contains upwards of half a million of souls, nearly all Blacks. Its independence has never been acknowledged even by the United States, by England or any of the South American Republics. The French King, a legitimate Bourbon, a Member of the Holy Alliance, is the first to acknowledge that independence; and introduces his ci-devant Colony of revolted Negroes to rank among the nations of the world. We do not blame him; but we wonder It is conformable to the principles of the Holy Alliance, no doubt, that a legitimate sovereign may dispose of his subjects as he sees fit; as may sell them, exchange them, turn them over to others, the same as any other chattels; but that he should acknowledge their right of governing themselves, acquired by resistance to legitimate authority, is certainly new in modern times

The legitimate Bourbon Government of former times was notorious for bad faith and intrigue; belonging to the Holy Alliance there can be nothing of that kind in the French Government now; the poor Negroes had perhaps, however, as well look to their liberty, and not be over enthusiastic.—England, who has a great many Colonies in the West Indies a great majority of the population of which is black, had as well look to it, particularly in the event of another war; the South American States have also a large proportion of their population Blacks. The French Bourbons, the elder Branch of the Family of the beloved Ferdinand, will by this act acquire a preponderating influence among the black population of the West Indies and South America and they may not be over scrupulous in using it.—Quebec Gazette.

HISTORICAL.

Cromwell's mode of Proroguing Parliament.

The following is Lord Leicester's account of Cromwell's interference with Parliament in 1653

"Wednesday, April 20.—The parliament sitting as usual, and being on debate upon the bill with the amendments which it was thought would have bin passed that day, the Lord General Cromwell came into the house, clad in plain black clothes, with gray worsted stockings, and sate down as he used to do in an ordinary place. After a while he rose up, put off his hat, and spake; at the first to the commendation of the parliament, for their pains and care of the public good; but afterwards he changed his style told them of theyr injustice, delays of justice, self interest, and other faults; then he sayd, "Perhaps you think this is not Parliamentary language, I confess it is not, neither are you to expect such from me," then he put on his hat, went out of his place, and walked up and down the stage or floore in the middest of the house, with his hat on his head, and chid them soundly, looking sometimes, and pointing particularly upon some persons, as Sir R Whitlock, one of the Commissioners of the Great Seale, Sir Henry Vane, to whom he gave very sharpe language, though he named them not, but by his gestures it was well known that he meant them. After this he sayd to Coronell Harrison, (who was a member of the house,) 'Call them in,' then Harrison went out, and presently brought in Lieutenant Collonell Worsley, (who commanded the Generall's own regiment of foote,) with five or six files of musqueteers, about 20 or 30, with theyr musquets, then the Generall, pointing to the Speaker in his chayre, sayd to Harrison, 'Fetch him down;' Harrison went to the Speaker, and spoke to him to come down, but the Speaker sate still and sayd nothing. 'Take him down,' said the General; then Harrison went and pulled the Speaker by the gown, and he came downe. It happened that day, that Algernon Sydney sate next to the Speaker on the right hand; the General sayd to Harrison, 'Put him out,' Harrison spake to Sydney to go out but he sayd he would not go out, and sate still. The Generall sayd again, 'Put him out;' then Harrison and Wortley put theyr hands upon Sydney's shoulders, as if they would force him to go out, then he rose and went towards the doore. Then the Generall went to the table where the mace lay, which used to be carried before the Speaker, and sayd, 'Take away these baubles,' so the soldiers took away the mace, and all the house went out; and at the going out, they say, the Generall sayd to young Sir Henry Vane, calling him by his name, that he might have prevented this extraordinary course, but he was a jugler, and had not so much as common honesty.—All being gone out the doore of the house was locked, and the key with the mace was carried away; as I heard, by Corronell Otley."

RURAL ECONOMY.

To prevent mildew in wheat.—Salt one part, water eight parts With this mixture sprinkle the diseased corn. Where the corn is sown in drills, this may be done with a watering pot; but the best and most expeditious mode is with a flat brush, such as white washers use, having a tin collar made water tight round the bottom, to prevent the mixture dropping down. The operator having a pail of salt and water in one hand, and dipping the brush into the mixture with the other, makes his regular casts, as when sowing corn broad-cast; in this way he will readily get over ten acres in the day. About two hogsheads will do the acre: wherever the mixture touches, in three or four days the mildew will disappear, and upon those parts that escape, the sprinkling must be repeated.

To take honey.—There is a gentleman in the lower part of our native country, who knows much better how to take honey from bees than the one lately mentioned in this paper, and with less expense than Black's patent hives. I was an eye witness of his taking it, and partook of the nice dainty. He has no need of cap, mask or gloves—so far from shielding himself, he rolls his sleeves up above his elbows, and goes at it when the sun is at meridian, knowing that the bees are all at that time from home. The brighter the sun, the better, and the month of August is his honey harvest. When he goes as before mentioned, at mid-day he takes off the top of the hive, and takes out as much honey as he thinks proper; nails on the top and goes on to another, and another, until he has done. The honey is as nice and white as it can be. The bees will immediately fill up the vacant place, and the next year you have nice new honey again.—Am. Far.

Garden.—I always envy what Cowper calls "the occupations of a retired gentleman in his garden."—Most certainly, a gardener is a happy man He is a labourer in the primative trade. His is not an occupation of mere daily drudgery, like the wretched mechanic's, whose labours pass through his rapid hand, and are seen no more. He has a family around him, fair, beautiful, and flourishing, whose growth and welfare he watches over with a parent's love. He has friends, old friends, who have long been his faithful companions. For the many members of his vegetable family he feels all the varieties of human sympathy. The stout and sturdy oak excites his veneration and respect; he honors it for its bold endurance of the storm, and the unyielding hardiness of its frame. The graceful Acacia is the woman of the grove. But chiefly over his flowers does the rapture of a gardner's heart pour itself forth. He is their father—to him they owe their birth—he has fostered and cherished them—he has watched their crisp leaves bursting from the soil, and has projected their tender infancy from the insect and the worm—he is attached to them by the unknown gratitude which they owe him, and when in their full maturity they expand into their summer beauty, and pour out their exquisite perfume to gaze on them, and to inhale their sweetness, is his "exceeding great reward." Unlike a mortal progeny, in them the hopes which he has formed, are seldom disappointed; generation succeeds generation, each fresh and blooming as the former. Trust me, a gardener is a happy man.

Natural History.

ENORMOUS INCOGNITA.

Matter for the Curious.—A gentleman now in this city (New-Orleans) has a collection of bones, that he has spent one year in disintering from a beach about forty miles from the mouth of the Mississippi. He has expended his all in their obtention; and as the magnitude of the bones is calculated even to confound the most expert osteologists, the citizens will be amply gratified by spending a few bits each, for the sight and advantage of the gentleman, who unites with a good share of understanding a pleasing deportment.

We may ransack the annals of Linnæus—we may search Goldsmith from index to appendix—we may go the entire routine of natural histories—we may resort to all kinds of monstrosity—and refer to Jefersonian descriptions and exaggerations of mammoth, yet all will fall short of the present wonder, which is at least the eighth of the world. The accounts given of the mammoth, the elephant, the whale, the sea-serpent, &c. are mere bagatelles in comparison to the genuine description that this animal admits of, from the dimensions of the parts of skeleton, as already obtained.

One of the bones is eighteen feet in length, with a corresponding breadth; the largest extremity evidently answers to the human scapula; it tapers off to a point, and retains a flatness to the terminations; from these facts we may infer that this bone constituted a fin, or fender; one of its edges, from alternate exposures to the tide and atmosphere, has become spongy or porous, but, generally, it is in a perfect state of ossification. It is evident that there was a corresponding fin, or fender; therefore, the animal must have been fifty feet in breadth from one extremity of a fin to the other, allowing for wear and tear, as well as a disproportionate width of the back to the length of the fins.

There are several of the Dorsal Vertebræ and one of the lumber, and a bone answering to the coxygis in our anatomy. The Vertebræ are sound, and corresponding in size to the largest bone; the protuberances of the Vertebræ are three feet in extent; they lead to the supposition that the animal had considerable protuberances on the back; the body of each Vertebræ is at least twenty inches in diameter, and as many in length; the tube or calibre, for containing the spinal marrow, is six inches in diameter; some of the arterial and nervous indentations or courses, are yet visible. There is a bone similar to our os calcis, one foot in length, and, I suppose, eight inches in diameter. From all those circumstances, it was evidently an animal that surpasses any that history has made us acquainted with in the animal kingdom. If the skeleton was collected, and the bones all put in entire, it would compensate us for a pilgrimage at least to Mecca.

Whether it was her diferous or carniferous, aquatic or terraneous, we cannot decide; yet, we think that Doct. Mitchell will place it among the amphibia: we should think mythology holds out its ancestry in the Leviathans of the deep—that it would have despised a relationship with the mammoth, with the whale the elephant, and the unicorn. we are well convinced. We will content ourselves for the present, by supposing it an innominata, as it is quite anomalous to all animals that have come under our scrutiny. We think that it will bring Doct. Mitchell to his ne plus ultra in genus to give it a class, or trace out its lineology.—Louis Gaz.

BETTY AMLETT.

AN ELEGIAC BALLAD, BY JOHN MAYNE.

"The living may learn knowledge from the dead."

O! drop a tear for Betty Amlett,
Led astray from wisdom's ways!
Ah! once the blythest in the hamlet—
Now a scaffold ends her days!

Behold her bending in contrition!
Mark her supplicating eye!
In vain for life her sad petition—
Justice dooms and death is nigh!

Around a fearful look she glances
On the friends of former years,
While pity, as her end advances,
Trickles down their cheeks in tears!

Endearing scenes of long-lost pleasure,
Rush upon her troubled mind;
Sweet faith and truth's unfeeling treasure,
Left neglected, far behind!

Abas'd, she thinks, in deep dejection;
What she is, and might have been;
And, shudd'ring starts with recollection
At the dreadful gulph between!

Like some fair flow'r on life's wild common,
By the gale at random blown,
All that on earth adorns a woman,
Innocence was overthrown!

Then, driv'n by shame and indigestion,
Wand'ring outcast, and forlorn,
Remote from home or habitation,
Fed with berries from the thorn—

Down yonder lane, where rank weeds blossom,
Sad and sorrowful her plight,
An infant clinging to her bosom
First beheld the morning light!

Ye who at ease are happy mothers,
All your cares and pains forget;
O! think, in pity, think on others,
Want and wretchedness their lot!

For want she saw her infant languish—
None to succour, none to save,
And fraught with despair and anguish,
Plung'd it headlong in the wave!—

Yet drop a tear for Betty Amlett!
Lo, at mercy's shrine she prays!
Ah! once the gentlest in the hamlet—
Kind and true in better days!

But time mispent in youth's sweet season,
Folly learnt in guilt's abode,
And vice that shun's the light of reason,
Led her far away from God!—

Behold her now in deep contrition,
For her crimes afraid to die!—
And maiden's from her sad condition,
Learn to fix your thoughts on high!

O humble or obscure your dwelling,
Wisdom's ways will lead to fame;
For virtue—pride and pomp, excelling,
Decks with gems a spotless name,

But woman, void of pure devotion,
Though she live in splendid halls,
Puff'd with the pride of vain emotion,
Like a senseless city belle!

Now, overwhelm'd with guilt and sorrow,
Betty Amlett's course is run!
Ah! never to see another morrow,
Nor behold the setting sun!

For Lights and Watch, 940 horses at 5d. 2 wheeled carriages a 8s. 97; 4 wheeled ditto, 13 at 10s; Dogs 18 Total amount for Watch and Lights £23 15.

Improvement.—Two new Settlements were commenced in 1817, in the rear of the last Settlements of the Chaudière, the one by Mr Pozer, an old respectable inhabitant of Quebec, and the other by Mr. Hanna, formerly Watch Maker in this City. Mr. Pozer placed in his Settlement Germans, many of whom have left it, but it is now fast settling by Canadians; Mr Pozer has built Mills there, and frequently resides on his Domain. Excellent samples of Hemp have come in from this Settlement.

Mr Hanna's Settlement on the opposite side of the Chaudière, now contains twenty-seven families, mostly Irish from the North. They have sent into Quebec nearly 700 yards of Linen, of Grist from 700 to 1500, certainly superior to any thing of the same fineness which is usually imported, and have met with a quick sale Next year they expect to make 1500 yards The webs were only grass bleached, the colour good, the thread round and equal, and the weaving extremely close and well done. We have seen also samples of Sowing Thread from the same place, which is pronounced by good judges equal to any imported. The Settlement is called St. Charles de la Belle Alliance, and is 64 miles from Quebec.

Died.

On Thursday morning, the 4th inst Alexander Clark, Esquire. He was in the 65th year of his age, and for many years served as a Magistrate, both previously, and subsequently to the Division of these Provinces; and, was always esteemed in that capacity as a just, upright, and honest man. At his death he was senior Captain of the 1st Regt Lennox Militia, after having served, for upwards of thirty years. He also served as a militia soldier during the whole of the Revolutionary War, with the United States as will appear from the following certificate from Sir John Johnson Bart.

"I certify that Alexander Clark, Esquire, served from the commencement of the American Revolution under the command of the late Captain Brant, and finally joined the King's Royal Regt of New York, and served in it until the reduction of the second Battalion at this place under the command of Major Ross in 1784. I also certify that his late Father, Hugh Clark, came into me on the frontiers, when on service, with seven hundred troops and Indians, together with thirteen head of cattle for their support; and that I was well informed that he had laboured and provisioned all the parties sent out from Niagara during the war by the late Colonels Jousses and Butler; and, that he was forced in the year 1780 to leave his country, when he joined his Majesty's forces at Niagara. I therefore humbly beg leave to recommend his family to the consideration of His Majesty's Government for such portion of the waste lands of the Crown as their services may be judged to entitle them to as faithful and active servants of the Crown, and as U. E. Loyalists.—Given under my hand at Kingston 13th day of August 1818.

JOHN JOHNSON.

It is almost needless to mention that the late Alexander Clark's father, Hugh Clark, fought at the Battle of Culloden, for the King, in 1746 and that he there distinguished himself; and that, although severely wounded, he brought his family into the wilderness of British North America, there to seek a refuge

The Commanding Officer of his Regiment gave directions that Capt. Alexander Clark should be buried with Military honours according to his rank—and that Capt. Bell should see that his directions were complied with Persons are hereby warned not to harbour or employ him, or to give him credit, as his father will not be accountable for any debt the said William may contract on his account.

NOTICE.

ALL Persons are hereby cautioned against purchasing a Promissory Note given by the Subscriber to one John Adams, or bearer, for Thirty-five Dollars payable in January next, as the same was fraudulently obtained.

(Signed) PETER THUM.

Port Hope, 1st August, 1825.

N. B. The above mentioned Note was given in part payment for a Horse purchased by the Subscriber from the above person, calling himself John Adams, on the First day of August, and, from circumstances manifested since the sale, the Subscriber has reason to believe the said John Adams, or person so calling himself, had stolen the Horse.—He was accordingly pursued, and was overtaken; but he escaped from the persons who had him in custody, leaving a bundle of his clothes in their possession.

(Signed) PETER THUM.

Further Notice and Reward of $15.

It appears on a further inquiry that the above mentioned Horse was actually stolen from Mr. Timothy Street, residing West of York, on the Dundas Road, and there is every reason to believe that the person who stole him, and who sold him to Mr. P Thum (calling himself John Adams,) is in reality one Henry Helmka, who had been working in Mr. Street's Vicinity, where he called himself by the name of Williams.

This is therefore to give notice. That a reward of $15 will be given to any one who will give such information as the said thief may be apprehended. He appeared about 24 or 25 years of age—5 feet 9 or 10 inches high—dark complexion,—eyes, and hair, and lisps a little in his talk; had on a blue coat, (not very fine) black waistcoat—white pantaloons—and shoes.—He escaped by striking into the woods near Mr. Beamish's Tavern—Township of Darlington—and it is supposed directed his course Westward

Editorial Commentary.

THE Bill for admitting Canadian Wheat into British Ports for two years, on the payment of a duty of Five Shillings per quarter, has passed into a Law.—It is now certain that every measure calculated to promote the prosperity of the CANADAS by the British Ministry, has been carried into effect; and we trust the consequences will be such as to prove the excellence of that policy, which has of late been so liberally awakened towards this country.

By a late arrival we have the following advice:—

Liverpool Corn Exchange, June 21.—WHEAT, Canada free 3s. 3d a 3s 9d Foreign free 10s. 3d a 10s. 6d American FLOUR in bond 24s a 26s. 6d European in bond 23 a 24s.

Stocks, Consols 91 1-8.

Canada £100 shares, paid in £10, price 39 1-2.

The Traveller of the 18th June contains a notice of a Steam Packet to sail on the 1st of August for India. It also contains the Prospectus of the British Steam Navigation Association whose plan extends to the whole of North and South America.

It is currently reported that unfavourable news is in town from India; and another report prevails that the Duke of Wellington is going thither.

The latter part of this paragraph is scarcely credible.

Parliament it was said would be prorogued on the 2d July by the King in person

PORTSMOUTH, June 27.

Arrival of Lord Cochrane—This morning's dawn discovered the Emperor of Brazil's frigate Peranga, anchored at Spithead with the flag of Lord Cochrane flying at the main as Admiral of the Emperor's fleet. After the customary salutes were exchanged, Lord Cochrane landed at the King's Sally Port about 10, when the assembled multitude gave him three-cheers, for which he politely bowed The Peranga left Mesheers, for which he politely bowed The Peranga left Maranham on the 30th ult.; the officers report that all the northern provinces of Brazil had been restored to tranquility, and that no hostile vessel had appeared on the coast since the evacuation of Bahia two years since. The Peranga is a very fine frigate, mounting 46 guns; most of the officers and crew are English. A number of naval and military officers waited upon his Lordship at Billett's Hotel. The first question he asked was whether the Catholic Bill had passed.

We extract the following interesting information from the Quebec Mercury of the 16th inst just received.

The beautiful Poem published in this weeks' Register, the production of a very clever and promising young Gentleman of this Town, will be read, with all that pleasing satisfaction which must ever result from the contemplation of superior talent gradually making its way to that general notice, and applause, which has ever been, and which must for ever continue to be, its legitimate and readily bestowed reward.

Mr. DUNCAN, we understand, concludes his course of Lectures on Elocution next week. They have given great satisfaction to his subscribers, so far, and we are glad to hear it is the intention of this respectable and gentlemanly Professor, to revisit us in winter, after having made a Tour of the principal places in the Lower Province, his first step from hence being a trip to Kingston. If we may judge from the progress which has been made by his private pupils, who receive his valuable instructions every morning, his merit as a master of his art is unequivocal; for, a more rapid improvement we have never witnessed. The most interesting Lecture, yet given, is reserved for Saturday Evening next—It is on FORENSIC ELOQUENCE with examples and illustrations from CICERO and CURRAN.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

New Coinage.—The London Gazette announces that a new gold and silver coinage, of a higher value is to be made—There are to be added to the present coinage, a gold coin called the five pound piece, and the double sovereign or forty shilling piece.

Church Establishment of Ireland.—Mr. Hume had introduced his motion respecting the Established Church of Ireland, and concluded his speech with two resolutions, the substance of which was—1st, That church property was public property, and disposable by the Legislature for the good of religion and of the community at large; 2d, That the house would, in the course of next session, inquire whether the establishment of the Church of Ireland was not out of proportion to the services performed.

Possibility of converting Catholics!—Within the last month, a man, who resides at Tickowrin, barony of Carbury and county of Kildare, named John Flynn, his wife and five children (all of whom had been reared Roman Catholics) embraced the Protestant religion. Two other families have also conformed to the Protestant Church, within this last three months in the same parish.—Belfast Chronicle.

Origin of the Word Yankee.—Yankee is the Indian corruption of the word English—Yenglees, Yanglees, Yankees and, finally Yankee. It got in general use as a term of reproach thus:—About the year 1713, one Jonathan Hastings, a farmer, at Cambridge, in New England, used the word Yankee as a contword to express excellence, as a Yankee (good) horse, Yankee cider, &c. The Students at the College, having frequent intercourse with Jonathan, and hearing him employ the word on all occasions when he intended to express his approbation, applied it sarcastically, and called him Yankee Jonathan. It soon became a cant phrase among the Collegians, to designate a simple weak, awkward person; from College, it spread over the country, till, from its currency in New England, it was at length taken up and applied to the New Englanders generally, as a term of reproach. It was in consequence of this that the song Yankee Doodle was composed.

Pigeon Match for 50 Sovereigns—First Day.—The above match, at 15 birds, each, between Lord Kennedy and Captain Ross, against Messrs Arrowsmith and Osbaldestone, to be decided in favour of those killing the greatest number of birds in the three days, commenced yesterday (June 11) at the Red House Inclosure Battersea. The betting during the week on the event of each day, of the match, on the separate shooting, &c. has been immense; on the match it was even, Lord K and Captain R. for choice; on the sum, 25 to 10, on the day's shooting, the same as on the match. The following is a statement of the day's sport, (at fifty birds each):—

	Killed		Killed
Mr. Osbaldestone, . .	42	Lord Kennedy, . . .	67
Mr. Arrowsmith, . . .	41	Captain Ross, ...	34
	83		71

Majority for Mr. vs. O and A. 12.

Captain Ross was very unfortunate in his birds, several being heavily bit, and falling out of bounds. Mr. Arrowsmith missed only one out of his second 25. Betting on the match, 2 to 1 and 5 to 2 on Messrs. Arrowsmith and Oxbridge-stone.

The Lion Nero and the Dogs—[From the Shrewsbury Chronicle.]—"Whatever may be the result of the preparations for this mortal combat, it is certain that the field of battle is now already provided. Mr Wombwell on Monday last inspected the cage or den (which has been built by Messrs. Drayton and Rowlands in this town,) and expressed great confidence of retaining, not only his 5,000 guineas, but the lordly brute on whose head they are staked. The den is 57 feet in circumference, 15 feet high, formed of strong iron bars 7 or 8 inches distant from each other, and covered in with a wooden roof, removeable at pleasure with its boarded floor. The whole will be fixed upon axle-trees and wheels. Mr Wombwell will not say when the battle is to take place. A gentleman of Shrewsbury has offered to wager him £1,000 if he would fight it in this neighbourhood; this, at present is refused. The price to see the battle will be as follows:—Boxes, £3 2s; Pit, £2 2s; Gallery, £1. 1s

Human Time Pieces.—The following singular account appears in a recent number of a valuable French work, the Bibliotheque Universelle.—J. D. Chevalley, a native of Switzerland, aged 66, has arrived at an astonishing degree of perfection in reckoning time by an internal movement.

In his youth he was accustomed to pay great attention to the ringing of bells and vibrations of pendulums, and by degrees he acquired the power of continuing the succession of intervals exactly equal to those which the vibrations of sounds produced. Being on board the steam boat on the lake of Geneva, in July 14, 1822, he engaged to indicate to the crowd about him the lapse of a quarter of an hour or as many minutes and seconds as any one choose to name, and this during a conversation the most diverted with those standing by; and, farther to indicate by the voice, the moment when the hand passed over the quarter, minutes, or half minutes, or any other subdivision previously stipulated, during the whole course of the experiment. This he did without mistake, notwithstanding the exertions of those about him to distract his attention, and clapped his hand at the conclusion of the time fixed. His own account of it is thus given: "I have acquired by imitation, labour, and patience, a movement which neither thought nor labour, nor any thing can stop.—It is similar to that of a pendulum, which at each motion of going and returning gives me the space of three seconds so that twenty of them makes a minute, and these I add to others continually."

National Debt.—Three hundred men could not carry the weight of the National Debt in ten pound bank notes, 512 of which weigh one pound. Supposing the debt to be only 726 millions of pounds sterling, it would weigh 142,650 lbs which, for 300 men would be 476 lbs. each

Ship Building for the Greeks.—We heard with pleasure, says a New York paper, that two large Frigates are building in the ship-yards for the Greek Government; they will be fine large ships of 64 guns each, and are expected to be complete in a few months.

FROM THE LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

State of America.—In forty years the Americans have quadrupled their population, and stretched their territory from the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi to the Pacific. They have assumed, as if by instinct, a mighty system of private law; a bold precision of diplomacy; a large code of commerce and national interest. They have taken the lead in vigour of improvement and practical science. Mendicity is almost unknown; the demand of labour is immense, and its rewards abundant. Church dissentions are heard of only in the history of foreigners; slavery itself, the plague spot of human society, is fast verging to decay. Agriculture, the mechanic arts and manufactures are advancing with mighty strides. The bowels of the Alleganies are pouring forth their treasures of iron, coal and lead; and the huge western savannahs, trodden a little while ago only by the bison, the cougar, or the wolf, are echoing the noises of forges, looms and bloomeries. Since 1806, the export trade of the Union has advanced from twenty three millions of dollars, to more than eighty millions. Their tonnage amounts to more than a million and a half; being nearly a treble increase since the beginning of the present century. In the Hudson alone, the number of merchant vessels at the hour nearly equals, and twelve years ago was much superior to the whole shipping of Scotland. Their steam vessels almost double in numerical amount, and far surpass in tonnage and velocity, the vapour ships of Britain. Before the extent of their canals, the efforts of our modern world shrink into insignificance; nay the mighty ways and aqueducts of imperial Rome herself are brought into hazardous comparison. The number is at present twenty; and the greatest length stretches to three hundred and sixty miles. Yet the hugest of these majestic ducts was accomplished at the sole charge of a State of little more than a single million of inhabitants. The navy of the Union amounts to more than twenty ships of the line, besides numerous frigates and gun boats. And the whole of this enormous mass of vigour, wealth, and population, is securely defended by a standing army of little more than five thousand men. Nor are there any internal taxes; any hateful prying into income or domestic privacy. The provincial governments alone levy a direct impost of about a dollar on each inhabitant. This is to be a free people. This it is to have sprung from the bosom of the British empire, like Pallas from the brain of Jove, full grown and armed in proof. Do we turn sick at these advances? The mutual trade of the United States and British empire now exceeds fifty millions of Dollars; an amount quite equal to the trade of the Republic with all the rest of the globe. And is this any food for jealousy? It is, as it ought to be, the strongest cement of friendship. We rejoice in this growing up of freedom and power in the western world. We glory in this living bulwark against the worse than Pagan incursions of legitimate fanaticism. We look forward with joy to the illustrious period, when the growing tide of population shall have fully fertilized the barbarity of the western wilderness; and a mighty race, one in sentiment, one in virtue, one in interest, speaking in no more than a double tongue, shall be busied in lighting up and transmitting the lamp of knowledge, without interruption, from the wolves' dens of "Oonalashka," to the eternal fires of Horne.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

The Duke of Northumberland had departed from the French capital, on his return home.

The subscriptions in aid of the Greeks, are becoming general in France, and augmenting daily!

SPAIN.

The Times says, a crisis in Spain cannot be far distant. Never was the administration of the affairs of any civilized kingdom in a state of more "admired disorder."

It is reported that disturbances have broken out at Madrid. The last letters from thence are of the 18th, which mention that the Ministers of War and Justice have been removed, and that some agitation existed among the Royalist volunteers.

A private communication from Madrid, states that the Spanish Clergy have again offered to raise an army (or the King, on condition of his allowing them the nomination of the officers, and insisting on the evacuation of the fortified places by the French troops.

CUBA.

The U. S. sloop of war Hornet, E. P. Kennedy, Esq. commander has arrived at Norfolk, in 9 days from Havana, having left that port on the 26th ultimo. An impression had recently prevailed in Havana that the Island of Cuba was ceded to France, and it was even reported that a French frigate with Spanish troops on board for Havana, had been captured by a British man of war. And in coming out THE HORNET MET GOING INTO HAVANA, A FRENCH FLEET OF THIRTEEN MEN OF WAR, TWELVE OF THEM SHIPS, FOUR OF WHICH WERE OF THE LINE!—The news of the recognition of Haytien independence had not reached Havana when the Hornet sailed, nor was any thing known there of the French fleet which lately visited Port au Prince. From this fact, it is a fair inference that secret measures were adopted by the Hytien Government, in connexion with the French Admiral, to prevent any communication with the Havana, until the latter should announce his own arrival at Cuba.

GREECE.

The following is an official bulletin of the Greek Admiral Miaulis:—

"First Division of the Greek Fleet, May 13, 1825.

"Yesterday evening, with a favourable wind, we entered, past Sapienza, into the Gulf of Modon, where 20 of the enemy's vessels were anchored under the cannons of the fortress. On this squadron our intrepid firemen threw themselves with six fire ships, and with little difficulty, they succeeded in setting them on fire, whilst we, with the rest of our vessels, pursued other ships of the enemy which were in full sail. The vessels burned in the port of Modon, consisted of two frigates, three corvettes, five brigs of war, and the rest transports. We are informed that one of the frigates was a cut-down 54 gun vessel of the Pacha of Egypt, and that the other was a 36 gun frigate; 2 of the corvettes carried 26 guns each.—The Divine Providence aided us still further, and brought about the entire destruction of the enemy. The fire produced by this conflagration communicated itself to the fortress, and the town of Modon, for five hours, appeared one volume of flames, and then we heard one of the most terrible explosions which ever took place. This leads us to imagine that the powder magazines took fire, and, in that case, every one, and every thing there, must have perished.

AFRICA.

Major General Turner, has assumed the command of the British Settlement on the West Coast of Africa and has issued a proclamation thanking he friendly tribes for their assistance in the late sanguinary contest, the proclamation concludes as follows:—

"If the Ashantee will content himself with governing his own people, and does not stop the trade of the interior with the Coast or attempt to oppress his neighbours, let him say so to me, and I will make a treaty with him on these terms, but I will not make peace with him on any other terms, nor until he gives up every claim to tribute or subjection from surrounding nations."—The document is dated at Cape Coast, the 2d April 1825.

ON THE MANAGEMENT OF BEES.

[By J. Downs, of Huntington.]

For seven years I have been collecting information concerning the proper management of bees.—As is usual with a devotion to any particular object, my labours have been abundantly recompensed.—The increased satisfaction I have taken in studying the nature, and in observing the habits, of these little industrious creatures, has independently of other considerations, been sufficient to induce me to spend many a leisure hour in watching them at their hives, in following them to the fields, and in tracing out their habitations in the woods. Leaving their nature and habits to others better qualified than myself, I shall confine my remarks in giving directions for their management

Early in the spring, from a deficiency in the stock of winter honey, the bees of one hive are often found to rob those of another. To prevent this, I know of no better way than to make the entry hole of the hive that contains the most honey so small that it will barely admit them to go in and out. But the greatest object which should claim the attention of every one who has the charge of bees, is to prevent their destruction by worms. Perhaps two thirds of the bees in this country have, within a few years, been destroyed by the insect called a miller. It enters the hives, and lays eggs, which soon produce worms in such numbers, as to destroy the bees, or drive them from their hives. To prevent the access of worms, the hives should be perfectly tight, and have but one hole at the lower edge of the hive; the continual passing of the bees will prevent them. But the most sure way of keeping them out is to have a well made hive, to sit very level on a board, which shall project out in front of the hive seven inches; to have a channel or groove about ten inches long and two wide, and three eighths of an inch deep, cut in this board; and then to have a board about four inches wide nailed over this groove, outside of the hive. The bees will enter the hive through this groove. The entry hole being at such a distance (four inches) from the hive, no kind of insects will ever enter. I have observed that bees which deposite their honey in trees very generally have worms among them. If the hole is large, or if there are two or three small ones. But when the hole has been small, I have always found the honey pure and free from worms. Besides this great advantage, the bees are less annoyed by the dust and leaves blowing in during dry weather, and rain beating in during heavy storms. All kinds of dirt are very offensive to bees. The hives should be made of new clean boards. To have them perfectly clean is much better than to rub the inside with sugar, or salt and water. I have known bees to forsake hives which were made of boxes which once contained fish or some other oily substances. The empty hives, during winter, should be in some place where they can be kept from dirt, particularly from mice and rats.—When the bees swarm and light on the limbs of trees, they should not be shaken off violently; but the hive should be put near them or the limb sawed off. The next object of attention is to take up the honey without destroying the bees. The old method of killing the bees to get the honey is a very bad one.—It can be easily avoided. About the first of July, as soon as the bees begin to lie idle in the front of the hive, take a hive of the same dimensions as the one they are in, and bore in the top of it, as many holes as you can, about an inch in diameter. Raise (near the dusk of evening) the hive that contains the bees—put it on the one that has the holes. The bees will immediately descend into the lower one, and will soon fill it with honey. If the hive is fixed according to the above directions, they will go out and enter the same hole that they did when filling the first one; and thus they will not be disturbed in the least. But if the hole is made in the side of the hive itself, you are under the necessity of stopping it up and making them pass through one with which they have not been acquainted. In the fall, after the bees have done collecting honey, take off the top hive, and turn it bottom side upwards; place the edge of it near the entry hole; and, by thumping a little the bees will immediately leave it, and enter the other. Take a piece of board of the proper size, and screw it on, over the holes. By this method, you get a hive full of fine honey, and a sufficiency in the other for the bees to live on, during the winter.—Unless the bees have a second hive to fill, they are in good seasons, almost entirely idle, after July, for want of room to store their honey.

By this method of management, bees are rendered very profitable. Two years ago, I bought a swarm of bees, on the limb of a tree, for three dollars and a quarter. From this one, I now have five others, which, independently of the honey they have produced me, I value at twenty eight dollars. And should the three following seasons prove favorable, I shall, from this one hive, have bees enough to support my family. From one hive of bees, I can generally get two others every year. At a moderate calculation, I shall have, in three years, sixty hives; and should the season be favourable, I shall have one hundred. When my number of hives is sufficiently increased, each one will every season, produce honey to the amount of seven and a half dollars.—Long Island Journ. of Philos.

Natural History.

Singular Deer.—In Barre Mass. on the 30th ult. Mr. Henry Buck killed a white deer, which bore so near the resemblance to the snow, that its purser got quite on to him, before he was aware that his object was so near. He was laying in his bed, apparently asleep. There was a few grey spots around his head, but these were very rare!

Animal Affection.—A few weeks ago a breeding sow, in the possession of a farmer on the water of Ae, had a litter of twelve pigs, which happened to be more numerous, by one, than she was capable of suckling. Two of the pigs were taken from her in consequence, and put into a house by themselves where one of them soon after died. A bitch happened at the time to be rearing a family of pups in another house seperated by a wall from that in which the remaining pig was kept; and moved, perhaps, by the cries of the forlorn orphan, she made her way over the partition, and after several attemps to reconcile it to its new mother, succeeded in learning it to suck. The bitch continued her visits regularly; the pig became strong and thriving; and yet, while roaming the fields, if its nurse happense to cross its path, it immediately runs to her when she carresses it with great fondness, and allows it to suck as formerly.—Dumfries Courier.

Formation of Icebergs.—A late number of the Quarterly Review explains the formation of Icebergs, islands of ice, in the following manner.

"A rill of water, falling in a little cascade, from a precipitous height, is converted into a sheet of ice, in the course of some severe winter; if such a sheet be not entirely melted in the short summer which follows, its volume will necessarily be increased the ensuing winter, and thus the projection of the promontory from year to year, will swell, till the immence mass, by its weight, and probably undermined by the constant dashing of the waves, breaks off, and is floated into the ocean. All our northern navigators affirm, that stones, moss and earth have been observed on the floating icebergs of Davis's Strait and Baffin's Bay."

A dreadful Volcano.—Accounts from St Petersburgh of the 15th of March says, that the American Company have received information of the breaking out of a dreadful volcano, which opened at the beginning of March last year, in the Island of Unmak, one of the Aleutian Islands, and on its first eruption, which was very violent, covered Oonalashka, and even some more distant islands, with sand, soot and ashes.

In our impression of the 25th December last, we noticed the singular variations of the barometer on the five preceding days, with its extraordinary depression on the morning of that day; the night of Thursday, the 20th of December, was also peculiarly marked by a hurricane. On the same night, it appears by the accounts from Copenhagen, inserted in our last, that a volcano, situated above twenty miles to the south-east of Mount Hecla, in Iceland, which, according to Sir G. Mackenzie, had been silent since 1717, suddenly emitted flames, and for some days threw out stones to a considerable distance, and continued burning till the 23d of Feb; the agitation of the barometer may be thus probably accounted for.—Kentish Gaz.

Extraordinary Circumstance.—A few days ago, a greyhound bitch, belonging to Mr. Donald, of Cummersdale, near this city, (Carlisle,) produced seven whelps; and having been determined that they should be drowned, they were thrown into a pump trough, where they remained till there was reason to suppose they were all dead. On taking them out, for the purpose of being buried, life was still observable in some of them; they were therefore again put into the water for ten minutes longer, and then covered up in a dunghill. This took place at 12 o'clock in the day, and the bitch was tied up from that time until 10 at night, when she was let out by one of the servant men, who soon observed her to carry something from the dunghill, but not knowing that the whelps had been buried there, he took no further notice of the circumstance. On the following morning the sagacious & affectionate animal was found in the stable with five of the whelps, two of which were alive and sucking, after having been buried no less than ten hours.—Carlisle Jour.

Anecdotes.

THE CHARACTER OF THE LATE LORD ERSKINE.

Sketched by Charles Butler, Esquire, one of the learned Editors of Coke on Littleton.

"The eloquence of this remarkable man [Mr. Erskine] was an era at the bar. His addresses to Juries have not been equalled. They alike captivated their understandings, their imaginations, and their passions. He often rose to the highest oratory; but it was always simple; and even in his sublimest flights, there was much that was very familiar; but this rather set off than clouded their splendor, rather increased than diminished their general effect. His skill in the conduct of a court, and in the examination of witnesses, has never been surpassed. His discretion never forsook him even in his highest forensic enthusiasm. His manners were always most gentlemanly. At the bar he was uniformly loved and admired; and, when he accepted the seals, no one, as Lord Eldon justly remarked of him, could have a greater wish to discharge properly the office, which was conferred on him, or greater talents to qualify him for a proper discharge of it. A true friend to constitutional liberty, he was its constant and animated advocate; but he never failed in respect to the crown or sacrificed to the prejudices or vagaries of the populace. It is highly to the credit of the two noble lords, that, though the difference of their politics repeatedly placed them in a state of forensic conflict, neither ever said that to the other, or of the other, which it was unpleasing to him to hear."

One of the police officers in a town not a hundred miles from Frome, having a poacher to take to Shepton Bridewell, placed such confidence in the integrity of the delinquent, as to enclose his mittimus in a letter to the gaoler, and gave it to him with instructions for its delivery.

The fellow certainly went within a mile or two of Shepton, when meeting with a stout lad going the same road, he complained of the late hour before he should return home, and prevailed on the youth, for a pint of beer, to promise to deliver the letter for him to the keeper of the prison in person — The lad fulfilled his engagement, and was very kindly welcomed to his new residence; and all his roarings and assurances that he was not the person to be confined, could not induce his new friend to part with him: he was accordingly conducted to his cage; but, from the continued bellowing of the captive during the night, and the apprehension of his having the care of a maniac, on the following morning the keeper took the lad before a Magistrate, where he swore to the facts of his singular case, and being recognized by some persons of the town, he was liberated. The poacher has not since been heard of, and the constable has to pay the fine.—Bath and Cheltenham Gazette.

ADMIRAL BOSCAWEN

Was once sent with a command to interrupt the St. Domingo fleet of Merchantmen, and was waiting near the track that it was supposed they would take. One of his seamen came to tell him that the fleet was in sight. The Admiral took his glass, and from his superior power of eye, or perhaps from previous information, said, that the sailor was mistaken, and what he saw was the French grand fleet. The seaman however persisted. The Admiral desired some others of his crew to look through the glass; they all, with their brains heated with the prospect of a prize, declared, that what they saw was the St. Domingo fleet. The Admiral said, "Gentlemen, you shall never say that I have stood in the way of your enriching yourselves: I submit to you; but remember when you find your mistake, you must stand by me" The mistake was soon discovered, and the Admiral, by such an exertion of manœuvres as the service has perhaps never seen since, saved his ship.

EVENING.

Hark!—the deep curfew's melancholy knell
Peals to declining day its sad farewell—
Sweeps from yon glittering spire its sullen tone,
While the hills echo with responding moan—
Bids from its dreams the musing mind to start,
And smites relentless on the pausing heart.
Yes—its loud murmurs mourn th' expiring day,
More beauteous—far more lovely in decay

So 'tis thus, the harpoon'd dolphin, when it dies,
In faintest hues its parting agonies—
While, gasp by gasp, it falters forth its breath,
Its hue still varies with each throe of death;
Quick, changing, beautiful those colours spread,
Till the last struggle tells that life is fled.

Or fair, O Autumn, as thy fading leaf,
The sad'ning semblance of an hapless grief;
Which rarely varied by the withering blast,
Tells its decay, the glories of the past.
Fair as thou bright, but ah! delusive bloom
Which haunts the cheek of beauty to the tomb—
That fearful harbinger of young decay—
Is the soft hectic of declining day.

From day's meridian, and unclouded blaze—
Hark! by that glare, that agonizing gaze,
How loudly turns th' undistracted eye
On the mild beauties of the evening sky!

Whilst 'mid you burnish'd realms of matchless glow,
Paints the hills and vapoury piles of snow—
Amid yon rolling clouds whose roseate dye
Blends with the deep'ning azure of the sky,
Each well-lov'd image fancy pictures there
Of all that's beauteous or sublimely fair.

—Nor only gladden'd is the gazing eye—
Soft on the ear the zephyr breathes an sigh—
Sweet is the breeze's whisper, sweet the lay
Eve's songsters send to the closing day.
Yes—pleas'd we listen, till that music throws
Soft o'er the breast its witchery of repose;
Sheds thro' the heart its harmonizing power—
The dewy stillness of the evening hour.

Yes—sweet, O Evening, steals that mild control,
With tranquillizing magic, in the soul—
Spreads the soft sadness of thy languid sigh,
While tuine own dew-drop trembles in the eye—
As memory lingers on some scene pass'd o'er,
And weeps the joy that we must greet no more.

—Ah! sweet, when Hope, with fairy hand, uprears
The shadowy fabrics of unmeasur'd years—
On promis'd blessings smiles with bright'ning glow,
And strews with flowers our journey as we go

And thou, sweet child of heaven! religion fair,
That dries the tear and soothes the pang of care—
Which flings a brightness o'er this vale of gloom,
And cheers the lonely passage to the tomb—
Thee, thee we hail at this propitious hour,
And own the heavenly magic of thy power—
Confirm the fervours of that grateful love
Which links mortality to realms above—
And boast the glow of hope which bids us rise,
Led by thy radiant pinions, to the skies.

Say, who that feels that rapture of repose
Which thy soft period, tender Eve, bestows—
With breast as tranquil as thy lovely hour,
Would ask wealth's pageantry or sigh for power?
Who, with the joys thy sober hour can claim,
Would cherish longings for undying fame—
Pant for wild pleasures rapid as a dream,
That thwart the current of life's placid stream?

—Not ye, who pass th' undistracted hour
Or in the rural grove, or roseate bower—
Not ye, whom sweets regale, whom beauties charm,
And peace swift flicks to the heart's alarm.
Oh! no, in rural peace our lives shall flow,
Where stainless bosoms scorn intrusive woe;
Where bright hope hovers, and where fancy glows,
And dulcet sounds warble to repose.

Adieu! fair period of impassion'd dreams—
When genius kindles with his brightest beams—
Which bids thy minstrel to thy lowly strain
Attune his long-neglected harp again—
And boast the ecstacy thy sweets impart,
When tender passions play around the heart.—

Adieu! when life's dim Evening fades away—
Its dying lamp scarce twinkling with a ray—
May we display that loveliness in death,
And breathe that comfort with our dying breath,
Which marks the beauty of thy varied sky,
And whispers in thine airy harmony—
That you high world may greet the spirit there
In changeless love, its endless bliss to share.

GOOD WINE.

From Carey's American Museum.

RECEIPT FOR MAKING CURRANT WINE.

Gather your currants when full ripe;—break them well in a tub or vat, (some have a mill constructed for the purpose, consisting of a hopper, fixed upon two figuwitzie rollers, press and measure your juice, add two thirds water, and to each gallon of that mixture, (i. e. juice and water) put three pounds of muscavado sugar, (the cleaner and drier the better; very course sugar first clarified, will do equally as well,) stir it well till the sugar is quite dissolved, and then turn it up. If you can possibly prevent it, let not your juice stand over night, as it should not ferment before mixture.

Observe that your casks be sweet and clean, such as never had beer nor cider in them, and it new let them be first well seasoned

Do not fill your casks too full, otherwise they will work out at the bung, which is by no means good for the wine; rather make a proportionable quantity over and above, that after drawing off the wine you may have a sufficiency to fill up the casks Lay the bung lightly on the hole to prevent the flies &c. from creeping in. In three weeks or a month after making, the bung hole may be stopped up, leaving only the vent-hole open till it has fully done working, which generally is about the latter end of October. It may then be racked off into other clean casks if you please, but experience seems to favour the letting the wine stand on the lees till spring, as it thereby attains a stronger body, and is by that means in a great measure divested of that sweet luscious taste, peculiar to new made wine; nay, if it is not wanted for present consumption, it may without any damage stand two years on the lees.

When you draw off the wine, bore a hole, an inch at least above the tap hole, a little to the side of it, that it may run clear off the lees The lees may either be distilled, which will yield a fine spirit, or filtered through an Hipocrates' sleeve and returned again into the cask. Some put in spirits, but I think it not advisible.

Do not suffer yourself to be prevailed on to add more than one third juice as above prescribed, in hopes that the wine may be richer, for that would render it infallibly hard and unpleasant, nor yet a greater proportion of sugar, as it would certainly deprive it of its pure vinous taste.

By this management you may have wine, letting it have a proper age, equal to Madeira, at least superior to most wines, commonly imported, and for much less money.

In regard to the quantity of wine intended to be made, take this example, remembering that twelve pounds of sugar are equal to a gallon of liquid.

For instance, suppose you intend to make 30 gallons, then there must be,

8 gallons of juice,
16 of water,
24 gallons of mixture,
6 gallons from sugar,
30 gallons,
24 gallons of mixture,
3 multiplied by,
12/72
equal to 6 gallons of liquid.

and so proportionable for any quantity you please to make.

The common cider presses, if thoroughly clean, will do well in making large quantities; the small hand screw press is most convenient for such as make less.

N. B. An extraordinary good spirit for medicinal and other uses, may be distilled from currant juice by adding a quart of molasses to a gallon of juice, to give a proper fermentation.

MONTREAL, July 27.

A quarry of Marble, of an excellent quality, has been lately discovered on the farm of Mr Logan, Papineau road.—It has been worked, and found to be susceptible of receiving a fine polish This discovery may be a great acquisition to the community, and very profitable to the proprietor of the land where so valuable a material both for ornament and use has been found.—Courant.

Welsh Settlers.—Amongst the late arrivals is the brig Agenoirs, from Aberystwith, on board which came 15 Welsh settlers—their singular costume and dialect rendered them objects of much curiosity. The Welsh are in general a hardy and industrious race and we should be happy in seeing some further importations of them, as with those qualifications they promise to make steady and useful settlers.

Halifax News.—Sir James Kempt we announce the fact upon the best authority, was to leave England in the July Packet; his Excellency, therefore, may be expected here in the course of two or three weeks. His Excellency's return to the Government will, we are assured, be hailed with universal satisfaction. The Earl of Dalhousie had left London for Scotland, from which he was to embark early in August.

Editorial Commentary.

Notwithstanding the repeal of many taxes formerly very productive there has been an increase in the quarter's revenue of Great Britain, closing on the 5th of July, of no less a sum than £1 715,601 over the last year.

Although the accounts from Greece have been very contradictory of late, the balance of success seems evidently in favour of independence. The fall of Navarino is attributed to the superiority of the Turkish artillery, and to the capture of a battery on the Isle of Sphegia. Many heroic deeds are related of the Greeks The Captain of a Greek vessel, at the taking of Navarino, who would not yield himself to the Musquimen, had the boldness to traverse a line of 32 Egyptian vessels of war, and escape into the open sea—But he was mortally wounded and most of his crew fell by case shot A revolution, both in the government and army of Greece, had taken place, and CoLOCOTRONIS is once more recognized as the Chief of the Morcots. This revolution is said to be favourable to the cause.

Commodore Porter, of the United States Navy, has been convicted of the charges brought against him for his hostile invasion of Porto Rico, &c. and his Punishment (mild enough in all conscience) is "suspension for six months"

By some late arrivals we perceive that a meeting has been held at the Freemason's Tavern in London, the DUKE of SUSSEX in the chair, for the purpose of establishing a "SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING EDUCATION AND INDUSTRY IN CANADA," natives as well as residents, and to extend to both Provinces It appears that the four Lorette Indians, now in England, were present, and that one of them proposed a vote of thanks in French to the loyal Chairman which was of course carried unanimously —The Rev Mr. O'good, so well known in this Province, played his part also.

We cannot help soliciting the attention of our readers, to the speech of Lord LIVERPOOL to the Peers, which will be found in this day's Register, at one of the ablest, most striking and luminous expositions, we recollect to have seen, of the politics and measures of the GREATEST MINISTER England ever had, and who, under Providence, has well deserved the glorious title of "SAVIOUR OF HIS COUNTRY"

The Montreal Sale of Teas has taken place, and the Herald gives us the following statement:

Pursuant to advertisement the first sale of the East India Company's Teas, took place this day at the stores of Messrs. Richardson & Forsyth; and was attended by a great crowd and numerous bidders The following statement will shew at what rate the Teas were bought up, which in general was higher than during the late sale at Quebec:—

3850 Chests of Tea of all kinds were sold—

Congou,	2s 1id	a 3s	0d

It is unnecessary to dwell on the great advantages which must be derived by the commerce of the Country from such a sale as the above It will not only prevent smuggling, but from the cheapness of the articles themselves, and the facility with which they can be purchased, raise the respectability of the retail dealers, while it will place their goods beyond all suspicion of unfair dealing.

It is calculated that not less than EIGHT THOUSAND INDIANS were lately assembled at Malden in the Western District, on the occasion of receiving their presents!

The following introductory lines ought to have headed the very beautiful Poem with which we had the pleasure to present our readers last week.

"Sir,

The Author of the accompanying lines has yielded to the solicitations of Friendship in permitting their publication They were composed in the intervals of severer studies, and higher pursuits; and if thought worthy of a place in the WEEKLY REGISTER, the insertion of them will much oblige an unfeigned LOVER OF THE MUSES.

We have also to apologize to the highly gifted author for having stated that his residence was in York, whereas, it is several miles distant.

Mr. DWYER concludes his Lectures on Elocution this evening; although he will assist his Pupils to the Public Recitations which are proposed to be given at the Mansion House Hotel, on Saturday Evening next at 8 o'clock, for his Benefit, previous to his departure for Kingston.—As Mr D has not been patronised in this Town to the extent of his deserts, it has been kindly proposed amongst his Pupils, who are grateful for the improvement they have received, to attempt a more ample remuneration by means of these Public Recitations, in which they are themselves willing to perform; and, it is hoped that a numerous and respectable audience will readily attend, as the general interest of such an exhibition is not to be doubted —*Tickets of admission at 2s. 6d. each may be had by application to Mr D at his Lodgings. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JULY. 6

The House met about three o'clock. His Majesty's Commissioners, appointed for the prorogation of Parliament were the Lord Chancellor, the Earls of Harrowby, Liverpool, Westmoreland, and Shaftesbury

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered the following Speech:

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The business of the Session being now brought to a conclusion, we are commanded by His Majesty to express to you the great satisfaction which His Majesty feels at releasing you from your laborious attendance in Parliament.

"His Majesty has commanded us to return to you his warmest acknowledgments for the zeal and assiduity with which you have prosecuted the inquiries into the state of Ireland, which he recommended to your attention at the opening of the Session. It is a particular gratification to His Majesty that the tranquility and improved condition of that part of the United Kingdom, have rendered the extraordinary powers with which you have invested His Majesty no longer necessary for the public safety.

"His Majesty is happy to be able to announce that he has received from all Foreign Powers the strongest assurance of their friendly disposition towards this Country, and of their desire to maintain the general peace.

"While His Majesty regrets the continuance of the war in the East Indies with the Burmese power, he trusts that the gallant exertions of the British Forces employed in the operations carried on in the enemy's country may tend to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion of hostilities.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons

"We have it in command from His Majesty to thank you for the supplies granted for the service of the current year, and at the same time to express the satisfaction he derives from the reduction you have found it practicable to make in the burthens of his people

"My Lords and Gentlemen.

"His Majesty has commanded us to assure you, that he is highly sensible of the advantages that must result from the measures you have adopted in the course of the present Session, for extending commerce by the removal of unnecessary and inconvenient restrictions, and from the beneficial relaxations which you have deemed it expedient to introduce into the Colonial system of this country.—These measures His Majesty is persuaded will evince to His Majesty's subjects, in his distant possessions, the solicitude with which Parliament watches over their welfare. They tend to cement and consolidate the interests of the Colonies with those of the Mother Country, and His Majesty confidently trusts that they will contribute to promote that general and increasing prosperity on which His Majesty had the happiness of congratulating you on the opening of the present Session; and which, by the blessing of Providence continues to pervade every part of His Kingdom."

The Lord Chancellor then prorogued Parliament to Thursday 25th, August

The Committee of Privileges in the Lords this morning decided that Sir George Jerningham had made out his claim to the Barony of Stafford

Sheriffs of Counties—It is stated that Mr Peel intends next Session to propose a new arrangement with regard to the Sheriff of counties, they are to be made perpetual, with a salary and to be elected by the respective counties.

Flourishing Revenue—We are very happy to observe, by the Courier of the 5th July, that the result of the examination of the Quarter's Revenue, ending that day, will be most satisfactory. Notwithstanding the repeal of so many productive duties, the excess over the last quarter amounts to £120 000.

Consols for account, at the close this day, 915-8.

July 1—A meeting was held at the London Tavern this day, to take into consideration the establishment of a new University for the City Resolutions were passed unanimously in favour of the measure, and the meeting was pledged to support. Sir JAMES MCINTOSH, Mr. BROUGHAM, and Lord JOHN RUSSELL moved several of the Resolutions.

POPULATION OF IRELAND

Arranged from the first number of "the Dublin Philosophical Journal and Scientific Review."

In the returns made pursuant to an act of Parliament, the population of Ireland in 1821, is said to be 6,801,829, viz; males 3,441,926. females 3,459,901.

The density of this population is 363 persons to an Irish square mile, being three times as populous as Scotland, one and a half as populous as France, and twice as populous as Germany —The population of Ireland to that of England, is as 223 to 397, the latter, however, are not diffused over the country but congregated in cities and manufacturing districts

Ireland, in every point of view, is interesting to the States man and Political Economist, but in none, more than in the increase and decrease of her population; at the commencement of the seventeenth century, (Morrison's estimate) 700 000 is supposed not to be under the truth; at the commencement of the war of 1641, the population consisted of 1 400 000, and in 1671, 1,100,000 This diminution may be accounted for; there were, during the interval, in the country at the same time, five hostile armies, arranged, under the banners of five different parties, and of which, in fact, they met, would have contended with the most deadly rancour." In 1695, Capt. South makes the population 1 034 102 About this period, the Irish began to be an object of ridicule to the London populace, by their fondness for the bone of Cobbett, the mealy potato—and the increase of population in the succeeding century astonishing. In 126 years the population of the County of Armagh has increased eight fold; Louth, six fold; and the kingdom at large, seven fold; but the County of Meath not quite four fold; it is, however, a wheat producing soil.

Fire Arms as a walking Stick—The Sheffield Mercury states, that a patent has been granted to Mr. James Cook, of Birmingham, for certain improvements in making locks for guns, pistols, &c. The object of this invention is the construction of gun and pistol locks upon a more simple principle than those hitherto made Instead of the usual main spring, formed as a lever, the percussion upon which the hammer should be projected forward in a right line, by means of a helical or worm-spring, by which contrivance, all the operative parts of the gun lock are contained in a cylinder within the head of a walking stick The lock, it will all the mechanism for discharging the gun, being placed within a diameter of the barrel its appearance is simply that of an ordinary cane, with a buckhorn head, and a plug ferrule to the bottom or muzzle. The sight is taken along the side of the barrel

Madam Lavalette—Madam Lavalette is still in a private and humble at Munt-Martre, she is now 45, and he not recovered since she was instrumental in saving the life of her husband He is now employed in the King's Household

Danger from Pins—A young woman died in Lincoln February on Sunday last, took a to the head of a pin coming off and lodging in her ear, whilst she was picking it She suffered excruciating tortures for some days prior to her death —Stafford-shire Advertiser.

Canada and Lucania—Canada is said to have derived its name from the Spaniards, when they landed in that quarter, repeating the words, "aca nada," "nothing here." (meaning there was no gold to be found,) of which the Indians caught the sound. Some similar occurrence appears to have occasioned the name of Lorem. When Magellan's party first went on shore, they found one of the native women busily employed, as is usual at the present time, in a mortar hollowed from the trunk of a tree; and, finding herself surrounded by strange men she held up to them the large wooden pestle, calling out Lorem, which in the native tongue for it; and this becoming by word among the Spaniards, they named the island, Lucania, which has been modernized into Lucania

A Secret in Hugging—Buy in winter and sell in summer whatever is bought and sold by measure. Thirty two gallons of Spirits bought in the winter will, without being in the least diluted, make thirty three in the summer The reason is, that all bodies, fluids especially, expand with heat and contract with cold

Languages.—By a reckoning made from the best Dictionaries, for each of the following languages, there are about 20, 000 words in the Spanish; 22,000 in the English; 25,000 in the Latin; 30,000 in the French; 45,000 in the Italian; 54, 000 in the Greek; 80 000 in the German; 15 000 words may also be generally known to any Englishman who understand the Latin, French and Italian

Luther—M. JACOBI, a print dealer at Berlin, has formed a collection of all the portraits of this Great Reformer, amounting to fewer then twelve hundred and five, a far greater number, we apprehend, than has ever fallen to the share of any other individual that ever existed. These effigies are arranged in various classes, the first of which consists of portraits properly so termed, comprising many to be found in title pages to various works. The second class contains historical pieces in which portraits of Luther occur; the third satirical portraits and caricatures; the fourth representations and monuments, medallions, &c. containing effigies and likenesses of Luther. It is to be hoped that this valuable collection will be preserved entire, and become public property —Literary Chron.

PERSIA AND EGYPT.

Recent letters from Ispahan announce that the King of Persia has abdicated the throne in favour of his eldest son, Abdas Mirza It is said that he proposes to visit the ruins of Susa, and intends to employ his leisure moments in rebuilding that city, and restoring it to its former splendour.

Letters from Alexandria of March 28, state that a British Envoy was expected in that city to concert with the Viceroy the means of establishing a regular communication between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Grand Congress of the free Nations of America.

We have the unspeakable satisfaction to announce the approaching union of the Congress, by just and sensible men, On the 17th of the present month, (June,) the ship of war Congress arrived, bringing S S Jose Maria del Pando, and of Peru. The deputies of the other nations will arrive soon, and this event will be hailed as an epoch of power, happiness and glory to the new world.—Canada de Panama.

UNITED STATES.

The ceremony of opening the Miami canal, took place on the 21st ult. The first ground was broke by the governors of Ohio and New-York.

Wealth of the Desert.—A cargo of furs lately discharged at Detroit from Machina, was valued at $270,000!

The Indians.—The Detroit Gazette of August 2, says that during the last two or three weeks, between two and three thousand Indians including women and children, have made their usual annual visit to Malden, for the purpose of receiving their presents from the British Indian agency at that place. They are the Chippewas, Pottawatomies, and Sacs. During the day the Indians were employed in receiving their presents, playing at some of their games, or wandering about the village in quest of liquor—many were continually intoxicated in the streets, to the great annoyance of the inhabitants—but at night there were numerous powows, and nearly the whole time, until the break of day, was employed by the several parties in singing, drumming, and dancing. This visit for presents may properly be called the Indian Carnival.

The Gazette remarks,—this is not a matter of astonishment, that the British government continues the policy of giving annually, such a vast amount of presents to the Indians living in our territory. Have these gifts any connexion with ulterior views, or, are they made as a reward for the past services of the recipients? If future objects are intended, and those objects are hostile, either to our peace or interests, the government of England will most assuredly find itself in an error, and that this expenditure is worse than useless.

We were informed, says the same paper, that the Sacs, at Malden, who brought some prisoners with them from the Mississipi, killed three and burnt their bodies.

On the same day, one Indian who resides near Saginaw, with a shrivel cut in his breast and his upper lip slit off—he too had been keeping the Carnival at Malden, and in a drunken frolic, quarrelled with one of the body-guard of the notorious Kishkauko.

INDIAN ELOQUENCE.

A Translation of Ridge's Talk to General Jackson when they met at the General's Quarters, on the 10th January, 1825

"My heart is glad when I look upon you. Our heads have become white. They are blossomed with age. It is the course of nature. We ought to thank the Great Spirit who has taken care of our lives.—When first we met we were walking in the red path. We waded in blood until the murderers of our women and children had ceased. In the land of our enemies we kindled our war fires. We sat by them until morning, when battle came with the yell of our enemies. We met them; they either died or fell.

"War is no more heard in our land. The mountains speak peace, Joy is in our valleys. The warrior is careless and smokes the pipe of peace. His arms lay idle; he points to them, and speaks to his children of his valiant deeds; his glory will not depart with him but remain with his sons.

"We have met near the house of our Great Father, the President. Friendship formed in danger will not be forgotten, nor will the hungry man forget him who fed him. The meeting of friends gladdens the heart. Our countenances are bright as we look on each other. We rejoice that our Father has been kind to us. The men of his house are friendly. Our hearts have been with you always, and we are happy again to take the Great Chief by the hand."

From the Washington Gazette.

Speech of an Indian Chief, who assisted in killing Gen. McIntosh.

"Brothers!—Mc Intosh is dead. He broke the law of the nation—the law which he made himself. His race was turned to the white men, who wish to take our lands from us. His back was to his own people; his ear was shut to the cries of our women and children. His heart was estranged from us. The words of his talk were deceitful: they came to us like the sickly breeze that flies over the marsh of the great river. The deeds of his evil doings was in his hand. The Great Spirit turned away his face from him in anger, that we might take vengeance on him—He fell by the hands of red men, at his own place, in the sight of his women and children.—The false men who joined him, fell also with him.

"Brothers!—Mc Intosh was brave—the deeds of his youth were mighty; but his heart became changed; he spoke the words of deceitfulness. He walked in crooked paths, which his brethren knew not—paths which led down to death.—He deceived us, and we slew him. The land is red with his blood, and with the blood of his friends. Our vengeance is satisfied. We bury the hatchet of revenge. Let us obey the Great Spirit, that he may lead his children in the path of their wanderings.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S SPEECH.

At the Anniversary Meeting of the

PITT CLUB.

The Lord Chancellor spoke to the following effect:—"In rising Gentlemen, to acquit myself of the task, which your kindness has imposed upon me, it is my first business to state that I am sensible of my own utter incompetence to convey to you the feelings of gratitude which oppress me at the address which your worthy Representative in the Chair has been pleased to make me the object, or at the manner in which you have condescended to second that address Gentlemen, it is [illegible] twenty years since that great man whose memory we are this day met here to celebrate, was placed in his grave. But although his mortal remains be now mouldering in the tomb, his name will be everlasting. (applause.) I had the honour of attending the first of these Meetings, which the grateful people of this country have instituted to the memory of Mr. Pitt. I stated on that occasion that, as long as God should grant me life and health, to witness the succeeding anniversary of this celebration, I should consider it as one of the first duties incumbent upon me not to be absent from it. (Applause.) I was influenced in forming this determination, by many causes. First, because my knowledge was most intimate, perhaps more intimate than that of any other individual, with the infinite services which that great man conferred upon his country, and I cannot conceive that any man's heart is wholly under the impulses of right feeling which denies that tribute due to public merit, which has been justly described by your worthy Chairman as the highest gratification of a public man viz the applause of his country. (Hear.) You will permit me to recall your attention—there are some here, I am afraid, too young to remember, but there are others to whom the word recal may be justly applied—you will permit me, then, to recall to your minds what was the state of this country when that great man entered upon the execution of his office. Our financial affairs were deranged with unexampled embarrassments; the whole world was arrayed in arms against us, and no man could look at the prospect before his eyes, without some feeling of dread as to the result. Perhaps, in contemplating so alarming a crisis, that great truth may come as a relief to the mind, that if England be true to herself, she has nothing to fear.—(Hear.) But, Gentlemen, England, at that time, was not true to herself. (Hear.) I call upon you to recollect, that sedition stalked through the land, teaching treason. I call upon you to recollect the means resorted to to stifle the precepts of that Religion which we have witnessed is [illegible] best safeguard of the interest of the public, because of its connexion with toleration. I call upon you to recollect the efforts made to accomplish the ruin of the Religious Establishments of the country. These were the difficulties which beset that great man upon his entrance into office. He was called upon, not only to meet the demands upon the finances and blood of the country: not only to oppose the powerful combinations of the enemy abroad, but to do that which I knew was most painful to him, to abridge the liberties of his countrymen, in order more effectually to secure their eventual preservation. (Hear.) A more delicate or difficult task never fell to the lot of man. He paused long before he resolved upon the taking such a step but when he he did so resolved, he acted with a triumphant firmness to which alone he owed the completion of his great design. And when, Gentlemen, you compare the situation and prospects of this country at the present period, and the blessings which, under Providence, we have enjoyed and now enjoy. The fortunate circumstances of time to which I have alluded, may I not ask you if it be possible you should forget what that man did for his country? (Loud cheering.) It is now but two or three years ago since we met in this place when after a war of unexampled duration, and fraught with such evils and difficulty during its progress that few could speak with confidence as to the happy result, as the blessings of peace had scarcely begun to be felt, and every one was complaining that things were worse than before.—Even in this Gentlemen, we had a new proof furnished us of the sagacity of this great Minister. That great man foresaw that after the great storm which had rocked the State in peril the waves would not immediately settle and be still. He knew that much must be endured, and that if, in the midst of conflicting elements, the main principles of the Constitution in Church and State were preserved, those principles would eventually restore to us all that we ever possessed of happiness and liberty. (Cheers) Those principles are valuable because they are rational; they give all liberty which it is possible for a man in a state of society, with reference to the liberties of his fellow men, to enjoy. They deprive a man of nothing which he ought to keep, whilst they give him the utmost he can wish. With this view of the principles of our Constitution that great man foresaw that we should sooner or later be in the prosperous situation we now enjoy.—a situation which no man who reverts to our condition in time not long past can say, without taking these things into consideration, he could even have hoped to witness. (Cheers.)—Gentlemen, the Protestant Ascendency, to which, it has been made one of our toasts, I may advert, the Protestant Ascendency, I trust in God, for the sake of those who quarrel with it, may ever continue to be enjoyed in this country. (Loud cheering). There was a time when a difference of religious opinion was attributed to Mr. Pitt, and those who were the supporters of his political principles. But I know of no difference of opinion between the great man and the humble individual who now presumes to tell you, that he will ever act according to his principles. Nothing could have induced Mr. Pitt, to make any alteration in Church or State, which he was not sure would be consistent with the security of both. If, on this point, as to what is, and what is not, consistent with the security of the Constitution, I know that different opinions are held by the most respectable men in the country. In the different projects which we are destined to witness on this occasion, I trust we only see different means the same end. (Hear, hear.) I trust the object is the same in all; but what I say is, that in the utmost of my power, I will stand by the political institutions of the country as they were formed in the time of Mr. Pitt. Let me say, Gentlemen, that upon this subject my political opinions are fixed, so that nothing can alter them. Ecclesiastical tyranny, be assured, will always lead to civil despotism: whilst ecclesiastical freedom ensures civil liberty. (Loud cheers.) With these opinions which I do not conceive it possible for me to alter, were I not to wish to every subject in this country all the toleration which he can possibly enjoy, consistently with the security of the Constitution in Church and State, I should be unworthy of your favour, and of the high station I hold. I firmly believe that a departure from these principles would in one moment destroy our happy Constitution in Church and State, and do full as much mischief to those who dissent as to those who agree in them.—The Constitution to which I adhere was begun at the time of the Revolution, it was fixed at the time of the Revolution, and through a century of difficulty and danger it has conducted this country happily and prosperously, the admiration and envy of the world. (Cheers) Gentlemen, do not lose the blessings secured to you by the Constitution. (Cheers.) I should not be deserving of the compliments which have been paid to me by the Chair if I do not state to you, that during the short time I have to remain in this world, to the utmost of my power I will support the Constitution under which I live, and may God Almighty allow me to leave the world knowing that it is secure!"

(The most enthusiastic plaudits continued to greet this speech long after the Noble and Learned Lord and his Majesty's Ministers present had resumed their seats)

The Chairman—"After the excellent speech of the Lord Chancellor, expressive as it is, of the opinions of nine tenths of the people I feel myself warranted in proposing this sentiment:—"May the principles of Mr. Pitt ever animate the politics of the Government;" three times three, (drunk with loud cheering.) LAND TAX.

The following is taken from the Four Books of Confucius, and shews the manner in which the Land was laid out during the Chow dynasty, and for a considerable period later. The measurement of Land has differed at different periods. At present a Mow of land measures 240 square paces, each 5 cubits.

* About three and a half Chinese le go to an English Mile

THE TSING, OR A PLAN OF SIX HUNDRED AND THIRTY ACRES.

70 mow.	70 mow.	70 mow.
70 mow.	☐ ☺ 14 mow for houses and 56 general field.	70 mow.
70 mow.	70 mow.	70 mow.

This plan represents the character Tsing, without the border, and all was to the proprietor of each division seventy acres of land for cultivation. The centre division, which also contains seventy acres, fourteen of which are designed for buildings occupied by the possessors of the other nine divisions, leaving for the good of government fifty six acres, cultivated among them, each taking a share; that is, to cultivate seven acres for the good of government. This seemed them from any tax on their own land, and the produce formed the Revenue of China.

A PLAN OF NINE HUNDRED ACRES OF LAND.

100 mow.	☐ ☺ 20 mow for houses, & 80 public field.	100 mow.
100 mow.	100 mow.	100 mow.

On this scale, twenty acres are allowed for buildings, leaving for the good of government eighty Mow or acres. Each person cultivates ten acres of the centre or general field, which is a tenth of the whole. The Commentator considers this an extremely light or easy tax, for as twenty Mow are allowed between the Possessors for their buildings, which is two and a half Mow to each, allowing that each lives on his own land, he has the produce of two and a half Mow towards cultivating the ten acres of the Government Field.

9 A mow, or Chinese acre of land, measures 6000 Chinese square cubits, or 8640 square feet, which is nearly one fifth of an English Acre containing 43,560 feet. Its Tax (at present) for five acres is one dollar. The value of Land per acre is from 40 to 70 dollars and upwards, and produces ten Shih of rice during Spring and Autumn. The tenant pays the owner three shih, which is worth six dollars, thus the annual rent of five mow is 30 dollars, or £7 10 0 per acre.—Agreeable to this statement, the Land Tax and Ground Rent of Land in England is considerable less than in China, from the latter being the principal source of Revenue.

As to the Revenue of China at a very early period, little information can be collected respecting it, further than that it has differed under different dynasties. The government under the dynasty Chow, (which commenced 1105 and continued till 248 years B C.) possessed a tenth of the whole land, which tenth part was cultivated by the Agriculturists agreeable to certain laws laid down, such as are explained under Land Tax, for the good of the state, together with cloth and silks, which were received as the ground rent of traders and private individuals, composed the Revenue of Government of that period. Agriculture was considered an honorable occupation, and its Tax was viewed as aiding the Government, while Commerce was thought lightly of. They knew nothing of duties on transfers of goods from one province to another: though even there were officers to prevent what was considered illegal trade. At the close of the Han dynasty, situations in the government were sold, which brought in considerable Revenue, and which have continued to the present day, but thought the disgrace of the reigning family. In consequence of a spirited document presented in 1822, by Sin-tung-yih and Yuen-tan, the Yu shes of Yunnan, the reigning Emperor Taou kwang decided on dispensing with it, and to confer situations solely on those who have obtained literary distinctions. Persons may purchase rank but not hold situations in the government. This improvement in his government, shortly after ascending the throne caused him to be very popular. During the Sung dynasty every family consisting of so many males, were required to pay an annual sum to the government.

Natural History.

THE PORTUGUESE MAN OF WAR.

The fish, commonly called by seamen, the "Portuguese Man of War," is the holothuria physalis of Linnæus, and a species mollusca. It consists of a small bladder about seven inches long; very much resembling the air bladder of fishes; from the bottom of which descends a number of strings, of a bright blue, and red; some of them three or four feet in length; which, upon being touched, sting like a nettle, but with much more force.

On the top of the bladder is a membrane, which is used like a sail, and turned as to receive the wind was remarkably distinguished. He had no sudden whichsoever way it blows; this membrane is marked in fine pink-coloured veins, and the animal is, in starts, no violent gesticulation; his movements were slow and feeble; misery was depicted in his countenance; he moved his head in the most deliberate manner; his eyes were fixed, or, if they turned to any one near him, he made a pause, and fixed his look on the person after much delay; his features at the same time telling what he was going to say, before he uttered a word. During the whole time he presented a sight of woe and misery, and a total alienation of mind from every idea but that of his unkind daughters.

As he had a sufficient fortune, his friends chose to let him remain in his house, under two keepers appointed by Dr. Munro.

Garrick frequently went to see his distracted friend, who passed the remainder of his life in going to the window, and there playing in fancy with his child. After some dalliance, he dropped it, and, bursting into a flood of tears, filled the house with shrieks of grief and bitter anguish. He then sat down, in a pensive mood, his eyes fixed on one object, at times looking slowly around him as if to implore compassion. Garrick was often present at these scenes of misery, and was ever after used to say, that it gave him the first idea of King Lear's madness.

Quantity of Blood in Animals.—Those who have not considered the subject must be surprised at the quantity of blood which passes through the heart of any moderately sized animal in the course of twenty four hours. In man, the quantity of blood existing in the body at any given moment is probably from 30 to 40 pints. Of these an ounce and a half, or about three table spoonfuls, are sent out at every stroke; which multiplied into 75 (the average rate rate of the pulse) give 1125 ounces, or seven pints, in a minute; i. e. 420 pints, or 25½ gallons in an hour, and 1260 gallons, i. e. nearly 24 hogsheads in 24 hours. The consideration of this amazing quantity is, however, a subject of mere empty wonder, if not accompanied with a reflection, that, in order to produce the aggregate amount, the heart is kept in constant motion; and that, in fact, it is incessantly in your element, when you are begrimed with dirt, beating, as it is termed or throwing out the blood or up to your elbows in blood.' into the arteries, from the first period of our existence to the moment of our death, without any sensation of fatigue, or even without consciousness, excepting under occasional corporeal or mental agitation.—Dr. Kidd, Edin. Phil. Journal.

This writer has often seen him rise in company to give a representation of this unfortunate father. He leaned on the back of a chair, seeming with parental fondness to play with a child, and, after expressing his most heart felt delight, he suddenly dropped the infant, and instantly broke out in a most violent agony of grief, so tender so affecting, and with the aggregate of the quantity that must pass through the heart of that animal in twenty four hours, with a gush of tears.

There it was, said Garrick, that I learned to imitate madness; I copied nature; and to that owed my success in King Lear.

It is wonderful to tell that he descended from that minute the quantity circulated through the heart first character in Tragedy, to the part of Abel Drug- calculated at 15 gallons for each pulsation, will be- ger; he represented the tobacco boy in the truest 132,000 gallons, equal to 8800 hogsheads in 24 hours. comic style: no grimace, no starting, no wild gesticulation. He seemed to be a new man.

Hogarth, the famous Painter, saw him in Richard III. and on the following night in Abel Drugger: he was so struck, that he said to Garrick, 'You are constant motion; and that, in fact, it is incessantly

Budget of Valuable Receipts.

Infallible Cure for the Rheumatism.—Take half a pint neats foot oil, half ditto spirits, 1 gill spirits turpentine, and 1 ditto beef gall.

N B.—Mix the above all together, and put it to the fire (in a covered vessel) till the half pint of spirits is evaporated; then let it cool, and anoint the joints twice a day, viz. morning and evening.

Rye Coffee.—It is stated that Philadelphia furnishes Boston with about 5000 barrels of rye coffee to a year.

Bugs and Fleas.—Sprinkle or wash the room and bed rooms with common salt water, and these troublesome insects will entirely disappear.

Cure of Dysentery.—A decoction of the roots of Blackberry bushes is a safe, sure, and speedy cure, for the dysentery. This receipt was obtained from the Oneida Indians.

The common blackberries, gathered when ripe, are also effectual, they are put into an oven, not very hot, to exhale all the moisture from them, and when quite crisp and dry, are reduced to powder, and then kept in well closed bottles. We are not informed what quantity makes a dose, or how often it should be exhibited, but we are assured that it operates as a powerful and safe remedy.

Relief for Cramp in the Stomach.—I have seen the most violent cases of cramp in the stomach immediately relieved by drinking freely of warm sweetened water, when opium, or its various preparations, nor any thing else would give relief to the patient. Believing that this hint may probably be the means of relief to some one or more afflicted with the awful complaint, I think it my duty to make this communication.—Norwich Courier.

How to indentify Silver.—Silver, in its native or virgin state, has a great external resemblance to tin, but may, on examination, be easily distinguished from that metal by its being much heavier, and by its remaining unaltered under the operation of fire, whereas tin burns away entirely under a continued heat.

As ores of silver are frequently combined with other metals, it may be of use to furnish the inquirer with a test, by which he may ascertain both its presence and the quantity in which it is combined. For this purpose, let him put a few particles of the ore into a watch glass; add two or three drops of nitrous acid; then hold the glass over the flame of a candle till the ore is dissolved; after which dilute the solution with water, and stir it about with a bright copper wire. Whatever silver is present will immediately separate from the solution and attach itself to the wire. Or, instead of making use of the wire, add to the solution one drop of muriatic acid, or common salt, and the silver, if any be present, will be separated in a dense and dull white cloud. Mechanics' Mag.

Powerful and Economical Churning.—Churning by wind! indeed 'tis true We shall not attempt a more full description at present of this ingenious contrivance, than simply to say, that proudly aloft above the dairy room, courting the fitful breeze, stands two pounderous pair of wings—the revolution of these turns a crank to which is attached a rod, regulated in its up and down motion—to the lower end of this rod is attached a lever, fastened to a pivot in the centre—and to the other end of the lever is affixed the dasher of a common churn We saw it in operation, and merry work did it make of it. The owner informed us that not a day transpired except the holy Sabbath, in which it did not perform its daily task.—Ithaca Chronicle.

THE EXILE OF CAMBRIA

BY A LADY.

See, the night is approaching, the light fades away,
And faint, and more faint, beams the bright orb of day
And [illegible] are all hush'd, and the ocean serene,
[illegible] the lakes of thy valleys, is seen
[illegible] Come to fond sympathy dear,
[illegible] rem[illegible]brance regret's saddest tear,
When flowers [illegible] we adore flee in shadows around,
When the forms [illegible] closely their spells they have wound
And we feel but how

Yes! this is the hour, when heart-broken, alone,
The exile looks back on the days that are flown
And in fancy views all he may never more see,
And thinks, oh! how fondly dear Cambria of thee!
'Tis in vain that for him sweetest flow'rets entwine,
'Tis in vain blooms for him the soft landscape divine;
Their beauties, though brilliant, may nothing avail,
He sighs the more deep for his own native vale.

Go bid him the wonders around him admire,
Go seek to awaken his soul's dormant fire;
Ah; vain the attempt! he may languidly smile
But his heart is fast bound in dear Cambria the while:
Oh! it is not the beauties of earth, sea or air,
Or softness of climate, or aught we call fair,
That may quicken the beat or to pleasure expand,
The heart that still pines for its own native land.

Population of Quebec.—We understand that the Census of this Town, under the late Act, is nearly completed, and that the population of the City amounts to about 22,000 without including the military and transient persons, which in the summer season probably exceed 3000. The Coves from l'Ance des Meres to Silliery, are a Town of four miles in extent. We should suppose that at this moment Quebec and an extent of a few miles round it contains about 40,000 souls.—Old Gazette

HALIFAX, July 27.

Population of Nova Scotia.—The population of Nova Scotia, by the census of 1817, came to 78,345; but as it was confessedly imperfect and Cape Breton has been since annexed to us, our present population is commonly estimated at 100,000; which is porbably a very near estimate to the truth

The Basking Shark.—On Thursday last a fish of enormous size, was discovered floundering among the nets near Portuguese Cove, at the entrance of the harbour; and by the following morning, it had become so exhausted, that the fishermen succeeded in bringing it to land. On Sunday evening it was floated up past the town, and now lies at Mr MARSHALL'S ship yard. It turns out to be one of that species called the Basking Shark; and is almost the largest of which we find mention; being 35 feet in length, and measuring 30 feet in circumference, after the entrails were taken out

Newly discovered Mineral Spring.—We have received a letter from one of our subscribers in the township of Rawdon, mentioning that he had been violently attacked with the Cholera morbus, and for a considerable time his sufferings were of the most acute nature, but that he got almost instantaneous relief by drinking about a pint of water from a mineral spring which is only a short distance from Gibson's Ferry in Rawdon. This circumstance our correspondent communicated to others similarly affected who experienced the same beneficial results as himself by using the water. Such a discovery is of great importance to those who may be so unfortunate as to be afflicted with the malady above mentioned, and as a knowledge of the good qualities of the waters of this spring may be productive of beneficial consequences, we willingly comply with the wish of our correspondent who requested us to mention the circumstance "for the public good."

At this moment when our readers are doubtl as congratulating themselves on the final passage of the Bill for the admission of Canadian Wheat into the ports of the United Kingdom, for home consumption during two years, at the moderate duty of five shillings per quarter, it may be useful to lay before them the following statement of the whole exports of both Wheat and Flour, from the port of Quebec to Great Britain, and to other countries, for the twenty five years last past; and, when the moderate average of annual export, resulting from this view of facts is considered, it may be a matter of surprise, that His Majesty's Ministers found so much opposition in the House of Lords to extend the full measure of their benevolent and judicious policy to these provinces.

Editorial Commentary.

We have no Foreign News of any great importance this week.

In this number our readers will find the latest and, perhaps, the best, display of eloquence, which has been made by the closest imitator we have had of the great CURRAN, and we are glad to perceive the very considerable improvement which Mr PHILLIPS has made, by chastening his productions, and toning off much of their former glare, and redundancy of figure. His usual overloadings of fanciful ornament, always reminded us of the flounces, and petiot, and ready ribands, with which the vulgar wench of a country fair thinks to captivate the heart of her equally tasteless and vulgar swain—and which are so far removed from the elegant simplicity and beauty of the Grecian costume, as the false chronicle, and coarse, and extravagant imagery of a young, flowery, and sodomanaical, Orator, pretending to distinction by giving a loose to his wildest ravings, are from the chaste, brilliant, argumentative, and powerful eloquence of a BOLINGBROKE, a CHATHAM, or a PITT.

Therein, as the Edinburgh Reviewers have well observed, something very peculiar and very well worth attending to, in the character of Irish eloquence.—" More vehement, and figured and poetical than any that is now attempted in England, it wins almost always at dazzling the imagination, or at least the passions at first, and, as much as at enlightening the understanding. On almost every subject, it aspires at being public, or magnificent—and, while it adorns what is grand, or kindles what is interesting with the rays of its genius, is apt to involve in the redundant veil of its imagery what is either too common-place to be much admired, or too remote from the natural language of fearless genius and impassioned feeling. It will not always do, and to express judicious sentiments or correct reasoning—but it will generally lead to lofty principles, and glimpses of great beauty. It is sometimes gaudy, and frequently noisy and redundant—but it has usually strength in its exuberance—and, for the most part, fancies itself reason in its extravagance. Though the design and the drawing may be greatly defective, the colouring is always brilliant, and the expression, for the most part, original and powerful." Think the Scot, and most correctly drawn character of Irish Eloquence we know of—and, no men have more fervently illustrated it than PHILLIPS, and his great prototype CURRAN.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

On Sunday, the 8th of July, the Most Noble William Lennox, 8th Duke of St Albans, Hereditary Grand Falconer of England, died at his own house, in the 66th year of his age; he is succeeded in his titles and estates, by his eldest son William Aubrey de Vere, Earl of Burford, now Duke of St Alban's.

A company is incorporated with a capital of £200,000, to establish a communication between Liverpool and other great commercial towns by Telegraph.

A new three wheeled carriage has been invented at Bristol, which will travel at the rate of eight miles per hour, and is to be propelled by manual labour from within the vehicle.

Sir Walter Scott, with some members of his family, had arrived in Dublin, where he would remain a few days previous to his intended tour through Killarney, and the South of Ireland.—We think it probable, therefore, that the next waverly novel will be an Irish one. A public dinner was proffered him, but he declined the honour.

The London Quarterly Review has again changed its Editor. It is not yet said who has succeeded Mr Griffiths.

A work has been published by Mr Coventry, in which he demonstrates that Lord George Sackville, was the author of Junius.

Joanna Southcott—There are still many disciples of Joanna Southcott at Ashton under Lyne, and one of them, John Lees, has assumed the character of a prophet, and in a published rhapsody, calls upon his fellows to assume the name of the "Tene Israelites," to abandon such of their garments as contain a mixture of linen and wool, and to put away all pictorial representations. Five respectable genlemen have actually signed their names to a paper recommending this rhapsody to the obedient attention of mankind.

Russian voyage of Discovery—The Russian frigate Kreiser, which sailed in November, 1822, on a voyage of discovery, has arrived in England. It is stated that she made no discoveries.

Diseases of the Brain—Dr Armstrong on lecturing over inflamation of the brain, remarking on the tendency, in some cases of delirium, of the patient to display, in his ramblings his most predominant feeling; and quoted the case of a Justice's clerk, who during the progress of delirium, was continually engaged in swearing in witnesses one after another very rapidly, and he invariably concluded by saying, "So help you God—Kiss the Book—Give me a shilling."

Excellent Plan—We understand that the inhabitants of Glasgow have hit upon an excellent method for reducing the present exhorbitant price of flesh meat, by coming to a resolution to "eat no more flesh" until it shall find its level with the price of other necessaries of life—in consequence, the meat on hot has been, for the last fortnight, in a complete stagnation. A similar determination here, we think, would be very advisable as the price of butchers' meat has of late been unreasonably high.—Liverpool Paper.

Mr Theed's Bravid—At a meeting of several gentlemen at Newcastle, on the 10th instant, it was resolved to procure, from the chisel of a first rate artist, a marble bust of their highly talented townsman Mr. Thomas Bewick, to be placed in the Library-room of the Literary and Philosophical Society there. The engravings on wood, by this celebrated artist, have long been held in great estimation.

Chinese Saw—A Chinese Saw, has been introduced into France and the Colonies, which will saw the largest and longest trees when laid on the ground, and not placed on stocks, as is the common practice. This instrument, originally of Chinese invention, has not been hitherto much known; and though already found to be very useful, is susceptible of much improvement.

True Politeness—Politeness is a just medium between formality and rudeness; it is in fact good nature regulated by quick discernment, which proportions itself to every situation, and every character; it is a restraint laid by reason and benevolence in every irregularity of temper, of appetite and passion. It accommodates itself to the innatic laws of custom and fashion, as long as they are not inconsistent with the higher obligations of virtue and religion.

To give effect to sey and grace to politeness, it must be accompanied with some degree of taste as well as delicacy; and although its foundation must be rooted in the heart, it is not perfect without a knowledge of the world.

In society it is the happy medium which blends the most discordant natures; it imposes silence on the loquacious, and inclines the most reserved to furnish their share of conversation; it represses the despicable, but common ambition of being the most prominent character in the scene; it interests the general desire of being mutually agreeable; takes off the offensive edge of raillery, and gives delicacy to wit; it preserves subordination, and reconciles ease with propriety; like other valuable qualities, its value is best estimated when it is absent.

Nor greatness can awe it into servility, no intimacy can sink it into a coarse familiarity—to superiors, it is respectful freedom; to inferiors, it is unassuming good nature—to equals, every thing that is charming—studying anticipating, and attending to all things, yet at the same time apparently disengaged and careless.

Such is true politeness; by people of wrong heads and unworthy hearts degraded to its two extremes and by the generality of mankind confined within the narrow bounds of mere good breeding, which is only one branch of it.

Roman Wills—Roman wills were sealed by seals applied after they had pierced the deeds and had passed the linen envelope three times through he holes, a method established in the time of Nero against forgery, and adopted in Germany and Gaul. Where it remained till the middle age—Outside the will were written the names of those who had affixed their seals. Upon the first page, or left hand tablet was written the names of the principal heirs; upon the second or right hand tablet, the names of the legatees. To the Horace alludes. The Greek wills were signed and sealed in the presence of the magistrate. Cicero shews how easy of detection were the Roman testamentary tablets.—Anglo Saxon wills were written on three copies, each to match, like a tally, and after being read over in the presence of various persons, were severally consigned to the ecclesiastical bodies, and this custom continued to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, for then Maurice Lord Berkley, before he went abroad, left three separate wills in the custody of three several friends, lest any one should be lost. Duplicate testaments were written on wood and bark; the latter in 640.—Church chests were the depositaries of wills. From the Norman Conquest they had been generally written in Latin, but in the reign of Edward the Third English was used.

ORIGIN OF MONASTIC LIFE IN ENGLAND

(From Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire.)

Touching the beginning of a monastic life here, in England, if we look after the particular persons, who in times of persecutions fled to woods, caves, and deserts for preservation, it will be hard to point out the first that so retired themselves, but if we consider their first being gathered into any Convent, then certainly those of Glastonbury in Somersetshire, and Bangor in Cheshire, will have the pre-eminence, in the latter whereof, as Bede testifieth, there were so great a number, that being divided into seven parts, each having a separate ruler, every part was no less in number than 300 all which lived by the labour of their hands; by which, these cannot be said (for aught I know) to have lived under any other rule than the Reguas in Palestine, of whom Polydore speaketh. And therefore to come unto those times, that the order of Benedictine monks was first transplanted into England, we are not to look higher than Austin the monk who, about the year of Christ 596, was sent into England by Pope Gregory; whereupon Episcopal Sees were established in sundry places, and monasteries built for monks observing the rule of St. Benedict; so that shortly after there were 9 in England; but of that order, which first began to be exercised in the abbey of Glastonbury; wherein, before that time they lived after the manner of Eremitan convents (saith she), and which was so famous in ancient time, especially through England, that before the Norman Conquest there was scarce a monastery of any other.

PROBERT'S LETTER TO HIS WIFE.

My dearest Wife.—I sit down with dreadful agitation to inform you that my fate is at length decided. The Privy Council met this afternoon, and the Rev Mr Cotton, our Ordinary, has just communicated to me the awful intelligence that myself and three others are to suffer on Monday morning. Oh! my dear wife, the shock I experienced on hearing it overpowered my feelings; it was quite unexpected as I was in hopes his Majesty might have been induced to have spared my life.—The thoughts that I must soon join the spirit of that man whose blood crieth for vengeance, and whose dying declaration was that he knew we long I should follow him—I have often thought of his words, and trembled from place to place have I wandered, seeking rest, but it had none; the dread rose in my mind day and night, and my sleep has been disturbed by imaginary frightful and horrible. It will soon be finished and the grave will soon close on my remains; and I shall only have to meet that dreadful day when the secrets of all hearts will be disclosed, and every one will receive the reward of his earthly existence. On that grand day may I receive the forgiveness of an offended God and hear that heavenly benediction which will be pronounced on all those who have repented with sorrowfulness of their past sins. To leave the world, to me will be gloomiess; but you, my much-loved injured wife, who will protect you? My late most specific as a sting to you and the remembrance of my crime sink into your heart. Bury in the tomb who holds our happiness to all; may he cause you to forget one who brought misery and disgrace upon you, and cause the remainder of your days to pass in comfort.—Pray to him for your unfortunate husband. I shall see you before I die; and I must now conclude as you is wrenched hand and.

W. PROBERT.

Afflicting Circumstance—Between William Kelly and Helen Henderson, a couple attachment had subsisted for years, both resided in the Parish of Ur, and little anticipating the calamity that followed they with joyous hearts, fixed their wedding day for Friday week, the 10th instant. A number of friends were invited, and the ceremony was to be performed at Meikle Dalbeattie's. On the Thursday preceding, she became suddenly indisposed, and on some one asking her to throw a little needlingly replied, "Yes! but it must be a soft place, for oh! I feel as if I would never rise again."—

In the course of the day she became worse, and a doctor having been sent for, he declared the complaint to be of a serious nature, and hesitated from the alarmists fears as to the issue. Next morning the wedding party began to assemble—the worthy clergyman also arrived—and then, alas! the house of joy was unexpectedly turned into the house of mourning. The unhappy bride, whose sands of life were well nigh run, was humanely made aware of her situation—the heart-broken bridegroom was also warned that death was in the cup—and amid the tears and sighs of the present, they were mutually interrogated whether, under such awful dispensation of Providence, the proposed ceremony should proceed or be delayed. A question so trying, was, perhaps, never put under similar circumstances and after communing with their own hearts, the bride expressed a wish to close her eyes as an affectionate wife; the bride groom to discharge the duty of a sorrowing widower, by laying the head of his betrothed in the grave. This resolution added not a little to the agony of the scene—the mournful party approached the couch of the dying woman—the divine favour was most pathetically invoked amidst many interruptions from hearts that seemed ready to burst from the bosoms they agitated—the bridegroom grasped the burning hand that was languidly extended in token of assent—the worthy clergyman pronounced a blessing, and in faltering accents made those one whom in less than twelve hours death had severed and sundered for ever. We cannot dwell on what followed. The eyes that affection had for a moment lighted, gradually waxed glazed and dim—the bridal bed became the couch of death, and she who but a day or two before had been rejoicing in the prospect of conjugal felicity, was stretched a lifeless but lovely corpse before many of the wedding party had resolution to tear themselves from a scene so distressing.—Dumfries Courier

Foreign Intelligence.

INDIA.

The War in India.—The Calcutta Gazette of February 21st, contains despatches from Lieut. Col Richards, commanding the army that marched against Assam, announcing that the whole of the province of Assam had been evacuated by the Burmese, in pursuance of convention made between Lieut. Col. Richards and the Burmese commander. The affair was considered of so much importance, that the guns at Calcutta were fired on the occasion.

FRANCE.

The following anecdote is the topic of conversation in the saloons at Paris: On the day that the coronation took place, as the King's tailor Sanctus, who had been sent for to Rheims for the purpose of arranging his Majesty's robes, &c. was employed adjusting the King's mantle, finding some of the eyelet holes too small for the hooks, he took his scissors from his pocket, and was proceeding to ease them by inserting the points into the breast of the mantle, when a lord in waiting, imagining that the poor snip was about to assassinate his Sacred Majesty, immediately drew his sword, rushed upon the poor knight of the thimble, seized him by the collar, and would no doubt instantly have caused him to make his exit as "with a bare bodkin," but for the timely interference of his Majesty, who laughed heartily at the mistake.

The French delight in little strokes of malice.—One of their stories is, that the Duke of Orleans looking about rather anxiously for a Napoleon which he had dropped at a soiree, the Duke of Northumberland politely assisted his search by the light of a bank note, which he burned for the purpose instead of a taper His Royal Highness has rather a reputation for prudence.

A duel has been fought in Paris between Count Seger and General Gourgond, in consequence of the answer of the latter to the Account of the Russian Compaign, by the former. Count Seger was wounded in the arm, and the latter in the body.

UNITED STATES.

Mr. Owen's Establishment—It appears that they live a very pleasant life at Harmony—singing, dancing, and hearing the news for about three hours every day. If Mr. Owen set such a merry sort of life agoing in the west, it is very probable that many of our gay folks, who cannot dance every day, nor eat as many figs and oranges as a certain concavity might contain, will be anxious to go a harmonizing over the Alleghanies.

The following letter dated the 1st June, was received by a gentleman in Washington, and first published in a new Literary work entitled the Repository.—Hartford Times.

"Harmony is a perfect garden. We have at present, almond, fig, orange, lemon, mulberry, peach, and apple trees, &c. A considerable portion of the fruit is nearly ripe. We have chosen a superintending committee of twelve—nine of whom are from among ourselves, and three were named by Mr. Owen. We are becoming reconciled to this new world, though every thing appears strange at first, and our numbers are daily augmenting. One of the two churches has been transformed into a Hall, where we repair every day for the purpose of reading, hearing the news, singing, dancing, &c. &c from a quarter past 12 till 2 o'clock. The allotted time to work, or to devote in any way to the welfare of the Society, is ten hours in summer, and eight in the winter. Our labour is valued by the committee every week.

"I should have written at least a dozen letters to different people, recommending them to come here, but the charm of novelty deludes so many that I know not but I may be under its influence, and will therefore delay a little longer. I would not, however, as I now feel, exchange situations with any of my acquaintances whom I left in Washington"

THE SPEECH
Mr. CHARLES PHILLIPS,

At the Anniversary Meeting of the London Orphan Society

Mr. Charles Phillips rose, amidst general cheering. He said, after the call which had been unexpectedly and indeed unnecessarily made on him, that it was quite impossible not to say a few words in obedience to it. "The call, however," continued Mr. Phillips, "has been most necessary, for it is, impossible, in my mind, to add anything to the lucid statements of the Royal Personage who fills the chair, statements most eloquently made and powerfully aided, if aid they wanted, by the influence of his example. However, Sir, on such a subject, silence would be almost criminal. It is utterly impossible to peruse the records of this noble institution without being filled with admiration at its benevolence to shelter those who are without a home—to cherish those who are without a parent—to protect the innocence which can have known no crime—to rescue misfortune from the temptations which surround it—to substitute education for ignorance, morality for vice, and religion for infidelity—these are its objects, and they are objects in which every creed and every party, and every "human form that wears a heart" must unite in the admiration Its positive advantages are too obvious to be overlooked, and yet perhaps they are not manifested so clearly in the benefits conferred as in the evils which it may have been the instrument of averting. The statement made by your worthy Sheriff early in this evening has but too much truth in it. Let any one reflect, who has traversed the streets of this immense metropolis how many he has met even in his daily progress, who seem to have been apprenticed from their very infancy to crime—the well-known of innocence scarcely faded from their cheeks, he mysteries of crime familiar to their memories! Unfortunate wretches, whom the very cradle seems to have heaved into a frightful and almost miraculous maturity of vice! And yet perhaps, though now the heirs of shame, the foundlings of the scaffold they might have crowned manhood's virtue with the reverence of age had they been taught to lisp even religion's alphabet. But alas, their heads were pillowed on a parents grave, and their was no light to guide them in the desert of their orphanage! Let any man reflect on his hours of relaxation, how mirth had been clouded, and amusement overcast by the melancholy spectacles he has been compelled to witness! How the shadow of what was once health and youth and loveliness has flitted athwart him like a spectre risen from the tomb of virtue! How his spirit has been bowed down; how his heart has been afflicted as he saw before him the early ruin of life's noblest ornament, woman; in her purity the world's paragon, in her depravity its shame and degradation; the base or the blessing of civilized society; the charm of man's existence or its curse; without any modification, either almost an angel or almost a fiend. And yet that tainted one—cast, if her infancy had known a moral guardian, might have been the centre of her domestic paradise, diffusing light and joy and happiness, its infant's cradle, the living temple of chastity and beauty, the fairest, the purest, and the loveliest, in which vestal spirits nursed the flame of heaven Such are the blessings this charity may confer; such are the calamities it may be the instrument of averting. Many a bursting heart will bless it unknown earth; many a soul redeemed will hallow it garner; the wounded soldier will think upon his orphan and bless it ere he dies, and the last tear which dims the eye of virtuous misfortune will be illuminated and exhaled by the ray of its consolation. Happy are they to whom fortune gives this luxury of benevolence! Happy and proud and glorious is the country in which inclination thus anticipates ability, in which charity at the same time makes the people noble, and gives the nobility a durable popularity; in which the merchants have been said to be Princes, and in which we see to-night that the Princes, amid the pageantries of rank, require no monitor to remind them of humanity. This, in my mind, is the peculiar glory of our country; and if I wished to point to display her to the foreigner, I would not turn him to her crowded harbour, to her garden landscape, to her proud metropolis, to her countless marts of opulence and commerce. I would not unfurl for him her trophied flag, or unroll even the immortal charter of her liberties. No, but I would lead him to institutions such as this.

I would shew him the Monarch's Brother, enlisting the people in the service of philanthropy. I would shew him her Missionaries, at the Tropic and the Pole; her Sanscrit benevolence, pouring its oil upon the wounds of the sufferer, her hereditary Howards, Butons, and her Frys, building their fortunes, but as the trustees of misery; her sanlike Charity that knows no horizon, and scattering love, expands over the world, wherever there is want to be relieved, or injury to be redressed, or sorrow to be comforted; now depopulating the pirate's dungeon; now unfettering the distant African.—Conquering with Victory, herself a captive; a willing captive in the triumph of Humanity.

This is her eulogium, far brighter than emblem's crown, far more lasting than conquest's acquisitions; these are the deeds of genuine, permanent, indisputable glory. This is the pillar of her imperishable fame, which shall rise to heaven from its island base triumphant and eternal when empire's monuments are in dust around it. Go on then, first of nations, in the van of charity. The flowers of earth and splendours of eternity shall bloom and beam around you in your progress, and for you, her champions in this trophied enterprise, your country will honour you—your hearts will thank you—when you approach your homes, you will be welcomed there by the spirits of the homeless, to whom you have given shelter; when you embrace your little ones the orphan's blessing will make their eye its throne and smile upon you the light of its retribution; and if hereafter "the hour of calamity and vicissitude should arise," if that home should be desolate, and those dear ones parentless, many a spirit will put up its prayer that the Universal Father may look upon their orphanage and sooth and shield it with the grace of his protection.

Mr. Phillips was heard throughout with the most profound silence, and when he had concluded the cheering continued for a considerable time.

GHOST STORY.

Ghost Story—[From the memoirs of Madame de Genlis]

"The Chevalier the Jaucour, had an agreeable countenance, a round face, full and pale, black eyes, handsome features, and brown hair, which he wore in disorder, and without powder; he really deserved his sobriquet of moonlight. His shape was noble, and he had a good air; his disposition was excellent, and full of sincerity and honor—always heard of this adventure as being perfectly true, for the Chevalier de Jaucour gave his word of honor that he added nothing to the story, and he was incapable of telling a lie, in which he, besides, in such a case there would have been no pleasantry. The adventure became prophetic at the period because knowing the Chevalier de Jaucour intimately, I have heard him relate it five or six times in my presence.

"The Chevalier, who was born in Burgundy, was educated at the college of Autun He was twelve years of age, when his father, who wished to send him to the army, under care of one of his uncles, brought him to his château. The same evening, after supper he was conducted to a large room, where he was to sleep; on a stool in the middle of the room was placed a lighted lamp, and he was left alone. He had no inclination to sleep, and as he had scarcely looked at his room on entering it, he now amused himself with examining it. His eyes were attracted by an old curtain of tapestry wrought with figures, which hung opposite to him; the subject was somewhat singular; it represented a temple, of which all the gates were closed.

"At the top of the staircase belonging to the old face stood a kind of post fi or high priest, clothed in a long white robe, holding in one hand a bundle of rods, and in the other a key. Suddenly the Chevalier, who passed earnestly on the figure began to rub his eyes, which he thought deceived him; then he looked again, and his surprise and wonder rendered him motionless! He saw the figure move! and slowly descend the steps of the staircase. At last it quitted the tapestry, and walked in the room, crossed the chamber and stood near the bed and addressing the poor boy, who was petrified with fear; it pronounced distinctly these words: "These rods will scourge many; when thou shalt see them raised on high, then stay not, but seize the key of the open country and flee!" On pronouncing these words, the figure turned round, walked up to the tapestry, re-mounted the steps, and replaced itself in its former position The Chevalier was covered with a cold sweat, remained for more than a quarter of an hour in a state of stupefaction, that he had not the power to call for assistance At last some one came, but not wishing to confide his adventure to a servant, he merely said that he felt unwell, and a person was sent to watch by his bed side during the night

"The following day the Count de Jaucour, his father, being questioned him on his pretended malady of the preceding night, the young man related what he had seen. In place of laughing at him, as the Chevalier expected, the Count listened very attentively and then said: "This is very remarkable; for my father in his early youth, in the very chamber, and with the same personage represented in that tapestry met with a singular adventure." The Chevalier heard very gladly have heard the detail of his grandfather's vision, but the Count refused to say any more upon the subject, and even desired his son never to mention it again and the same day the Count caused the tapestry to be pulled down, and burnt in his presence in the castle court yard

"Such is the detail of this story in all its simplicity. Mrs Radcliffe would have gladly made use of it; and I dare say the Chevalier de Jaucour thought of it at the time of the revolution; for the fact is that when he saw the rods raised, he seized the key of the open country, and fled He quitted France!"

Natural History.

EXTRAORDINARY SAGACITY IN A DOG.

[FROM "L'HISTOIRE DES CHIENS CELEBRES"]

Mustapha—We read in an English Gazette, of an act which would indicate a certain extent of reason in brutes. Mustapha, a strong and active grey hound belonged to an artillerist of Dublin—Raised from its birth in the midst of camps, it always accompanied its master, and exhibited no alarm in the midst of battle. In the hottest engagements, it remained near the cannon, and carried the match in its mouth!

At the memorable battle of Fontenoi, when we broke the square battalions of the Hanoverians, the master of Mustapha received a mortal wound. At the moment when about to fire upon the enemy, he and several of his corps were struck to the earth by a discharge of artillery. Seeing his master extended lifeless and bleeding, the dog became desperate and howled piteously Just at this time, a body of French soldiers was advancing rapidly to gain possession of the piece, which was aimed at them from the top of a small rising ground.—Who would believe it, if the fact was not attested by several witnesses, worthy of credit Doubtless, with a view to revenge his master's death, Mustapha seized the lighted match with his paws, and set fire to the cannon loaded with case shot; seventy men fell on the spot, and the remainder took to flight.

After this bold stroke, the dog laid down sadly, near the dead body of its master, licked his wounds and remained there twenty two hours without sustenance. He was at length, with difficulty taken away by the comrades of the deceased. This courageous grey hound was carried to London, and presented to George II. who had him taken care of as a good servant.

Crocodile—A Crocodile measuring 18 feet from head to tail, was killed at Barrycore, in the East Indies, a short time since. It had committed great havock on the banks of the river, and in the stomach was found part of a woman, a dog, a cat, and a part of a sheep, besides several rings and other ornaments worn by the native females.

LIGHTENING RODS.

From the Connecticut Journal.

In the recently published number of Professor Silliman's Journal of Science, we notice a valuable paper on lightning rods, by Dr. J. Van Rensselaer, of New York, which it is hoped will be eminently useful in calling public attention to this important subject. The paper commences with the following remark:

"We hear so frequently of the destruction of lives and property by the effect of lightning that it is surprising more effectual measures are not taken to guard against its power. In a country where the discovery was made, we should naturally expect to find it in extensive use; and yet England and France are both more zealous than the government of the United States in bringing to perfection the science of Franklin."

After referring to several authors who have written on this subject, and remarking briefly on the properties of the electrick fluid, Dr. V. proceeds to give directions for the construction and arrangement of lighting rods;

"It is proved by the experiments of MM. de Romas and Charles, that the higher the rod is elevated in the air, other circumstances being equal, the more its efficacy will be increased.—It is announced that the most advantageous form for the extremity is that of a very sharp cone. In this country it is usual to have three points diverging—in Europe, on the continent particularly, only one is used, placed perpendicularly.

"How far the sphere of action of the rod extends has not been accurately determined, but it is known that some buildings have been struck even when they had rods attached to them. This, however, has always taken place at a distance from the conductor"

"A lightning rod," continues Dr. V. "consist, of two parts the stem which projects above the roof into the air, and the conductor which descends from the stem to the ground."

Following the French authors, Dr. V. gives very precise rules for forming the extremity of the stem, for which the Journal of Science may be consulted; but we think such extreme precision in this particular altogether unnecessary. A rod of iron terminated either by one or three sharp points of the same metal, covered with silver or gold leaf, to prevent rust and consequent bluntness, it is presumed will answer every purpose

The following rules for the height of the rod deserve the most careful attention:

"It is allowed from experiment, that the stem of a lightning rod effectually defends a circle of which it is the centre, and whose radius is twice its own height. According to this rule, a building sixty feet square requires only a stem fifteen feet; sixteen feet, raised in the centre of the roof. According of one hundred and twenty feet, by the same rule, would require a stem of thirty feet, and such is often used; but it is better, instead of one stem of that length, to have two of fifteen or eighteen feet, one being erected thirty feet from one end of the building, the other at the same distance from the other end, and consequently sixty feet from each other. The same rule should be followed for any larger or smaller building."

According to this rule a very large proportion of the rods in this country will not secure the buildings on which they are erected. Many buildings twenty-five or thirty feet in length, have only a rod at one end, rising not more than six or eight feet above the building; and many buildings, with two chimnies fifteen or twenty feet distant, have only a rod rising, four or five feet above one chimney.—It should be carefully born in mind, that such rods do not secure the remote parts of a building, and that the trifling expense of adding a few feet to the height of the rod ought not to be placed in competition with the hazard of lives and property. To protect two chimneys of equal height with one rod, the height of the rod above the chimney on which it is raised should be equal to half the distance between the two chimneys—for example, two chimneys twenty feet distant from each other, would be protected by rod elevated ten feet above one of the chimneys. This conclusion is readily drawn from the above rule, as given by Dr. V.: and the same rule shows that, for the security of a building, we can rarely depend upon a rod of ordinary height on a neighbouring building.

Accidents frequently happening from the destruction of the lower portion of the conductor by rust, the following remarks are important:

"Iron, in immediate contact with moist earth, soon becomes covered with rust, and in time is destroyed; to prevent this, the conductor should be placed in a trough filled with charcoal in the following manner. Having made a trench in the ground about two feet deep, a row of brick is laid on the bread side, and covered by another row placed on the edge; a stratum of charcoal is then strewed over the bottom of the bricks, about two inches thick, on which the conductor is laid, and the trough then filled with more charcoal, and by a row of bricks laid on the top. Iron, thus buried in charcoal, will suffer no change in thirty years."

It is necessary that the lightning should be conducted not only to the ground, but to moist ground. Dr. V. recommends to lead the conductor, if convenient, into a well at least two feet below water mark: if this is not convenient, it should be carried into the dampest spot near the building.

Our remarks have been confined to the adapting of lightning rods to ordinary buildings. For much minute, though valuable information on the same subject, and for rules in regard to rods for ships, churches, &c. we would recommend the entire paper of Dr. Van Rensselaer to the attention of the public.

Domestic Economy.

THE SILK WORM.

IMPORTANT TO CANADA AS WELL AS TO THE UNITED STATES.

The cultivation of the White Mulberry and raising of silk worms, recommended as very profitable in the United States.

About five years ago, Wm. Gillespie, Esq. of the town of Montgomery, Orange County, (N. Y.) sowed seed for a nursery of the white mulberry (morus Al.,) for the purpose of the culture of the silk-worm. The ground occupied by the nursery is about four square rods. This small lot yielded, last summer, 175 skeins of sewing silk, rivaling in softness, strength, and beauty, the best imported specimens of the same article. These skeins, with a sufficient quantity of tow for a pair of stockings, would command in market $10. The whole labour expended in the culture, Mr. Gillespie estimates at $2; making the products of four square rods, $8. One acre cultivated in the same way would yield $320, besides the expense of the labour.

Farmers might clothe their daughters in silks of good quality at less expense than it now requires to clothe them in fine cotton. It is estimated that £5,000 worth of sewing silk is sold annually in Orange County alone, and the whole sales of the article in the State of New York may probably be estimated at £150,000. All this would be saved to our country by the extension of this very profitable branch of husbandry, so as to supply the home consumption. Much of the labour, too, can be performed by small children, who would otherwise be idle, and thus early habits of industry would be created.

The whole process is simple, and a knowledge of it easily acquired. After the middle of May, the eggs of the silk worm is brought from the bureau, and exposed to the warmth of the air, but not to the rays of the sun. Early in June, the term of incubation expires, and the small silk worms make their appearance. They are now to be fed with mulberry leaves, with which they are to be supplied twice a day—the leaves to be scattered in the inclosure where they are kept. In about six weeks they attain their full growth, when they are of a beautiful golden colour. A small quantity of leaves supplies them for the first five weeks; the sixth week they require an abundant supply. Mr. Gillespie informs us, that during this week, when a stranger visits their apartment, they leave off eating, raise their horns, and give plain indications that they know him to be strange.

After feeding about six weeks they quit eating and are prepared to commence spinning.—Oak or walnut leaves dried in the sun, so as to be curled, are now thrown into their enclosure: they lodge in the folds of the leaf and begin to spin from their own bowels—first the tow by which they attach their web to the leaf, then the thread which they form into a solid web, so as to shut themselves closely within.

The larvæ, or worms enclosed in the balls, that are intended for propagation, cut their way out of the silken cell, and escape from their own prison, in the form of a butterfly, with beautiful variegated wings. White paper is placed under them, on which the egg is deposited. One butterfly will deposit 2000 eggs. These papers with the eggs, are laid away in a chest or desk, until the following spring, when the process described above is again repeated. "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all, the earth is full of thy riches."

After this interesting insect has furnished the fine material, the tow is picked off the balls, which are thrown into hot water, and a stick is passed among them, to which the ends of the threads attach themselves. For sewing silk, forty of them are laid together and reeled. The thread thus composed of forty fibres, is twisted hard on a large spinning wheel, then doubled and twisted again, and wrought into skeins.—The whole process of manufacture is completed by scouring in the same manner as woollen yarn, to detach the glutinous substance, which the worm employs in the fabrication of its thread.

It must be remarked that the black mulberry, (morus nigra,) a native of the United States, will not answer the purpose so well. The silk manufactured from its leaf is said to be of a very inferior quality.

Poetry.

We have just been favoured with the perusal of a small volume containing "THEODORIC," and other Poems, by CAMPBELL—the celebrated author of the "Pleasures of Hope."—This volume con the latest of that great Poet's works; and, as its circulation cannot yet have become general on this continent, we beg leave to present our readers with the following striking and sublime effusion, (selected from the minor poems,) which, in our opinion, is nearly without an equal in the language, and in the class to which it belongs.—Ed.

THE LAST MAN.

All worldly shapes shall melt in gloom,
The Sun himself must die,
Before this mortal shall assume
Its immortality!
I saw a vision in my sleep,
That gave my spirit strength to sweep
Adown the gulph of Time!
I saw the last of human mould,
That shall creation's death behold,
As Adam saw her prime!

The Sun's eye had a sickly glare,
The Earth with age was wan,
The skeleton's of nations were
Around that lonely man!
Some had expired in fight,—the brands
Still rusted in their bony hands;
In plague and famine some!
Earth's cities had no sound nor tread
And ships were drifting with the dead
To shores where all was dumb!

Yet, prophet-like, that lone one stood,
With dauntless words and high,
That shook the sere leaves from the wood
As if a storm past'd by,
Saying, We are twins in death, proud Sun,
Thy face is cold, thy race is run,
'Tis Mercy bids thee go.
For thou ten thousand thousand years
Hast seen the tide of human tears,
That shall no longer flow.

What though beneath thee, man put forth
His pomp, his pride, his skill;
And arts that made fire, flood, and earth,
The vassals of his will;—
Yet mourn not I thy parted sway,
Thou dim dis-crowned King of day:
For all these trophied arts
And triumphs that beneath thee sprang,
Heal'd not a passion or a pang
Entail'd on human hearts.

Go, let oblivion's curtain fall
Upon the stage of men,
Nor with thy rising beams recall
Life's tragedy again.
Its piteous pageants bring not back,
Nor waken flesh upon the rack
Of pain anew to writhe;
Stretch'd in disease's shapes abhorr'd,
Or mown in battle by the sword,
Like grass beneath the scythe—

Ev'n I am weary in yon skies
To watch thy fading fire;
Test of all sinless agonies,
Behold not me expire
My lips that speak thy dirge of death—
Their rounded gasp and gurgling breath
To see thou shalt not boast.
The eclipse of Nature spreads my pall,—
The majesty of Darkness shall Receive my parting ghost!

This spirit shall return to Him
That gave its heavenly spark;
Yet think not, Sun, it shall be dim
When thou thyself art dark!
No! it shall live again, and shine
In bliss unknown to beams of thine,
By Him recall'd to breath,
Who captive led captivity,
Who robb'd the grave of Victory
And took the sting from Death!

Go, Sun, while Mercy holds me up
On Nature's awful waste
To drink this last and bitter cup
Of grief that man shall taste—
Go, tell that night that hides thy face,
Thou saw'st the last of Adam's race,
On Earth's sepulchral clod,
The darkning universe defy
To quench his immortality,
Or shake his throne in God!

SAILING OF THE GREAT SHIP.

The Baron of Renfrew weighed anchor, and was towed from the place which she occupied near the Falls of Montmorency, on Tuesday last at noon, by the Steam Boat Hercules. The tide was about half flood when she got under weigh, and she proceeded slowly round the west point of the island of Orleans, and disappeared behind Point Levi at a quarter before two o'clock. She was accompanied by the Point by the Malsham Steam Boat and the Lauzon Steam Ferry-Boat, with parties of ladies and gentlemen from Town. The Malsham had on board the Band of the 68th Regiment, which, as well as the parties on both Steam Boats went on board the Baron, the decks of which were crowded with people. The Steam Boats, having again taken their company on board, left her behind the Point proceeding in tow of the Hercules, which will only leave her at Bic.

The wind was up the river during the whole time the Baron was in sight, from her leaving her anchorage ground—She however had tied her sails hauled close to the wind, and several times seemed to gain on the Hercules. The sight was grand as she came abreast of the Point of the Island; her whole length about 300 feet being then seen from Town, and her four masts crowded with sail. The Hercules ahead, and the Malsham alongside, with the Lauzon astern, appeared little better than long boats. Several sail boats in company were hardly discernable. When they arrived in the rear of the Rock of Point Levi, the Baron's masts and sails scarcely cleared above the rock, and were visible at each side of it. In the fore ground there were about forty or fifty Indian Wigwams, and numerous Indian canoes, one of which, after landing three passengers, an Indian was carrying on his back to high water mark; thus offering in one view the largest ship in the world, the perfection of the application of steam to navigation, and the first, and certainly a most ingenious effort of man in the savage state for water conveyance.

It is not probable that any other vessel of the size of the Baron of Renfrew, will be built for some time. The public interest taken in this ship has been nearly as great as in the Columbus.

The following statement of the cargo of the Baron has been handed to us by a mercantile friend:

Estimation in Tons measurement of the Cargo of the Ship Baron of Renfrew.

40634	Deals, average measurement 6 ton per 100 ps.	2616
517	ps. of hard wood, 30 cubic feet each, and 11 knees,	368
3207	Logs Pine, 50	400
24650	Pipe Staves, 24 M. standard, 12 ton per M	288
75760	W. I. Staves, 75 M. pieces, 3 ditto,	225
	84 Masts, at an average of 24 inch. each 8 ditto,	672
337	Spars, ditto, 2 ditto,	674
4758	Ash Oar Rafters, 24 pieces, 1 ditto,	200
25008	ps. Lathwood, 1600 to cord, is 144 cord, 3 ditto,	432
34852	Tenenails, 4000 of 12 inches make a load,	11
	Amount of the Cargo in Tons,	9015

Part of this Cargo, as Oars and Staves, is estimated from the stowage they require, and not from the cubical contents.

In the measurement of the Baron is about 5-00 tons, and taking the usual Quebec allowance of 5000 feet in the rough for every hundred tons men measurement, there will be upwards of 40 tons of timber wrought up in the construction of this floating fabric.

(The Baron was at anchor east end of Crane Island, at eleven o'clock last night, had twice touched, but without injury)

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1825.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

It is stated that the Marchioness of Londonderry (late Lady Castlereagh) is to be married to Mr Planta, Under-Secretary of State.

The heat of July seems to have been as oppressive in England and France as in this country, and to have been attended, in some instances, with the same fatal effects, a number of sudden deaths are mentioned in the papers. The thermometer stood at Bath, on the 19th, in the shade, at 85 degrees; and the number of horses that had died is supposed to be greater than at any former period. The effects of continued hot weather were seriously felt. Brooks and ponds were become quite dry, and vegetation was suffering from the scorching heat of the sun The weather in Paris was most intensely hot, and such a season has scarcely ever been remembered there. Nearly a period of twelve weeks elapsed without a single drop of rain, and the players represent the country as absolutely burnt up. The thermometer of Fahrenheit was daily as high as 90 degrees, even in cool parts of the city, and was in many places between 90 and 100 degrees throughout the day. The waters of the river Seine were extremely low indeed.

The planet Venus is at present visible in the day with the naked eye. She may be seen from her rising in the morning twilight, till after one o'clock in the afternoon; and will continue visible every clear day from her rising during the whole hours, until the 4th of November.—London Paper.

The negociations for a loan to Spain have completely failed Almagro and Mr. Gregory, who have left London, were prouse in their offers to the moneyed men of this city, declaring that the King, their master, would take in the bonds of the Cortes at a rate; but the answer was peremptorily, "Recognise the old bonds, pay the dividends, and then come forward for a loan."

On the 2d of July, an Earthquake was felt at Algiers At that place it produced no mischief. The town of Belida was destroyed, and half its inhabitants perished.

The "News of Literature and Fashion" of the 2d July, states, that the life of Napoleon, by the author of Waverly, is certainly to be forthcoming It is to be comprised in four volumes, besides a preliminary volume, bringing down the history of the French revolution to the day when Napoleon commenced his military career

Menai Chain Bridge, Wales, is proceeding rapidly The road for passengers and carriages will be completed early in autumn.

The Crown is about to purchase the valuable bishopric of Soder and Man, together with the whole of the ecclesiastical patronage belonging to the Athol family. The island contains seventeen parishes, and the right of presentation to all the living is at present vested in the Duke of Atholl.

The rich widow, "who would be a duchess," is reported to demur to the enormity of the sum, which, as a preliminary to the solemnization of the previous ceremony, is expected to be paid down.

Sir W. Wallace's sword, which has for a long time been exhibited in Dumbarton Castle, has been ordered to be sent to the museum of relics in the Tower. Doubts are entertained as to its being the identical sword used by Wallace against his country's foes.

Mr O'Connell has got a new enemy in one of his quondam allies, the Editor of the Dublin Morning Post, who conceiving that he has been unfairly treated, has pledged himself "to enter forthwith upon such an investigation of the acts of the great leader to Catholic affairs as shall thoroughly expose his pretensions to principal or patriotism; shall reduce him to his proper dimensions and shall prove him to be as arrant a political cheat as ever misled a credulous and simple people"

A faithful Servant.—A few days ago, a gentleman of the Society of Friends, residing in Wivelscombe, Somerset, had just returned home to dinner, and the joint, which was a fine leg of mutton, was already on the table; before he had seated himself, however, to partake of it, a large dog entered the room, and seizing the mutton, dragged it from the table, and deliberately walked home ward. The worthy Friend, not approving of the unceremonious manner in which the dog had helped himself, resolved to follow him; and the faithful animal led the way to the house of his master. Mr H—, of the profession of the law, to whom the complainant submitted the following question:—"Friend, thou art a gentleman, therefore thou will give me a candid answer to this question Suppose thou hadst sent thy servant to buy a leg of mutton, and when it was on the table, a dog were to come and take it away, we wouldst thou expect to pay for it, thyself or the owner of the dog?" The professional gentleman replied—"The owner of the dog" "Then," said the Quaker, "thy dog has run away with my leg of mutton, and I shall expect thee to pay for it 4s 9d" The gentleman paid him the 4s 9d and addressed him as follows: "Sir, I know you are a gentleman, therefore you will not, of course, object to pay me for the professional advice which you required, and which I have given." The Quaker, somewhat astonished, asked the amount of his charge: 6s 8d was the reply; the money was paid, and the lester gentleman was consequently that amount minus by the affair.

Suffocation of 200 French prisoners—To give a suitable relat to the sacre of Charles X. six hundred prisoners were sent from the Bastian to iron mines, to be set at liberty on the moment the king was enthroned. By the neglect of proper precautions, two hundred of them were suffocated, and 400 before they reached Rheims when shocking to relate their bodies were thrown to the road side unburied. a prey to animals, and a shocking monument of French want of feeling; it is said, but we do not pledge ourselves for the fact, that the king himself expressed little or no concern on being informed of the melancholy fate of so many captives No friend of humanity will surely consider the interest such a circumstance must naturally inspire, at all lessened, on being informed that these poor victims were so many sparrows—English paper

Tunnel under the Thames—The work of excavating a tunnel under the Thames, which has been vigorously commenced, attracts great attention and many distinguished visitors We extract the following description of the commencement of this novel undertaking, which will be read with interest

"Against the gable end of a house on the works, the directors have caused to be built, in brick, a fac simile of the perforation which will shortly be begun horizontally across the river, in order to show more strickingly the proportion of height and breadth for carriages, &c and which will be painted in perspective, and will have a fine effect. The new steam engine is expected to be very shortly at work, and must greatly expedite the operations The clay excavated is conveyed into a neighbouring field, and is there converted into bricks of a particular make, to be again used, in its new form, in the construction of this subaqueous communication

"The tunnel will consist of two archways, and in order that there may be no obstruction to carriages, those going from the north to the south shore will pass through one, while those from the south to the north, will occupy the other archway The passages will be Macadamized, and there will be distinct paths for foot passengers. In the centre, between the two archways and dividing the two roads, will be a line of numerous arches of communication, spacious enough to admit of persons passing from one road to the other; and in each of the archways will be fixed a strong gas light. The approaches to the entrance of the tunnel will be by circular descents of easy declivity, not exceeding four feet in every hundred One for pedestrians; another large one for carriages; and so easy will the descent be, that the heaviest loaded waggon will never need to have the wheel locked —The descent from the north side will be near to the other that the father of the child would supply its wants, and end of Old Gravel Lane, at the eastern end of the London advance a sum of money as an outset, poor John Murphy at dock, and on the south side of the river from a spot near to length consented, and the marriage ceremony was performed Rotherhithe church The bed of the river has been rightly examined by frequent and deep borings, in order to ascertain the nature of the strata, and the results have been; we are informed, highly encouraging; the deep parts being uniformly of a tenacious, hard blue clay The machinery by which this excavation is to be made, is the invention of Mr. Brunel. The iron shield for the protection of the workmen and for the security of the work, as it proceeds, is of an ingenious combination, and of itself and its weight (many tons); and the whole, however, continued to be John's general resort, rather than weight is literally to be pushed through the earth, entering Shandlow or Acton; and in this town John worked repeatedly the shafts at the north side of the river. For this invention Mr. Brunel has obtained a patent. As this large shield, as a bricklayer's labourer, for Mr. M'Donnell, Mr. Stodart, or three storied iron scaffold, is daily moved to fill up the and Mr. Shenton, the slater, by whom she was esteemed of excavation made by the workmen, it is followed closely by an intelligent, light hearted and hard on king little fellow. the bricklayers, who will make all good; so that the tunnel natural. however, he family of married wife, should increase, and John Murphy began with sorrow to sent earth will always be supported by the iron shield, or by discover that, in spite of existing circumstances, the cares compact and well cemented brick work. The size of the of a father have a most inveterate tendency to multiply.—tunnel will be thirty-five feet wide, by twenty feet in height; Another young Murphy was about to make its appearance; each archway will have about 14 feet clear width, including and as the prolific Matilda, as well as her children and mofoot-path; and the whole length of the tunnel will be about ther, seemed very likely to become a serious incumbrance, 1300 feet Should nothing unforeseen prevent it, this novel to John, although work was always welcomed with an indusin communication is expected to be opened in less than three trious spirit, found it was no easy matter to maintain a wife years It will be obvious to every person acquainted with and child besides a wife's mother into the bargain John the Thames, that no bridge could cross it where the tunnel early became more shy than ever of home. In fact, the poor is designed to be made, unless it where of a height so great man declares that she should long since have disclosed her as to be inconvenient to the passage of shipping. Such a bridge sex, had she not been intimidated by the threats of Matilda's was once talked of beneath it. Such a bridge, however, is father, and her own spirit. However, in the course of, as rejected but the design was soon abandoned. The tunnel may week, the vigilance of the parish officers had rendered the be regarded as a bridge reversed, and as a channel of inter- situation of affairs extremely urgent; and therefore, having course between the two shores at once commodious, and made a country woman of her own, her confidante, she proadapted to its locality. Such an intercourse has been for a cured feminine habiliments; and on Sunday last rennn a long time a desideratum, and must, we conceive, be much short distance, and thus divorced herself from her matrimonial troubles. She is a short, stout, good looking young woman, and states herself to be in her twentieth year; but, probably on account of her laborious occupations, she looks four or five years older As she has gained from all her employers an excellent character for industry, sobriety, and honesty, her case has excited no small degree of commiseration, as well as curiosity, and as she expresses a wish to get into service in a farmer's family, we cannot help thinking that she would be a valuable acquisition in such an occupation.

Singular Circumstance—The town of Derby has been amused and interested, during the past week, with a most unusual disclosure. A young woman of the name of Hannah Moore, a native of Sligo, in Ireland, had, it appears, for her own account, assumed the dress of a boy, between six and seven years ago. She states, that on the death of her parents, to find herself without protection, and that she resolved her to put on a suit of her brother's clothes, and, in the name of John Murphy, to seek employment in that disguise. She was then not fourteen years of age, and was engaged in service among the Irish graziers About five years ago she came over to this country as a drover's lad, and was attending some cattle through Derbyshire, when she was noticed by Mr Clark, of the inn at Shardlow, as a very sharp and attentive youth—He engaged her to remain with him as a helper in the stables, and she continued in his employment, until, by her handiness and care, she got promoted into the service of J Sutton, Esq. of Shardlow, in whose family she was ever since employed with much satisfaction, for the space of two years as a groom and foot boy. Having, however, given some offence to her employer, she was discharged, and while out of place, she followed job employment at the salt works, and lodged at the house of a woman named Lacy.

Dublin Theatre—SIR WALTER SCOTT. The entertainments on Saturday evening, were Shakspeare's excellent Comedy of much ado about Nothing; and the musical Afterpiece of Clari; or, the Maid of Milan.

The most remarkable incident of the night arose from the presence of Sir Walter Scott, with his son, Capt Scott, and a fashionable party. We were much pleased with the judicious and elegant compliment paid to this gifted stranger by the Manager in playing "Lord Moira's Welcome," "Scots wha ha'e," "Auld Lang Syne," and other delightful Scotish airs, between the acts. The cheers for Sir Walter were reiterated at frequent intervals from the commencement of the entertainments, and after the second act, the interest of the audience became so general, and so vehement, that the performance was interrupted, and the actors in vain attempted to make themselves audible. This circumstance called forth Mr Abbot, who, evidently unconscious of the amiable disposition of the house, and anxious least any thing within his province should have given rise to feelings of an opposite character, "begged to take the liberty of asking the cause of the disturbance." This interrogatory was answered from the very bottom the gallery of "Sir Walter Scott." Sir Walter Scott immediately rose, and with an air of the greatest good humour, acknowledged himself as it were, to be the innocent delinquent, by bowing repeatedly to the house. He then spoke as follows:—"I am sure the Irish audience—(he was here interrupted by clamorous applause)—I am sure the Irish audience will give a stranger credit for feeling as he ought, these very flattering marks of applause If I did not offer my acknowledgements sooner, be assured it was because I did not think it became me to take to myself a distinction which I am conscious I so little deserve" Immediately at the conclusion of this address, the boxes and pit rose simultaneously, and greeted the distinguished visitor with cheers intermingled with cries of "Welcome, welcome," and accompanied by the waving of hats and handkerchiefs The performance then proceeded, but the hospitable enthusiasm of an Irish audience often assay gain burst forth in lively greetings to splendid genius. Sir Walter Scott and his party retired before the conclusion of the Afterpiece.

COBBETT'S NEW LIGHTS.

Cobbett has recently discovered what all the world know before that Irishmen are intelligent, warm hearted, and every way calculated, under a proper system, to contribute to the strength and prosperity of the United Empire. He has also found out that the Catholic Priests are a most useful, painstaking, body of men, who do a great deal of work for little pay. We shall not now stop to inquire into the motives which have forced this conviction upon Cobbett's mind; but we Apprehensive of the consequences of a prosecution for having disguised her sex, and being at the same time assured by Matilda and her mo-

must observe, that his present opinions on this point, like his opinions on every other, present a most striking contrast with those he formerly expressed. We last week recorded the sarcasms which this unaccountable writer, not three years since, played off against the Catholic Priests, whom he now finds it his interest to extol; and we now proceed to show that he formerly denounced the Irish as slaves and vagabonds. Again, we ask, what good can be derived from the advocacy of such a man?

Extract from the Porcupine, written by Cobbett, in America, February 15, 1798:—

"I want a printer No damnable Irishman need apply."

In the same paper he has, as a motto to an essay against the Irish nation:—

"——— a race
Able to bring a gibbet to disgrace."

To another essay, in which he describes the people of Ireland as "a ferocious, savage, and treacherous pack of rascals, fond of rapine and blood, and fit only to reside among the wild beasts of the wood and wilderness," he gives this motto:—

"——————I would not quote
The name of Pat without an antidote."

In a letter to Mr. Adams, the then President of the United States, Mr Cobbett gives the following character of those persons whom he is now praising. Whether he was prophetic, god had the "Catholic Association in his eye, or not, it is impossible for us to say."

"An Irishman is a natural Jacobin, and incurable by acts of lenity, generosity, and friendly dealing; for though he will temporize to gain his purpose, yet he will be sure to lay hold of the first opportunity to disturb the state he resides in, and eat his neighbour's throat."

Addressing the President on another occasion, he says—"Send the murderous ruffians to hell—or, if you must deal them mercy, order them into the swamps of Louisiana; there, like the Negro slaves, to cultivate the woods."

SPAIN.

A Letter from Madrid says:—"General Laserna, late Viceroy of Peru, is banished to Toledo.—He has not been permitted to approach his Royal Master."

GREECE.

"Off Milo, June 16th, 1825.

"The Herald, which is in sight, was boarded this morning from a Greek man of war, and informed of an action they had on the 13th, in which the Turks lost a stout frigate, and a corvet; an English brig was also blown up The Greeks have driven the Turkish fleet into Candia, and have them closely blockaded. There was a battle to the southward of Milo yesterday, but they have not heard the result. We heard the report of guns this morning in the direction of Candia About 10 days a go, the Greeks engaged the Turkish fleet, took one vessel, burnt another, and drove a third on shore. The latter had amongst her crew about 30 Christians, who were all murdered as soon as they landed. Some had their heads cut off, and others were stoned to death by the women of the Island."

MAVROCORDATO.—It is stated in the Journal des Debats, that letters from Trieste, of July 4, say that Colocrotoni, who has made himself master of all the military and civil powers of Greece, has caused Prince Mavrocordato, the friend of Lord Byron, to be beheaded.

EGYPT.

Plague in Egypt.—The following notice from the Russian Consulate, dated July 21, 1825, appeared at Lloyd's on the 22nd:—

"The undersigned Consul General of the Empire of Russia in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland being authorized by his Government to notify the measures adopted for the preservation of the public health, loses no time in making them known to all whom it may concern, by the following translation:—

"The Imperial Government of Russia has been informed that part of the crew of the Swedish brig Fortuna, Captain Backling, have died from the effect of the plague, which has manifested itself there.

"In consequence of that information, the Minister of the Home Department has taken necessary measures, in order that the most rigorous precaution should be observed, not only in regard to the said Swedish vessel, but also with all vessels in general that may arrive into the ports or harbours of Russia, from Egypt; such vessels will not otherwise be admitted, but on exhibiting the clear and unquestionable evidence of their having performed a full quarantine of purification at Christianstand, or at Kensoe; and that all and every communication with such vessels should be remote, and the questions ought to be directed them strictly in conformity with the quarantine rules.

"If vessels coming from Egypt should even produce the above mentioned evidence or documents, it is, nevertheless, ordered not to admit them, but after their having performed the 12 days of precaution, and after all their crews and passengers have passed the examination by the medical officers.

THE FATALIST.

The subject of the following tale has long ceased to exist, and there is not in the place of his nativity a being who bears his name. The recital will therefore, wound the feelings of no one; nor will it disturb the ashes of the dead, to give the world the story of his madness, rather than his crime.

The name of John Mackay appears on the criminal records of the town of Belfast, in the north of Ireland. He was the murderer of his own child. It is unnecessary to dwell on the character of this unhappy man; suffice it that, from early education, and deeply rooted habits, he was a fatalist. An enthusiastic turn of mind had been warped into a superstitious dread: and the fabric, that might have been great and beautiful, became a ruin that betokened only death and gloom. Yet into his breast the Creator had infused much of the milk of human kinkness, and his disposition peculiarly fitted him to be at peace with all men. The poison had lain dormant in his bosom, but it rankled there. Domestic sorrows contributed to strengthen his gloomy creed; and its effects were darker, as it took a deeper root. Life soon lost all its pleasures for him: his usual employments were neglected; his dress and appearance altered; his once animated countenance bore the traces of shame or guilt; and a sort of suspicious eagerness was in every look and action.

He had an only child, one of the loveliest infants that ever blessed a father's heart. It was the melan holy legacy of the woman he had loved; and never did a parent doat with more affection on an earthly hope. This little infant, all purity and innocence, was destined to be the victim of his madness. One morning his friend entered his apartment, and what was his horror at beholding the child stretched on the floor, and the father standing over it, his hands reeking with the blood of his babe. 'God of heaven!' exclaimed his friend, 'what is here?' Mackay approached and calmy welcomed him, bidding him behold what he had done. His friend beat his bosom, and sunk on a chair, covering his face with his hands. 'Why do you grieve?' asked the maniac; 'why are you unhappy? I was the father of that breathless corps, and I do not weep; I am even joyful when I gaze on it.—Listen, my friend, listen; I know I was predestined to murder, and who was so fit to be my victim as that fatle innocent to whom I gave life, and from whom I have taken it? He had no crime to answer for;—besides, how could I leave him in a cold world, which would mock him with my name? Even before the commission of the crime, he had sent to a magistrate, whose officers shortly entered, and apprehended him. He coolly surrendered himself, and betrayed no emotion; but he took from his bosom a miniature of his wife, dipped in the blood of his babe, and, without a sigh or tear, departed. It was this circumstance that made many loath him, and created against him a sentiment of general abhorrence; but when he afterwards, in prison, declared to his friend the storm of passions, to which that horrid calm succeeded—that he had torn his hair until the blood trickled down his forehead, while his brain seemed bursting his skull, his friend was satisfied and still loved him. In the prison he was with him: though all others deserted him, he pitied and wept. Still, even to the last, he believed he had but fulfilled his duty in the death of his child; and often, when he described the scene, and told how the infant smiled on its father at the moment he was prepared to kill it, lisping his name as the weapon was at his throat, he would start with horror at his own tale, and curse the destiny which had decreed it, but always spoke of it as a necessary deed. The time appointed for his trial approached; he contemplated it without dread, and talked of the fate that awaited him—without a shudder. But his friend had exerted himself to procure such testimony of the state of his mind, previous to his committing the dreadful act, as to leave little doubt of the result; yet he feared to awaken hopes in the unhappy prisoner, which might be destroyed, and had never mentioned it to him. The morning of the trial arrived; he was brought to the bar; his hollow eyes glared unconsciously on his judge, and he gave his plea, as if the words 'not guilty,' came from a being without life. But his recollection seemed for a moment to return, he opened his lips and gasped faintly, as if he wished to recall them. The trial commenced, and he listened with the same apathy; but once, betraying feeling, when he smiled on his friend beside him.—The evidence had been heard; the jury returned a verdict of insanity when a groan from the prisoner created a momentary pause, and he dropped lifeless in the dock. He had for some minutes shadowed his countenance with his hand, and no one but his friend perceived its dreadful alteration. He attributed it to the dreadful suspense of the moment, the agony between hope and despair. Its cause was a more awful one;—he had procured poison, had taken it, and, with an almost superhuman strength, had struggled with its effects until he fell dead before the court. He was buried in the churchyard of his native village, where a mound of earth marked his grave, but there was neither stone nor inscription to preserve the name of one so wretched

It is almost unnecessary to add, that a more pernicious error than the doctrine of fatalism cannot take possession of the mind of man. Innumerable and varied crimes have been perpetrated under the influence of this enemy of human reason.

THE BUONAPARTE FAMILY.

From William's Travels in Italy, Greece and the Ionian Islands.

The members of the Buonaparte family at Rome consist of the Princess Pauline, married to Prince Borghese; Louis Buonaparte, the ex-king of Holland; Lucien, the Prince of Canico, and his family; and lastly, the mother of Napoleon Buonaparte. The first of these personages was the favourite sister of the ex-emperor, and during his residence in Elba, he was in the habit of placing her close to him when they were in company; he sometimes would turn round while at dinner, and desire one of his officers to compose some quatrain in honor of the princess's charms, and to recite it to her at table. One of those officers, who accompanied him to Elba, showed a friend of mine several verses that had been composed by himself in obedience to his master's instructions.

The Princess lives separate from her husband, but she is allowed to occupy the splendid building of the Borghese palace at Rome. At present the prince resides at Florence. Napoleon, during his sojourn there, had endeavoured to bring him forward in some public capacity, but the attempt is said to have failed; his inattention considering it necessary to withdraw from the situation to which he was appointed. The Princess Pauline is fond of society; she is indeed, said to display much of the coquetry and vanity of a French woman of fashion. Canova has executed a statue of her, the symmetry and luxurious attitude of which is much admired. One evening she received invitations for a large suite, the form of the invitation expressed her hope, that she would have the company of such and such persons, "to see the statue by Canova lighted up."

Persons sufficiently well acquainted, by the length of their sojourn are with the Buonaparte family, describe the character of each different member of it, gave the reputation of superior amiableness to two other sisters of Napoleon Madame Bacciochi, and Madame Murat; the former is always mentioned with particular respect.

Lucien carefully abstains from showing himself in public, in such circumstances English society are not introduced to him. He never touches on political subjects, or can be betrayed into conversing upon them when introduced by others, who are desirous of learning his opinion He affects an occasional air of frivolity in conversation, probably as a veil to the serious designs, with which he has been said to be occupied respecting his brother. However that may be it is said to be a difficult matter to draw him out into giving his opinion on any subject, whether political or not

He had commenced farming, partly after the English manner, at his country villa, La Rotondi, supposed by some to stand on the site of Cicero's Tusculan villa His passion for agriculture had, however, much cooled, and was succeeded by a passion for astronomy He is in possession of a fine telescope, and some optical instruments by Dollond, but I learned that he was fickle in all these different pursuits, and soon abandoned them. His dwelling in Rome, is sufficiently handsome, and he frequently has small parties in the evening for music or dancing; two of his daughters play and sing prettily, and express a partiality for Scotch music. especially that published by Mr. George Thompson, of Edinburgh; one of their favourite airs is, 'Scots wha ba'e wi' Wallace bled.' His eldest daughter, (the fruit of his first marriage) was married to a Roman noblemen Her uncle had, at one period, designed her to become the spouse of Ferdinand, the present king of Spain, but afterwards altered his plan. thinking that something more was necessary to secure the full dependence of Spain upon his own power

The mother of Napoleon, formerly dignified by the title of Madame Mere, resides, together with her brother Cardinal Fesche, in the Palazzo Falcone. She lived in seclusion. and was even said to become a devotee. Only one of her former ladies of honor remains with her; she occupies, however, a full suit of apartments, very handsomely furnished, and with a greater attention to comfort than is usual in Italian houses She affects none of the reserve of Lucien on certain subjects, but speaks with tears in her eyes of the ex-emperor, displays the feeling of a mother in her language respecting him, and laments that he has not written to any of his family since his being at St Helena. Openly chatching the hope, (which appears to prevail among the adherents of Buonaparte) that the English government would finally set him at liberty; and generally concludes with some strong expressions on the character of the English nation, with the generality of which she declares herself well acquainted. Madame Mere has evidently been a very fine woman; at her advanced period of life she still looks well, through the aid of her toilette; her manners are even dignified. She appears a queen, and refuses, as do her daughters, those notices of the vulgar manners of the ladies of the Buonaparte family, which were so easily acquired in Britain. In one of the rooms in Lucien's palace is a bust of Nicolo Buonaparte, the father, which exhibits a countenance of remarkable expression; her indeed, than that of Napoleon or any of the family.

BURNING MOUNTAIN IN AMERICA.

Addressed to the Editors of an American Paper.

BUSKE COUNTY, (N. C.) JAN 10

GENTLEMEN,

On the morning of the 16th ultimo, a great smoke was seen to issue from the top of "Spear's Mountain," which is detached from the range that extends from the Blue Ridge to Swannoe River, and ends some miles below its junction with French Broad The great noise that was heard through the day, and continued smoke, left no doubt but that it was a Volcano that had burst forth during the Earthquake. The mountain is conical and insulated—its base is washed on the west side by French Broad River, on the east side, it is separated by a narrow valley (overhung in some places by large rocks) from that Ridge called French Broad Mountain—little lava rocks, singed vegetation, and acid surface, shew that they long have felt that subterranean fire which probably gave heat to the Warm Springs, and has at last burst out with such dreadful fury. It still continues to burn with great violence, and throws up lava, scoria, ashes, calcined stones, and vitrified matter, in great quantities, and with the most tremendous noise

The quantity of lava discharged at the beginning of the eruption was immense: it ran down the mountain in a stream of liquid fire for more than a mile, and has formed a dam across French Broad River, so high as to overflow about two hundred acres of prime bottom land, to the great injury of the owners

In the night time, the ignited stones, cinders, &c. which are thrown two or three hundred feet in the air, present a grand appearance, and have a great resemblance to artificial fire-works, such as rockets, &c. Sometimes they are columned which smoke issues from the crater; at night it has a flame like appearance, and where it has been driven by the wind, has withered the small dwarf pines which had taken root in the barren soil of this and the neighbouring mountains; their bark and leaves are incrusted with a yellowish powder, which has an acrid taste and strong sulphurid smell.

No person has had courage sufficient to approach the crater; but those who were acquainted with the top of the mountain before the eruption, say that it was uneven and very rocky The crater appears (judging by the smoke) to be twenty yards in diameter, and is growing larger Yesterday a large mass fell in with a greater noise than the loudest artillery; it shook the country round, and was echoed from the mountains and valleys. The lava, where cold, has the appearance of vitrified basalt.—The stone on the mountain is hard and coarse grained, with an uneven conchoidal fracture—but no appearance of basalt. The scoria are enormous, have a ferruginous appearance, and shew strong magnetic attraction.

Notwithstanding the terror which seized me on viewing this awful sight, I could not help smiling at the credulous simplicity of the people who inhabit the mountains. They view it with as much awe and terror as the children of Israel did Mount Sinai Some say the end of time is arrived, and think the crater is the mouth of the "bottomless pit"—The fantastic appearances of the electric fluid, which is seen darting in various shapes through the smoke after night, by the help of fancy they transform into spirits, devils, &c. These wildideas have been increased by the declarations of an itinerant preacher, who calls upon them to repent, not in the language of Jonah "Yet forty days," &c but saying Behold the place of punishment for the wicked!"

In a few days I shall go and take another view of this western Etna It is hoped that it will draw the attention of some geologist or man of science, who will be able to give a correct description of it. I have seen but two pieces of pomice-stone.

Your's, &c.

JOHN CLARKE EDWARDS.

Anecdote.

Anecdote of Cardinal York and Lord Nelson.—When Napoleon Buonaparte entered Rome with his army, all who were not favourable to the conquerror fled from the city; and, as nearly all Italy was under his controul, there was scarcely any resting place for the fugitives. Cardinal York, brother to the Chevalier de St George, commonly called "the Pretender," was particularly obnoxious to Buonaparte; from having reflected severely upon his cruelty, in a charge he made to his clergy as Bishop of Asia. He removed to Venice where the French troops followed him, and he escaped in the disguise of a mendicant friar. He begged his way to a village near Cape Otranto, where he lay secreted for several weeks, subsisting on the charity of the Curé of that place The Agememnon, 74, was then cruising near the coast, under the orders of Capt. Nelson, and he soon learnt the deplorable situation of the unfortunate Cardinal. Nelson instantly determined to assist the last of the Stuarts. He went himself on shore, found the illustrious unfortunate, and invited him on board his ship. The Cardinal hesitated not to throw himself on his generosity. He was accomodated with a part of the Captain's cabin, and proper apparel, suitable to his dignity, was furnished him. He remained on board seven weeks, during which period the ship was twice engaged in action. The Cardinal walked the deck with Capt. Nelson, perfectly undismayed, amidst a scene of carnage to which he had hitherto been a total stranger As soon as convenient. Capt Nelson landed him in the Austrian territories, forcing upon him £100, to defray his expenses to Vienna. The old man shed tears when he left his benefactor, and was regretted by all on board, to whom he was endeered for his mild unassuming manners. Nelson frequently spoke of him with admiration, and said, "that man's example would almost make me a convert to the Catholic faith." The Cardinal had a handsome pension assigned him by the Emperor, and six months after his escape to the Agememnon, he was on board of her again in the harbour of Genoa. Fortune then smiled upon him, and his delight at seeing his deliverer was sincere. In the fulness of his gratitude, he embraced all the officers, and ran about the ship, shaking hands with the crew. He repaid the pecuniary obligation to Nelson, and would have treebled the sum which Nelson refused. He sent on board fruits, bread, wine, and meat sufficient to keep the sailors feasting for several days, and kept open house on shore for all the officers. When taking final leave, he presented Nelson with a sword and cane, which the "Pretender" had used all his life; they were plainly mounted in silver, and highly valued by Nelson. It is difficult to tell which to admire most, the generosity of Nelson or the gratitude of the Cardinal; both did honour to their distinct professions, and this anecdote is equally credible to the memory of two great men.

A DREAM.

Well may sleep present us fictions,
Since our waking moments teem
With such fanciful convictions
As make life itself a dream—
Hail our daylight faith's a fable;
Sleep dispels with shadows too,
Seeming in their turn as stable
As the world we wake to view.
Ne'er by day did reason's mint
Give my thoughts a clearer print
Of assured reality.
Than was left by Phantasy
Stamp'd and colour'd on my sprite
In a dream of yesternight.

In a bark, methought, lone steering,
I was cast on Ocean's stride;
This, 'twas whisper'd in my hearing,
Meant the sea of life.
Sad regrets from past existence
Came, like gales of chilling breath;
Shadow'd in the forward distance
Lay the land of death
...ow seeming more, now less remote
On that dim-seen shore, methought,
I beheld two hands a space
Slow unshroud a spectre's face;
And my flesh's hair upstood,
'Twas mine own similitude.

But my soul revived at seeing
Ocean, like an emerald spark,
Kindle, while an air-drop being
Smiling steer'd my bark.

Heaven-like—yet he look'd as human
As any proud beauty can,
More compassionate than woman,
Lordly more than man.
And as some sweet clarions breath
Stirs the soldier's scorn of death:
So his accents bade me brook
The spectre's eyes of icy look
Till it shut them—turn'd its head,
Like a beaten foe, and fled.

"Types not this," I said, "fair spirit!
That my death-hour is not come?
Say, what days shall I inherit?
Tell my soul their sum."
"No," he said, "yon phantom's aspect,
Trust me, would appal thee worse,
Held in clearly measured prospect:—
Ask not for a curse!
Make not, for I overhear
Thine unspoken thoughts as clear
As thy mortal ear could catch
The close brought tickings of a watch—
Make not the untold request
That's now revolving in thy breast.

"'Tis to live again, remeasuring
Youth's years, like a scene rehearsed,
In thy second lifetime treasuring
Knowledge from the first.
Hast thou felt, poor self-deceiver!
Life's career so void of pain,
As to wish its fitful fever
New begun again?
Could experience, ten times thine,
Pain from being disentwine
Th eads by fate together spun?
Could thy flight heaven's lightning shun?
Nay, nor could thy foresight's glance
'Scape the myriad shafts of chance.

"Would'st thou bear again Love's trouble—
Friendship's death discovered ties;
Toil to grasp or miss the bubble
Of ambition's prize?
Say thy life's new-gu ded action
Flow'd from Virtue's purest springs—
Still would envy and detraction
Dumble not their stings?
Worth itself is but a charter
To be mankind's distinguish'd martyr"
—I caught the morsel, and cried, "Hail,
Spirit! let us onward sail
Envying, fearing, hating none,
Guardian Spirit, steer me on!"

Richard Arkland.—Malicious Shooting.—Death.—Kingston Chronicle.

We learn from the Napane Mills that a person named Ard Benedict, residing in that neighbourhood got his leg dreadfully shattered a few days since by the accidental discharge of a gun. The unfortunate man, it appears, was in the act of setting a trap gun for bears, and after placing the piece in its proper position, he tied a string to the trigger, and while walking off with the other end of it, with a view to fix it some where else, he inconsiderately gave a slight pressure to the string, which caused the gun to go off, and the contents, consisting, it is said, of three balls and some buck shot, mangled the poor man's knee and thigh in a shocking manner. Medical aid could not be procured till after the laps of two days, when the leg was amputated.—Some hopes were entertained, we understand, of his recovery.—ib.

LOWER CANADA.

ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

A public meeting of the inhabitants of the city and district of Quebec, was held on Saturday the 20th ultimo, at the Court House in this city, conformably to a requisition signed by a number of the citizens and inhabitants of the town and district, and published in the newspapers of last week.

Colonel Joseph Plante was unanimously called to the Chair, and Hector Huot, Esq. Advocate, was named Secretary.

The Chairman informed the meeting, the he was acquainted with its object only from having read the requisition in the public newspapers—that it was to consider of the expediency of addressing his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, who, it was understood, was shortly to leave this Province on a voyage to England. He supposed that some of the Gentlemen who had called the meeting would submit such propositions as they thought proper to offer.

Mr. Louis Lagueux said, that he had signed the requisition at the desire of some of his fellow citizens, that it had been usual to address the persons administering the Government on their departure, and that the administration of the present Lieutenant Governor having given general satisfaction throughout the Province, he thought the practice ought not to be departed from in the present instance.

Louis Plamondon, Esq. Advocate, rose and said, that one of his friends who had signed the requisition being called away by business, although he had no instructions from him on the subject, he thought it was his duty to express his opinion on the present occasion. He had for a great length of time been prevented by a severe illness from taking a part in public concerns, but he had not been, and he trusted never would be, an indifferent spectator to the affairs of the Province. He had always had frequent occasions of meeting with his fellow citizens, who felt a lively interest in the welfare of their country, and on every occasion they had spoken in terms of eulogium of the private virtues and the friendly disposition of his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor towards the Province and its inhabitants. It was too frequently the case for some time past, that almost every session of the Legislature had closed with symptoms of dissatisfaction; among all parties; under his Excellency, at its close, there was universal satisfaction, and fortunate results. Desiring as he did, and he was sure all who heard him did, the peace and welfare of the country, they could not be backward in complimenting Sir Francis Burton, under whom such a happy state of things had been established. He would, however, leave to other gentlemen, who were better acquainted with the public affairs than he was, to submit the resolutions which might be proper on the present occasion. (Mr. Plamondon then sat down amidst the repeated cheers of the meeting.)

Amable Berthelot, Esq. of this city, Member of the Assembly for Three Rivers, then rose, and observed that he perfectly concurred in the sentiment of the gentleman who had last spoken; that since no other gentleman seemed disposed to come forward, he would submit the following Resolutions, on which he conceived there could be no difference of opinion.

"Resolved,—As the opinion of this meeting, that the private virtues of his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, Sir Francis N. Burton, and his just and impartial conduct, and lively solicitude for the welfare of the Province, entitle him to every mark of public respect and gratitude.

"Resolved,—That an humble address expressive of these sentiments, be presented to his Excellency, on the occasion of his intended voyage to England.

"Resolved,—That a committee of seven be appointed to draft the said Address, and submit it for public signature."

The resolutions being seconded, and on the question being severally read, were unanimously adopted.

Messrs. Berthelot, Plante, L. Lagueux, Advocate, Blanchet, L. Plamondon, the Hon. Mr. Primrose, and Mr Neilson, were named of the committee, by the meeting; it being understood that they are to give public notice of the time and place for siguing the address, and when it is to be presented.

The thanks of the meeting were then voted to the Chairman for his conduct in the Chair, and the meeting adjourned sine die.

We understand that Louis Plamondon, Esquire, Barrister of this city, is preparing to publish, by subscription, a work in both languages, upon the Civil Law of this country; it is to be comprised in Five Books. The first treating of Persons

The second of Property, and modifications of Property

The third, of the manner of acquiring Property.

The fourth, of the Feudal Laws still remaining in force, and,

The fifth, of the English Civil Laws which have been introduced into this Province.

Mr. Plamondon has already made considerable progress in this work, and is prepared to complete it without delay, should (of which we imagine there can, from the known abilities of the author, be little doubt) a sufficient number of subscriptions be obtained to cover the expenses of the undertaking. We are further informed that Mr Plamondon's work has been seen by some of our first legal characters, who have pronounced it to be well digested, and of great utility.—Quebec Gazette.

Superstition.—In the village of Bournal, in the department of Lot and Garonne (France) there lived a woman of the name of Petit, whose husband and son died suddenly, and whose mother had been for many years afflicted with palsy, and also a woman of the name of Tonnadere and her mother, and the former of these two had been afflicted with an inward complaint. In the same village there lived an old woman, very poor and very miserable, who had the reputation of being a sorceress. All the four first mentioned used frequently to talk over their misfortunes, and all attributed them to the sorceress They agreed to seize her and punish her, and on Sunday, Dec. 12, 1824, proceeded to execute their plan — They seized her on the high road, beat her with sticks, and then dragged her to one of their houses Here, after endeavouring to make her release them from her enchantments, and in spite of her protestations, they proceeded to burn her. They tied her hands, and actualy placed her on the fire, but her dreadful cries alarmed them, and they allowed her to escape with life. She was cured after two months' severe suffering, and two of the women were lately condemned for this crime to be exposed in the pillory and to be imprisoned for five years.—French Paper.

A Strange Traveller.—The following circumstance has been communicated to us by a gentleman on whose word we can place implicit reliance, and who actually witnessed the scene described. On landing at Liverpool, on the 4th current, he took a place in a Chester coach, in company with thirteen other persons. most of whom were stationed on the ton—On the old principle of place aux dames, the inside was filled with females, who in half an hour or so from the time the coach started, commenced uttering the most piercing screams, accompanied with the words "stop! stop! a bear! a bear!" The outside riders were of course astounded, and a stout Northumbrian, who sat next our friend, mistaking the word bear for baira, called to the driver to rein in, as he was afraid a child had fallen from the coach. The driver obeyed, and then there was a sort of contest as to who should first de cend from his seat, and run back in quest of the infant. which no one doubted had been precipitated to the road, by the accidental opening of the coach door. But the alarm proceeded from a different cause, and the reader may judge of the surprise of the passengers, when in place of a baira they encountered a full-grown Russian bear, which, in the absence of his keeper, had been taking every sort of liberty with the ladies, hugging one, tearing the shawl and gown of a second, and even attempting to salute a third. One of the ladies had fainted away, and though the others attempted to keep the intruder at bay, by slapping his nose with their parasols, reticules, &c. they became one and all terribly alarmed, when the ugly animal began to growl and show his teeth; and had not Bruin been pretty well muzzled, there is no say ing to what length he would have proceeded. The scene altogether was ludicrous in the extreme; but the reader, of course, will be curious to know how the bear happened to get into such genteel society. Had he leapt from some ship, and like other adventurers, taking the road to London, with the laudible view of pushing his fortune? Or had he worried his keeper, escaped from a menagerie, and attracted by the smell of comfits and cordials, jumped in at the coach window as the vehicle was whirling rapidly along? No such thing The bear belonged to an honest sailor, who had seen him stowed into a box or basket behind the coach; but being used to company, and disliking the idea of riding alone, he had forced his way through the half inch deal that divided the steerage from the ladies' cabin. This of course was a high misdemeanor, and after receiving a sound cudgelling. Bruin, together with two pointer dogs and the honest tar, to whom he belonged, was compelled to alight and pursue the remainder of the journey on foot.—Dumfries Courier.

GREAT COMBAT.

Between Lion Nero and six Dogs, for Five Thousand Sovereigns, at Warwick.

The great fight between the Lion Nero and six dogs, took place on the 26th July, in the large yard attached to an uninhabited worsted factory, in the Saltisford, Warwick, belonging to Mr. Tombs, a celebrated sporting gentleman — The place was admirably adapted for such an exhibition and Mr. Wombwell spared no expense in rendering it perfectly safe for the spectators of the combat

The yard wherein the battle took place is bounded on two sides by extensive ranges of buildings, one having fifty, the other thirty windows, which looked into the den wherein the contest was decided; attached to each window was four rows of benches, capable of holding about 16 persons, affording accommodation for 1300 persons to witness the terrific engagement in perfect safety

The other sides of the yard were filled up by a low building and broad ditch; and a range of Mr. Wombwell's caravans, which, together, completely excluded all intruders In the middle of the space between the above boundaries was placed the den, made expressly for the battle; it is a bout 12 feet square made of strong frame work, and iron bars of one inch diameter, the floors resting on wheels so as to elevate it three feet from the ground. The whole of the preparations were completed by the middle of the day on Monday, and during the whole of the afternoon vast quantities of gentry arrived from different parts of the country to witness the spot selected for so novel a contest; it was reported that by 4 o'clock on Monday, Mr. Wombwell had disposed of nearly a thousand tickets at one pound each

The following are the conditions under which the combat between Nero and the dogs is decided.

1st Three dogs to be slipped at him at once.

2d If one, or any of them turn tail, he or they are considered as beaten, and no one of the other remaining three shall be allowed to attack him until 20 minutes shall be expired, in order to give Nero rest; for he must be allowed to beat the first three, one by one, or as he may choose, before the remaining three shall be started.

After the expiration of the stipulated time, the remaining dogs to start according to the foregoing rules, and be regulated as the umpires shall adjudge

The dogs were handled by Mr. Edwards, John Jones, and William Davis, assisted by Samuel Wedgbury. 1, Turk, a brown coloured dog, 2. Captain—a fallow and white dog, with skew bald face. 3. Tiger—a brown dog, with white legs 4, Nettle—a little brindled bitch, with black head. 5, Rose—a skew bald bitch. 6, Nelson—a white dog, with brindled spots.

At about half past seven o'clock, the first three dogs were let loose, through a small hole, (which only could admit of the dogs entrance,) and dropped them on a plank, that lowered them unto the floor of the den. Nero on beholding his antagonists became uncommon ferocious, and reared in such a manner that he could be distinctly heard at the further end of Warwick. He met his antagonists in every direction—neither of them could take hold of any part of his body. (At this time the side of the yard near the race-course was broke down by the inhabitants of Warwick, who instantly rushed in, and carriages were overturned in all directions)

2. After Nero having now winded about 15 minutes, Turk, Captain, and Nettle were let loose. Nero seized Turk by the jaws, and immediately crushed his head to atoms, and the blood gushed forth in streams; Nero dropt this defeated victim to clear his mouth of the blood. Nettle immediately flew at the head of Nero, who shook her off and struck her flew at the head of Nero, who shook her off and struck her flew at him and pinned him by the with his paw. She next flew at him and pinned him by the belly She again let loose, and seized by the rump; at the same time Captain seized him by the fore right leg, when Nero turned tail, and did not offer to make any resistance, consequently the dogs were proclaimed victorious about a quarter before 9 o'clock.

3. There has not been a Lion and Dog fight in this country since the reign of King James II. Nero is upwards of five years of age, and was whelped in Scotland, and a finer animal we have seen only ever saw. The dogs who fought were of the true bull dog breed.

Hindoo superstitions.—At the Annual Meeting of the Dublin Auxiliary to the London Missionary Society, held in Dublin on the 19th July, the Rev. Mr. Reeve, Missionary from Ballary, in India, related the following curious circumstance connected with the religious notions of the Hindoos.

"The Hindoos," he observed, "differ in their moral character from other people; they consider all animals as God's creatures, and looked on those persons who eat of the flesh of animals as cannibals. They know no difference between the spirits of a brute which goeth downwards, and the spirit of a man which goeth upwards. They consider the sun and moon to be heroes, and they think thunder is the grumbling of the Gods. They have thirty millions of idols, and their idols are exposed for sale in the public streets. You will see in the market place baskets of fruits and baskets of Gods alike exposed for sale. The time the Hindoos devote to the adoration of their idols ought to make Christians blush for themselves. Some of their processions hold from five o'clock in the afternoon, until three o'clock the next morning,, and there are frequently twenty thousand persons in those processions, carrying their idols, with dancing and songs, from street to street. They also go to considerable expense, and a Hindoo temple frequently receives offerings which amount in value to the sum of £20,000 annually. Such are their errors, that many of them impale themselves alive on spikes, drown themselves in rivers, and bury themselves alive.—It is not an uncommon thing for a Hindoo to run a knife thro' his tongue, which he lets hang out of his mouth with the knife sticking in it. They sometimes roast themselves before a large fire, or carry fire on their bare heads; and these extraordinary acts they commit for the purpose of appeasing the anger of some of their Gods, which they had themselves made. It appears by a calculation that has been made, that in every four hours a Hindoo woman is burned. A Prince of the Hindoo tribe who died lately in India, had eighteen wives, and they were all burned on the dead body of the Prince, together with the child of one of them. The Hindoos had Gods for every kind of vice; thus, those who lived by plunder had a God who would sanction it. One of their Gods who sanction stealing was represented with a pound of butter in one hand, and a pot of milk in the other. Another of their Gods was represented as a monkey, and another as half bird and half man.

[Here the Rev. Gentleman exhibited some specimens of the idols of the Hindoos; they resembled very small wooden toys!]

A Hindoo once mentioned to the Rev Speaker, that he recollected perfectly well when he (the Hindoo) was an old cow, and that he even remembered the marks he had in his ear. He said that he gave good milk when he was a cow, and that was the reason of his being changed into a man.—The Rev. Gentleman instanced the case of the conversion of a native Hindoo woman, who was by trade a weaver: and also the conversion of the father, sister and mother of this woman, who all subsequently became holy followers of Christ.—He also mentioned the fact of a Gentleman who is resident there, expending the entire of his income, which is two hundred pounds a month, in forwarding the object of the Missionary Society, in establishing and supporting native schools, and having preachers appointed to the different prisons.

Foreign Intelligence.

GREECE.

Paris, July 26 —Letters from Constantinople of 28th June, have the following particulars:

The details of the naval battle between the Greek fleet and that of the Captain Pacha, informs us that the latter had three ships burnt, one of which was the frigate which had his treasures on board, and captured some transports, which had most of the ammunition, and the rafts intended for the siege of Missolonghi.

The Turks had made a general attack on Missolonghi on the 17th June, but without success, and consequently with considerable loss.

The death of the Seraskier was spoken of, but a piece of news which seems more certain is, the death of General Boyer, who served in the army of Ibrahim Pacha, and whose wounds, received in taking of the island of Spnactina, have proved fatal.

The Augsburg Gazette has the following news from Constantinople of 25th June.—

The Reis Effendi in the last conference which he had with the Foreign Minister, has declined in the most positive manner, all meditation in favor of the Greeks. The Porte will not enter into any diplomatic discussion whatever on the affairs of Greece.

On board the great frigate which was blown up in the battle of Capo d'Oro, there was a crew of 600 men and 200 officers, most of them Europeans, who were to direct the works at the siege of Missolonghi. The transports taken by the Greeks had on board the greater part of the train of artillery, also intended for the siege of Missolonghi. All the prizes have been taken to Hydra.

The Porte continually spreads favourable accounts respecting the operations of its armies by land, notwithstanding all the reports of the Greeks, which for some days past have announced the total defeat of the Turks near Salona

IONIAN ISLANDS.

Zante, June 27.—The following is a copy of the oath taken by General Colocotroni in the Church of Napoli di Romania, before the people and the members of the government:

We swear before God and men to contribute by all means in our power to the Independence of the nation, or to die free with our arms in our hands, submitting loyally to the laws of our country, as established by the two legislative assemblies of 1822 and 1823.

We swear not only not to raise our rebel arms against the government, not to conspire by indirect ways and secret machinations, but to be submissive to the orders of government, and faithfully to execute them.

That we may be deprived of the light of Heaven—that the curses of the Fathers of the Church may fall on our heads, and that all the nations whom we call upon to witness our oath, may crush us with their present and future contempt, if we perjure ourselves, unmindful of these solemn promises.

An address to the Greek nation by the Minister of War, on the part of the provisional government follows. It requires all officers and soldiers, with the exception of those already on service in garrison or elsewhere, to put themselves, without loss of time, under the command of Peter and Theodore Colocotroni. Those who should neglect this order were to be punished as deserters.

Smyrna, June 17 —In the night of the 7th inst. at a quarter before 12, a shock of an earthquake was felt at Smyrna; its duration was about 3 seconds It did no damage. We had not felt any for a long period.

We are again afflicted this year with the plague of Locusts—they cover our fields in countless swarms. On the 11th, at noon, they were observed at Bournabat, to obscure the splendor of the sun.

Augsburg, July 22.—According to a letter from Alexandria in Egypt, in the Florence Gazette of the 16th July, the steam boat navigation, by way of Ancona, Corfu, Malta, &c. to Bombay, is to commence in the month of September, this year. The calculation, as we have already heard, is, that the passage from England to Bombay is to be performed in 37 days. English commissioners, it is again stated, were daily expected at Alexandria, to negociate with the viceroy for the opening of a canal to unite the Mediterranean with the Red Sea.

The Presburg Gazette, of the 15th July, has the following article:—

His Majesty our most gracious Emperor and King, incessantly occupied with paternal care to promote the happiness and prosperity of his whole empire, as well as of the several parts of it, has been pleased by letters of convocation (Regales) dated Begamo, the 3d of this month, and which were received on the 13th, by the Magistrates of the province and of this city, to summon a diet for the kingdom of Hungary, on which occasion the coronation of her Majesty our beloved Empress will be celebrated. The opening of the diet is fixed for the 11th September this year, and is to be held in this city. We look forward with impatience to the moment which will bring our beloved sovereign among us, that we may be able to give them the most sincere proof of our fidelity and unbounded attachment

BENLOMOND—SCOTTISH SCENERY.

(From the Edinburgh Spectator.)

"He who has seen you once in his life's spring
As I have done, will ne'er forget the spell
Your thousand beauties o'er his spirit fling;
Gleam clouds, and you may o'er his face be cast,
But, midst the darkness, the fair scenes will last,
Green on his soul."

ANONYMUS.

It was long before the smoak of a steam-boat had darkened the sky, or the motion of an engine agitated its waters, that I first visited Loch Lomond.—There was no "Marion" in those times, as there is now, to receive a daily cargo of cockneys from London, small lawyers from Edinburgh, and stocking weavers from Glasgow, carrying them, wholesale, from the lower to the upper end of the lake, and back again, and supplying them when their spirits began to flag, and their admiration was exhausted, with a comfortable choice of refreshments for their failing energies, whether mental or corporeal. There was no fashionable inn either at Luss or Tarbet, and there were no showy parties of gulled ladies or gentlemen descending at all hours into that most romantic and most contemptable of all caves, vaticinously termed Rob Roy's. Loch Lomond lay silently among its solitary and majestic hills, and it was better so. The notion may be a foolish one, but there seems to be something too sacred and sublime in scenes so wild and wonderful, to be profaned by the eyes and the step of every low-born mechanic, or illiterate cotsquean, who may choose to intrude upon the solemnity of their repose. Who would not turn away with disgust from a Parisian merry-andrew among the woods of Clarens; and who would wish to meet with a London exquisite, or a Paisley manufacturer on the banks of Loch Lomond? I have a feeling of reverence for the charms of nature, which will not allow me to see with patience her beauties lavished upon every worthless votary. All that we must admire—all that we must love, can only be truly enjoyed when there is no one else present to interfere with the full luxury of our tongueless thoughts.

It was a beautiful summer's evening when I landed at Rowardennan, having spent the greater part of the day in wandering among the islands of the loch.—Rowardennan is a small inn which stands by itself at the foot of Ben Lomond. Every one who has been upon the mountain is acquainted with Rowardennan. If he has not spent a night within its walls, he has at least been indebted to it for a guide, a telescope, perhaps a pony, and without doubt a flask of honest brewed. For my own part I had determined to remain here, either in bed or elsewhere (for I was young then and indeed upon sleep as a luxury rather than as a necessary of life) till early on the following morning, when it was my purpose to commence the ascent of that unrivalled hill, whose summit seemed to be hid in another world

I had ordered supper, and had strolled out once more to the banks of the lake to enjoy the delightful freshness and cloudless beauty of the gloaming The last amber beams of sunshine still lingered on the distant mountain tops At intervals there was a faint yellow light tint on the waters, but it was rapidly dying away; and to the distance, the windings of the wooded shores began to be lost in the gathering twilight. There was something nobly beautiful in this the veil which nature had drawn over her immortal works, enhancing by the very obscurity in which she had wrapped them, the value of all their attributes Suddenly the measured sound of an oar fell on my ear, but it was heard in the stillness long before I could recognise the boat to which it belonged. At length a pinnace entered the little creek which forms the harbour of Rowardennan It came in to the rudely constructed pier, at the end of which I stood, and those whom it had brought with it leapt ashore Some trifling civilities which I had it in my power to offer them, soon made us acquainted, and we proceeded to the inn together The party consisted of a lady and two gentlemen, the former being sister to one of the latter, together with a couple of servants They were all natives of England, and were for the first time enjoying the romance of Scottish scenery. They had been upon the banks of Loch Long, and had crossed from Arrochar to Tarbet, and had come from thence by water to Rowardennan. Their appearance and manner at once satisfied me of the highly respectable rank in society to which they belonged; and their conversation soon enabled me to perceive that birth and fortune were to be considered as among their least valuable possessions. They were young and full of generous enthusiasm. Their bosoms seemed to be totally unacquainted with that petty jealousy and envy which I have so frequently seen rankling in the breast of a stranger, when forced to gaze upon scenery to which his own country could produce no parallel. They had all the Scotch sincerity, the English openness, and the Irish warmth of character—a combination never to be too much admired. They were in short, three of the pleasantest companions I have ever spent an evening with, either before or since. But I was then only in my 21st year, and may be pardoned if I confess that the impression made upon me by the lady, was of a far more powerful nature than even that to which I have alluded "She was a thing of moving," sparkling with all the life and light of early spring I have seldom seen a step so elastic—a form so beautiful, and a face so radiant with the uninterrupted play of soul. It is needless to talk of all the minor nameless graces of a lovely woman; her ringlets of dark hair, her blue, deep blue luxuriant eyes, her cheeks like the peach-blossom, her lips, her teeth, her neck, her brow: these may be the constituent parts of beauty, but one could as easily form a conception of the appearance of a watch, by looking at the individual springs and wheels, as to the human countenance by hearing an anatomical description of its individual features. It is enough that Louisa Worrall (as name I shall never forget) was the first, and I must say the last, who taught me to believe that the colourings of romance—the gay picturings of a sunny imagination, might not be always too highly overwrought If by any chance these pages should meet her eye, she will perhaps be able to recall for a moment to her recollection the stranger who, in the days long gone by, was so accidentally cast in her way for a few short but delightful hours.

My new friends had intended to climb Ben Lomond next morning after breakfast, but hearing of my resolution to see the sun rise from its summit, they eagerly entered into the same views, and after an early supper we retired to rest having previously settled that we should set out together by day-break. I slept little, but lay listening to the wild plaining of the hawk and wood-pigeon, both of which birds, at this bright season, seem to prefer "the gentle star-light to the glare of noon." At length our little Highland guide tapped at my door, a very welcome warning. I rose immediately, and donning a light summer's dress, returned to the supper parlour Louisa was there before me; it was not long ere her brother and his friend joined us, and the servants with the guide were waiting below "We have a pony for the lady," said the Landlord, bowing, as we went down stairs, "if she would like to ride up the hill. The road is somewhat steep, but Roy is as sure-footed as a dog." "Had you not better accept of the landlord's offer Louisa?" said her brother "O! for on you (thought I) you will positively spoil my whole romance. Can you really suppose I have so little of the heroine in me as to ascend the glorious mountain on Roy's most unpoetical back? Could I be guilty of such an enormity, Eustace there would never in his life cease me another sonnet. I am fit for any exertion; this [illegible] has made a beginning of one. See! the sky is [illegible] in the east; we delay too long. Lead on thou dear [illegible]ed Caledonian! Roy shall dream in his stable of [illegible]gras and but ter-cups unmolested by me."

We rested only twice in our progress towards the top, first at a spring of clear water that oozed through a fresh mossy bank, and next at a little natural well, formed in the hollow of a smooth polished rock. As we proceeded, the rapture of my English friends knew no bounds. The morning was remarkably favourable, and we could see every thing in a clear and softened light. Till we reached the top, the lake formed the principal object of attention, studded with its fairy islands like a great expanse of liquid silver, sprinkled here and there with glittering emeralds But when we gained the summit, then did the Omnipotence of nature burst at once upon the astonished soul. On the west lay Loch Lomond and the mountains of Argyllshire; to the south extended the vale of Clyde, with the broad river itself glancing in the already risen sun, and mingling far off with the mighty Atlantic; on the east the towers of Stirling rose in the distance, and nearer shone the beautiful lake of Monteith; and still close at hand the wild enchanting Trossachs slumbered in deep repose in all their summer beauty, on the north—but how can a feeble pen describe that overpoweringly sublime amphitheatre of towering and tiered mountains rising one behind another in endless perspective, till the eye wandering from peak to peak, from snow-clad pinnacle to dark and misty height, becomes bewildered and confused, and with a reverential awe closes upon the material universe as having seen enough? Louisa burst into tears and hid her face upon her brother's shoulder. "It was an honest sorrow, and became her." There was not one present, except the little kilted Highlander, who did not understand her feelings. "And this was the land," cried Eustace rapturously, "for which the Douglas, the Bruce, and the Wallace fought. Place the most abject slave that ever crawled through Scotland on Ben Lomond's brow, and he is less than a man, if the patriot's fire does not kindle instinctively in his breast!" "Yes," exclaimed Louisa, a holy fervour illuminating her brow, "and who that ever read upon the book of nature yonder words of light, could return, like the common reptile, to the cold creed of the Athiest? Oh! it is a sight that wakens in the soul its highest and purest thought, a sight that gives life and being to the happiest creations of our brightest dreams; a sight, Eustace, that laughs to scorn the deceitful poets who paints in hues so sombre the world's sad realities." * * * * *

A few hours more, and we had parted as if we had never met. I saw the fair girl and her young lover enter their pinnace together. She waved her hand to me as I stood on the shore and watched the boat wind round a point, which concealed it from me for ever—I saw her again two years afterwards in London. Her eye had lost somewhat of its brilliancy, and the rose was no longer visible on her cheek; I fancied, too, though it might be only fancy, that a shade of melancholy had gathered on her brow. She had been mingling with the world; what wonder that she was changed! But I am ignorant alike of her story and her fate, and I think of her now only as of what she was when I first saw her in her innocence, gayety, and beauty, on the banks of the noblest lake in Britain.

From the Novascotian.

THE YOUNG SOLDIER, an original tale.

Mr. Editor—A story lately reached my ears, connected with a young soldier, belonging to one of the regiments upon this station, which has something in it of a romantic character, and at all events is singularly affecting. It gives to humble life a new charm; and shows, from the realities of the world, that the affections may spring up as strongly, burn as purely, and be ready to make for their object, as romantic sacrifices under the cottage roof, as under the ample and gorgeous halls of fashion and of pride.

The young soldier to whom I allude was a native of Wales—the son of respectable parents and brought up with the comfortable notions, which belong to the class of independent yeomen Through some unfortunate circumstances, his father was reduced from a state of comparative influence, to extreme poverty—one misfortune followed another in rapid succession—his rent accumulated upon his head, and at length being totally unable to meet his obligations, and without prospect for the future, the landlord became clamourous and he was consequently sold off, and ejected from his farm. The old man himself had to become labourer; and his children were under the necessity of casting their bread upon the waters of the world. Henry, the second son, naturally of an ambitious temper, could not bear the degradation of the family, and hastily determined to join a recruiting party, who were then beating up strength in the village; but the resolution had scarcely been carried into effect, before he would have given worlds again to be free. Poor Henry had one object which bound him, heart and soul, to his native soil.

In the neighbourhood of his father's cottage there lived a farmer with a large family of daughters, with whom Henry had been long intimate: and towards one of whom, there had grown up in his heart a strong affection. Mary received it—and, in the simpleness, and guilelessness of their young hearts, they had betrothed themselves one to another, long before prudence offered any prospect of their marriage pledges being accomplished. It must be noted—they had pledged their vows. Judge of her situation then, when she witnessed Henry's fall—imagine her feelings, when it had reached her that he had enlisted! He came to bid her farewell, but he could only say it with the bursting of his heart, and the eloquence of tears. She wept upon his neck, and beseeched him not to leave her—but his tie was not to be broken, to break it in truth his own power. Mary becoming sensible of this, formed the heroic purpose of leaving her father's roof, and joining her fortune to her lover's—the next morning she hired herself as a servant to the lady of the recruiting officer, and the same night these two young mountaineers, bade adieu to the scenes and the friends of their native valley.

Shortly afterwards the regiment was ordered to this station, and fortunately Henry and Mary, were passengers in the same vessel; and thus enjoyed frequent opportunities of whispering to each other those loving thoughts which were beating at either's heart. Upon landing here their separation was almost immediate, for the officer took quarters at the extreme end of Dutch Town, while Henry was stationed at the North Barrack. Unable to meet as they were wont, the lovers pined in absence. Henry had soon become disgusted with the duties and confinement of a soldier's life; and one night, about three months after his arrival here, stole from his quarters without leave, and made directly for Mary's residence. Their meeting was a happy one, hours glided by, Henry insensible to time, at length woke from his dream, and although when he had left he had not formed any deliberate plan for desertion, was afraid to return. He confessed at length to Mary the uneasiness which was preying on his mind; and she with that promptitude, and daring, which distinguishes the female character in all strong emergencies, offered to furnish him with one of her gowns, and to leave town with him immediately, for the country. She had saved about £3, and with this to pay their travelling charges, and with the buoyancy of young hearts they set out on their perilous adventure. They had not proceeded far on the road round the basin, before they heard a noise behind them, among which Henry recognized the voice of one of his comrades. Mary and he immediately left the road, and cowered among the bushes; and now they began to feel the desolateness of their situation, and the danger to which they were exposed in a strange country, and among a land of strangers—For two days they kept beating about the woods, in the neighbourhood of the Basin, but at length hunger forced them from their retreat They came out just at the Nine Mile House, and scarcely had they reached the main road, before they were recognized, and seized by a guard of soldiers, who were just returning in hopelessness from the search. They were seized and reconducted to town—Henry was consigned to the cell as a deserter, and Mary was sent to jail for having afforded him assistance.

When Mary however, was brought before the commanding officer, there was something so ineffably sweet, and modest in her appearance, that he determined to inquire thoroughly into the merits of the case, before punishment should be pronounced upon them. He took Mary aside, and with a fatherly regard, questioned her as to her motives: her heart opened to his kindness, and she confessed, while the blush mantled high upon her cheek, her love for Henry—and that they had deserted from the belief that their union could only be consummated by her lover's freedom. There is something noble and generous in the human heart, if only the right cord be touched. The officer was so affected by her simple narrative, and by the purity and strength of their love, that he exercised his influence, and had both pardoned. Nay, he went further—he promoted Henry to a higher situation, and placed it in his power to make his loved Mary his betrothed wife. It is also added that he was present himself at the marriage; and as he kissed the young bride, that a tear had fallen on her cheek. I give you the story as I heard it—if it be true, this is a higher lauriel than ever a gallant officer won in the field of battle—the laurels reaped there prepare only for glory in this world, and are redeemed and chastened in their pride by tears of misery—but this is an immortal laurel, which will live green beyond the tomb, and be registered in the book of Heaven.

HOME.

By Josiah Cousen, Esq.

That is not home, where day by day
I wear the busy hours away.
That is not home, where lonely night
Prepares me for the toils of light;
'Tis hope, and joy, and memory, give
A home in which the heart can live.
These walls no lingering hopes endear,
No fond remembrance chains me here.
Cheerless I heave the lonely sigh—
Exile, canst thou tell me why?
'Tis where thou art, is home to me,
And home without thee cannot be.

There are who strangely love to roam,
And find in wildest haunts their home;
And some in halls of fordly state,
Who yet are homeless, desolate.
The sailor's home is on the main,
The warrior's, on the tented plain;
The maiden's, in her bowers of rest;
The infant's, on its mother's breast—
But where thou art, is home to me,
And home without thee cannot be.

There is no home in halls of pride,
They are too high, and cold and wide.
No home is by the wonderer found;
'Tis not in place—it hath no bound.
It is a circling atmosphere
Investing all the heart holds dear;
A law of strange attractive force,
That holds the feelings in their course:
It is a presence undefin'd,
O'er shadowing the conscious mind,
Where love and duty sweetly blend
To consecrate the name of friend:—
Where'er th art, is home to me,
And home without thee cannot be.

My love, forgive the anxious sigh—
I hear the moments rushing by,
And think that life is fleeting fast,
That youth with us will soon be past.
Oh! when will time, consenting, give
The home in which my heart can live?
There shall the past and future meet,
And o'er our couch in union sweet,
Extend their cherub-wings, and shower
Bright influence on the present hour.
Oh! when shall Israel's mystic guide,
The pillar'd cloud, our steps decide;
Then, resting, spread its guardian shade,
To bless the home which love hath made?
Daily, my love, shall thence arise
Our hearts united sacrifice;
And home indeed, a home will be,
Thus consecrate and shared with thee.

Earl of Dalhousie—On Monday, Aug 4, the Earl of Dalhousie together with his family and suit embarked on board the Herald yacht, at Greenock, in order to return to the seat of his Government. His Lordship embarked about noon, under a salute of fifteen guns from the Minstrel cutter, which was returned by the Herald as soon as she got under weigh. The Herald was hourly expected at Quebec.

We are informed that not less than 65 persons have been interred in the Roman Catholic burying ground in this place, since the 10th of July last—38 of whom were of the emigrants lately sent out by Government.—Kingston Chro

Montreal Sept. 8.

Destructive Fire.—Wednesday morning, between one and two o'clock, a fire broke out in the Quebec Suburbs which, for the extent of its devastation and threatening consequences, has scarcely been paralleled in this city in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. Where and how a fire, of whatever magnitude, may have originated is ever a matter of great uncertainty, if not of mystery. On the present occasion, while we are unwilling to believe the reports that have been circulated regarding wilful and malicious fire-raising, we believe we are correct in stating that the fire commenced in an outhouse belonging to a cooper of the name of Domains, situated in the rear of the house occupied by Dr Spink, Fermin, the corner of St. Marie and Campeau Streets; Domains being said to have gone during the night to this outhouse, a stable with a lighted tobacco pipe in his hand or mouth. It is, however, but justice to this unfortunate individual to state that early in our report of this calamity, that no suspicion what ever has been attached to his conduct, being an old man of seventy years of age, whose former losses by fire had rendered him extremely careful against its dreadful consequences.

When the alarm was first given, and a few of the neighbours had assembled round the spot where the fire burst forth, it has been reported to us that a few buckets of water judiciously applied would have completely extinguished it; but such is the confusion incidental to occasions of this kind; at least, such is the apathy of the good people of this city concerning fires, that neither buckets nor water could be brought to bear upon the spreading flames. This unfortunate circumstance, in conjunction with the combustible nature of the surrounding premises, most of the houses and outhouses being composed of wood, may be set down as the secondary cause of the dreadful conflagration which followed. It must not, however, be forgotten that at this time not a breath of wind was stirring, but scarcely had the fire extended to the adjacent house, when a very high wind arose in the south and drove the flames with the most appalling force and rapidity in its own direction. The fearful consequence was that the flames spread with the rapidity of lighting from house to house, and from street to street until four sections of the Quebec Suburbs became almost at the same moment one scene of devastation and ruin; presenting from the fields in the rear a spectacle at once so awful and sublime that no pen can do justice to the sensations and feelings of those who beheld it. It was not long, however, before the ringing of the fire-bells, and other instruments of alarm, collected almost all the inhabitants of the city round this scene of woe. But what could individuals do without organisation, system or plan, destitute, disgracefully destitute as this town is of every institution calculated for preventing and extinguishing fires? Nor was it until the arrival of the 70th Regiment, and some of the Magistrates with a party of policemen, that any degree of order was adopted in arresting the progress of the flames, and rescuing the lives and property of the unfortunate objects of their destruction from inevitable ruin. As to engines, it was long before any could be brought to act; and of the miserable two that had been brought up, one was pronounced useless for want of repair. However, by the timely interference of the Magistrates, and the officers of the 70th, among whom Col. McGregor, Captains Tredennick McKay, and Kelsal, and Lieutenant Jelf, were very conspicuous, much property was saved, and every possible exertion made to stop the desolation of the flames. But great as these exertions had been they did not prove successful until Powers' large dwelling houses, with a considerable part of their furniture, and about an equal number of outhouses of various descriptions, had become an entire prey to the merciless and devouring element; leaving scarcely "a wreck behind" except the skeletons of some stone houses and the chimnies of others, which looked as if still look like the trunks of so many withered and blasted trees.

It was a providential circumstance, that the wind blew from the south, otherwise there is no doubt that the southern side of St. Marie-street, which, as it was, could only be prevented from taking fire by the great and unremitting exertions of the 70th, must also become a prey to the flames. The same observations are applicable to the western side of Campeau-street, many of the houses of which, as well as in the opposite side of St. Mary street were severely scorched and were only preserved by a continual application of water to the part most exposed to the flames. Many of the inhabitants of the houses burnt down were not aware of the danger which surrounded them until the flames had actually taken possession of their apartments, and some of them escaped to the neighbouring houses with only the blankets in which they slept, as a covering. The number of poor families thrown destitute on the world is prodigious; but in reference to the circumstance in general, it is one consolation that the fire did not break out in a part of the town, where the houses and inhabitants are more numerous, and the property more valuable.

We have not been able to ascertain the extent of the loss sustained on the present occasion, nor how much of the property destroyed had been insured. The following list of those whose houses were burnt, and the number of houses, will, however, give an idea of the calamity which we have feebly endeavoured to describe. In after the individuals' names will shew where insurance had been effected; but that extent, we have already said, we have not been able to ascertain.

exclusive of [illegible] and fences. The number of persons burnt out amounts to 238, and the ground which the flames ravaged extended [illegible] acres in length by 2 in breadth.

Since the fire, many individuals, as well among the sufferers, as among those whose property had been saved from destruction, have called upon us to return public thanks to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, of the 70th Regiment, for their intrepid exertions in saving persons and effects from the flames, as well as their great economy to the unfortunate sufferers. The exertions of the 70th in the cause of humanity on the present occasion were indeed eminent; and their best reward is their conscious of being on all occasions ready to punish the foe like brave soldiers, and shield the unfortunate from suspended evils like men of humanity and generosity.

We think it would be a dereliction of duty to conclude our remarks upon the present occasion without loudly complaining of the disgraceful want of all means and institutions for preventing and extinguishing fires which exists in this city, subject as it is above all other towns to such a calamity. We once heard of meetings being called for the purpose of considering the best means of guarding against the evil in question, and of different bodies going forward and offering to take charge of different wards of the city in case of fire; but the voice of such prudent councils has long been silenced among us, and, we fear, will long be so, unless some unity of influence will from necessity be induced to call the attention of the public to a more serious and lasting consideration of the subject. Let us not for the future betray the carelessness of the mariner after the storm is over; but let us rather imitate the example of the prudent and watchful man who knows not in what hour of the night the thief will attack him. Leaving the subject for the present in better hands, we shall conclude in the sincere hope that something effectual will soon be done for preventing and staying the progress of fires in this city, that lives and property may for the future experience less risk and destruction than they have unfortunately hitherto done.

It is much to the credit of the humanity of Mr Blanchard proprietor of the Circus, that, on Saturday night, he intends to give a benefit to the destitute sufferers from the late fire. We have no doubt our citizens will on this occasion be distinguished by their wonted humanity.

There had been two or three failures of Houses in Liverpool, engaged in the Cotton trade. The debts of one house were upwards of 400,000 pounds sterling.

The London Globe of 13th August says—"The harvest is going on most auspiciously, and a better crop of wheat was scarcely ever known. The barly and oat crops are most abundant

The same paper says—the weather has been more favor able to the Hop plant; prices have declined 30s. per cwt. and the estimated amount of the duty, which had fallen to 16,000*l.* has risen to 24,000*l*

LONDON, August 1.

To-day the steam-vessel, called the Enterprise, will leave the banks of the Thames for those of the Ganges Her burden is 500 tons. She has two sixty-horse power engines—The boilers, which are made of copper, extend across the ship, with seven furnaces, each seven feet in depth. Although the Enterprise will make use of her sails, when the wind permits, she will rely principally on her steam, and for this purpose she must necessarily take out not less than three hundred tons of coals. The coals are partly contained in chambers, within the sides of the vessel, covered with sheet iron, and partly in tanks beneath; which as they are emptied of coals, will be filled with water to keep the vessel properly ballasted The cabins, of which there are twenty, are furnished with every convenience.

A dreadful riot took place in the New-Road, Mary-le-Bonne, on the 24 August.—Near 700 persons, Irish and English, were engaged It was commenced by the former who began smashing windows, and were opposed by the latter The battle was furious, with varied success, until the military were called in The Irishmen, however, had previously been reunited by the English. Several persons, among whom were some women and children, were severely, if not mortally, wounded.

A Journeyman baker in London lately gained by lottery a barony in Anspach worth 120,000 francs. The first use which he made of his money, was to purchase 70,000 loaves of rye bread, which he distributed to the poor with a pot of beer to each.

In a late fire in Cavendish-street, four females were burnt to death.

Living Spirit—The progress of a hearse, on its way to England, had been arrested at Springfield and Annan, and on examination the coffin was found to contain a living spirit in the shape of 30 gallons of good old Scotch whiskey. An additional 30 gallons was also seized the same day, concealed in a hearse, where there was actually the body of a drowned man.

Wild Man—A wild man has lately been found in the woods of Bohemia, where he must have been from his infancy—He cannot articulate a word, but bellows and howls much like a dog. He was taken, but no efforts to civilize him have yet been found of any avail. He runs on all fours, and climbs a tree, and springs from branch to branch with the agility of a monkey. He has been brought to Prague.

DREADFUL RIOT OF THE SEAMEN AT SUNDERLAND

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, August 4—

MR EDITOR—I regret to have to report the following—Owing to the daring and most illegal conduct of a number of seamen belonging to the Union Society, an alarming and dreadful riot took place at the port of Sunderland ye-terday evening, about 6 o'clock At the time mentioned, several sailers were preparing to go to sea Fears being entertained that the refractory seamen meant to oppose the sailing of any vessels, unless the whole of the crew were members of the Union Society the Magistrates, with a view to strengthen the civil power, had very judiciously sworn in a number of individuals as special constables These special constables were placed in the ships about to sail. The foremost vessels had not proceeded far down the river Wear, till they were boarded by armed a large body of riotous seamen, who endeavoured to take forcible possession, and prevent the ships from going to sea. Resistance of course followed, and the special constables, it is said, displayed the greatest heroism in defending the charge committed to them. The rioters, however, were most daring in their assault, and actually threw the special constables, as well as the sailors, headlong into the river. In this terrific state of things the Magistrates gave orders that the military should be sent for. Unfortunately the whole garrison consisted only some twenty men, belonging to the 3d Light Dragoons These, however, were promptly on the spot; and that they might act with more effect, they were embarked in a steam-boat. Every effort was made to restore order and prevent extremities, but so outrageous was the conduct of the rioters, (now animated by the shouts of a large assemblage of women and boys,) that it was deemed necessary to order the soldiers to fire, after a Magistrate had read the Riot Act Three persons were shot dead, (some accounts say six or seven, but the smaller number, we believe to be correct,) and several were wounded—This ultima ratio had the desired effect, and led to the rapid dispersion of the evil-disposed An express was immediate sent off for an additional reinforcement of the Dragoons, who are quartered at the Barracks near this town, and at eleven o'clock at night, a strong detachment set off at a sharp trot. There is a considerable ferment to-day at Sunderland, on account of the arrest of certain of the Seamen who acted as ring-leaders yesterday; but we have not heard of any actual relapse to mischief.—Sun.

THE SECOND LION AND DOG FIGHT.

Wombwell has, notwithstanding the strong exertions of public indignation which accompanied the exposure of the lion Nero to the six dogs, kept his word with the fancy—cruel sports by a second exhibition. He matched his "Wallace," a fine lion, cubed in Scotland, against six of the best dogs that could be found. Wallace's temper is the very opposite of that of the gentle Nero. It is but seldom that he lets even his feeders approach him, and he soon shows that he cannot reconcile himself to familiarity with any creature by such of his own species. Nero has completely recovered. We are glad to say, from the severe usage he received; but of his opponents, the spirited Turk is dead, and most of the rest are much torn and maimed

Towards eight o'clock the Factory yard was well attended, at 5*s.* each person, and so much after the battle commenced—The lion was turned from his den to the same stage on which Nero fought. The match was—

1st Three couples of dogs to be slipped at him two at a time.

2d. Twenty minutes or more, as the umpires shall think fit to be allowed between each attack.

3d The dogs to be handed to the cage ones only.

Tinker, Ball, Billy, Sweep, Turpin, Tiger.

THE FIGHT.

In the first round Tinker and Ball were let loose, and both made a gallant attack: the lion having waited for them as if aware of the approach of his foe. He showed himself a fierce lion, and fought like one. He clasped his paw upon poor Ball, took him in his teeth, and deliberately walked round the stage with him as a cat would with a mouse. Ball, released from the paw, worked all he could, but Wallace treated his slight punishment by a kick now and then. He held the length dropped Tinker, and that poor animal crawled off the stage as well as he could The lion then seized Ball by the throat, and played precisely the same game with him as if he had actually been trained to it. Ball would have been almost devoured, but his second got hold of him through the bars, and hauled him away

Turpin, a Lurcher, and Sweep, a Liverpool dog, made an excellent attack, but it was three or four minu es before the ingenuity of their seconds could get them on. Wallace squatted on his haunches and placed himself erect at the slope where the dogs mounted the stage, as if he thought they dared not approach. The dogs when on fought gallantly, but both were vanquished in less than a minute after their attack—The London dog bolted as soon as he could extricate himself from the lion's grasp, but Sweep would have been killed on the spot had he not been rescued

Wedgbu y untied Billy and Tiger, casting a most piteous look upon the wounded dogs around him Both went to work. Wallace seized Billy by the loins, and when shaking him, Tiger having runaway Wedgbury cried, "There you see how you've pummoned me to have the best dog in Knaland killed." Billy, however, soon set all to rights. He was dragged through the railing, after having received a mark in the loins, which, if he recovers at all, will probably render him unfit for any future contest. The victory, of course was declared in favour of the lion.

An attempt to bury a man alive—Wednesday evening Bellamy's private burial ground, in Church-row, Walworth-road, was made the scene of great a roar and confusion, which spread through the whole neighbourhood, arising from the following cause:—

It appeared that on Tuesday week a woman named Lacey was taken to the London Hospital, where she was provided with every medical assistance; yet her disease baffled the skill of her attendants, and she died in a day or two afterwards, and there being marks of violence about her face, the parochial authorities deemed it necessary to institute an inquiry into the real cause of her death, and on Saturday evening a Coroner's jury sat upon the body, and after hearing the evidence of several witnesses, the surgeon who had attended her in the hospital, clearly showed that her dissolution was not attributable to the injuries on the face, but entirely owing to a fever which was very prevalent at this season of the year. The jury accordingly decided, that she had died from natural causes, and got from any violence inflicted by the husband.

The result of the inquiry did not at all satisfy the thoughtless neighbours and friends of the deceased, who persisted in stating that she had been murdered by her husband, asserting that as he and Mrs. Lacey were Irish and Roman Catholics, whose opinions were much more Irish and Roman Catholic than they were strengthened by the fact, that he would not allow the body to be interred according to the Catholic rites or even permit her to be "waked," as is customary among the Irish This was the cause of disaffection arising among them, and the greatest confusion that can be pictured prevailed for the last two or three days and on Wednesday evening the burial of the wife took place

At the hour appointed for the funeral, all the friends of the deceased assembled together, with vast numbers of their country people, from all parts of London, not merely out of respect to the departed, but for the ostensible purpose of wreaking their vengeance on the head of the unfortunate and unoffending widower.

As the funeral procession moved on, the multitude increased, and when it reached the burial ground, not less than from eight to ten thousand persons were present, and such was the uproar, that the Rev. Mr. Nicholl, the clergyman, was interrupted repeatedly, while reading the service, by several of the Irish calling out that the deceased did not belong to his flock. After the corpse was lowered into the grave, the general shout was to "serve out the husband." At this signal the husband, who was the chief mourner, was seized upon, and absolutely forced to the edge of the grave, they using the most dreadful asseverations, that he should be buried alive with his wife, whilst others were prepared with shovels to fill up the grave. The poor fellow struggled with all his might, and called for assistance, and fortunately at this moment a body of officers from Lambeth-street office, rushed forward to save him from the dreadful sentence that awaited him, in which they succeeded with the utmost difficulty, but not till the populace were reduced to rage; and had it not been for this timely interference, they certainly would have carried their purpose into execution. The almost frightened man was placed in a coach, and accompanied by the officers for safety to his house.

Visit to Lord Cochrane's Ship—I have just returned from a visit on board Lord Cochrane's fine frigate the Pyranes, and in my lying off Spithead. Since her arrival she has been the object of general attention, and her deck have been daily crowded with visitors The attention has certainly been created more by her design and commander, than by any striking curiosity about the ship itself, which is a frigate of the largest size, her guns, rigging stores, &c. are arranged precisely in the same manner as in English ships of war. Every thing on board, however, is at present in great disorder and disrepair, and she more resembles vessels put into harbour to refit in war time, than the neat and trim appearance which an English man of war presents in time of peace.

I have been anxious to ascertain the object of the arrival of the Perseus at this moment on our shores, and the result of my inquiries is, that this visit is evidently not an accidental one. A pretext was assigned that she put in to refit, but this is quite unsatisfactory and unfounded, from an assurance I received on board that Lord Cochrane left his own ship the Don Pedro, a seventy-four, at Maranham, and divided the greater portion of her crew into the Perseus, for the purpose of coming to England. As to any repairs that were necessary for the Perseus, I was further assured that they could as easily have been done at Maranham as at Portsmouth. Indeed, it was frankly declared on board, that it was the Admiral's business that brought them to England, but whether that business be of a private or public nature, they either did not know, or were unwilling to disclose. If a person might be permitted to conjecture on such a subject, I should say that mixed motives of a public and private nature induced Lord Cochrane to the present visit to his native country. The residence of Lady Cochrane in England will satisfactorily account for his Lordship's visit on private grounds, and the close intercourse that has subsisted between Lord Cochrane and our vessels abroad, will in some degree lead one to believe that in his inducements to revisit England, political considerations have had no small share. Indeed, I can also state from a source, on which reliance may be placed, that the Commissioners sent out from this country to South America have interchanged frequent civilities, such as dinner parties, fêtes, &c. with Lord Cochrane, and that they have made acknowledgements in their communications to England, that they were greatly aided, and that the fulfilment of the objects of their commission, were in many instances, materially facilitated by the advice and assistance of Lord Cochrane. Whether or not restoration to his former rank be the intended reward of such services, may furnish an interesting topic of table talk in your political circles of the metropolis.

Earl Fitzwilliam—The present representative of the noble house of Wentworth devotes a considerable portion of a princely fortune in diffusing blessings around him. His hospitality is proverbial, whether considered in the splendid banquets which have frequently been held at his mansions, or in the welcome which the humble peasant or the poor stranger always receives. The weary traveller never meets despair of accommodation. He can but reach Wentworth Castle; there, without inquiring "whence he cometh, or whither he goeth," he has refreshment in abundance; and never quits the mansion without an invitation always to call when he passes that way. Another trait of hospitality and of delicate benificence must not be omitted, in speaking of this ornament to the British Peerage. His Lordship on more than one of his estates, has a number of pen units, who pay but one shilling per annum for a cottage and garden, and yet they are stringent in the rent day; when they are regaled with a plentiful dinner, and in a way which puts to flight forgely of that genuine hospitality which is now somewhat on the decline in England.—Percy Anecdotes of Hospitality

Antiquities—In making the common sewer in London street Glasgow, from the part near the Cross, which is finished, down to the Molendinar Burn, there was found, some time ago, at the depth of about ten feet, the remains of a boat lying in a bed of blue clay, which was covered and surrounded by fine sand, like that found on the shores of a navigable river or wide frith. Some of the nails which were used as fastenings were in the wood, which was fine oak, and bee me quite black from its long immersion under the earth. The rudder and tiller had appeared to have been wood dipped in tar. It is a curious fact that some years ago, when the common sewer was cutting in the Stockwell, that a boat of a similar description was found a little above Jackson street; which would indicate that these two places where the boats have been found, were then the line of the shore of the frith, or bed of the river. These boats must have lain in the places where found many centuries. It is not probable that they belonged to, or were constructed by, the aborigines of the country. The workman-like wood indicates that they were formed by a people considerably advanced in civilization. It is probable that they were constructed by the Romans about the period of Agricola's expedition into Caledonia, about 1740 years ago; at which period, there seems little reason to doubt, the greater part of the ground on which Glasgow now stands, and all the low lands on both banks of the river, to a considerable distance, were covered by the waters of the Frith of Clyde.—Glasgow Courier.

Foreign Intelligence.

GREECE.

LONDON, Aug 14

We have perused with great interest several letters, dated Ipsara, 28th ult. They give most important intelligence, and are, we hope, from circumstances, entitled to some credit. Two vessels had arrived from the Levant with nearly similar reports respecting great successes of the Greeks; one of them had been spoken by an Austrian vessel off Cape Matapan, the other by a Greek cruiser. The captains had reported that the Greeks had been completely successful in the vicinity of Napoli di Romania. Ibrahim Pacha had found his situation so critical, that he commenced a rapid retreat, but the Greek forces having taken possession of all the passes, he was brought to action, and completely defeated; himself a prisoner, and brought to the capital severely wounded. Both accounts agree in this general outline. We are, however sorry to state, that the Egyptian fleet had succeeded in throwing in reinforcements into Navarino. Between five and six thousand men are reported to have landed in the neighbourhood of Navarino.

A letter from Leghorn, of Aug. 1st, states that the same intelligence had been received there by an Austrian vessel from Constantinople.

The Neckar Gazette of the 8th of August says, that on the 16th of June, (O. S.) they observed from the ramparts of Napoli di Romania, a retrograde movement of the Egyptian army. Towards midnight the government received the news that Colocotroni had attacked the rear of the Egyptians and killed 300 men. On the 17th the enemy was already out of sight of the fortress; on the 20th it was that Ibrahim Pacha had sustained fresh losses near Tigea. Colocotroni was there at the head of 16,000 men. On the 24th information was received that the Egyptians had sustained a new defeat at Phloros, and that he was surrounded in the defiles, or that it will be difficulty for him to get back to the coast of Messenia. General Roche who was sent to Greece by the committee at Paris, to obtain information respecting the state of affairs, writes from Argos of the 2d July, that the Peloponnesus had risen in a mass, and that the Egyptian army was annihilated. Never was a popular movement more terrible and more just, for the life or death of a population of 400,000 souls was at stake.

UNITED STATES.

Tornado.—The Vermont papers inform us, that a destructive Tornado swept through the town of Fairlee and Oxford, and the neighbourhood of Montpelier, on the night of the 31st ult. Its width was about 100 rods. Nothing, says the Windsor Journal, could resist its violence; and its progress was marked with the destruction of houses, barns, fences, and forests; many persons were seriously injured, and in some instances lives were sacrifices by its fury. A correspondent of the Montpelier paper mentions the following particulars instances of suffering, among the subjects of its violence:—"A large wood house belonging to Mr James Hyde, situated about two and a half miles north of the centre of the town, was destroyed; thence pursuing its ravages in a north easterly direction, destroyed a barn belonging to Nathaniel Gove—a house and barn of Samuel E stman—a house and two barns to Zenas Morey: the house entirely destroyed, in which were seven persons more or less injured, but happily none were killed—a two story brick house and two barns belonging to William Eastman—house and barn of Samuel Reynolds, and a barn belonging to a Mr. Clement—a woman in Stafford by the name of Mrs. Reynolds was killed—two children of a Mr. Ordway, in Fairlee were also killed.

Natchez, Aug 15.

Loss of the Steam Boat Leopard.—The steamboat Leopard, Capt Rossby, on her way from New Orleans to Louisville, on the 5th inst, at a little half past one o'clock P. M. four miles above Point Chico, struck a snag, which was concealed with water two or three feet under water, and sunk immediately. She had on board a full and valuable cargo, principally belonging to the Captain, which, with the boat, was entirely lost. There was on board 30 passengers, but fortunately no lives were lost.

Richmond, Va. Sept. 7.

Awful Calamity.—Mr. Larkin P. Gayle, of this city, aged 19, being on a visit to his relations in Gloucester county, left the house of his Aunt on Wednesday last, with his dog and gun, for the purpose of amusing himself with hunting in the forest. After an absence of about two hours, his faithful dog, apparently in great distress, returned alone. The family being alarmed, apprehensive that some accident had happened, immediately set out in quest of him. After about half an hour's search, he was found in a small skirt of wood, half a mile from the house, a lifeless body! It appears that he attempted to climb a tree, with his gun, by the help of what is called an Indian ladder; that the gun, being caught in the branches of the tree, was discharged and lodged its contents in his body.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE

Extract of a Letter from a Passenger on board the Thomas Grenville, from St. Helena.

"I was the whole day between Plantation House and Long Wood, in making those visits I had delayed; and I should have been highly disappointed had I left St Helena without gratifying a curiosity so common to all who visit this island. I mean a visit to the tomb of Bonaparte. Having several times in former years rambled over the neighbouring grounds and the residence of Long Wood, I felt an increased interest in noticing the changes of every spot, and in contemplating such existing remains which yet mark the last resources for amusement of this extraordinary man.

"I first went to the old house—his first abode at Long Wood, and in which he died. It is certainly under considerable disadvantages; first—being near that of a most delightful house, the intended residence of this state prisoner; and secondly—the dilapidated condition of the old one, which, in its best days, could bear no comparison for either comfort or convenience to the new one. In the old house, his breakfast room, his dining room, and his bed room, comprised all the accommodation within doors. Without doors he had for his recreation a small garden, in which he exercised his taste and his talent for horticultural pursuits, as far as this limited scale would admit of. The area of this little garden was comprised in an oval, or rather an ellipsis, the circumference of which was about 348 feet, surrounded by a low green palisade, and its greatest transverse diameter was about 120 feet; within these limits he had thrown up banks of earth on which he raised various ornamental plants, and the most beautiful climbers he could procure; one of these artificial mounds was thrown up at each end of the oval, and, in the segment of the circle so formed, he had at one end a bath formed of a large tub, and a reservoir in the fanciful form of a cocked hat; this was lined with lead, and from which the bath was supplied; and ultimately the plants of the garden received their moisture and support from this source. It was conveyed through the middle of the garden in a narrow gutter, and all excess was made to run through the mound at the other end into a tub placed behind to receive it. On one side of this inclosure is a covered trellis work; and this he planted with climbing plants, honeysuckle, and passion flowers; some of which have survived the hand which placed them there, and were in flower when I visited this spot; at one end of the trellis was a little bounded square on which Bonaparte and his family played at nine pins, while some assisted in gardening; and thus the early part of every succeeding day was beguiled till ten or eleven o'clock, at which hour the family retired to breakfast.

"At one corner of this little garden which commanded a sight of the ocean to the N W was constructed a little mound just large enough to admit of a chair to be placed upon it, and here our prisoner used to amuse himself with a spying glass whenever the signal reported an approaching sail to the Island.

"At the distance of a few yards and on the higher ground, stands the new house; which although not raised to a second story, contains all the recommendations and conveniences which could be required for our prisoner and the whole of his establishment. It has a small court on one side, laid out for the growth of ornamental shrubs. On the other and in front are ovals, circles, &c planted with flowering shrubs, and the spacious verandas are inclosed by trellisses, and planted with coral flora quadrangularis and lauri folia—both now in full flower, and very beautiful. The rooms are spacious, and fitted up with great taste and elegance. Chimney-pieces and grates of English manufacture on the most approved models, ornament every room in which their use might be required; and I think, had Bonaparte lived to inhabit this mansion, it would in some degree have reconciled him to his inevitable fate.

"From this now half-deserted spot I proceeded to gratify that curiosity which seems to lead all who land on this Island to visit the sepulchre of this ill-fated man. It is distant from Long Wood about one mile, and on one end of a small estate, the property of Mr. Torbett, an old resident on the Island. The spot seems peculiarly eligible to the purpose for which it was selected; nature gives to it the beauty of sterility by the vicinity of a spring of pure water, and the hand of man has contributed to produce what in the torrid zone we often pant for—a shade under which to escape the rays of a scorching sun. In short, here our prisoner, in his constitutional rambles, found those inviting weeping willows, which afterwards to shade the tomb of his mortal remains. He became quite enamoured with the spot, and often was known to have expressed, that if it should be his fate to die on the island, and that the English did not send his body to France, he should desire to be buried under the shade of these trees. They were planted about eighteen years ago by Mr. Torbett—one of them, bent by the violence of storms, leans so as to throw its shade over the grave the greatest part of the day: and it is not likely to be disturbed from this position, having now acquired a stem of about 36 inches in circumference. The grave is covered with stone slabs, laid horizontally, and covering a space measuring 12 feet in length, and 8 1-2 feet in breadth, raised a few inches only from the ground. The depth of the grave was 12 feet, and is lined with similar slabs. A strong iron railing, about 5 1-2 feet high, surrounds the grave, a few inches only from the stone work; and an area of a few yards all round surrounded by a railing of wood, protects the boundary of the tomb from the injuries which might be committed by straggling cattle or indiscriminate travellers this way.

"A spring, so important to this consecrated spot, is close to the last mentioned boundary. It produced from the shelving side of a rocky stratum, through which the water percolates, and is received into a circular basin not exceeding two feet in diameter; the water is as clear as the finest crystal, purely simple to the taste, and something cooler than the atmosphere at noon day, consequently a draught of it is delightful to the constitutions. Just above the spot, about 600 yards, is a neat house in which the Count Bertrand resided; its front looks upon the tomb, and, from its elevated site, commands a full view of it, and here the Count received the visits of his devoted General, as often as his excursions to see during this his favourite retreat.

"Mr Torbett has not yet been allowed to turn the eligibilities of this place to all the advantages it is capable of; and he has acceeded to the pleasure of the Government in this appropriation of his property, without yet having received any remuneration or compensation for admitting a public road to be made through his grounds at all hours of the day, and which converts a retired and quiet residence into a public, and sometimes intrusive one.

"I should have observed, when describing the tomb that nothing is inscribed to commemorate in future ages, and to confirm the page of history, that here lie the remains of Napoleon Bonaparte.

"The death of this state prisoner has greatly changed the prospects of the commercial part of this Island, for while so large a Military and Naval establishment was continued, it gave life to much traffic, and when the change did occur, it gave the death blow to many a speculation, and overstocked their warehouses with articles for which there was no longer a sale."—Calcutta John Bull.

THE WAR IN THE PENINSULA;

Or, Recollections of the evenful Life of a Soldier. pp. 221 12 mo. Glasgow, 1825. M'Phio. Edinburgh, West & Co. London, Knight and Lacy.

Written in a plain soldier like manner, by an eye witness of what he describes; these are interesting sketches of a most interesting period. There are a great variety of anecdotes, the following are some of the most striking:—

Three men are sentenced to be shot for desertion—a Frenchman and two Italians

"The Sergeants come with the company's book to settle their accounts; the two Italians were in paroxysms of agony, crying and wringing their hands; the behavior of the Frenchman, who had been taken prisoner, had volunteered into the Chasseurs Britannique, and afterwards deserted from them to his countrymen, formed a strong contrast to that of the others. Calm and dignified, he seemed to have no fear of death, nor did any complaint pass his lips, save an occasional exclamation against the injustice of trying him as a deserter being a Frenchman. In his circumstances, he argued it was natural that he should endeavour to join his friends the first opportunity that offered. When the sergeant was settling their accounts, the Italians paid no attention to any thing said to them; but he discussed every item with the greatest exactness, and the sergeant wanting a small coin about the value of a farthing to balance, he desired him to procure it before he would sign the Ledger; but though thus exact with the sergeant, the moment he received his balance which amounted to some dollars, he divided every penny of it amongst his fellow prisoners.—When the Italians received their money they sent for brandy, and began to drink intemperately, endeavouring to drown their sorrows and sear their minds; but it had quite a different effect, for they then broke from all restraint in the expression of their feelings, and cried and groaned with agony in such a manner, that they could be heard at a considerable distance from the guard room. In this state they continued until morning, when they ceased their lamentations, only because nature was exhausted by their former violence; quite different was the conduct of the Frenchman; when the brandy was procured, the Italians pressed him to take some, but he thanked them, and refused. 'No,' said he, throwing a look of mingled pity and contempt on them, 'I need no brandy to enable me to face death.' He continued to walk about with his arms folded during the whole evening, without seeming in the least disturbed: occasionally, indeed, his countenance softened, and a tear drop gathered in his eye, but it was not permitted to linger there; and as if ashamed of showing the least want of firmness, he assumed redoubled inflexibility of countenance."

A curious receipt for the Ague.—"General Sir John Hope happened to pay a visit to the hospital, and going round the sick with the staff surgeon, he inquired, 'What was the prevailing disease?' the reply was 'Fever and Ague.' Sir John, whose kind and humane disposition is well known, mentioned that he had heard of a cure for that disease among the old women in Scotland, which was considered infallible. The staff surgeon smiled, and begged to hear what it was, 'It is,' said the good old General, 'simply a large pill formed of spider's web, to be swallowed when the fit is coming on; I cannot pledge myself for its efficacy, but I have heard of it talked of.' The staff doctor gave a shrug as much as to say it was all nonsense, look ed very wise, as all doctors endeavour to do, and the conversation dropped. No sooner was the General gone, than I set out in quest of the specific. I did not need to travel far, and returned to my room prepared for the next fit; when I felt it coming on, I swallowed the dose with the greatest confidence in its virtues, and however strange it may appear, or hard to be accounted for, I never had a fit of the ague after, but got well rapidly."

"The day that we entered this village, one of our men cut off his right hand under circumstances that may be worth relating.

"For some time previous to this he had been low in spirits, troubled with what some people call religious melancholy, but which, at that time, was no very prevalent disease in the army. He scarcely ever spoke to any one, and was in the habit of wandering out from the encampment, with his bible in his pocket, and seating himself in some place where he was not likely to be disturbed, he would sit for hours pouring over it. While in Ustariz, he conceived some ill will against the landlord of the house where he was quartered, and very unceremoniously knocked him down. Being confined for this offence, he remained a prisoner when we entered Hasparin. On the guard being placed in a house, he sat down, and having taken out his bible, he commenced in his usual way to read it—But suddenly rising he laid the book down, and going over to a man who was breaking wood with a hatchet, he asked the loan of it for a few minutes.—When the man gave it to him, he walked very deliberately into an inner apartment, and placing his right hand on the sill of the window, he severed it at the wrist. The first two strokes that he made, did not finish the business, and he had nerve enough not only to repeat it a third time, but afterwards to wrench the lacerated integuments asunder, and throw the hand into the court below.—He had been observed by some of the men in the window opposite but too late to prevent the deed.

"The man, on being questioned as to his motive in thus mutilating himself, replied, 'That he had only done what the Lord commanded, in a passage he had been reading,'—"If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee, &c." which injunction he had literally fulfilled as his right hand offended him in knocking down his landlord."

These anecdotes will suffice to show that much amusement, which in such cases is also information, is scattered through these pages.

Natural History.

WAR AMONG THE SNAKES.

Travelling through one of the southern states, my attention was attracted by a singular rustling in the thickets which bordered the road. I stopped my horse to learn its cause; and soon discovered, at a few paces from the track, a rattle-snake of rather more than ordinary size, in a coil such as these reptiles always throw themselves into on the approach or attack of an enemy, exhibiting every symptom of extreme rage, and displays all those beauties for which its species are so remarkable when under the influence of passion. No cause for its disorder was at first visible; but in a short time a black-snake darted from the surrounding bushes rapidly across the folds of his antagonist, and disappeared on the other side. The rattle-snake did not fail to strike at its darting assailant, but with what success the rapidity of their motion prevented me from determining. The rattle-snake remained in his coil, prepared for another assault, which was soon offered by his black foe repairing, accordingly soon offered by his black foe repairing, and again gilded across him with almost incouceivable rapidity, while the same attempt as formerly was made to punish the aggression. These movements were several times repeated with no apparent advantage to either party. The black snake seemed once or twice struck with the fangs of his enemy and yet returned with undiminished celerity to his subtle assault. The density of the underwood would not permit me to follow with my eyes his retreat; and however, great my curiosity to ascertain how he employed the time of his absence, I could not prevail upon myself to indulge it by entering on so fatal a battle ground. At length the rattle snake, in one of his attempts to revenge the insolence of his assailant, struck his fangs deep into his own body: he extricated them, stretched himself with every appearance of agony on the ground, and turning on his back, in a short time expired.—The crafty victor once more appeared, and seizing the lifeless body in his mouth dragged it from the scene of action.

Bees—A singular instance of the caprice of these industrious insects, now exists in our port, on board the brig Francis, Capt. Walker. This vessel has lately been under a course of repair at Tranmere, on the opposite shore of the river Mersey, and whilst in the graving dock of that place, a swarm of bees settled upon the larboard quarter staunchion, about noon on Saturday the 29th inst. After remaining there an hour, they entered a small hole under the taffril, and proceeded to form their domicile; several attempts to dislodge them having proved ineffectual. On Monday the 18th inst. the vessel was brought to Liverpool accompanied by her new colony, who may now be daily seen, pursuing their industrious occupation, and their architectural labours are already visible through the entrance to their singular habitation. The Francis is now lying on the west side of the salt house dock.—Liverpool Mercury.

LINES

By a person long resident in a foreign Country, on his return home.

I came, but they had passed away—
The fair in form, the pure in mind;
And like a stricken deer I stray,
Where all are strange, and none are kind,
Kind to the worn, the wearied soul,
That pants, that struggles for repose:
O that my steps had reached the goal
Where earthly sighs and sorrows close.

Years have passed o'er me like a dream
That leaves no trace on memory's page;
I look around me, and I seem
Some relic of a former age.
Alone, as in a stranger clime,
Where stranger voices mock mine ear,
I mark the lagging course of time,
Without a wish—a hope—a fear!

Yet I had hopes—and they have fled;
And I had fears were all too true;
My wishes too!—but they are dead,
And what have I with life to do!
'Tis but to wear a weary load,
I may not, dare not, cast away;
To sigh for one small, still abode,
Where I may sleep as well as they;—

As they, the loveliest of their race,
Whose grassy tombs my sorrows steep;
Whose worth my soul delights to trace—
Who e very kiss 'tis sweet to weep!
To weep beneath the silent moon,
With none to chide, to hear, to see;
Life can bestow no dearer boon
On one whom death disdains to free!

I leave the world that knows me not,
To hold communion with the dead;
And fancy soon creates the spot
Where fancy's fairest dreams are shed.
I see each shade, all silvery white,
I hear each Spirit's melting sigh;
I turn to clasp those forms of light—
And the pale morning chills my eye.

But soon the last dim morn shall rise—
The lamp of life burns feebly now—
When stronger hands shall close my eyes,
And smooth my cold and dewy brow.
Unknown I lived—so let me die;
Nor stone nor monumental cross,
Tell where his nameless ashes lie,
Who sighed for gold and found it dross!

Domestic.

Quebec, Sept 17, 1825.

Yesterday morning at an early hour His Majesty's Yacht Herald, having on board our Governor-in Chief, with his Countess, and suite came to anchor off the town. His Lordship's arrival was announced by the firing of three guns in quick succession from Cape Diamond, and preparations were instantly made by the Military of the Garrison, and Volunteer Companies to receive His Excellency with every mark of respect. Col. Durnford, Royal Engineers, commanding the Troops in this Province, and Lieut. Col. Hawkins, 68th Light Infantry, commanding the Garrison, having repaired on board the Yacht, His Lordship was pleased to appoint 10 o'clock, as the hour at which he would disembark, and at the same time signified his wish that, as a heavy rain was falling, the guard of honour, and parade of the Troops, should be dispensed with. About 10 o'clock the weather began to clear, and the REGIMENTS and COMPANIES repaired to the post which had been previously assigned to them. The 68th Regiment, as the senior corps furnished the guard of honour which received His Lordship at landing on the King's Wharf, and the 71st that which mounted within the Castle Yard, the remainder of these Corps with the Company of Royal Sappers and Miners, the Grenadier and Light Infantry Companies of the 3rd Battalion, Quebec Militia, under Captains Cary and Melvin, and Capt. Walker's Rifle Company lined the streets from the Castle to the King's Wharf where His Excellency Sir Francis Burton accompanied by a number of the most respectable and distinguished characters, from amongst the citizens, had assembled to receive His Lordship. Shortly after 10, the Earl of Dalhousie with the Countess and the Officers of His Lordship's Staff quitted the Herald, whose yards were manned on the occasion, under a salute from the guns of that ship, and from H. M. S. Niemen also at anchor in the river, at the conclusion of which the sailors gave three hearty British cheers. On His Lordship reaching the stairs, a salute of 18 guns was fired by Captain Price's Company of Volunteer Artillery, the Guards presented arms and the Band playing God save the King. The Countess was conducted to her carriage by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, and on her way to it exchanged compliments with those present, who had the honour of her Ladyship's acquaintance, the Earl was also engaged for some time in familiar conversation with several of the gentlemen who had assembled to greet his return. After the Countess and the Lieutenant Governor had entered the carriage His Lordship mounted his horse and was loudly cheered by the assembled spectators, he then proceeded to the Castle escorted by a detachment of Major Bell's Cavalry under Lieut. Gowan, where on his arrival the guard of honour of the 71st Regt paid the accustomed honours and a salute of 18 guns was fired from the citadel.

Notwithstanding a tedious passage, forty-five days, the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie appeared in excellent health and spirits. The Quebec Gazette contains an official notice of His Lordship's intention to hold a Levee on Tuesday next, at ten o'clock, and the Countess a Drawing Room at nine the same evening.—Quebec Mercury.

Edmund Burke.—This notorious offender was yesterday lodged in the Gaol of this District, and we understand is to be conveyed to Three Rivers, to take his trial at the ensuing sessions, for various acts of violence which he has committed contrary to law, and to the annoyance of the peaceable inhabitants of this Province. It is supposed that he was the director of the various gangs of desparate characters who have infested the country for some weeks past, and under whose influence so many robberies have taken place. He was previously arraigned, condemned, and brought on the platform for execution, but was pardoned by the merciful disposition of the Governor, under an idea that an amendment in his life would be the result of such lenity, but depravity had taken too deep a root in the heart to permit him to follow a proper course of life, for his latter end was, if possible, worse than the beginning. He possessed a mind fertile in planning wickedness, and a desparate disposition to carry these plans into effect. He has been the terror of the country inhabitants, who have shuddered at his very name. Happily for the peace of society he is now secured, and we trust those who have been guided by his evil councils will shun the paths in which he has taught them to tread and avoid that end which we have reason to think awaits this lawless character.—Canadian Courant.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

(CRIMINAL TERM)

Saturday, 10th Sept.

This day the Prisoners convicted during the term were brought up to receive sentence. The manner in which judgment was pronounced upon these unfortunate individuals, by His Honour the Chief Justice, was truly impressive, and ought to act as a warning to all who heard it. Nine persons were ordered for execution; and from the increase of crime in this Province, there is little hopes that they will escape this most awful punishment of the law.—Montreal Herald.

On Thursday last, the 8th, there was a smart shock of an Earthquake felt at Hawksbury on the Ottawa river, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the tremor seemed to come from the West to East, and lasted for about a second, accompanied with a faint rumbling noise which was heard passing to the eastward.

The water in the river Ottawa has never been seen so low in the recollection of the oldest survivers as during the present season. The rapids are hardly passable for lumber and the delay which this will occasion in getting it down to Quebec will be attended with a serious loss to many individuals—while others who have succeeded in reaching Quebec will reap an advantage from an increase of price should there be much wanted for the fall vessels. Many of the Mills situated on the banks of the river, and which never never known to be deficient of water, are now stopped from the lowness of it, among others Messrs. Hamilton's large establishment at Hawksbury are at present standing still, there being a deficiency of water to rock them and a difficulty in floating even deals and plank over the rapids below.—Montreal Gazette.

Died.

At Niagara on Monday the 26th inst. WILLIAM SHAW, Esq. Master of the Steam Boat Toronto.

In the Gaol of this District, on Saturday the 17th inst. Henry Hamilton, who was lately convicted of Murder and sentenced to be executed on the 7th of October next. An inquest was held on the body which returned a verdict of "Death by the visitation of God." It appeared on examination of the physician and others who attended him, that he had been attacked by a fever about a fortnight since and although every attention was given that the circumstances of his case would admit, yet he continued to get weaker every day and finally expired. No circumstance was discovered to lead to a suspicion that the deceased had come to his end by any improper means, and his Father-in law stated that he believed every attention which humanity could require was paid by those who had him in charge.—Brockville Recorder.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

LONDON, 13th Aug.—Canada Land Company Shares, £10 paid, 25 premium. American and Colonial Steam Company £10 paid, 1-2 par cent discount.

Letters from London of the 14th August, state that the Crown and Clergy Lands in Upper Canada had been valued at 3-6, but that some opposition had occurred to the arrangement on the part of Government. Land Company Shares were at 35 pm on the 8th August.

From the London Times.

"A pamphlet has been submitted to us, which places in a curious, though somewhat painful light, many causes of difference and ill blood, which appear to have arisen between the Executive Government of Lower Canada and the Assembly of that province, during a long series of years. Under Lord Dalhouse these disputes are stated to have reached their acme.—Money, the root of all evil, has been at the bottom of them. The Colonists insist upon the right of British subjects to tax themselves by their own representatives The Executive Government of Lower Canada frequently thwarted in all its applications for money, has considered that all the rights of Colonists are subservient to the supremacy of the parent state; and we agree in that construction of the point of right, unless it be conceded, that a right to terminate the relation of parent state and colony, exists at all times, and is indefeasible in the latter Here, too, we are ready to agree, that when the power to shake off that dependence can be successfully exercised, the colony in jus tified in using it. But it is absurd to talk in the abstract of the privilege of self-taxation—it is a question of power rather than of strict justice, and the allegation can hardly be predicated of any, but the people a sovereign and independent community. The administration, of a colony must, it seems to us, be carried on with reference to the paramount supremacy and welfare of the mother country The British Parliament not only ought to have, but must have, a superintending and controlling power over what are termed the provincial "legislatures," so long as they are subject to Great Britain, and policy and justice will equally induce this country to consult and provide for their solid interest, even where they themselves mistake or neglect it. We rejoice that, by a recent Act of Parliament, the two Canadas have been thrown into a single state—The English Blood of Upper Canada being infused into the Lower Province, and the extreme Lower Canada, that is, the individuals who formerly exercised a leading influence over the measures of the Assembly, and over the spirit of the inhabitants—object to the Union—The total revenue raised in Lower Canada, has, on an average of the last five years, amounted to near £80,000 per annum."

DUBLIN, August 13.

The New Catholic Association is said to have been adjourned till November, not to meet again.

The late showers are reported from the country to have diminished the fears of a short Potatoe crop.

The harvest is become general, the Wheat proves good, Barley indifferent. Oats middling.

THE ARMY.—The long anticipated removal of the General Officers that are Colonels en second, belonging to the Royal Regiment of Artillery and Corps of Engineers will take place immediately. These officers only retire temporarily from their regimental commissions, and will be re-appointed to their regiments on vacancies occurring in the highest rank; viz that of Colonel Commandant. The number of removals are as follows:—Artillery 16, Engineers 8. Consequently 16 Lieutenant Colonel will have the important step of Colonel of the Artillery, likewise eight of the Engineers, and the promotion to go entirely through the regiments.

English Iron.—A very important discovery has been made for the improvement of this leading article of our manufactures and commerce, and the success which has attended the various experiments which have taken place must be highly gratifying to the ingenious inventor, and in a national point of view the results can scarcely be contemplated. It is well known that in smelting iron from the stone in its original state a great quantity of carbon, and vitrifying or impure matter, is found, which is dissipated in the further process in forming as it were, a bowl at the bottom of the high bones. The legs, of which the right is the largest, merely show signs of calves, particularly the latter.

"When in France, he eat very little, if any, animal food; a penny French roll was enough for a day's sustenance; but as he now partakes of animal diet in very small quantities his portion of bread is reduced accordingly.

"His voice is by no means strong, but far from disagreeable; he has a particular passion for music, and even can sing in a faint tone; but conversation must not be kept up for any length of time, as powder exhaustion would be the consequence. When speaking, the rotatory motion through the skin of the neck is perceptible, and the pulsation of the heart conspicuous to the eye.

"In raising either of his feet from the floor, the limb appears to be distended uniformly from the knee, and we cannot better illustrate this idea than by that sensation we commonly experience upon allowing a limb to remain too long in one position, thereby causing a temporary strangulation of the vessels, known by the common term of the foot being asleep.

"Sir Astley Cooper, by whom he has been visited, finds that his heart is placed so much out of the common region allotted to it, that it is precisely its own length lower than if properly placed.

"In regard to the texture of the skin of this living wonder it is of a dry monkey parchment like appearance, which, covering any other human form, would not answer the purposes of its functions, but seems calculated alone to cover the slender juiceless body of the being whom nature intended to array. On his shins nobes appear in the form of buttons, though not obtrusively to the eye, and the toes of the feet are bent over one another.

"The ribs are not only capable of being distinguished, but may be clearly separated and counted one by one, and have died like so many pieces of cane, and together with the skin which covers them resemble more the hoops and outer covering of a balloon, of a small size, than any thing in the ordinary course of nature. We come now to the action produced by the effort of the lungs, and which strange as it may appear, does not proceed from the chest as in ordinary cases, but from the lower extremity of the abdomen, as though the organs of respiration, from excessive laxity, had absolutely descended from their proper sphere, and that, by a tenacious effort of nature, unwilling to yield possession of her functions, they had accommodated themselves by time to such an unnatural and incredible position."

LONDON, August 10.

New South Wales Rat.—The following circumstance occurred the other night at the house of Mr Robertson, watchmaker, in George street, near the King's Wharf. It is well known that Mr. R. has a family of children. These children, five of them quite babes, have their bed rooms up stairs, and daily two in bed. About midnight on Friday or Saturday last, Mr. R's eldest son was disturbed by some animal which he supposed to be a cat; he gave a kick and it fell off the bed. In a few moments after, the animal found its way into his sisters' bed room, and in like manner created an alarm; it was knocked off the bed, and expressed great displeasure by squeaking—it was then known to be a rat. The horrid animal was not to be retarded from the object in view, by these rebuffs—he made another attack—Some moments after the second alarm, one of the little girls was heard to scream; but all the children being inclined to sleep, even the little creature that was wounded also fell asleep The morning, however, presented a most dismal scene. The bed, containing little Lavelette and Jenny, was drenched in blood. The rat had seized the children just above the nose, and immediately below the forehead One of the teeth had entered a vein that caused the blood to flow most copiously Lavelette was nearly in a state of insensibility, and quite colorless. It is supposed the animal must have been satisfied with blood and then retreated. The bones in the lower end of the town are alarmingly infested with these horrid vermin. Plenty of good strong cats (instead of so many useless annoying curs) would be of great advantage to large houses, where children constitute so great a portion of the inmates.

Trotting.—The three greatest attempts perhaps ever recorded of trotting, and on which thousands were pending, came on at Sunbury. Mr. Wilan's horse, which beat the slate-colored American, was backed to trot three miles in nine minutes, for 100 guineas. It had been reported that the horse was lame; and, up to the evening before starting, 6 to 4 was the betting on time, at the Tun-Tavern, and more than two to one was bet before starting. When at speed the lameness was not apparent, but the horse was more than three minutes doing the first mile, and there was no increase of speed during the match. The horse broke into a gallop near George inn, when about 100 yards from home, and the pressure of horseman was so great at his heels, that the jockey turned him with difficulty, and the match was lost by forty seconds

One of the umpires reports, that "the first mile was completed 7 seconds under three minutes, which left three minutes and twelve seconds to do the last mile in. The horse kept a winning pace until within 100 yards of home, opposite the George public house, where there is a sharp turning, when the horse broke, and was pulled up and turned Here the crowd was so great, and he was so hemmed in, that he lost 12 or 13 seconds, and thereby the match exceeded the 9 minutes, and was lost by five seconds." Mr Dyson sold the horse, on Friday, for 300 guineas, to go to Ireland.—There is no doubt but that on a straight three mile course he would have won easily.

NEWSPAPERS.—BY MR MONTGOMERY.

They may affect to despise Newspapers that will, but it has required the lessons, the labour, the experience of six thousand years, to bring society to a state so superlatively artificial as to render a minute acquaintance with what is going on every where, necessary for the enjoyment of life at home, not among the higher and intellectual classes only, but with all ranks and conditions of men, from the monarch on his throne to the peasant at his plough. The poems of Homer and Virgil, the histories of Thucidydes and Livy, the tragedies of Eschylus and Sophocles, the orations of Demosthenes and Cicero,—the greatest monuments of genius, learning, and science, in antient and modern times were produced in progressive eras and different countries not one of which can d have given birth to that masterpiece of human ingenuity—a Newspaper, until man in "the social compact" had reached his majority, if we may use the expression, and the perpetual food of intelligence concerning himself wherever he exists had become as necessary for the enjoyment of political life, as in the bodily frame the uninterrupted correspondence between the head and members is necessary for health In those countries where newspapers are established, but especially in our own where they are free, knowledge of every kind must be more general among the reading classes than it ever could have become where no such prompt and influential means of diffusing it were employed Here so immense a majority of the poorest people are able to read—and those that read any thing read newspapers where they can lay hands on them,—that there is scarcely an individual between Berwick-on-Tweed and Pernanco. who is not (weekly at least) diverted from his own petty cares and pursuits, and roused by his favourite journal—to take part in the councils of princes, the quarrels of nations, and the affairs of his own government,—to feel a personal interest in the fluctuations of commerce and agriculture,—to mark with curiosity the progress of arts, sciences, and the belles lettres;—to relish the prurient scandals of high life, express due abhorrence of the villanies of low life, and sympathise with the troubles, sufferings, and successes of middle life;—in a word, to be affected with all that affects humanity under every actual or imaginable circumstance.

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

EAST INDIES.

Calcutta papers to the 20th of April have been received in this city, which give an account of the capture of Arracan by Brig Gen. Morrison. The excellent position of the enemy (the Burmese) on a peninsula, whose steep banks were covered with sharp stakes, required great and spirited preparations and energy to carry it. The attack was made at night, and the enemy's stockade carried without a man being killed The Burmese troops amounted to 10,000 under Atown Mungza, and were so nearly annihilated that scarcely 1,000 will ever reach Ava. These papers, however, contain unfavourable news from Rangoon. But the division under Sir Archibald Campbell had reached Sarave, 112 miles from Rangoon, without losing a man, and was waiting for the arrival of Gen Cotton, of whom no accounts, since the capture of Palang, had been received on the 4th of March. An account of the defeat of this General had appeared in the Calcutta Gazette.—He attacked the enemy's position at Donabew, on the 18th at Pagoda, but found it prudent to embark and press down 4 miles below, until reinforced:—Loss in killed and wounded 139, including Capts Rose and Cannon of the 89th. A later account from Rangoon says, that Gen C. had been often attacked since he left Donabew, which is said to be the strongest hold in the Empire The enemy's war boats had become formidable These accounts add, that, by mistake, Sir Archibald passed Donabew many miles without knowing it; but is said to have returned and joined Gen. C. A grand attempt is to be made on Donabew, which is also protected by a broad river.

Bussein was taken on the 4th of March, the Burmese driving away the population themselves, and retiring after setting fire to the town.

A letter of March 29, from Parneah, says the Indigo prospects are bad. A volcano has recently been discovered in the Himalayas mountains.

GREECE.

ZANTE, JULY 6.—The martyrdom of a Monk of the Convent of the Virgin-Mary, in Mount Araeyn the, is the subject of admiration among the faithful here. This old man having been brought by the Turks before the Tribunal of Rous hid Pacha, and asked what his name was, answered, "Am rose ?" "Your country?" demanded his persecutors ?" "The Monastery of the Holy Virgin," replied the Monk. "And your dwelling?" "My dwelling place," said he, "were these rocks, until they were levelled by your soldiers! and soon," lifting up a cross at the same time, "my dwelling will be in Heaven." "What have you done with the sacred vessels of the church?" "I have rescued them from the defilement of your soldiers"— "Where are they?" "That secret rests with myself." Speak!" "You may put my body to the rack; God only has power over my soul" They immediately began to apply the torture; not a word however, escaped him, but "Kyrie eleison !" and "Lord have mercy on me! They drove sharp instruments under his finger nails, but the martyr glorified God, and prayed for his persecutors; who, enraged by his patience of suffering, impaled him, and left him to perish in view of the trenches of Missolonghi. The news was communicated by a Piedmontesh deserter. Such are the tortures to which Christians are subject in the nineteenth century.

THE WIDOW FAIRLOP.

I hate stout people. Nature I am certain, intended the whole race become breed to have gone extinct with that obsolete monster, the Mammoth. They were created clearly to inhabit the vast barren blanks of the antediluvian world; not to encumber with repletion, our modern cities and towns. One of them is too much for a metropolis. In London, A D 1825, they (the Giants) are out of both bigness and place They ought to herd together like the elephants and rhinoceroses, and hippoami, and inhabit the deserts idle of the earth; they should seek out fitting solitudes, like the whales, and not flounder in our populous shallows. They are irksome, if not dangerous to our thronging millions It is neither delicate nor fair, with their disproportions, to thrust themselves as they do upon our narrow highways and byways; to dam up our small courts, and straight alleys They ought not to engross, as they are accustomed, our new houses and gardens, our tables and benches, our spare beds above all, our public mail coaches, and flying stages. Our prim elastic vehicles, like "easy waggons light," are not adapted to such preposterous freightage—our safety-coaches are not safe under such burthens—only the old double bodied much ne. long since obsolete, was competent to the transfer of such enormities. Waggon carriage, the conveyance of the bulky in the days of Fielding and Smollet, hath lamentably deemed in fashion; but then are there no navigable rivers? no canals? no barges? If not for the transporting of the Blacketts and the Lambeths of the earth? I wonder why water carriage was invented.

I have my eye, especially, in this lecture, on the Mistress Fairlop Oh! worthy of the huge oak, her namesake was the circumference, of that largest of widows! I should be afraid to write down any guess at her girth, or an estimate of her tonnage. What must not her husband have been to bequeath such a relict! A Titan doubtless! for she was too monstrous for any meaner embrace She was infinitely too large an object for mere human love; if it were not, besides, notoriously, a tim d and humble affection What a hand for any mere passion to sigh for! What a waist to have hoped even to encompass! "Give me but what this girdle bound," replied to her girdle, would have seemed neither refined as a compliment, nor modest as a request. What a face was here to dwell (unless to reside) upon! What a pelican chin to have toyed with! What a bosom! What arms! What a trunk! The Wisbeach Day Coach, in which for the first time, I conceived or beheld such a Titaness, groaned under the intolerable weight. Our co-travellers panted and pouted, if they did not openly cavil, at her unreasonable bulk. One of our overstrained cattle dropt dead upon the road. At last she condescended to be set down, and I exchanged with her a joyous and final farewell, (at least so I hoped it was) at Ware. She intended, I understood, to sleep there, and she was worthy of its broad illimitable bed. Our acquaintance, however, had only commenced Nature, in one of her wayward moods, had bestowed on one of her purest offsprings a violent desire for migration and travel. It was in her inclination to have ascended Mont Blanc, or to have journeyed over land to India, which her bulk forbidding, she was contented to be shifted about from place to place in caravans and stages. In consequence, within a month from our first encounter, I and the widow Fairlop again found ourselves, face to face, in the same vehicle, on a Saturday's journey to Hemel Hempstead She was still in her weeds. Her bonnet, hung with deep crape, in dimension an ordinary bed-tester, over-canopied her ample face: her convex body was clad in its accustomed sables, and took the bombasine balloon. A dozen packages, the least of them a hundle, reposed in the amplitude of her lap From her bulk and her garb, she might have been taken at a first glance, for the goodly Widow Blackett of Oxford, whom Elia hath immortalized, as well as compressed, in one of his admirable essays. But she had none of the womanly softness of his matronly giantess Mine had no thin feeble ideas—no small feminine conversation—no delicacy—no timidity—no tenderness. She was altogether magnified—as Gulliver complained of the Brobdignagdians,—into coarseness I was disappointed when we stopped at Edgeware, the coachman there tieing on a pair of supplementary horses, under pretence of a hill, at her shouting only a single bonnet to take. It would not have misbecomed her to have called for a quintal of biscuit. Her voice was loud—stentorian.—she did not speak but bellowed;—and gave this large utterance to big, bold words. Her person matched with, but could not outvie, the jolly breadth of her jests, and slimness and gentility of person were especially the subjects of her humour

The crash, however terrific, was not loud enough to drown the piercing shrieks of the poor wretch, whose leg was crushed between the wheel and the axle-tree. Another of the same gang, who had been driving a cart loaded with stones, was thrown from his seat, and the wheels passing over his body, he was dragged to the ground, and his head dashed to pieces

If haply, on my unborn brow,
In life's bright morn, they trac'd thy duty;
Sure thou best bi ara'd to mark me now,
The wane of youth—of manhood's beauty.
So, having watch'd me o'er the wild,
And promis'd pleasure day by day,
They bid thee rouse their heedless child,
And beckon hence, Away! away!—

Ah! their black breath hath kiss'd the plain,
Themselves once charg'd to bloom before me:—
Then wherefore should I seek in vain
The blighted flow'rs they'll ne'er restore me?—
Take then this tear, ah, herald pale!
'Tis my heart's pledge to meet their doom;
Go, bear it thither—'tis my seal,
And say I come—ere long, I come!

May it please your Excellency,

We the undersigned Magistrates and others Inhabitants of the City and District of Quebec, respectfully offer our congratulations on the occasion, of Your Excellency's safe return to the seat of your Government

It has afforded us sincere pleasure to learn that Your Excellency and the Countess of Dalhousie have constanly enjoyed the blessing of Health.

We feel assured that, on resuming the Functions of your exalted station in British North America—those more especially which regard the Administration of this Province—your Excellency will find His Majesty's Subjects in every class fully disposed to meet your well known wishes for the promotion of their general Welfare.

Confident that the prevalence of Happiness among the people intrusted to your charge, is the chief object of your solicitude, it is our earnest hope that the rectitude, which in public as in private life, characterises Your Excellency, may crown with every success your endeavours to effect your honourable and virtuous Purpose.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following answer:

GENTLEMEN,

I beg you to accept my grateful thanks for this address upon my return amongst you. Be assured, that in resuming the Government which His Majesty has been pleased to entrust to me, it is my anxious desire to promote the welfare and happiness of all classes of the people in this Province; and that nothing can gratify me more, than to find my endeavours supported by the Magistrates and respectable Inhabitants of this City.

DALHOUSIE,

Chateau St. Louis, 20 Sept. 1825.

Yesterday, Sept. 21, the Committee of the Quebec Bible Society, auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society, had the honour to present the following Address to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief.

May it please your Excellency,

The Committee of the Quebec Bible Society, auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society, with unfeigned gratitude to the God of all grace, for that protection with which he has encircled you, during your voyages and absence from Canada, offer their sincere congratulations to your Excellency, on your return to assume the executive functions of this Government. They rejoice in being permitted to address your Excellency as the beneficient patron of the laudable establishment organised among us for the extension of elementary and scientific knowledge, especialy that of the British and Foreign Bible Society. While they thus declare their repectful veneration of your Excellency's philantropy, they ardently implore the God of our Fathers, so to prosper your Excellency's administration, that your Excellency may eventually receive that triumphant plaudit: "Thou hast been faithful—I will make thee ruler over many things—Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

To which Address, His Excellency was pleased to return an answer to the following effect:—

GENTLEMEN,

I am much obliged to you for the kind sentiments which you have expressed towards me in this address. Having seen the beneficial effects of these public institutions, I shall continue cordially to give them my support and patronage.

MONTREAL ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

On Sunday morning the Hon. Mr. Papineau, Mr De St. Ours, Mr Leslie, Mr. Cuvillier, Mr. Quesnel, Dr. Kimbert and Mr. D. B. Viger, arrived in this city with the Address of the District of Montreal, to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, which, was presented at 2 o'clock on Tuesday.

To His Exellency Sir FRANCIS NATHANIEL BURTON, Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order, Lieutenant Governor in and over the Province of Lower Canada, &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

The undersigned inhabitants of the city and district of Montreal, knowing and appreciating the public and private virtues which have marked the conduct of your Excellency during your residence in this Province, feel it their duty, previous to your departure, which they are informed may soon take place, to offer a testimony of that respect and affection which, in common with all the inhabitants of the Province, they entertain towards you, and which have generated and supported that universal confidence to which your Excellency is so justly entitled.

They would fail in what they owe to themselves, as well as to their fellow citizens, if they did not seize this opportunity to acknowledge the advantages which have resulted from the rectitude, the exact justice, the impartiality, and the undeviating respect for the laws, which have characterised the acts of your Excellency's administration. They pray your Excellency to be assured, that they will retain towards you feelings of gratitude which time can never obliterate.

They pray your Excellency will accept their sincere wishes for your prosperity; and they fervently hope that you may enjoy that unalloyed satisfaction which belongs to the well-founded conviction of having effectually contributed to the happiness of a loyal and faithful people.

ANSWER.

To the inhabitants of the city and district of Montreal.

GENTLEMEN,—The kind and flattering terms in which you are pleased to address me on my departure, demand my most grateful ackowledgements, which I beg you to accept.

The consideration and regard you have so constantly manifested towards me, since I have had the pleasure of being known to you and the approbation of my conduct which I have now the happiness to receive, will render my residence in Canada a lasting source of the most gratifying reflection.

In repeating my heartfelt thanks for your affectionate good wishes, permit me to assure you, that I shall ever cherish the most anxious solicitude for the welfare, prosperity and happiness of this loyal, important, and rising Colony.—Official Gazette.

EXECUTION AT THREE RIVERS.—Pursuant to the sentence of the Court of King's Bench the execution of Noel Francois (an Indian,) took place at Three Rivers on the 24th inst. for murder, after a respite of eight days having been allowed him.—He continued to the last moment to declare his innocence of the crime for which he was going to suffer; Divine Justice, he admitted had now overtaken him for crimes previously committed; but that of murder, he had never been guilty of.

Spectators, as is usual on those melancholy occasions, were numerously assembled from the Town and adjacent parts of the country. The poor man appeared truely penitent and expressed himself willing to die and wished to die in peace with all men, forgiving his enemies, and, supplicating an interest in the prayers of all who beheld him, he appeared earnestly to hope for mercy through the merits of a Saviour. After addressing the spectators he sung a long hymn in the Indian language without an apparent tremor, turned round and with great composure, shook hands with all who attended him; saluted his confessor, (the Rev. Mr. Raimbault, from whom he had previously received strict attention) and was instantly launched into eternity.

We regret to state, that as the Steam-boat Quebec, on her last trip from Quebec, was coming through the Richelieu rapids, Louis Foy, Esq. of Quebec, who was a passenger, fell over board during the night and was drowned. The particulars of this melancholy accident we have not been able precisely to ascertain; but we understand that, in going from the cabin on deck on some business, he incautiously approached too near the side of the boat where there was an opening and slipped over. It has been reported to us that no efforts were made by the Captain to save this respectable individual; but it has been stated on the other hand as an excuse, that fully a quarter of an hour had elapsed before the misfortune came to his knowledge, when any attempts to recover the body would be in vain.

A CAPTAIN DAVIES, commander of one of the traders now lying at Quebec, a few days ago threw himself into the river by the window of his own cabin, and was drowned. No reason can be assigned for this rash act. The body was seen to rise to the surface of the water, by some gentlemen standing on the beach; but supposing it to be that of some person who had been drowned before they made no efforts to save the unfortunate individual in question.

We understand that the 68th Regiment are under orders to proceed to the Upper Province, to relieve the 37th, which regiment embarks for England on the arrival of the 79th (Cameronian Highlanders) from Cork. The first division of the 68th embark in a few days.

DIED.

In this town, on Thursday last, FRANCES ELIZA, infant daughter of JAMES E. SMALL Esq. aged 12 months and 17 days.

Foreign Coffee, &c. may be imported into North America.

IV. And be it further enacted, That from and after the Fifth Day of January One thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, in lieu of the Duties hereby made to cease and determine, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, upon Importation of the several Articles enumerated or described in the Schedule of Duties to this Act annexed, into any of the said Possessions in America or the West Indies, except Newfoundland, from any Foreign Place in America, or from Europe, or from Asia within the Mediterranean Sea, or from any Place in Africa, the several Duties of Customs as the same are respectively set forth in Figures in the said Schedule: Provided always, that no greater Proportion of such Duties shall be charged upon any Article subject also to Duty under any other Act heretofore and still in force, or under any Colonial Law, than the Amount, if any, by which the Duty charged by this Act shall exceed such other Duty or Duties.

V. And be it further enacted, That the Duties imposed by this Act shall be levied raised, applied, and abated under the same Management, and in the same Manner, and by the same Powers and Means, and under the like Penalties and Forfeitures, as the Duties imposed by the Two Acts herein-before first mentioned would be levied, raised, applied, and abated under the Provisions of those Acts respectively, except so far as the same may be altered by this Act.

VI. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to export from any of the said Free Ports, except in New Zealand, to any Foreign Country in Europe or Africa, or in Asia within the Mediterranean Sea, in any Ship belonging to such Country, any Goods, being the Growth Production, or Manufacture of such Possessions, and any Goods which have been legally imported into the same.

And be it further enacted, That so much of an Act passed in the Fourth Year of the Reign of His present Majesty, intituled An Act to make more effectual Provision for permitting Goods imported to be secured in Warehouses or other Places, without Payment of Duty on the First Entry thereof, as enacts that certain Goods and Merchandize, mentioned in a Schedule (marked B.) to that Act annexed, warehoused under the Provisions of that Act, shall not be exported from the Warehouse to any British Colony, Plantation, Territory, or Dominion in America or the West Indies, nor be imported into any such British Colony or Plantation, unless and until all Duties, as well of Customs as Excise, payable in Great Britain or Ireland respectively on such Goods and Merchandize for Home Consumption, shall have been paid, shall be repealed, and the same is hereby repealed accordingly.

Editorial Commentary.

The only Foreign news of importance received this week is a confirmation of the intelligence that Lord Cochrane has been elected to aid the Greek cause by his own personal services; and, that the Greek Committee have placed the sum of £300,000 at his disposal for the purpose of equipping the steam-vessels of war with which he is to sail with all expedition A dash at Constantinople is said to be the primary object of his Lordship. At all events this important co-operation must produce results immediately favourable to the great cause, which is already strongly indicated by the rapid advance of Greek scrip.

The Act of the Imperial Parliament incorporating the "Canada Land Company," will be inserted in our next at length.

We are glad to perceive the notice which is advertised in this days Gazette calling a meeting for the purpose of adopting means for securing a place of repose for the remains of such persons as die without the pale of the Established Catholic, or Presbyterian Churches. The proposition is highly creditable to the parties who bring it forward, and we hope the meeting will be numerously and respectably attended—To carry religious prejudice and distinctions into the grave and charnel houses, assuredly savours more of the vindictive spirit of pagan barbarism, than of Christian charity, and that universal good will towards men, we are all solemnly enjoined to observe from the highest authority.

Cx pamet has been received and will appear in our next.

In a short time we hope to present our readers with an enlarged, and improved sheet.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Poole Aug 10—This town was yesterday honoured by a visit from a no less illustrious personage than Lady Byron, who arrived here in her elegant yacht, the Prince Leopold, from Portsmouth Lady Byron is accompanied by her daughter a most interesting child; she possesses the same noble and open countenance which so strongly characterized her deceased parent, and we are forcibly reminded of that affectionate address to his Lady, in which his Lordship fondly observes,

"Should her lineaments resemble
Those thou never more may'st see,
Then thy heart will softly tremble,
With a pulse yet true to me."

Large Ox—There was lately exhibited at the Horse Bazaar, King street, Portman square, London a remarkably large ox. This fine animal was of the Lincolnshire breed, and fed by Lord Yarborough Live weight about 800 stone, (16lbs. to the stone, (or 4,000 lbs) and the admeasurement as follows:—67 inches to the top of the shoulders; 174 inches from the tip of the nose to the tip of the tail; 40 inches across the hips; 44 inches across the back; 41 inches across the shoulders; 138 inches in the girth; and 23 inches between the fore legs. The above ox has been seen by the Lincolnshire graziers, and the best judges allow him to be 100 stone heavier than the Durham ox. He has also been inspected by the principal graziers in the neighbourhood of Warwick and Leamington, and is by them considered the largest, and to have the greatest proportion of meat upon the least bone, of any ox ever submitted to the public.—Farmer's Journal, Eng.

The new law of divorce, or modern dissolution. of matrimony

Lambert street.—Thursday, John Faule, a respectable looking man, holding the situation of clerk in one of the Hon. the East India Company's Warehouses was brought before the Sitting Magistrates, Messrs Hardwick & Wyatt, on a warrant charging him with the commission of a most violent assault on his wife, as the fair complainant styled herself.

Mrs Faule, a well-dressed buxom female apparently of the age of forty, stated, that about ten years since she had the misfortune to be wedded to the defendant. At the time of their union she had every prospect of happiness, but this was of short continuance, for a few months had scarcely elapsed when she was subjected to the most cruel and unmanly treatment; and to such an extent did it proceed, that at length she was compelled, in self-defence, to go into service. There she remained for a considerable time, until indisposition obliged her to leave her situation. The only alternative she then had was to apply to her husband for protection and support; but on her first application he attacked her in the most barbarous manner, violently assaulted her, and in fact kicked her into the street. This it was which now compelled her to apply to their Worships.

The defendant was now asked be the Magistrate if he had any thing to offer in extenuation of such savage conduct?

Mr Faule replied that the woman styling herself his wife had no more claim on him as a husband, and as such for protection than even his Worship himself

Magistrate.—Is she not your wife? I have here a certificate of your marriage, to which there is the attestation of your father as a subscribing witness

Defendant.—It is all true, but nevertheless, I am not her lawful husband

Mrs Faule, who during these interrogations appeared to be wax'ng wroth, looking angrily towards the defendant, and exclaimed "O! then I suppose you want the whole secret disclosed, do you?" and further thus proceeded to give the following very extraordinary history of their connection. In the year 1807 Mrs Faule married a Mr. J Donovan, a wealthy tradesman in Shadwell, with whom she lived in harmony and happiness until 1814, when Mr Donovan unfortunately became enamoured of a female servant then in their service, and to such an extent did this infatuation reach, that he disposed of the entire of his property, eloped with and subsequently married the object of his attachment, leaving her, Mrs Faule, quite unprovided for. The present defendant was, previous to her marriage with Mr Donovan her most ardent admirer, and being then in the habit of visiting at her house renewed his addresses. After marked attention on his part, and a serious consideration on hers, as to the unlikelihood of her reclaiming her former husband Mr D., she consented to their union, provided it could be so accomplished as to evade the provisions of that most cruel (as she denominated it) of all English laws, the law against bigamy. Her former husband, Mr. Donovan, being then in town, he was consulted on the subject, and after a great deal of consultation and difficulty a would be legal document, of which the following is a verbatim copy, was drawn up, and duly executed by all parties:—

"August 21 1815

"This day it is agreed between Joseph Donovan on one part, and Susan Donovan on the other, that they do both voluntarily consent and agree to a final separation, by legal sale in the cattle market in Smithfield, in consideration whereof I, Joseph Donovan, have voluntarily received the sum of 5s. of Mr John Faule, purchaser; and, therefore, I say received in full value of all demands 5s.

JOSEPH DONOVAN

Mrs. Faule, alias Mrs Donovan, concluded by saying that in compliance with the above, the sale had taken place, and they were of course married

In answer to some questions from the Magistrate, the complainant said that in 1817, her first husband taking with him his wife and family, went out as a settler to the Cape of Good Hope, and that she had since ascertained from the best authority that he was no longer in existence

The Magistrate observed, that during their judicial experience they had heard many very extraordinary disclosures, but that the present far exceeded any thing that had ever come under their cognizance; they feared that the common law of the land, as to the matrimony, was very high. However as that was not the question before them, nor the one on which the defendant appeared, they must decline giving any opinion, but an assault had been clearly proved, and therefore the defendant must find bail to answer it, or any other charges that may be brought against him at the ensuing Sessions

ATLANTIC STEAM NAVAGATION COMPANY.

We have received a document containing a complete exposition of the views of this Company, and as they differ in some particulars from those already before the public, we propose to take a rapid glance at this great project.

The routes now laid down are not exactly the same with those which have before appeared in the public prints It is now proposed that steam ships shall sail from Valentia, in Ireland, twice in each month, at first, but ultimately every week;—one of the largest class, (1000 tons) for New-York touching at Halifax for fuel, and to meet a branch line from Quebec; and another, of the first class, for the West Indies, touching at Fayal, in the Azores, for fuel, and thence proceeding to Antigua, where she will meet a branch from Trinidad, Oronoco, Guiana, and the Brazils. From Antigua she will proceed to Port Royal, in Jamaica and return by Carthagena, Nicholas Mole and Bermuda From Jamaica a separate branch will run to Carthagena, and the Company's Prospectus states that to the Magdalena, but will be prevented by the bar at the mouth of that river It may however, meet and communicate with the line of small draft steam boats now establishing on the Magdalena by the enterprising M. Elcers The depot of coals at Bermuda and Fayal are intended to be formed by steamers that go forth to found new cities and a depot might also be formed at New-York, provided the American Government would allow the debenture upon such coals as are expended by the steam vessels

Thus far the British Company propose to navigate the Atlantic seas by Steam; but to a resident in this hemisphere it will appear incomplete, inasmuch as no provision is made for Mexico. The company doubtless intend, and in fact it has been so stated, to extend a line in that direction as soon as the line to New-York is established; but independently of this, we have the satisfaction to state, that a company in this city is about to make propo sals to the British company to complete this part of their plan, simultaneously with the others. Steam-boats, in that case would regularly ply between this and the ports of Mexico, touching at Norfolk the Bahama Islands, and Havanna. This would complete the entire circuit of the Atlantic, connecting the islands with the continent, and these again with Europe through the medium of Valentia from which latter place steam vessels will proceed to Bristol, Liverpool, London, France, Holland, &c.

It is of course of the first importance, that the most eligible port be pitched on for the depar ture of the packets from Europe and that Valentia is the most eligible is certain for numberless reasons It is the most westerly harbour in Europe, and has two entrances, by one of which access may be gained in almost all winds; it is perfectly safe, has good anchorage and sufficient depth of water, and is moreover exempt from sport dues. In Cromwell's time it was well fortified, and was a naval station of some consequence It is well situated too in relation to the other great cities of the empire, and lies so exactly in the route from London to New-York, that the space of a circle drawn on the globe between those commercial marts of the old and the new world would intersect Valentia. By sailing from it all the dangerous navigation of the English and Irish Channels, all the storms, currents and banks and shoals of the Bay of Biscay, and, by adopting steam, all the delays of calms and unfavourable winds will be avoided The traveller will, moreover, on arriving at it from London, find himself advanced 12 degrees and a half of longitude on his journey. So accessible is Valentia from other ports of Great Britain, that, with one hundred miles land carriage from London to Bristol over the finest road in the world, York may be reached in thirty hours in a steam boat, where conveyances of all descriptions may be found to transport him to the place of embarkation through a country in the highest degree picturesque and romantic, heightened by the glory and beauty of the celebrated Lakes of Killarney Dublin may be reached from Liverpool in twelve hours by steam and Valentia in thirty hours more by land From Glas gow to Belfast by steam in thirteen hours passage, whence Valentia is only 220 miles distant But by the direct steam navigation, which it is a part of the company's plan to establish the voyage from Bristol to Valentia will be performed in four hours, from Liverpool in fifty hours from Glasgow in six forty hours and from London by Guernsey and Falmouth in eighty hours

It is not possible to foresee the great results that, in all human probability, await the completion of this great project; no comparison, however we may form to ourselves can be drawn from the example of the present lines of packets from this port to Liverpool Nothing certainly ever did so much for the advancement of New-York as those packets. Punctuality and dispatch are the main springs of all commercial business; and these are secured, in an eminent degree, by the regular sailing of vessels at stated periods. which is, indeed, one of the greatest improvements in modern commerce; for the honor of which is justly due to a few enterprising and well known individuals in this city and Liverpool Facility of intercourse increases intercourse; and one consequence of these packets will be, to increase the amount of travelling not only for the purposes of business, but for pleasure also between Europe and America. The ease, comfort, and expedition with which travellers will be able to proceed from the continent to England, from England to Valentia, and from Valentia to New-York, will induce thousands to undertake the trip, and the 4 or 500,000 pounds now estimated to be paid yearly for passages across the Atlantic, may ere long be doubled.

But the human mind, which never arrives at the end of its ambition, is not satisfied with effecting these mighty achievements over natural and physical obstacles; for no sooner have we even in imagination conquered the difficulties upon one ocean, than we are seeking to conquer those upon another. Accordingly, we find the most determined efforts now making to open the long talked of passage to the Pacific through the continents of North and South America. A company in this city, we learn, have surveyed the route by the gulf of Tehuantepec, laid down by the celebrated Humboldt, and found it most favourable, and are handing their whole energies to effect the final accomplishment of this great object. What new scenes will not this open to us, and what great events will it not lead to? Humboldt predicts the rise and civilization of Japan—and perhaps after a while China! Who among the modern Phœnicians can tell what new western world we look as we look into futurity; we know the time will come when we shall realize it, though we know not the day or the hour. We view the accomplishment of this event as a thing that must come as a matter of course, and we speculate upon the great and mighty changes it will bring with it until the mind is lost in the immensity of its own contemplations

Domestic.

On Wednesday evening last, Captain Leake, R. N. entertained the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie, and a select party of their friends on board His Majesty's yacht Herald The arrangements made for the occasion are spoken of as having been in good taste, and the evening was spent much to the satisfaction of the distinguished visitors. It is said that His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor will embark in the Herald on Monday next. Mrs. Mountain, the relict of our late venerable Bishop, Miss Mountain, and Capt. Mountain, also proceed to England in the yacht.—Quebec Mercury.

At the Criminal Term, several notorious offenders who have frequently been before the Court, were convicted of felonies for which the punishment of banishment from the Province, has, heretofore, been usually awarded. The Chief Justice, having knowledge that an Act of the Imperial Parliament has passed, which has established the Bermudas as a place of punishment for Convicts from the Colonies, where they will be kept to hard labour under a military commission, remanded these Convicts, 'till the first day of the Criminal Term for this District which will be held in March, next, before which time, the Act in question, together with His Majesty's Regulations and orders thereon, will be received when the Court will have the power of inflicting a more serious punishment on such offenders than, the merely nominal one of, banishment. This was notified to the prisoners on their being remanded to Gaol, but his honor at the same time intimated that the period which would elapse between the passing of the sentence, and their actually proceeding to the place of punishment, would be allowed to reckon in the term of transportation, to which they might respectively be sentenced

His honor congratulated the Grand Jury on the prospect thus afforded of relieving the Colonies from such dangerous characters.—ib.

[27th June 1825.]

WHEREAS by an Act passed in Thirty-first Year of the Reign of His late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain Parts of 31 G. 3. c. 31. an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America, and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province,' it was enacted, that it should and might be lawful for His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, to authorize the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, or the Person administering the Government therein, to make, from and out of the Lands of the Crown within such Province, such Allotment and Appropriation of Lands for the Support and Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy within the same, as might bear a due Proportion to the Amount of such Lands within the same, as had at any Time been granted by or under the Authority of His Majesty; and that whenever any Grant of Lands within either of the said Provinces should thereafter be made, by or under the Authority of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, there should at the same Time be made in respect of the same a proportionable Allotment and Appropriation of Lands for the above-mentioned Purpose within the Township or Parish to which the Lands so to be granted should appertain or be annexed, equal in Value to the Seventh Part of the Lands so granted: And whereas in pursuance of the said Act such proportionable Allotments and Appropriations of Lands as aforesaid have from Time to Time been reserved for the Purposes therein mentioned, which Lands are known by the Name of "The Clergy Reserves." And whereas the greater Part of the said Clergy Reserves in the said Province of Upper Canada have ever since continued, and are now waste and unproductive; and it is expedient that Means should be adopted for clearing and cultivating the said Lands, and for that Purpose His Majesty should be authorized to sell and dispose of certain Parts thereof to the Company to be established as hereinafter mentioned: And whereas certain other Lands in the said Province of Upper Canada have been reserved for the Use of His Majesty, and are known in the same by the name of "The Crown Reserves:" And whereas divers Persons have united together to establish a Company for purchasing, improving, settling, and disposing of Lands in Upper Canada, and especially for purchasing and settling the Whole of the before mentioned Lands known by the Name of "The Crown Reserves," and such Parts of the said Lands known by the Name of "The Clergy Reserves," as His Majesty may be so authorized to sell and convey to them, and for such other lawful Purposes as to His Majesty shall seem meet; and the said Persons have in order to carry such Purposes into effect, subscribed a Capital of One Million of Pounds Sterling, upon which all of the Sum of Ten Pounds per Centum has been paid by the several Subscribers; and they have humbly besought His Majesty to grant to them a Charter of Incorporation: Be it therefore enacted, and it is hereby enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That in case His Majesty shall within Three Years after the passing of this Act, be pleased, by Charter of Incorporation under the Great Seal of Great Britain and Ireland, to declare and grant that such and so many Persons as shall be named therein, and all and every such other Person or Persons as from Time to Time shall be duly admitted Members into and Corporate, by the Name of "The Canada Company," and to declare that the said Corporation so to be made and created shall be established for the Purposes herein-before mentioned, and for such other lawful Purposes as to His Ma-

IX. And whereas by an Act made in the Fourth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, An Act for preventing Frauds and Abuses in relation to the sending and receiving Letters and Packets free from the Duty of Postage, reciting that forasmuch as it had been usual for the Clerks in the Offices of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and also for certain Officers in the Office of His Majesty's Postmaster General, to frank printed Votes and Proceedings in Parliament, and printed Newspapers, to be sent by the Post, it was enacted, that it should be lawful for such Clerks and Officers as aforesaid, being thereunto licenced by His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State or His Majesty's Postmaster General respectively, to continue to frank such printed Votes, and Proceedings in Parliament, and printed Newspapers in such manner as they had therefore been accustomed to frank the same: And whereas the Emoluments arising from the Privilege of franking Newspapers to the Colonies, now enjoyed by certain Officers in the Office of His Majesty's Postmaster General, by virtue of the said in part recited Act of the Fourth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, and the Powers therein contained, will be reduced by the Operation and Effect of this Act:

Compensation to be made to the Officers in the Post Office having the Privilege of franking Papers to the Colonies, for Reduction of their Emoluments.

And whereas it is just and reasonable that a Compensation should be made to the said Officers as a Recompense for the Loss of such Privileges; be it therefore further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or any Three of them, by Warrant under their Hands, to authorize and direct the Postmaster General to make such Compensation to the said Officers as the said Commissioners shall think reasonable, which Compensation shall be charged upon and payable out of the Revenue of the General Post Office.

Editorial Commentary.

By a late arrival from Glasgow we have some recent news of importance, though founded on little more than rumour

It is said the Austrians have broke their neutrality with the Greeks, which has produced very warm expostulations on the part of the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Isles nay, it is even said that shots have been exchanged, in consequence of the outrage, between an English and Austrian vessel of war. The charge was, that the Austrians prevented the Greek Fleet from attacking that of the Turks, when the advantage was greatly in favour of the Greeks.

A messenger has been sent off to Greece with the cheering news of LORD COCHRANE'S instant and powerful co-operation. It was further rumoured in Paris that SIR SIDNEY SMITH would lend his aid in the same glorious cause; and, that the Seven Towers of Constantinople might be already considered as tottering to their fall. Such is the magical effect of a "Great name!"

Dublin, 7 Spain is said to be rapidly verging towards another bloody revolution A negotiation is on foot between England and France on that subject.

The second sale of Teas at Quebec has gone off more heavily than the former one and the prices generally inferior although a much less quantity was offered. Nevertheless, it is remarked that the Company's Agents are satisfied;—and that smuggling in respect of that article at least, has received its death blow.

THE ERIE CANAL through the State of New York will be finished next week, when great rejoicings are expected throughout the Union.

Our narrow limits, this week, prevent the notice of several matters of domestic interest which we have promised to bring before the public;—or the present, we are compelled to postpone the communications; but should our advertising patronage continue so numerous as to prevent their insertion in our next number, we will add a Supplement for the express purpose of discharging the obligations into which we have been entered.

SIR WALTER SCOTT

DEATH, Aug 29

This distinguished character arrived in Dublin on Saturday last, having visited the Lakes of Killarney, and upon his return visiting the rock of Cashel and the Abbey of Holy cross, &c. which truly surpassed his expectations; on the same day he dined with the chief Remembrancer, Mr Blake, at his house in Stephen's green.

On Sunday last, which was his birth day, he was met by a select party of friends at the same house, in Stephen's green.

On Wednesday morning, Sir Walter Scott, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Scott, and his son-in-law, Mr. Lockart, sailed from Howth in the Harlequin. Remains of Pompeii—Some discoveries have lately been within the sleeve of the left arm of General Bolivar's hea- made at Pompeii. A small gallery, opposite the baths, leads to a large apartment—on the left side of this gallery, the colour of which is yellow, there is a Genius, holding a branch or eight in that that friend of mankind has escaped assas- of laurel. On the right we find an exqui- site picture, which has consisted of three or more figures. It represents a Pharmacian sitting, and beside him a very majestic female, with features full of expression. Near this is another picture, composed of about twelve figures; one is sitting—another, a warrior, leads forward, by the hand, a veiled female. This picture is also extremely beautiful. A picture on another wall is curious. It consists of a group of three figures, one of which is a female, who appears being dressed for a new dress. In an apartment to the left of the above mentioned Venus, some interesting discoveries have been made. In one picture, which has been partly destroyed, there may be seen a beautiful Triton, and a boy with a tri- dent in his hand, sitting on a Dolphin Earthquake at Jerusalem.—A violent earthquake at Jerusa- lem has recently destroyed two monuments, equally the pride of Musselmen and Christians. The first, the mosque of the Caliph Omar; the other, the sepulchre built over Calvary.

Commerce of England—Among other interesting observa- tions, it is shewn that under the head of indigenous products by which the prosperity and industry of a people are to be judged. England is superior to France, Russia and America united; and a population of 22,000,000, by superior industry exceeds in acquiring more wealth every year than three powerful empires, peopled with 86,000,000 of population, viz.

The Plymouth Breakwater—This astonishing work, which has enabled man to say unto the waves of the sea, "Hoo far shall ye come and no farther," is situated about four miles from the town of Plymouth, and extends across the sea to the length of 520 yards. It is not, however, finished, and there- fore will be when completed, much longer. Many of the stones of which it is composed, weigh from six to ei ht tons; and the foundation of it was laid by means of a diving-bell at the bottom of the sea, at the depth of seven or eight fa- thoms. There is no mortar or cement used in it, but it is said that it will be altered so as to present a regular form of masonry to the waves. There are several breaches in it, this were made by the tremendous gale of wind, which blew into Plymouth last March. To prevent a repetition of an occur- rence like this, workmen are now employed to extend the two eastern side, as well as to repair the breaches and wea- ker parts where those breaches were effected. In the opinion of the old sailor inhabitants here, the town would have been washed into the sea in March last, if it had not been protec- ted by the Breakwater. It is said that Government are about to employ 2,000 convicts to the completion of this great na- tional undertaking.

The letters, &c brought by the Burlington mail this day ought to have been received on Thursday last, but the Cross- ing was left upon the road, a liberty not unfrequently taken, when its contents are weighty and the roads bad. It is really a miserable state of things, that a wealthy and com- mercial part of the British territories should be left to the mercy of a foreign stage coach driver, and be dependent upon his caprice for the regular receipt, or detention of their European correspondence especially when as speedy a com- munication might be had through New Brunswick with Hali- fax, a port accessible at all times of the year.

QUEBEC, Oct. 3

The Indians.—The four Lorette Chiefs arrived here on Tuesday evening, the 27th instant, in the Caledonia. They speak in the highest terms of England, of the kindness of the people and the generous treatment they met with from Government.

It is not probable that in any other Country individuals could be found to give themselves so much trouble for poor strangers, from motives of benevolence alone, as we have every reason to believe, some Gentlemen in London have taken in favor of these Indians.

Commerce.—On 1st of October, 695 vessels had entered, and 614 cleared, at the Port of Quebec.

From the Canadian Courant.

We understand that two Gentlemen of the Long robe have lately had a misunderstanding, which their nice sense of honor prompted them to adjust without having recourse to the legal weapons of their profession. They accordingly took a journey beyond the Territories of His Majesty, a few days ago, and (as we hear) exchanged compliments twice, without producing any other consequence than appeasing their ire, and after mutually congratulating each other on their fortu- nate escape from the effect of that instrument "which many a brave tall fellow has destroyed," they returned to their many good friends, with the full, free, perfect and unmjured use of all their precious limbs, to the gratification of themselves, and a numerous circle of acquaintance.

Sir James Carmichael Smyth and Sir Geo. Hosta have re- turned to England in the Prince Regent Packet. These gentlemen in the prosecution of their commission have travelled over the greater part of the Province—what report they have made relative to our fortifications we cannot say upon authority; but it is stated that they have been found quite insufficient for the military defence of the country, and must undergo a thorough repair.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

MEXICAN PIGGERIES.

A fine breed of that useful animal, the pig, is kept by several persons of wealth, as an article of trade, in the city of Mexico, and the care and attention paid to their cleanliness and comfort, so far exceed any thing I have seen elsewhere that a short account may be useful, by furnishing hints to our farmers, brewers, distillers, &c by whom large numbers of these valuable animals can be kept. The premises where the business is carried on are extensive; consisting, in general, of a good dwelling house, with a shop, slaughter-house and places for singing the pigs; large bowls for rendering the lard, and lard boiling, with wooden bins for containing the rendered fat, which is an article of great consumption in Spanish cookery, being used as a substitute for butter. There is also a soap manufactory, in which the foul fat is manufactured, and apartments where the blood is made into a kind of pudding, and sold to the poor. Behind all these are the sty's for the hogs, generally from 800 to 1000 in number which occupy a considerable range of well built-beds, about 20 feet deep, with the roads descending very low; and having the entrance through low arches, before which is an open space the whole length of the yard, and about 24 feet wide, in the centre of which is a kind of aqueduct, built of stone, and filled with clean water, supplied from a well at the end of the premises. The hogs can only put their noses into this water through holes in the wall, which prevents their dirtying it, as it passes through the whole division of the yard. This is the only liquid given them and their food is maize or Indian corn, slightly moistened, and scattered at stated hours on the ground, which in the yard as well as the place where they sleep is perfectly dry and clean.

They are attended by several Indians with every possible care, and have a cold bath on the premises, which they are even duly obliged to use, as cleanliness is considered essential to their acquiring that enormous load of fat from which the principal profit is derived. Their ease and comfort also appear to be studiously attended to; and the occupation of two Indian lads will cause a smile on the countenances of musical readers, when they are informed that they are employed, in the morning and night, in setting disputes, or little battles among them, that may arise among the happy inhabitants of this community, and in singing them to sleep. The boys are chosen for the strength of their lungs, and their taste and judgment in delighting the ears and lulling the senses of this amiable harmonic society; and success each of them is claiming during the day, to the great delight and edification of the boys, who seem fully to appreciate the merits of the performers. The proprietor of one of those establishments showed me round his premises, and explained to us the use of the various apartments. He assured me that the premises cost him many thousand dollars, and that his sales amounted to about two thousand dollars per week; indeed, his display of diamonds, and his three splendid carriages with fine horses, standing in the yard, bespoke him a man of some opulence and consequence. His stock are bred at a farm belonging to him at Ocumbo, and driven to Mexico, to be fattened, when eight months old.—Bullock's Mexico.

No. 70, CORNHILL, LONDON.

THE Business of the Asylum Company is confined exclusively to insuring the lives of Officers of the Army and Navy (including risks of battles and sea) and of persons going to or residing beyond the limits of Europe, or predisposed hereditary, or other constitutional maladies—or delicate health—of pecuniary of form whether natural or accidental—labouring under any kind of chronic disorders, unaccompanied with actual danger, or engaged in occupations which would subject them to rejection or an uncertain rate of premium at other Offices.

The Company is supported by a Capital of £240,000 in 2,000 shares of £120 each of which 25 per cent. has been advanced, and the Shareholders have entered into sufficient securities for pay m t of the remainder. This Capital is fully sufficien for the security of the assured

The importance of LIFE ASSURANCE to those who in professional and mercantile pursuits, derive limited or fluctuating incomes from personal exertions, or who are in the possession of places, the emoluments of which die with the holder, has long been acknowledged both in Europe and the United States of America. In the full conviction, that the inhabitants of the Canadas would not be slow, in perceiving the advantages to be derived from the introduction of such an Institution amongst them, the under-signed communicated to the Directors of the ASYLUM COMPANY, such information as a long residence in various parts of both Provinces has enabled him to collect, and the Board with the view of affording additional facilities, to those who may be desirous of availing themselves of the benefits of Life Assurance, have in consequence, appointed him their Agent, for the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. He will accordingly be prepared to receive proposals, and negotiate Policies upon Lives, as soon as he is in possession of the scale of premiums (which he daily expects) this has been calculated with great care and attention, to adapt it to the peculiar localities of the Canadas, and will, on comparison, be found considerably lower for young and middle aged risks than that of any other Office

A Physician or consulting Surgeon of eminence will be appointed in the principal Towns in either Province, before, whom persons in the country, wishing to effect Insurances, may appear, on sending their proposals by letter to the Company's Agent at Quebec

The names of the Medical Referees and all other necessary information will be given in a future advertisement.

Editorial Commentary.

It is now said that our Imperial Government will not permit the fitting out, and sailing of Lord Cochranes expedition against the Turks from British ports — As such a proceedure is undoubtedly an act of open hostility against a friendly power, such an interference might have been looked for.

Further accounts of insurrectionary movements in Spain continue to be received.

A Grand ship Canal from London to Portsmouth has been decided upon, the cost £4,000,000!

The general complexion of accounts from Greece is, we lament to say, unfavourable to the cause of freedom.

As there are but few public amusements in this country, it has occured to a few Gentlemen from the south of England to introduce one of a novel description in this part of the world, which is a Pigeon Match; to be held at such time, and place, as may be hereafter determined on; and we are authorized, on the part of three English Gentlemen, to challenge three Canadian Gentlemen, to shoot at Twenty one Pigeons aside; the wager, a dinner and wine for their friends: the Pigeon Box to be placed at the usual distance observed in the Isle of Wight,—say 30 yards, and the bounds 100 yards. Any gentleman desirous of being a party will have the goodness to signify the same, and leave his address, with Mr. R. Watson, York

Although the present fall continues fine there is every natural symptom of an early and a severe winter The number of Bears, in all parts of the Province, descending from the north, is almost unprecedented:—Wild Geese have been on their return for several weeks; and, within these ten days, one of those rare and beautiful inhabitants of the arctic regions—the Snowy Owl (Strix Nyctea of LINNÆUS) was shot on the great marsh of the Don, near this town, by Mr MIDFORD; in its pouch an entire specimen, with the exception of its head, of the Pied-Billed Grebe, was discovered!

We are requested by Mr MIDFORD to state, that having received offers of a most advantageous nature, which he conceives it would be imprudent in him to decline, in the absence of an equal encouragement in this country, he is about to leave York, and therefore takes the liberty of calling upon those Gentlemen, his Pupils, to whom he has given instruction in the Broad Sword Exercise, and Military Tactics to favour him with the amount of their arrears of subscription, as speedily as may be convenient,—since his stay must now be short; and, as he has devoted several additional weeks of his time beyond the period stipulated for,—he trusts that neither his demand, nor this hint, will be deemed unreasonable. For our own parts, we cannot avoid lamenting that a man of his talents, and peculiar acquirements, should have failed in meeting with sufficient encouragement in this infant, though promising, and rapidly improving Colony

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

His Majesty sets the example of earlier dining than has been usual of late in the circles of the fashionable great and little. He dines about four, and takes amusement out of doors after dinner.

EDINBURGH August 20.

His Highness Prince William of Brunswick, left town on Thursday for Stirling, from whence he continues his tour to Inverness. He is a young man, about eighteen years of age His Serene Highness the Duke of Brunswick is expected to arrive in Edinburgh about the time his brother returns from the north. These illustrious youths are the sons of the late Duke of Brunswick, who fell so honourably on the field of Waterloo. Prince Schwartzenberg is also expected here.

DIED.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF DONOUGHMORE.—On the 22d August, at the house of his brother, Lord Hutchinson, Manchester square, London, the Earl of Donoughmore, a Peer of Great Britain, one of the original Representative Peers of Ireland, a Privy Councillor, Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, General in the Army, Governor of the county of Tipperary, &c. Never having been married, his titles and estates devolve upon his next brother, Lord Hutchinson, K. G C. B. &c.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF MAR.—It is with regret that we announce the death of John Francis Earl of Mar, who was so lately restored to the peerage of his ancestors This venerable Nobleman died suddenly at his house in Shandwick Place, Edinburgh, on Saturday evening, August, 20. in the eighty fifth year of his age. He is succeeded by his son John Thomas, Lord, Erskine and Garioch, now Earl of Mar.

Count Bulow, Prussian minister of state, died suddenly in an apoplectic fit on the 10th of August, at the baths of Landeck, in Silesia. — He was one of the most distinguished statesmen of our times.

THE SPEAKER —The Speaker of the House of Commons ought to be very cautious, and pay an exact attention to the rule laid down on the 27th of April, 1604—that in matters of doubt he is "to explain" but not to "warp." In matters of doubt, or if he is referred to, to inform the House in a point of order or practice, it is his duty to state every thing he knows upon the subject, from the Journals, or the History of Parliament; but he ought not to argue, or draw conclusions from this information He has no voice but to utter the sense of the House when declared.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE AND CUBA.

"It is said that accounts have been received at the city of Washington, that the French squadron in the West Indies, were about to land its troops at the Havana, and take possession of the Island of Cuba. Whether this movement was or was not, by virtue of a treaty of cession from Spain we have not heard; but presume, if possession shall be taken by France, that it will be under the authority of a Spanish Treaty. It is said that the information excited some sensation at Washington, where it was rumoured, that the Franklin and Ohio, seventy fours, would immediately be manned and equipped and sent on the West India station, to protect American commerce and property. We are (says the editor of the Democratic Press, from which paper we copy the rumours) not to be understood to vouch for the truth of any part of this statement, but we would wish distinctly to be understood, to be truly detailing what we heard from a gentleman who may have been misinformed, but who is incapable of misrepresentation."

NEW GRANADA.

We now proceed to describe the Vice-royalty of New Granada, a kingdom of not less extent than Germany, Poland, Hungary and Bohemia taken altogether.

The Vice-royalty or kingdom of Granada is situated at the immediate back of the Caraccas but circles round its back country so as to have a considerable length of coast on the shore of the West Indian sea. It would only be to enumerate a long line of barbarous names, if we were here to set down the Indian or Spanish designations of the several provinces which compose this kingdom. Suffice it, therefore, to say that the four principal of these provinces are Quito, Carthagena, Darien and Panama; and that the principal cities are Santa Fé, Carthagena, Porto Bello, and Panama. From the name of its capital, Sante Fé, this province is indeed more frequently called the state of Santa Fé than New Granada.

The face of the country, or what we should rather term the landscape and scenery, is still more picturesque than any other part of South America — The country is crossed in its whole length by the Andes that immense chain of mountains, in which Mr Campbell, in his "Pleasures of Hope," has enthroned his "genius of storms" As the summits of these mountains excel in the sublime of scenery, and in prospects of incredible beauty and magnificence, so the valleys are no less distinguished for landscape and images of the most delightful character "It is impossible," says Humboldt, "not to relish and value our existence in scenes like those of the plains and valleys of the Andes. They excite the sensations of youth and boyhood, and make the wisest and gravest of us forget the lapse of years. I felt astonishingly happy whilst in these abodes of delightful temperature and most beautiful scenery"

The capital of the whole country, as above said, is Santa Fé, situated in one of those beautiful plains which extend at the foot of the Andes. It is a very large city, consisting in chief part of noble white houses, interspersed with trees and gardens; a most brilliant sky over head, and with a most delightful back ground of groves, rivers and mountains It has four great squares resembling those in our provincial towns, and several wide and handsome streets, (with gay and freshly painted houses) which open into them Two small rivers, reminding the classic traveller of the Lilæus and Cephissus of Grecian fame, take their serpentine course through the plain; and passing through the town, give gaiety, coolness and freshness to all around The town is immensely rich the country being fertile, and the inhabitants raising every thing for themselves. It has great plenty of gold and silver, and abundance of riches in every house.

The produce of New Granada comprehends all the productions of Europe, and all the peculiar produce of the West Indies Its staples are sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, coffee and cocoa Its other produce is mahogany, dye wood and drugs, the principal of which is the famous Jesuits' bark.—inches long, by 2 feet 10 inches in breadth. This took place at the west end of the green bank, in long. 56 W and lat. 46 N.

CURIOSITY.—Capt. Davis who arrived at New York one day this week, from the interior of Africa brought with him a live animal called the Cheewee, probably the first ever seen in this country. It is amphibious, and in shape much resembles our Rabbit, is about four feet long, and weighs about forty pounds.

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE.—A few days ago, at Swalwell, a man set his bull dog upon an ass, when the ass immediately took the dog up in his mouth and dragged him to the river Derwent, into which he put him over his head, and lying down upon him, kept him down there till he was drowned! [Let it no longer be said "as stupid as an ass!"]

From the Charleston Courier.

"L'Histoire des Chiens Celebres." from which the Courier has made frequent translations, which have been generally republished, is not, as its title would seem to imply, confined to the canine species, but contains, in addition, numerous anecdotes relating to other animals, and the tendency of them all, is to amuse and ameliorate mankind. The following is an excellent satire upon the pleasures of the appetite.

PIG'S EARS.—The Sage, who enlightens the world, and devotes his days and nights to the improvement of mankind, dies frequently of want, in an obscure garret—while vile buffoons, who corrupt manners, and the dangerous caterers for the glutton, are enriched, carressed and honoured.—Such was the cook of Mare Antony, who became Governor of a city, for having roasted a young wild boar, to suit the taste of that intemperate General Such was he, who prepared for Charles the 5th, the singular repast we are about to mention.

This famous monarch, after the fatigues of the chase, near Valladolid, went to dine with a neighbouring Lord. Having been apprised of the intended courtesy of his sovereign, the host studied to have prepared for him, a repast equally splendid and singular. When the Prince had dined, he praised very much the meats, and avowed frankly, that the greatest part of them were perfectly new to him. The Nobleman who entertained the Spanish king, replied that the animals that had supplied the feast, were not only not very rare, but that they were all of them still alive. He then took the Monarch into a neighbouring apartment, and pointed out to him in a large pasture, the rare birds which he had been eating. This was a troop of pigs without ears, and without tails—and these tails and ears with the aid of potatoes, reduced to a flour had been dressed with so much art, that they resembled fowls, venison, turbot, salmon, carp, eels, and almost every thing.

The Emperor relished particular the tails of the pigs, without ears, which he took to be the pike and eel of Tartary—indeed, he was so satisfied with this strange repast, that he complimented the cook in person, upon his profound skill in the art of sauces and fricacees. The king did not confine his favor to verbal compliments, he presented the cook with a tract of land, and thus his dish of pigs ears and tails, enabled him to live the rest of his life in secure abundance, much happier than the grandee of Spain, whose kitchen fire he had kindled with such shining success.

LINES WRITEN AT THE GRAVE OF A FRIEND, KILLED IN A DUEL.

Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori. Hon.

Oh, had he died in the field of the brave,
With the halo of glory encircling his brow!
Though then we would weep o'er his premature grave,
Yet not tears of such anguish as fall for him now.

For the sigh that is breathed o'er the warrior's bier,
Though the offspring of feeling is tinctured with pride,
And the eye of affection, while near with a tear,
Glows bright at the thought that for country he died.

To the spot where the relics of valour recline,
With bosoms of ardour, what numbers repair!
And as o'er his loss they in sorrow repine,
Catch the spirit that burn'd in the dust that lies there

But, alas! to thy grave we in secret must go,
When the shadows of night have envelop'd the scene;
And while to thy memory tears ceaselessly flow,
We are doom'd to lament that thou ever hast been.

Poor victim of Honour! (how false is the name!)
Thy nature was noble, thy heart was sincere,
But some villain, alas! dazed superior thy fair fame,
And friendship now bitterly mourns o'er thee here!

Oh, hadst thou died in the field of the brave,
With the halo of glory encircling thy brow,
Though then we would weep o'er thy premature grave,
Yet not tears of such anguish as fall for thee now!

BALLAD,- BY HENRY NEALE.

"Old man, old man, thy locks are gray,
And the winter winds blow cold;
Why wander abroad on thy weary way,
And leave thy home's warm fold?"

"The winter winds blow cold, 'tis true,
And I am old to roam;
But I may wander the wide world through
Ere I shall find my home."

IMPROMPTU.

The following lines on the recent marriage of an eminent King's Counsel, with a beautiful and accomplished young Lady, were on Tuesday posted up in the Lord Chancellor's Court:—

To Hymen's Court
Did Hd resort,
Vice quit, and poor Ld En;
Who then, I pray,
Will dare to say
In this he has not well done?

Some who sit here,
Will blame, I fear,
The act, and much deride;
But it in this
Hd does amiss,
An issue will decide.

QUEBEC, Oct. 10.

The four Canadian Chiefs accompanied by some other of their nation, had an audience to-day of His Lordship the Governor-in-Chief, at the Castle of St. Lewis They wore the dresses in which they were lately presented to his Majesty, and had on the gold medal they received from his hands, and also that which they received from the Lord Mayor of London. They attracted a considerable crowd in passing through the streets.—Gazette.

LOSS OF THE GREAT SHIP.

The reports of the loss of the Baron of Renfrew gain ground; though we are inclined to hope that they are premature, we confess that there is much reason to fear this unwieldy bark has been unable to sustain the buffeting of the Atlantic waves.

REPORTED LOSS OF THE BARON OF RENFREW.

The following is the substance of information communicated to us by a passenger in the Sir Francis Burton arrived on Tuesday from Halifax. We sincerely hope that it will prove unfounded. The Sir F. B. had put into Gaspé:—

GASPE, 1st Oct. 1825.

"A Brig bound to Quebec put in here in distress, 25th instant, the Captain of which reports that he saw the large timber Ship the Baron of Renfrew, near the Grand Bank, broken up and floating in several huge detached pieces, and part of the crew on each— would have attempted to render assistance, but the danger of doing so made it impossible, owing to the violence of the weather and the immense pieces of wreck floating in every direction."

The Baron of Renfrew was seen by the Jasper arrived at Boston on the 16th September. Of the vessels arrived at this port, only two crossed the banks after the 22d and those report that they saw "nothing of the Baron."

THE LATE INTENDED EXECUTION.—The last Mercury writes as follows on the respite of Sherwood and Emerson, who were to be executed at Montreal on Friday last:

"There has been some misapprehension in this affair. The Execution of one of these criminals Obadiah Sherwood, which was to have taken place, on the 7th inst. as above stated, was not respited, or suspended by any order from the Executive Government, but in consequence of an erroneous supposition entertained at Montreal, that there was a mistake in having this prisoner for execution. His life has thus been unintentionally saved, but we have been given to understand that there is no intention of allowing him to go at large, to return to his former courses. On the contrary, it is expected that, he will be sent to Bermuda with other convicts, pursuant to the arrangement which we lately noticed."

CANADA CORN BILL.—We have the sincere satisfaction in being able to state on the best authority, that it was entirely in consequence of the influence and personal indefatigability of His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie, that this measure was finally sanctioned in the House of Lords. His Lordship not only attended the House at every reading of the Bill, for the purpose of supporting it, but waited personally on all the members whom he did not know to be favourably disposed towards the measure, with the view of convincing them of its utility both as a national and provincial measure; and we have good grounds for adding, that notwithstanding the great prejudices which exist among the landed interest against any interference with the Corn Laws, his Lordship at last completely succeeded in gaining over a majority of the House in favour of his own sentiments on a point of such invaluable importance to this country.—Mont. Herald.

ONTARIO HOUSE BURNT.—The Niagara Gleaner states that the "Ontario House," near the Falls, the property of Mr John Brown, was consumed by fire on the night of the 6th inst. together with all the furniture it contained. Mr. Brown's loss is probably not less than £1,500.

Canada Company shares on the 26th August were at £24 to £25 premium, per share of £100; £10 paid in. The General Steam Navigation Company at £2 premium per share of £100; £5 paid in.—N. Y. Com. Ad.

FROM THE QUEBEC MERCURY.

FOG.—After an interval of about thirty hours, the dry and dense fog which we alluded to in our last, has this day again revisited us. It was formerly supposed that it proceeded from the burning of some of the neighbouring woods; and from its having been since ascertained that several parts of the country is on fire, it is now evident that it must have arisen from that cause It is singular, however, that it pervades all Canada from York to Quebec; and if it be really the effect of fire, the fire must not only be very great, but of a most alarming nature. We trust, however, that no serious consequence will ensue.

Vol. IV. THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27th, 1825. No. 43.

But its eminent value above all the other provinces of South America is in its mines, many of which mines are of gold and silver, and still more of lead, copper and mercury, platina, salt and coals. To these we must add a vast abundance of European wheat, and of all the fruits and vegetables which are to be found in the other provinces of South America.

The climate exceeds every part of South America, except that of Chili. In the plain of Santa Fé the inhabitants enjoy perpetual spring, and raise two harvests in the year. For many miles around this beautiful city, the fields are covered with crops of wheat, and are delightfully wooded with oaks and elms. It may easily be imagined how charmingly picturesque is such scenery, under such a climate, in a period of harvest, when the full-orbed tropical moon rises over the heads of the reapers, and sheds its gay and gentle beams over the richness and variety of nature. It should be added here, that one effect of this climate, and of the fertility of the soil is—that poverty is unknown in the country.

The exports of New Granada may be rated at two millions and a half English money, and consist chiefly of cotton, indigo, mahogany and dye woods. The principal channel of trade, when Carthagena and Porto Bello were not open, was the river Chagre, which passes a good way into the country.

Although its whole course does not exceed sixty miles, it is one of the most romantic rivers on the American continent, being edged on both sides by most noble forest trees. In sailing or rowing up this river, the Englishman cannot but be delighted by the numerous quantity of peacocks and other birds of gay colours, which run between the trees, or scream from the branches.

Panama, Carthagena and Porto Bello, are all of them large towns or rather cities, and all of them of the same character; namely, white house sparkling beneath a southern sun; and if not immediately seated in the midst of fine scenery, at least having in prospect most magnificent back grounds.

Porto Bello is particularly picturesque. Its immediate vicinity is a country of farms and farm-houses, whilst at a short distance behind it is a chain of hills and mountains, covered with thick and impenetrable forest, and filled with tigers, which, to the terror of travellers newly arrived in Porto Bello, keep up a continual roaring during the night. The inhabitants live in the Moorish style, having court yards at the back of their houses, with piazzas round them; and in the midst of the yard, a fountain composed of Dutch tiles, or marble slabs. These fountains are fed by the small streams which run from the hills. The inhabitants use them for bathing, dancing, &c.

But no part of America exceeds the city of Carthagena, both in the fertility of the country and in its wild and picturesque scenery. The plains around this city produce not only sugar, cotton and indigo in great abundance, but melons, grapes, oranges, dates and raisins of the finest quality.—The Englishman would be much pleased with the papaw fruit, which resembles a leamon, and is extremely agreeable to the taste. Another fruit, the guanabana, is like a melon in appearance and taste, but grows on a rich and beautiful tree, so as to look very singular to a foreigner. The Carthagenians have two other trees still more curious and valuable; one of them, the milk-tree, which upon being pierced with any sharp small instrument, like a pen-knife, will produce in about ten minutes a quart bowl of milk, very little inferior to the milk of a cow. The other is the soap-tree, which yields a juice answering all the purposes of soap. We have only limits to add that the city of Carthagena does not fall short in beauty of any other of the South American towns, containing about thirty thousand inhabitants, and exporting annually in cotton, sugar, indigo, wood and drugs, to the amount of two hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling.

VILLAGE OF ROCHESTER.—The census of our village, as taken by Messrs Burr and Stilson, under the act of the legislature, produces the following result:—

Making an increase of more than ONE THOUSAND since February last! The population and business of the place is increasing with astonishing rapidity. Our prospects were never more flattering. A few months more and the CITY OF ROCHESTER will claim her rank among the other cities of the state.—Telegraph.

PHILADELPHIA.—We learn from a communication in a Philadelphia paper, that STEPHEN GIRARD, Esq. has at length determined to improve a square of ground belonging to him on Chesnut and Market streets, between Eleventh & Twelfth streets. He is said to have already made many of the contracts. The sum appropriated is seven hundred thousand dollars, which will enable him to erect the most extensive, elegant and uniform range of dwellings in the United States.

Historical Anecdote.

FEMALE INTREPIDITY.

LUCRETIA GRENVILLE was betrothed to Francis Duke of Buckingham, at the time he fell in battle by the hand of Cromwell himself, and upon receiving intelligence of the melancholy event, she swore to revenge his death on the murderer. During the three succeeding years she exercised herself with pistols in firing at a portrait of Cromwell, which she had selected as a mark, that she might not be awed by the sight of the original; and, as soon as she found herself perfect, she sought an opportunity of gratifying her revenge. But Cromwell seldom appeared in public, and when he did, it was with such precaution, that few could approach his person.

An occasion at length occurred: the city of London resolved to give a magnificent banquet in honour of the Protector, who, either from vanity, or with a political view, determined to make his entrance into London in all the splendour of royalty. Upon this being made public, the curiosity of all ranks was excited; and Lucretia Grenville resolved not to neglect so favourable an opportunity. Fortune herself seemed to second her purpose; for it so happened, that the procession was appointed to proceed through the very street in which she resided, and a balcony before the first story of her house yielded her full scope for putting her long premeditated design into effect.

On the appointed day she seated herself, with several other female companions, in the balcony, having on this occasion, for the first time since her lover's death, cast off her mourning, and attired herself in the most sumptuous apparel. It was not without the greatest exertions that she concealed the violent emotion under which she laboured: and when the increasing pressure of the crowd indicated the approach of Cromwell, it became so strong, that she nearly fainted, but, however, recovered just as the usurper arrived within a few paces of the balcony.

Hastily drawing the pistol from under her garment, she fearlessly took her aim, and fired; but a sudden start, which the lady who sat next to her made, on beholding the weapon, gave it a different direction from that which was intended, and the ball striking the horse rode by Henry the Protector's son, it was laid dead at his feet. The circumstance immediately arrested the progress of the cavalcade, and Cromwell, at the same time that he cast a fierce look at the balcony, beheld a singular spectacle. Above twenty females were on their knees, imploring his mercy, with uplifted hands, whilst one only stood undaunted in the midst of them, and looking down contemptuously on the usurper, exclaimed, "Tyrant, it was I who dealt the blow; nor should I rest satisfied with killing a horse instead of a tiger, where I not convinced that ere another twelvemonth has elapsed, Heaven will grant another that success which it has denied to me."

The multitude, actuated more by fear than love, were preparing to level the house to the ground, when Cromwell cried aloud, with the most artful sang froid. "Desist, my friends! alas! poor woman, she knows not what she does," and pursued his course but afterwards caused Lucretia to be arrested, and confined in a mad house.

HALIBUT AND CODFISH.—Extract from the journal of a Gentleman, a passenger in the Cherub, a vessel lately arrived at Quebec:—

Sept. 14.—Rather a singular occurrence took place while fishing on the banks during a calm.—While the Captain was fishing in the boat, some of the passengers threw out the line and having caught a large cod, they were hawling it in, but found the operations impeded by some enormous weight. As the cod approached the surface, we found it pursued and occasionally grasped by a large Halibut which, thinking it had got a prize, was determined to stick to it. Upon this we hailed the Captain, who was now approaching along side, and who upon being furnished with a sharp hook from on board, most dexterously succeeded, with the assistance of his men, in securing the Halibut, notwithstanding its great weight, and which we found to be 5 feet 10

WHEREAS an Act was passed in the present Session of Parliament, intituled An Act to repeal the several Laws relating to the Customs, in which it is declared, that 6 G. 4. c. 105. the Laws of the Customs have become intricate by reason of the great Number of Acts relating thereto which have been passed through a long Series of Years; and that it is therefore highly expedient for the Interest of Commerce and the Ends of Justice, and also for affording Convenience and Facility to all Persons who may be subject to the Operation of those Laws, or who may be authorized to act in the Execution thereof that all the Statutes now in force relating to the Customs should be repealed, and that the Purposes for which they have from Time to Time been made should be secured by new Enactments, exhibiting more perspicuously and compendiously the various Provisions contained in them: And whereas the Laws relating to the Encouragement of British Navigation will thereby be repealed, and it is expedient to make Provisions in lieu thereof, for the due Encouragement of British Shipping and British Seamen, after such Repeal shall have Effect; be it therefore enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That from and after the Commencement of Act. The importance of LIFE ASSURANCE to those who in professional and mercantile pursuits, derive limited or fluctuating incomes from personal exertions, or who are in the possession of places, the emoluments of which die with the holder, has long been acknowledged both in Europe and the United States of America. In the full conviction, that the inhabitants of the Canadas would not be slow, in perceiving the advantages to be derived from the introduction of such an Institution amongst them, the undersigned communicated to the Directors of the ASYLUM COMPANY, such information as a long residence in various parts of both Provinces has enabled him to collect, and the Board with the view of affording additional facilities, to those who may be desirous of availing themselves of the benefits of Life Assurance, have in consequence, appointed him their Agent, for the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. He will accordingly be prepared to receive proposals, and negotiate Policies upon Lives, as soon as he is in possession of the scale of premiums (which he daily expects,) this has been calculated with great care and attention, to adapt it to the peculiar localities of the Canadas, and will, on comparison, be found considerably lower for young and middle aged risks than that of any other Office

Editorial Commentary.

It is truly gratifying to learn by the last Quebec papers that the report of the loss of the large Ship, the Baron of Renfrew was unfounded. She was seen both on the 21st and 23d of September far beyond the Banks, in lat 45. 50. longitude 38 1–2 west.—all well.

One of the divisions of the 79th, or Cameron's Highlanders, a regiment wearing the Kilt, has arrived at Quebec in 50 days from Cork. Two other divisions in H M Ship Romney, and transport Maria, were daily expected.

We regret that the address from the inhabitants of Montreal to His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie, Governor in Chief,—with his reply, came too late for publication this week; but we shall endeavour to give both in our next.

In Spain the Infant Don Carlos has been placed under arrest, and the whole family of Bessiéres, including the females, have shared the same fate.

The Duke of Wellington has returned from the Continent.

The papers of the northern States of the Union are filled with accounts of the Celebration in honor of the final completion of the Erie Canal—which appears to have been conducted on a scale of unusual magnificence for that country

It must prove satisfactory to our readers to be informed, that, by the official returns of our population for 1825, so far as they have been received. Upper Canada has gained an increase of nearly Ten Thousand, over the returns of 1824:—independent of the amount of this years emigration, and without including a great number of Townships from which no returns have been made. It is probable the actual increase, over the numbers of last year, is about Twenty Thousand!

We beg to assure our readers that we daily expect the arrival of our winters supply of large paper—when we trust they will find our sheet greatly improved, as well as enlarged.

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Steam Packets —No less than forty five companies have been formed in London to establish Steam Packets in every quarter of the Globe.

Exportation of Gold and Silver.—It has been estimated that the quantities of silver and gold, in coin and bars, exported from England, in the three months between the 5th of April and 5th of July, 1825, amounted to £2,834,030, or nearly £1,000,000, per month.

The Great Tunnel —The first shaft of the Tunnel under the Thames had been sunk to its intended depth, viz. 80 feet–30 feet below the bed of the river, and the work was progressing with every prospect of success.

Irish Provision Trade.—The Irish provision contract for the year will exceed 7,000 cows and 20,000 hogs.

Powerful Steam Engine —There is now in use, at a mine in Cornwall, a steam engine of 250 horse power, with 30 pounds of coal a minute—it raises 80,000 pounds a hundred feet high per minute.

Stamp Office Returns —It appears from the Stamp Office Returns, that the duty paid last year by 46 Insurance Companies, amounted to £659,377 The duty being 3s. for every £100 insured the total property insured, it would seem, in round numbers, amounted to about £439,585,000.

Cleopatra's Needle.—It is stated, that the British government have contracted with Mr. Maberley for £9,000 to transport to England that celebrated monument of antiquity, Cleopatra's Needle, and that it is to be placed at Charing Cross, on the spot now occupied by the equestrian statute of King Charles I.

Execution of the Empecinado —The Madrid Gazette announces the tragical end of this patriot The following account of his last moments is furnished by an inhabitant of Rueda, where the unfortunate Gen. was hanged In his will the Empecinado bequeathed four pieces of cloth, which belonged to him, and were in the possession of a friend, for the use of the royalist volunteers of Rueda, from whom he had suffered such horrible treatment. When he came out of the prison to undergo his punishment, he became violent with rage on finding that it was intended to put him upon an ass. He refused and went to the place of execution on foot with great firmness When he had reached the foot of the gallows, he suddenly made so great an effort that he burst the cords by which his arms were confined. He then attempted to rush through the line of soldiers who surrounded him, and no doubt he would have escaped if he had been armed; but as it was, he was attacked and beaten down with blows. A rope was then passed round his neck, and the hangman, who was upon the gallows, leaped upon him, and with the assistance of some bystanders put him to death. As this wretch was returning to Valladolid, after the execution, he was welcomed in several villages with the ringing of bells. —Courrier Francais.

Suppression of French Journals —We find it mentioned in our English papers, that the Courier Francais and the Constitutionnel have been suppressed, by the government, the former for three months and the latter for one, on a charge of having published articles favourable to Protestantism. It is stated, however, that the real cause of this severe measure is, that the papers in question have commented too plainly on the abuses of the clerical office by the Catholic priesthood —*N Y D. SPAIN.

The famous Bessieres, formerly a partisan of the King and a great enemy to the Constitutionalists, has recently turned against the Royalists. He, with seven of his followers, were taken prisoners on the 23d of August, and were shot three days after. The revolt of this man had produced a great sensation in every part of the country. Col. Yeara late aid-de-camp of Gen. Mina, has organized a guerilla cavalry in Navarre. The Government was much agitated, and it is evident that Spain is on the eve of a crisis.

Royal Decree, ordering the Freemasons taken in Flagraute, to be punished within the 3d day, conformably to the laws.

A lodge of Freemasons having been seized in the city of Grenada, through the activity and zeal of the police in the act of holding their dark meeting clothed in their ridiculous garments, and surrounded by the instruments and emblems used, by this reprobate sect, the enemy of the altar and the throne; and it being proper to punish in an exemplary manner, and in conformity to the laws and my Royal decree, so shameless an audacity on the part of the criminals, which has scandalized my faithful and religious subjects, I have thought fit to decree as follows:—

Art. 1st. All the persons seized in the flagrant act aforesaid, in the Freemasons' Lodge of Grenada shall, within the peremptory term of three days from the Morea, dated the 5th. The latter, after announcing the retreat of Ibrahim Pacha from Napoli di Romania back upon Tripolitza, and his precarious situation there, says:—

"It is affirmed that Demetrius Ypsilanti has already attacked him there more than once with success, and that he has even taken possession of the remains of Tripolitza: but what must make his situation still worse is the plague at Coron and Modon, which is said to rage in a dreadful manner, and to have even spread among the troops brought by Hussien Bey. Missolonghi has hitherto resisted the attacks of the Turks, who have been repulsed with considerable loss in three attacks. On the 28th July, Mauzis, it is said, appeared with 26 vessels before Missolonghi and obliged the Captain Pacha to raise the blockade by sea. One part of the Ottoman squadron is reported to have returned to Patras, the other to the Gulf of Corinth."

The following is the letter of the 10th of August, from Corfu, spoken of above.—

"Three days ago the Seraskier attempted a fourth attack on Missolonghi with 6,000 men divided into three corps. These troops succeeded in making themselves masters of several parts of the fortifications, and kept their ground for some time; but they were at length driven out with considerable loss, which is stated at 3,000 men killed, wounded and prisoners. [Another account says the Turkish force was 30.000, that they lost 9,000 men, and that the Greek squadron destroyed and took some of the Turkish ships, but this is evidently an exaggeration]

"The Greek fleet, consisting of 40 armed vessels and 12 fire ships, has re appeared near Patras —The Captian Pacha has retreated under the protection of the forts, after having exchanged with it a few shots

"The following is an extract of the news that have been in circulation for a few days:—On the 5th, the Captain of a vessel from Zante says, that soon after his departure, on the 1st of this month, he saw, at a distance, the Greek and Turkish fleets engaged, and that soon after he discovered a Greek brig, which he presumed to be a fire-ship, fighting in the midst of six Turkish frigates. The Captain, continuing his voyage, lost sight of the two fleets, but heard for a long time a heavy cannonade.

"Sachturis, with 28 ships, and 10 fire-ships, under Canaris, is gone to attack, in the port of Alexandria, the Egyptian fleet preparing there for another expedition."

This is important intelligence; and if the last paragraph of the letter be true, it is a bold and politic stroke of the Greek Admiral. This diversion, moreover, would account for the alledged inactivity of the Greek marine of late. The letter of the 13th spoken of above, follows, and speaks of a another partial success over the Turkish fleet at Missolonghi.

"On the 11th inst. I wrote to you by the Courier and I told you of the assaults made by Rumeli Valessy at Missolonghi, in which he lost nearly the half of his army, and retired in great confusion. Our fleet, which arrived at Missolonghi, triumphed over that of the enemy With one fire ship the Greeks succeeded in burning two large vessels, and took one brig, and the rest were put to flight, and pursued by our ships. A part of the Turkish fleet took refuge at Avlona, where they are blocked up by a division of the Greek squadron Yesterday there arrived here several small vessels from Calamo and Prevesa from which we learned that the Greek troops which were at Salona had arrived near Missolonghi, and had given a signal, by kindling fires, to our troops in that place, and having come to an understanding with them on the 7th instant, a general and sudden attack was made both within and without the place on the enemy, and a dreadful massacre took place; many prisoners were taken, and the rest driven to Vrachori.

We have been favoured (says the Courier of the 8th ult.) with an extract of a private letter from an Officer at Napoli di Romania, of which we give the substance to the public, as an instance of the sanguinary manner in which the contest in Greece is carried on on each side.

"I have learned from an Englishman a great admirer of the Greeks, who has just arrived from Hydra, that 200 Turkish prisoners, who had been for months in captivity, were led out by the Greeks and butchered in the street with knives, stilettos, and even forks.

"Scarcely had these unhappy victims met their fate, and were still in the agonies of death, when the Turkish slaves, who were prisoners of war, and had been for years domesticated in the families of their masters, were brought forth, each by his owner, and deliberately slaughtered in a similar manner. On the cruelty of this massacre being represented to some of the Greek Captains, they only replied by laughing, and mimicking the actions of the Turks whilst on the point of being stuck. 'These poor wretches met their fate in a manner the most calm and devoted that can possibly be imagined.'

"This shocking scene is supposed to have originated in the following circumstance:—A Turkish prisoner, on board a Hydra brig in the Greek fleet, having been most cruelly beaten and ill used, and thereby driven to desperation, entered the magazine of the vessel and put a match to it, in this manner destroying himself and all but about twenty of the Greeks.

"To prevent a recurrence of this act of desperation, the Greek fleet, consisting of 75 men of war, have received orders to take no more prisoners, but to slaughter their enemies as soon as they fall into their hands.

"Ibrahim Pacha has probably heard of this, for he caused all the Greek women and children at Solona to be massacred on his return to that place."

UNITED STATES.

EASTPORT, September 24.

This week we had a visit from his Excellency Sir Howard Douglas, Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, on his way to the neighbouring British Islands. He has been for several weeks past on a tour through the Province, examining the fortifications and acquainting himself with the local situations of places, their advantages and necessities, and with the people.

We understand that when Sir H ward Douglas was in this town, he made application to our municipal authority, and permission was granted, to have the graves of those officers buried here, while under the British, surrounded with a permanent enclosure at his expense, and the monuments thus preserved from dilapidation. The place where their remains were deposited is not within the present burying ground, and the monuments have suffered from neglect and d predation, as well as from the hand of time. This liberal act of a brother officer, (it does not remove them, will at least preserve them from future encroachments.—

ST. LAWRENCE ASSOCIATION.

We are happy to find the attention of the public again turned to this subject, under auspices more favourable than it has before enjoyed. We are informed that the Colonial Office lost no time in referring the plan for towing up the Rapids of the St. Lawrence by chains, and Steam Tow Boats, to Sir J. Carmichael Smyth, the eminent Engineer, who was coming to these Provinces on a military survey. This officer, we understand, expressed his conviction of the practicability of the plan, and has thus corroborated the opinions before delivered by the several practical civil engineers, who have turned their attention to this subject.

We rejoice to find by the notice, signed by Mr. GEORGE, in this Gazette, that His Excellency the Governor in Chief, has expressed himself most favourably disposed towards the plan. Indeed, nothing but good can possibly result from the attempt in its present state of advancement. Inquiry, rational, unprejudiced, systematic inquiry is alone wanting to point out, without fear of contradiction, the advantages which are now only contemplated, and the capabilities which are believed to exist. We hope, in the course of these inquiries that the St. Lawrence Association will not fail to lay before the public and the Government such plans, and such information, as will enable the Legislature to form a correct opinion respecting the best route for a Canal to Upper Canada. Government have most probably digested their opinions on this subject, but it would be satisfactory, if on comparing the views of the Association, they should be found to coincide with the intentions of Government. These will most likely prefer the Ottawa route, and taking into view the seeming practicability of conquering the natural obstructions of Rapids by the aid of Steam Engines &c. a complete double line of communication may be thus formed to the Upper Lakes, a circumstance, certainly, of vast importance to the country.

The plan of Steam Tow-Boats, with the removal of Rocks, and other obstructions, being calculated to be effected in a few month's labor, seems well adopted to our present attention, and will prevent the Trade from diverging into foreign channels while the other great work is in progress.

ST. LAWRENCE ASSOCIATION.

Referring to their last Report the Committee of the St. Lawrence Association beg leave to call the attention of the Subscribers and the Public in general to the annual meeting which will take place on Thursday the 27th instan., at two o'clock, at the EXCHANGE READING ROOM, for the purpose of nominating a new Committee, Treasurer and Secretary for the ensuing year.

Previous to the expiration of the term appointed for their continuance in Office, they deem it incumbent to state that His Excellency the EARL OF DALHOUSIE, with his usual desire to forward the best interests of the country, has paid the greatest attention to this Institution and feels very desirous of its continuance, as tending to elucidate in an impartial and correct manner the best plans which may, from time to time, be devised for promoting the improvements of the various resources of this country; and particularly the internal communications with the different parts of the Canadas, as also with the neighbouring Provinces of Nova Scotia and New-Brunswick. Under such distinguished Patronage they cannot but hope that this Association will succeed in becoming permanent, as its object are to inquire into the most efficacious and expedient means of Improvement, their views not being bound to any fixed plans, but to adopt and promote such only as may appear to be, on inquiry, the most advantageous to the best interest of the country.

The ST. LAWRENCE ASSOCIATION was at first confined under the idea of confining its researches to our magnificent river, but it was soon found that the institution might render essential service to the country by a more extended range, and these ideas are embodied in their plan of operations, although from the limited funds of the association their views have as yet been chiefly restricted to the improving of the Rapids of the River St. Lawrence, yet they trust, under liberal Patronage and the co-operation of our Sister Colonies of North America, this Institution may lead to the adoption of plans of incalculable benefit.

They therefore propose, should it meet with the concurrence of the Subscribers, to continue the plan of the Association.

Their views will be chiefly directed to inquire into the best plans which can be devised for improving the Commercial resources of these Colonies; such as the improvement of Inland navigation in all parts of the country directing their attention in the first place to objects of primary importance, like the Rivers St. Lawrence, Ottawa Richelieu, and St. John. Also to extend their researches to the most approved methods of constructing new Roads throughout the Country, as well as inquiring into the best methods of promoting the Fisheries in the Gulf and River St. Lawrence.

By desire of the Committee,

Ever since the conviction of these unfortunate men they both persisted in declaring their entire innocence of the crime for which they were doomed to suffer. On the scaffold, however, Lauzon seemed wishful to avoid saying any thing on the subject, and gave evident symptoms of conscious guilt; but Delinelle, in a short and impressive address to the assembled crowd before him, resolutely maintained his innocence, and continued to do so till the last moment of his existence.

VOL. IV. YORK, U. C. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1825 No XLV.

By Authority.

York, U. C. Nov. 7th, 1825.

This day, HIS EXCELLENCY, THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, proceeded from the Government House to the Chamber of the Honourable the Legislative Council, where he arrived about two o' clock, and, being seated upon the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent with a message from HIS EXCELLENCY to the HOUSE of Assembly commanding their attendance.—The Members being come thither accordingly,—HIS EXCELLENCY was pleased to deliver the following

SPEECH:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I feel much pleasure in being able to congratulate you on the continuance of the general tranquillity which has been so propitious to the happiness and prosperity of the British Empire.

In this season of peace, the Councils of the Imperial Government have been occupied in measures, which can scarcely fail to excite throughout the Dominions of the Crown, an emulation of that spirit of industry and enterprize, so eminently conspicous in the Parent State.

We cannot but anticipate a material advancement of our public interests from the change, which has recently been made in the Commercial System of our Mother Country, as it respects Her Colonies—a change, which has avowedly for its object to constitute them, in fact, integral parts of the Empire; and to give to their Ports the character and privileges of Ports of the United Kingdom.

The value of these measures, proceeding from a policy liberal and generous beyond example, need not be enlarged upon: they have been received in the Colonies with feelings of the deepest gratitude; and it is not too much to say of them, that their tendency is to confer upon us, all the commercial Privileges of Subjects of the United Kingdom; while, we are exempt from those burthens by which the Fleets and Armies are maintained, which protect our trade, and defend our soil.

The exceptions which have been admitted in the several enactments to which I have alluded, in order to regulate our intercourse with the United States of America; and to adjust more conveniently the Navigation Laws of the Empire to the trade upon our inland waters, are additional proofs of the attention of His Majesty's Government to the situation and interests of these Colonies.

We are also directly, and most deeply concerned, in the Act which has been recently passed for admitting the Wheat of the North American Provinces into the United Kingdom. In the limited duration of that measure, and in the circumstance of its provisions being confined to the importation of Grain, we cannot but perceive proofs of an apprehension on the part of the Imperial Parliament, that this indulgence, which they are evidently desirous of extending to the Colonies, may be injurious to those great domestic interests which it is their care to protect. It is left to us, however, to hope, that this Act is the beginning of a system, which experience may prove to be as reconcileable with the general interests of the Empire, as it would be advantageous to these Provinces. If such shall happily be the result of the experiment, we may be assured that the indulgence will be readily placed upon a more permanent and more beneficial footing.

The good consequences, which it was hoped would follow the permission of a direct Importation of Tea from China, have been already in a great degree realized; and it is most satisfactory to find that there no longer exists a temptation to that illicit trade which has been so deeply prejudicial to the public welfare.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly

The Public Accounts and Estimates shall be laid before you; and I trust that you will make the necessary provision for the Public Service.

Honourable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

You will direct your attention to the Laws that are about to expire: among these is the Act under which the Militia Pensions are at present paid—a provision which I am persuaded you will it will, at all times, be my pleasure, as it is my duty, to concur in such enactments as may appear to me to promise benefit to the Country.

I am happy to have it at length in my power, by the consent of His Majesty's Government, to propose for your consideration, as I shall do by message, one measure which has long appeared to me extremely desirable, and which has for its object, to set at rest the just apprehensions with respect to their civil rights which affect a very considerable portion of the population of this Province.

Government House,
Nov. 2d, 1825.

HIS EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has been pleased to appoint Mr. JAMES HALL, Gent. to be a Deputy Land Surveyor in this Province.

Government House,
November 8th, 1825.

HIS EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has been pleased to approve of the nomination of the Rev. Dr. PHILLIPS, as Master of the Public School, for the Home District; and to permit him to hold that office, in conjunction with the appointment of Master of the Royal Grammer School.

ave become intricate by reason of the great Number of Acts relating thereto, which have been passed through a long Series of Years; and it is therefore highly expedient, for the Interests of Commerce and the ends of Justice, and also for affording Convenience and Facility to all Persons who may be subject to the Operation of those Laws, or who may be authorized to act in the Execution thereof, that all the Statutes now in force relating to the Customs should be repealed, and that the Purposes for which they have from Time to Time been made should be secured by new Enactments, exhibiting more perspicuously and compendiously the various Provisions contained in them: And whereas by the said Act all the Laws of the Customs relating to the Trade of the British Possessions Abroad will be repealed; and it is expedient to make Provisions for the future Regulation of the Trade of those Possessions after such repeal shall have effect; Be it therefore enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, & by the authority of the same,

ASYLUM LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

No 70, CORNHILL, LONDON.

THE Business of the Asylum Company is confined exclusively to insuring the lives of Officers of the Army and Navy (including risks of battles and sea) and of persons going to or residing beyond the limits of Europe, or predisposed to hereditary, or other constitutional maladies—of delicate health—of peculiarity of form whether natural or accidental—labouring under any kind of chronic disorders, unaccompanied with actual danger, or engaged in occupations which would subject them to rejection or an uncertain rate of premium at other Offices.

George Farren, Esq President Director.
Auditors—Charles W. Hallett, Esq; Peter Reynolds, Esq; John Richards, Esq.

The Directors have, with great care and research, ascertained the true basis of mortality for various climates and diseases.

Assurances will be granted at premiums accurately graduated to the risks proposed, not only with reference to the general healthiness of the climate, but to the particular service intended.

The Company is supported by a Capital of £[illegible],000 in 2,000 shares of £[illegible] each of which 25 per cent. has been advanced, and the Shareholders have entered into sufficient securities for payment of the remainder. This Capital is fully sufficient for the security of the assured.

The importance of Life Assurance to those who in professional and mercantile pursuits, derive limited or fluctuating incomes from personal exertions, or are in the possession of places, the emoluments of which die with the holder, is long been acknowledged both in Europe and the United States of America. It is the full conviction, that the inhabitants of the Canadas would not be slow, in perceiving the advantages to be derived from the introduction of such an Institution amongst them, the undersigned commissioned to the Directors of the ASYLUM COMPANY, such information as a long residence in various parts of both Provinces has enabled him to collect, and the Board with the view of affording additional facilities, to those who may be desirous of availing themselves of the benefit of Life Assurance, have in consequence appointed him their Agent, for the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. He will accordingly be prepared to receive proposals, and negotiate Policies upon Lives, as soon as he is in possession of the scale of premiums (which he understands,) this has been calculated with great care and attention, to adapt it to the peculiar localities of the Canadas and will, on comparison, be found considerably lower for young and middle age risks than that of any other Office.

A Physician or consulting Surgeon of eminence will be appointed in the principal Towns in either Province, before whom persons in the country, wishing to effect Insurances may appear, on sending their proposals by letter to the Company's Agent at Quebec

The names of the Medical Referees and all other necessary information will be given in a future advertisement.

Editorial Commentary.

Our readers must be highly gratified by a perusal of the SPEECH which has been delivered by His EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR at the opening of our present Session of the Provincial Parliament—To say nothing of its perspicuity and elegance as a composition, its tone throughout is so mild and breathes such a deep interest in the concerns and welfare of this Colony, that we hope it will be received and acknowledged in the manner it so well deserves by those to whom it is addressed—We have felt strongly inclined to comment, paragraph by paragraph, but, as it has not yet been read in our Assembly, for want of a Quorum, and consequently no address has been moved, any indulgence of this kind, on our part, would be both premature and indelicate; and, therefore, we abstain.

We hope our friends will be pleased with the changed appearance of this publication—It is our intention to enlarge still further, and give an Imperial sheet; but, for that improvement, we must wait till the commencement of our next Volume, in order that some uniformity may be maintained, as a larger sheet than the present one could not be conveniently bound along with the preceding numbers of this volume On the 5th of January next, we hope to present our readers with a work in a new type, on fine paper, and an enlarged sheet, in every way worthy of the patronage of this interesting colony.

An accident, and the length and number of our advertisements, together, have prevented the admission of several articles of general interest this week—for which we shall endeavour to make amends hereafter Amongst these one of the most interesting is the Manifesto of the Greek Nation by which that eminent people hope to place themselves under the British protection; at all others the most ample, powerful, and effective. Nothing can be more honourable to our national character than the favourable consideration of this important Manifesto, and the two articles by which it is followed and for which we must here make room.

"Considering, lastly, that ever a special favor of Providence has placed the forces of Great Britain so near us, Greece ought to take advantage of it in time, and sending its hopes on the justice and humanity which animate that great power—

For these reasons, and in the intention of placing in safety the sacred rights of the liberty of the state and of our political existence, which is sufficiently consolidated the Greek nation prescribes, resolves, decrees, and approves, as follows:

"Art. 1. By virtue of the present act, it voluntarily places the sacred deposit of its liberty, its national independence, and its political existence, under the absolute defence of Great Britain.

"Art. 2. This fundamental act of the Greek nation shall be accompanied by an explanatory memorial, addressed in duplicate to the Government of his Britannic Majesty."

We are extremely sorry to learn by late arrivals that New South Wales is in a very turbulent and unsettled state; that the different authorities are divided amongst themselves, and, that every thing was in the utmost confusion. After all, give us the frosts and snows of happy Canada rather than the hurricanes, droughts, parched deserts, wild beasts, and Caffres of Africa, or the wilder beasts, and still wilder, and more irreclaimable convicts of Australasia

We beg to call the attention of all class es to the awful calamity which has befallen our fellow subjects in New Brunswick We have not room to enlarge, but we trust that something effective will be done in this Province, both privately and publicly, in behalf of the sufferers Very liberal subscriptions have been entered into in the Lower Province, and we hope and trust this Province will not be lacking, according to her means

We have the pleasure to announce the return of Mr DWYER to York; and, that it is his intention to give both Public Recitations, and Private Lectures, during the ensuing winter; and most sincerly do we wish him success, since none in his profession is more deserving

Selections from British and Foreign Journals.

Amongst the Deaths of eminent persons lately announced in the London Obituaries we observe those of the venerable EARL of CARLISLE who is succeeded by Lord MORPETH; of the eccentric Sir Tho's. Stepney, the last descendant of the celebrated VANDYKE; and of the hapless, though once wealthy, Lady of WELLESLEY POLE LONG WELLESLEY.

Launch of the Princess Charlotte.

A dreadful accident happened at Portsmouth, on the 22d ult. at the launching of the Princess Charlotte, ship of the line; by which sixteen persons lost their lives The following extract is from an official account:

On Wednesday, the 22d of September, the day of the launch, the tide rose so rapidly and to so unusual a height, that the ship was obliged to be launched sooner than was anticipated; the same great rise of water occasioned such a powerful pressure against the gates of the south great dock in the basin as to cause them to burst inward and to carry with impetuous violence into the empty dock, the bridge which rested upon the gates, and, with the bridge, the persons who were unfortunately passing over it at the time, on their way to see the launch. The torrent of water which rushed into the vacant dock below, overwhelmed the unhappy individuals, and I grieve to say, that, notwithstanding the active and prompt exertions of those who behold the dreadful catastrophe, and of the boats which immediately hastened to the spot, but few persons were rescued from their perilous situations. The proper means were immediately resorted to for the recovery of those who were picked up

The Princess Charlotte has been built on the enlarged lines of his Majesty's ship Victory, having the dimensions encreased.—Length, from 186 to 197 feet; breadth, from 51 feet six inches to 52 feet nine inches; and burthen, from 2,146 to 2,417 tons. She is fitted on the new principle of working the cables in the middle, instead of the lower gun deck and has the improved round stern.

Mexican Athenæum —An Athenæum, on a large scale, is about to be established in the city of Mexico, by Mr. Ackermann of the Strand.

Canadian Chiefs —The following is an extract from a very interesting account of the departure of the Lorette Chiefs from England which has lately appeared in various public prints.—

The Grand Chief, in taking leave of the writer, said that himself and the 3 other Chiefs left Great Britain deeply impressed with its greatness, its liberality and its magnificence; that the attention which had been shown to them could never be forgotten; and especially the condescension of his Majesty in honouring them with a most gracious interview and presenting a large gold medal to each, as well as a portrait of himself; these would remain a lasting memorial, and be handed down from generation to generation in their respective families. The Grand Chief added that he had served this country under his late Majesty George III, which he never expected to see; but his visit to England had created an attachment, and produced a feeling towards it which he had not language to express; but summed it all up by saying, he was now ready whenever called upon to serve his Majesty George IV. his Great Father, and this he would do with the affection and devotedness of a son; and though they did not return to their country having obtained the object of their visit, yet they felt confident that a Government of uprightness would take their claims into consideration, and meet their wishes.

Foreign Intelligence.

EAST INDIES.

Intelligence had been received in England, of the capture of Arracan, the chief town of the province of that name, in the Burmese Empire, and that Donoo-bew had taken into the lands of the British forces without opposition. The struggle on the part of the Burmese appears to be much less vigorous, than that formerly made by Tippoo Sultan in defence of his dominions. There is very little doubt it will terminate first or last, in the conquest of the natives, and probably the annexation of the Empire to the British dominions.

GREECE.

The affairs of the Morea have taken a more favorable turn, but to what extent it is impossible to say Accounts received at Constantinople from Smyrna of the 18th of August, state, that "Ibrahim Pacha after being joined by the corps brought into by Hussein Bey, undertook a second expedition against Napoli di Romania, and had already arrived before the walls of that fortress. On his approach, the Greeks, who were in a most critical situation, declared by a formal act, and, as is generally believed here, at the instigation of Commodore Hamilton, they implored the protection of England.—Ibrahim Pacha, discovered by this event, applied to Commodore Hamilton for an explanation; but instead of any answer being given him, the Greeks, impelled by despair, made an unexpected attack on the Arabs, who were already dispirited. After several partial but sanguinary combats, Ibrahim Pacha hastily retreated to Tripolizza. This news, and the reverses at Missolonghi, have produced a very great sensation here."

This account is confirmed through various channels

It appears indeed, certain that the Government of Napoli has solicited the protection of Great Britain, but what encouragement they had for so doing, remains to be seen. And according to accounts from Zante of the 25th of August, the deputies from Greece, one of whom is the son of Admiral Mauli, had arrived there They are going with passports from Commodore Hamilton, and from the Lord High Commissioner, Sir Wm. Adam, to England in order to solicit its protection Commodore Hamil on is said to have advised the Greeks previously to this, in case of extreme necessity to hoist principally to that Line.
